Boston & M. R. Co. v. Hooker, 233 U. S. 97, 58 L. ed. 868, L.R.A.1915B, 450, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 528, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 593; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Mugg, 202 U. S. 242, 245, 50 L. ed. 1011, 1013, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 628; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Abilene Cotton Oil Co. 204 U. S. 426, 445, 51 L. ed. 553, 560, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350, 9 Ann. Cas. 1075; Armour Packing Co. v. United States, 209 U. S. 56, 61, 52 L. ed. 681, 694, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 428; Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Carl, 227 U. S. 639, 652, 656, 57 L. ed. 683, 688, 689, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 391; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Maxwell, 237 U. S. 94, 59 L. ed. 853, L.R.A.1915E, 665, P. U. R. 1915C, 300, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 495; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Magnus Co. 13 Ohio C. C. N. S. 305; Hart v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 112 U. S. 331, 337, 28 L. ed. 717, 719, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 151; Pennsylvania Co. v. L.R.A.1917B.

O'Connell, 84 Ohio St. 218, 95 N. E. 773, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 540; Robbins v. Hennessey, 86 Ohio St. 181, 99 N. E. 319; 2 Page, Contr. § 1117.

The regulations shown in the joint tariffs of baggage rules and regulations contained in defendant's schedule printed on the baggage check have the force of law, and were entered into by, and became a part of the contract with, plaintiff.

Hart v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 112 U. S. 331, 28 L. ed. 717, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 151; New York C. & H. R. R. Co. v. Fraloff, 100 U. S. 24, 27, 25 L. ed. 531, 533; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Hubbard, 72 Ohio St. 302, 74 N. E. 214, 18 Am. Neg. Rep. 231; Pennsylvania Co. v. Shearer, 75 Ohio St. 249, 116 Am. St. Rep. 730, 79 N. E. 431, 9 Ann. Cas. 15; Boston & M. R. Co. v. Hooker, 233 U. S. 97, 58 L. ed. 868, L.R.A.1915B, 450, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 528, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 593; Adams Exp. Co. v. Croninger, 226 U. S. 491, 57 L. ed. 314, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 257, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 148; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Mugg, 202 U. S. 242, 50 L. ed. 1011, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 628; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Kirby, 225 U. S. 155, 56 L. ed. 1033, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 648, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 501; Wells, F. & Co. v. Neiman-Marcus Co. 227 U. S. 469, 57 L. ed. 600, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 267; Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Carl, 227 U. S. 639, 57 L. ed. 683, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 391; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Harriman, 227 U. S. 657, 57 L. ed. 690, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397; Cleveland C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Blind, 182 Ind. 398, 105 N. E. 483; York Mfg. Co. v. Illinois C. R. Co. 3 Wall. 107, 112, 18 L. ed. 170, 172; Squire v. New York C. R. Co. 98 Mass. 239, 93 Am. Dec. 162.

Upon the ground of estoppel, the limit of liability is $100, because Mrs. Steinberg is by law chargeable with knowledge of the regulations, and she failed to declare a higher value.

Bigelow, Estoppel, p. 459; Hoeger v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 63 Wis. 100, 53 Am. Rep. 271, 23 N. W. 435; Fourth Nat. Bank v. Olney, 63 Mich. 58, 29 N. W. 513; Ewart, Estoppel, p. 137; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Kirby, 225 U. S. 155, 166, 56 L. ed. 1033, 1038, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 648, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 501; Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Carl, 227 U. S. 639, 651, 652, 656, 57 L. ed. 683, 688, 689, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 391; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Harriman, 227 U. S. 657, 670, 671, 57 L. ed. 690, 697, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397; Adams Exp. Co. v. Croninger, 226 U. S. 491, 508, 57 L. ed. 314, 320, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 257, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 148; Wells, F. & Co. v. Neiman-Marcus Co. 227 U. S. 469, 476, 57 L. ed. 600, 603, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 267; Hart v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 112 U. S. 331, 337, 338, 341, 28 L. ed. 717, 719, 720, 721, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 151; Bernard

v. Adams Exp. Co. 205 Mass. 254, 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 293, 91 N. E. 325, 18 Ann. Cas. 351; Alair v. Northern P. R. Co. 53 Minn. 180, 19 L.R.A. 764, 39 Am. St. Rep. 588, 54 N. W. 1072; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Magnus Co. 13 Ohio C. C. N. S. 305.

Messrs. Livingston, Livingston, & George, for defendant in error.

Donahue, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The pleadings and the facts distinguished this case from the case of the Boston & M. R. Co. v. Hooker, 233 U. S. 97, 58 L. ed. 868, L.R.A.1915B, 450, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 526, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 593. In that case, Mr. Justice Day, in his opinion, said, at page 109 of 233 U. S.: "It is to be borne in mind that the action was tried and decided in the state court was not for negligence of the railroad company as a warehouseman for the loss of the baggage after its delivery at Sunapee Lake station, but was solely upon the contract of carriage in interstate commerce."

The amended petition in the case under consideration avers that "upon arriving in Youngstown, plaintiff presented her check to the Erie Railroad Company and demanded her property, and was entitled to possession of the same. On said date said defendant, being in possession of said property, refused and failed to deliver the same, and unlawfully converted and disposed of said property to its own use."

The Erie Railroad Company in its answer denied these averments of the amended petition, but, upon the trial of the case, it was admitted that the trunk arrived at the Erie depot in Youngstown, Ohio. It further appears from the undisputed evidence (plaintiff's exhibit A) that on September 14th the trunk was sent by the defendant to New York placed on a steamer, and taken to Europe. Immediately upon the admission being made that the trunk had reached the Erie depot at Youngstown, Ohio, the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway Company moved the court to be dismissed from the case. The court sustained this motion without objection on the part of the plaintiff or the Erie Railroad Company.

The Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway Company was the initial company and the company with whom the contract of carriage was made. Under the provisions of § 8994—1, General Code, this company was liable upon its contract of carriage for any loss, damage, or injury to such property caused by it or by any common carrier, railroad, or transportation company to which it delivered such property, or over whose line or lines the property passed in transportation to its final destination. The fact that this defendant, upon its own motion, and evidently with the consent of the other parties, was dismissed from the suit, is sufficient to show that this action was not tried and decided in the common pleas court "solely upon the contract of carriage," as was the case of the Boston & M. R. Co. v. Hooker, supra. On the contrary, the petition averred a conversion of the property to defendant's use after it reached the Erie depot at Youngstown, Ohio. The recitals in the petition, as to the purchasing of a ticket and checking this baggage at Toledo, Ohio, are pertinent only as showing that the defendant came into the lawful possession of it. The admissions made upon the trial of the case sustain the averments of the amended petition.

It is true that the plaintiff in error pleaded a contract of carriage in its answer to the amended petition. No reply was filed taking issue therewith. It offered in evidence the joint tariff of baggage rules and regulations relating to excess baggage rates, to the introduction of which the plaintiff objected, but the court admitted the same over her objection. The charge of the court, however, practically eliminated this evidence from the consideration of the jury, and instructed the jury that the action was one for conversion, and that it might assume that the property described in the plaintiff's petition was converted by the Erie Railroad Company to its own use. This charge was evidently given in view of the admissions made in the case; for in the next paragraph of the charge the court instructed the jury that, by consent of counsel, there was only one question for its consideration, and that was the value of the goods at the time of the conversion.

Counsel for the railroad company caused to be noted a general exception to the charge of the court, but did not object or except to the statement by the court that, by consent of counsel, the only issue for the consideration of the jury was the value of the property converted to the company's use; nor is any claim made now that counsel for the plaintiff in error did not consent that this single issue of value was the only issue to be submitted to the jury. On the contrary, the only error urged by counsel for plaintiff in error upon the attention of this court is the refusal of the trial court to charge as requested, that "as a matter of law in no event can the plaintiff recover more than the sum of $100 for loss of baggage."

It clearly appears that this was solely and only an action for conversion after the baggage had reached the Erie depot at Youngstown, Ohio, and that the only serious dispute between the parties was not as to the actual conversion, for that was admitted, but rather as to the amount the plaintiff was entitled to recover for such conversion. Even if counsel for plaintiff in error had not consented that the sole question to be submitted to the jury was the amount that plaintiff was entitled to recover by reason of such conversion, nevertheless the charge of the court was right; for there was really no disputed question of fact in this case other than the amount the plaintiff was entitled to recover from the defendant.

Under the pleadings and proof the plaintiff was entitled to recover for a conversion of her property. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. O'Donnell, 49 Ohio St. 489, 21 L.R.A. 117, 34 Am. St. Rep. 579, 32 N. E. 476; Robinson v. Austin, 2 Gray, 564; Rosenfeld v. Central Vermont R. Co. 111 App. Div. 371, 97 N. Y. Supp. 905; Magnin v. Dinsmore, 70 N. Y. 410, 26 Am. Rep. 608; and Baldwin v. Cole, 6 Mod. 212, 87 Eng. Reprint, 964.

In an action for conversion, where the facts will not justify exemplary damages, the measure of damages is ordinarily the value of the goods at the time of conversion. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. O'Donnell, supra.

Some authorities hold that the measure of damages in such cases ordinarily is the value of the goods at the time of conversion, or any higher value they may have had between the time of conversion and the time of trial. That question, however, is not in this case.

The general rule as to the measure of damages is subject to the exception that, where the property is of a strictly personal nature, such as wearing apparel and the like, which would have little or no market value, the measure of damages for conversion of such property is its reasonable value to the owner at the time of conversion; and the court in this case so charged the jury. The request of the plaintiff in error had no application to the issue joined by the pleadings or to the proof in this case, and was therefore properly refused by the trial court. If it were conceded, however, that this action was based solely upon the contract of carriage, nevertheless the request of the defendant was properly refused by the trial court.

It is contended on the part of the plaintiff in error that the regulations shown in joint tariff of baggage rules and regulations contained in the schedules filed by it with the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Public Utilities Commission of Ohio and printed upon the back of the baggage check given to plaintiff when her baggage was checked have the force and effect of law, and entered into and became a part of the contract with the defendant in error in this case, and limit the amount that she is entitled to recover, if she is entitled to recover any sum or amount whatever.

Undoubtedly it is the law of this state that, where a public utility files schedules under the provisions of § 614—16, General Code, and prints in plain type and keeps on file or posted in such places and in such manner as the Commission may order, a copy of such schedules, or so much thereof as the Commission shall deem necessary for the use and information of the public, shippers and travelers are charged with notice of the tariffs named in these schedules, and must abide thereby, unless the same be found unreasonable by the Public Utilities Commission.

This section also authorizes and requires a public utility to include as part of its schedules "all rules and regulations in any manner affecting the same," but this does not mean that it may write into such schedules so filed with the Public Utilities Commission of the state any rules or regulations that are in direct conflict with the provisions of other statutes of the state. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Kirby, 225 U. S. 155, 56 L. ed. 1033, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 648, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 501. Any rules or regulations purporting to exempt the carrier from any part or all of its liability for loss, damage, or injury to property delivered to it for transportation are in direct conflict with the plain, express, positive, and unequivocal provisions of § 8994—1, General Code. That section provides, among other things, that any common carrier receiving property at a point within the state for transportation to another point within the state shall be liable for any loss, damage, or injury to such property caused by it or by any common carrier, railroad, or transportation company to which such property may be delivered or over whose lines such property may pass. If that were all the provisions of this section, the contention of the plaintiff in error might be answered in the affirmative, but that section further specifically provides that "no contract, receipt, rule or regulation shall exempt such common carrier, railroad, or transportation company from the liability hereby imposed."

Notwithstanding the clear and unambiguous provisions of this section of the General Code, it is contended on the part of the plaintiff in error that, by the rules and regulations contained in the schedule filed by it with the Public Utilities Commission of Ohio, it can exempt itself or limit in amount the liability imposed by this section. In support of this contention our attention is directed to the case of Boston & M. R. Co. v. Hooker, 233 U. S. 97, 58 L. ed. 868, L.R.A. 1915B, 450, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 526, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 593, construing the Carmack amendment to the Hepburn Act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat. at L. 584, chap. 3591, Comp. Stat. 1913 § 8563), regulating interstate commerce.

We recognize the desirability of a uniform construction of the laws of each of the several states of the United States with the construction given by the Supreme Court of the United States to act of Congress covering the same subject-matter, and particularly is this desirable where these laws relate to the transportation of passengers and freight; but § 8994—1, General Code while similar to the Carmack amendment (Comp. Stat. 1913, § 8592), except in that part which relates to the territorial extent of the application of the law, is not, in the opinion of a majority of this court, susceptible of the construction given the Carmack amendment in the case above cited. Nor is it now necessary to a uniform operation of the laws regulating interstate and intrastate commerce for this court to give to § 8994—1, General Code, the same construction that was given the Carmack amendment by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the Boston & M. R. Co. v. Hooker, supra. That case was decided April 6, 1914. The Congress of the United States, at its next session after that decision was announced, passed the Cummins amendment (Act March 4, 1915, chap. 176, 33 Stat. at L. 1196), amending § 7 of the Hepburn Act which amendment provides among other things, that the common carrier shall be liable for the full actual loss, damage, or injury to such property, notwithstanding any limitation of liability or limitation of the amount of recovery, or representation or agreement as to the value in any receipt or bill of lading, or in any contract, rule, regulation, or in any tariff filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that any such limitation, without respect to the manner or form in which it is sought to be made, shall be unlawful and void; and further, that where the goods are hidden by wrapping, boxing, or other means, and the carrier is not notified as to the character of the goods, the carrier may require the shipper to state specifically in writing the value of the goods, and the carrier shall not be liable beyond the amount so specifically stated.

It is evident that this immediate action on the part of Congress was occasioned by the construction given the Carmack amendment by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Boston & M. R. Co. v. Hooker, supra, but it is in no wise important whether the action of Congress was induced by the belief that it had failed in expressing its true intent and purpose in the Carmack amendment, as construed by the Supreme Court, or that there existed at the time of the adoption of the Cummins amendment a necessity for further legislation on that subject. The fact remains that L.R.A.1917B.

Congress did pass the Cummins amendment, and the construction given to the Carmack amendment by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case just referred to is no longer the law applicable to this subject of interstate commerce. It would also appear that the general assembly of the state of Ohio, when it wrote into § 8994—1, General Code, the language of the Carmack amendment, had in view the desirability of a uniform operation of the laws relating to interstate and intrastate commerce. Should this court now construe § 8994—1 in line with the construction given to the Carmack amendment by the Supreme Court of the United States, it would be necessary for the general assembly of this state, if it desires uniformity of state and interstate commerce laws, to amend that section to conform to the provisions of the Cummins amendment. However, the conclusion this court has reached makes such an amendment unnecessary.

In construing a statute of this state, where no Federal question is involved, this court is not required to adopt a construction given to a similar law of the United States by the Supreme Court of the United States. However, this court would be inclined to follow the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States, even though no Federal question was involved, unless it clearly appeared that a different conclusion should be reached. In construing a statute it is the duty of the court to give effect to the legislative intent. True, the intent of the legislature is to be determined from the language employed, and when that language clearly expresses the intent of the lawmaking body, it should be given its plain, ordinary meaning; for it is not a question what the lawmaking body intended to enact, but rather the meaning of that which it did enact. Where, however, the meaning is doubtful, the history of legislation on the subject may be considered in connection with the object, purpose, and language of the law in order to arrive at its true meaning. Slingluff v. Weaver, 66 Ohio St. 621, 64 N. E. 574.

The passage by Congress of the Cummins amendment immediately following the decision in the case of the Boston & M. R. Co. v. Hooker, supra, would seem to indicate the meaning and intent of Congress when it passed the Carmack amendment, and this Cummins amendment was made necessary by the fact that the language employed in the Carmack amendment, as construed by the court, did not clearly express the intent of the lawmaking body. This later legislation by Congress in this regard is an important aid to this court in arriving at the intention of the legislature of this state when it enacted into law § 8994—1, General Code; for the intent of the General assembly of Ohio when it passed that section must have been identical with the intent of Congress when it passed the Carmack amendment; otherwise the same language would not have been employed.

Aside from these considerations, however, we are compelled to a different construction of § 8994—1 than the construction given to the Carmack amendment by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case above cited. Mr. Justice Pitney, in his dissenting opinion in that case, calls attention to the fact that there is no previous instance where any court in this country has ever held the recovery to be limited to an arbitrary sum, unrelated to the value of the goods lost, without any previous valuation or agreement assented to by the shipper or passenger, and without any representation of value made by him, and further calls attention to the clear expression of the legislative purpose in the Carmack amendment to enforce the carrier's responsibility for losses of property caused by it, without regard to any rule or regulation exempting it.

Section 614—17, General Code, authorizes a public utility to fix a sliding scale of charges based on the value of the articles to be transported. This is only a fair and reasonable provision to enable the carrier to protect itself against fraud and imposition and to provide a rate or charge proportionate to the responsibilities of the risk assumed. York Mfg. Co. v. Illinois C. R. Co. 3 Wall. 107, 112, 18 L. ed. 170, 171. This same section also requires every public utility to conform its schedule of rates to this sliding scale. Such sliding scale of rates automatically attaches to the declared or agreed value, and becomes the lawful rate which the carrier must exact and the rate which the shipper must pay. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Kirby, 225 U. S. 155, 56 L. ed. 1033, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 648, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 501.

The duty imposed upon the carrier by § 614—18, General Code, to exact, demand, and receive the charge for service rendered, as specified in the schedule, is not a passive, but an active, one. It is not met and discharged by leaving it to the pleasure of the shipper to declare or refuse to declare the value of the goods offered for transportation.

It is not only the right of the carrier to be advised of the full extent of its responsibility, but, in order for it to comply with the provisions of § 614—18, General Code, it may rightfully require, as a condition precedent to any contract for the transportation of baggage, information from the passenger as to its value. New York C. & H. L.R.A. 1917B.

R. R. Co. v. Fraloff, 100 U. S. 24, 25 L. ed. 531, and Hart v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 112 U. S. 331, 28 L. ed. 717, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 151.

In view of the positive provisions of § 614—18, an express contract, written or verbal, between the shipper and the transportation company to carry property known by both parties to the contract to be worth $1,000 for the same rate charged for property worth $100, upon condition that the shipper will release the transportation company from any loss, damages, or injury to such property in excess of $100, would not only be in violation of this statute, but against public policy and void, even if § 8994—1, General Code, did not provide in express terms that a common carrier cannot exempt itself by contract from the liability imposed by that statute. Certainly, if an express contract could not be made exempting the carrier from liability for loss or damages to the property transported, or relieve the shipper from paying the legal rate published in the schedules, no implied contract, based upon the theory of constructive or actual notice of rules and regulations contained in the schedules filed, can have that effect. There is a substantial difference, however, between a contract purporting to limit or exempt a common carrier from liability under this statute and a contract or agreement fixing the value of the goods delivered for transportation, where the rates to be charged for the transportation service are fixed in the schedules with reference to the value of the property to be transported.

The authorities would seem to be uniform that, where a shipper declares a less value than the true value of the property delivered for transportation, in order to obtain a lower rate, recovery for loss or damages will be limited to the amount of the valuation named. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Hubbard, 72 Ohio St. 302, 74 N. E. 214, 18 Am. Neg. Rep. 231; Pennsylvania Co. v. Shearer, 75 Ohio St. 249, 116 Am. St. Rep. 730, 79 N. E. 431, 9 Ann. Cas. 15; Hoeger v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 63 Wis. 100, 53 Am. Rep. 271, 23 N. W. 435; Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Carl, 227 U. S. 639, 651, 17 L. ed. 683, 688, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 391; and Bernard v. Adams Exp. Co. 205 Mass. 254, 260, 28 L.R.A. (N. S.) 293, 91 N. E. 325, 18 Ann. Cas. 351.

The Cummins amendment, however, expressly prohibits such contract in relation to interstate commerce, where the articles offered for transportation are not hidden from view. Whether the provisions in § 8994—1, General Code, that "no contract, receipt, rule or regulation shall exempt such common carrier, railroad, or transportation company from the liability hereby imposed," should be construed as including contracts relating to value, or only as to contracts relating to liability or nonliability, is a question that does not arise in this case; for it is not contended that the passenger actually declared the value of the baggage delivered for transportation, but rather that the rules and regulations limiting the carrier's liability to $100, filed with and as a part of the schedule with the Public Utilities Commission, entered into and became a part of the contract of carriage. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Carl, 227 U. S. 639, 661, 57 L. ed. 683, 688, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 391, and Bernard v. Adams Exp. Co. 205 Mass. 254, 260, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 293, 91 N. E. 325, 18 Ann. Cas. 351.

The statutes of our state relating to interstate commerce are for the purpose of providing and maintaining a uniform rate to all travelers and shippers. These statutes not only provide means and methods for establishing and maintaining uniform rates, but they also provide means and methods for the protection of carriers from imposition and fraud, and enable them to fix rates proportionate to the responsibility of the service they assume to perform. Neither shippers nor transportation companies can be permitted to defeat the intention and purpose of these statutes by any loose arrangement that will permit a shipper, by his own neglect or refusal to declare value, to secure a lesser rate for the transportation of his goods than the legal rate named in the schedules filed with the Commerce Commission of the state, or that will permit a common carrier by its neglect of duty to exact, demand, and receive this legal rate, and to that end require a valuation to be fixed by the shipper when the goods are offered for transportation, to exempt itself from all or any part of the liability imposed by the statute. If rules and regulations in direct conflict with a statute are permitted to avoid its positive terms and provisions, then the statute might just as well never have been written; if, on the other hand, a shipper is required to fix the value of his property offered for transportation, then he can be required to pay the same rate charged to all other shippers, and the transportation company will receive the full legal rate for the service it performs and the responsibility it assumes.

It was held by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Maxwell, 237 U. S. 94, 59 L. ed. 853, L.R.A.1915E, 665, P.U.R.1915C, 300, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 494, that the duly filed tariff of the carrier must be charged by it and paid by the shipper or passenger without deviation therefrom; that shippers and travelers are charged by the duly filed tariff, and must abide thereby, unless it is found to be unreasonable by the Interstate Commerce Commission; that neither misquotation of rates nor ignorance is an excuse for charging or paying less or more than the filed rate; and that, notwithstanding a contract for a less rate than the rate named in the tariff filed had been entered into in good faith between the passenger and the carrier's agent, the carrier could recover from the passenger the difference between the legal rate published in the tariff and the rate actually paid by the passenger under the contract for transportation. This case was decided almost a year later than the case of the Boston & M. R. Co. v. Hooker, 233 U. S. 97, 58 L. ed. 868, L.R.A.1915B, 450, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 526, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 593. Under this authority the carrier, had it transported and delivered this baggage to the plaintiff, would be entitled to recover from her the legal rate named in the schedule for baggage of that value, regardless of whether the plaintiff had declared or failed to declare a value when offered for transportation, and regardless of the rules and regulations contained in the schedule filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission; for it would not be contended that these rules and regulations would be more binding upon either party to the transaction than a positive and express contract in relation to the rate to be charged for the service rendered.

It follows, therefore, that if the carrier could recover from the passenger the difference between the rate charged and the legal rate, the passenger should also have the right to claim the protection of the laws regulating the commerce of the state and enacted for the equal protection of both.

Judgment affirmed.

Nichols, Ch. J., and Johnson, Wanamaker, Newman, and Matthias, JJ., concur.

Jones, J., dissenting;

The decision is supported neither by authority nor by principles of public policy. It is not supported by authority. The statute involved is of Federal origin, is a copy of the Federal act, and has been construed by a Federal court,—the Supreme Court of the United States,—which has diametrically held the converse of the legal principle outlined in the majority opinion; and the majority opinion, in attempting to distinguish this case by the citation of Federal authority in its support, has simply been hoisted upon its own petard. It is not supported by principles of public policy for the reason, often judicially stated and maintained, that the purpose of the public utility laws here involved, state and Federal, was to provide "unity of transportation and liability," and to avoid the annoyance and confusion resulting from the application of various rules of liability in the several states, especially in the transportation of freight and baggage from one state to another. This purpose is nullified by the majority opinion.

As a premise to a correct conclusion, it must be understood that the public utility laws of this state, including the requirement of filing and publishing the schedules of tariffs, rates, charges, etc., are substantially similar to and almost exact copies of the Federal statutes upon the same subject. These requirements are found in the following sections of our General Code: §§ 510, 614—16, 614—17, 614—18, and 8994—1. Furthermore, § 511, General Code, provides that the schedules prescribed by the Public Service Commission (now Public Utilities Commission) of Ohio, "as far as practicable, shall conform to the forms prescribed by the Interstate Commerce Commission." And the fact may now be emphasized that, conformably to the provisions of that section, § 8994—1, General Code, is an exact copy of the Carmack amendment to the Hepburn Act, with the single exception that its provisions are made to apply only to intrastate transportation. The Carmack amendment is found in § 20 of the act regulating commerce, as amended by § 7 of the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat. at L. 584, 595, Comp. Stat. 1913, §§ 8563, 8592).

The legal question involved is whether joint rates, tariffs, and charges for services of this character, performed by the carrier, together with the rules and regulations affecting them, when posted and filed in accordance with the Ohio statutes, become a part of the contract of transportation between passenger and carrier, limiting baggage liability, although no notice of such scheduled rates or of their filing and publication has been brought home to the passenger. If the contract of carriage in question related to an interstate shipment of baggage, or if the trunk had been shipped across the state boundary, then it must be conceded that every question arising in this case was fully presented and decided in the case of Boston & M. R. Co. v. Hooker, 233 U. S. 97, 58 L. ed. 868, L.R.A.1915B, 450, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 526, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 593.

The action at bar was to recover for loss of baggage checked from Toledo, Ohio, to Youngstown, Ohio. The baggage was checked upon a first-class ticket and routed by the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern and Erie Railways to destination. Judgment was recovered in the sum of $285. During the course of the trial the initial carrier was dismissed in the case.
L.R.A.1917B.

The Erie Railroad Company, in addition to denials, pleaded certain facts in support of its claim that in no event could there be a recovery for a greater sum than $100. It alleged that its contract of carriage was to the effect that, unless a greater sum was declared by the passenger and charges paid for increased valuation at the time of the delivery to the carrier, the value of the baggage belonging to or checked for an adult passenger should be deemed and agreed not to be in excess of $100; that if the passenger, at the time of checking the baggage, declared a greater value than $100, each $100 in value or fraction thereof above such allowance would be charged for at 10 per cent of the excess baggage rates for the distance carried; that said agreement was made in accordance with and under and by virtue of and arose from the local, inter-division, and joint tariff of baggage rules and regulations, excess baggage rates and transfer charges in force and effect at the various times complained of in said petition, properly filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and also duly filed with the Public Utilities Commission of the state of Ohio; that the passenger plaintiff did not declare the baggage to be of any greater value than $100, or pay any excess charges therefor.

The evidence disclosed that the defendant company had published and filed with the Public Utilities Commission of Ohio, and also with the Interstate Commerce Commission, in accordance with the Ohio and Federal statutes, its schedules relating to rates, fares, charges, rules, and regulations for transporting both passengers and baggage between the points named, that the plaintiff had no actual notice of the regulations limiting liability, and that no declaration as to value was made by the plaintiff at the time she purchased her ticket and checked her baggage, and that no inquiry as to value was made by the baggageman. On the face of the baggage check was the following stipulation: "See conditions on back. Value not stated."

On the reverse side of the baggage check was the following notation:

Notice to Passengers.

Baggage consists of passenger's personal wearing apparel, and liability is limited to $100 (except a greater or less amount is provided in tariffs) on full-fare ticket, unless a greater value is declared by owner at the time of checking and payment is made therefor.

During the course of the trial, and before argument, at the instance of defendant, the following request was asked to be given to the jury and refused by the court: "The court says to you as a matter of law that in no event can plaintiff recover more than the sum of $100, for loss of baggage."

Judgment was rendered for the market value of the goods, and the majority of the court of appeals sustained the judgment recovered.

In the case of Boston & M. R. Co. v. Hooker, supra, the pertinent propositions of the syllabus that apply here are as follows:

"Knowledge of the shipper that the rate is based on value is to be presumed from the terms of the bill of lading and of the published schedules filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the effect of so filing the schedules makes the published rates binding upon shipper and carrier alike.

"The limitation of liability of carriers for passengers' baggage is covered by the Interstate Commerce Act, and the Carmack amendment to the Hepburn Act applies thereto as well as to liability for shipments of freight.

"A provision in a tariff schedule that the passenger must declare the value of his baggage and pay stated excess charges for excess liability over the stated value to be carried free is a regulation within the meaning of §§ 6 and 22 of the Interstate Commerce Act, and as such is sufficient to give the shipper notice of the limitation."

Many of the decisions cited in the foregoing majority opinion are not germane to this case, since such decisions are based upon the reciprocal liability of passengers and carrier before the adoption of various commerce laws regulating the shipment of freight and baggage, and prior to the decisions of the courts as to the effect of the adoption of such statutes.

If the Ohio statutes conferring powers upon its Public Utilities Commission in fixing the tariffs, rates, and charges, and requiring their publication and filing, are similar to the cognate Federal statutes relating to that subject adopted by Congress, and if the state court adopts the same rule of liability as the Federal court, then of necessity this case must be reversed. It would not be profitable in this opinion to cite the various acts of Congress under which the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Boston & M. R. Co. v. Hooker, supra, determined the duties and liabilities of shipper and carrier. Those sections of the Federal law are referred to and set forth in the opinion in that case. That case discusses as well the effect of preceding Federal decisions relating to the legal effect of such statutes. Following a discriminating review of those decisions L.R.A.1917B.

Mr. Justice Day, on page 113 of 233 U. S. concludes: "It follows, therefore, from the previous decisions in this court, that if it be found that the limitation of liability for baggage is required to be filed in the carrier's tariffs, the plaintiff was bound by such limitation. Having the notice which follows from the filed and published regulations, as required by the statute and the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, she might have declared the value of her luggage, paid the excess traffic rate, and thus secured the liability of the carrier to the full amount of the value of her baggage; or she might, for the purpose of transportation have valued it at $100, and received free transportation and liability to that extent only; or, as she did, she might have made no valuation of her baggage, in which event the rate and the corresponding liability would have automatically attached."

The principles announced in the case of Boston & M. R. Co. v. Hooker, supra, were supported and emphasized by Mr. Justice Lurton in the three cases,—Adams Exp. Co. v. Croninger, 226 U. S. 491, 506, 57 L. ed. 314, 320, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 257, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 148; Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Carl, 227 U. S. 639, 648, 654, 57 L. ed. 683, 687, 689, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 391; and Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Harriman, 227 U. S. 657, 668, 57 L. ed. 690, 696, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397,—by Mr. Justice Lamar in Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Cramer, 232 U. S. 490, 58 L. ed. 697, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383, and were later approved by the United States Supreme Court in George N. Pierce Co. v. Wells F. & Co. 236 U. S. 278, 59 L. ed. 576, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 351, and in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Maxwell, 237 U. S. 94, 59 L. ed. 853, L.R.A.1915E, 665, P.U.R. 1915C, 300, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 494. In the latter case the court permitted the carrier to recover from the shipper an amount exacted which was less than the published rates for interstate transportation, under the provisions of the Federal law governing filed and published rates under the Interstate Commerce Acts.

In construing the Ohio law upon the same subject, I am constrained to follow the rules of construction adopted by the Supreme Court of the United States, not only because of the high character of that court and the convincing application of the rule found in its opinions, but also because of the uniformity required in the application of legal principles to liabilities arising under similar statutes under local and Federal laws. The adoption of the provisions of the Federal law on this subject by the Ohio legislature is evidence that the state desired such uniformity, entailing similar duties and liabilities, and especially is this true where our state commerce act provides that these schedules, "as far as practicable, shall conform to the forms prescribed by the Interstate Commerce Commission." I am unable to see what principle of substantial justice, equality before the laws, or of public policy should require this court to prescribe a rule of liability to the effect that a shipment of intrastate goods should entitle the shipper to a higher amount of damages than a shipment made over the state boundary. In this state, as elsewhere, a large volume of the transportation business transacted, covering freight and baggage, goes beyond the state border, and the adoption of a different rule of liability by local courts must necessarily result in annoyance and confusion. Thus, a passenger desiring to transport at the same time one piece of baggage within the limits of the state and another without would be confronted with different duties and with different liabilities, if the rule adopted by the majority opinion in this case should be followed. Questions are now arising, and will continue to arise, presenting different rules of transportation liability under state and Federal laws concededly similar, and their application would vary according to the character of the transportation, whether intrastate or interstate. However, upon all interstate shipments the Carmack amendment to the Hepburn Act embraces the Federal policy and supersedes the state legislation or policy upon that subject, and the construction given such Federal laws by the highest court of the land is binding upon state courts. Adams Exp. Co. v. Croninger, 226 U. S. 491, 506, 57 L. ed. 314, 320, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 257, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 148; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Harriman, 227 U. S. 657, 668, 57 L. ed. 690, 696, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397; and Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Cramer, 232 U. S. 490, 58 L. ed. 697, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383.

An effort is made in the majority opinion in this case to distinguish it from the case of Boston & M. R. Co. v. Hooker, 233 U. S. 97, 58 L. ed. 868, L.R.A. 1915B, 450, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 526, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 593, above referred to. This effort is predicated upon the theory that a conversion was involved in this case, and that the liability is like that of warehousemen; and it is intimated that, if such a liability had been before the Supreme Court of the United States, the Hooker Case would have been decided otherwise. And in the majority opinion a quotation has been embodied from the opinion of Mr. Justice Day in the case of Boston & M. R. Co. v. Hooker, supra, as follows: "It is to be borne in mind that the action was tried and decided in the state court was not for negligence of the railroad company as a warehouseman for the loss of the baggage after its delivery at Sunapee Lake station, but was solely upon the contract of carriage in interstate commerce."

It is therefore intimated that the limitation of liability should not be applied to cases involving conversion, and that this principle is inferentially upheld by the statement above quoted, to the effect that a different rule of liability might possibly apply in cases where the duty of warehousemen arose on the part of the carrier.

While these opinions were undergoing preparation the Supreme Court of the United States, in a very recent decision, held that the provisions of the Hepburn and Carmack amendments, and the liability imposed thereby, apply to a railroad company, whether acting as carrier or warehouseman. This principle was decided in the case of Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Dettlebach, 239 U. S. 588, 60 L. ed. 453, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 177. Evidently in that case, which was one of interstate shipment, the same view was taken by this court as is now taken in the majority opinion. That case was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States from the court of appeals of the eighth district of Ohio, as "the supreme court of the state declined to review the judgment." Page 591 supra. While the reasons for so refusing are not given, evidently, as the case was one of great general interest, the refusal to review must have been based upon the same conception of the law which the court now holds. The court of appeals had affirmed the judgment for the full market value of the goods, and refused to apply the principle of limitation of liability found in the Carmack amendment to a case involving the duties of a carrier as warehouseman. On page 591 of 239 U. S., Mr. Justice Pitney, who delivered the dissenting opinion in the case of Boston & M. R. Co. v. Hooker, supra, states the principle thus: "The question is whether the limitation of liability may be deemed to have spent its force upon the completion of the carrier's service as such, or must be held to control also during the ensuing relation of warehouseman."

In referring to the decision of the court of appeals the justice says: "The court [Ohio court] considered that the declaration of value stamped upon the bill of lading and signed by plaintiff's agent carried no suggestion that it should inure to the advantage of a warehouseman after becoming inert for the relief of the carrier, and that the custody and protection of the goods as warehouseman is a distinct service from that of their transportation."

The learned justice thereupon denies the rule attempted to be invoked by the court of appeals, and applies the rule of liability limitation, not only to the service of the transportation company as a carrier, but to its services as a warehouseman as well. I might add in this connection that the gravamen of this case was not a violation of duty of the carrier as warehouseman, and that such duty was neither pleaded, proven, nor given in the charge to the jury. The charge of the trial court was very plain, and simply confined the jury to one issue, viz., the market value of the baggage.

No one questions but the case made was one for the conversion by the misdelivery of the baggage shipped. But again an attempt has been made to distinguish it from the Hooker Case, supra, upon the theory that a different rule of liability would ensue in case of such misdelivery. This theory likewise has been annihilated by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case mentioned.

It is conceded that the baggage in question was transported over the initial carrier, the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railroad, from Toledo to Cleveland, Ohio. At that point it was transferred to the connecting carrier, the Erie Railroad, for transportation to Youngstown. When the baggage reached Youngstown it was, through mistake or error, misdelivered to a carrier, taken to New York, and thence to Europe. It appears from the record that, upon motion, the initial carrier was dismissed from the case by the trial court, and the case proceeded against the connecting carrier, whose default caused the loss of the baggage. Why the court dismissed the initial carrier from the case is not disclosed, but the action of the trial court in that behalf is clearly erroneous, for the reason that, under the liability imposed by § 8994—1, General Code, the plaintiff below had a right of action against the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railroad Company by reason of the default of its connecting carrier. However, the plaintiff had a perfect right to enforce the liability against the Erie Railroad, which had actually caused the loss, for the limitation of liability imposed in favor of the initial carrier inures in favor of the connecting carrier, and as to the latter is co-extensive with the liability imposed by that section of the Code upon the initial carrier. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Carl, 227 U. S. 639, 57 L. ed. 683, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 391, and Georgia, F. & A. R. Co. v. Blish Mill Co. 241 U. S. 190, 60 L. ed. 948, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 541.

It has been held that the Carmack amendment to the Hepburn Act, making the initial carrier liable, merely provides a cumulative remedy, and does not prevent an action against the succeeding carrier, if the L.R.A.1917B.

latter be at fault, in case of loss of baggage. Baltimore, C. & A. R. Co. v. William Sperber & Co. 117 Md. 595, 84 Atl. 72. However, it is insisted in this case that § 8994—1 does not apply where there has been a conversion of the property. This distinction did not occur to either of the members of the court of appeals who decided this case. An inspection of both the majority and minority opinions shows that the judgment was rendered upon the effect and construction of the statute relating to published tariffs and schedules, and the question of conversion did not occur to either of the judges in the court below. It is true that the trial court held that the case presented was one for conversion, and it may be conceded that such is the case. In cases of this character, where there has been a shipment of goods and a misdelivery by error or mistake to a wrong consignee, the authorities generally hold that this is a conversion. If delivery be made to a wrong person, either innocently or induced by fraud, the carrier is responsible, and the wrongful delivery is treated as a conversion. 1 Moore, Carr. 2d ed. p. 233.

In the case of Oskamp v. Southern Exp. Co. 61 Ohio St. 341, at page 351, 56 N. E. 14, 7 Am. Neg. Rep. 324, Shauk, J., says: "The cases are numerous in which the carrier's liability has been held to be upon contract, and that delivery to the wrong person is a conversion unless such wrong delivery is induced by the consignor."

Section 8994—1, General Code, imposes a limitation of liability upon the common carrier receiving the goods for shipment and issuing a receipt or bill of lading therefor, and also upon the connecting carrier transporting the same. This section of the Code provides that the initial carrier "shall be liable to the lawful holder thereof for any loss, damage, or injury to such property caused by it or by any common carrier, railroad or transportation company to which such property may be delivered or over whose line or lines such property may pass, and no contract, receipt, rule, or regulation shall exempt such common carrier, railroad, or transportation company from the liability hereby imposed." It has already been stated that this section of the General Code is an exact copy of the Carmack amendment, with the sole exception that it makes its provisions applicable to intrastate transportation. The purposes of the section were to provide a rule whereby initial carriers should be liable for the loss, whether caused upon their own or upon any connecting line; to establish the presumptive rule that for transportation throughout the entire route the connecting carriers were acting as agents for initial carriers; to provide for uniformity of rates and liabilities; and, furthermore, to limit liability for loss and damage to the valuations based on the published rates and schedules. It will be noted that the section of the Code provides for a liability "for any loss, damage, or injury to such property" caused by the initial and connecting carriers over which the shipment was made. The liability imposed by this section of the Code covers any loss, whether caused by the negligence of the carrier or otherwise, and the valuations made are conclusive on the parties to the contract of carriage, in the absence of circumstances showing attempts at rebating or false billing. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Robinson, 233 U. S. 173, 180, 58 L. ed. 901, 905, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 556, and Boston & M. R. Co. v. Hooker, supra, 233 U. S. 112, 58 L. ed. 868, L.R.A.1915B, 450, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 528, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 593.

The statute in question, having provided a limitation of liability for any loss occasioned by the contract of transportation, covers a loss of baggage occurring through the fault of the carrier in misdelivering the property, where the rates, tariffs, and schedules have been lawfully published according to other sections of the General Code. It is true that the property may have been converted by a delivery to a wrong consignee, but it is difficult to see why the limitation of liability does not apply in a case where the property has been damaged or destroyed, as in the following cases: Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Harriman, 227 U. S. 657, 57 L. ed. 690, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Cramer, 232 U. S. 490, 58 L. ed. 697, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383; Great Northern R. Co. v. O'Connor, 232 U. S. 508, 58 L. ed. 703, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 380, 8 N. C. C. A. 53; Boston & M. R. Co. v. Hooker, supra; and George N. Pierce Co. v. Wells F. & Co. 236 U. S. 278, 59 L. ed. 576, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 351. However, this limitation of liability has been held to be covered by the Carmack amendment in cases where there has been a failure to deliver, as in this case. Wells F. & Co. v. Neiman-Marcus Co. 227 U. S. 469, 57 L. ed. 600, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 267, and Adams Exp. Co. v. Croninger, 226 U. S. 491, 57 L. ed. 314, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 257, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 148. In both of these cases the limitation of liability was upheld upon the failure to deliver the property shipped. In the latter case Mr. Justice Lurton, on page 511 of 226 U. S., quoting from a Massachusetts case, uses the following language as applicable to contracts of carriage of this character: "It is a contract as to what the property is, in reference to its value. The purpose of it is not to change the nature of the undertaking of the common carrier, or L.R.A.1917B.

limit his obligation in the care and management of that which is intrusted to him. It is to describe and define the subject-matter of the contract, so far as the parties care to define it, for the purpose of showing of what value that is which comes into the carrier's possession, and for which he must account in the performance of his duty as a carrier."

And in the case of George N. Pierce Co. v. Wells F. & Co. supra, on pages 283 and 284 of 236 U. S., Mr. Justice Day uses the following language:

"The case as made, therefore, presents the question whether one who has deliberately and purposely, without imposition or fraud, accepted a contract of shipment limiting the amount of recovery to $50, which is the sum named in the filed tariffs as the amount of recovery in the absence of declaration of a greater value on the part of the shipper, who is given the privilege of paying an increased rate and having the liability for the full value of the goods, is entitled, in case of loss, to recover the full value of the property."

"The valuation declared or agreed upon as evidenced by the contract of shipment upon which the published tariff rate is applied must be conclusive in an action to recover for loss or damage a greater sum."

In the case of Great Northern R. Co. v. O'Connor, supra, on page 516 of 232 U. S., Mr. Justice Lamar closes his opinion with a quotation from the case of Hart v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 112 U. S. 331, 28 L. ed. 717, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 151, as follows: "The valuation named was the 'agreed valuation,' the one on which the minds of the parties met, however, it came to be fixed, and the rate of freight was based on that valuation, and was fixed on condition that such was the valuation, and that the liability should go to that extent and no further."

In the recent case of Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Dettlebach, 239 U. S. 588, 60 L. ed. 453, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 177, Mr. Justice Pitney, in construing the language found in § 8994—1, General Code, which was taken bodily from the Carmack amendment, holds that "any loss or damage for which any carrier is liable" includes liability both as carrier and warehouseman; and, further, that the term "transportation" in the Hepburn Act includes all services in connection with the receipt and delivery of goods that come within the purview of the commerce act. Section 504, General Code, contains similar provisions covering "any service in connection" with transportation. This construction of the Carmack amendment was also sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States in a more recent decision rendered January 24, 1916, New York, P. & N. R. Co. v. Peninsula Produce Exch. 240 U. S. 34, 60 L. ed. 511, L.R.A. 1917A, 193, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 230. In that case it was contended that the words "any loss, damage, or injury to such property" did not include a loss resulting from unreasonable delay in shipment, and it was urged by counsel that, while unity of responsibility was secured if the goods were injured in the course of transportation or were not delivered, the statute did not cover damages for unreasonable delay. Mr. Justice Hughes, delivering opinion of the court, at page 38 of 240 U. S., said: "We do not think that the language of the amendment has the inadequacy attributed to it. The words 'any loss, damage, or injury to such property' caused by the initial carrier or by any connecting carrier are comprehensive enough to embrace all damages resulting from any failure to discharge the carrier's duty with respect to any part of the transportation to the agreed destination."

In the case of Georgia, F. & A. R. Co. v. Blish Mill. Co. 241 U. S. 190, 60 L. ed. 948, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 541, the action in the state courts was for conversion; but Mr. Justice Hughes, holding that the form of action was immaterial under contracts of shipment under the Federal act, said, at page 197 of 241 U. S.: "The action is in trover, but, as the state court said, 'if we look beyond its technical denomination, the scope and effect of the action is nothing more than that of an action for damages against the delivering carrier.'"

Section 8994—1, General Code, therefore having in terms provided for a limitation of liability for loss, damage, or injury to property, caused by any common carrier, a misdelivery of the baggage in question, coming within the purview of that section, amounts to a conversion, and, under the conceded facts in this case, the liability imposed by the state commerce act is limited to the sum of $100 when the schedule rates, tariffs, fares, charges, rules, and regulations for transporting passengers and baggage have been filed and published, and where there is an express provision, as in this case, limiting the liability to that sum. The Kirby and Maxwell Cases cited merely support the well-known principle that preferential rates, ignorance, or misquotation of rates cannot be availed of, as a guise or otherwise, to overcome the policy of Congress effected by the adoption of the Carmack amendment as it relates to uniform rates and liabilities. These cases in no wise impinge on the legal principle that, in the absence of a declaration of value, the "rate and corresponding liability" automatically attach, and that, to recover the full L.R.A.1917B.

value of the baggage, the excess rate should have been paid. Boston & M. R. Co. v. Hooker, supra, 233 U. S. 113, 58 L. ed. 868, L.R.A.1915B, 450, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 526, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 593.

The fatal weakness underlying the majority opinion is found in the remarkable apologia excusing the holding there made because of the fact that in the future the Carmack amendment will not apply for the reason that the same was amended by the Cummins amendment, approved March 4, 1915. It is difficult to conceive how the passage of that amendment affects the present case; for this cause of action arose on September 11, 1913, when the misdelivery of the baggage occurred, and the Cummins amendment was not passed until nearly two years later. It may be conceded that the Cummins amendment vitally changes the rule of liability theretofore prevailing under the Carmack amendment, for the former provides that carriers shall be liable "for full actual loss, damage, or injury to such property," caused by the carrier, notwithstanding any limitation of liability or amount of recovery, or representation or agreement as to value, or of any rule or regulation in any tariff filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission; but the passage of the Cummins amendment was in itself proof of the fact that a different liability was intended by the Carmack amendment and was judicially enforced. The irony of the situation may be gathered from the majority opinion where it states: "We recognize the desirability of the uniform construction of the laws of each of the several states of the United States, with the construction given by the Supreme Court of the United States to acts of Congress covering the same subject matter. . . . It would be necessary for the general assembly of this state, if it desires uniformity of state and interstate commerce laws, to amend that section [8994—1] to conform to the provisions of the Cummins amendment."

It is here plainly shown that this court is not now following the construction given by the United States Supreme Court to a similar public utility statute; but the foregoing quotation imports a hope that the future may bring forth a locus penitentie, whence may arise a due regard for uniformity of carrier liability under similar Federal and state laws and a more ethical respect for the decisions of our highest Federal court.

Comment is made in the opinion from which it might be inferred that counsel for the defendant in the trial court made no special objection to the charge of the court that, by agreement of counsel, the only question left for the jury to determine was the market value of the property. Counsel for the defendant could not do otherwise. After the court had ruled out the sole legal question in the case, to wit, that the recovery, as a matter of law, should be limited to the sum of $100 for the loss of baggage, there was nothing left for the jury to determine but the sole question as to what was the actual value of the property. After the defendant had rested his entire case, seeking to limit, under the conceded facts, the damage in the sum of $100, he had done all that was necessary to safeguard his legal rights.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.
(Department No. 1.)

STATE OF WASHINGTON EX REL. J. E. WILLIS, Appt.,
v.

D. W. MONFORT, Auditor of the County of Lewis, Respnt.

(— Wash. —, 159 Pac. 889.)

Judge — eligibility of suspended lawyer.

A lawyer is not, during the time of his suspension from the bar, eligible to the office of judge, under a constitutional provision that no person shall be so eligible unless he shall have been admitted to practise in the courts of record of the state.

For other cases, see Judges, III. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(September 5, 1916.)

APPEAL by relator from an order of the Superior Court for Lewis County dismissing his petition for a writ of mandamus to compel respondent to print his name upon the ballot as a candidate for the office of superior judge. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. E. Willis, for appellant:

Relator, under no moral taint, desires an election to the office of superior judge in order that he may preside. There is no constitutional provision declaring that suspension from practice renders him ineligible.

Re Advisory Opinion, 31 Fla. 1, 18 L.R.A. 594, 12 So. 114; State Bd. of Examiners in Law v. Byrnes, 97 Minn. 534, 105 N. W. 965.

Messrs. C. D. Cunningham and Forney & Ponder, for respondent:

Relator, by his suspension, was temporarily removed and debarred from all his rights as a practising attorney, and he now stands before the court in the same position as if he had never been admitted to the practice of the profession.

Brown v. Woods, 2 Okla. 601, 39 Pac. 473; Danforth v. Egan, 23 S. D. 43, 139 Am. St. Rep. 1030, 119 N. W. 1021, 20 Ann. Cas. 418; Jamieson v. Wiggin, 12 S. D. 16, 46 L.R.A. 317, 76 Am. St. Rep. 585, 80 N.

Note. — As to eligibility of suspended or disbarred attorney to judicial office, see annotation following this case, post, 803. L.R.A.1917B.

W. 137; State ex rel. Martin v. Poindexter, 43 Wash. 147, 86 Pac. 176; State ex rel. Reynolds v. Howell, 70 Wash. 467, 41 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1119, 126 Pac. 954; Searcy v. Grow, 15 Cal. 118; State ex rel. Chealander v. Carroll, 57 Wash. 202, 106 Pac. 748; State ex rel. Case v. Superior Ct. 81 Wash. 623, 143 Pac. 461, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 838.

Mount, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from an order of the lower court dismissing the petition of the relator for a writ of mandamus to compel the auditor of Lewis county to print the name of the relator upon the ballot as a candidate for the nomination of superior judge. It appears from the petition that the relator is a citizen of the United States and of this state and a qualified voter in Lewis county; that he is and was at all times stated in the application duly admitted to practise law in the courts of record of this state; that in the month of July he filed his declaration of candidacy and tendered to the auditor the fees provided by law therefor, but after the filing of such declaration the county auditor notified relator that he would not print relator's name upon the ballot to be used at the primary election in September. The petition also shows that on the 14th day of July, 1916, after a trial in an action wherein the state of Washington, upon the relation of the Lewis County Bar Association, was petitioner and the relator was the respondent, a judgment was entered in that case suspending the relator from the practice of law in this state for a period of one year from the date of that decree. On these facts the lower court was of the opinion that the relator was not eligible to be a candidate for the office of judge of the superior court, and for that reason sustained the demurrer.

This involves the construction of § 17 of article 4 of the Constitution, which reads: "Sec. 17. Eligibility of Judges. No person shall be eligible to the office of judge of the supreme court or judge of a superior court unless he shall have been admitted to practise in the courts of record of this state or of the territory of Washington."

It is insisted by the appellant that this section of the Constitution should be given a strict construction, as was done in the case of State ex rel. Reynolds v. Howell, 70 Wash. 467, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1119, 126 Pac. 954. It is, no doubt, correct to say that a constitutional provision should be given a strict construction, especially where its terms are clear; but the rule is that the reason and intention of the lawgiver will control the strict letter of the law when the latter would lead to palpable injustice, contradiction, and absurdity. 1 Kent, Com. 462; Heydenfeldt v. Daney Gold & S. Min. Co. 93 U. S. 634, 23 L. ed. 995, 13 Mor. Min. Rep. 204.

It is argued by the appellant that, because the constitutional provision uses the words, "No person shall be eligible to the office of . . . judge of a superior court unless he shall have been admitted to practise in the courts of record of this state," it means that every person who has heretofore been admitted to practise law in the courts of record of this state is eligible to the office of judge of the superior court no matter what may occur thereafter. We think it would be absurd to say that this provision of the Constitution means that, when a person has been admitted to practise in the courts of record of this state, and subsequently he has been disbarred for cause or his admission vacated, he is still eligible to the office of superior judge by reason of his original status. The construction of this constitutional provision contended for by the appellant leads to that absurdity. When the Constitution was framed and when it was adopted, it was clearly not the intention of the people in adopting it to authorize a person to be elected judge who was not, at the time of his election, entitled to practise as an attorney in the courts of record in the state. This provision of the Constitution, in our opinion, defines a personal status which must continue, and when the status ceases to continue the person is ineligible. We think no other reasonable construction can be placed upon this provision.

No authorities directly in point have been called to our attention. The case of Brown v. Woods, 2 Okla. 601, 39 Pac. 473, comes nearer to the point than any other to which we have been referred. That was a case where there was a statute providing "that no person shall be eligible to the office of county attorney who is not duly admitted to practise as an attorney in some court of record in this territory."

A disbarment proceeding had been instituted against the petitioner, Woods, in that case, and he was suspended from practice. Before the trial was had he was elected county attorney, and the court in that case, in passing upon his eligibility to hold the office, said: "The evident purpose and intention of the legislative act with reference to the eligibility of a person to the office of county attorney was not only that he should possess qualifications to perform the duties of the office of county attorney, but that there should be a judgment and determination of a court that he does possess the moral and mental qualifications of an attorney; that there should be a determination of a court that he is a person of good moral character, and learned and skilled in the legal profession. It requires that he 'shall have been duly admitted to practise,' and then specifies the particular duties that he is required to perform. The statute, it is true, does not say in terms that he must not have been disbarred from practice in the very court in which the law requires him to perform certain professional duties, but the terms of the act show that this was within the reason and intention of the legislature. It was within the purpose and spirit of the act, and that which is within the reason, purpose, and intention of the language used is as much within the act as though it were a part of the language itself."

That reasoning is applicable to this case. We think it is clear that the Constitution meant to say that no person is eligible to the office of judge of the superior court unless he shall have been admitted to practise in the courts of record in this state, which means that he not only shall have been, but that he is, at the time he becomes a candidate or is required to qualify as such judge, entitled to practise in the courts of this state. The fact that the petitioner is suspended rather than disbarred for all time is of no special importance, because under his suspension he is disbarred during that time from practice in the courts and from being eligible to any office or employment by reason of the fact that he had at one time been admitted to practise. When he was suspended from exercising the rights of an attorney at law, that suspension was as effective during the time thereof as a removal.

In view of the conceded fact that the relator is suspended, it follows that he is not eligible to hold office at the time he is required to qualify, and that he is not eligible to become a candidate upon the ticket. State ex rel. Reynolds v. Howell, supra. The respondent was therefore justified in refusing to print his name upon the ballot. The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Morris, Ch. J., and Main, Ellis, and Fullerton, JJ., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied.

Annotation—Eligibility of suspended or disbarred attorney to judicial office.

Generally, as to the extent of restriction of the right of a disbarred or suspended attorney or unlicensed person to transact legal business for another, see Re Duncan, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 750, and note.

For disbarment or suspension of attorney for misconduct in an official capacity other than his attorneyship itself, see State v. Peck, L.R.A.1915A, 663, and note.

STATE EX REL. WILLIS v. MONFORT, ante, 801, appears to be the only case passing directly upon the effect of disbarment of an attorney upon his eligibility to a judicial office.

See, however, State v. Peck, supra, which was a disbarment proceeding against an attorney for misconduct in his capacity as probate judge, in which it was argued upon demurrer, and again at the hearing, that disbarment proceedings so far partake of the character of official impeachment that they should not be permitted in the case of a judicial officer, but the court said this objection was not well taken inasmuch as a judge of probate need not be an attorney, and therefore his disbarment would have no effect upon his official status.

And Re Silkman (1903) 88 App. Div.

102, 84 N. Y. Supp. 1025, a proceeding instituted for the suspension of an attorney because he engaged in the practice of law while holding the office of surrogate, such practice being in violation of the Constitution of the state and of the oath of office of surrogate, in which the court held that the proceedings would not lie for the reason that the misconduct related to the office of surrogate, and not to that of attorney, and, after pointing out that the Constitution provides that no one shall be eligible to the office of surrogate who is not an attorney and counsellor of state, said: "The disbarment, however, would not operate to remove the incumbent from his office, for that clearly can only be done in the manner prescribed by the Constitution. The absurd, not to say scandalous, result would therefore be exhibited, upon the exercise of this alleged inherent power of a judicial officer disbarred for misconduct as an attorney, yet retaining his official grace and power after he has thus been judicially decreed to be unfit, and at the same time incidentally deprived of an essential constitutional element of eligibility."

R. L. S.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

W. T. RAWLEIGH MEDICAL COMPANY
v.

WILLIAM H. OSBORNE et al., Appts.

(— Iowa, —, 158 N. W. 566.) •

Pleading — answer — anti-trust law.

1. The defense that a contract for sale of articles for resale violated the anti-trust law is not raised by allegations that the articles were worthless and of no value, that the sale and resale would constitute a fraud on the merchant and persons purchasing from him, and that the pretended sale thereof by plaintiff was a violation of law.

For other cases, see Pleading, III. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Note. — As to validity of contract provision seeking to control price at which an article shall be resold, see annotations to (Grogan v. Chaffee, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 395; Fisher Flouring Mills Co. v. Swanson, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 522, and Stewart v. W. J. Rawleigh Medical Co. L.R.A.1917A, 1276. L.R.A.1917B.

Monopoly — price regulation — credit — validity.

2. A contract by a wholesaler to furnish a stock of goods to a retailer who is to sell only the goods furnished at agreed prices and within a specified territory does not violate the anti-trust acts if the contract required the supply of an unlimited quantity of goods on credit, to be paid for in instalments measured by an aliquot part of sales made, so that the provisions operated as security for the payment of the purchase price.

For other cases, see Monopoly and Combinations, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(June 29, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the District Court for Buena Vista County sustaining a motion for direction of a verdict in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the contract price of certain goods sold and delivered by plaintiff under a written contract with defendants. Affirmed.

Statement by Evans, Ch. J.:

Action to recover the contract price of goods sold and delivered under a written contract. The answer was a general denial, with an admission, however, of the execution of the contract and of the receipt of the goods thereunder. The defendants also pleaded that the goods in question were purchased by the defendants for the purpose of resale to others, that such goods were worthless, and that their sale to the defendants was a fraud, and that their sale by the defendants to others would be a fraud. On the trial the defendants admitted the receipt of the goods as pleaded in the petition, and admitted the contract price thereof. The defendants offered no testimony in support of the affirmative defense of failure of consideration. At the close of the trial each party moved for a directed verdict. The motion of the plaintiff was sustained. From the judgment entered for the plaintiff, the defendants have appealed.

Messrs. Baillie & Edson, for appellants:

A contract between a manufacturer and a retail dealer fixing the retail price at which the goods are to be sold in a restricted and exclusive territory, wherein the retailer is to handle the manufacturer's goods exclusively, is a contract in violation of law, is in restraint of trade and free competition, tends to create a monopoly, and is void.

Willson v. Morae, 117 Iowa, 584, 91 N. W. 823; Reeves v. Decorah Farmer's Co-op. Soc. 160 Iowa, 194, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1104, 140 N. W. 844; Beechley v. Mulville, 102 Iowa, 602, 63 Am. St. Rep. 479, 70 N. W. 107, 71 N. W. 428; Richardson v. Buhl, 77 Mich. 632, 6 L.R.A. 457, 43 N. W. 1102; Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons, 220 U. S. 373, 55 L. ed. 502, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 376; John D. Park & Sons Co. v. Hartman, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 135, 82 C. C. A. 158, 153 Fed. 24; United States v. Kellogg Toasted Corn Flake Co. 222 Fed. 725, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 78; Continental Wall Paper Co. v. Louis Voight & Sons Co. 212 U. S. 227, 53 L. ed. 486, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 280; People v. Sheldon, 139 N. Y. 251, 23 L.R.A. 221, 36 Am. St. Rep. 690, 34 N. E. 785; W. H. Hill Co. v. Gray & Worcester, 163 Mich. 12, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 327, 127 N. W. 803; Central Ohio Salt Co. v. Guthrie, 35 Ohio St. 666; United States v. E. C. Knight Co. 156 U. S. 16, 39 L. ed. 330, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 249; Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 244, 44 L. ed. 148, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 96; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. State, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 1, 44 S. W. 936; White Dental Mfg. Co. v. Hurtsberg, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 51 S. W. 355. L.R.A.1917B.

The contract being void and prohibited under the statute, and at common law, and by the laws of the United States, no recovery against the defendant Osborne can be predicated thereon.

Continental Wall Paper Co. v. Louis Voight & Sons Co. 212 U. S. 227, 53 L. ed. 486, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 280; D. R. Wilder Mfg. Co. v. Corn Products Ref. Co. 236 U. S. 165-176, 59 L. ed. 520-526, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 398, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 118; Hanauer v. Doane, 12 Wall. 342-349, 20 L. ed. 439-441; McMullen v. Hoffman, 174 U. S. 639-669, 43 L. ed. 1117-1128, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 839; Coppel v. Hall, 7 Wall. 542, 558, 19 L. ed. 244, 248; Harrison County v. Ogden, 133 Iowa, 677, 108 N. W. 451; Marienthal, L. & Co. v. Shafer, 6 Iowa, 223; McIntosh v. Wilson, 81 Iowa, 339, 46 N. W. 1003; Dillon v. Allen, 46 Iowa, 299, 26 Am. Rep. 145; Toovey v. Ayhart, 136 Iowa, 694, 114 N. W. 181; Beechley v. Mulville, 102 Iowa, 602, 63 Am. St. Rep. 479, 70 N. W. 107, 71 N. W. 428; More v. Bennett, 140 Ill. 69, 15 L.R.A. 361, 33 Am. St. Rep. 216, 29 N. E. 888; Pike v. King, 16 Iowa, 49; Knowlton v. Congress & E. Spring Co. 57 N. Y. 518; Central Ohio Salt Co. v. Guthrie, 35 Ohio St. 666; Leonard v. Poole, 114 N. Y. 371, 4 L.R.A. 728, 11 Am. St. Rep. 667, 21 N. E. 707; Judd v. Harrington, 139 N. Y. 105, 34 N. E. 790; Detroit Salt Co. v. National Salt Co. 134 Mich. 103, 96 N. W. 1; Clancey v. Onondaga Fine Salt Mfg. Co. 62 Barb. 395.

The contract being void and against public policy, the law will leave the parties where the court found them.

McIntosh v. Wilson, 81 Iowa, 339, 46 N. W. 1003; Harvey v. Tama County, 53 Iowa, 228, 5 N. W. 130; Williamson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 53 Iowa, 126, 36 Am. St. Rep. 206, 4 N. W. 870.

The parties being in pari delicto, neither party can have a recovery against the other.

Williamson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 53 Iowa, 126, 36 Am. St. Rep. 206, 4 N. W. 870; Spaulding v. Bank of Muskingum, 12 Ohio, 544; Stover v. Flower, 120 Iowa, 514, 94 N. W. 1100.

Messrs. Faville & Whitney, for appellee:

The alleged contract between the plaintiff and the defendants, providing for the selling to the latter, and delivery to carrier by the former, of goods for shipment to the latter to points in Iowa, is interstate commerce, which Congress has the exclusive power to regulate, and its validity must be determined under the laws of the United States and the common law as interpreted in the Federal courts.

Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 207, 6 L. ed.

73; Walling v. Michigan, 116 U. S. 446-461, 29 L. ed. 691-696, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 454; Wabash St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 557, 30 L. ed. 244, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 31, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 4; Brown v. Houston, 114 U. S. 622, 29 L. ed. 257, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1091; Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 125 U. S. 465, 31 L. ed. 700, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 823, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 689, 1062; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Hardwick Farmers' Elevator Co. 226 U. S. 426, 57 L. ed. 285, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 203, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 174; Sioux Remedy Co. v. Cope, 235 U. S. 197, 59 L. ed. 193, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 57; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hefley, 158 U. S. 98, 39 L. ed. 910, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 802; International Text Book Co. v. Pigg, 217 U. S. 103, 54 L. ed. 683, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 493, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 481, 18 Ann. Cas. 1103; Cooper Mfg. Co. v. Ferguson, 113 U. S. 727, 28 L. ed. 1137, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 739; Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, 228, 44 L. ed. 136, 142, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 96; Dubuque & S. C. R. Co. v. Richmond, 19 Wall. 584, 22 L. ed. 173; Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 280, 23 L. ed. 347, 349; Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 26 L. ed. 238; Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 196, 29 L. ed. 158, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 382, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 826; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Call Pub. Co. 181 U. S. 92, 45 L. ed. 765, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 561; Robbins v. Taxing Dist. 120 U. S. 489, 30 L. ed. 694, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 45, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 592; Corson v. Maryland, 120 U. S. 502, 30 L. ed. 699, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 50, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 655; Asher v. Texas, 128 U. S. 129, 32 L. ed. 368, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 241, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1; Caldwell v. North Carolina, 187 U. S. 625, 47 L. ed. 338, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 229; Stockard v. Morgan, 185 U. S. 31, 45 L. ed. 792, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 576; Butler Bros. Shoe Co. v. United States Rubber Co. 84 C. C. A. 167, 156 Fed. 1; Southern R. Co. v. Harrison, 119 Ala. 539, 43 L.R.A. 385, 72 Am. St. Rep. 936, 24 So. 552; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Com. 88 Va. 103, 13 L.R.A. 110, 29 Am. St. Rep. 705, 13 S. E. 340; Albertype Co. v. Gust Feist Co. 102 Tex. 219, 114 S. W. 791; McCall Co. v. J. D. Stiff Dry Goods Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 142 S. W. 659; Dr. Koch Vegetable Tea Co. v. Malone, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 163 S. W. 662; Stein Double Cushion Tire Co. v. Wm. T. Fulton Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 159 S. W. 1014; Eclipse Paint & Mfg. Co. v. New Process Roofing & Supply Co. 55 Tex. Civ. App. 553, 120 S. W. 532; Moroney Hardware Co. v. Goodwin Pottery Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 120 S. W. 1088; L. Miller & Co. v. Goodman, 91 Tex. 41, 40 S. W. 718; Barnhard Bros. & Spindler v. Morrison, — Tex. L.R.A.1917B.

Civ. App. —, 87 S. W. 376; United States v. Tucker, 188 Fed. 741; Reed v. Walker, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 92, 21 S. W. 687; Hynes v. Briggs, 41 Fed. 468; United States v. Swift & Co. 122 Fed. 529; Standard Fashion Co. v. Cummings, 187 Mich. 196, L.R.A. 1916F, 329, 153 N. W. 814.

The contract is not invalid as being in restraint of trade, but it is a fair, reasonable, and proper contract for the protection of the vendor in credit sales of its own product.

Garst v. Harris, 177 Mass. 72, 58 N. E. 174; Ripy v. Art Wall Paper Mills, 41 Okla. 20, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 33, 136 Pac. 1080; Andrews v. New Orleans Brewing Asso. 74 Miss. 362, 60 Am. St. Rep. 509, 20 So. 837; Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431; Fisher Flouring Mills Co. v. Swanson, 76 Wash. 649, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 522, 137 Pac. 144; J. D. Park & Sons Co. v. National Wholesale Druggists' Asso. 175 N. Y. 1, 62 L.R.A. 632, 96 Am. St. Rep. 578, 67 N. E. 136; Ferris v. American Brewing Co. 155 Ind. 539, 52 L.R.A. 305, 58 S. E. 701; Com. v. Grinstead, 111 Ky. 203, 56 L.R.A. 709, 63 S. W. 427; D. Ghirardelli Co. v. Hunsicker, 164 Cal. 355, 128 Pac. 1041; Grogan v. Chaffee, 156 Cal. 611, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 395, 105 Pac. 745; Gulf Ref. Co. v. Brown-Lloyd Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 167 S. W. 162; Alsworth v. Reppert, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 167 S. W. 1098; Com. v. Strauss, 191 Mass. 545, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 968, 78 N. E. 136, 6 Ann. Cas. 842.

One cannot refuse to pay for goods purchased for resale, because the contract under which they were furnished to him sought to establish a monopoly by forbidding sale of rival goods and fixing the price at which they should be sold.

McCall Co. v. Hughes, 102 Miss. 375, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 63, 59 So. 794; Manchester & L. R. Co. v. Concord R. Corp. 66 N. H. 100, 9 L.R.A. 689, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 319, 49 Am. St. Rep. 582, 20 Atl. 383; Andrews v. New Orleans Brewing Co. 74 Miss. 362, 60 Am. St. Rep. 509, 20 So. 837; International Harvester Co. v. Eaton Circuit Judge (International Harvester Co. v. Smith) 163 Mich. 55, 80 L.R.A.(N.S.) 580, 127 N. W. 695, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1022; Osgood v. Bauder, 75 Iowa, 550, 1 L.R.A. 655, 39 N. W. 887; Central New York Teleph. & Tele. Co. v. Averill, 199 N. Y. 128, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 494, 139 Am. St. Rep. 878, 92 N. E. 211; Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431; Hanauer v. Gray, 25 Ark. 350, 99 Am. Dec. 226; King v. King, 63 Ohio St. 363, 52 L.R.A. 157, 81 Am. St. Rep. 635, 59 N. E. 111; Cincinnati, P. B. S. & P. Packet Co. v. Bay, 200 U. S. 179, 184, 50 L. ed. 428, 433, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 208; Whitwell v. Continental Tobacco Co. 64 L.R.A. 689, 6 C. C. A. 290, 125 Fed. 454; Wassermann v. Sloss, 117 Cal. 425, 38 L.R.A. 176, 59 Am. St. Rep. 209, 49 Pac. 566; Butterick Pub. Co. v. Fisher, 203 Mass. 122, 133 Am. St. Rep. 283, 89 N. E. 189; Treadwell v. Davis, 34 Cal. 601, 94 Am. Dec. 770; Pratt v. Short, 79 N. Y. 437, 35 Am. Rep. 531; Packard v. Byrd, 73 S. C. 1, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 547, 51 S. E. 678.

Evans, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff set forth in his petition a copy of the contract sued on. Its execution was admitted by the defendant. As already indicated, the defendant pleaded a want of failure of consideration, but offered no evidence in support of such defense. The general contention now made by the defendant is that the contract sued on was illegal and void, as being contrary to public policy and contrary to the Federal statute known as the Anti-Trust Law, and contrary to those statutes of the state of Iowa which deal with restraints of trade. It is urged by the appellee that this contention and argument are not justified by the pleadings in the case. Such was also the view adopted by the trial court. The question therefore lies at the threshold of the case, and must receive our first consideration.

The contract between the plaintiff and the principal defendant, William H. Osborne, as set up in the petition, was as follows:

Exhibit A—Contract.

Whereas, Wm. H. Osborne, of Emmetsburg, Iowa, desires to purchase of the W. T. Rawleigh Medical Company, of Freeport, Illinois, on credit and at wholesale prices to sell again to consumers, medicines, extracts, spices, soaps, toilet articles, perfumes, stock and poultry preparations, and other goods manufactured and put up by it, paying his account for such goods in instalments as hereafter provided:

Therefore he hereby agrees to sell no other goods than those sold him by this company, to sell all such goods at regular retail prices to be indicated by it, and to have no other business or employment.

He further agrees to pay said company for all goods purchased under this contract the current wholesale prices of such goods by remitting in cash each week to said company an amount equal to at least one half of the receipts from his business until his account is balanced, and for that purpose, L.R.A.1917B.

as evidence of good faith, he shall submit to said company weekly reports of his business: Provided, however, if he pays his account in full on or before the tenth day of each month, he is to be allowed a discount of three per cent (3 per cent) from current wholesale prices. Upon termination of this contract from any cause or by either party, he further agrees to settle in cash within a reasonable time the balance due said company on account.

Unless prevented by strikes, fires, accidents, or causes beyond control, said company agrees to fill and deliver on board cars at place of shipment his reasonable orders, provided his account is in satisfactory condition, and to charge all goods shipped him under this contract to his account at current wholesale prices; also to notify him promptly of any change in wholesale or retail prices.

Said company further agrees to furnish him free of charge on board cars at place of shipment a reasonable amount of first-class advertising matter, report and order blanks, and printed return envelopes, for his use in conducting his business; also to give him free of charge, after he has begun work, instructions and advice, through letters, bulletins, and booklets, as to the best methods of selling its products to customers.

This contract is subject to acceptance at the home office of the company, and is to continue in force only so long as his account and the amount of his purchases are satisfactory to said company: Provided, however, that said Wm. H. Osborne or his guarantors may be released from this contract at any time by payment in cash the balance due said company on account.

Dated at Freeport, Illinois, November 17, 1909. The W. T. Rawleigh Medical Company, by W. T. Rawleigh, President. Wm. H. Osborne. [Salesman sign here in ink or indelible pencil.] [Seal.]

On the back of the said contract appeared the following memoranda:

"1588

Contract with

Name, Wm. H. Osborne.

Received, Nov. 22, 1909.

Inv. CMR. Nov. 22, 1909.

Approved by Karf.

Accepted Dec. 2nd, 1909.

Price list and copy mailed Dec. 2, 1909.

Territory selected.

State, Iowa.

County, Dickinson.

Selection recorded."

Manifestly the foregoing contract does not on its face disclose any illegality. On the trial, however, the defendant introduced certain testimony consisting of certain letters and written instructions issued subsequently to the contract. Upon these the defendant's contention is largely predicated, the theory being that they were a part of the contract, and that they indicated the construction of the contract which was put upon it by the plaintiff. These exhibits were received by the court over the objections of the plaintiff that they were irrelevant to any issue made by the pleadings, and were so received subject to a motion to strike. We have to consider, therefore, whether this evidence was relevant to any issue tendered by the defendant's answer.

For the plaintiff it is contended that the question of the illegality of the contract was not made in the answer at all, except on the ground of a failure of consideration. On the other hand, the defendant contends that he pleaded the illegality of the contract in his amendment to his answer. The amendment so relied on by the defendant was as follows, in full: "Further answering, the defendants state that the drugs and nostrums, goods and merchandise for which the plaintiff seeks to charge the defendants, including liniments, antipain oil, Golden cough syrup, cough balsam, Ru-Moxol cod liver oil, extract, tonic laxative, application and gall remedy, female tonic, balm vitus, extracts and flavors, pain expeller, toilet articles, spices, pills, salves, healing powder, dips and disinfectants, louse killers, condition powders, and stock foods, were and are worthless and of no value, and wholly useless for the purpose for which the plaintiff offered them for sale and sold them to the defendant Osborne; that they were offered for sale to the defendant Osborne by the plaintiff with the intention on the part of the plaintiff and the said defendant to sell them to others; that such sale and the sale thereof to others would constitute a fraud upon the defendants and to the person purchasing the same; that the said goods and merchandise contained no curative or valuable qualities, and the pretended sale thereof by the plaintiff to the defendant Osborne was a violation of law, and by reason of the foregoing the defendant has been damaged in a sum equal and in excess to the claim made by the plaintiff in this suit. Wherefore the defendants pray the plaintiff's cause of action may be dismissed and the defendants have judgment for costs."

L.R.A.1917B.

We think it quite clear that this amendment furnished no basis for the introduction of the evidence in question nor for the contention in argument now urged by the defendant.

The case presented therefore is one where no illegality appears upon the face of the contract sued on, and none appeared in the evidence introduced on behalf of the plaintiff. If we assume, therefore, that the evidence thus introduced by the defendant tended to show the illegality and voidability of the contract as a violation of law, it was clearly incumbent upon the defendant to plead such illegality as a basis for such evidence.

Indeed, if we were to ignore the question of pleading and were to give full consideration to the evidence of the defendant, we are not favorably impressed with the legal merits of the argument of illegality. The emphasis of this argument is laid upon the fact that the defendant agreed to sell the goods at retail prices to be indicated by the plaintiff, and that the territory of the defendant was to be limited to Dickinson county, and that the defendant was to devote his time and attention exclusively to the sale of the plaintiff's goods. The argument is that, inasmuch as the plaintiff had sold the goods to the defendant, it had no further lawful interest in fixing the retail price or the territory where resale should be made. Without going into the greater depths of this question, it is enough for the purpose of this case to note that the plaintiff was undertaking to sell to the defendant an unlimited quantity of goods, and it was extending credit therefor; that the amount of the respective instalments to be paid was to be measured in each case by an aliquot part of the sales made during the previous period. The provisions thus emphasized fairly tended to operate as security for the payment of the purchase price. The final clause in the contract provided in express terms "that said W. H. Osborne or his guarantors may be released from this contract at any time by payment in cash of the balance due said company on account."

We reach the conclusion, therefore, that the trial court properly held that there was no basis in the pleadings for the present contention of illegality.

The judgment below must therefore be affirmed.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

H. M. BOSWORTH, Auditor, Appt.,
v.
STATE UNIVERSITY et al.

(166 Ky. 436, 179 S. W. 403.)

Statute — title — appropriation for carrying into effect.

1. A title, An act for preventing the manufacture and sale of adulterated foods and providing penalties for violation thereof, does not cover provisions for a specified aggregate annual amount for the expenses of carrying the statute into effect by securing analyses of foods and the prosecution of offenders.

For other cases, see Statutes, I. c, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — invalidity in part — effect.

2. The invalidity, because not specified in the title, of the provisions of a statute to prevent the manufacture and sale of impure foods and providing penalties for violation thereof, which make an appropriation for carrying it into effect, does not nullify the remainder of the act.

For other cases, see Statutes, I. c, 2, b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(October 27, 1915.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Franklin County granting a writ of mandamus to compel him to pay to petitioners a certain amount alleged to be due for food and drugs analyses. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. James Garnett, Attorney General, and Overton S. Hogan, Assistant Attorney General, for appellant:

The act under which petitioners make the demand is unconstitutional.

Thompson v. Com. 159 Ky. 8, 166 S. W. 623; Burton v. Monticello & B. Turnp. Co. 162 Ky. 787, 173 S. W. 144; Ragland v. Anderson, 125 Ky. 141, 128 Am. St. Rep. 242, 100 S. W. 865; Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 149, 2 L. ed. 64; Varney v. Justice, 86 Ky. 596, 6 S. W. 467; McCreary v. Speer, 156 Ky. 783, 162 S. W. 99; Penitentiary Comrs. v. Spencer, 159 Ky. 255, 166 S. W. 1017.

The experimental station has no authority to use this money as it proposes to use it, and the construction placed upon § 11 of the act, by the lower court, is erroneous.

Mr. J. R. Bush for appellees.

Note. — As to necessity and sufficiency of reference in title of statute to appropriations to put its purpose into effect, see annotation following this case, post, 812. L.R.A.1917B.

Settle, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellee State University, suing for the benefit of the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station, and the latter in its own behalf, by petition filed in the Franklin circuit court against the appellant, H. M. Bosworth, auditor of public accounts of Kentucky, prayed that that officer be required by writ of mandamus to issue his warrant on the treasurer of the state for the payment to appellees of $8,460.56, the amount alleged to be due the Agricultural Experiment Station for 1,435 analyses of food and drug products at $7.50 each, made by it under § 1905a, Kentucky Statutes, during the year 1914. The entire claim presented for the 1,435 analyses in question was $10,762.50, but, as $2,301.94 of the amount had been paid by the treasurer upon a warrant from the auditor, there remained unpaid the $8,460.56 mentioned, which the auditor refused to pay. It is alleged in the petition that it is the purpose of appellees to expend this $8,460.56 in constructing and equipping, on the State University grounds at Lexington, Kentucky, a cold storage plant and abattoir for the use of the Experiment Station, and that they had, in fact, contracted to have the work done at that price.

The auditor filed a general demurrer to the petition upon the grounds (1) that the act under which the analyses were made by the Agricultural Experiment Station, or so much thereof as authorized the work and attempted to make an appropriation thereof, is unconstitutional, and therefore void; (2) that, if constitutional, the act does not authorize the use of the money claimed by appellees for the constructing or equipping of a cold storage plant or abattoir upon the university grounds or elsewhere. The circuit court overruled the demurrer, to which appellant excepted. He thereupon filed an answer, which, in addition to attacking the constitutionality of the act and denying the right of appellees to expend the amount in controversy in constructing a cold storage plant and abattoir, denied the necessity for such plant or abattoir, and also denied the authority of appellees to construct it at all at the expense of the state, or that they had contracted to have the work done at the price of $8,460.56, or any other sum. The affirmative matter of the answer was controverted of record.

After the taking of depositions and submission of the case, the circuit court adjudged the appellees entitled to the relief prayed and granted the mandamus. The auditor complains of that judgment; hence this appeal.

Neither the demurrer nor answer makes any question as to the number of analyses made by the Agricultural Experiment Station, as to the correctness of the analyses or the competency of the persons by whom they were made. The paramount question to be determined is the one first presented by the demurrer and answer; viz., Is the act under which the amount in suit is claimed from the state, or so much thereof as seems to authorize the payment of the claim, constitutional? The act was passed by the general assembly in 1908 (see Acts 1908, p. 10), and is contained in chapter 53a, § 1905a, Kentucky Statutes Carroll's Ed. 1915. It is entitled, "An Act for Preventing the Manufacture and Sale of Adulterated or Misbranded Foods, Drugs, Medicines, and Liquors, and Providing Penalties for Violations Thereof."

The one section of the act, 1905a, contains fourteen subsections.

Subsection 8 makes it the duty of the director of the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station, or, under his direction, the head of the division of food inspection of the station, to make or cause to be made examinations of samples of food and drugs manufactured or on sale in this state at such time and place and to such extent as he may determine.

Subsection 9 requires him to make report as to adulterated or misbranded foods or drugs to certain officers named therein, for the prosecution of the person or persons guilty thereof.

Subsection 10 requires that he make an annual report to the governor upon adulterated food or drug products, and for the submission of such annual reports to the general assembly at its regular sessions, and, in addition, for the issue from time to time of bulletins giving the results of such inspections and analyses as are made by him.

Subsection 11, which is the one here particularly involved, provides:

"Said Experiment Station shall receive seven dollars and fifty cents ($7.50) for the analysis or examination of any sample of food or drug taken or submitted in accordance with this act, and expenses for procuring samples of food and drugs and in making inspections into the condition of and wholesomeness and purity of the food produced, manufactured or sold in food factories, grocery stores, bakeries, slaughtering houses, dairies, milk depots or creameries, and all other places where foods are produced, prepared, stored, kept or offered for sale; for studying the problems connected with the production, preparation and sale of foods; for expert witnesses attending grand juries and courts; clerk hire and all other expenses necessary for carrying out the provisions of this act: Provided, the total expense from all sources shall not exceed in any one year thirty thousand dollars ($30,000).

"The board of control of said Experiment Station shall furnish to the auditor of public accounts an itemized statement of the expenditures of money under this act. The expenditures reported to the auditor shall be paid by the commonwealth to the treasurer of the Experiment Station upon the written request of the board of control of the said Experiment Station, and the auditor for the payment of the same is directed to draw his warrant upon the treasurer as in all other claims against the commonwealth."

It is insisted for appellant that subsection 11 of the act violates § 51 of the Constitution of the state, which provides: "No law enacted by the general assembly shall relate to more than one subject, and that shall be expressed in the title. . . ."

In the numerous decisions of this court interpreting § 51, Constitution, and applying its provisions, the following general rules appear to have been announced: First. The general manner in which the subject of an act is to be accomplished need not be expressed in the title (Collins v. Henderson, 11 Bush, 75; Com. v. Bailey, 81 Ky. 395); Second. Stating the subject matter of the act, with unnecessary detail in the title, does not render the act unconstitutional (Allen v. Hall, 14 Bush, 85); Third. If all the provisions of an act relating to the same subject are naturally connected, and are not foreign to the subject expressed in the title, it is sufficient (Burnside v. Lincoln County Ct. 86 Ky. 423, 6 S. W. 276; Johnson v. Fulton, 121 Ky. 594, 89 S. W. 672; Diamond v. Com. 124 Ky. 418, 99 S. W. 232; McGlone v. Womack, 129 Ky. 274, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 855, 111 S. W. 688; Mark v. Bloom, 141 Ky. 474, 133 S. W. 203; Com. v. Starr, 160 Ky. 260, 169 S. W. 743); Fourth. The title cannot be used to extend or restrain the provisions in the body of the act. It must be fairly expressive of the context in the body of the act, and is to be read in connection with it in determining the meaning of the act (Com. v. Cain, 14 Bush, 525; Com. v. Barney, 115 Ky. 475, 74 S. W. 181; Joyce v. Woods, 78 Ky. 386; Wiemer v. Sinking Fund Comrs. 124 Ky. 377, 99 S. W. 242; Thompson v. Com. 159 Ky. 8, 166 S. W. 623).

The meaning and object of § 51, Constitution, is thus well stated in Thompson v. Com. supra; "The purpose of the constitutional provision was to enable persons reading the title of an act to get a general idea of what the act treated of or contained, and it has come to be a recognized legislative practice for members and others interested in legislation to read the title of acts and gather therefrom in a general way, at least, the subject matter of the act, and under the authority of this constitutional provision members of the legislature, as well as the public interested in legislation, have the right to rely on the title as indicating the subject matter of the act, and to assume that the act contains no legislation that is not embraced in a general way by the subject expressed in the title."

It is not to be overlooked that § 46, Constitution, declares that "Any act or resolution for the appropriation of money or the creation of debt shall, on its final passage, receive the votes of a majority of all the members elected to each house."

And § 230 provides: "No money shall be drawn from the state treasury, except in pursuance of appropriations made by law; and a regular statement and account of the receipts and expenditures of all public money shall be published annually."

Manifestly, the $30,000 mentioned in subsection 11 of the act under consideration is an appropriation, in the meaning of §§ 46 and 230, Constitution, supra. The $7.50 allowed by the section as compensation for each analysis that may be made is only a means or scale by which it is to be ascertained when the limit of the annual appropriation of $30,000 is reached. Therefore the provision as to compensation for analyses does not constitute a system of fees, but merely establishes a scale by which the $30,000 is graded. The compensation for analyses and other expenses, for the payment of which the act provides, cannot in any one year exceed the $30,000 appropriation for such year. It is patent from the evidence appearing in the record that the authorities in charge of the Experiment Station have always treated the $30,000 as an appropriation, and, further, that they have, ever since the act in question became effective, each year, drawn the entire $30,000 from the state treasury.

We now come to the consideration of the main question: Does the act conform to the requirements of § 51, Constitution? Comparison of the contents of the body of the act with its title will demonstrate that, in so far as the provisions of subsection 11 are concerned, it does not do so. In other words, all of the provisions of the act, except those contained in subsection 11, are embraced and covered by the title, because they each and all relate to and are naturally and directly connected with the subject expressed in the title; that is, they define what shall constitute an adulteration or misbranding of foods and chemicals, provide the means of detecting and preventing same, designate the offenses that may be committed under the act, and prescribe the penalties therefor. Subsection 11, however, attempts to bring into the act and make a part thereof various provisions which are foreign to the subject expressed in the title. These provisions relate to the making of compensation to the Experiment Station for analyses or examinations of samples of food or drugs, paying the expenses attending the procuring of such samples, the cost of clerk hire, attending grand juries and trials in prosecutions of offenders against the law, and, finally, providing an annual appropriation of $30,000 for defraying all such items of cost and expense.

The phraseology of the title, "An Act for Preventing the Manufacture and Sale of Adulterated or Misbranded Foods, Drugs, Medicines, and Liquors, and Providing Penalties for Violations Thereof," does not even suggest to the average mind that the body of the act provides for the expenditure of the money of the Commonwealth required by the eleventh subsection, or an intimation that such subsection provides for an annual appropriation of $30,000. Being utterly silent as to the expenditures required and the appropriation made by this subsection, the title of the act, when introduced and put upon its passage in the legislature, could have conveyed to the mind of the average legislator no other meaning or information than that its only object was to make it an offense for any person to manufacture or sell adulterated or misbranded foods, drugs, medicines, or liquors, and prescribe the penalties therefor. The ostensible object of the act, being the protection of the public, made it so attractive to the members of the general assembly, and the necessity for its passage so apparent, that the mere reading of its title was well calculated to induce them to give it their support, without taking time to examine the body of the act and thereby obtain an understanding of its numerous provisions; whereas, if the title of the act had given any intimation that it contained an appropriation of $30,000 to be paid by the state annually for an indefinite number of years, it would at least have been understandingly considered and voted on. But the title gave no intimation of the appropriation that lay concealed as far down in the body of the act as its eleventh subsection, to reach which ten other subsections, dealing with totally different matters, must first be read. Being thus preceded and hedged about by other provisions that appear to be germane to the subject expressed in the title, the appropriation contained in subsection 11, which is not even remotely referred to in the title or necessarily connected with the subject therein expressed, was so disguised as to render its presence in the body of the act well-nigh undiscoverable without a reading of the entire act.

The situation here presented is one that § 51 of the Constitution was intended to prevent, and which could have been prevented by the addition to the title of the act of another sentence, indicating that the act contains an appropriation of $30,000 per annum to meet the expenses of carrying out its provisions. There can be no doubt that the act in question relates to two subjects; viz., (1) The preventing of the manufacture and sale of adulterated or misbranded foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and providing penalties for so doing; (2) an appropriation from the revenues of the state of $30,000 per annum. It is equally free from doubt that only the first of these subjects is expressed in the title of the act, as the Constitution provides. It may also be remarked that the first subject to which the act relates appertains to the criminal or penal laws, and the second alone to an appropriation of the state's money.

As § 46, Constitution, provides that any act or resolution for the appropriation of money or the creation of debt shall not become a law unless on its final passage it has received the votes of a majority of all the members elected to each house, it would not be wide of the mark to say that adherence to the requirements of § 51, Constitution, is of the utmost importance, in order that the members of the general assembly may be fully informed in voting upon an act carrying an appropriation, and the taxpayers of the state advised, after its passage, as to the meaning of its provisions.

In Ragland v. Anderson, 125 Ky. 141, 128 Am. St. Rep. 242, 100 S. W. 865, we said: "It is for the courts to measure the acts of the general assembly by the standard of the Constitution, and if they are clearly and unequivocally in contravention of its terms, it becomes the duty of the judiciary to so declare. Of course, if the question as to whether or not the legislation is inimical to the Constitution be doubtful, it will always be decided in favor of the constitutionality of the law. But where the matter is plain that the Constitution has been violated, then the courts cannot escape the duty of so declaring whenever the matter is brought to their attention. And no matter how distasteful it may be for the judiciary to review the acts of a co-ordinate branch of the government, their duty under their oath of office is imperative." Varhey v. Justice, 86 Ky. 506, 6 S. W. 457; Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137, 2 L. ed. 60.

In McCreary v. Speer, 156 Ky. 783, 162 S. W. 99, we also said: "It is true our Constitution contains no provision to the effect that all its provisions are mandatory; but we deem this immaterial for the reason that this court had held before the adoption of the present Constitution that all the provisions of a Constitution are mandatory; and the Constitution must be presumed to have been adopted with this understanding of its meaning. Since the adoption of the Constitution the court has steadily maintained the same rule." Penitentiary Comrs. v. Spencer, 159 Ky. 255, 166 S. W. 1017.

In Burton v. Monticello & B. Turnp. Co. 162 Ky. 787, 173 S. W. 144, we further said: "In Hyser v. Com. 116 Ky. 410, 76 S. W. 174, it was said: 'This court has repeatedly announced, in effect, that no provision of a statute directly or indirectly relating to the subject expressed in the title, having a natural connection therewith, and not foreign to the same, should be deemed within the inhibition of § 51 of the Constitution.' This broad, liberal rule was approved in the early leading case of Phillips v. Cincinnati & C. Bridge Co. 2 Met. (Ky.) 219, and again in Collins v. Henderson, 11 Bush, 74; Hoke v. Com. 79 Ky. 567; Com. v. Bailey, 81 Ky. 395; Burnside v. Lincoln County Ct. 86 Ky. 423, 6 S. W. 276; Conley v. Com. 98 Ky. 125, 32 S. W. 285; and Eastern Kentucky Coal Lands Corp. v. Com. 127 Ky. 667, 106 S. W. 260, 108 S. W. 1138. In recognizing this rule, however, this court, in Thompson v. Com. 159 Ky. 12, 166 S. W. 624, further said: 'But in no instance has this rule been extended so as to legalize legislation that departs so radically from the title of the act as do the sections here under consideration. Here the title of the act limited the scope of the legislation to the appropriation of money for the benefit of the houses of reform, and this limitation in the title reasonably and naturally conveyed the meaning that the body of the act was confined to the appropriation of money, and no other subject.'"

It is our conclusion that so much of the act under consideration as is included in subsection 11 of § 1905a is violative of § 51 of the Constitution, and therefore void. This conclusion does not, however, render invalid the remaining subsections of the act, which seem to be germane to the subject expressed in the title, as it is manifest that subsection 11 can be eliminated from the act without to any extent affecting the subject matter of the germane parts: the rule in such case being as stated in Wiemer v. Sinking Fund Comrs. 124 Ky. 377, 99 S. W. 242: "When a subject foreign to the title is introduced into the body of an act, if it is so separate and distinct from the remainder of the subject matter of the legislation that it may be omitted without affecting the otherwise valid portions, then the unconstitutional part will be omitted and the remainder allowed to stand." Jones v. Thompson, 12 Bush, 394; Fuqua v. Mullen, 13 Bush, 467; Thompson v. Com. 159 Ky. 8, 166 S. W. 623; Burton v. Monticello & B. Turnp. Co. 162 Ky. 787, 173 S. W. 144.

The conclusion we have reached renders unnecessary the decision of the other question urged in the brief of appellant's counsel; and as the salutary object of the act cannot fully be carried out without the appropriation made invalid by the elimination of subsection 11 thereof, it is assumed that the general assembly will at its approaching session so amend the act as to make the needed appropriation, and at the same time allow its application to the erection of the cold storage plant and abattoir desired by appellee.

For the reasons indicated, the judgment is reversed and cause remanded, with directions to the lower court to sustain the demurrer to the petition and dismiss the action.

Petition for rehearing denied.

Annotation—Necessity and sufficiency of reference in title of statute to appropriations to put its purpose into effect.

As to validity of statute or ordinance authorizing a levying of taxes, incurring of indebtedness, or the appropriation of money for two or more purposes, see note to Knoxville v. Gass, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 519.

There is no fixed, well-defined rule by which the title of every act can be tested for compliance with the constitutional requirement that the "subject" or "object" of an act must be expressed in its title. It is, of course, unquestioned that the purpose of such constitutional provisions is to prevent deception of the public and of members of the legislature by means of provisions in bills of which the title gives no intimation. In other words, the requirement is that the title must give notice of the particular subject or object to be legislated upon in a manner that clearly invites all persons interested in any provisions contained in the body of the act to examine the same. It is also a generally accepted rule or principle that a title fairly expressing the subject generally covers provisions for all proper means and instrumentalities necessary to the accomplishment or enforcement of the expressed purpose, or, as it has been expressed, "the title . . . may cover any matters having congruity and proper connection with it" (36 Cyc. 1028).

But applying these broad rules or principles to the question of the necessity and sufficiency of a reference in the title of a statute to appropriations to put its purposes into effect, it would seem that, generally speaking, an appropriation, a necessity for which is suggested by the title of an act, if it has congruity and proper connection with the subject or object stated therein, need not be specifically expressed in the title, but that if such an appropriation is not expressed in the title, and is neither suggested by it nor is germane or cognate to the object stated, such as, for instance, an appropriation for fees and expenses for examinations, etc., not reasonably to be anticipated as provided for in an act having such a title, the subject is not sufficiently stated, and the act, or so much thereof as violates the constitutional provision, is void. In fact, most, if not all, of the few decisions upon this question, are in effect an application of this general test.

Thus, it was held in the recent and well-reasoned case of BOSWORTH v. STATE UNIVERSITY, ante, 808, that the title, "An Act for Preventing the Manufacture and Sale of Adulterated or Misbranded Foods, Drugs, Medicines, and Liquors, and Providing Penalties" therefore, did not suggest or even intimate to the average mind that the body of the act contained provisions making an appropriation for compensating the making of analyses and other expenses, and therefore that such provisions were void because the subject thereof was not "expressed in the title," as required by the Constitution.

So, in Ritchie v. People (1893) 155 Ill. 98, 29 L.R.A. 79, 46 Am. St. Rep. 315, 40 N. E. 454, it was held that an appropriation for the salaries of factory inspectors was a subject not expressed in the title, "An Act to Regulate the Manufacture of Clothing, Wearing Apparel, and Other Articles in This State, and to Provide for the Appointment of State Inspectors to Enforce the Same, and to Make an Appropriation Therefor," and was void under a constitutional declaration that, if a subject shall be embraced in an act which is not expressed in the title, the act shall be void as to so much thereof as is not expressed. In this case it was further held that the expression, "make an appropriation therefor," did not necessarily imply that the contemplated appropriations were for salaries, but might have been for the payment of expenses.

And in White v. Burgin (1896) 113 Ala. 170, 21 So. 832, it was held that the title, "To Regulate the Management of State and County Convicts," was not sufficiently broad and comprehensive to embrace provisions relative to the payment by the state of certain costs incurred in the prosecution, trial, and conviction of convicts, it being said that such provisions were obviously foreign to the "management" of convicts.

And in Clark v. Wallace County (1895) 54 Kan. 634, 39 Pac. 225, it was held that the title, "An Act to Protect Fruit Trees, Hedge Plants, and Fences," did not clearly express the subject of appropriations for paying bounties for gopher scalps, and that provisions in the body of the act making provision for the payment of such bounties rendered the act void, it being said that the title did not suggest such subject matter, and no other provisions had been made for the protection of fruit trees, etc.

And in Pratt v. Browne (1902) 135 Cal. 649, 67 Pac. 1082, it was held that the subject of a county court reporter's salary was neither expressed in nor germane to the title of an act creating a "uniform system of county government."

And in the Michigan case of Ryerson v. Utley (1868) 16 Mich. 269, it was held that the title, "An Act Providing for the Preservation of the Muskegon River Improvement and for Other Purposes," did not cover a provision in the body of the act appropriating a sum of money to pay for the improvement, within the meaning of the constitutional requirement that the object of a law shall be expressed in its title, the court saying that "the only object mentioned in the title to this act is the preservation of the Muskegon river improvement, for which purpose the act authorizes tolls to be levied and expended;" that the payment for the improvement was in no way connected with this object; that "the title to the act would apprise neither the legislature nor the public that it covered provisions under which a large sum was to be collected and disbursed to pay for the original construction of the work;" and that "the words, 'other purposes,' in the title, can have no force whatever under the constitutional provision which has been quoted." It was also said that "it is very likely that the title to this act might have been made sufficiently comprehensive to embrace all the purposes of the act; the objection is that it was not made so;" and that the reading of the title in question at once induces the conclusion that the various provisions of the act relate only to the preservation of the improvement, and that the act itself must therefore be confined to that object.

And there are a few cases which illustrate the phase of the rule converse to that applied in the preceding cases; that is, cases in which the titles have been held sufficient to cover provisions making appropriations to carry the purposes of the acts into effect. Thus, in People ex rel. Moloney v. Kirk (1896) 162 Ill. 138, 53 Am. St. Rep. 277, 45 N. E. 830, the title, "An Act to Enable Park Commissioners Having Control of Any Boulevard or Driveway Bordering upon Any Public Waters of This State to Extend the Same," was held sufficiently broad to cover appropriations in the act for defraying the cost of the improvement, such provisions being declared to be germane to the real purpose or general object of the law as expressed in the title, and to be sufficiently indicated therein to satisfy the constitutional provision that every act shall embrace but one subject, which shall be expressed in its title. So, in McCaslin v. State (1873) 44 Ind. 151, it was held that the title, "An Act to Establish a House of Refuge for the Correction and Reformation of Juvenile Offenders," was broad and comprehensive enough to cover provisions making appropriations for carrying the announced purpose into effect, and therefore that such provisions did not violate the constitutional requirement that the subject matter of an act be expressed in its title. And in Callvert v. Winsor (1901) 26 Wash. 368, 67 Pac. 91, the title, "An Act Providing for the Establishment, Location, Maintenance, and Support of the University of Washington," was held to express a subject which included appropriations for carrying out the expressed purpose, the court quoting with approval from an earlier Washington case as follows: "It is permissible to insert those matters which, though they may not be specifically expressed in the title, are proper to the full accomplishment of the object which is expressed, or are naturally suggested by or connected with that object."

In a few jurisdictions statutes have been enacted which relate to the question of the necessity and sufficiency of reference in the title of an act to appropriations to put the purpose of the statute into effect, but none of the adjudications which construe such statutes seem to have involved this phase of the question. As illustrative of statutes of this character, see Banks v. State (1905) 124 Ga. 15, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1007, 52 S. E. 74, which construed and applied Ga. Civ. Code, § 5771, which provided that "provisions germane to the general subject matter embraced in the title of an act, and which are designed to carry into effect the purpose for which it was passed, may be constitutionally enacted therein, though not referred to in the title otherwise than by the use of the words, 'and for other purposes.'" G. J. C.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

CALUMET & CHICAGO CANAL & DOCK COMPANY et al.

v.

ALLEN CONKLING.

ABEL DAVIS, Trustee in Bankruptcy, etc., of Allen Conkling, Plff. in Certiorari.

(273 Ill. 318, 112 N. E. 982.)

Corporation — power to lend money.

1. Express power to lend money is not conferred upon a corporation organized to construct a canal and dock, warehouses, and piers, by a provision that it may possess real and personal estate and employ the same in such manner as it may determine. For other cases, see Corporations, IV. d, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — implied power.

2. A loan made by a corporation organized to construct a canal and docks, shipyards, and warehouses, in connection with a sale of land not needed in the business for which it was chartered, is not incidental to the exercise of an express power, so as to be within its implied powers.

For other cases, see Corporations, IV. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Estoppel — to set up ultra vires of corporation.

3. One borrowing money from a corporation which it has no power to lend is not estopped to set up the ultra vires of the transaction for the purpose of defeating an attempt to enforce repayment of the loan. For other cases, see Corporations, IV. d, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Carter, Craig, and Duncan, JJ., dissent.)

(February 16, 1916.)

CERTIORARI to the Appellate Court, First District, Branch B, to review a judgment affirming a decree of the Circuit Court for Cook County in complainant's favor in an action brought to foreclose two trust deeds given by defendant upon certain property. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Note. — For estoppel against raising the defense of ultra vires in actions brought by private corporation, see annotation following this case, post, 821.
L.R.A.1917B.

Messrs. Jesse Lowenhaupt and Oscar M. Wolf, for plaintiff in certiorari:

A corporation has only such express powers as are granted to it by the charter or the act of incorporation, with such implied or incidental powers as are necessary to carry the express powers into effect.

3 Thomp. Corp. 2d ed. §§ 2106, 2107; People ex rel. Peabody v. Chicago Gas Trust Co. 130 Ill. 268, 8 L.R.A. 497, 17 Am. St. Rep. 319, 22 N. E. 798; People ex rel. Moloney v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 175 Ill. 125, 64 L.R.A. 366, 51 N. E. 664; Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 139 U. S. 59, 35 L. ed. 68, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 478; Rockhold v. Canton Masonic Mut. Benev. Soc. 129 Ill. 440, 21 N. E. 794; People ex rel. Tiffany & Co. v. Campbell, 144 N. Y. 166, 38 N. E. 990; Best Brewing Co. v. Klassen, 185 Ill. 37, 50 L.R.A. 765, 76 Am. St. Rep. 26, 57 N. E. 20; 1 Clark & M. Priv. Corp. § 123, p. 365.

All powers not expressly specified in a corporate charter are presumed to be excluded, and all doubts are resolved against the corporation.

American Loan & T. Co. v. Minnesota & N. W. R. Co. 157 Ill. 641, 42 N. E. 153; People ex rel. Moloney v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 175 Ill. 142, 64 L.R.A. 366, 51 N. E. 664; Pond v. Royal League, 127 Ill. App. 476; Bank of Montreal v. Waite, 105 Ill. App. 373; Bailey v. Farmers' Nat. Bank, 97 Ill. App. 66; Rockhold v. Canton Masonic Mut. Benev. Soc. 129 Ill. 440, 21 N. E. 794; 3 Thomp. Corp. 2d ed. § 2106; 1 Clark & M. Priv. Corp. § 124, p. 368.

The power to loan money, unlike the power to borrow money, is not one of the ordinary or usual powers of a corporation. If a corporation has the power to loan money, it must be by express grant, or because the power is reasonably necessary to carry into effect some of the express powers.

3 Thomp. Corp. 2d ed. § 2180; Leigh v. American Brake-Beam Co. 205 Ill. 147, 68 N. E. 713; Frye v. Bank of Illinois, 10 Ill. 332; 3 Cook, Corp. 7th ed. § 690.

Even assuming that the sale of block 139 to Conkling was a perfectly legitimate exercise of corporate power on the part of the dock company, the loan to Conkling was an entirely independent transaction, and was not the exercise of a reasonable or necessary incidental power.

Ibid.; First M. E. Church v. Dixon, 178 Ill. 260, 52 N. E. 887; People ex rel. Healy v. Illinois C. R. Co. 233 Ill. 378, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 604, 122 Am. St. Rep. 181, 84 N. E. 368, 13 Ann. Cas. 285; Alton Mfg. Co. v. Garrett Biblical Inst. 243 Ill. 298, 90 N. E. 704; Chambers v. Falkner, 65 Ala. 448; Grand Lodge v. Waddill, 36 Ala. 313; New York Firemen Ins. Co. v. Ely, 5 Conn. 560, 13 Am. Dec. 100; People ex rel. Peabody v. Chicago Gas Trust Co. 130 Ill. 268, 8 L.R.A. 497, 17 Am. St. Rep. 319, 22 N. E. 798; People ex rel. Moloney v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 175 Ill. 125, 64 L.R.A. 366, 51 N. E. 664; Fritze v. Equitable Bldg. & L. Soc. 186 Ill. 183, 57 N. E. 873; United States Brewing Co. v. Dolese & S. Co. 259 Ill. 274, 47 L.R.A. (N.S.) 898, 102 N. E. 753; Best Brewing Co. v. Klassen, 185 Ill. 37, 50 L.R.A. 765, 76 Am. St. Rep. 26, 57 N. E. 20; People ex rel. Tiffany & Co. v. Campbell, 144 N. Y. 166, 38 N. E. 990; Kelley, M. & Co. v. O'Brien Varnish Co. 90 Ill. App. 287.

No action can be brought upon an ultra vires contract.

National Home Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Home Sav. Bank, 181 Ill. 35, 64 L.R.A. 399, 72 Am. St. Rep. 245, 54 N. E. 619; United States Brewing Co. v. Dolese & S. Co. 259 Ill. 274, 47 L.R.A. (N.S.) 898, 102 N. E. 753; Leigh v. American Brake-Beam Co. 205 Ill. 147, 68 N. E. 713; Stacy v. Glen Elynn Hotel & Springs Co. 223 Ill. 546, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 966, 79 N. E. 133; Alexander v. Bankers' Union, 187 Ill. App. 469; Best Brewing Co. v. Klassen, 185 Ill. 37, 50 L.R.A. 765, 76 Am. St. Rep. 26, 57 N. E. 20; Free Home Bldg. L. & Homestead Asso. v. Edwards, 223 Ill. 126, 79 N. E. 64; Fridley v. Bowen, 87 Ill. 151; Penn v. Bornman, 102 Ill. 523; Chambers v. Falkner, 65 Ala. 448; Grand Lodge v. Waddill, 36 Ala. 313; Westinghouse Mach. Co. v. Wilkinson, 79 Ala. 314; Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 139 U. S. 24, 35 L. ed. 55, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 478; Fritze v. Equitable Bldg. & L. Soc. 186 Ill. 183, 57 N. E. 873.

The failure of the dock company to construct or operate the improvements specified in the act of incorporation is no warrant for now construing that act as conferring upon the corporation the power to sell land.

People ex rel. Moloney v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 175 Ill. 125, 64 L.R.A. 366, 51 N. E. 664; First M. E. Church v. Dixon, 178 Ill. 260, 52 N. E. 887; People ex rel. Healy v. Illinois C. R. Co. 233 Ill. 378, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 604, 122 Am. St. Rep. 181, L.R.A. 1917B.

84 N. E. 368, 13 Am. Cas. 285; 3 Thomp. Corp. 2d ed. §§ 2113-2115.

The exercise of a particular power by a corporation may be entirely proper under certain circumstances and absolutely ultra vires under other circumstances.

National Home Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Home Sav. Bank, 181 Ill. 35, 64 L.R.A. 399, 72 Am. St. Rep. 245, 54 N. E. 619; Converse v. Emerson, T. & Co. 242 Ill. 619, 90 N. E. 269; Free Home Bldg. L. & Homestead Asso. v. Edwards, 223 Ill. 126, 79 N. E. 64; Steele v. Fraternal Tribunes, 215 Ill. 190, 106 Am. St. Rep. 160, 74 N. E. 121; North Ave. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Huber, 270 Ill. 75, 110 N. E. 312.

If the trust deed here in question is an ultra vires contract, it is unenforceable, and it is immaterial whether or not the dock company was, in the language of counsel for the dock company, "engaging in the loading business."

National Hoe Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Home Sav. Bank, 181 Ill. 35, 64 L.R.A. 399, 72 Am. St. Rep. 245, 54 N. E. 619; Steele v. Fraternal Tribunes, 215 Ill. 190, 106 Am. St. Rep. 160, 74 N. E. 121; Converse v. Emerson, L. & Co. 242 Ill. 619, 90 N. E. 269; Free Home Bldg. L. & Homestead Asso. v. Edwards, 223 Ill. 126, 79 N. E. 64; North Ave. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Huber, 270 Ill. 75, 110 N. E. 312; Kelley, M. & Co. v. O'Brien Varnish Co. 90 Ill. App. 287; Chicago Pneumatic Tool Co. v. H. W. Jones Mfg. Co. 91 Ill. App. 547; Myers v. Equitable Bldg. & L. Soc. 92 Ill. App. 27.

In any event, if the trust deed was ultra vires in the true sense of the term, it cannot be made valid under any doctrine of estoppel or ratification.

National Home Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Home Sav. Bank, 181 Ill. 35, 64 L.R.A. 399, 72 Am. St. Rep. 245, 54 N. E. 619; Steele v. Fraternal Tribunes, 215 Ill. 190, 106 Am. St. Rep. 160, 74 N. E. 121; Converse v. Emerson, L. & Co. 242 Ill. 619, 90 N. E. 269; Free Home Bldg. L. & Homestead Asso. v. Edwards, 223 Ill. 126, 79 N. E. 64; Kelley, M. & Co. v. O'Brien Varnish Co. 90 Ill. App. 287; Chicago Pneumatic Tool Co. v. H. W. Jones Mfg. Co. 91 Ill. App. 547; Myers v. Equitable Bldg. & L. Soc. 92 Ill. App. 27.

Messrs. Bentley, Burling, & Swan for defendants in certiorari.

Farmer, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case comes to this court by writ of certiorari to review a judgment of the appellate court for the first district, affirming a decree of the circuit court foreclosing trust deeds at the suit of the Calumet & Chicago Canal & Dock Company and Murry

Nelson, Jr., trustee, given by Allen Conkling upon property which will for convenience be referred to as blocks 138 and 139 in the Calumet & Chicago Canal & Dock Company's subdivision in South Chicago. The first of the trust deeds was given by Conkling January 22, 1909, upon both blocks, to secure the payment of his notes for $50,000, made payable to himself, and by him indorsed and delivered to the dock company. At the time the first trust deed was given there was a street or avenue between the two blocks, which had been dedicated to the public by the dock company. It was afterwards vacated, and the dock company conveyed it to Conkling. The second trust deed was given June 19, 1911, upon this strip of land, to secure the same indebtedness, and subject to all the terms, conditions, and covenants contained in the trust deed of January 22, 1909. Before the bill for foreclosure was filed Allen Conkling was adjudged a bankrupt, and Abel Davis, plaintiff in error, was appointed trustee in bankruptcy of his estate. He was made a defendant to the bill to foreclose. Plaintiff in error answered the bill, setting out in full the act of 1869 incorporating the dock company, and alleged that for many years prior to the giving of the notes and trust deeds Conkling was the owner of block 138, and that, if he was indebted to the dock company at the time he gave the first trust deed, it was on account of a loan made him by said company; that said corporation had no power or authority to loan money and accept trust deeds as security, and that making the loan and accepting the trust deeds was ultra vires and beyond its corporate powers and authority, and that the trust deeds created no lien upon the property superior to the title of the plaintiff in error.

The facts with reference to the transaction between the dock company and Conkling are that prior to January 22, 1909, Conkling was the owner of block 138, which was mortgaged to secure a loan of $30,000. He applied to Murry Nelson, president of the dock company, for a loan on the property. Nelson testified he first told Conkling's agent, who was trying to secure the loan, that his company was not in the business of making loans, and advised him to go to other parties. Nelson testified Conkling's agent came back later and said Conkling would like to buy some property, and inquired if Nelson's company would make a loan if he bought additional property. These negotiations finally resulted in the dock company selling Conkling block 139 for $15,000, loaning him $35,000 cash, and taking his notes for $50,000, secured by trust deed on blocks 139 and 138, which latter block Conkling already owned. None of the purchase price of block 139 was paid by Conkling, but it was included in the $50,000 for which the notes and trust deed were given.

After issues were joined in the circuit court, the cause was referred to a master in chancery to take the testimony and report his conclusions. The master reported that the notes and trust deed were given as part of a transaction by which the dock company sold Conkling block 139 for $15,000, and as an inducement for such purchase the dock company gave him credit for the whole purchase price ($15,000) and in addition loaned him $35,000 out of the surplus funds of the dock company; that the dock company had the power, under its charter, to sell block 139 and to loan Conkling $35,000, as incidental to such sale, and that the notes and trust deeds were valid legal obligations of Conkling. The chancellor overruled exceptions of Abel Davis, trustee in bankruptcy, and entered a decree in accordance with the finding and report of the master. Davis sued out a writ of error from the appellate court for the first district to review the decree. That court affirmed the decree of the circuit court, and the case is brought to this court for review upon a writ of certiorari.

The Calumet & Chicago Canal & Dock Company was created a corporation by special act of the legislature in 1869. The object of its creation, as stated in § 5 of the act, was to construct a canal from some point on the Calumet river to the south branch of the Chicago river or the Illinois and Michigan Canal, as the corporation might determine, and to construct, use, operate, employ, and maintain docks, slips, basins, shipyards, dockyards, dry docks, warehouses, and piers which the corporation might deem necessary and proper. The corporation was given the right to condemn land for its corporate purposes, and to intersect any road, highway, or railroad with its canal. It was given perpetual succession and the usual corporate powers to contract and be contracted with, sue and be sued, etc., and to "purchase, possess, and occupy real and personal estate, and may sell, lease, and employ the same in such manner as it shall determine, . . . and have and exercise all powers necessary as a corporation to carry out the objects of this act." The capital stock was $500,000, to be divided into shares of $100 each. The corporation has never constructed a canal, but appears to have acquired considerable land, or land of considerable value, as the president testified its assets were worth about $3,000,000. He further testified it had no other source of income than the sale of real estate.

While part of the dock company's brief and argument is devoted to the proposition that the power given it to acquire and possess real and personal estate, and sell, lease, and employ the same, etc., is an express authority to loan its money, its principal reliance to sustain the transaction of making the loan is that it was authorized by the implied powers of the corporation. The dock company insists that, in view of the powers expressly granted to it, its charter should be construed to imply the power to loan money, when the loaning is incidental to the exercise of some express power, or where the corporation has surplus funds not required for use in its business. We think it entirely clear that there is no basis for any claim that the power to loan money was expressly given by the act creating the corporation. The power to "employ" its real and personal estate in such manner as it might determine was given for the purpose of enabling the corporation to carry out the object of its creation. While it was expressly authorized to purchase, possess, and occupy real and personal estate in the exercise of its legitimate corporate purposes and powers, and "employ" the same in such manner as it might determine, this power only conferred authority to acquire property for the purpose, and employ it in carrying out the objects, for which the corporation was created. Having no express authority to loan money, if it possessed any such authority it must be found in its implied powers. The rule is that corporations can only exercise such powers as are conferred in express terms or by necessary implication. The implied powers are presumed to exist in order that such bodies may be able to carry out the express powers granted and to accomplish the purpose of the corporation's creation. An implied or incidental power must be directly or immediately appropriate to the execution of the powers expressly granted, and not one that has a slight or remote relation to it. People ex rel. Peabody v. Chicago Gas Trust Co. 130 Ill. 268, 8 L.R.A. 497, 17 Am. St. Rep. 319, 22 N. E. 798, and cases there cited. The enumeration of powers expressly granted implies the exclusion of all others not fairly incidental. A power which the law will imply must be one in a sense necessary or needful and suitable to accomplish the object for which the express powers were granted. Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 139 U. S. 24, 35 L. ed. 55, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 478. Whatever incidental powers are reasonably necessary to enable the corporation to perform its corporate functions are implied from the powers expressly granted. People ex rel. Tiffany & Co. v. Campbell, 144 N. Y. 166, 38 N. E. 990. These general rules are so well settled that further discussion of them or citation of authorities is not required.

The principal question for determination is whether the loan was made as an incidental to the exercise of an express power granted. There is no dispute about the facts as hereinbefore briefly stated. It is contended the loan of $35,000 was made for the purpose of effecting the sale of block 139, that the corporation had express power to sell real estate, and that the loan was incidental to the sale, and therefore was an incident to the exercise of an express power and authorized under the implied powers. The express power given by § 1 of the statute creating the corporation to purchase and sell real estate did not confer authority to deal in real estate by buying and selling it. The only real estate the corporation was authorized to acquire was such as was reasonably necessary to enable it to carry out the objects of its creation, which were the construction and operation of a canal, shipyards, docks, warehouses, etc. It is contrary to the public policy of this state to permit a corporation to own land not reasonably necessary to enable it to transact its business, and if it acquires land not necessary for that purpose it is required to dispose of it. We do not doubt the power of the dock company to sell its land, for it had never exercised its corporate franchises and therefore had no use for the land. But this sale was not made pursuant to an express power for the purpose of carrying out the objects for which the corporation was created, but rather as a step toward liquidating and winding up the corporation's affairs. If the sale was not made to enable the dock company to carry out the objects of its creation, then the loan cannot be considered as made incidental to the exercise of an express power. "A power which a corporation may exercise by implication must be bounded by the purposes of the corporate existence and the terms and intention of the charter, and acts which tend only remotely and by indirection to promote its interests and chartered objects cannot be justified by implication of law, but are ultra vires." People ex rel. Moloney v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 175 Ill. 125, 64 L.R.A. 366, 51 N. E. 664.

We regard it as well settled that implied powers exist only for the purpose of enabling a corporation to accomplish the purpose of its existence, and cannot be invoked to authorize acts only remotely connected with the specific purposes for which the corporation was created. National Home Bldg.

& L. Asso. v. Home Sav. Bank, 181 Ill. 35, 64 L.R.A. 399, 72 Am. St. Rep. 245, 54 N. E. 619; First M. E. Church v. Dixon, 178 Ill. 260, 52 N. E. 887; Best Brewing Co. v. Klassen, 185 Ill. 37, 50 L.R.A. 765, 76 Am. St. Rep. 26, 57 N. E. 20; Rockhold v. Canton Masonic Mut. Benev. Soc. 129 Ill. 440, 21 N. E. 794; People ex rel. Healy v. Illinois C. R. Co. 233 Ill. 378, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 604, 122 Am. St. Rep. 181, 84 N. E. 368, 13 Ann. Cas. 285; United States Brewing Co. v. Dolese & S. Co. 259 Ill. 274, 47 L.R.A. (N.S.) 898, 102 N. E. 753; North Ave. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Huber, 270 Ill. 75, 110 N. E. 312; Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. supra. The purpose for which the dock company was created was not to sell land, and although the act expressly authorizes it to do so, its powers in that respect were not enlarged above what they would have been if the power had not been expressly granted. No authority was or could have been given it to buy and sell land for other than corporate objects and purposes. However desirable the corporation may have been to sell block 139, and however advantageous it may have been to the stockholders to loan $35,000 as an inducement to Konkling to buy $15,000 worth of real estate, the corporation could not lawfully make a loan in order to effect the sale.

We regard National Home Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Home Sav. Bank, supra, as directly in point. In that case the building association bought a lot on which it held a mortgage, which it had the right to do. At the same time and included in the same deed it bought another lot in which it had no interest. The court held the power to purchase property upon which the association had a mortgage, for its own protection, did not authorize it to buy another lot, and that if it could not purchase the lot on which it had a mortgage without buying the other lot it was not authorized to buy at all. So here the corporation, being in process of liquidation and the land not being required for the purpose of enabling it to carry out the objects and purposes of its creation, could lawfully sell it. Such sale, and under such circumstances, however, was not made to aid the corporation in carrying out and accomplishing the objects for which it was organized. Coupling an unlawful act with a lawful one cannot be given the effect of making the unlawful act an authorized and valid act. The corporation had no power, express or implied, to make the loan, and, as said in the case last above cited, if it could not have sold block 139 unless it made the loan, then it should not have made the sale. Conceding that under some circumstances a corporation may lawfully make temporary loans of its surplus funds, this could only be done as a measure for the promotion of the success and prosperity of the company in carrying out its corporate purposes. This court has sustained acts of corporations which, though not expressly authorized, were held to be legitimate efforts to promote the corporate business and the continued existence of the corporation for the accomplishment of the objects of its creation. Kraft v. West Side Brewery Co. 219 Ill. 205, 76 N. E. 372; Central Lumber Co. v. Kelter, 201 Ill. 503, 66 N. E. 543. In the case here under consideration the loan was not made in an effort to promote the corporate objects and purposes, or to extend the legitimate business or perpetuate the existence of the corporation. Considered as a loan of surplus funds, as contended by the dock company, made for the purpose of effecting a sale of block 139, it was, under the authorities herein cited, ultra vires the corporation and void, and to the extent the trust deeds were given to secure the loan of $35,000 they are void and unenforceable.

Contracts made by a corporation which are beyond the scope of its powers are unlawful and void, and cannot be enforced, and in such cases the doctrine of estoppel cannot be applied on the ground that the party against whom it is sought to enforce the contract, having received the benefits of it, cannot be heard to interpose the defense of ultra vires. "The objection to the contract is not merely that the corporation ought not to have made it, but that it could not make it. The contract cannot be ratified by either party, because it could not have been authorized by either. No performance on either side can give the unlawful contract any validity, or be the foundation of any right of action upon it." Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 139 U. S. 24, 35 L. ed. 55, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 478. That case was quoted with approval in National Home Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Home Sav. Bank, supra, where it was also said: "No action can be maintained upon the unlawful contract, and in such cases, if the courts can afford any remedy, it cannot be done by affirming or enforcing the contract, but in some other manner."

That case was followed and approved in North Ave. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Huber, 270 Ill. 75, 110 N. E. 312.

The distinction between cases where the corporation's act was beyond its powers and where the act was within its powers, but was improperly exercised, has perhaps not always been clearly recognized or pointed out, and for this reason there may appear to be some confusion in a few cases. The distinction was clearly stated in Lurton v.

Jacksonville Loan & Bldg. Asso. 187 Ill. 141, 58 N. E. 218, in the following language: "The powers of a corporation are limited and delegated, and where a contract is ultra vires in the proper sense, as not being within the powers conferred upon the corporation by the legislature or within the object of its creation, the contract is void [citing authorities]; but where the contract is one which the corporation has power to make and is within the scope of its franchise, neither party to the contract who has had the benefit of it can set up as a defense that legal formalities were not complied with, or that the power was improperly exercised."

The correct rule is announced in the cases last above cited as well as in many other cases and in text-books. Conkling is not himself interposing the defense of ultra vires, but that defense is being made by the trustee in bankruptcy for the benefit of all Conkling's creditors. Whether a different rule should apply under these circumstances need not be determined, for in our view of the law Conkling would not have been estopped from making that defense himself.

Our conclusion from a consideration of the authorities is that as to the loan of $35,000 the transaction was void and the trust deeds unenforceable. They were valid liens prior to the claim of the plaintiff in error, as security for $15,000, the purchase price for block 139, and subject to foreclosure, and all the property embraced therein is subject to sale for nonpayment of said sum according to the terms, provisions, and covenants of said trust deeds.

The decree of the Circuit Court and the judgment of the Appellate Court are reversed, and the cause remanded to the Circuit Court for further proceedings not inconsistent with the views expressed in this opinion.

Carter, J., dissenting:

I do not concur in the conclusion of this opinion, nor in the reasoning upon which it is based. In my judgment the entire loan may fairly be held as incident to the sale of the real estate in question. The opinion holds the trust deed valid to the extent of $15,000. I fail to see how, then, it can be held that the balance of the loan is entirely void. Does it not necessarily follow from holding a part of the loan valid that the loaning of the balance can only be held to have been an act in excess of power, and valid on collateral attack, and not an act wholly beyond and outside the scope of the corporate power of the company? Rector v. Hartford Deposit Co. 190 Ill. 380, 60 N. E. 528; People ex rel. Healy v. Shedd, 241 L.R.A.1917B.

Ill. 155, 80 N. E. 332; Golconda Northern R. Co. v. Gulf Lines Connecting R. Co. 265 Ill. 194, 106 N. E. 818, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 833. If it be assumed that the power of the corporation to sell land is not the main essential power of the corporation, but only a subsidiary one, under the reasoning of this court in former decisions this loan may be held to come within the powers incidental to the main or essential purpose of the corporation.

It does not seem to me that the loan was ultra vires, but rather that it was a legitimate investment of surplus funds of the corporation in an interest-bearing security and within the implied powers of the corporation. The opinion concedes that circumstances may arise when any corporation may lawfully make temporary loans of its surplus funds. This, of course, means whether the corporation be a going concern or in the process of liquidation. Situations may often arise where a corporation will require months, and sometimes even years, to liquidate, and when it cannot wisely or safely distribute its funds to the proper parties as rapidly as they are paid in. What is meant in the opinion by a temporary loan? Does it mean one for thirty, sixty, or ninety days, or may it be for six months or longer? Then, too, what kind of security shall be taken? Must each case be determined by its own special facts? Before any corporation is safe in making such a loan, must it be submitted to a court for decision? If a temporary loan can be made under any circumstances, is that not an admission that the corporation is acting within its implied powers in making such loan? How can the doctrine laid down in the opinion be reconciled with the conclusion in this case that the loan of $15,000 is valid? Of course, no one can contend that a corporation such as this, under its charter, is authorized to engage exclusively, or even largely, in the business of loaning money. Can a temporary loan be made by taking as security municipal or other negotiable bonds? Most of such securities are usually for a long term of years, but are readily negotiable. If such a loan can be made, why may not a loan be made by investing in a mortgage on real estate? It may well be urged that a mortgage on real estate is a safer investment than many negotiable bonds, and ordinarily, as to large investments, just as negotiable. "This power to loan may reasonably be implied in the case of corporations which, from the nature of their business, must necessarily keep on hand a large fund available for future contingencies. Such corporations ought to have the implied power to loan such surplus funds on security that may be readily converted into cash." 3 Thomp. Corp. 2d ed. § 2181. It cannot be that a corporation has the implied power to make a loan only to assist in carrying on an active business. A corporation, while liquidating, must necessarily exercise its implied powers the same as when it is a going concern. The fair test as to the power of a corporation to make a loan should be, not whether the act under discussion will directly promote the original corporate enterprise, but whether such act is reasonably connected with and adapted to promote some lawful corporate action which the corporation is proposing to take. The activities of a corporation in liquidating its property after the corporate enterprise has been abandoned certainly are not different, in principle, from its activities in endeavoring to carry out the original corporate purpose, and the implied powers must be the same in either case.

But, even if it be held that the loan was ultra vires, the decision of the court in this case is contrary to the general rule that the defense of ultra vires will not be allowed to accomplish an injustice. This court said in Kadish v. Garden City Equitable Loan Bldg. Asso. 151 Ill. 531, 42 Am. St. Rep. 256, 38 N. E. 236: "The plea of ultra vires should not, as a general rule, prevail, whether interposed for or against a corporation, when it would not advance justice, but, on the contrary, would accomplish a legal wrong."

In Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 139 U. S. 24, 60, 35 L. ed. 55, 68, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 478, 488, it was said (p. 16): "A contract ultra vires being unlawful and void, not because it is in itself immoral, but because the corporation, by the law of its creation, is incapable of making it, the courts, while refusing to maintain any action upon the unlawful contract, have always striven to do justice between the parties, so far as could be done consistently with adherence to law, by permitting property or money parted with on the faith of the unlawful contract, to be recovered back, or compensation to be made for it."

In Logan County Nat. Bank v. Townsend, 139 U. S. 67, 76, 35 L. ed. 107, 111, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 496, 499, in referring to an illegal contract, the court said (p. 76): "The illegality of the contract does not arise from any moral turpitude. The property was transferred under a contract which was merely malum prohibitum, and where the city was the principal offender. In such case the party receiving may be made to refund to the person from whom it has received the property for the unauthorized L.R.A.1917B.

purpose, the value of that which it has actually received."

In this same opinion, commenting on another decision, it is stated on the same page: "The court, while assuming that the statute, by clear implication, forbade the bank from making a loan on real estate, refused to restrain the bank from enforcing the deed of trust."

The recent authorities, in most jurisdictions if not all, hold that the theoretical notion that the corporation has exceeded its powers or violated some shadowy principle of public policy has largely been abandoned. In such cases the decisions are placed on the more solid ground of damage either suffered or threatened.

"The more modern as well as the correct rule is that in all such cases the corporation may recover unless the statute says that it shall not. It has been expressly held that, where the contract was neither immoral nor against public policy, and no penalty was attached, the corporation could recover on the security though the loan was in violation of the charter." 3 Thomp. Corp. 2d ed. §§ 2182, 2119.

Land-holding contrary to law always has been recognized in this state as against public policy, yet this court in Walker v. Taylor, 252 Ill. 424, 96 N. E. 1055, held that, where the parties had organized an Iowa corporation to deal in Illinois land, the court would not forfeit their rights to the land, but created an equitable claim in their favor against such land.

From a reading of the decisions on the question of ultra vires it is quite apparent that the question as to whether a corporation has by its acts exceeded its powers is often a close one and difficult to decide. This court has not heretofore decided any case that would absolutely control on the facts here. Conkling, in this case, had a past-due mortgage on his plant. He had to extend it or his business would be closed. The dock company in good faith lent him the money with which to take up the mortgage, and he received the full benefit of the loan. Under such circumstances he certainly could not repudiate this obligation. Under all well-settled principles of law, why should Conkling's assignees or creditors have any greater rights in equity than he would have had? It is a rule of universal application that courts of equity will never affirmatively enforce either a penalty or a forfeiture. 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 13th ed. § 1319; 16 Cyc. 80; Tarr v. Stearman, 264 Ill. 110, 105 N. E. 957. By this decision the dock company, in a court of equity, is being deprived of its property and of any remedy to recover the same. In effect a forfeiture is being enforced. By reason and the great weight of authority, it seems to me the canal and dock company should be permitted to realize on the security it holds for the amount of its loan. To do so is not to uphold an unlawful contract, but rather to enforce the implied contract of Conkling to make compensation for the money, which neither he nor his creditors, in justice, have the right to retain.

Craig and Duncan, JJ., also dissent.

First petition for rehearing denied April 13, 1916.

Second petition for rehearing denied June 9, 1916.

Annotation—Estoppel against raising the defense of ultra vires in actions brought by private corporation.

1. Scope of monograph, 822.

I. Introductory:

2. Distinctive considerations applicable to cases in which the action is brought by the corporation, 822.

3. Estoppel not predicable from the mere circumstance of the defendant's having contracted with the corporation, 823.

3a. Estoppel as predicated from defendant's knowledge of conditions, 824.

4. Applicability of estoppel doctrine in cases where relief against the contract is sought, 824.

5. Right of action considered with reference to the element of mutuality, 824.

6. Applicability of doctrine of estoppel in actions brought by municipal corporations, 825.

II. Doctrine of estoppel considered with relation to the theory as to the exclusive right of the state to raise the question of invalidity:

7. Generally, 825.

8. Exclusive right of state affirmed with reference to ultra vires contracts, 826.

9. —other contracts of an analogous character:

(a) Contracts made with corporations not legally organized, 828.

(b) Contracts made with foreign corporations which have failed to comply with the statutable prerequisites to doing business in the state where the action is brought, 830.

III. Doctrine that the defendant in an action brought by a corporation cannot be estopped from pleading ultra vires:

10. Generally, 832.

11. Illustrative cases, 833.

IV. Doctrine that the defendant in an action brought by a corporation may be estopped from pleading ultra vires:

12. Generally, 834.

13. Illustrative cases, 835.

V. Review of cases decided in each jurisdiction:

14. Introductory, 835.

15. England, 836.

16. Federal decisions generally, 839.

17. Federal decisions with regard to national banks, 841.

18. State and Federal decisions collated, 845.

19. Alabama, 849.

20. Arizona, 850.

21. Arkansas, 850.

22. California, 850.

23. Colorado, 851.

24. Connecticut, 851.

25. Dakota, 851.

26. Delaware, 852.

27. Florida, 852.

28. Georgia, 852.

29. Idaho, 852.

30. Illinois, 853.

31. Indiana, 855.

32. Iowa, 856.

33. Kansas, 856.

34. Kentucky, 858.

35. Louisiana, 859.

36. Maine, 859.

37. Maryland, 860.

38. Massachusetts, 860.

38a. Michigan, 862.

39. Minnesota, 863.

40. Mississippi, 864.

41. Missouri, 865.

42. Nebraska, 867.

43. New Jersey, 867.

V.—continued.

- 44. New York, 867.
- 45. North Dakota, 876.
- 46. Ohio, 876.
- 47. Oklahoma, 879.
- 48. Oregon, 879.
- 49. Pennsylvania, 879.
- 50. South Carolina, 881.
- 51. Tennessee, 882.
- 52. Texas, 883.
- 53. Utah, 884.
- 54. Vermont, 884.
- 55. Wisconsin, 886.
- 56. Canada, 888.

1. Scope of monograph.

In the monograph appended to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment Co. v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. L.R.A.1917A, 737, the question how far the defendant in an action brought upon an ultra vires contract of a private corporation is estopped to plead its invalidity was discussed with reference to cases in which the party sued is the corporation. In the present monograph it is proposed to supplement the former discussion by a review of the cases which bear upon this question, in so far as it is concerned with actions in which the corporation is the complainant.

I. Introductory.2. Distinctive considerations applicable to cases in which the action is brought by the corporation.

In so far as the right of action upon an executed ultra vires contract is regarded as a matter which depends merely upon the technical quality of the contract, the reasons for admitting or excluding the operation of the principle of estoppel are, it is manifest, precisely the same whether we have to do with cases in which the corporation is the defendant, or with cases in which it is the moving party. In this point of view the only question which a court is called upon to determine is whether it is prepared to indorse the theory that a prohibited contract may in effect be validated as a result of what has been done in pursuance of it subsequently to its formation. A full discussion of this phase of the remedial rights of the party who has performed the contract on his side will be found in §§ 13-18 of the monograph referred to in § 1, supra, where all the relevant decisions and dicta are reviewed. In this place it will be sufficient to observe that, if the fact of the contract's having been prohibited is treated as the conclusive criterion of those rights in L.R.A.1917B.

cases where the corporation is the plaintiff, it clearly should not be allowed to recover on the ground urged in an early New York case, viz., that, if the loan in question was "illegal and unauthorized, it must be considered the act of the agents or officers of the company, and not of the company itself; and that they, therefore, ought to be allowed to recover back their property thus improperly disposed of." The court said: "This would be a most convenient distinction for corporations to establish: that every violation of their charter or assumption of unauthorized power on the part of their officers, although with the full knowledge and approbation of the directors, is to be considered the individual act of the officers, and is not to prejudice the corporation itself. There would be no possibility of ever convicting a corporation of exceeding its powers, and thereby forfeiting its charter or incurring any other penalty, if this principle could be established."<sup>1</sup>

If, however, the range of the discussion is extended so as to embrace the various secondary considerations which have been adverted to as reasons for and against allowing the maintenance of an action upon the contract, it is clear that the elements which determine whether such an action should be allowed are in some important respects dissimilar, according as the corporation is the defendant or the plaintiff. As pointed out in § 66 of the monograph referred to in § 1, supra, above, two of the most serious objections to the doctrine of estoppel in the general form in which it has been enunciated and applied in favor of parties suing corporations are (1) that it does not adequately safeguard the interests of innocent shareholders, and (2) that it may and frequently does operate to the disadvantage of persons other than the plaintiffs who have had dealings with corporations in regard to matters within the scope of their powers. The force of both of these objections lies in the fact that, if an ultra vires contract which has been performed by the plaintiff is treated as being enforceable upon the same footing as an authorized contract, those descriptions of persons who are chiefly concerned in the conservation of the financial resources of corporations will suffer prejudice in an appreciable number of instances. In the view of those who emphasize these objections, the possibility that this result may follow is a circumstance which demonstrates that the rule which affirms the enforceability of the contract cannot be sound. On the other hand, it is clear that, in respect of actions by corporations, these objections possess little if any weight. Indeed, it would seem that the conditions under which injury will be sustained by stockholders and creditors from allowing a corporation to enforce an ultra vires contract which it has performed occur so rarely that the risk of such injury may warrantably be treated as a negligible factor, when the correctness of general principles is under discussion.

<sup>1</sup> Life & F. Ins. Co. v. Mechanic F. Ins. Co. (1831) 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 31.

Having regard to these contrasted aspects of the doctrine of ultra vires, there would seem to be adequate reasons for placing in a separate category the cases which deal with the remedial rights of the corporation as moving party. It is plain that even a court which is convinced that the purely logical reasons for refusing to allow a prohibited contract to be virtually validated by the operation of the principle of estoppel are unanswerable might well deem itself justified in taking, with respect to such cases, the position that the defense of invalidity should be excluded, because the exclusion not only does not operate to the prejudice of the two descriptions of persons whose interests are assumed to be promoted by the application of the doctrine of ultra vires, but is, generally speaking, necessary for the purpose of safeguarding those interests.<sup>2</sup> It is true that the materiality of this consideration as a reason for segregating the cases in which the corporation is the moving party has not been explicitly referred to by any of the courts. But the propriety of the classification which it suggests is also indicated by the nature and consequences of a theory which has frequently been recognized by the courts; viz., that only the state can raise the question of ultra vires. As this theory has been applied far more frequently in cases involving actions brought by corporations than in those in which corporations were defendants, and cases of the former class may be said to constitute the most, if not the only, appropriate field for its operation (see § 7, infra), it may be regarded as an additional ground for separating the two classes of cases. Still another ground for the separation is indicated by the following statement: "A corporation, like an individual, when sued on a contract, may set up as a defense its want of power or capacity to make such [i. e., ultra vires] contract; but the party with whom it contracts cannot set up such want of power or capacity as a defense to an action by the corporation for a breach thereof. And the reason of the distinction is that legal disability, as in the case of a minor is a defense personal to the party who is under it, and cannot be taken advantage of by another."<sup>3</sup> That this passage does not embody a correct statement of the law in so far as it assumes that the distinction predicated is recognized by all the courts is shown by the English, Federal, and Alabama cases cited in §§ 15, 16, and 19, infra. But for the purposes of the present discussion, the importance of the analogy to which it draws attention is manifest.

3. Estoppel not predicable from the mere circumstance of the defendant's having contracted with the corporation.

The doctrine that, "by contracting with a corporation, the party contracting estops himself from disputing the power of the corporation to make such contract," has been explicitly repudiated.<sup>1</sup> The correctness of the position thus taken is indisputable, for it is the only one which can be reconciled with the universally accepted theory that no action can be maintained upon an ultra vires contract so long as it remains executory.<sup>2</sup>

The analogous doctrine which prevails,

<sup>2</sup> In this connection the following remarks in Wald v. Wheelon (1914) 27 N. D. 624, 147 N. W. 402, with regard to the restricted powers of a bank, may be quoted: "This limitation is for the protection and to promote the safety of the stockholders, depositors, and other customers, but especially of depositors and customers. Pratt v. Short (1880) 79 N. Y. 437, 35 Am. Rep. 531. Recognition of this is probably one of the most potent reasons given by courts for holding that a bank may recover on an executed contract made in violation of the prohibition. They reason that the legislative intent was to protect the depositors, and that to deny recovery when L.R.A.1917B.

the other party has the bank's money would not only promote injustice, but would defeat the object sought to be accomplished. On the other hand, where to permit a recovery would defeat the end sought to be attained, the contract will not be enforced, and if not enforceable, damages for its breach cannot be recovered."

<sup>3</sup> Oregonian R. Co. v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. (1884) 10 Sawy. 464, 22 Fed. 245.

<sup>1</sup> Wilks v. Georgia P. R. Co. (1885) 79 Ala. 180. See also Long v. Georgia P. R. Co. (1890) 91 Ala. 519, 24 Am. St. Rep. 931, 8 So. 706.

<sup>2</sup> The ruling to the opposite effect in Standard Sewing Mach. Co. v. Frame with respect to actions against corporations is referred to in § 1 of the monograph referred to in § 1, supra.

3a. Estoppel as predicated from defendant's knowledge of conditions.

In a few cases the inability of the defendant to resist an action brought by a corporation was predicated upon the ground that he was chargeable with knowledge of the extent of the corporate powers when he entered into the contract. The conception which was explicitly relied upon in two of these cases was that the defendant, having assented to the transaction, was estopped from contesting its validity.<sup>1</sup> In the other cases that conception was not in terms adverted to, but may be regarded as having been the ultimate ratio decidendi.<sup>2</sup> With regard to such rulings it is sufficient to point out that, if the mere fact of assenting to the formation of ultra vires contracts were conceded to produce an estoppel against alleging its invalidity, the well-settled theory as to the nonenforceability of such contracts while they remain executory on both sides would be entirely overthrown. Some specific rulings adverse to the theory propounded are cited in the opening section of the monograph appended to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment Co. v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. L.R.A.1917A, 737.

4. Applicability of estoppel doctrine in cases where relief against the contract is sought.

One class of cases in which the corporation is technically the moving party, viz., those in which it is seeking to be relieved from the obligations of a contract which the other party has performed wholly or in part, is discussed in the monograph appended to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment Co. v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. L.R.A.1917A, 737, for the reason that the essential question which they involve is whether that performance estops the corporation from repudiating a contract of which it has received the benefits.

On the other hand, the actual point presented in a case in which the plaintiff in an action brought against a corporation seeks relief on the ground that the contract is ultra vires obviously is whether the defendant can hold him liable. Such a case, therefore, really belongs to the same category as those discussed in the present monograph, and consequently his right to the relief asked may sometimes depend upon whether the principle of an estoppel, as predicated from an acceptance of the benefits of the contract, prevails in the jurisdiction in which the action is brought.<sup>1</sup> But, irrespective of the position taken with regard to that doctrine, it is clear that such relief may properly be denied on equitable grounds of general application.<sup>2</sup>

5. Right of action considered with reference to the element of mutuality.

It has been observed in a leading New York case that "the only justification for such a plea [i. e., of ultra vires] by an individual sued upon a contract with a corporation is that the obligation is not

(1900) 2 Penn. (Del.) 430, 49 Atl. 188, a nisi prius case, is clearly erroneous. See § 26, infra.

<sup>1</sup> Provident Loan & Bldg. Asso. v. Carter (1900) 107 Wis. 383, 83 N. W. 655 (suit to foreclose mortgage given by member of building and loan association to secure loan), following Leahy v. National Bldg. & L. Asso. (1898) 100 Wis. 555, 69 Am. St. Rep. 945, 76 N. W. 625.

<sup>2</sup> In Voris v. Star City Bldg. & L. Asso. (1898) 20 Ind. App. 631, 50 N. E. 779, the court referred to the rule that "one who deals with a corporation is presumed to know the powers and limitations of its authority, and hence is estopped to plead its want of authority." The authority cited is 2 Beach on Private Corporations, p. 703, § 424, and several cases, the irrelevancy of which as precedents will, it is apprehended, be granted by anyone who examines them. There seems to have been some confusion in the mind of the court between ultra vires contracts and those belonging to the first of the two classes discussed in the next section. L.R.A.1917B.

In Huguenot Mills v. Jempson (1903) 68 S. C. 363, 102 Am. St. Rep. 673, 47 S. E. 687 (purchase of land), the court said: "The defendants are charged with knowledge that the plaintiff could not enter into a legal partnership, . . . and that in the contract to purchase they were dealing with the plaintiff and Rountree as joint owners of the property, who as such had a right to sell it. For this reason, they cannot now dispute the validity of the contract of purchase or the liabilities which fell upon them when they repudiated it."

<sup>1</sup> In Eckman v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (1897) 169 Ill. 312, 38 L.R.A. 750, 48 N. E. 496, where the action was brought by a servant to recover for personal injuries, the defense that he had accepted the benefits of a contract with its relief department was sustained against his contention that the contract was ultra vires. It should be noted that this decision was rendered before the rejection of the doctrine of estoppel in Illinois. See § 30, infra.

<sup>2</sup> In Wilson v. Torchon Lace & Mercantile Co. (1912) 167 Mo. App. 305, 149 S.

mutual, as the other party, the corporation, would not be bound by it."<sup>1</sup> But this is manifestly an erroneous statement. The ground upon which the plea is allowed by the courts which hold it to be effective is simply that an ultra vires contract, being, ex hypothesi, the subject of a prohibition, express or implied, comes within the scope of the general rule of law which declares that a contract made in violation of a statute cannot be the basis of an action. It is somewhat singular that this aspect of the matter should have been overlooked by the court, especially as this rule was applied in several of the earlier cases in New York. See § 44, infra. The English case cited is certainly not in point, because the invalidity of the contract there under discussion was predicated not on the ground of its being ultra vires, but simply on the ground of its being unsealed.<sup>2</sup>

6. Applicability of doctrine of estoppel in actions brought by municipal corporations.

In § 48 of the monograph appended to Creditors' Claims & Adjustment Co. v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. L.R.A.1917A, 737, it was stated that the authorities are not harmonious with respect to the ques-

W. 1156, the decision that the plaintiff could not compel the corporation to carry out an ultra vires contract for the redemption of its own stock, by repaying to him what he had paid for the stock, was based on these reasons: "Counsel seem to argue that this is to be treated as an action for money had and received. While that form of action to a certain extent ingrafts equitable principles upon actions at law, it surely cannot be used to evade the application of settled equitable principles. Looking at the equities of this case, this plaintiff received a large number of shares of stock as dividends pertaining to this stock; he also received a large sum of money by way of dividend on the stock. He retains all this, making no offer of refund of the money received or to return the dividend stock, thirty-three and one third shares. On the contrary, he has placed the latter out of his power to return by having sold and transferred it to an outside party. So that, as far as the equities of the case are concerned, plaintiff does not come into court with clean hands."

See also Mott v. United States Trust Co. (1855) 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 568, the effect of which is stated in § 44, note 9, infra.

<sup>1</sup> Whitney Arms Co. v. Barlow (1875) 63 N. Y. 70, 20 Am. Rep. 504. This statement has been cited with approval in Bowman Dairy Co. v. Mooney (1890) 41 Mo. App. 665, where it was somewhat expanded in the following terms: "When an indi-

tion whether municipal corporations can be estopped from raising the defense of ultra vires. The applicability of the doctrine of estoppel in actions brought by such corporations has not been much considered; and as the subject lies beyond the scope of the present monograph, it will be sufficient to cite a case in which the doctrine was assumed to be controlling in one of the jurisdictions in which it has been adopted in regard to private corporations.<sup>1</sup>

II. Doctrine of estoppel considered with relation to the theory as to the exclusive right of the state to raise the question of invalidity.

7. Generally.

The cases in which the ground assigned for holding corporations to be entitled to recover upon contracts which they had performed on their side was that the question of ultra vires could be raised by the state only are so intimately connected with those in which the ratio decidendi was that such performance created an estoppel against interposing the defense of ultra vires, that an examination of the authorities with the view of showing the manner in which the two classes of cases are interrelated will vidual is sued upon a contract by a corporation, he is permitted to make the defense of ultra vires upon the theory that, at the time of its violation by him, there was no legal obligation on the part of the corporation to comply with its part of the contract. In other words, there is a want of mutuality in the contract. . . . When such a contract has been fully performed by the corporation, the mutuality of the obligation becomes an immaterial question for the reason that the defendant can have no occasion to seek its enforcement."

For similar language, see Lauder v. Peoria Agri. & Trotting Soc. (1897) 71 Ill. App. 475.

<sup>2</sup> Fishmonger's Co. v. Robertson (1843) 5 Mann. & G. 131, 134 Eng. Reprint, 510, 6 Scott. N. R. 56, 12 L. J. C. P. N. S. 185.

<sup>1</sup> New York v. Sonneborn (1889) 113 N. Y. 423, 21 N. E. 121. The court said: "If the lease were evil in itself, and so void as against public policy, or if it had been declared illegal or void by statute, as the contract was in Pratt v. Eaton (1879) 18 Hun (N. Y.) 293, reversed in (1880) 79 N. Y. 449, a different question would have arisen. It is simply one of capacity or power, and the rule I have referred to is applicable to an action brought by a municipal as well as another corporation. The party benefited by its exercise cannot be heard to deny its existence."

be advisable for the purpose of the present monograph.

While the theory as to the exclusive right of the state to interfere has been invoked in cases in which the corporation was the defendant (see § 5 of the monograph appended to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment Co. v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. L.R.A.1917A, 737), the most appropriate, perhaps the only appropriate, field for its operation would seem to be the class of cases discussed in the present monograph. So far as regards the former class of cases, the hypothesis that the interest of shareholders and creditors will not be injuriously affected by an allowance of the claim based on the ultra vires contract cannot warrantably be entertained as one juris et de jure. Consequently, where it is a question of framing a general rule with regard to the nature and extent of the remedies which may be pursued against the corporation, these interests are elements of which account must be taken, if the possibility of injustice is to be adequately guarded against. In the latter class of cases, on the other hand, it would seem to be a perfectly legitimate assumption that these interests will suffer no prejudice if the action is prosecuted to judgment, for the outcome will be the recovery of a stipulated advantage to which, apart from the effect of the invalidity of the contract, it is undeniably entitled. Under the circumstances involved in such cases, therefore, the state is the only outside party having a tangible right to object to the enforcement of the contract, and may, if it wishes, waive that right.<sup>1</sup>

From the authorities cited in two next sections it is apparent that, in cases involving the remedial rights of the corporation as moving party, the theory as to the exclusive right of the state to object to the ultra vires character of the contract has been applied by courts which reject the principle of estoppel as well as by those which approve it. Hence, so far as regards the jurisdictional areas within which the theory and the principle have been adopted, there is no such general correspondence traceable in this respect as is indicated by the fact that in cases involving actions against corporations their operation is virtually coextensive. See § 5 of the monograph, appended to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment Co. v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. L.R.A.1917A, 737.

8. Exclusive right of state affirmed with reference to ultra vires contracts.

The right of the corporation to maintain an action upon an ultra vires contract which it has performed on its side has frequently been treated as a consequence of an assumed theory that the question of invalidity is one which can be raised only by the state.<sup>1</sup> This is the theory underlying the numerous deci-

<sup>1</sup> For the purposes of the present discussion it is obviously unnecessary, and indeed out of place, to consider the rare cases in which stockholders (and perhaps creditors) might have reason to complain of the prosecution of an action on the ground of the issues being uncertain and the outlays being too large to incur under the circumstances.

<sup>1</sup> Union Nat. Bank v. Matthews (1878) 98 U. S. 621, 25 L. ed. 188 (loan on mortgage); Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Wilcox (1878) 8 Biss. 203, Fed. Cas. No. 9980 (loan); Union Water Co. v. Murphy's Flat Plumbing Co. (1863) 22 Cal. 620, 3 Mor. Min. Rep. 487 (mortgage); Bay City Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Broad (1902) 136 Cal. 625, 69 Pac. 225 (loan); Barrow v. Bank of Louisiana (1847) 2 La. Ann. 453 (loan on mortgage); Southern Lumber Co. v. Holt (1911) 129 La. 273, 55 So. 986 (assignment of cause of action); Little v. O'Brien (1812) 9 Mass. 423 (action on notes given by shareholders for the price of their shares); Chester Glass Co. v. Dewey (1819) 16 Mass. 94, 8 Am. Dec. 128 (action for price of articles sold at store kept by company); Slater Woollen Co. v. Lamb (1887) 143 Mass. 420, 9 N. E. 823 (similar facts); Chaffee v. Middlesex R. Co. (1888) 146 Mass. 224, 16 N. E. 34 (action for certificate of stock of another company); Grand Gulf Bank v. Archer (1847) L.R.A.1917B.

8 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 151 (excessive rate of interest reserved); Haynes v. Covington (1850) 13 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 408 (loan); Littlewort v. Davis (1874) 50 Miss. 403 (loan); Hinds County v. Natchez, J. & C. R. Co. (1904) 85 Miss. 599, 107 Am. St. Rep. 305, 38 So. 189 (sale of franchises by railway company); Union Nat. Bank v. Touzalin Improv. Co. (1901) 1 Neb. (unof.) 116, 95 N. W. 489 (purchase of stock in another corporation); Silver Lake Bank v. North (1820) 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 370 (as to the precise significance of the remarks of Chancellor Kent in this case, see review of New York cases in § 44, infra); Bank of State v. Hammond (1845) 1 Rich. L. (S. C.) 281 (bond secured by guaranty was taken by bank authorized only to make a loan on such an instrument, when secured by mortgage); Wroten v. Armat (1879) 31 Gratt. (Va.) 228; John V. Farwell Co. v. Wolf (John V. Farwell Co. v. Josephson) (1897) 96 Wis. 10, 37 L.R.A. 138, 65 Am. St. Rep. 22, 70 N. W. 289, 71 N. W. 109 (action by corporation as assignee of claims for damages); Security Nat. Bank v. St. Croix Power Co. (1903) 117 Wis. 211, 94 N. W. 74 (foreclosure of mechanics' lien for construction work performed by a bank).

The restricted form in which this doctrine has been enunciated in Illinois, Missouri, sions to the effect that the power of a corporation to take and hold the title to property cannot be raised in an action brought by it with respect to the property.<sup>2</sup> Such decisions illustrate one of the branches of a still broader rule, under which the validity of the title to property, in so far as it depends upon the extent of the corporate powers, is treated as an element to be excluded from the controversy, irrespective of whether the corporation is the plaintiff or the defendant.<sup>3</sup> The authorities are not agreed as to the applicability of this rule in and Mississippi is discussed in the sections in which the decision in those states are reviewed. See subtitle V., infra.

In State ex rel. Hadley v. Bankers Trust Co. (1911) 157 Mo. App. 557, 138 S. W. 669, it was laid down as follows: "The rules of estoppel and of the sole right of the state to complain obtain only in cases where the excessive act of the corporation is not absolutely void, but only voidable, not wrong per se or against public policy and good morals, but wrong merely because the act is not within the scope of the powers conferred by law on the corporation."

<sup>2</sup> For cases in which this rule was recognized with respect to real property, see Cowell v. Colorado Springs Co. (1879) 100 U. S. 55, 25 L. ed. 547; Jones v. Habersham (1882) 107 U. S. 174, 27 L. ed. 401, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 336; Seymour v. Slide & Spur Gold Mines (1884) 153 U. S. 523, 38 L. ed. 807, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 847; Brown v. Schieier (1904) 194 U. S. 13, 48 L. ed. 857, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 558, affirming (1902) 55 C. C. A. 475, 118 Fed. 981, which affirmed (1901) 112 Fed. 577; Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Green Bay & Min. R. Co. (1882) 11 Biss. 334, 12 Fed. 773; South & North Ala. R. Co. v. Highland Ave. & Belt R. Co. (1898) 119 Ala. 105, 24 So. 114; Rachels v. Stecher Cooperae Works (1910) 95 Ark. 6, 128 S. W. 348; Natoma Water & Min. Co. v. Clarkin (1860) 14 Cal. 544; Alexander v. Tolleston Club (1884) 110 Ill. 73; Springer v. Chicago Real Estate Loan & T. Co. (1902) 102 Ill. App. 294, affirmed in (1903) 202 Ill. 17, 66 N. E. 850; Mosher v. Rogers (1879) 3 Ill. App. 577; Warner v. De Witt County Nat. Bank (1879) 4 Ill. App. 305; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Lewis (1880) 53 Iowa, 101, 4 N. W. 842; Franklin v. Twogood (1865) 18 Iowa, 515; State Security Bank v. Hoskins (1906) 130 Iowa, 340, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 376, 106 N. W. 764; Delta Duck Co. v. Barrios (1914) 135 La. 357, 65 So. 489; Delta Duck Co. v. Buras (1914) 135 La. 364, 65 So. 491; First Nat. Bank v. Shewalter (1911) 153 Mo. App. 635, 134 S. W. 42; Missouri Valley Land Co. v. Bushnell (1881) 11 Neb. 192, 8 N. W. 389; Cross v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. (1916) — N. C. —, 90 S. E. 14; Goundie v. Northampton Water Co. (1847) 7 Pa. 233; Advance Thresher Co. v. Rockafellow (1903) 16 S. D. 462, 93 N. W. 652; Russell v. Texas & P. R. Co. (1887) 68 Tex. 646, 5 S. W. 686; House of Mercy v. Davidson (1897) 90 Tex. 529, 39 S. W. 924; Lechenger v. Merchants' Nat. Bank (1906) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 96 S. W. 638; Knowles v. Northern Texas Traction Co. (1909) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 121 S. W. 232; Rutland & B. R. Co. v. Proctor (1856) 29 Vt. 93; Fayette Land L.R.A. 1917B.

Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 93 Va. 274, 24 S. E. 1016; Hall & P. Furniture Co. v. Wilbur (1892) 4 Wash. 644, 30 Pac. 665; John V. Farwell Co. v. Wolf (John V. Farwell Co. v. Josephson) (1897) 96 Wis. 10, 37 L.R.A. 138, 65 Am. St. Rep. 22, 70 N. W. 289, 71 N. W. 109; Hubbard v. Haley (1897) 96 Wis. 578, 71 N. W. 1036; Illinois Steel Co. v. Warras (1909) 141 Wis. 119, 123 N. W. 656.

For cases involving personal property, see Peru Plow & Implement Co. v. Harker (1906) 75 C. C. A. 475, 144 Fed. 674; Southern Lumber Co. v. Holt (1911) 129 La. 273, 55 So. 986; Wade v. American Colonization Soc. (1846) 7 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 663, 45 Am. Dec. 324; St. Louis Stoneware Co. v. Partridge (1880) 8 Mo. App. 580; J. M. Guffey Petroleum Co. v. Jeff Chaison Townsite Co. (1908) 48 Tex. Civ. App. 555, 107 S. W. 609; Farmers' & M. Bank v. Detroit & M. R. Co. (1863) 17 Wis. 373.

For a case in which a different doctrine was applied, see Thweatt v. Bank of Hopkinsville (1883) 81 Ky. 1.

<sup>3</sup> "Where a corporation is incompetent by its charter to take a title to real estate, a conveyance to it is not void, but only voidable, and the sovereign alone can object. It is valid until assailed in a direct proceeding instituted for that purpose." Union Nat. Bank v. Matthews (1878) 98 U. S. 621, 25 L. ed. 188.

"In the absence of a clear expression of legislative intention to the contrary, a conveyance of real estate to a corporation for a purpose not authorized by its charter is not void, but voidable, and the sovereign alone can object. Neither the grantor nor his heirs nor third persons can impugn it upon the ground that the grantee has exceeded its powers." Kerfoot v. Farmers' & M. Bank (1910) 218 U. S. 281, 54 L. ed. 1042, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 14, affirming Hall v. Farmers' & M. Bank (1898) 145 Mo. 418, 46 S. W. 1000 (suit to set aside conveyance of land to national bank).

See also Runyan v. Coster (1840) 14 Pet. (U. S.) 122, 10 L. ed. 382; Smith v. Sheeley (1870) 12 Wall. 358, 20 L. ed. 430; American & F. Christian Union v. Yount (1879) 101 U. S. 352, 25 L. ed. 888; Chattanooga, R. & C. R. Co. v. Evans (1895) 14 C. C. A. 116, 31 U. S. App. 432, 66 Fed. 809; Rogers v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. (1898) 33 C. C. A. 517, 62 U. S. App. 49, 697, 91 Fed. 299; Long v. Georgia P. R. Co. (1890) 91 Ala. 519, 24 Am. St. Rep. 931, 8 So. 706; Hough v. Cook County Land Co. (1874) 73 Ill. 23, 24 Am. Rep. 230; Baker v. Neff (1880) 73 Ind. 68; Cooney v. A. Booth Packing Co. (1897) 169 Ill. 370, 48 N. E. 406; De Witt County Nat. Bank v. Mickel-

respect of suits for specific performance.<sup>4</sup>

9. — other contracts of an analogous character.

The doctrine discussed in the preceding sections is in harmony with the rules in two other classes of cases which have been enunciated with respect to the right of corporations to sue upon contracts which involve descriptions of invalidity different from, but analogous to, that which is predicated on the ground of ultra vires.

berry (1910) 244 Ill. 77, 135 Am. St. Rep. 304, 91 N. E. 86; Hossack v. Ottawa Development Asso. (1910) 244 Ill. 274, 91 N. E. 439; Lauder v. Peoria Agri. & Trotting Soc. (1897) 71 Ill. App. 475; Henderson v. Virden Coal Co. (1897) 78 Ill. App. 437; Hayward v. Davidson (1872) 41 Ind. 214; Miller v. Flemingsburg & F. S. Turnp. Co. (1900) 109 Ky. 475, 59 S. W. 512; Barrow v. Bank of Louisiana (1847) 2 La. Ann. 453; Hagerstown Mfg. Min. & Land Improv. Co. v. Keedy (1900) 91 Md. 430, 46 Atl. 965; Hubbard v. Worcester Art. Museum (1907) 194 Mass. 280, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 689, 80 N. E. 490, 10 Ann. Cas. 1025 (petition by heirs to file information in the nature of a quo warranto); Evangelical Baptist Benev. & Missionary Soc. v. Boston (1910) 204 Mass. 28, 90 N. E. 572 (appeal from refusal of assessor to abate tax assessed to petitioner); Butterworth v. Kritzer Mill Co. (1897) 115 Mich. 1, 72 N. W. 990; Baker v. Northwestern Guaranty Loan Co. (1886) 36 Minn. 185, 30 N. W. 464; Chambers v. St. Louis (1860) 29 Mo. 576; Land v. Coffman (1872) 50 Mo. 243; Shewalter v. Pirner (1874) 55 Mo. 218; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Smith (1893) 117 Mo. 261, 38 Am. St. Rep. 656, 22 S. W. 623; Hall v. Farmers' & M. Bank (1898) 145 Mo. 418, 46 S. W. 1000; Ancell v. Southern Illinois & M. Bridge Co. (1909) 223 Mo. 209, 122 S. W. 709; Watts v. Gantt (1894) 42 Neb. 869, 61 N. W. 104; Northeastern Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Hepburn (1907) 72 N. J. Eq. 7, 65 Atl. 747, reversed in (1907) 73 N. J. Eq. 657, 69 Atl. 249; Moskowitz v. Hornberger (1897) 20 Misc. 558, 46 N. Y. Supp. 462; Mallett v. Simpson (1886) 94 N. C. 37, 55 Am. Rep. 594; Leazure v. Hillegas (1821) 7 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 313; Goundie v. Northampton Water Co. (1847) 7 Pa. 233; Barrow v. Nashville & C. Turnp. Co. (1848) 9 Humph. (Tenn.) 304; Taylor v. Davidson (1909) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 120 S. W. 1018; Mansfield v. Neff (1913) 43 Utah, 258, 134 Pac. 1160; Wroten v. Armat (1879) 31 Gratt. (Va.) 228; Litchfield v. Preston (1900) 98 Va. 530, 37 S. E. 6; Milton v. Crawford (1911) 65 Wash. 145, 118 Pac. 32; 2 Thomp. Corp. 2d ed. § 2807; Cook, Corp. § 694; Machen, Corp. §§ 1050, 1054.

<sup>4</sup>In Kohlruess v. Zachery (1913) 139 Ga. 625, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 72, 77 S. E. 812, it L.R.A.1917B.

(a) Contracts made with corporations not legally organized.

The right of a de facto corporation to enforce a contract has been affirmed on two distinct grounds; viz., (1) that the regularity of its organization could not be attacked except in a direct proceeding by the state;<sup>1</sup> and (2) that "one who deals with a corporation as existing in fact is estopped to deny, as against the corporation, that it has been legally organized."<sup>2</sup> The principle of an estoppel has, in respect of this class of cases, been adopted by several of the was laid down: "The courts will not aid the corporation to compel specific performance of a contract for the purchase of land which it has no power under its charter to acquire and own. . . . The distinction between the two classes of cases is that the courts will not interfere with a contract that is executed, but will refuse to aid a corporation in enforcing a contract for the purchase of land that is merely executory."

The same doctrine was recognized in Land v. Coffman (1872) 50 Mo. 243, and Heiskell v. Chickasaw Lodge (1889) 87 Tenn. 668, 4 L.R.A. 699, 11 S. W. 825.

On the other hand, in Bank of Poitiaux (1825) 3 Rand. (Va.) 136, 15 Am. Dec. 706, a suit for the specific performance of a contract to sell land was sustained.

In Coleridge Creamery Co. v. Jenkins (1902) 66 Neb. 129, 92 N. W. 123, a suit for the specific performance of a similar contract was held to be maintainable; but the decision was put upon the special ground that, as the improvements made upon the property by the purchasing corporation had been carried out with the active assistance of the vendor, a gross fraud would result if he were permitted to question the power of the vendee to take and hold the land.

<sup>1</sup>Marion Sav. Bank v. Dunkin (1875) 54 Ala. 471; Hughes v. Bank of Somerset (1824) 5 Litt. (Ky.) 45; Hackensack Water Co. v. De Kay (1883; Err. & App.) 36 N. J. Eq. 548; Spahr v. Farmers' Bank (1880) 94 Pa. 429; Johnston v. Elizabeth Bldg. & L. Asso. (1883) 104 Pa. 394; Monongahela Bridge Co. v. Pittsburgh & B. Trac. Co. (1900) 196 Pa. 25, 79 Am. St. Rep. 685, 46 Atl. 99.

For a case in which it was held that the validity of the organization of a foreign corporation could not be attacked collaterally, see Bishop v. American Preservers' Co. (1894) 51 Ill. App. 417, reversed in (1895) 157 Ill. 284, 48 Am. St. Rep. 317, 41 N. E. 765, but not on this point.

<sup>2</sup>Close v. Glenwood Cemetery (1882) 107 U. S. 466, 27 L. ed. 408. See also Chubb v. Upton (1877) 95 U. S. 665, 24 L. ed. 523; Cowell v. Colorado Springs Co. (1879) 100 U. S. 61, 25 L. ed. 550; Andes v. Ely (1894) 158 U. S. 312, 39 L. ed. 996, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 954; Oregonian R. Co. v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. (1884) 10 Sawy. 464, 22 Fed. 245;

courts which have ordinarily rejected it with relation to ultra vires contracts.<sup>3</sup> It

clearly cannot be invoked where the incorporation was not authorized by any Snider's Sons Co. v. Troy (1890) 91 Ala. 224, 11 L.R.A. 515, 24 Am. St. Rep. 887, 8 So. 658; Fresno Canal & Irrig. Co. v. Warner (1887) 72 Cal. 379, 14 Pac. 37; Yancy v. Morton (1892) 94 Cal. 558, 20 Pac. 1111; Bank of Shasta v. Boyd (1893) 99 Cal. 604, 34 Pac. 337; Raphael Weill & Co. v. Crittenden (1903) 130 Cal. 489, 73 Pac. 238; Francis v. Western Screen Co. (1913) 22 Cal. App. 32, 133 Pac. 327; Imboden v. Etowah & B. B. Hose Min. Co. (1883) 70 Ga. 86; Washburn v. Rossch (1883) 13 Ill. App. 268; McBroom v. Lebanon (1869) 31 Ind. 268; Ray v. Indianapolis Ins. Co. (1872) 39 Ind. 290; Pancoast v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (1887) 79 Ind. 172; Smelser v. Wayne & U. Straight Line Turnp. Co. (1882) 82 Ind. 417; Hasselman v. United States Mortg. Co. (1884) 97 Ind. 365; Franklin v. Two-good (1865) 18 Iowa, 515; Pape v. Capitol Bank (1878) 20 Kan. 440, 27 Am. Rep. 183; Jones v. Bank of Tennessee (1847) 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 122, 46 Am. Dec. 540; Henderson & N. R. Co. v. Leavell (1855) 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 363; Yellow Chief Coal Co. v. Johnson (1915) 166 Ky. 663, 179 S. W. 599; Teutonia Nat. Bank v. Wagner (1881) 33 La. Ann. 792; Latiolais v. Citizens' Bank (1881) 33 La. Ann. 1444; Swartwout v. Michigan Air Line R. Co. (1872) 24 Mich. 394; Wilcox v. Toledo & A. A. R. Co. (1880) 43 Mich. 584, 5 N. W. 1003; Estey Mfg. Co. v. Runnels (1884) 55 Mich. 130, 20 N. W. 823; French v. Donohue (1882) 29 Minn. 111, 12 N. W. 354; East Norway Lake N. E. Lutheran Church v. Froislie (1887) 37 Minn. 447, 35 N. W. 260; Columbia Electric Co. v. Dixon (1891) 46 Minn. 463, 49 N. W. 244; Atlantic & P. R. Co. v. St. Louis (1877) 66 Mo. 228; Studebaker Bros. Mfg. Co. v. Montgomery (1881) 74 Mo. 101; St. Louis Gaslight Co. v. St. Louis (1884) 84 Mo. 202; Father Matthew Soc. v. Fitz Williams (1884) 84 Mo. 406; Broadwell v. Merritt (1885) 87 Mo. 95; Bradley v. Reppell (1895) 133 Mo. 545, 54 Am. St. Rep. 685, 32 S. W. 645, 34 S. W. 841; West Missouri Land Co. v. Kansas City Suburban Belt R. Co. (1900) 161 Mo. 595, 61 S. W. 847; Omaha Cattle Loan Co. v. Shelly (1911) 39 Neb. 502, 131 N. W. 926; Congregational Soc. v. Perry (1833) 6 N. H. 164, 25 Am. Dec. 455; Campbell v. Perth Amboy Shipbuilding & Engineering Co. (1905) 70 N. J. Eq. 57, 62 Atl. 319, affirmed in (1906) 71 N. J. Eq. 302, 71 Atl. 1133; Belvidere Water Co. v. Belvidere (1911) — N. J. —, 92 Atl. 365; Dutchess Cotton Manufactory v. Davis (1817) 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 238, 7 Am. Dec. 459; Palmer v. Lawrence (1849) 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 161, affirmed in (1851) 5 N. Y. 389; Methodist Episcopal Union Church v. Pickett (1859) 19 N. Y. 484; Commercial Bank v. Pfeiffer (1888) 103 N. Y. 242, 15 N. E. 311; White v. Coventry (1859) 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 305; White v. Ross (1860) 4 Abb. App. Dec. L.R.A.1917B.

(N. Y.) 589, 15 Abb. Pr. 66; Montgomery v. Whitbeck (1903) 12 N. D. 385, 96 N. W. 327; Lucas v. Greenville Bldg. & Sav. Asso. (1872) 22 Ohio St. 339; Centre & Turnp. Road Co. v. M'Conaby (1827) 16 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 140; Cochran v. Arnold (1868) 58 Pa. 399; Union Bank & T. Co. v. Wright (1900) — Tenn. —, 55 L.R.A. 469, 58 S. W. 755; Whitney v. Robinson (1881) 53 Wis. 309, 10 N. W. 512; Williams v. Stevens Point Lumber Co. (1888) 72 Wis. 487, 40 N. W. 154; Gilman v. Druse (1901) 111 Wis. 400, 87 N. W. 557; Peyton v. Minong Lumber & Lath Co. (1912) 149 Wis. 66, 135 N. W. 518; Bigelow, Estoppel, 6th ed. p. 499; Clark & M. Priv. Corp. §§ 83 et seq.

The doctrine affirmed in the above cited cases has been embodied in Ky. Stat. § 566. See Johnson v. Mason Lodge I. O. O. F. (1889) 106 Ky. 838, 61 S. W. 620; Yellow Chief Coal Co. v. Johnson (1915) 166 Ky. 663, 179 S. W. 599 (organization not completed until after the contract was made).

For cases in which the doctrine has been affirmed in actions against shareholders of the corporation itself, see Columbia Electric Co. v. Dixon (1891) 46 Minn. 463, 49 N. W. 244; Phoenix Warehousing Co. v. Badger (1876) 67 N. Y. 294; Trumbull County Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Horner (1848) 17 Ohio, 407.

In Brown v. Scottish-American Mortg. Co. (1884) 110 Ill. 235, the court said, arguing: "In this class of cases, while it is usually said the party is estopped to deny the existence of the corporation, the courts really proceed upon a rule of evidence rather than upon the strict doctrine of estoppel." Having regard to the weight of authority in favor of the admissibility of the principle of estoppel in this connection, it is apparent that the court was not warranted in making this statement.

For a case of estoppel by covenant, see Ragan v. McElroy (1899) 98 Mo. 349, 11 S. W. 735, where the court used the following language: "The grantor 'having by his deed declared the grantee therein to be a corporation, received from it, as such, the purchase money for the land, bound himself and his heirs thereby forever to defend the title to the premises to such corporation, its successor and assigns, and in pursuance thereof delivered possession of the premises to the grantee, the grantor and his heirs are forever estopped from denying the corporate existence of the grantee as against those who have acquired possession and title under that deed.'" See also Franklin v. Twogood (1865) 18 Iowa, 516.

<sup>3</sup> See Federal cases cited at the beginning of the preceding note, and also Douglas County v. Bolles (1876) 94 U. S. 104, 24 L. ed. 46; Rannels v. Rowe (1906) 74 C. C. A. 376, 145 Fed. 296; Marion Sav. Bank v. Dunkin (1875) 54 Ala. 471; Lehman v. Warner (1878) 61 Ala. 461 (expressly distinguishing cases involving contracts in ex-

existing statute, or was expressly prohibited.<sup>4</sup> In some cases in which it has been applied, the fact of the defendant's having enjoyed the benefits of the contract is explicitly referred to as one of the circumstances upon which the right of recovery was predicated.<sup>5</sup> The introduction of this element serves to create a link between cases of the type now under discussion and those relating to contracts which are ultra vires in the proper sense of the expression.<sup>6</sup> But it is clear that the two descriptions of cases belong to essentially different categories.<sup>7</sup> In this point of view it seems reasonably certain that certain statements in which the estoppel predicated from the fact of the defendant's having entered into the contract is referred to as operating in respect of the question of corporate power as well as of corporate existence are inaccurate.<sup>8</sup> Such an extension of the doctrine would bring it into conflict with the general rule accepted in all jurisdictions, that an ultra vires contract cannot be enforced as long as it remains executory on both sides. The only apparent way to escape from the dilemma thus indicated is to assume that the expression "power" in the statements alluded to connotes merely the ostensible authority which is conferred upon the de facto corporation by the charter under which it professes to be doing business.

(b) Contracts made with foreign corporations which have failed to comply with the statutable prerequisites to doing business in the state where the action is brought.

The enforceability of contracts of this type has been dealt with in earlier volumes of the Lawyers' Reports Annotated.<sup>9</sup> For the purpose of "showing the nature and extent of the analogy" between the principles with reference to which this question has been considered and those with which we are concerned cess of corporate powers); Central Agri. & Mechanical Asso. v. Alabama Gold L. Ins. Co. (1881) 70 Ala. 120; Sherwood v. Alvis (1887) 83 Ala. 115, 3 Am. St. Rep. 695, 3 So. 307; Worcester Medical Inst. v. Harding (1853) 11 Cush. (Mass.) 285; Dooley v. Wolcott (1862) 4 Allen (Mass.) 406.

<sup>4</sup> Imperial Bldg. Co. v. Chicago Open Bd. of Trade (1909) 238 Ill. 100, 87 N. E. 167.

<sup>5</sup> "A person who has contracted with an association assuming to be incorporated and acting in a corporate capacity cannot, after having received the benefit of the contract, set up as a defense to an action brought upon it by the company, that the latter was never legally incorporated, or that it had no authority to enter into the contract in a corporate capacity." Commercial Bank v. Pfeiffer (1888) 108 N. Y. 254, 16 N. E. 311. See also Helena v. Turner (1880) 36 Ark. 577 (occupation under lease); Lincoln Park Chapter, No. 177, R. A. M. v. Swatek (1903) 204 Ill. 228, 68 N. E. 429 (receipt of dividends by stockholder).

<sup>6</sup> In the New York case cited in the last note it was observed after the passage quoted: "The case of Whitney Arms Co. v. Barlow (1875) 63 N. Y. 63, 20 Am. Rep. 504 (see § 44, infra) goes far to sustain the principle upon which this rule is predicated." But, having regard to the numerous authorities that were exactly in point, the reference to this imperfect precedent seems to have been somewhat superfluous. The same remark applies to the reliance placed upon this element in Camden & A. R. Co. v. May's Landing & E. H. City R. Co. (1886) 48 N. J. L. 530, 7 Atl. 523.

<sup>7</sup> In New York State Loan & T. Co. v. Helmer (1879) 77 N. Y. 64, it was stated that the remarks in the opinion of the court in Palmer v. Lawrence (1849) 3 L.R.A.1917B.

Sandf. (N. Y.) 161, "as to the right of a debtor who has contracted with a corporation de facto to dispute its organization, can have no application . . . to a case where the illegal act of the corporation is a ground of defense, and not the illegality of its organization."

The difference between the objections of a want of power in the corporation, and of a defect in its organization, was also recognized in Montgomery v. Whitbeck (1903) 12 N. D. 385, 96 N. W. 327. See also the cases cited in note 3, supra, which were decided on the assumption that there is such a difference.

<sup>8</sup> See, for example, Massey v. Citizens' Bldg. & Sav. Asso. (1879) 22 Kan. 624 (in syllabus of court); Harris v. Independence Gas. Co. (1907) 76 Kan. 750, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1171, 92 Pac. 1123, quoting the following passage of Judge Thompson's monograph on "Corporation," in 10 Cyc. p. 248: "A person contracting with an ostensible corporation to do an act which is not prohibited by law becomes estopped, in an action by the corporation to enforce the contract, either to deny the existence of the corporation or its power to enter into such a contract."

<sup>9</sup> For a general discussion of the question whether noncompliance by a foreign corporation with the prescribed conditions precedent to its right to do business within the state will invalidate a corporate contract so as to prevent its enforcement by the corporation, see State v. American Book Co. 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1041, and the note appended thereto.

As to the effect produced by the imposition of a penalty for failing to comply with the conditions precedent, see the notes to Tri-State Amusement Co. v. Forest Park Highlands Amusement Co. 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 688, and Fruin-Colnon Contracting Co. v.

in the present monograph, the following brief statement will suffice:

The right to recover upon contracts of this description has been affirmed on several different grounds; viz., (1) that the legislature did not intend that a nonobservance of the provisions of the enactment in question should render the contract void;<sup>10</sup> (2) that the enforceability of the contract is a necessary consequence of an essential distinction assumed to be predicable in cases of this class "between an entire absence of authority in the organic law itself, and a failure to comply with some prerequisite which the law has made a condition precedent to the exercise of corporate functions. In the one case, there is a want of power to act; in the other, only an abuse of power conferred;"<sup>11</sup> (3) that the power of the corporation to carry on business in the state could be questioned only by the state itself;<sup>12</sup> (4) that the fact of the defendant's having contracted with the corporation estopped him from disputing its right to do business in the state;<sup>13</sup> (5) that the enjoyment of the benefits of the contract created an estoppel against alleging its invalidity.<sup>13a</sup> But there is also a considerable body of authority for the doctrine that no action can be maintained by the defaulting corporation.<sup>14</sup> The rationale of this doctrine is that the corporation has no power to do business in another state except by its consent, and that the condition precedent to obtaining that consent has never been performed. Consequently, "the power to make the contract was never in the corporation. So far as it was concerned the act was ultra vires."<sup>15</sup> In some of the cases in which this position has been taken, it

Chatterson, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 857. For a later case reported in this series, see Oliver Co. v. Louisville Realty Co. (1913) 156 Ky. 628, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 293, 161 S. W. 570, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 565.

<sup>10</sup> Clark v. Middleton (1853) 19 Mo. 53; Dearborn Foundry Co. v. Augustine (1892) 5 Wash. 67, 31 Pac. 327.

<sup>11</sup> Sherwood v. Alvis (1887) 83 Ala. 115, 3 Am. St. Rep. 695, 3 So. 307 (mortgage executed to security company.) The court said: "In what we have said, we have no wish to question or weaken our former decisions holding that contracts by or with corporations, which are outside of their corporate powers, cannot be enforced. We are unwilling, however, to extend that principle, and make it embrace a case like the present." The provision here under review was an expressly prohibitive clause of the state Constitution.

<sup>12</sup> Grant v. Henry Clay Coal Co. (1876) 80 Pa. 209 (action for price of coal).

<sup>13</sup> Newburg Petroleum Co. v. Weare (1875) 27 Ohio St. 343; La France Fire Engine Co. v. Mt. Vernon (1894) 9 Wash. 142, 43 Am. St. Rep. 827, 37 Pac. 287, 38 Pac. 80; Rathbone, S. & Co. v. Frost (1894) 9 Wash. 162, 37 Pac. 298.

In this point of view cases of the class under discussion fall within the scope of the general rule of law that "in ordinary cases it is not allowed an individual to escape his obligation by showing the incapacity of the other party to the contract to act as he had assumed to act." Bigelow, Estoppel, § 464, quoted in Johnson v. Mason Lodge, I. O. O. F. (1899) 106 Ky. 846, 51 S. W. 620.

<sup>13a</sup> Washburn Mill Co. v. Bartlett (1893) 3 N. D. 138, 54 N. W. 544; Roane v. Union Pacific L. Ins. Co. (1913) 67 Or. 264, 135 Pac. 892; Holmes Co. v. Barnard (1884) 15 W. N. C. (Pa.) 110; Kilgore v. Smith (1888) 122 Pa. 48, 15 Atl. 698.

<sup>14</sup> Cincinnati Mut. Health Assur. Co. v. L.R.A. 1917B.

Rosenthal (1870) 55 Ill. 90, 8 Am. Rep. 628 (contract of insurance); Rising Sun Ins. Co. v. Slaughter (1863) 20 Ind. 520 (insurance contract); Yellow Chief Coal Co. v. Johnson (1915) 166 Ky. 663, 179 S. W. 599 (construction contract); Oliver Co. v. Louisville Realty Co. (1915) 156 Ky. 628, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 293, 161 S. W. 570, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 565; Williams v. Cheney (1855) 3 Gray (Mass.) 222 (promissory note given for the premium of insurance); Roche v. Ladd (1861) 1 Allen (Mass.) 441 (note given for premium upon a policy of insurance); National Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Pursell (1865) 10 Allen (Mass.) 232 (contract of insurance); First Nat. Bank v. Coughorn (1899) — Tenn. —, 52 S. W. 1112 (note held void even in the hands of an innocent purchaser); Etna Ins. Co. v. Harvey (1861) 11 Wis. 395 (note given for a premium of insurance); and the cases cited in the following note.

In Jones v. Smith (1855) 3 Gray (Mass.) 500, Metcalf, J., said: "It was essential to the validity of the contract of insurance which was the consideration of this note, that the insurance company should previously have complied with the provisions of the statutes of this commonwealth."

<sup>15</sup> Deady, J., in Re Comstock (1874) 3 Sawy. 218, Fed. Cas. No. 3078 (claim against bankrupt estate), distinguished the class of cases reviewed under the preceding section.

In Semple v. Bank of British Columbia (1878) 5 Sawy. 88, Fed. Cas. No. 12,659, the same learned judge said: "The defendant, as to this state or any transaction therein, is neither a corporation de jure nor de facto. It has never acquired the right to exist here, or even attempted it. Whatever it may be in the place of its creation, here, at least, it is a mere nullity, a nonentity. The question of mere irregularities in its organization does not arise. For there is not the slightest ground for has been explicitly laid down that the claim of the corporation cannot be enforced by the aid of the principle of estoppel.<sup>18</sup>

General principles and legal analogies seem to be in favor of the theory that statutes which specify the conditions under which a foreign corporation may do business operate so that such a corporation remains without contractual capacity until those conditions have been complied with. If that theory is adopted, these consequences would seem to follow: (1) That each and every contract which it makes before the prescribed conditions have been satisfied is locally ultra vires, even though it is acting within the scope of the powers conferred upon it by the state in which it was organized; and (2) that the right of the corporation to sue upon a contract which it has performed on its own side is predicable or not predicable, according as a domestic corporation is or is not held to be entitled, under similar circumstances, to sue upon an unauthorized contract.

III. Doctrine that the defendant in an action brought by a corporation cannot be estopped from pleading ultra vires.

10. Generally.

The nature and rationale of the doctrine which declares that the principle claiming that it has ever, regularly or otherwise, become clothed with the form or power of a corporation in this state, or attempted to do so. Indeed, it was expressly prohibited from existing or exercising its corporate functions in Oregon, except upon the condition precedent that it shall first comply with the law of the state in the appointment of a resident agent. As well say that any fortuitous assemblage or association of persons not having in any way attempted or intended to become a corporation under the laws of this state might nevertheless, by simply calling themselves such and acting as such, become one de facto."

<sup>18</sup>In Re Comstock (Fed.) supra, Deady, J., remarked "the doctrine of estoppel in pais has never been carried so far as to prevent a party from showing that a corporation, even if it be one de jure, had not the power to do a particular thing, or that it was done in violation of a statute." This remark was repeated by the same judge in Semple v. Bank of British Columbia (1878) 5 Sawy. 93, Fed. Cas. No. 12,659. But this statement was plainly inaccurate in view of the not inconsiderable number of cases in which, even before the date when it was made, the principle of estoppel cannot be invoked for the purpose of obtaining the enforcement of an ultra vires contract have been fully explained under their general aspects in the monograph appended to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment Co. v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. L.R.A.1917A, 737. The remarks there made are equally applicable, mutatis mutandis, to cases in which the corporation is the moving party.

It would seem that a recent Illinois case might have been referred to a broad doctrine of the following tenor: Where a corporation is suing as assignee of a contract which, prior to the assignment, was completely performed by the assignor, the fact that the defendant has received, and is retaining, the benefits of such performance, will not estop him from relying on the plea of ultra vires, if it appears that the corporation could not, without exceeding its powers, have made a similar contract with him. But the decision was rested upon a ground which had relation merely to the special circumstances involved.<sup>1</sup>

It has been argued that, if corporations are allowed to enforce ultra vires contracts, the result will be that they, "no matter how limited their powers, may make themselves omnipotent. They have only to induce persons to contract with them beyond the scope of their powers, and their very usurpations have the effect of conferring powers on them toppel had been applied with relation to ultra vires contracts.

The question whether the defendant was estopped to set up the illegality of the transaction was left undecided in Bank of British Columbia v. Page (1877) 6 Or. 431.

<sup>1</sup>North Ave. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Huber (1915) 270 Ill. 75, 110 N. E. 312. There the plaintiff was organized under a statute which provided that its funds should be lent only to its members, and that no loan should be made in excess of the amount of stock held by the borrowing member. The defendant, who was not one of its members, borrowed money from one Kemper, and executed a note and trust deed as securities. These were purchased by the association, and, upon the default of the defendant, suit was brought for the foreclosure of the mortgage. The court, relying upon the general principle laid down in National Home Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Home Sav. Bank (1899) 181 Ill. 35, 64 L.R.A. 399, 72 Am. St. Rep. 245, 54 N. E. 619 (see § 80 of the monograph appended to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment Co. v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. L.R.A.1917A, 737), held that the suit was not maintainable. "Considering the loan as having been made by Kemper to the Hubers, the association which the legislature have withheld." But the consideration thus adverted to with a somewhat rhetorical emphasis seems to lose most of its force when it is weighed against the interests of stockholders and creditors. If it were carried to its logical conclusions, the obvious consequence would be that a doctrine designed for the protection of shareholders and creditors would frequently operate in such a manner as to inflict the most serious injury upon them. There is, of course, another answer to the argument; viz., that, unless the executive authorities are remiss to an extent which cannot warrantably be assumed, the authority of the state will always be executed for the purpose of preventing any serious abuse of corporate powers.<sup>3</sup> So far as the courts are concerned, the interposition of the government should, it is apprehended, be treated as a certainty,—especially when the right of action is being considered with reference to a violation of the law which, as a result of judicial proceedings, has become a matter of public record.

11. Illustrative cases.

The cases in which the doctrine of estoppel has been explicitly rejected, and those which are upon the facts antagonistic to it, are tabulated below with reference to the particular classes of contracts which were under review. For further information regarding these cases the practitioner is referred to the review of the decisions in each jurisdiction. See subtitle V., infra.<sup>1</sup> had no more authority to purchase it than it would have had to make it in the first instance. The power of the association in loaning its money was expressly limited by the statute to making loans to its members only, and this excluded the power to purchase notes of persons not members of the association. The attempted purchase of the note and trust deed was therefore unauthorized and ultra vires." The special contention put forward by counsel for the plaintiff, viz., "that the loan was made by Kemper, and that by the purchase of it from him the equitable title to it passed to the association, that the legal title remained in Kemper in trust for the use and benefit of the association, and said association had a right to have the trust deed foreclosed by Kemper as such trustee, and for its use,"—was rejected.

<sup>2</sup> Montgomery v. Montgomery & W. Pl. Road Co. (1857) 31 Ala. 76.

<sup>3</sup> Bond v. Terrell Cotton & Woolen Mfg. Co. (1891) 82 Tex. 309, 18 S. W. 691, where the statement in the Alabama case was criticized from this point of view.

1 Issue of stock.

Clark v. Turner (1884) 73 Ga. 1 (stock issued beyond amount authorized); Simpson v. Greenfield Bldg. & Sav. Asso. (1882) 38 Ohio St. 349 (loan on shares held by borrower in contravention of expressly prohibitory provision limiting the number to be issued to one person).

Guaranty of certain dividend on stock.

Memphis Grain Elevator Co. v. Memphis & C. R. Co. (1885) 85 Tenn. 703, 4 Am. St. Rep. 798, 5 S. W. 52 (guaranty given to induce another company to take stock).

Conveyance of real property.

Wilks v. Georgia P. R. Co. (1885) 79 Ala. 180 (suit for specific performance of contract to convey interests in land which the plaintiff was not authorized to acquire). See also Hillsdale College v. Rideout (1890) 82 Mich. 94, 46 N. W. 373, the actual L.R.A.1917B.

purport of which is discussed in § 38a, infra.

Grant of privilege with respect to real property.

Hamilton & R. Hydraulic Co. v. Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. (1876) 29 Ohio St. 341.

Purchase of stock of another corporation.

Valley R. Co. v. Lake Erie Iron Co. (1888) 46 Ohio St. 44, 1 L.R.A. 412, 18 N. E. 488 (provision infringed was expressly prohibitory, but contract was explicitly designated as "ultra vires"); Buckeye Marble & F. Co. v. Harvey (1892) 92 Tenn. 115, 18 L.R.A. 252, 36 Am. St. Rep. 71, 20 S. W. 427.

Purchase of choses in action.

Salmon River Min. & Smelting Co. v. Dunn (1882) 2 Idaho, 26, 3 Pac. 911 (a case of somewhat doubtful import; see § 29, infra).

Purchase of other kinds of personal property.

Ehrman v. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. (1880) 35 Ohio St. 324 (purchase of assets of another corporation; see further in review of Ohio decisions, § 46, infra).

Lending of money on the security of a mortgage.

Waddill v. Alabama & T. River R. Co. (1859) 35 Ala. 323; Chambers v. Falkner (1880) 65 Ala. 448; Free Home Bldg. Loan & Homestead Asso. v. Edwards (1906) 223 Ill. 128, 79 N. E. 64; North Ave. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Huber (1915) 270 Ill. 75, 110 N. E. 312 (for the special point involved in this case, see § 10, note 1, supra); CALUMET & C. CANAL & DOCK Co. v. CONKLING, ante, 814; Fowler v. Scully (1872) 72 Pa. 456. See also Elder v. First Nat. Bank (1873) 12 Kan. 238, the actual scope of which is stated in the review of the Kansas cases in § 33, infra. In Thompson on Corporations, 1st ed. vol. 4, § 5712, we find the following characteristically vigor-

IV. Doctrine that the defendant in an action brought by a corporation may be estopped from pleading ultra vires.

12. Generally.

An examination of the cases reviewed in subtitle V., infra, shows that the doctrine under which a person who has received the benefits of an ultra vires ous expression of opinion: "These decisions which upheld the rascally borrower in keeping the money which he had borrowed from the corporation, on the ground that the corporation had no power to lend it,—the very reason why he ought to be compelled to restore it,—form strange blots upon the pages of American jurisprudence." It would seem that the severa indignatio which prompted this criticism must have diverted the learned author's attention from the fact that the cases criticized (viz., those cited above and in the following paragraph) merely decided that no action was maintainable upon the contract itself, and that the courts did not deny the right of the borrower to maintain an action in disaffirmance of the contract.

Lending of money on other kinds of security.

Grand Lodge v. Waddill (1860) 36 Ala. 313; Mercantile Trust Co. v. Kastor (1916) 273 Ill. 332, 112 N. E. 988; Farmington Sav. Bank v. Fall (1880) 71 Me. 49 (as to the precise purport of this decision, see review of Maine cases in § 36, infra); New York Firemen Ins. Co. v. Ely (1824) 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 678 (loan not made on any of the kinds of security prescribed); Life & F. Ins. Co. v. Mechanic F. Ins. Co. (1831) 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 31; Bank of Cadiz v. Slemmons (1877) 34 Ohio St. 142, 32 Am. Rep. 364 (no estoppel against setting up illegality of loan so far as the excessive interest reserved was concerned).

Execution of bonds, notes, etc.

Smith v. Alabama L. Ins. & T. Co. (1843) 4 Ala. 558; Montgomery v. Montgomery & W. Pl. Road Co. (1857) 31 Ala. 76; Swift v. Beers (1846) 3 Denio (N. Y.) 70 (post note issued by bank in violation of expressly prohibitory provision); Niagara County Bank v. Baker (1864) 15 Ohio St. 69 (usurious instrument expressly declared by the regulating statute to be "void").

Discounting of negotiable instruments.

Orr v. Lacey (1846) 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 230 (rate of interest expressly prohibited was charged); New York Firemen Ins. Co. v. Ely (1825) 5 Conn. 560, 13 Am. Dec. 100 (no power to discount); Seneca County Bank v. Lamb (1858) 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 595 (note discounted at rate exceeding that authorized); Bank of Salina v. Alvord (1865) 31 N. Y. 473 (rate of interest expressly prohibited was charged); Bank of Chillicothe v. Swayne (1838) 8 Ohio, 257, 32 Am. Dec. 707 (rate of interest expressly contract is estopped from raising the defense of invalidity in an action brought upon the contract by the corporation is accepted in all the jurisdictions in which the corresponding doctrine is applied for the purpose of imposing liability upon the corporation. It is clear, in fact, that the former doctrine is the necessary complement of the latter. General prohibited was charged); Vanatta v. State Bank (1858) 9 Ohio St. 27 (note discounted was one of which the negotiability had not been restricted by special indorsement).

In the following cases it was held that no action could be maintained on a promissory note discounted in violation of an expressly prohibitory clause of the New York Restraining Act: Utica Ins. Co. v. Scott (1821) 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 1, reversed in (1826) 8 Cow. 709; New York Firemen Ins. Co. v. Sturges (1824) 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 664; Utica Ins. Co. v. Kip (1827) 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 20; Beach v. Fulton Bank (1829) 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 573, affirming (1829) 1 Paige, 429; Fulton Bank v. Benedict (1829) 1 Hall (N. Y.) 480; Utica Ins. Co. v. Bloodgood (1830) 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 652; Pennington v. Townsend (1831) 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 276; Green v. Seymour (1846) 3 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 285. The foregoing decisions were all anterior to the adoption of the doctrine of estoppel in New York, and were rendered during a period when, so far as appears from the reports, expressly prohibited contracts, no less than those which were prohibited merely by implication, were regarded as belonging to the ultra vires category. See § 44, infra. For similar rulings made with regard to the same statute since the doctrine of estoppel was introduced and held to be operative merely in respect of impliedly prohibited contracts, see Pratt v. Short (1880) 79 N. Y. 437, 35 Am. Rep. 531, affirming (1877) 53 How. Pr. 506, and Pratt v. Eaton (1882) 79 N. Y. 449, reversing (1879) 18 Hun, 293.

Purchase of negotiable instruments.

Straus v. Eagle Ins. Co. (1855) 5 Ohio St. 59. See also the case cited under the head of "Agency," infra.

Hiring of ships.

Harriman v. First Bryan Baptist Church (1879) 63 Ga. 186, 36 Am. Rep. 117.

Contract as to boomage of logs.

Bangor Boom Corp. v. Whitney (1848) 29 Me. 123 (as to precise purport of this decision, see review of Maine cases in § 36, infra).

Agency.

In Westinghouse Mach. Co. v. Wilkinson (1885) 79 Ala. 312, the court thus stated its conclusions: "The power to manufacture and repair machinery, coupled with a prohibition against the creation of debts except in a mode particularly specified, does not confer by implication the power to act as agent in making sales of machinery statements regarding the applicability of the principle of estoppel, irrespective of whether the action is brought by or against the corporation, are not uncommon in the reports.<sup>1</sup>

13. Illustrative cases.

The cases which either proceed explicitly upon the doctrine of estoppel, or are deemed to be in harmony with it, manufactured by others, and of taking and indorsing notes executed for the purchase money."

Performance of services.

Rutland & B. R. Co. v. Proctor (1856) 29 Vt. 93 (a case of somewhat dubious scope and purport; see review of Vermont cases in § 54, infra).

Guaranty and similar contracts for the benefit of third persons.

Fulton Bank v. Benedict (1829) 1 Hall (N. Y.) 480 (company purchasing note with knowledge that it was given for accommodation not entitled to maintain an action upon it); Madison, W. & M. Pl. Road Co. v. Watertown & P. Pl. Road Co. (1858) 7 Wis. 59 (note that this case illustrates the earlier not the later, doctrine in Wisconsin; for the precise scope of the decision, see review in § 55, infra).

<sup>1</sup> See, for example Whitney Arms Co. v. Barlow (1875) 63 N. Y. 70, 20 Am. Rep. 504; Alexandria, A. & F. S. R. Co. v. Johnson (1897) 58 Kan. 175, 183, 48 Pac. 847; Bond v. Terrell Cotton & Woolen Mfg. Co. (1891) 82 Tex. 309, 18 S. W. 691.

1 Issue of stock.

Meholin v. Carlson (1910) 17 Idaho, 742, 134 Am. St. Rep. 286, 107 Pac. 755 (action on note given for purchase price); Keystone L. Ins. Co. v. Von Schlemmer (1906) 122 La. 280, 47 So. 606 (action on subscription for stock).

Conveyance of real property.

Lauder v. Peoria Agri. & Trotting Soc. (1897) 71 Ill. App. 475 (action for price of land).

Other contracts with regard to real property.

Shelby v. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. (1892) 143 Ill. 365, 32 N. E. 438, affirming (1892) 42 Ill. App. 339 (defendant agreed to maintain dams on river running through land sold to railway company); Hamilton & R. Hydraulic Co. v. Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. (1876) 29 Ohio St. 341 (use of property in which the plaintiff had an easement; see review of Ohio cases in § 46, infra).

Sale of corporate business.

Bowers v. Ocean Acci. & Guarantee Corp. (1906) 110 App. Div. 691, 97 N. Y. Supp. 485, affirmed in (1907) 187 N. Y. 561, 80 N. E. 1105 (plaintiff, as receiver of guaranty corporation which had transferred its assets to the defendant under a contract L.R.A.1917B.

are tabulated below under heads indicative of the various descriptions of contracts which were involved.<sup>1</sup>

V. Review of cases decided in each jurisdiction.

14. Introductory.

The historical review of the cases discussed in this subtitle is designed to embracing a stipulation providing that it should be paid a commission on every premium which accrued in respect of each policy then in force, was held to be entitled to enforce this stipulation).

Sales of other personal property.

Raphael Weill & Co. v. Crittenden (1903) 139 Cal. 488, 73 Pac. 238; Francis v. Western Screen Co. (1913) 22 Cal. App. 32, 133 Pac. 327; Standard Sewing Mach. Co. v. Frame (1900) 2 Penn. (Del.) 430, 48 Atl. 188 ("lease and sale" contract); Cleveland Paper Co. v. Courier Co. (1887) 67 Mich. 158, 34 N. W. 556; Whitney Arms Co. v. Barlow (1875) 63 N. Y. 62, 20 Am. Rep. 504; Booth Bros. v. Baird (1903) 83 App. Div. 495, 82 N. Y. Supp. 432; Bowers v. Ocean Acci. & Guarantee Corp. (1906) 110 App. Div. 691, 97 N. Y. Supp. 485, affirmed in (1907) 187 N. Y. 561, 80 N. E. 1105 (action to recover consideration stipulated to be paid for the sale of the good will of a company's business).

Lease of real property.

Starin v. Edson (1889) 112 N. Y. 206, 19 N. E. 670, cited in Coit v. Grand Rapids (1898) 115 Mich. 493, 73 N. W. 811; Bath Gaslight Co. v. Claffy (1896) 151 N. Y. 24, 36 L.R.A. 664, 45 N. E. 390 (lease of property and franchises of quasi public corporation).

Leases of personal property.

White River, L. & W. R. Co. v. Star Ranch & Land Co. (1905) 77 Ark. 128, 91 S. W. 14.

Purchase of stock of another corporation.

Nebraska Shirt Co. v. Horton (1903) 3 Neb. (Unof.) 888, 93 N. W. 225.

Purchase of other personal property.

Neilsville Bank v. Tuthill (1886) 4 Dak. 295, 30 N. W. 154 (promissory note); Voris v. Star City Bldg. & L. Asso. (1898) 20 Ind. App. 643, 50 N. E. 779 (school warrants).

In Black v. First Nat. Bank (1903) 96 Md. 399, 54 Atl. 88, the contract by which the plaintiff bank acquired the note on which the action was brought was held to be a discount, and therefore not ultra vires; but the court said that, even if the transaction had been a sale, and consequently ultra vires, the recovery could have been had. It should be observed that the Maryland decisions are extremely conflicting. See review in § 86 of the monograph appended to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment show the position which the various courts have taken with respect to the doctrine of estoppel during the period within which their reported decisions have been rendered. The cases cited include not only those in which the doctrine has been explicitly approved or disapproved, but also those in which it was not referred to in terms, but which, having regard to the facts involved, are either consistent or inconsistent with it. The summaries would, it is obvious, be seriously defective if the cases belonging to the latter category were omitted. The decisions in some of the American states are extremely conflicting, but it may be stated that, wherever a distinct change of views has occurred, it has nearly always been in the direction of an acceptance of the doctrine. The recent Illinois cases constitute a notable exception to this rule.

The summaries contained in the following sections should, of course, be read in connection with the corresponding ones in the monograph relating to actions against corporations.

15. England.

So far as regards contracts which are ultra vires in the strict sense of the term, that is to say, contracts which cannot be

Co. v. Northwestern Loan & T. Co. L.R.A. 1917A, 737.

Lending of money on mortgage.

Leon v. Citizens' Bldg. & L. Asso. (1912) 14 Ariz. 294, 127 Pac. 721, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 1151; Grangers' Business Asso. v. Clark (1885) 67 Cal. 634, 8 Pac. 445; Camp v. Land (1898) 122 Cal. 167, 54 Pac. 839; Bay City Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Broad (1902) 136 Cal. 525, 69 Pac. 225; Huter v. Union Trust Co. (1899) 153 Ind. 204, 54 N. E. 755; Benton County Sav. Bank v. Boddicker (1898) 105 Iowa, 567, 45 L.R.A. 321, 67 Am. St. Rep. 310, 75 N. W. 632; Fifth Nat. Bank v. Pierce (1898) 117 Mich. 376, 75 N. W. 1058; Third Ave. Sav. Bank v. Dimock (1873) 24 N. J. Eq. 26 (a case of doubtful purport; see review of New Jersey cases in § 43, infra); Washington L. Ins. Co. v. Clason (1900) 162 N. Y. 309, 56 N. E. 755, affirming (1897) 16 App. Div. 434, 45 N. Y. Supp. 27.

In Provident Loan & Bldg. Asso. v. Carter (1900) 107 Wis. 383, 83 N. W. 655, an estoppel was predicated specially upon the fact that the defendant, a member of the corporation, had assented to the unauthorized transaction with full knowledge of its character. See also Leahy v. National Bldg. & L. Asso. (1898) 100 Wis. 555, 69 Am. St. Rep. 945, 76 N. W. 625.

In Noah v. German-American Bldg. Asso. (1903) 31 Ind. App. 504, 68 N. E. 615, the following statement in Thompson on Corporations, 1st ed. vol. 5, § 6040, was quoted with approval: "The doctrine now is that the corporation thus making the loan in good faith may recover upon or enforce the security, and that the borrower will be estopped by his act of receiving the loan and keeping the money, from setting up that the corporation had no power to make it."

Lending of money on other kind of security.

Meholin v. Carlson (1910) 17 Idaho, 742, 134 Am. St. Rep. 286, 107 Pac. 755 (shares of corporation itself were accepted as collateral security); Poock v. Lafayette Bldg. Asso. (1890) 71 Ind. 357 (action on note); Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Robinson (1898) 59 Kan. 777, 53 Pac. 762 (loan on security of L.R.A.1917B.

money to be received under contract for erection of government building); Johnson v. Mason Lodge, I. O. O. F. (1899) 106 Ky. 838, 51 S. W. 620 (action on note); Central Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Lampson (1895) 60 Minn. 422, 62 N. W. 544 (action on note); Rome Sav. Bank v. Kramer (1884) 32 Hun (N. Y.) 270, affirmed in (1886) 102 N. Y. 331, 6 N. E. 682 (action on note); Fifth Ave. Bank v. Forty-second Street & G. Street Ferry R. Co. (1892) 63 Hun, 629, 44 N. Y. S. R. 379, 17 N. Y. Supp. 826, affirmed in (1893) 137 N. Y. 231, 19 L.R.A. 331, 33 Am. St. Rep. 712, 33 N. E. 378 (but question of estoppel was not alluded to) (pledge of stock of another corporation); Bond v. Terrell Cotton & Woolen Mfg. Co. (1891) 82 Tex. 309, 18 S. W. 691 (action on note); Smith v. White (1893) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 25 S. W. 809 (action on note); Head v. Cleburne Bldg. & L. Asso. (1893) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 25 S. W. 810 (action on note); Logan v. Texas Bldg. & L. Asso. (1894) 8 Tex. Civ. App. 490, 28 S. W. 141 (action on note); Farmers' Bank v. Burchard (1860) 33 Vt. 346 (action on note; as to precise scope of this case, see review of Vermont cases in § 54, infra).

Lending of money without security.

Steam Nav. Co. v. Weed (1863) 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 378.

Discounting of negotiable instrument.

Allen v. Freedman's Sav. & T. Co. (1874) 14 Fla. 428; United German Bank v. Katz (1881) 57 Md. 141; Commercial Bank v. Nolan (1843) 7 How. (Miss.) 508 (a case of somewhat doubtful import; see review of Mississippi cases in § 40, infra); Allen v. First Nat. Bank (1872) 23 Ohio St. 97 (a case of which the precise rationale is somewhat doubtful; see review of Ohio cases in § 46, infra); Mutual Trust Co. v. Stern (1912) 235 Pa. 202, 83 Atl. 614; Smith v. White (1893) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 25 S. W. 809; Keys v. Cleburne Bldg. & L. Asso. (1893) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 25 S. W. 809; Head v. Cleburne Bldg. & L. Asso. (1893) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 25 S. W. 810.

In Atlantic State Bank v. Savery (1880)

entered into under any circumstances whatever, the question whether the principle of estoppel may operate so as to preclude the defendant in an action brought by the corporation from raising the plea of invalidity has, it seems, never been discussed by the English courts. But, having regard to the definite views which, in dealing with actions against corporations, they have expressed concerning the absolutely void quality of such contracts (see §§ 15 and 16 of the monograph appended to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment Co. v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. L.R.A.1917A, 737), there can be doubt that this question will be answered in the negative whenever it is presented. In one case, however, we find an explicit statement which could not have been made if the judge from whom it proceeded had not assumed that the circumstance of the defendant's having received the benefits of the contract did not create any estoppel.<sup>1</sup>

The decisions involving contracts which were ultra vires in the secondary sense, that they were void, unless confirmed by a prescribed proportion of the shareholders, are apparently inconsistent. In one case where it was sought to charge the allottees of shares issued in pursuance of an amalgamation agreement with the liability of contributories in winding-up proceedings, the court apparently assumed that the transaction was as absolutely void as if it had been ultra vires in the strict sense of the term,—a position which necessarily required the conclusion that the principle

82 N. Y. 291, where the note sued upon had been purchased by the plaintiff bank at a greater discount than lawful interest, this fact was held not to invalidate its title. But the court also said: "The transaction out of which the cause of action became the property of the plaintiff was not forbidden. It was not improper in itself, and if it was not within the exact letter of the law from which the plaintiff derived its existence, the fault is one which should give no advantage to the defendants."

Indorsement of negotiable instrument.

Homestead Bank v. Wood (1892; C. P.) 1 Misc. 146, 20 N. Y. Supp. 640, reversing (1891) 18 N. Y. Supp. 718.

Insurance of life or property.

Bankers' Mut. Casualty Co. v. First Nat. Bank (1906) 131 Iowa, 456, 108 N. W. 1046 (action on note given for premium); Rochester Ins. Co. v. Martin (1868) 13 Minn. 59, Gil. 54 (action on note given for premium).

Agency.

Hall Mfg. Co. v. American R. Supply Co. (1882) 48 Mich. 331, 12 N. W. 205; Johnson v. Mason Lodge, I. O. O. F. (1899) 106 Ky. 838, 51 S. W. 620.

Partnership.

Cameron v. First Nat. Bank (1896) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 34 S. W. 178, affirming (1893) 4 Tex. Civ. App. 309, 23 S. W. 334 (see review of Texas cases in § 52, infra).

Contract made with reference to the conduct of an unauthorized business.

Louis Bletz & Co. v. Bank of Kentucky (1900) 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1554, 55 S. W. 697 (see review of Kentucky cases in § 34, infra).

Contracts for construction work.

Homestead Bank v. Wood (1892) 1 Misc. 145, 20 N. Y. Supp. 640. L.R.A.1917B.

Contract conferring exclusive right to sell an article.

Hall Mfg. Co. v. American R. Supply Co. (1882) 48 Mich. 331, 12 N. W. 205.

Stipulation reserving royalties.

Newburg Petroleum Co. v. Weare (1875) 27 Ohio St. 343 (for further information about this case, see review of Ohio decisions in § 46, infra).

Contracts to assist in the construction of railroad.

Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Derkes (1885) 103 Ind. 520, 3 N. E. 239 (contract to purchase and pay for plaintiff's right of way).

Guaranty and similar contracts.

Dunbar v. Cazort & M. Co. (1910) 96 Ark. 308, 131 S. W. 698 (suretyship); Alexandria, A. & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Johnson (1897) 58 Kan. 175, 48 Pac. 847 (guaranty); St. Louis Drug Co. v. Robinson (1888) 10 Mo. App. 588 (indorsement of note for accommodation of maker); H. Koehler & Co. v. Reinheimer (1898) 26 App. Div. 1, 49 N. Y. Supp. 755.

<sup>1</sup>In The Royal Bank of India's Case (1869; C. A.) L. R. 4 Ch. (Eng.) 252, while it was held that, as incidental to the power to advance money on a deposit of shares of stock, a corporation might do such acts as were reasonable and proper for making the security available, it was conceded that a purchase of stock of another company as a speculation would have been ultra vires, and, despite acts of ownership exercised by the company, the shares might be repudiated at any time. Sir C. J. Selwyn, L. J., said (p. 261): "If it could have been shown that it was an act absolutely prohibited by their memorandum or articles of association, then, no doubt, a different question would have arisen; the act would have been ultra vires and incapable of confirmation or ratification." This remark was one of the authorities relied upon in California Nat. Bank v. Kennedy (1896) 167 U. S. 362, 369, 42 L. ed. 198, 201, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 831.

of estoppel could not be invoked.<sup>2</sup> But other cases proceed upon the theory that an estoppel may be created against alleging the invalidity of a transaction of this character.<sup>3</sup>

In a case where the trustees of a friendly society were held by the court of appeal to be entitled to prove against the estate of a joint maker of a note given for money borrowed from the society by one of the other makers, the decision proceeded upon the ground that the transaction was not illegal, but merely unauthorized on the part of the directors.<sup>4</sup> That the theory entertained concerning the nature of the transaction

<sup>2</sup> Stace's Case (1869) L. R. 4 Ch. (Eng.) 682, 21 L. T. N. S. 182, 17 Week. Rep. 751. There the corporation was empowered by its articles of association to amalgamate with another if the transaction was confirmed by a certain majority of the stockholders at an extraordinary meeting. The amalgamation, in pursuance of which fully paid-up shares had been allotted to Stace and Worth, had never been so confirmed. It was sought to hold them liable on the ground that they had attended several meetings of the amalgamated company, and acted as directors of it, and in that capacity signed policies. But this contention did not prevail, because "these acts were done in conformity with and in pursuance of the void transactions." Clinch v. Financial Corp. (1868) L. R. 4 Ch. (Eng.) 117, 38 L. J. Ch. N. S. 1, 19 L. T. N. S. 334, 17 Week. Rep. 84, was distinguished on the ground that it involved an independent agreement.

In Klenck v. East India Co. (1888) 16 Sc. Sess. Cas. 4th series, 277, 26 Scot. L. R. 261, an allottee was held to be entitled to have his name deleted from the register.

<sup>3</sup> In Bank of Hindustan v. Alison (1870) L. R. 6 C. P. (Eng.) 54, affirmed by the Exchequer Chamber (see p. 222), where the issue of shares in pursuance of an amalgamation agreement was invalid as being in violation of a clause in the articles of association which declared that no additional shares could be issued except by consent of an extraordinary meeting, it was held that, upon the facts before the court, the defendant had not estopped himself by his conduct from denying that he was a shareholder. Bovill, Ch. J., said: "Looking, however, to all the circumstances, it is clear to my mind that all that was done, or omitted to be done, on either side, was the result of mere mistake. There was no misleading of the plaintiffs by the defendant into a belief of the existence of a state of facts which did not exist. Both parties were equally mistaken in supposing that a complete and legal amalgamation had taken place. If either party induced a belief in the mind of the other that the two banks had been properly amalgamated, it was the plaintiffs rather than the defendant. The plaintiffs appear to have acted on their own view of the law and the facts, and not upon any representation or conduct of the defendants." Two earlier cases were distinguished by the learned judge. In Hull Flax & Cotton Mill Co. v. Wellesley (1860) 6 Hurlst. & N. (Eng.) 38, 30 L. J. Exch. N. S. 5, where a company authorized to issue, with consent of a general meeting L.R.A.1917B.

of the shareholders, additional shares of £100 each, allotted to the defendant a portion of an issue of £50 shares, the court held that the defendant was estopped from denying that he was a shareholder,—first, because he had executed the deed of settlement, which authorized the creation of the shares, and, secondly, because he had for five years constantly received a dividend on the shares which he held. Under these circumstances, having bound himself by his execution of the deed, and having accepted a benefit, it was properly held that he had estopped himself from denying that he was a holder of valid shares. In Re New Zealand Bkg. Corp. (1868) L. R. 3 Ch. (Eng.) 131, 18 L. T. N. S. 2, 16 Week. Rep. 381, the directors of a company made an unauthorized issue of additional shares beyond their capital. They afterwards called general meetings at which resolutions were passed to increase the capital. Held, that the issue of the additional shares, although originally ultra vires, was confirmed by the resolutions, and that the allottees of those shares were bound by the resolutions, and were rightly placed on the list of contributories in the winding-up of the company. For other phases of the case of the Bank of Hindustan, see Imperial Bank v. Bank of Hindustan (1868) L. R. 6 Eq. (Eng.) 91, 16 Week. Rep. 1107 (where a decree was pronounced by which the attempted amalgamation was set aside); and Campbell's Case (1873) 9 Ch. (Eng.) 1, 42 L. J. Ch. N. S. 771, 29 L. T. N. S. 519, 22 Week. Rep. 113.

<sup>4</sup> Re Coltman (1881; C. A.) L. R. 19 Ch. Div. (Eng.) 64. Brett, L. J., said: "The only objection to this loan is that it was made without authority. But it does not seem to me that the borrower can set up as a defense to an action that the person who lent him the money, and to whom he has made a promise to repay that money, had no authority to lend it to him. That is an objection which it is not for him to take. The contract is, if you will lend me so much money, I will pay you that money back on demand. The consideration is the handing over the money. That is not illegal. The promise to pay back money which you have borrowed is not illegal. The money was not borrowed for any illegal purpose, in order to do an illegal or immoral thing, and I cannot see that there is anything illegal in the contract. The only objection is that those who made the contract with the debtor had no authority to make it, and that is an objection which he cannot take."

was that it was invalid merely as being beyond the powers of the trustees of the society, and not as being beyond the powers of the society itself, is apparent from the language used both by Jessel, M. R., and Brett, L. J. The latter explicitly distinguished the case under review from one in which the House of Lords had "decided that if the directors of a company assume to make a contract on the part of a company which neither the directors nor the company have authority to make, that contract cannot be enforced against the company; and, moreover, that it is so void from the beginning that it cannot be ratified by the company so as to make them liable."<sup>5</sup> The learned judge emphasized the fact that it had not been there held "that if money had been lent by directors without authority, the money could not have been recovered, or that the borrowers could have set up the defense that those who lent them the money had no authority to do so." Under the circumstances, it was obviously open to argument whether the statutory provision which defined the powers of the trustees with respect to the lending of the society's funds ought not to have been regarded as one which, in spite of its being in terms applicable only to the trustees, was really intended to specify the limits of the powers of the society itself. If the provision had been construed in this sense, it is clear from the English decisions as a whole that the circumstance of the borrower's having received the benefit of the transaction would not have estopped him, the other joint obligor, from raising the plea of ultra vires. But Jessel, M. R., said that he could not "find anything in the act which would prevent all the members from effectually authorizing a loan on such security, though a mere majority could not do so."

In another case the actual point determined was that "in the case of a contract executed before action brought, where it appears that the defendants have received the whole benefit of the consideration for which they bargained, it is [not] an answer to an action of assumpsit by the corporation, that the corporation itself was not originally bound by such contract, the same not having been made under their common seal."<sup>6</sup> This decision and the reasoning upon which it was based are referred to here because the writer wishes to point out that, in spite of the fact that it is obviously not an appropriate precedent with regard to the consequences of the performance of an ultra vires contract, it has sometimes been cited as such by American courts.<sup>7</sup>

16. Federal decisions generally.

The very few authorities that bear upon the subject indicate that, in one point of view, there is an essential similarity between the general doctrine adopted by the Supreme Court of the United States with regard to the right of a corporation to sue upon an ultra vires contract of which the other party has received the benefit, and the doctrine which it has enunciated (see next section) with special reference to the provisions of the statute which defines the powers of national banks. That is to say, the invalidity is considered to be a matter which concerns the government solely, and which cannot be set up as a defense to an action brought by the corporation itself.<sup>1</sup> In the footnote several cases are to sue the corporation, which suit they can never want to sustain. It may possibly be the case that, up to the time of the corporation adopting the contract by performing the stipulations on their part, there was a want of mutuality from the corporation not being compellable to perform their contract; and that the defendants might, during that interval, have the power to retract and insist that their undertaking amounted to a nudum pactum only. But after the adoption of the contract by the corporation by performance on their part, upon general principles of reason the right to set up this defense appears altogether to fail."

<sup>5</sup> Ashbury R. Carriage & Iron Co. v. Riche (1875) L. R. 7 H. L. 653, 2 Eng. Rul. Cas. 304. See § 16 of monograph appended to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment Co. v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. L.R.A. 1917A, 737.

<sup>6</sup> Fishmongers' Co. v. Robertson (1843) 5 Mann. & G. 131, 134 Eng. Reprint, 510. Tindal, Ch. J., delivering the judgment of the court, said: "The defendants, having had the benefit of the performance by the corporation of the several stipulations into which they entered, have received the consideration for their own promise; such promise by them is therefore not nudum pactum; they never can want to sue the corporation upon the contract, in order to enforce the performance of those stipulations which have already been voluntarily performed; and therefore no sound reason can be suggested why they should justify their refusal to perform the stipulations made by them on the ground of inability L.R.A.1917B.

<sup>7</sup> The extract in the preceding note is quoted in Whitney Arms Co. v. Barlow (1875) 63 N. Y. 62, 20 Am. Rep. 504. See § 5, supra.

<sup>1</sup> In Jones v. New York Guaranty & Indemnity Co. (1879) 101 U. S. 622, 25 L. ed. 1030, where the validity of a mortgage cited in which this doctrine was recognized by the inferior Federal courts.<sup>3</sup>

Since the result of treating this doctrine as the controlling factor in any given case is to render it unnecessary and superfluous to consider whether the which had been taken by the guaranty company from a company which subsequently became insolvent was attacked by the unsecured creditors of the latter company, the court laid it down that, "if the [mortgage] here in question be ultra vires, no one can take advantage of the defect of power involved but the state. As to all other parties, it must be held valid, and may be enforced accordingly." The authorities cited were Silver Lake Bank v. North (1816) 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 370, and Union Nat. Bank v. Matthews (1878) 98 U. S. 621, 25 L. ed. 188.

That the doctrine thus stated was held by the court at the time when it decided the earlier case of Fleckner v. Bank of United States (1823) 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 338, 5 L. ed. 631, may perhaps be inferred from its remark that, even if the plaintiff bank had violated a certain provision of its charter by the particular transaction under review, yet "the act has not pronounced that such a violation makes the transaction or contract ipso facto void; but has punished it by a specific penalty of treble the value. It would therefore remain to be shown how, if the bank had a general right to discount notes, a contract not made void by the act itself could, on this account, be avoided by a party to the original contract, who was not a party to the subsequent transfer."

<sup>3</sup>In Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Wilcox (1878) 8 Biss. 203, Fed. Cas. No. 9,980, an action against the guarantor of a note given by the maker for a loan received from a life insurance company was held to be maintainable. After referring to some of the earlier New York cases which were relied upon by the defendant, Blodgett, J., continued thus: "I think the settled rule now is that the question of how this company shall invest its funds is a question between itself and the sovereignty that created it, and not a question between the borrowers and the company; in other words, that it does not lie in the mouth of this defendant to charge that this security is void. The money was advanced upon the faith of this security. But whether the company had the power to take this security or not is a question the defendant has no right to raise. . . . Any other rule than this would make the policy holders and parties interested in the funds of this company entirely remediless. Suppose that the directors of this corporation, induced by the larger rate of interest which is usually proffered in the western states, or outside of New York, had, instead of loaning their money upon New York state security, seem fit to invest largely in securities in the state of Illinois, would the defendant is estopped from raising the defense of ultra vires for the reason that he has accepted the benefits of the transaction, it is not surprising that, so far as regards the cases in which a corporation was the moving party, that question stockholders have to lose it all simply because their directors had violated the charter? It would seem to me a very harsh rule to say that the parties interested in this fund should be the losers simply from this violation of the company's charter,—a question simply between the sovereignty and the corporation itself."

In Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Green Bay & M. R. Co. (1882) 11 Biss. 334, 12 Fed. 773, where an action for damages to land was held to be maintainable, Harlan, J., rejected the contention of counsel that the manufacturing and boom companies in question "could not lawfully acquire land for the purpose of maintaining and cultivating cranberry vines, and the court, having ruled in the Kelly Case [not officially reported; see Fed. Cas. No. 2,492] that the law would not aid the corporation to acquire land, the title to which it could not lawfully take and hold, must now, to be consistent, rule that petitioning corporations, having, as is claimed, acquired title to land for purposes foreign to the object of their creation, cannot recover damages for injuries to such land arising from the negligence of the receiver and his agents engaged in the operation of the railroad." The learned judge summed up his opinion in its statement: "If injury is done to real estate conveyed to and held by a corporation, the party by whose negligence such injury is caused cannot be heard to say, in a collateral proceeding, and by way of defense to a suit for damages, that the corporation was not permitted by its charter to acquire title to the property, or that it had acquired it for purposes unauthorized by law. In considering this question the court has not deemed it necessary to determine whether these manufacturing and boom corporations exceeded their authority in acquiring title to cranberry marsh lands valuable only or chiefly for the cultivation of cranberry vines." Two of the authorities cited were decisions of the Supreme Court regarding national banks.

In Maxwell v. Akin (1898) 89 Fed. 178, where an action brought by a receiver to collect certain subscriptions to the stock of the Portland Guaranty Company was held to be maintainable, the court argued thus: "These stockholders are estopped to deny liability. They have assumed, through their organization, the authority to do what has been done. The corporation is in fact the stockholders acting together as an association. If, as individuals, they had guaranteed the notes of another, and by that means had induced third persons to invest their money in such obligations, an attempt to escape the liashould have been very seldom alluded to.<sup>3</sup>

17. Federal decisions with regard to national banks.

In some of the provisions of the congressional statutes by which the powers of national banks are defined (Act of June 3, 1864; U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 5136, et seq., Comp. Stat. 1913, §§ 9661, et seq.) the prohibition against engaging in certain transactions is express; in others it is a matter of implication. But the doctrine now established with respect to both kinds of provisions is that the defendant in an action brought by a national bank upon a contract is not entitled to avail himself of the defense that it is void as constituting a violation of the act, the theory being that such a violation is a matter of which only the Federal authorities can take advantage. In other words, it is held that, "where the provisions of the National Banking Act prohibit certain acts by banks or their officers, without imposing any penalty of forfeiture applicable to particular transactions which have been executed, their validity can be questioned only by the United States, and not by private parties."<sup>1</sup> The leading case with regard to this doctrine is one in which the Supreme Court dissolved an injunction which had been granted by a Missouri judge to restrain the sale of real property under a trust deed which had been assigned to a bank as a security for a loan made at the time of the assignment. The injunction had been granted upon the ground that, as the transaction was a loan on real estate security, it contravened the implied prohibition of the clause of the statute which authorizes the loan of money on personal security (§ 5136). But the Supreme Court took the position that, even if it should be bility thus assumed would not be thought of. There is no reason in morals or law why their obligations assumed through corporate action should not be equally binding. If they have assumed unwarranted corporate power, it is the state that is injured. It is not for them to take advantage of their own wrong to escape the obligations for which they incorporated themselves, and which they formally assumed, and in consideration of which the holders of these notes and bonds invested their money. . . . It is only where the party repudiating the contract pays for what it has had, and returns the property taken under the invalid agreement, that the other party will be refused relief. . . . The power possessed by the board of directors to levy and collect assessments is vested in the receiver, who may act when the board fails or refuses, as in this case, to do so. The demurrer is overruled."

In Gorrell v. Home L. Ins. Co. (1894) 11 C. C. A. 240, 24 U. S. App. 188, 63 Fed. 371, the plea of ultra vires was held, on demurrer, to be bad in an action brought upon a note discounted by a life insurance company.

See also St. Avit v. Kettle River Co. (1914) 133 C. C. A. 76, 216 Fed. 872, where ultra vires was held not to be available as a defense to an action brought by a municipality to cancel certain bills for construction work performed by the claimant.

In Wallerstein v. Ervin (1901) 50 C. C. A. 129, 112 Fed. 124, affirming (1901) 109 Fed. 135, the question presented for decision was whether Ervin, Page, & Company, which had, in pursuance of an ultra vires agreement, become a partner in a firm whose liabilities were being determined in bankruptcy proceedings, was entitled, as against other creditors, to enforce a claim for money lent to the firm. The grounds upon which this question was answered in the negative were thus stated: "These transactions were, at the time of the adjudication of bankruptcy, fully executed, and the appellant could not avoid the legal consequences of what it had already completely done by showing that in so doing it had overstepped the bounds of its lawful authority. The trustee in bankruptcy did not seek to enforce an ultra vires contract, nor to compel the performance of any of its provisions. He simply insisted that a status which had been created by what had actually occurred should not, at the instance of a party to its creation, and to the prejudice of innocent third parties, be utterly ignored, and we think that in sustaining this insistence the court below was clearly right." From this passage it is clear that the applicability of the principle of estoppel as between the lending and borrowing corporations was not involved. But the court cited, amongst the precedents relied upon, two Pennsylvania cases which proceeded upon that principle.

<sup>2</sup> In Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. Oregonian R. Co. (1888) 130 U. S. 1, 32 L. ed. 837, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 409, reversing (1885) 10 Sawy. 472, 23 Fed. 232, it was held that the partial performance of an ultra vires lease did not create any estoppel against alleging its ultra vires character as a defense to an action for rent accruing subsequently to the repudiation of the contract. This decision was followed in Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. Oregonian R. Co. (1889) 136 U. S. 646, 34 L. ed. 552, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1072, reversing (1886) 27 Fed. 277.

<sup>1</sup> Thompson v. St. Nicholas Nat. Bank (1892) 146 U. S. 240, 36 L. ed. 956, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 66. For a discussion of this case (in which the bank was the defendant), see § 70 of the monograph appended to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment Co. v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. L.R.A.1917A, 737.

conceded that there was such a contra-vention, the consequence insisted upon did not necessarily follow. It was observed that the statute did not declare such a security void, but was silent upon the subject; that, if Congress so meant, it would have been easy to say so; and that it was hardly to be believed that this would not have been done instead of leaving the question to be settled by the uncertain result of litigation and judicial decision.<sup>3</sup> After citing several cases in which a disregard of statutory prohibitions had been held not to vitiate the contracts of parties, but only to authorize actions by the government against them, the court summed up its conclusions as follows: "We cannot believe it was meant that stockholders, and perhaps depositors and other creditors, should be punished and the borrower rewarded, by giving success to this defense whenever the offensive fact shall occur. The impending danger of a judgment of ouster and dissolution was, we think, the check, and none other, contemplated by Congress. That has been always the punishment prescribed for the wanton violation of a charter, and it may be made to follow whenever the proper public authority shall see fit to invoke its application. A private person cannot, directly or indirectly, usurp this function of the government."<sup>3</sup> The application of the doctrine thus expounded manifestly rendered it unnecessary to refer to the juristic effect of the circumstance that the defendant had enjoyed the benefits of the contract. But this circumstance was adverted to as an additional ground for holding the action to be maintainable, for the reason that it raised an estoppel against the interposition of the plea of ultra vires.<sup>4</sup> In this point of view the decision must be regarded as one which committed the court to an adoption of the principle of estoppel, and in fact it has not unfrequently been cited as a precedent for that principle.<sup>5</sup>

In the numerous cases, some anterior and others subsequent to the leading one, the former of the two grounds upon which it was based has usually been

<sup>3</sup> Union Nat. Bank v. Matthews (1878) 98 U. S. 621, 25 L. ed. 188, reversing Matthews v. Skinker (1876) 62 Mo. 329, 21 Am. Rep. 425. Miller, J., dissented on the ground that the statute operated so as to render the transaction "void."

<sup>4</sup> In Logan County Nat. Bank v. Townsend (1890) 139 U. S. 67, 76, 35 L. ed. 107, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 496, Mr. Justice Harlan, speaking of this case, said: "The decision went upon these grounds: that the bank parted with its money in good faith; that the question as to the violation of its charter, by taking title to real estate for purposes unauthorized by law, could be raised only by the government in a direct proceeding for that purpose; and that it was not open to the [original] plaintiff in that suit, who had contracted with the bank, to raise any such question in order to defeat the collection of the amount loaned."

"It is no longer open to controversy that the provisions of the statutes of the United States forbidding the taking of real estate security by a national bank, for a debt coincidentally contracted, do not operate to make the security void, and thus enable the individual who has contracted with the bank to defeat recovery, but simply subjects the bank to be called to account by the government for exceeding its powers." Schuyler Nat. Bank v. Gadsden (1903) 191 U. S. 451, 48 L. ed. 258, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 129.

"Although the statute by clear implication forbids a national bank from making a loan upon real estate, the security is not void, and it cannot be successfully assailed by the debtor or by subsequent mortgagees because the bank was without authority to take it; and the disregard of the provisions of the act of Congress upon that subject only lays the bank open to proceedings by the government for exercising powers not conferred by law." Kerfoot v. Farmers' & M. Bank (1910) 218 U. S. 281, 54 L. ed. 1042, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 14.

In Ripley v. Harris (1872) 3 Biss. 199, Fed. Cas. No. 11,853 (decided a few years before the Matthews Case), the actual ruling was that, when the point that a security is invalid as having been taken in violation of the statute is not made in the pleadings, it will not be acted upon by the court, although disclosed by the proofs. Here the court apparently assumed the contract to be void.

<sup>4</sup> The court quoted the following statement in Sedgwick on Statutory & Constitutional Law, 2d ed. p. 73: "Where it is a simple question of capacity or authority to contract, arising either on a question of regularity of organization or of power conferred by the charter, a party who has had the benefit of the agreement cannot be permitted in an action founded on it to question its validity. It would be in the highest degree inequitable and unjust to permit the defendant to repudiate a contract, the fruits of which he retains."

<sup>5</sup> See, for example, First Nat. Bank v. Gillilan (1880) 72 Mo. 77; Buffalo v. Balcom (1892) 134 N. Y. 532, 32 N. E. 7; Mutual Trust Co. v. Stern (1912) 235 Pa. 202, 83 Atl. 614; Texas Western R. Co. v. Gentry (1888) 69 Tex. 625, 8 S. W. 98; Logan v. Texas Bldg. & L. Asso. (1894) 8 Tex. Civ. App. 490, 28 S. W. 141.

specified as the ratio decidendi. But in none of them has the propriety of applying the principle of estoppel been questioned.<sup>6</sup>

Loans not made on "personal security" (§ 5136, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 9661).

For cases in which money lent on the security of real estate was held to be recoverable, see National Bank v. Whitney (1880) 103 U. S. 99, 26 L. ed. 443; Swope v. Leflingwell (1881) 105 U. S. 3, 26 L. ed. 939; Fortier v. New Orleans Nat. Bank (1884) 112 U. S. 439, 28 L. ed. 764, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 234; Lyons v. Lyons Nat. Bank (1881) 19 Blatchf. 279, 8 Fed. 369.

Purchasing and holding up real estate for purposes not specified by the statute (§ 5137, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 9674).

That the power of a national bank to purchase and hold real estate could not be questioned by a private party was held in Reynolds v. First Nat. Bank (1884) 112 U. S. 405, 28 L. ed. 733, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 213; Brown v. Schleier (1902) 118 Fed. 981, 55 C. C. A. 475 (rent held to be recoverable under a lease alleged to be ultra vires a bank, because it undertook to erect on the demised premises a building which it did not contemplate using "for its immediate accommodation in the transaction of its business," but did intend to rent in part to third parties).

In Kansas Valley Nat. Bank v. Rowell (1873) 2 Dill. 371, Fed. Cas. No. 7,611, the effect of a ruling in a foreclosure suit brought by a bank was merely that the mortgage, being valid only in so far as it seemed a debt previously due, could not be reformed in respect of the future advances stipulated for.

Interest received in excess of the rate authorized (§§ 5197, 5198, Comp. Stat. 1913, §§ 9758, 9759).

In Farmers' & M. Nat. Bank v. Dearing (1875) 91 U. S. 29, 23 L. ed. 196, reversing (1875) 50 N. Y. 659, the precise point determined was that the only effect of accepting a higher rate of interest than that authorized by § 5198 was the forfeiture of the entire interest. The doctrine was applied in Danforth v. National State Bank (1891) 17 L.R.A. 622, 1 C. C. A. 62, 3 U. S. App. 7, 48 Fed. 271; First Nat. Bank v. Garlinghouse (1872) 22 Ohio St. 492, 10 Am. Rep. 751; Bank of Cadiz v. Slemmons (1877) 34 Ohio St. 142, 32 Am. Rep. 364.

For a case in which an action was brought to recover the penalty imposed by § 5198 upon a bank which reserves an excessive rate of interest, see National Bank v. Johnson (1881) 104 U. S. 271, 26 L. ed. 742.

Loans in excess of authorized amount (§ 5200, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 9761).

In Union Gold Min. Co. v. Rocky Mountain Nat. Bank (1877) 96 U. S. 640, 24 L.R.A.1917B.

The objections to which the doctrine explained in the preceding subsection is open are these: (1) that it is in conflict with elementary rule of law that

L. ed. 648, 1 Mor. Min. Rep. 432, the court said: "We do not think that public policy requires, or that Congress intended, that an excess of loans beyond the proportion specified should enable the borrower to avoid the payment of the money actually received by him." Having regard to the ratio decidendi, as shown in the above statement, it is clearly improper to rely on the case as a precedent for the principle of estoppel, as, for example, in Atlantic State Bank v. Savery (1880) 82 N. Y. 291.

In Stewart v. National Union Bank (1869) 2 Abb. (U. S.) 424, Fed. Cas. No. 13,435, where a creditors' bill was dismissed as to the defendant bank, Giles, J., remarked that certain loans made by the three banks in question, although they were in excess of the amount allowed by the act, were not void, and that if the banks were then in court seeking to recover the same, he would have great difficulty in permitting the borrowers, or anyone claiming through them, to set up the defense of ultra vires. The learned judge did not state the grounds upon which this opinion was based, and he may or may not have had in mind the doctrine afterwards propounded by the Supreme Court. The principle upon which the decision was actually based was "that, where the contracts are executed, even if the court would not have enforced them, the court will leave the parties where it finds them, giving aid or relief to neither."

The two cases above cited are in harmony with Shoemaker v. National Bank (1869) 2 Abb. (U. S.) 416, Fed. Cas. No. 12,801; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Wilcox (1878) 8 Biss. 203, Fed. Cas. No. 9,980; Wyman v. Citizens' Nat. Bank (1887) 29 Fed. 734; The Seattle (1909) 95 C. C. A. 480, 170 Fed. 284.

Loans made "on the security of the share" of the bank itself (§ 5201, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 9762).

In First Nat. Bank v. Stewart (1882) 107 U. S. 676, 27 L. ed. 592, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 778, an action brought to recover the proceeds of shares which had been sold by the bank at the expiration of the time fixed for repayment of the loan for which they had been deposited as collateral security was held not to be maintainable for reasons thus stated: "While this section in terms prohibits a banking association from making a loan upon the security of shares of its own stock, it imposes no penalty, either upon the bank or borrower, if a loan upon such security be made. If, therefore, the prohibition can be urged against the validity of the transaction by anyone except the government, it can only be done before the contract is executed, while the security is still subsisting in the hands of the bank. It can then, if at all,

no action can be maintained upon a contract which the legislature has prohibited either expressly or by implication;<sup>7</sup> (2) that it cannot be reconciled with the general theory subsequently propounded by the Supreme Court with regard to the absolutely void quality of ultra vires contracts;<sup>8</sup> and (3) that the decisions based upon it are essentially inconsistent with the cases in which the court, proceeding upon that theory, has held that a national bank cannot be held liable on a contract which violates the provisions of the regulating statute, even though the complainant has performed it on his side.<sup>9</sup>

The antinomy indicated by the second and third of these objections may per-be invoked to restrain or defeat the enforcement of the security. When the contract has been executed, the security sold, and the proceeds applied to the payment of the debt, the courts will not interfere with the matter. Both bank and borrower are in such case equally the subjects of legal censure, and they will be left by the courts where they have placed themselves." It is apparent, therefore, that the question whether the section of the statute which was under review should be construed on the same footing as the others was not explicitly determined, so far as contracts not fully executed on both sides were concerned. But doubtless this question will be answered in the affirmative whenever it is presented. The decision itself was followed in First Nat. Bank v. Lanz (1913) 120 C. C. A. 271, 202 Fed. 117.

Purchase of its own shares by bank (§ 5201).

In Lantry v. Wallace (1901) 182 U. S. 536, 45 L. ed. 1218, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 878, affirming (1899) 38 C. C. A. 510, 97 Fed. 865, where the receiver of a national bank brought suit to enforce the individual liability of the defendant as a stockholder, defendant contended that the purchase of the stock from the previous holders was not simply voidable, but was absolutely void; and that, consequently, the sale to him of such stock was void. But the court was of the opinion that, "when the violation of the statute has occurred, it is not a matter of which a shareholder can complain in order that he may be relieved from the liability attaching to him as a shareholder, and which the receiver seeks to enforce under the orders of the Comptroller."

In the above case no reference was made to Burrows v. Niblack (1898) 28 C. C. A. 130, 53 U. S. App. 712, 84 Fed. 111, where the decision, holding the receiver of a national bank to be entitled to maintain an action to recover back the money paid for shares of the bank's own stock which it had bought from the defendant, proceeded upon an apparently different theory concerning the juristic quality of a purchase of stock. The court argued thus: "The principal objections urged are (1) that the validity of the purchase by the bank of its own stock can be questioned only by the government; (2) that the alleged liability of the bank for the return of the money can be enforced only in a court of equity; and (3) that a tender back of the shares of stock purchased was essential to the right of recovery of the price paid. L.R.A.1917B.

The first objection is based upon that line of decisions of which illustrations are found in Union Nat. Bank v. Matthews (1879) 98 U. S. 621, 25 L. ed. 188; National Bank v. Whitney (1880) 103 U. S. 99, 26 L. ed. 443; and Thompson v. St. Nicholas Nat. Bank (1892) 146 U. S. 240, 36 L. ed. 956, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 66; but the present case, as we think, is governed rather by the principles declared in McCormick v. Market Nat. Bank (1897) 165 U. S. 538, 41 L. ed. 817, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 831, and California Nat. Bank v. Kennedy (1897) 167 U. S. 362, 42 L. ed. 198, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 831, where the line of cases mentioned is distinguished. The transaction here in question was not a purchase made for the purpose of preventing, or which was necessary to prevent, loss upon a debt previously contracted, but, as set forth, it was a bald purchase by the bank of its own stock for cash, and necessarily involved for the time being a reduction pro tanto of the corporate stock. . . . The purchase was outside of and beyond the powers of the bank, and therefore, as a corporate act, was void from the beginning; and, while it appears from the agreement that the certificates of stock were indorsed in blank, and delivered to the president of the bank, the latter did not thereby acquire, nor the plaintiff in error part with, title to the stock."

Increase of capital stock (§ 5205, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 9767).

Scott v. Deweese (1900) 181 U. S. 202, 45 L. ed. 822, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 585 (defendant held liable, as shareholder, to creditors of bank).

<sup>7</sup>In Penn v. Bornman (1882) 102 Ill. 523, it was remarked that the Supreme Court of the United States had "reached a conclusion which was believed to be in direct conflict with the most approved text-books, and to be opposed to an almost unbroken current of judicial decisions in this country and England."

<sup>8</sup>See especially the exposition of principles in the opinion delivered by Gray, J., in the leading case of Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. (1891) 139 U. S. 24, 35 L. ed. 55, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 478. Some extracts from this opinion are quoted in §§ 24 and 68 of the monograph appended to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment Co. v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. L.R.A.1917A, 749.

<sup>9</sup>See § 70 of the monograph referred to in note 8, supra.

haps be accounted for by the fact that the doctrine under discussion was enunciated during a period when, as is shown in another place,<sup>10</sup> the Supreme Court was exhibiting a strong tendency to adopt the principle that a corporation against which an action is brought upon a contract of which it has received the benefits is estopped from alleging its invalidity as a defense. But the serious difficulties created by the apparent antagonism between the two groups of the decisions of the court are not removed by this historical explanation.

18. State and Federal decisions col- lated.

Some of the decisions of state courts anterior to the leading case in which the Federal Supreme Court defined its position<sup>1</sup> are irreconcilable with the doctrine there laid down;<sup>2</sup> others are in harmony with it.<sup>3</sup> With the decisions belonging to the latter of these categories may be classed a few in which, although they were decided subsequently to the leading case, it was not referred to.<sup>4</sup> Such decisions, whether consistent with or repugnant to the rulings of the Federal Supreme Court are, it is obvious, merely indicative of the nature of the general views which in the particular jurisdictions prevailed with respect to the right of a corporation to maintain an action on an ultra vires contract of which the defendant has received the benefits.

So far as regards the cases determined with reference to the rulings of the Federal Supreme Court, the larger part of them proceed upon the broad ground that, as the construction and ef-

<sup>10</sup> See § 68 of the monograph referred to in note 8, supra.

<sup>1</sup> See note 1 to the preceding section.

<sup>2</sup> In Fowler v. Scully (1872) 72 Pa. 456, 13 Am. Rep. 699, a mortgage of real estate was held to be nonenforceable on the broad ground that it was void, as being in contravention of the regulating statute (§ 5137, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 9674). This ruling was followed with respect to the same provision in Woods v. People's Nat. Bank (1876) 83 Pa. 57.

In Fridley v. Bowen (1877) 87 Ill. 151, it was held that a mortgage taken by a national bank to secure a present loan was void, as being by implication prohibited by § 5137 of the act. This ruling was explicitly disapproved in Penn v. Bornman (1882) 102 Ill. 523.

In Conklin v. Second Nat. Bank (1871) 45 N. Y. 655, the ratio decidendi was that no lien could be acquired on stock which the bank had taken as security for a loan in contravention of § 35 of the act (U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5201, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 9762).

In Crocker v. Whitney (1877) 71 N. Y. 161, a mortgage was held to be nonenforceable, because it was not given to secure a pre-existing indebtedness, and was therefore in violation of § 28 of the act (U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5137). The court followed Fowler v. Scully (Pa.) supra, and applied the general rule of law that contracts prohibited by the legislature are void. This decision was reversed in (1880) 103 U. S. 99, 26 L. ed. 443.

In First Nat. Bank v. Pierson (1877) 24 Minn. 140, 31 Am. Rep. 341, an action on a note of which the bank was the transferee was held not to be maintainable, because it had been purchased, not discounted. This decision was overruled in Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Hanson (1884) 33 Minn. 40, 53 Am. Rep. 5, 21 N. W. 849.

<sup>3</sup> In Union Gold Min. Co. v. Rocky Mountain Nat. Bank (1872) 1 Colo. 531, it was held, on demurrer to a plea, that an action was maintainable to recover a loan exceeding the authorized amount (§ 5200, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 9761). On a later appeal of this case, it was laid down that Congress did "not intend that an excess of loans beyond the proportion specified should enable the borrower to avoid the payment of the money actually received by him." (1873) 2 Colo. 248. This judgment was affirmed by the Federal Supreme Court (1877) 96 U. S. 640, 24 L. ed. 648, 1 Mor. Min. Rep. 432. See note 6 to preceding section.

In Allen v. First Nat. Bank (1872) 23 Ohio St. 97, the ratio decidendi was an assumed distinction between ultra vires and illegal acts. See § 46, infra.

In O'Hare v. Second Nat. Bank (1874) 77 Pa. 96, the fact that the maker of the note sued upon was indebted to the bank in excess of one tenth of its capital was held not to be a good defense, for the reason that this limitation (§ 5200) was merely "intended as a general rule for conducting the business of the bank," and that it was evidently not the intention of Congress to declare the securities taken by the bank to be illegal. This decision was followed with regard to the same provision in Bly v. Second Nat. Bank (1875) 79 Pa. 453 (where the opinion of the trial judge was adopted by the supreme court); and Stephens v. Monongahela Nat. Bank (1878) 88 Pa. 167, 32 Am. Rep. 438.

<sup>4</sup> In National Pemberton Bank v. Porter (1878) 125 Mass. 333, 28 Am. Rep. 237, and Atlas Nat. Bank v. Savery (1879) 127 Mass. 75, where the fact that the statute had been violated by the purchase of the notes sued upon was held not to be a bar to recovery, the doctrine invoked was essentially different from that which is embodied in the Federal cases. See § 38, infra.

In Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Robinson (1898) 59 Kan. 777, 63 Pac. 762, where the transaction under review violated U. S. Rev.

fect of the National Bank Act are essentially Federal questions, the decisions of that court concerning those questions are absolutely and in every respect controlling in state courts.<sup>5</sup> This, it may be assumed, was the principle taken for granted in all the cases in which the state courts have avowedly followed the decisions of the Supreme Court.<sup>6</sup>

Stat. § 3477, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 6383, prohibiting the assignment of claims, the specified ratio decidendi was the defendant's receipt of the benefits of the contract.

In Union Nat. Bank v. Hunt (1879) 7 Mo. App. 42, the court, referring to the provision which prohibits a national bank from lending money on the security of its own shares, observed that, even if the act was intended to prohibit the bank from holding its own stock as collateral security for the price of stock which it had previously purchased to prevent loss upon a debt, and afterwards sold, this "would not make the contract of sale void, or prevent the bank from recovering upon the note. An abuse of its corporate powers might be a reason for punishing the bank, but would be no sufficient reason for not enforcing this contract in the interest of the creditors of the bank." The failure of the court to cite Union Nat. Bank v. Matthews is possibly due to the fact that it had not yet been reported. But this explanation will not account for the omission of the supreme court to advert to that case in its affirming judgment, delivered three years afterwards. See 76 No. 439, where the opinion of the court of appeals was adopted in toto.

In Wroten v. Armat (1879) 31 Gratt. (Va.) 228, which involved the question whether a deed of trust executed to a national bank was entitled to priority over a deed of trust executed to another party, the court, without referring to the leading case of Union Nat. Bank v. Matthews, which had been decided during the preceding year, laid it down that, even though the act of Congress had plainly prohibited a bank organized under it to take a deed of trust or mortgage to secure a loan in any case, or had made it penal to do so, it did not follow that the deed or mortgage in such case would be void, and that the borrower would be entitled to have the money loaned and at the same time to hold on to the property which he stipulated to give or to pledge for its security.

<sup>5</sup>In Penn v. Bornman (1882) 102 Ill. 523, the "paramount authority" of those decisions was conceded in general terms. See also Voltz v. National Bank (1895) 158 Ill. 532, 30 L.R.A. 155, 42 N. E. 69, where this expression of opinion was approved.

In Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Hanson (1884) 33 Minn. 40, 53 Am. Rep. 5, 21 N. W. 849, the court overruled First Nat. Bank v. Pierson (1877) 24 Minn. 140, 31 Am. Rep. 341, as being inconsistent with the Federal decisions of a later date. As to L.R.A.1917B.

A qualified rule of the following tenor has also been propounded: "This court would unquestionably be bound to follow the holding of the Supreme Court of the United States as to the powers of national banks,—this is strictly a Federal question. But, on the other hand, upon the question of the effect or application of such holding as a defense in the present judicial position in Minnesota, however, see note 7, infra.

"State courts must yield to the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, construing the powers of national banks under the National Banking Act." First Nat. Bank v. American Nat. Bank (1903) 173 Mo. 153, 72 S. W. 1059.

In Graham v. National Bank (1880) 32 N. J. Eq. 804, the court based its decision on a judgment of the Federal Supreme Court which had "authoritatively determined the validity of mortgages like the one in controversy."

<sup>6</sup>In the following cases the right of action was affirmed, except where it is otherwise stated. They are classified under the same heads as those tabulated in note 6 to the preceding section.

Loans not made on personal security (§ 5136, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 9661).

For cases in which money lent on the security of real estate was held to be recoverable, see Warner v. De Witt Co. Nat. Bank (1879) 4 Ill. App. 305; First Nat. Bank v. Elmore (1879) 52 Iowa, 541, 3 N. W. 547; State Nat. Bank v. Flathers (1893) 45 La. Ann. 75, 40 Am. St. Rep. 216, 12 So. 243; Dresser v. Traders' Nat. Bank (1895) 165 Mass. 120, 42 N. E. 567; Fifth Nat. Bank v. Pierce (1898) 117 Mich. 376, 75 N. W. 1058; George v. Somerville (1899) 153 Mo. 7, 54 S. W. 491; First Nat. Bank v. Grosshans (1901) 61 Neb. 575, 85 N. W. 542; Graham v. National Bank (1880; Err. & App.) 32 N. J. Eq. 804; Slade v. Squier (1909) 133 App. Div. 666, 118 N. Y. Supp. 278; Oldham v. First Nat. Bank (1881) 85 N. C. 240; First Nat. Bank v. Messner (1913) 25 N. D. 263, 141 N. W. 999 (doctrine applied in action in which it was sought to hold a bank cashier personally liable for releasing for less than its face value a debt owed to the bank); Winton v. Little (1880) 94 Pa. 64.

For a case in which money lent on the security of personal property was held to be recoverable, see Smith v. First Nat. Bank (1895) 45 Neb. 444, 63 N. W. 796.

Purchase of bills, notes, etc., out of the ordinary course of banking business (§ 5136, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 9661).

Prescott Nat. Bank v. Butler (1893) 157 Mass. 548, 32 N. E. 909; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Hanson (1884) 33 Minn. 40, 53 Am. Rep. 5, 21 N. W. 849, overruling First Nat. Bank v. Pierson (1877) 24 Minn. 140, 31 Am. Rep. 341, which had been decided before the leading Federal cases; First a given case properly brought in the state court, this court may properly follow its own decisions, even when differing from the decisions of the Federal courts. Such questions are not Federal questions."<sup>7</sup> The distinction thus taken is certainly a very fine one, to say the least. It would appear to be somewhat anomalous to assert that certain precedents may be controlling with regard to the main question of the nature and extent of corporate powers, and at the same time not controlling with regard to the availability of a defense, the efficacy of which must, in the final analysis, depend upon the manner in which that question is answered.

In the case cited in the footnote, the authority of the Federal decisions reviewed in this section was fully recognized, but they were not followed for the reason that, in the opinion of the court, the rights of the parties to the premises were determinable with reference to certain other Federal decisions.<sup>8</sup>

It is well settled, that, in dealing with statutory provisions regarding state banks, which are similar to those of the National Bank Act, state courts are not bound to follow the Federal decisions re-

Nat. Bank v. Gillilan (1880) 72 Mo. 77; First Nat. Bank v. Smith (1895) 8 S. D. 7, 65 N. W. 437.

Purchasing and holding of real estate for purposes not specified by the statute (§ 5137, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 9674).

Hennessey v. St. Paul (1893) 54 Minn. 219, 55 N. W. 1123 (certificate of tax sale purchased by bank was held to be a valid lien on the land); Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co. v. Jones (1905) 95 Minn. 127, 103 N. W. 1017; Thornton v. National Exch. Bank (1879) 71 Mo. 221; Buchanan v. Saunders County Nat. Bank (1903) 4 Neb. (Unof.) 410, 94 N. W. 631 (statute alleged to be contravened by the bank's having taken an assignment of a foreclosure decree as a speculation); Farmers Deposit Nat. Bank v. Western Pennsylvania Fuel Co. (1906) 215 Pa. 115, 114 Am. St. Rep. 949, 64 Atl. 374 (rent held to be recoverable under lease alleged to be ultra vires the bank, because it undertook to erect on the demised premises a building which it did not contemplate using for its immediate accommodation in the transaction of its business).

Interest reserved in excess of the rate authorized (§§ 5197, 5198, Comp. Stat. 1913, §§ 9758, 9759).

In Union Nat. Bank v. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. (1893) 145 Ill. 208, 34 N. E. 135, the court, without referring at all to the Federal decisions, held that no action could be maintained on the contract. But this ruling is inconsistent with the more recent Voltz Case cited below.

Loans in excess of authorized amount (§ 5200, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 9761).

Voltz v. National Bank (1895) 158 Ill. 532, 30 L.R.A. 155, 42 N. E. 69, affirming (1895) 57 Ill. App. 360; Mills County Nat. Bank (1887) 72 Iowa, 15, 2 Am. St. Rep. 228, 33 N. W. 341; Maryland Trust Co. v. National Mechanics Bank (1906) 102 Md. 608, 63 Atl. 70; Coreoran v. Batchelder (1888) 147 Mass. 541, 18 N. E. 420; Smith v. First Nat. Bank (1895) 45 Neb. 444, 63 N. W. 796; Portland Nat. Bank v. Scott (1891) 20 Or. 421, 26 Pac. 276. L.R.A.1917B.

Loans made "on the security of the shares" of the bank (§ 5201, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 9762).

Walden Nat. Bank v. Birch (1891) 130 N. Y. 221, 14 L.R.A. 211, 29 N. E. 127 (action to recover from sureties of cashier the value of share converted by him); Chapin v. Merchants' Nat. Bank (1888; Sup. Ct.) 14 N. Y. S. R. 272.

Transactions in respect of which the statute is silent.

In National Bank v. Burr (1882) 27 Hun (N. Y.) 109 (for earlier appeal, see (1878) 15 Hun, 51), the plaintiff bank had received a note with the view of having it discounted by another bank, and unlawfully charged for its indorsement a commission of 5 per cent per annum. After the instrument had been so discounted, it came again into the plaintiff's possession. Held, that the unlawful agreement did not affect the title of the bank to the note, and that an action was maintainable thereon. The court said: "The government granting the charter must interfere for acts of a bank in excess of its powers. The laws relating to state and national banks are the same."

<sup>7</sup> Security Nat. Bank v. St. Croix Power Co. (1903) 117 Wis. 217, 94 N. W. 74. This statement was quoted in Hunt v. Hauser Malting Co. (1903) 90 Minn. 282, 96 N. W. 85, where, however, its apparent inconsistency with what was said in the earlier Minnesota case, Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Hanson (1884) 33 Minn. 40, 53 Am. Rep. 5, 21 N. W. 849, was not adverted to.

<sup>8</sup> Buffalo German Ins. Co. v. Third Nat. Bank (1900) 162 N. Y. 163, 48 L.R.A. 107, 56 N. E. 521. There the action held to be maintainable was brought to obtain a judgment directing the defendant to transfer upon its books to the plaintiff 450 shares of its capital stock, which stood in the name of one Levi, who had, some years previously, pledged them with the plaintiff to secure the payment of his promissory notes for moneys loaned. The defendant claimed a lien upon the stock by force of a statement printed upon the face of the certificates to the effect that "no transfer of the stock of this association shall be made without the consent of the board of direc-

lating to that act.<sup>9</sup> But it is conceded that those decisions possess a strongly persuasive authority.<sup>10</sup> Having regard to a familiar principle of statutory construction, it would seem that the reasons for deferring to them are well nigh conclusive, when it appears that the state act was intentionally modeled upon the Federal one. They have even been followed in cases involving the remedial tors, by any stockholder who shall be liable to the association, either as principal debtor or otherwise, which liability shall be a lien upon the said stock and all profits thereof and dividends." The essential question involved was, therefore, whether the lien so reserved by the bank was valid as against the pledgeor and third parties. The grounds upon which it was considered that this question should be answered in the negative were thus stated: "The bank being prohibited from loaning moneys upon the security of its own shares of capital stock, it is difficult to understand upon what legal principle it could claim the right to an equitable lien. The appellate division, in an opinion which was concurred in by the majority of the justices of that court, thought that, as the question was one which arose under a Federal law, it should be governed in its determination by the decisions of the Supreme Federal Court, and that the more recent ones had established a controlling doctrine that a contract made in contravention of any provision of the National Banking Act is not, in the absence of any declaration to that effect, void, or incapable of enforcement. . . . Hence, it was deemed to follow that, in the present case, the bank's claim to be entitled to an equitable lien, though against a purchaser for value and in good faith of its shares in the market, must be allowed, and any offense against the Banking Act involved must be left to governmental cognizance. I believe this conclusion to be fallacious, and that the reasoning of the learned justices below is without regard to the distinction which exists between those cases in their facts and in the principle underlying their decision, and the earlier cases which construed the National Banking Acts and declared the doctrine that loans by banking association to their stockholders do not give a lien to the bank upon their stock. First Nat. Bank v. Lanier (1870) 11 Wall. (U. S.) 369, 20 L. ed. 172; Bullard v. National Eagle Bank (1873) 18 Wall. (U. S.) 594, 21 L. ed. 925. I am quite unable to agree in the view that these earlier cases have been overruled, or their doctrine refused credit, by the later cases which are relied upon for the defendant. If we assume the existence of a contract between the defendant bank and Levi (and all we know of it is the testimony of the president of the defendant as to a conversation with Levi, in which he said the bank could consider the stock in his safe as collateral for his loans), it was executory in its nature as long as the stock remained in his possession, and until it was in fact pledged to the bank by a delivery. Possession is of the essence of a pledge, in order to raise L.R.A.1917B.

a privilege against third persons. Casey v. Cavaroc (1878) 96 U. S. 467, 24 L. ed. 779; Wilson v. Little (1849) 2 N. Y. 443, 51 Am. Dec. 307. . . . If the case had been one where the bank, not regarding the prohibition of the Banking Act, had taken from Levi his certificates of stock as collateral security for the payment of any indebtedness which he had incurred, or might incur, and had realized upon them for application upon his debt, it might well be that it would not lie in his mouth, or anyone claiming under him, to assert the illegality of the transaction. The case would then resemble more the cases of Union Nat. Bank v. Matthews (1879) 98 U. S. 621, 25 L. ed. 188, or First Nat. Bank v. Stewart (1882) 107 U. S. 676, 27 L. ed. 592, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 778. If the bank had violated the law, it laid itself open to proceedings on the part of the government, and the courts might leave the parties where they were, and might decline to interfere to benefit the borrower to the prejudice of the stockholders and creditors. There is no conflict between the Lanier and Bullard Cases and the Matthews Case and the Whitney Case (1880) 103 U. S. 99, 26 L. ed. 443. Each class is distinct, and its doctrine is controlling where the principle involved is the same. It is one thing if the contract has been executed and to avoid it would be to deplete the assets of the bank to the amount represented by the contract; it is quite another thing where the bank is seeking to create a lien upon an implied executory contract, or a security where it has none, and where it admits it has none, in the face of the statute, which provides that it shall not have such a lien or take such a security." In Nicollet Nat. Bank v. City Bank (1887) 38 Minn. 85, 8 Am. St. Rep. 643, 35 N. W. 577, the Lanier and Bullard Cases were followed in a case involving the effect of a state enactment corresponding to § 5201 of the Federal act.

<sup>9</sup> Penn. v. Bornman (1882) 102 Ill. 523; Hunt v. Hauser Malting Co. (1903) 90 Minn. 282, 96 N. W. 85.

<sup>10</sup> In Nelson v. Leiter (1901) 190 Ill. 414, 83 Am. St. Rep. 142, 60 N. E. 851, affirming (1901) 93 Ill. App. 176, a provision virtually identical with the section of the National Bank Act which defines the permissible amount of debt that may be contracted by a national bank was construed in the same manner as that section. But in this instance the propriety of following the Federal decisions was indicated by the circumstance that the state legislature had, by adopting the words of the congressional act, signified its intention that the decisions concerning it should also be adopted as controlling.

rights of corporations organized for purposes other than that of banking.<sup>11</sup> But it seems to be open to question whether it is justifiable to treat them as precedents in a case of this description, unless the court to which it is presented is one of those which accept the principle of estoppel.

19. Alabama.

In an early case which turned upon the meaning of a clause in the charter of the plaintiff bank to the effect that it should "not be lawful" for it to discount a bill of exchange for a larger sum than that specified, it was held that an action would lie on the instrument itself. But the ratio decidendi was that this provision should be construed as being merely directory, and consequently did not operate so as to render the contract void; that is to say, the rule prescribed in this instance by the legislature was regarded as being outside the category of those "which cannot be transcended, and the observance of which is essential to the validity of the contracts" of a corporation.<sup>1</sup> Having regard to the facts involved, and to the special ground assigned for the conclusion arrived at, this case may reasonably be regarded as indicating that at the date when it was decided the court was of opinion that, as a general rule, a contract which a corporation was forbidden to enter into was void in such a sense that no action could be maintained upon it even though its benefits had been received by the defendant. That the same doctrine would have been applied also with respect to a contract which was invalid as being merely not authorized may apparently be inferred from the consideration that the case belongs to a period during which it had not yet been suggested in any jurisdiction that the remedial rights in respect of expressly prohibited and of unauthorized transactions were different. See § 15 of the monograph appended to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment Co. v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. L.R.A.1917A, 737.

Some later cases proceeded upon the broad ground that ultra vires contracts are not enforceable, no allusion being made to the circumstance that the other parties had, as a matter of fact, received the benefits of the contracts in question.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>11</sup> Chaffee v. Middlesex R. Co. (1888) 146 Mass. 224, 16 N. E. 34 (payment of railroad bonds in hands of insurance company cannot be resisted by the railroad company on the ground that the insurance company was not authorized to invest its money in such securities); Butterworth v. Kritzer Mill. Co. (1897) 115 Mich. 1, 72 N. W. 990; Washington L. Ins. Co. v. Clason (1900) 162 N. Y. 305, 56 N. E. 755.

In Bond v. Terrell Cotton & Woolen Mfg. Co. (1891) 82 Tex. 309, 18 S. W. 691, the court observed: "It appears to be the settled rule and doctrine of our highest tribunal that the benefited party to a contract executed by a corporation shall be held estopped from resisting the demand of a corporation founded upon such contract, even though by the statutory charter of the corporation it is by clear implication forbidden to enter into the contract. National Bank v. Whitney (1880) 103 U. S. 99, 26 L. ed. 443; Swope v. Leffingwell (1882) 105 U. S. 3, 26 L. ed. 939; Reynolds v. First Nat. Bank (1884) 112 U. S. 405, 28 L. ed. 733, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 213. We therefore agree with the court below that the appellants, having received the benefit of the loan, are in no position to question its validity." This, it is submitted, is a manifestly unwarrantable generalization from the decisions of the Supreme Court. It is only in cases relating to national banks that that tribunal has applied the doctrine here referred to; though it unquestionably showed at one time a tendency to adopt the principle of estoppel in respect of actions against corporations (see § 68 of the monograph appended to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment Co. v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. L.R.A.1917A, 737.

Alabama.

<sup>1</sup> Bates v. Bank of Alabama (1841) 2 Ala. 451.

<sup>2</sup> In Smith v. Alabama L. Ins. & T. Co. (1843) 4 Ala. 558, a suit brought to foreclose a mortgage taken to secure a bond executed by the defendant and delivered to the plaintiff in exchange for its own bond was held not to be maintainable, for the reason that the corporate bond was ultra vires. The court reasoned thus: "The company had no power to lend its obligations to pay money in future. The contract, therefore, made by it with the plaintiff in error, whether it be considered a loan of the bonds of the company or an exchange of credits, is void, and the security taken for the performance of this illegal contract, being necessarily void also, cannot be the foundation of any proceeding in a court of justice."

In Grand Lodge v. Waddill (1860) 36 Ala. 313, where it was held that no action could be maintained on a note given for an ultra vires loan, the court said: "Contracts of corporations which they have no power to make are void, and courts of justice will not enforce them. So, also, promissory notes and other instruments given to secure the performance of the contract are void. No action to enforce the contract, whatever form the pleader's skill may give it, can be maintained." The court cited several of the earlier New York cases. See § 44, infra.

In one of these the court took occasion to repudiate the theory that "by contracting with a corporation the party contracting estops himself from disputing the power of the corporation to make the contract."<sup>3</sup>

The doctrine that no estoppel against pleading ultra vires can be predicated from the circumstance of the adverse party's having enjoyed the benefits of the contract was first explicitly enunciated in a case involving the remedial rights of a municipal corporation,<sup>4</sup> and was afterward recognized with reference to actions brought by a private corporation.<sup>5</sup>

In this state, therefore, "it is thoroughly well-settled law that a party to an ultra vires executory contract made with a corporation is not estopped to set up the want of corporate capacity in the premises, either by the fact of contracting, whereby the power to contract is, in a sense, admitted or recognized, or by the fact that the fruits or issues of the contract have been received and enjoyed; and this, though the assault upon the transaction comes from the corporation itself."<sup>6</sup>

In Westinghouse Mach. Co. v. Wilkinson (1885) 79 Ala. 312, it was held that no action would lie on a note which the Montgomery Iron Works Company had, in pursuance of an ultra vires contract of agency, taken for the price of certain articles and subsequently indorsed to its principal, the plaintiff.

In Waddill v. Alabama & T. River R. Co. (1859) 35 Ala. 323, an action on a bill of exchange drawn by Waddill for accommodation of a Masonic institute, and negotiated by it to the plaintiff railroad company, it was held that, as the company "had no authority to lend its money or to employ its funds in the purchase of a bill of exchange as an independent business transaction," it necessarily followed that the president of the railroad had, as such, no authority to make a loan of such funds, and that, if Waddill, "at his own instance, had the use and benefit of funds belonging to the railroad company in the payment of a debt for which he was bound, the law, at the instance of the railroad, will imply a promise on his part to repay the money." A decision based on this ground is evidently not a direct authority for the doctrine recognized in the above cases; but it is one of the precedents relied upon in the second one cited.

<sup>3</sup> Wilks v. Georgia P. R. Co. (1885) 79 Ala. 180, where a suit for the specific performance of a contract by which the defendant Wilks agreed to convey to one Colquit and certain persons named Gordon, their associates and successors, the title to all the coal and iron upon the land L.R.A.1917B.

20. Arizona.

It was recently laid down in an action to foreclose a trust deed, that defendants, "having enjoyed the full benefit of the contract, having received and used the money borrowed, cannot be permitted now to repudiate its burden by a collateral attack for the want of power in the corporation. Public policy is promoted by the maintenance of the obligation of contracts, and after the contract has been fully executed, and the appellants have enjoyed its full benefits, it would be most inequitable and unjust to permit them to resist the payment of the money borrowed upon the plea of ultra vires."<sup>1</sup>

21. Arkansas.

The doctrine established in this state is that a person who has contracted with a corporation and received the benefit of the transaction cannot, in an action brought upon the contract, raise the defense that it was ultra vires.<sup>1</sup>

22. California.

In one case the ground upon which the action was held not to be maintainable in question, if a railway should be constructed within a specified period, was held not to be maintainable.

<sup>4</sup> Montgomery v. Montgomery & W. Pl. Road Co. (1857) 31 Ala. 76.

<sup>5</sup> Marion Sav. Bank v. Dunkin (1875) 54 Ala. 471 (arguendo, in a case where the actual point decided was that the defendant was not entitled to raise the question whether the plaintiff had been duly organized; see § 9 (a), supra); Chambers v. Falkner (1880) 65 Ala. 448 (no action maintainable on promissory note or mortgage securing it, plaintiff having no power to lend money).

See also Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Smith (1884) 76 Ala. 572, 52 Am. Rep. 353, where the doctrine of the above cases was affirmed arguendo.

<sup>6</sup> Long v. Georgia P. R. Co. (1890) 91 Ala. 519, 24 Am. St. Rep. 931, 8 So. 706; 1 Keener, Contr. 766 (bill to cancel deed).

Arizona.

<sup>1</sup> Leon v. Citizens' Bldg. & L. Asso. (1912) 14 Ark. 294, 127 Pac. 721, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 1151.

Arkansas.

<sup>1</sup> White River, L. & W. R. Co. v. Star Ranch & Land Co. (1905) 77 Ark. 128, 91 S. W. 14 (suit on bond given to secure performance of contract).

In Dunbar v. Cazort-McGehee Co. (1910) 96 Ark. 308, 131 S. W. 698, a suit brought to foreclose a mortgage executed by the defendant in an action then pending, to secure the plaintiff company when it became surety on a supersedeas bond, was held to was simply that the contract sued upon was one which neither the corporation nor the other party had power to enter into.<sup>1</sup> The remedial rights of the plaintiff were not discussed with reference to the facts that the contract had been executed on its side, and that the defendant had accepted the benefits of it. But in several subsequent cases these facts have been treated as creating an estoppel against pleading ultra vires.<sup>2</sup>

The ratio decidendi in one instance was that the question of ultra vires was one which only the state was entitled to raise.<sup>3</sup>

23. Colorado.

In one case it was held that, in an action of assumpsit for money lent by a national bank, a special plea averring that the loan exceeded the authorized amount was held to be demurrable, on the ground that the question of ultra vires was one which concerned only the Federal authorities.<sup>1</sup>

24. Connecticut.

In an early case where the right of the plaintiff corporation to recover on a promissory note which it had discounted was denied, the decision was based partly upon the ground that an implied prohibition against the exercise of the power of making loans by the discount of be maintainable on grounds thus stated: "The principal contention of the appellant is that the corporation exceeded its charter powers in becoming surety, and that the contract of suretyship, and the mortgage as well, is void. At least two reasons may be stated, without searching for others, why this contention is unsound, or at least why the infirmity of the contract cannot be pleaded. In the first place, Mrs. Sharp, one of the parties, received the benefit of the contract, and she and appellant, who derived his rights to the mortgaged property from her, are estopped from setting up the invalidity of the contract. In the second place, appellee has fully performed the contract on its part by paying the amount of the liability thereunder; therefore it is an executed contract on one side, and neither Mrs. Sharp nor her grantee, who succeeded to her rights, can set up the fact that the execution of the contract was beyond the power of the corporation." The court was clearly mistaken in treating these two circumstances as being substantially distinct grounds for excluding the defense of ultra vires. The performance of the contract and the receipt of the benefits thereof are, in the nature of the case, correlative and complementary conditions, and whether one circumstance or the other is predicated as the ground of an estoppel depends simply upon whether the results of negotiable instruments must be inferred from the grant of other specific powers, and partly on the ground that the exercise of that power was expressly prohibited by a clause in the plaintiff's charter under which it was forbidden to engage in banking transactions.<sup>1</sup> The question whether the remedial rights of the plaintiff were enlarged by the circumstance that the defendant had enjoyed the benefits of the transaction was not adverted to. In fact, the case was decided before the significance of that element had been considered by any of the courts. Nor has the subject been discussed in any later case. But, as the court, after some fluctuations of opinions, seems to have now adopted definitely the doctrine that, in an action brought against a corporation by a party who has performed the contract on his side, the defense of ultra vires is not admissible, it is probable that a similar doctrine would now be applied with respect to a case in which the corporation is the claimant. See § 76 of note to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment Co. v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. L.R.A.1917A, 737.

25. Dakota.

In a case in which a banking corporation was held to be entitled to recover on a note which it had purchased, even the transaction are considered with reference to the corporation or the other party.

California.

<sup>1</sup> San Diego Water Co. v. San Diego (1881) 59 Cal. 517 (claim in respect of water furnished to a municipality for certain purposes).

<sup>2</sup> Grangers' Business Asso. v. Clark (1885) 67 Cal. 634, 8 Pac. 445 (mortgage); Camp v. Land (1898) 122 Cal. 167, 54 Pac. 839 (mortgage); Bay City Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Broad (1902) 136 Cal. 525, 89 Pac. 225 (mortgage); Francis v. Western Screen Co. (1913) 22 Cal. App. 32, 133 Pac. 327.

<sup>3</sup> Union Water Co. v. Murphy's Flat Fluming Co. (1863) 22 Cal. 620, 3 Mor. Min. Rep. 487 (suit to foreclose mortgage).

Colorado.

<sup>1</sup> Union Gold Min. Co. v. Rocky Mountain Nat. Bank (1873) 2 Colo. 248. On the second appeal of the case (1874) 2 Colo. 565, the discussion turned on the extent of the authority of the defendant company's agent. The decision of the Federal Supreme Court, to which the case was ultimately carried, proceeded on the ground explained in § 13, note 2, supra.

Connecticut.

<sup>1</sup> New York Firemen Ins. Co. v. Ely (1825) 5 Conn. 560, 13 Am. Dec. 100.

though the act of purchase might have been ultra vires, the territorial court proceeded upon the doctrine that the plea of ultra vires could not be interposed in such a case, unless the legislature had expressly declared the act to be void.<sup>1</sup>

26. Delaware.

In a nisi prius case tried before three judges, the jury was instructed that "the defendant, having contracted with the [plaintiff] company, was estopped from denying that it was not authorized by its charter to make the contract."<sup>1</sup> This statement, if taken literally, is manifestly erroneous, as being inconsistent with the axiomatic doctrine that no action can be maintained upon an ultra vires contract as long as it remains executory. See § 3, supra. But it is not improbable that the words are merely an inaccurate expression of the rule that a person who has received the benefits of an ultra vires contract with a corporation is precluded from raising the defense of ultra vires in an action brought by it.

27. Florida.

In two somewhat early cases in which it was held that an action might be maintained upon an ultra vires contract, the defendants had in point of fact received the benefits accruing from it, but the grounds assigned for the decision were, that such a contract is not to be deemed void unless it is so declared by the legislature; that to allow the plea of ultra vires to prevail would enable the defendant to perpetrate a fraud; and that the question whether a corporation has exceeded its powers is one which only the government can raise.<sup>1</sup> But, as the principle of estoppel has recently been affirmed with respect to actions against corporations (see § 77 of the note to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment Co. v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. L.R.A.1917A, 737), its applicability to actions by corporations would doubtless be recognized at the present day.

Dakota.

<sup>1</sup> Neilville Bank v. Tuthill (1886) 4 Dak. 295, 30 N. W. 154.

Delaware.

<sup>1</sup> Standard Sewing Mach. Co. v. Frame (1899) 2 Penn. (Del.) 430, 48 Atl. 188 (replevin for chattel delivered under lease and sale contract).

Florida.

<sup>1</sup> Southern L. Ins. & T. Co. v. Lanier (1853) 5 Fla. 110, 58 Am. Dec. 448 (suit to foreclose mortgage given for stock issued to defendant); *Allen v. Freeman's Sav. & L.R.A.*1917B.

28. Georgia.

In one case where an action was held to be maintainable by a bank upon the promissory note of a third person which had been transferred to the bank in discharge of the holder's debt, the maker was held to be "estopped from setting up the provisions of the plaintiff's charter" for the purpose of escaping liability.<sup>1</sup> But a perusal of the opinion shows that the estoppel referred to was not that which is predicated upon the general ground of a receipt of benefits. In fact, the decision was rendered before the latter description of estoppel had been discussed in any of the American states. The actual ground upon which the court proceeded is indicated by the remark of the court that "the regulations in the charter as to discounts were merely directory."

In a later case it was held that a church which had, in excess of its corporate powers, hired from the defendant a steamer for an excursion, could not maintain an action for the damages resulting from a breach of the contract, but was merely entitled to recover the amount paid in respect of the hire.<sup>2</sup> Having regard to the facts, this decision is by implication an authority against the principle of estoppel, but the plaintiff's remedial rights were not discussed in this point of view.

The same remark applies to a still later case in which the right of the assignee of the property of a corporation, to recover a subscription to stock issued in excess of the authorized amount, was denied on the ground that the issue was ultra vires and void.<sup>3</sup>

29. Idaho.

In one case it was held that no facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action were stated by a complaint which averred in substance that the plaintiff, a mining and smelting company, was the assignee of a claim for money due the assignor in respect of the building of a

T. Co. (1874) 14 Fla. 418 (action to recover the amount of drafts drawn by the defendants on themselves).

Georgia.

<sup>1</sup> Bond v. Central Bank (1847) 2 Ga. 92.
<sup>2</sup> Harriman v. First Bryan Baptist Church (1879) 63 Ga. 186, 36 Am. Rep. 117.

<sup>3</sup> Clark v. Turner (1884) 73 Ga. 1. The corporation in question was one organized under the laws of Alabama, a state in which the principle of estoppel is rejected (see § 19, supra); but there is nothing in the report to show that this circumstance influenced the court in its decision.

bridge for the defendant, and that the defendant had taken and was holding possession of the bridge.<sup>1</sup> The ratio decidendi was simply that the purchasing of choses in action was entirely foreign to the business of the plaintiff. The fact that the defendant was enjoying the benefits of the contract was apparently not called to the attention of the court. Or possibly it was taken for granted that an estoppel could not be predicated upon such an element. Having regard to the circumstances in evidence, the decision, if it had been rendered by a court which had avowedly adopted the doctrine that this element is one which creates an estoppel, would obviously constitute a precedent for the theory that the position of a corporation which acquires by an ultra vires purchase a right to sue upon a contract which a third person has executed is essentially different from the position of a corporation which is seeking to enforce a contract which has been executed by itself.

In a more recent case it has been explicitly laid down that "a party who has had the benefit of an agreement will not be permitted to question its validity."<sup>2</sup> In this case the contract under review was one which had been expressly prohibited.

30. Illinois.

In one case decided during the period

Idaho.

<sup>1</sup> Salmon River Min. & Smelting Co. v. Dunn (1882) 2 Idaho, 26, 3 Pac. 911.

<sup>2</sup> Meholin v. Carlson (1910) 17 Idaho, 742, 134 Am. St. Rep. 286, 107 Pac. 755 (suit brought by the receiver of a bank to foreclose an ultra vires pledge of the company's shares which it had issued to the defendant).

Illinois.

<sup>1</sup> Shelby v. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. (1892) 143 Ill. 385, 32 N. E. 438, affirming (1891) 42 Ill. App. 339, where the plaintiff railway company, which had purchased an island in a river and established thereon a resort for excursionists, was granted an injunction to restrain the breach of a contract to maintain dams so as to keep a pond above fit for boating purposes.

<sup>2</sup> Lauder v. Peoria Agri. & Trotting Soc. (1897) 71 Ill. App. 475 (assumpsit maintainable for price of land conveyed by corporation in excess of its powers).

In Voltz v. National Bank (1895) 158 Ill. 532, 30 L.R.A. 155, 42 N. E. 69, affirming (1895) 57 Ill. App. 360, where the non-availability of the defense of ultra vires was affirmed on the authority of the decisions of the Federal Supreme Court (see note 7, infra), it was intimated that, if the effect of a state enactment had been L.R.A.1917B.

when the principle of estoppel was still being applied in actions against corporations (see § 80 of the monograph appended to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment Co. v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. L.R.A.1917A, 737), the ground upon which an injunction restraining the violation of a contract was granted to a corporation was that the defendants "will not be permitted to retain the consideration and at the same time repudiate the contract upon which they received it."<sup>1</sup> This decision shows that the court proceeded upon the assumption that the same doctrine was controlling whether a corporation was the plaintiff or the defendant. In a later case the principle of estoppel was recognized by the court of appeals.<sup>2</sup>

As explained in the monograph referred to above, the theory that an ultra vires contract of which the corporation has received the benefits may be enforced on the ground of an estoppel was repudiated by the statements in some of the opinions of the Supreme Court toward the close of the nineteenth century. This change of views is reflected in CALUMET & C. CANAL & DOCK CO. v. CONKLING, and other recent cases which fall within the scope of the present note.<sup>3</sup> of those cases the court, advertent to "the rule that one dealing with a corporation is not estopped to deny its legal involved, the rule that no right of action can spring out of an illegal contract would have been applied. This expression of opinion seems to be irreconcilable to the ruling in note 1, supra; but it is, of course, in harmony with the theory adopted in the cases cited in notes 3, 4, infra.

<sup>3</sup> In Lurton v. Jacksonville Loan & Bldg. Assn. (1900) 87 Ill. App. 395, affirmed in (1900) 187 Ill. 141, 58 N. E. 218 (loan secured by mortgage), the ground upon which the action was held by the court of appeals to be maintainable was that the defense of ultra vires was not available after the contract had been performed by the plaintiff corporation. The position thus taken was in accord with the doctrine applied by the supreme court up to the year in which the decision was rendered. (See note referred to in the preceding paragraph.) In its affirming judgment that court, viewing the case with reference to its altered doctrine, declared that, if the contract had been actually ultra vires, no action could have been maintained on it; but the action was held to be maintainable on the ground that the invalidity relied upon as a defense arose from a merely formal defect.

In Steele v. Fraternal Tribunes (1905) 215 Ill. 190, 106 Am. St. Rep. 160, 74 N. E. 121, where the corporation was the defend-existence on the ground that there was no law authorizing it," remarked: "It is analogous to ultra vires acts and contracts of the corporation wholly beyond and outside the general scope of its corporate powers and entirely foreign to the objects and purposes of its creation. Such contracts are held void as against public policy, and incapable of being validated and enforced by having acted under them."<sup>4</sup>

In some cases the ratio decidendi was

ant, the law was there laid down in general terms: "When the contract is beyond the power conferred upon it by existing laws, neither the corporation nor the other party to the contract can be estopped, by assenting to it or by acting upon it, to show that it was prohibited by those laws."

In Mercantile Trust Co. v. Kastor (1916) 273 Ill. 332, 112 N. E. 988, where the contract in question was construed as being one of loan, and as such beyond the powers of the lending corporation, the contention that it was enforceable on the ground that the borrower and guarantor were estopped from pleading ultra vires was rejected. The court expressed the opinion that "the cases in which the doctrine of estoppel has been recognized have been where the act complained of was within the general scope of the corporate powers, but there has been some irregularity in their exercise." But it is submitted that the earlier and later Illinois cases cannot be reconciled on the footing thus suggested. See § 80 of the note to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment Co. v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. L.R.A.1917A, 737.

In Free Home Bldg. L. & Homestead Asso. v. Edwards (1906) 223 Ill. 126, 79 N. E. 64, it was held that the plaintiff could not maintain an action upon a contract under which it had lent money at a usurious rate of interest, without a compliance with the provision of the statute by which it was empowered to charge such a rate to its members, if they should pass a by-law authorizing it. The court said: "The board of directors had no more power under the statute to adopt such method of making loans than the attorney and secretary of the association would have had, and to hold that because the board of directors adopted and pursued that method for a number of years, during which time appellees negotiated a loan and paid the premiums and interest thereon, would legalize the transaction, would be to nullify the statute. The association is in no better position than it would have been if there had been no statute providing a method of making such loans. The authorities are clear that where a corporation has no power to contract, performance on either side will not give the unlawful contract validity. National Home Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Home Sav. Bank (1899) 181 Ill. 35, 64 L.R.A. 399, 72 Am. St. Rep. 245, 54 N. E. 619." As the contract involved in the case thus cited was a merely unauthorized one, it is evident that, so far as the operation of the principle of estoppel is concerned, the court recognized no distinction between contracts which are ultra vires as not being within the scope of the corporate powers enumerated, and contracts which are ultra vires as being the subject of an express prohibition. (For the authorities which illustrate this point of view, see § 15 of the monograph appended to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment Co. v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. L.R.A.1917A, 737.) But the fact that, in jurisdictions in which that principle has been adopted, it has never been treated as applicable to expressly prohibited contracts, was also adverted to. (See § 44 of same monograph.)

As to the effect of the decision in North Ave. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Huber (1915) 270 Ill. 75, 110 N. E. 312, see § 10, supra.

The court of appeals has in two instances strangely ignored the decisions which reflect the altered doctrine of the supreme court. In Western Cottage Piano & Organ Co. v. Burrows (1912) 168 Ill. App. 120, the right to recover in an action on a note given for certain stock was put upon the ground that, after the defendants "have had the benefit of this transaction, and have become the owners of the stock for which this money was paid, they should be estopped from denying their liability to pay back the money of which they have had the benefit." So far as the language of the opinion shows, the right of the corporation to sue on the contract itself, and not merely to obtain relief independently thereof, was asserted. In Desplaines Safety Deposit Co. v. Bour (1915) 192 Ill. App. 569, it was held (according to the reporter's syllabus, no opinion being published) that, in an action by a corporation to recover the rent of premises leased by it, the defense of an abuse of power on the part of the plaintiff in making the lease was not available.

In McCoy v. World's Columbian Exposition (1900) 87 Ill. App. 605, affirmed in (1900) 186 Ill. 356, 78 Am. St. Rep. 288, 57 N. C. 1043, the decision proceeded upon the ground that the question of ultra vires could not be raised by a third person.

<sup>4</sup> Imperial Bldg. Co. v. Chicago Open Bd. of Trade (1908) 238 Ill. 100, 87 N. C. 167, relying upon National Home Bldg. Asso. v. Home Sav. Bank (1899) 181 Ill. 35, 64 L.R.A. 399, 72 Am. St. Rep. 245, 54 N. E. 619, and Best Brewing Co. v. Klassen (1900) 185 Ill. 37, 50 L.R.A. 765, 76 Am. St. Rep. 26, 57 N. E. 20, in both of which it was the corporation which raised the plea of ultra vires.

For cases decided during this later period, in which it was laid down that no recovery could be had upon the contract itself, but relief independent of the contract was granted, see Leigh v. American Brake-Bench Co. (1903) 205 Ill. 147, 68 N. E. 713, affirming (1903) 107 Ill. App.

the doctrine that "the plea of ultra vires may be successfully interposed in a collateral proceeding where the corporation is alleged to have performed an act which it was not, under any circumstances, authorized to perform; but that where the act is one which at most is but a mere abuse or excessive use of a general power conferred upon the corporation by its charter, such plea cannot be successfully interposed, because the question of ultra vires can in such cases be raised only in a direct proceeding by the state to oust the corporation of its usurped powers."<sup>5</sup> The doctrine thus invoked was possibly relied upon because the principle of estoppel, which would obviously have been applicable under the given circumstances, had been repudiated. But the court was manifestly wrong in assuming it to be a universally accepted doctrine that the operation of the rule as to the exclusive right of the state to raise the question of ultra vires is confined to the latter of the two classes of transactions which are distinguished. In nearly all, if not all, the other cases in which it has been recognized, the rule has been treated as being one of general application. (See § 8, supra.) It is difficult to avoid the suspicion that, in predicating this distinction, the court may have been misled by the analogy of the theory (propounded both in Illinois itself and in other jurisdictions), that the principle of estoppel is not applicable to transactions belonging to the former class of transactions.<sup>6</sup>

In one case where the plea of ultra vires was held not to be available in an action brought to enforce a claim arising from a guaranty given by a national bank, the decision was explicitly founded on the doctrine of the Federal Supreme Court with regard to the unauthorized contracts of such corporations. See § 17, supra.<sup>7</sup>

81. Indiana.

In § 81 of the monograph appended to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment Co. v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. L.R.A.1917A, 737, it has been shown that the decisions and dicta of the supreme court of this state, while they are not altogether consistent, betoken on the whole an acceptance of the doctrine that the plea of ultra vires cannot be interposed in an action brought against a corporation upon a contract of which it has received the benefits. In all the cases relating to actions brought by a corporation, the position has been taken that the fact of the defendant's having received the benefits of the contract in question estops him from alleging its invalidity.<sup>1</sup>

444 (contract to take the money of a manufacturing company and lend it for use in various enterprises); United States Brewing Co. v. Dolese & S. Co. (1913) 259 Ill. 274, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 898, 102 N. E. 753, reversing (1912) 174 Ill. App. 394 (contract to accept, for use as boarding house, a building which the plaintiff undertook to erect).

<sup>5</sup> Rector v. Hartford Deposit Co. (1901) 190 Ill. 380, 60 N. E. 528, affirming (1900) 92 Ill. App. 175 (action for rent of room in building, the erection of which constituted an abuse of the plaintiff's power to hold real estate). The doctrine thus enunciated was relied upon in Daniels v. Belvidere Cemetery Asso. (1901) 96 Ill. App. 387, affirmed in (1901) 193 Ill. 181, 61 N. E. 1031, where, however, the court did not refer to the doctrine stated in the text (purchase of mortgage, for foreclosure of which the suit was brought, violated the power of plaintiff in respect of the amount of personalty which it could acquire); Western Teleph. Mfg. Co. v. Foley (1909) 160 Ill. App. 343 (purchase of note for purposes of speculation or accommodation); Commercial Co. v. Sturges (1914) 186 Ill. App. 573 (action for rent).

<sup>6</sup> See § 43 of the monograph appended to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment Co. v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. L.R.A.1917A, 737. L.R.A.1917B.

<sup>7</sup> Voltz v. National Bank (1895) 158 Ill. 532, 30 L.R.A. 155, 42 N. E. 69, affirming (1895) 57 Ill. App. 360.

Indiana.

<sup>1</sup> Poock v. Lafayette Bldg. Asso. (1880) 71 Ind. 357 (action on promissory note given for a loan); Voris v. Star City Bldg. & L. Asso. (1898) 20 Ind. App. 630, 50 N. E. 779 (person who negotiated a sale of school warrants which inured to his sole benefit was held, in an action against him on his guaranty of warrants, to be estopped from denying the power of the vendee, a building and loan association, to purchase the warrants); Noah v. German-American Bldg. Asso. (1903) 31 Ind. App. 504, 68 N. E. 615 (loan on mortgage security).

In Huter v. Union Trust Co. (1898) — Ind. —, 51 N. E. 1071, the Union Trust Company was the receiver of the Mutual Life Insurance Company, and Huter, a person to whom the company had, in excess of its powers, lent money on the building and loan plan, filed his petition asking that a bond and mortgage for $600, given by him to the insurance company, be found paid and be ordered canceled. The court said: "In the case at bar the intervener is not refusing to pay his debt. He insists only that the money paid by him to this insurance company shall be applied on his

32. Iowa.

In one case where the fact that the amount of a loan made by a national bank exceeded the statutory limit was held not to be a good defense to a suit brought to foreclose the mortgage which secured the loan, the court simply followed the Federal rulings discussed in § 17, supra.<sup>1</sup> This decision, therefore, affords no definite information as to the views of the court concerning the general question whether an estoppel against pleading ultra vires can be predicated from the fact that the party sued by the corporation has received the benefits of the contract. Subsequently it was laid down in Iowa with reference to a bank organized under an Iowa statute, that "the general rule applicable to loans of this character [i. e., in excess of amount authorized] is that they are not void, the prohibition of the statute being intended as a rule for the government of the bank."<sup>2</sup> It may be conjectured that the reason why the principle of estoppel was not invoked in this case was that, in the view of the court, that principle was not applicable with respect to a contract debt. He is not repudiating, but seeking to make good, his obligation. He is asking only that illegal fines, dues, and other unauthorized charges against him be set aside. The intervener is, indeed, in no different situation from that of any other person who should have borrowed money from the insurance company. He must pay his debt, with interest. But the money which he has already paid into the treasury of the company, whether called monthly dues, interest, fines, or by any other name, should first be applied on this debt. If any balance then remain unpaid, the intervener will be a debtor as to that, but as to that only, and, on the payment by him of such balance, his bond should be canceled and surrendered and his mortgage satisfied of record." The court referred with approval to State Bd. of Agri. v. Citizens' Street R. Co. (1874) 47 Ind. 407, 17 Am. Rep. 702, in which the principle of estoppel was applied in an action against a corporation.

Iowa.

<sup>1</sup> Mills County Nat. Bank v. Perry (1887) 72 Iowa, 15, 2 Am. St. Rep. 228, 33 N. W. 341.

<sup>2</sup> Benton County Sav. Bank v. Boddicker (1898) 105 Iowa, 548, 45 L.R.A. 321, 67 Am. St. Rep. 310, 75 N. W. 632, where an action was held to be maintainable on a bond given by the defendants as sureties for the payment of a loan.

<sup>3</sup> Bankers' Mut. Casualty Co. v. First Nat. Bank (1906) 131 Iowa, 456, 108 N. W. 1046, where the right of an insurance company to recover on a note given by the defendant for the amount of his premium was thus discussed on demurrer: "Assuming as an original proposition that appellee's construction of the statute is correct, does it necessarily follow that the policy issued by the appellant was void and the note in suit without any valuable consideration? This question we are constrained to answer in the negative. For the purposes of the organization of an insurance corporation with authority to do business in this state, the interpretation of the statute governing the same and the determination of the validity of such organization and its plan of business are committed primarily to the attorney general and auditor of state. Having adopted articles of incorporation expressly assuming to transact the business of burglary insurance, and having secured from the proper authority a finding that such business was authorized by the statute and that its organization was sufficient for such purpose, no court would permit it to escape liability on a contract issued by such authority on the plea of ultra vires. It is a plea not favored in law, and is never sustained save where the most persuasive considerations of public policy require it. . . . A corporation having received the benefit of a contract is estopped to plead want of power to enter into it. . . . Had the appellee sustained a loss within the terms of its policy, the appellant could not have successfully interposed the plea of ultra vires. It cannot be said, therefore, that the premium note was without consideration."

which violates an expressly prohibitory provision like the one in question. The language used in a still more recent case indicates an adoption of the broad principle that the party against whom suit is brought on a contract of which he has received the benefits cannot interpose the plea of ultra vires; or at all events embodies a theory which produces virtually the same consequences as that principle.<sup>3</sup> But the reasoning of the court is perhaps unnecessarily circuitous, in view of the fact that the circumstances seem to have been plainly suggestive of the applicability of the broad principle of estoppel which had previously been recognized in several Iowa cases with respect to actions against corporations.

33. Kansas.

In the earliest case which bears upon the subject of the present monograph, an action brought to restrain a national bank from enforcing notes and a mortgage given to it for the purpose of securing money borrowed by the plaintiff was held not to be maintainable, the reason assigned being that, even if "the bank was guilty of an infraction of the law in making the loan, and by reason thereof it could never enforce payment in the courts," the petition disclosed no ground for granting the relief asked for, because "it is not enough for the plaintiff in an equity suit to show that the defendant has done wrong; he must also make it appear that he has done right."<sup>1</sup> This decision, however, if we advert to the general principle upon which it proceeded, and the hypothetical character of the language used with respect to the inability of the bank to make the loan, cannot warrantably be said to indicate that the court actually regarded the plea of ultra vires as being a bar to an action brought by the bank directly against the borrower. Moreover, if it could be regarded as a definite precedent for such a doctrine, it would, so far as the remedial rights of national banks are concerned, be of no authority in view of the more recent rulings of the Federal Supreme Court, which are reviewed in § 17, supra.

The theory that, in an action brought by a corporation on a contract which it has performed on its side, the defendant is estopped from setting up the plea of ultra vires, has been applied in some of the more recent cases.<sup>2</sup>

In one instance the ground upon which the corporation was held to be entitled to enforce the contract was that ordin-

Kansas.

<sup>1</sup> Elder v. First Nat. Bank (1873) 12 Kan. 238.

<sup>2</sup> In Alexandria, A. & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Johnson (1897) 58 Kan. 175, 48 Pac. 847, where the defendant guaranteed to the plaintiff railroad company the repayment of money to be expended by it for another railroad company under a contract between such companies, it was held that they could not, after the money had been expended, escape the liability upon the guaranty by showing that the former company had no power to enter into the contract with the latter. The court said: "It is without doubt true that one may may refuse performance of an unexecuted contract ultra vires in its nature, because of the legal wrong of its performance; but the law is quite lacking in tenderness for such virtuous scruples as arise only after the receipt of benefits from its performance by the other side. In this case the costs of the survey have been paid by the Arcadia Company,—at least so claimed by it. The law, therefore, will not permit the Kansas City Company to refuse payment upon the ground of the invalidity of other and collateral conditions of the contract; and its sureties stand upon no better footing."

In Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Robinson (1898) 59 Kan. 777, 53 Pac. 762, a building company having a contract for the erection of a government building arranged with the First National Bank, of which Robinson was receiver, for a loan, the agreement being that the government warrants received as the work progressed should be forwarded to the bank, and then indorsed to it, to be applied on its debt. After several instalments of the loan had been repaid on this footing, the National Bank suspended. A treasury warrant subsequently issued was delivered, after the president of the building company had indorsed it, to Walworth, the temporary receiver of the bank, and by him it was transferred to the Farmers' National Bank, which had previously lent money to the First National Bank. The proceeds of the warrant were used by the transferee for its own purposes, with the exception of a certain sum which it turned over to the receiver. An action brought by Robinson, the permanent receiver of the First National Bank, was held to be maintainable for reasons thus stated: "We think the First National Bank had an equitable claim upon this warrant and the fund, and that its claim was not defeated through the taking and appropriation of the same by the Farmers' National Bank. It is said that the First National Bank had no power to deal in such securities; that it can only carry on a commercial business and loan money on personal securities. If it be conceded that this security is not of a class which a national bank may take, the defense of ultra vires is not one that the building company could make after the loan had been made and the illegal contract, if it may be so termed, executed. Money had been loaned far in excess of the amount in the warrant wrongfully taken by the plaintiff in error. When the estimates were furnished, the amount of the same was credited to the building company. When the warrant therefor was issued, it was delivered by Clum & Dingman in behalf of the building company to the First National Bank, and for a time it had manual possession of the same. If the building company had brought an action to recover the draft, or the proceeds of the same, a court would hardly listen to a claim at that time that the bank was without authority to make the agreement which was made. It could not retain the money which had been loaned, and set up the claim that the bank had no power to make the agreement by which the loan of the money was obtained. After the contract was executed and the benefits received, the building company would be estopped to deny the authority and power of the bank. The plaintiff in error, which was acquainted with the facts, or chargeable with knowledge of the relations which existed between the building company and the defendant in error, is in no better position than the building company, and cannot set up a defense which the building company could not make." No reference was made to the Federal decisions arily the question whether a corporation has exceeded its powers in entering into a contract can be raised only by the state or a stockholder.<sup>3</sup>

34. Kentucky.

In an early case where the action was brought for the recovery of money lent by the plaintiff bank, a plea was held bad which averred that it had lent the defendant bank notes which were "bills of credit," within the meaning of the clause of the Federal Constitution which prohibits the issue of such instruments by any state.<sup>1</sup> The report does not give any information regarding the ground upon which the ruling was based, but, in view of the date of the case, it is safe to say that the decision was in no wise referable to the principle of estoppel.

The following statement of doctrine by an eminent text writer has been approved by a recent case: "Where the corporation is plaintiff in the action, and is seeking to enforce a contract into which it had no power to enter, if the defendant has received the benefit of the contract he will not be allowed to defend on the ground that it was ultra vires, until he restores the benefits which he received."<sup>2</sup> reviewed in § 17, supra. But the judgment was affirmed without opinion in (1900) 176 U. S. 681, 44 L. ed. 637, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1027.

For a case in which the principle of estoppel was applied for the benefit of a public corporation, see Electric Plaster Co. v. Blue Rapids City Twp. (1908) 77 Kan. 580, 96 Pac. 68 (action to recover a stipulated sum).

<sup>3</sup> Harris v. Independence Gas Co. (1907) 76 Kan. 750, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1171, 92 Pac. 1123 (where the actual point determined was that the plaintiff was not entitled to sue for the cancelation of the contract).

Kentucky.

<sup>1</sup> Lampton v. Commonwealth's Bank (1822) 2 Litt. (Ky.) 300.

<sup>2</sup> Johnson v. Mason Lodge, I. O. O. F. (1899) 106 Ky. 838, 51 S. W. 620 (suit on note given for loan), quoting Thomp. Corp. 1st ed. § 5274. The court rejected the contention that the doctrine stated in the text was inapplicable because the contract in question was expressly forbidden and contrary to public policy. This is one of the very few instances in which a contract of this description has been treated as being within the scope of the doctrine. See § 44 of the monograph appended to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment Co. v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. L.R.A.1917A, 737.

A later case which was presumably decided upon the same footing, although the language of the court is not entirely clear, is Louisville Tobacco Warehouse Co. v. Stewart (1902) 24 Ky. L. Rep. 934, 70 S. W. 285. There the contention that the note in question was void, because it had been given to the plaintiff corporation as one of the incidents of an ultra vires contract made with one Stewart to purchase tobacco from planters, was thus dealt with: "Such an objection must be pleaded; but, if pleaded, it would not be available, because the corporation is here suing Stewart for money which it paid to him, and, if it embarked in a business it had no power to carry on, its want of power to carry on the business might have been a good defense for it, if sued for refusing to carry out its contract, or if Stewart was suing it for damages sustained by him in the transaction; but it is no reason, when the transaction has been voluntarily completed by it, that the court should give judgment in its favor against Stewart for the loss which it has thus sustained" [on the sale of tobacco purchased for it].

In Louis Blitz & Co. v. Bank of Kentucky (1900) 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1554, 55 S. W. 697, the substance of the petition was that, by virtue of a mortgage, the appellee bank became the legal owner of the De Pauw Company's glassworks, material on hand, and stock of goods; that the appellee authorized the company to manufacture, sell, and dispose of these goods, wares, and merchandise in the usual and ordinary course of trade, as their agents; and that while so acting the De Pauw Company contracted with plaintiff for certain glass, for the breach of which contract it seeks damages. The court, after observing that, if the mortgage was susceptible of the construction placed upon it by appellant, it was clearly ultra vires in so far as appellees undertake to carry on the manufacture of glass, continued thus: "It is a general principle of law that a party will not be permitted to set up this defense when retaining the fruits or benefits of the contract; but it is not alleged in any of plaintiff's pleadings that appellees ever received anything from the profits of the business or proceeds of the sale, or that they ever ratified, confirmed, or knew of the alleged contract made by the Indiana corporation with appellant. We are therefore of the opinion that the petition as amended fails to state facts sufficient to support a cause of action against appellees, and that the lower court did not err in sustaining the general demurrer to the petition."

In Brown v. United States Home & Dower Asso. (1890) 12 Ky. L. Rep. 283, 13 S. W. 1085, it was laid down that the maker of a note cannot, in an action brought thereon by a bona fide holder, escape liability by setting up the defense that the original holder, or corporation, had no authority to lend the money which was the consideration of the note. But it is not apparent from the opinion whether the defense of ultra vires was excluded with reference to the ## 35. Louisiana.

In an early case in which a suit to restrain an order of seizure by which the defendant corporation was attempting to enforce a mortgage was held not to be maintainable, the ground upon which the court proceeded was that the question whether the corporation, which was authorized by its charter to lend money upon mortgage on lands only where they were in a state of cultivation, had exceeded its authority by making a loan upon unimproved property, was one which concerned only the state and the stockholders.<sup>1</sup> The conclusion thus arrived at was manifestly the same as that which would have resulted from the application of the doctrine of an estoppel as based upon an acceptance of the benefits of the contract. But at the time when the decision was rendered, that doctrine had not yet been distinctly formulated by any American court.

The theory as to the exclusive right of the state to raise the question of a want of power in the plaintiffs to make the contract under review was also the ratio decidendi in one of the more recent cases.<sup>2</sup> In another the doctrine of estoppel was relied upon. It should be observed, however, that in this instance the evidence showed something more than merely the fact of the defendant's having enjoyed the fruits of the contract.<sup>3</sup> theory of an estoppel predicated from the receipt of benefits, or to the special protection accorded to purchasers of negotiable instruments.

Louisiana.

<sup>1</sup> Barrow v. Bank of Louisiana (1847) 2 La. Ann. 453.

<sup>2</sup> Southern Lumber Co. v. Holt (1911) 129 La. 273, 55 So. 986, where the court quoted with approval the following statement 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 73: "If a corporation purchases, pays for, and takes an assignment of a cause of action respecting matters outside the purpose of its creation, and not authorized by its charter, in an action to enforce such cause of action, want of corporate power to engage in such business cannot be interposed as a defense."

<sup>3</sup> The purport of Keystone L. Ins. Co. v. Von Schlemmer (1908) 122 La. 280, 47 So. 606, is thus stated in the opinion: "Sued by the plaintiff company on his subscription to 50 shares of its capital stock, the defendant seeks to escape liability by pleading an alleged fatal variance between the charter of the company and the terms of his subscription; the charter requiring subscriptions of stock to be 'paid in cash,' and the terms of his subscription being '25 per cent per month until full payment.' The L.R.A.1917B.

36. Maine.

The precise point affirmed by the court in an early case was simply that the right of the plaintiff "to claim compensation for boomage of logs, which it was by its charter authorized to collect and receive, could not be affected by an attempt to connect it with the performance of other unauthorized acts."<sup>1</sup> But it was also laid down that a corporation cannot by its vote confer authority upon an agent to enter into a contract which is outside the scope of its power. Having regard to the character of the doctrine thus propounded, and to the date at which the decision was rendered, it may reasonably be inferred that the court considered an ultra vires contract to be absolutely void in such a sense that it could not, under any circumstances, constitute the foundation of a legal claim.

In a subsequent case the court, taking the position that the statute by which savings banks were prohibited from lending money on the security of names alone was merely a direction to the trustees, and was designed for the protection of the depositors, held that such a bank might maintain an action on a promissory note, whether the purchase was or was not in conformity with the provisions of the statute.<sup>2</sup> Having regard to its rationale this decision seems to indicate that an ultra vires district court and also the court of appeal (the case is here on writ of review) were of the opinion that by payment 'in cash' the charter means no more than that payment shall not be in anything but money, and that, moreover, defendant is estopped from contesting the subscription; he having made it after he had acted as one of the directors of the plaintiff company, and in order to qualify as such. We prefer to rest our decision on the estoppel."

Maine.

<sup>1</sup> Bangor Boom Corp. v. Whiting (1848) 29 Me. 123.

<sup>2</sup> Farmington Sav. Bank v. Fall (1880) 71 Me. 49. The court remarked that the reasons for its decision were adverted to in Roberts v. Lane (1874) 64 Me. 108, 18 Am. Rep. 242, which was not distinguishable in principle from the case before it, although the same statutory prohibition was not there invoked to invalidate the transfer of the note. It will be observed that the ground relied upon by the court was similar to one of those subsequently invoked by the Federal Supreme Court in the leading case of Union Nat. Bank v. Matthews (1878) 98 U. S. 621, 25 L. ed. 188. See § 17, supra.

contract was considered to be nonenforceable under all circumstances.

But the views of the court upon this point have ceased to be a matter merely of inference, for, in the latest case in which it has had occasion to express an opinion, the contention that, inasmuch as the defendant company took and held possession of the plaintiff company's works by virtue of the lease, ultra vires was no defense to an action to recover the agreed rent, was rejected for reasons thus stated: "We do not doubt that the plaintiff company is entitled to recover a reasonable rent for the time the defendant company actually occupied the works; but do not think the amount can be measured by the ultra vires agreement. We think that in such cases the recovery must be had upon an implied agreement to pay a reasonable rent, and that, while the ultra vires agreement may be used as evidence, in the nature of an admission, of what is a reasonable rent, it cannot be allowed to govern or control the amount. It seems to us that it would be absurd to hold that the ultra vires lease is void and at the same time hold that it governs the rights of the parties with respect to the amount of rent to be recovered. A void instrument governs nothing."<sup>2</sup>

37. Maryland.

The decisions in this state are so conflicting that, for the purposes of a complete historical summary, it has been <sup>2</sup> Brunswick Gaslight Co. v. United Gas, Fuel & Light Co. (1893) 85 Me. 541, 35 Am. St. Rep. 385, 27 Atl. 525.

Maryland.

<sup>1</sup> Albert v. Savings Bank (1849) 1 Md. Ch. 407; United German Bank v. Katz (1881) 57 Md. 128; Black v. First Nat. Bank (1903) 96 Md. 399, 54 Atl. 88; Lazear v. National Union Bank (1879) 52 Md. 78, 36 Am. Rep. 355. The second and third of these cases are authorities for the doctrine that a corporation which has performed an ultra vires contract on its side is entitled to maintain an action on the contract. The first contains an obiter dictum to the opposite effect. In the fourth the right of action was expressly denied.

Massachusetts.

<sup>1</sup> In Little v. O'Brien (1812) 9 Mass. 423, an insurance company which was required by the terms of its incorporation to invest its stock in certain specified funds received private notes from the several stockholders in payment of their respective shares. It was argued that this conduct of the company was such a contravention of its duty as would avoid the note given by the L.R.A. 1917B.

deemed advisable to review in the same monograph both the cases in which the corporation was the defendant and those in which it was the moving party. See § 86 of the monograph appended to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment Co. v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. L.R.A. 1917A, 737. In this place, therefore, it will be sufficient to give a list of the cases which bear upon the right of a corporation to suit upon the contract.<sup>1</sup>

38. Massachusetts.

The earliest cases which were concerned with the remedial rights of a corporation in respect of an ultra vires contract turned upon the general principle that the question of invalidity was one which only the state was entitled to raise.<sup>1</sup> These cases have sometimes been cited by courts which were arguing in favor of the theory of an estoppel as predicated from the acceptance of the benefits of the transactions, but manifestly they have no real relevancy in respect of that theory.

In the next case which bears upon the subject, the point actually decided was that, in an action on a promissory note, it was not a good defense that the plaintiff, a national bank, had no authority to purchase it.<sup>2</sup> The court answered in the negative the essential question which was deemed to be presented by the evidence; viz., "Can a party to a contract in itself lawful, and into which all the parties to it had authority to enter, be made null or be incapable of enforce-defendant. But the court said: "Whether, for this misbehavior of the corporation, the government might not seize their franchise, upon due process, is a question not now before us. It is, however, a sufficient answer to the objection, that it does not lie in the mouth of a stockholder for this cause to avoid his contract, which, as between him and the company, was made on a sufficient consideration."

In Chester Glass Co. v. Dewey (1819) 16 Mass. 94, 8 Am. Dec. 128, the grounds upon which an action for the price of goods was held to be maintainable were thus stated: "As to the fourth objection, which was to the recovery on the count for goods sold and delivered, on the ground that the plaintiffs were prohibited from trading, it cannot avail. The legislature did not intend to prohibit the supply of goods to those employed in the manufactory. Besides, the defendant cannot refuse payment on this ground; but the legislature may enforce the prohibition by causing the charter to be revoked when they shall determine that it has been abused."

<sup>2</sup> National Pemberton Bank v. Porter (1878) 125 Mass. 333, 28 Am. Rep. 235.

ment, because the plaintiff has entered into and fully performed, with another and totally distinct party, a contract in reference to it which was unauthorized, even though by such contract he becomes a party to the contract in suit?" But the principle to which the earlier decisions were referred was also approved.

The doctrine as to the exclusive right of the state to raise the question of ultra vires constituted the primary ratio decidendi in a subsequent case in which it was held that the plaintiff, although incorporated for the purpose of manufacturing, and consequently not authorized to keep a store at which persons like the defendant, who were not in its employ, could purchase groceries and other commodities, was entitled to maintain an action in respect of certain goods supplied by it.<sup>3</sup> The court, after pointing out that the statement made in an earlier case with regard to the principle was "wholly obiter dictum,"<sup>4</sup> continued thus: "But the weight of authority, we think, supports the last reason given in its application to the facts of the present case. There is a distinction between a corporation making a contract in excess of its powers and making a contract which it is prohibited by statute from making, or which is against public policy or sound morals; and there is also a distinction between suing for the breach of an executory contract and suing to recover the value of property which has been received and retained by the defendant under a contract executed on the part of the plaintiff." But the opinion also contains the following passage: "If it be assumed, in favor of the defendant, that the contracts of sale in the case at bar were ultra vires of the corporation, they were not contracts which were prohibited, or contracts which were void as against public policy or good morals; the defect in them is that the corporation exceeded its powers in making them. The defendant, under these contracts, has received the goods, and retained and used them.

Either the corporation must lose the value of its property, or the defendant must pay for it; in such an alternative, courts have held, on one ground or another, that an action can be maintained when the sole defect is a want of authority on the part of the corporation to make the contract. We think that the corporation can maintain an action of contract against the defendant to recover the value of the goods. The defendant is not permitted to set up this want of authority as a defense; and, as the form of the transaction was that of contract, such should be the form of the action." These remarks, if they do not amount to an explicit approval of the doctrine of estoppel in respect of contracts which are merely ultra vires, as distinguished from those which are expressly prohibited, might apparently be construed, without any severe straining of the language, as an expression of the views of a court which did not condemn that doctrine. But as the decision belongs to a period during which the court made, with reference to actions against corporations, several rulings which were inconsistent with that doctrine (see § 87 of the monograph appended to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment Co. v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. L.R.A.1917A, 737), it would seem preferable to assume that in this instance it did not intend to go any further than to affirm the right of the plaintiff to recover on a quantum meruit. That this was its actual position is strongly indicated by the reservation expressed in the statement that it was "not required to determine whether an action can be maintained to recover the price as distinguished from the value of the goods, as no exception has been taken to the measure of damages." The particular aspect of the case to which these words allude would most probably have been adverted to in somewhat different terms, if the principle of estoppel had been the real basis of the decision. But it must be admitted that, when all is said, the precise position of

This case, it will be observed, was decided in the same year as Union Nat. Bank v. Matthews (1878) 98 U. S. 621, 25 L. ed. 188, with which it is in accord so far as regards the conclusion arrived at, that the unauthorized character of the transaction was not an element which precluded recovery. But the Federal decision was based upon different grounds. See § 17, supra. It was not brought to the attention of the Massachusetts court, and possibly had not yet been reported.

In Atlas Nat. Bank v. Savery (1879) 127 L.R.A.1917B.

Mass. 75, involving similar facts, the earlier ruling was followed.

In Lyndeborough Glass Co. v. Massachusetts Glass Co. (1873) 111 Mass. 315, where it was contended that a contract of sale was ultra vires and therefore not enforceable, the ratio decidendi was simply that it was ultra vires.

<sup>3</sup> Slater Woollen Co. v. Lamb (1887) 143 Mass. 420, 9 N. E. 823.

<sup>4</sup> Chester Glass Co. v. Dewey, note 1, supra.

the court in respect of this phase of the case remains somewhat uncertain. The suggested construction of the language of the opinion is certainly open to the possible objection that, if the court intended merely to assert that the corporation was entitled to resort to remedies other than an action on the contract itself, the distinction which it had previously taken between contracts in excess of corporate powers and those which are prohibited as against public policy or immoral would be apparently pointless. As independent remedies are available also to persons who enter into contracts belonging to these contrasted categories, there would seem to be no occasion to differentiate them from ultra vires contracts, if merely the right to pursue those remedies is assumed to have been in question.

In a somewhat later case, where the fact that the corporate stock, for a certificate of which the action was brought, had been acquired by an insurance company in excess of its powers, was held not to constitute a valid defense, the court again relied upon the principle that the question of ultra vires could not be raised except by the state.<sup>5</sup>

In a still later case involving a claim for the price of an elevator furnished to the defendant by the plaintiff under a written agreement, the ratio decidendi was that facts constituting a defense were not shown by an answer which alleged that, at the time of its making and performing the agreement, the plaintiff's capital stock had not been paid in, and a certificate of the payment, etc., had not been filed, as required by the Pub. Stat. chap. 106, § 46, which forbids a corporation to "commence the transaction of the business for which it was organized" until those things are done. That is to say, the position was taken that the provision in question, "when construed with the rest of the chapter and in the light of former decisions, could not be taken to make the contract void."<sup>6</sup> In this point of view the court had no occasion to consider the significance of the circumstance that the contract had been performed by the plaintiff. Indeed, the following unqualified language might possibly be construed as indicating that the circumstance would have been treated as immaterial if the contract had been considered void: "If, then, the contract sued upon bound the plaintiff, it would be entirely anomalous to hold that the defendant was free. The general rule is that, when a contract is made void by a prohibition, it is void against both sides. . . . The defense of ultra vires, in the sense that the contract was illegal or prohibited, has been set up by corporations so much oftener than against them, that it is hard to find cases of the latter sort, whereas if either party were to be precluded from it, it would be the corporation. It may be worth noticing, however, that the decisions assume that, if it is a defense to the corporation, it is a defense to the other party."

In one case in which the right of a national bank to sue on a contract made in excess of its statutory power was affirmed, the court simply followed the Federal decisions.<sup>7</sup>

From the foregoing summary it appears that in this state corporations which bring suit upon ultra vires contracts are, for practical purposes, in a position as advantageous as if the principle of estoppel were applied, but that the effect of performance as creating such estoppel has not as yet been definitely decided.

38a. Michigan.

In an early case it was laid down that the act of a bank in discounting a bill at higher rate of interest than that which it was allowed by its charter to reserve rendered the contract void and non-enforceable.<sup>1</sup> This is one of the cases which were decided before the principle of estoppel was distinctly laid down by any American judge, and with which, having regard to the facts involved, that principle is essentially inconsistent. The language used in the opinion also shows that the category of ultra vires contracts was assumed to comprehend those which were expressly prohibited as well as those which were merely unauthorized, and that no such distinction between these two descriptions of contracts as has been subsequently predicated in some jurisdictions was recognized by the court. In both these re-

<sup>5</sup> Chaffee v. Middlesex R. Co. (1888) 146 Mass. 224, 16 N. E. 34. The only authority cited was National Bank v. Whitney (1880) 103 U. S. 99, 26 L. ed. 443. See § 17, supra.

<sup>6</sup> Chase's Patent Elevator Co. v. Boston Tow Boat Co. (1890) 152 Mass. 428, 9 L.R.A. 339, 28 N. E. 300. L.R.A.1917B.

<sup>7</sup> Prescott Nat. Bank v. Butler (1893) 157 Mass. 548, 32 N. E. 909.

Michigan.

<sup>1</sup> Orr v. Lacey (1846) 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 254.

spects the case affords an exact parallel to many of the earlier New York cases.<sup>2</sup>

The effect of performance on the part of the corporation was not explicitly determined until about forty years afterwards, when the court followed the numerous precedents which had by that time been accumulated in favor of the principle of estoppel by the decisions in other states. This principle was affirmed without qualification in several cases.<sup>3</sup> But in one instance where affirmative relief was granted against a party who had partially performed the contract on his side, the ratio decidendi was that "the doctrine of estoppel cannot apply where there was no power conferred upon the corporation to convey the title and interest claimed." The reason assigned was that "both parties to the contract were presumed to have contracted with full knowledge of the law and powers inherent in the corporation," and that no charge of fraud or misrepresentation was or could be claimed.<sup>4</sup> If carried to its logical conclusion, the broad doctrine thus laid down would manifestly be fatal to the theory that the receipt of the benefits of the contract creates an estoppel. The antinomy thus presented affords an interesting example of the inconsistencies in which the adoption of that theory may entangle a court. Upon the given facts, however, the decision itself would seem, in the final analysis, to amount simply to an affirmation of the rule that an ultra vires contract cannot, in any point of view, become obligatory as the result of its partial performance by the party who is seeking to enforce it.

39. Minnesota.

In an early case involving the remedial rights of a corporation in respect of a promissory note given by the defendant for an insurance premium, it was held, on demurrer to an answer which alleged an excess of power in respect of the subject matter of the insurance, that the action was not maintainable.<sup>1</sup> The facts were plainly suggestive of the applicability of the principle of estoppel as predicated from the defendant's enjoyment of the benefits of the contract. But apparently none of the authorities which, even at the comparatively early date of the decision, were producible in favor of that principle, were known to the court. The ruling was based on the broad ground that "no person, natural or artificial, can enforce a contract which is void, illegal, or contrary to the policy of the law." With reference to the allegation that the plaintiff had been induced to enter into the contract by fraudulent representations, it was laid down that the doctrine of equitable estoppel could have no application in the case against the defendant, because "it is only invoked to prevent injustice and wrong, and when the party claiming its protection would in the eye of the law be defrauded, and the other party be guilty of a fraud by the allegation or proof of the truth."

In two later cases, where an action brought by a bank against the maker and indorser of a note which it had purchased from the latter was held not to be maintainable, the decision proceeded upon the ground that the purchase, being ultra vires, passed no title.<sup>2</sup> The question whether the receipt of the benefits of the contract precluded the defendants from relying on its invalidity was not considered. It is clear, however, that the conclusion arrived at is, upon the given facts, essentially inconsistent with the rule afterwards laid down by the court in a headnote prepared by it: "The plea of ultra vires, either for or against a corporation, cannot be permitted to prevail in cases of executed contracts, where it would not advance justice, but, on the contrary, accomplish a wrong under the forms of law."<sup>3</sup>

<sup>2</sup> See § 44, notes 3 and 4, infra.

<sup>3</sup> Hall Mfg. Co. v. American R. Supply Co. (1882) 48 Mich. 331, 12 N. W. 205 (contract for the exclusive right to sell patented article); Cleveland Paper Co. v. Courier Co. (1887) 67 Mich. 152, 34 N. W. 556 (sale of goods); Fifth Nat. Bank v. Pierce (1898) 117 Mich. 376, 75 N. W. 1058 (loan on mortgage).

<sup>4</sup> Hilldale College v. Rideout (1890) 82 Mich. 94, 46 N. W. 373, an injunction was granted to restrain the defendants from using a portion of the buildings of the plaintiff for the purpose of conducting a commercial school and maintaining dormitories.

L.R.A.1917B.

Minnesota.

<sup>1</sup> Rochester Ins. Co. v. Martin (1868) 13 Minn. 59, Gil. 54.

<sup>2</sup> Farmers' & M. Bank v. Baldwin (1876) 23 Minn. 198, 23 Am. Rep. 683. This decision was followed in First Nat. Bank v. Pierson (1877) 24 Minn. 140, 31 Am. Rep. 341, involving similar facts. The latter case was decided before National Bank v. Whitney (1880) 103 U. S. 99, 26 L. ed. 443, with which it seems to be inconsistent.

<sup>3</sup> Central Bldg. & L. Assn. v. Lampson (1895) 60 Minn. 422, 62 N. W. 544 (action brought to recover the sum by which the proceeds of a foreclosure sale fell short of

This formula is a quotation from a leading New York case in which the doctrine of an estoppel as based upon the execution of the contract by the party seeking to enforce the contract was applied.<sup>4</sup>

40. Mississippi.

An adoption of the doctrine of estoppel in its broadest form might seem to be imported by the following remark, made with regard to one aspect of an early case in which the plaintiff bank had discounted a promissory note at a rate of interest exceeding that authorized by its charter: "The contract on the part of the bank is executed, and the opposite party is secured in the enjoyment of the fruits beyond disturbance. How, then, can he object to the want of power?"<sup>1</sup> But the conclusion that this can scarcely have been the actual position which the court intended to take is indicated not only by the early date at which the case was decided, but also by the fact that in a somewhat later case involving the power of the plaintiff to lend the money for which the note upon which the action was brought had been given, the following reasons for refusing to sustain the defense of ultra vires were relied upon: "The distinction is obvious between a contract by a corporation made in reference to a subject lying entirely without the range of the objects for which its powers were granted, and an irregular or illegal exercise of a right conveyed by its charter. If a corporation makes a contract entirely foreign to the purposes of its institution, the act is void, simply for want of power in reference to the subject matter. . . . But where a corporation enters into a contract in reference to a subject embraced within the scope of its granted powers, but in so doing exceeds them, the contract will not thereby be rendered void. It might constitute a the amount of the loss secured by the mortgage).

The rule stated in the text was also taken for granted in Fergus Falls v. Fergus Falls Hotel Co. (1900) 80 Minn. 165, 50 L.R.A. 170, 81 Am. St. Rep. 249, 83 N. W. 54, where it was held that a subsequent purchaser of property with notice of an existing mortgage lien cannot take advantage of the ultra vires character of the loan secured by the mortgage.

<sup>4</sup> Whitney Arms Co. v. Barlow (1875) 63 N. Y. 72, 20 Am. Rep. 504.

Mississippi.

<sup>1</sup> Commercial Bank v. Nolan (1843) 7 How. (Miss.) 508 (note discounted at excess L.R.A.1917B.

ground for the resumption of its franchises by the state, but could not be objected by the party sought to be charged."<sup>2</sup> The relevance of the principle of estoppel to the circumstances here under review is so manifest that it would almost certainly have been invoked if the court had regarded it as being an accepted qualification of the doctrine of ultra vires. As it stands, the decision would seem to amount simply to an assertion that the defense of ultra vires is not available in an action by a corporation, because the question of a defect of power is one which cannot be raised except by the state, and is applicable only to the first of the two descriptions of contracts specified. But possibly the court regarded the rule regarding the exclusive right of the state to interfere as one which was concurrently applicable to the former of the classes of contracts to which it refers. Upon any other supposition the case would be inconsistent with the last of the cases reviewed in this section, which clearly involved contracts belonging to that class.

The doctrine enunciated in the passage quoted above was again indorsed in a case in which the trustees of the school fund of a township were held to be entitled to enforce as a mortgage an absolute deed executed to secure a note given for a loan, although the regulating statute authorized them to lend the fund only on notes with good personal securities.<sup>3</sup> The circumstance from which the invalidity of the contract was here predicated was, it is apprehended, one which would be regarded by most courts as a mere informality, to which the expression "ultra vires" is applicable only in a secondary sense. See §§ 6-8, of the monograph appended to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment Co. v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. L.R.A.1917A, 737. It would seem that, if this was really the nature of the transaction, the sive rate). This case was approved in Planters Bank v. Sharp (1844) 4 Smedes & M. 75, 43 Am. Dec. 470.

In a somewhat later case, where the defense was that the contract provided for a higher interest than that specified in the plaintiff's charter, one of the grounds upon which the decision proceeded was that the contract was invalid only in respect of the excess. The court also invoked the doctrine that only the state can raise the question of ultra vires. Grand Gulf Bank v. Archer (1847) 8 Smedes & M. 151.

<sup>2</sup> Haynes v. Covington (1850) 13 Smedes & M. 408.

<sup>3</sup> Littlewort v. Davis (1874) 50 Miss. 403.

doctrine formulated in the earlier case was wrongly invoked.

In the most recent case that bears upon the remedial rights of a corporation, two counties which had subscribed for the bonds of a railroad corporation sought to have a sale of its franchises to another company canceled on the ground that the vendee had no authority to make such a purchase. The ground upon which the suit was held not to be maintainable was that, "whatever complaint might be made by creditors of the selling corporation or stockholders of the purchasing company, or by the state in its sovereign capacity, this objection cannot be made by the selling company or its stockholders."<sup>4</sup>

The foregoing summary indicates that, except perhaps in a single case which is of dubious significance in this regard, the doctrine of estoppel, as predicated from the execution of the contract, has never been recognized in this state with regard to actions in which the corporation was the claimant. But an affirmation of its applicability to such actions, whenever the question is explicitly presented, is a virtual certainty, having regard to the fact that it has now been definitively established with respect to actions against corporations. See § 90 of the monograph just referred to.

41. Missouri.

In an early case which involved the right of the defendant corporation to set off a claim based on a promissory note executed by the plaintiff and assigned to it, the ground upon which judgment was held to have been properly rendered in its favor was simply that the plaintiff had not specified in his reply the facts on which he relied for the purpose of showing the illegality of the conduct of the defendant in receiving the note used as a set-off.<sup>1</sup> For the purposes of this decision it would seem that the court must have assumed that no action could have been maintained upon the contract if it had been shown to be ultra vires.

The more recent cases have turned upon the broad doctrine "that the question of ultra vires can only be raised in a direct proceeding by the state against the corporation, and not in a collateral proceeding by another party, except when the charter of the corporation not only specifies, and therefore limits it to, the business in which it may engage, but by express terms, or by a fair implication from its term, invalidates transactions outside of its legitimate corporate business."<sup>2</sup> Apparently this is the only aspect under which general question of the right of the corporation to maintain an action has hitherto been considered by the supreme court. But with reference to the statute which authorizes the formation of banking corporations with power to loan money "at a rate of interest not to exceed 10 per cent per annum," it has been held that a note taken for a loan at a greater rate of interest is not wholly void, but merely nonenforceable in respect of the excessive rate of interest.<sup>3</sup>

The rulings of the court of appeals have proceeded on various grounds. Some of its decisions have, like those of the supreme court, proceeded upon the theory that the question of ultra vires is one which only the state can raise.<sup>4</sup> It has enunciated the doctrine that "where a corporation departs from its proper powers, either by exceeding them or by refusing to exercise such as are essential to the grant as a whole, and the departure involves questions of state policy or matters which affect the rights of the public, there, independently of any direct proceeding upon the part of the state for violation of char-

<sup>4</sup> Hinds County v. Natchez, J. & C. R. Co. (1904) 85 Miss. 599, 107 Am. St. Rep. 305, 38 So. 189.

Missouri.

<sup>1</sup> Hart v. Missouri State Mut. F. & M. Ins. Co. (1855) 21 Mo. 93.

<sup>2</sup> St. Louis Drug Co. v. Robinson (1883) 81 Mo. 19 (accommodation indorsement of note).

For other cases which have proceeded upon the same ground, see St. Joseph F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Hauck (1880) 71 Mo. 465, former appeal (1876) 63 Mo. 112 (suit on note discounted by plaintiff); Franklin Ave. German Sav. Inst. v. Board of Education (1882) 75 Mo. 408 (suit on bond purchased by plaintiff); Union Nat. Bank v. Hunt (1882) 76 Mo. 439, affirming (1879) 7 Mo. L.R.A.1917B.

App. 42 (suit on note taken for some of its own stock which it had been obliged to purchase in order to protect itself from loss).

The decision to the opposite effect in Matthews v. Skinker (1876) 62 Mo. 329, 21 Am. Rep. 425, was reversed in Union Nat. Bank v. Matthews (1878) 98 U. S. 621, 25 L. ed. 188. See § 17, supra.

<sup>3</sup> Farmers' & T. Bank v. Harrison (1874) 57 Mo. 512.

<sup>4</sup> See Mt. Vernon Bank v. Porter (1893) 52 Mo. App. 244 (action against cashier of plaintiff to compel him to account for commission received for negotiating certain bonds), and the cases cited in § 8, with regard to the impeachment of the right of a corporation to hold real estate.

ter, the courts will refuse to countenance or lend their aid to actions or defenses which are based upon such departures."<sup>5</sup> The principle of an estoppel as predicated from the receipt and retention of the benefits of the contract has been recognized by it in several cases.<sup>6</sup> In one case the contract has been regarded as entirely void.<sup>7</sup>

In one case where an action was held

<sup>5</sup> St. Louis Stoneware Co. v. Partridge (1880) 8 Mo. App. 217, where the actual point determined was that, where the president of a corporation, who had, with other officers, bought stock for the corporation, could not set up the doctrine of ultra vires as a defense to an action for conversion of the stock.

<sup>6</sup> In St. Louis Drug Co. v. Robinson (1881) 10 Mo. App. 588, it was laid down that, where a corporation indorsed notes for the accommodation of the maker, taking a mortgage from him as indemnity against its liability on the indorsement, and was thereafter compelled to pay the notes, the maker is estopped to assert that the mortgage was invalid because the indorsement was ultra vires.

In St. Louis Carriage Mfg. Co. v. Hilbert (1887) 24 Mo. App. 338, one Appel, the superintendent of the plaintiff company, after indorsing in blank two shares of stock which had been issued to him, delivered them to the defendant as security for a loan. Subsequently the transferee, by arrangement with Appel, called at the plaintiff's store and bought a carriage, for which he paid partly by turning over the stock to Appel, and partly in cash. In an action of replevin to recover the carriage, the trial judge gave an instruction which assumed that the stock might lawfully have been taken by Appel for the company in payment of the carriage, provided it was taken at its market value. But the court said: "The question what the market value of the stock was could only be material if the corporation had the legal power to take its own stock, and thus exchange its stock for its wares, and reissue it or retire it as it saw fit. A corporation in this state has no such power. It is not simply a question between the state and the corporation, or between the corporation and its creditors, as the defendant assumes, but a question affecting the validity of the contract itself." This passage might apparently be construed as indicating that a purchase of the company's own stock was regarded as a wholly void transaction. But a subsequent remark that no benefit had accrued to the company, because Appel still held the stock and had spent the money, seems to imply an acceptance of the principle of estoppel. A verdict for the defendant was reversed.

In Russell v. Cassidy (1904) 108 Mo. App. 577, 84 S. W. 171, the ratio decidendi was thus stated: "The present action is upon a note of which prima facie, and in absence of testimony to the opposite effect, defendant received the benefit, and it would be inequitable and unjust to permit defendant to question the power of the payee to accept the note from him. The maker of a note cannot defend an action on the note brought by the corporation or its privy on the ground that the corporation had no corporate power to take the note."

In Lemp Hunting & Fishing Club v. Cottle (1913) 172 Mo. App. 574, 156 S. W. 799, the ground upon which the availability of the defense of ultra vires was denied in a suit for the specific performance of a stipulation in a lease for its renewal was that the original contract had been fully performed, and the lessor had received and retained the rent reserved. The same position was again taken in Lemp Hunting & Fishing Club v. Hackmann (1913) 172 Mo. App. 549, 157 S. W. 791, where it was remarked that the contract was not wholly executory, since the consideration for the renewal was the payment of the rent during the term of the lease, and this had been fully received. The correctness of these decisions is at least open to controversy. They seem to be essentially inconsistent with the cases cited in § 3 of the monograph appended to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment Co. v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. L.R.A. 1917A, 737, which proceed upon the doctrine that no cause of action is created by a refusal to complete the performance of an ultra vires contract which had been partially executed. It is submitted that the analogy of those cases points clearly to the conclusion that the fact of the lessor's having received the whole of the rent for the original term did not involve the consequences deduced from it. They show that either party to an ultra vires lease or other contract, the performance of which extends over a definite period, is entitled to withdraw from it at any time, even though the consideration may have been fully paid until the withdrawal. It is difficult to see how any distinction can justifiably be based on the circumstances that, in the case before the court, the object of the action was to obtain a prolongation of the contract by way of renewal, and not to enforce the unperformed part of that contract. Indeed, it might plausibly be argued that, if any difference should be predicated between these two situations, there is less ground for judicial interference with respect to the latter than with respect to the former.

<sup>7</sup> Kansas City v. O'Connor (1899) 82 Mo. App. 655. There a municipal corporation brought an action on a bond given by O'Connor as principal and the other defendants as sureties, for the faithful performance of an entire contract, which, being partly void, was treated as wholly void. The court rejected the contention that, "since O'Connor, the contractor, has been paid for the work as provided by the contract, it has become performed by the city, and that he (or his sureties standing in his

to be maintainable by a national bank, the supreme court simply followed the Federal decisions.<sup>4</sup>

42. Nebraska.

In a case where an action brought by a trustee in bankruptcy to enforce an ultra vires subscription to the stock of the bankrupt corporation was held not to be maintainable, one of the syllabi prepared by the court is as follows: "Where no money or property of any kind has been acquired or held by virtue of the transaction, mere inaction and neglect to repudiate it will not estop the subscribing corporation when sued upon such a subscription."<sup>1</sup> The qualifying clause at the beginning of this statement may, as it would seem, be regarded as importing that the doctrine of estoppel was recognized by the court as being controlling under appropriate circumstances. Compare § 92 of the monograph appended to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment Co. v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. L.R.A.1917A, 737, where similar phraseology is used.

In a case where a suit brought by a national bank to compel another company to transfer on its books certain stock which had been pledged by a debtor of the bank and purchased by it at a foreclosure sale was held to be maintainable, the ratio decidendi was that the right of the bank to hold the stock was a question which concerned only the government.<sup>2</sup>

43. New Jersey.

In one case, where Runyon, C., refused to allow the defendant mortgagors to file supplemental answers setting up the defense that, in making the loan secured by the mortgage, the plaintiff corporation was acting ultra vires, the refusal was based upon the ground that "the ends of justice would not be promoted by granting the application," the defense being unconscionable in respect both of the defendants and of a subsequent mortgagee, who had taken his mortgage with full notice of the complainant's encumbrance.<sup>1</sup> Apparently it was assumed by the learned judge that the proposed defense, must have been treated as conclusive, if it had been interposed at the proper time. Such a doctrine would have been in harmony with that which was applied during the same period with respect to actions against corporations, but which has since been repudiated. See § 94 of the monograph just referred to.

44. New York.

In the earliest case which bears upon the question of the remedial rights of a corporation in respect of an ultra vires contract of which the other party has received the benefits, it was urged that the plaintiffs, a Pennsylvania bank, were precluded from enforcing a mortgage taken concurrently with the loan in question, because their charter authorized them to take mortgages only for "debts previously contracted." Chancellor Kent, however, said: "If this objection was strictly true in point of fact, I should not readily be disposed to listen to it. Perhaps it would be sufficient for this case that the plaintiffs are a duly incorporated body with authority to contract and take mortgages and judgments; and if they should pass the exact line of their power, it would rather belong to the government of Pennsylvania to exact a forfeiture of their charter than for this court, in this collateral way, to decide a question of misuser by setting aside a shoes) cannot set up ultra vires against the city." The correct view was considered to be "that, if a contract is void, it cannot be validated by being partly performed. The limit to the right of a corporation to contract is made by the policy of the law, and a violation of the law ought not to be made to work out the validity of the contract." The precise position of the court is shown by the authorities relied upon, namely, amongst others, Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co. (1879) 101 U. S. 85, 25 L. ed. 953; Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. (1890) 139 U. S. 54, 35 L. ed. 66, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 478, and National Trust Co. v. Miller (1880) 33 N. J. Eq. 162, in all which the doctrine was approved which had been laid down in Ashbury R. Carriage & Iron Co. v. Riche (1876) L. R. 7 H. L. 653, 44 L. J. Exch. N. S. 185, 33 L. T. N. S. 451, 24 Week. Rep. 794, 2 Eng. Rul. L.R.A.1917B.

Cas. 304, that an ultra vires contract can neither be made valid by the consent of every one of the shareholders, nor, by partial performance, become the foundation of an action. See also the comments on the case in Anglo-American Land, Mortg. & Agency Co. v. Lombard (1904) 68 C. C. A. 89, 132 Fed. 721.

<sup>4</sup> First Nat. Bank v. Gillilan (1880) 72 Mo. 77 (suit on non-negotiable note discounted by bank).

Nebraska.

<sup>1</sup> Nebraska Shirt Co. v. Horton (1903) 3 Neb. (Unof.) 888, 93 N. W. 225.

<sup>2</sup> Union Nat. Bank v. Touzalin Improv. Co. (1901) 1 Neb. (Unof.) 116, 95 N. W. 489.

New Jersey.

<sup>1</sup> Third Ave. Sav. Bank v. Dimock (1873) 24 N. J. Eq. 26.

just and bona fide contract.”<sup>1</sup> But the actual ratio decidendi was that the objection thus criticized was founded upon an erroneous view as to the construction of the corporate charter. It seems clear, therefore, that the statement quoted cannot be regarded as possessing any higher authority than that which may be ascribed to an obiter dictum of a very eminent jurist. It will be observed, moreover, that the doctrine asserted is simply that the fact of a corporate contract's being in excess of the corporate powers is a matter which concerns the state alone, and which for this reason cannot be taken advantage of by the other party to the contract. A doctrine of this character and scope is essentially distinct from, and has no direct relevancy to, the doctrine which was subsequently formulated in this state; viz., that where a corporation is suing upon a contract already performed by it, such performance operates as an element which precludes the defendant from relying upon the plea of ultra vires. See infra. The most that can be said in this regard is that the evidential elements in the case under review were of such a nature that an application of the latter doctrine would have led to the same conclusion as that which was indicated by the former. It is proper to emphasize this point, because these words of the learned chancellor have frequently been cited not only in New York, but in other jurisdictions, as an authority for the doctrine of an estoppel as predicated from the execution of the contract.<sup>2</sup> So far as the report shows that doctrine was not brought to his attention at all. Nor was it adverted to in any of the numerous cases in which, during the period immediately following the date of his remarks, it was held that a corporation could not maintain an action upon a contract which it was expressly prohibited to make. Most of these cases related to violations of the general provision of the Restraining Act to the effect that “no person, unauthorized by law, shall subscribe to, or become a member of, any association, institution or company, or proprietor of any bank or fund for the purpose of issuing notes, receiving deposits, making discounts, or transacting any other business which incorporated banks may or do transact by virtue of their respective acts of incorporation;” and that “all notes and securities for the payment of money or the delivery of property, made or given to any such association, institution or company, not authorized as aforesaid, should be null and void.”<sup>3</sup>

New York.

<sup>1</sup> Silver Lake Bank v. North (1820) 4 Johns. Ch. 370.

<sup>2</sup> It was one of the precedents cited by Comstock, Ch. J., in the famous opinion delivered in Bissell v. Michigan S. & N. I. R. Co. (1860) 22 N. Y. 258.

<sup>3</sup> 2 Rev. Laws 1813, p. 234, § 2. For later enactments of a similar tenor, see 1 Rev. Stat. 712 (construed in Pratt v. Short (1880) 79 N. Y. 437, 35 Am. Rep. 531); Laws 1882, chap. 409, § 297, Rev. Stat. Codes & Laws (N. Y.) 1889, and Laws 1892, chap. 687, § 19.

In Utica Ins. Co. v. Scott (1821) 19 Johns. 1, the action was upon a promissory note discounted by an insurance company in the ordinary way of discounting by a bank. It was held that the insurance company had no power to discount notes, and that in so doing it had violated the Restraining Act. But the court said: “In analogy to the statute against gaming, the notes and securities are absolutely void into whatever hands they may pass; but there is a material distinction between the security and the contract of lending. The lending of money is not declared to be void, and therefore, whenever money has been lent, it may be recovered, although the security itself is void.” For another decision rendered at a later stage of the proceedings in this case, see this footnote, infra.

In Utica Ins. Co. v. Kip (1827) 8 Cow. 20, the action was upon a note discounted by an insurance company, but the declaration also contained a count for money lent. On demurrer, it was held that a good cause of action was shown. The court said: “The company have authority to make loans; the note in this case was a security for the loan; the Restraining Act, at most, only avoids the note, and therefore leaves a good consideration for the money lent. This suit cannot be said to arise out of an illegal transaction which defeats a recovery. The illegal contract, if any, was not the loan, for the plaintiffs had a right to loan the money to the defendant; but it was the agreement to secure the loan by a note discounted. Avoiding what was illegal does not avoid what was lawful. The action for money lent is rather a disavowance of the illegal contract. The plaintiffs claim nothing under it.” For another decision to the same effect, see Utica Ins. Co. v. Cadwell (1829) 3 Wend. 296.

In Fulton Bank v. Benedict (1829) 1 Hall, 480 (action to recover on a joint promissory note indorsed for accommodation by Benedict, and transferred by the Hudson Insurance Company to the plaintiff), a new trial was granted for the purpose of determining certain questions of fact; but the opinion was expressed that, as the note sued upon had been negotiated by a company having no banking powers, it was void under the Restraining Act; that if it was not void by that act, yet, as it was taken by the Hudson Company in a transaction not au-porated by their charter, no action could be sustained on it by the company; and that, if the plaintiffs had notice when they took the note that it had been negotiated to the Hudson Company contrary to its charter, the illegality of the transaction could be set up against them as a defense.

Others turned upon the operation of special statutes applicable only to the cor-

In Beach v. Fulton Bank (1829) 3 Wend. 573, affirming (1829) 1 Paige, 429, where the notes sued upon were held void as having been discounted in violation of the Restraining Act and of the act incorporating the Hudson Insurance Company, the assignor of the plaintiff bank, the court of errors made the following comments upon the Scott and Kip Cases, supra: "If those cases are critically examined, it will be seen that the right of the plaintiffs in those cases to recover is placed upon the power given them by their charter to loan money. The Hudson Insurance Company has no such power, and therefore the contract of loan is void as well as the security, and for the same reason; viz., the want of capacity to make such contract either by parol or by taking a note. In the case of the note, there is the additional reason that the statute expressly declares it void. If the company have no capacity to make such contract, they have not the power to enforce it. The Utica Insurance Company have the power given them to invest their surplus funds, which the court say (People ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Utica Ins. Co. (1818) 15 Johns. 385, 8 Am. Dec. 243) gives them power to loan money in any manner not prohibited by law. They have power, therefore, to loan money, though not to discount notes. Hence a note discounted by them is void, but the contract of loan may be enforced against the borrower. Although, therefore, the contract of loan is valid where such contract is not prohibited by law, and the security only is rendered void by statute, still the contract of loan must have competent parties capable by law to make the contract; and incorporated companies having no powers but such as are granted or necessarily incident, a company having no such power, express or implied, has no capacity to lend money, of course cannot sue for it."

In Utica Ins. Co. v. Bloodgood (1830) 4 Wend. 652, where the Scott Case, supra, was followed, it was held that the illegal note might be used as evidence.

In Pennington v. Townsend (1831) 7 Wend. 276, where the action was brought to recover the amount of a check discounted in New York by a New Jersey bank, it was contended that, if "the security should be declared void, the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the money loaned, on the common counts;" but the court refused to discuss the point, because no money had ever been loaned by the plaintiffs to the defendant.

In New Hope Delaware Bridge Co. v. Poughkeepsie Silk Co. (1841) 25 Wend. 648. Nelson, J., felt "great difficulty" in assenting to the cases in which it had been laid L.R.A.1917B.

down that, though the securities for the moneys loaned are void, the contract of loan itself is valid, and may be enforced. But in the case under review the plaintiffs were met by a positive enactment of law, viz., 2 Rev. Stat. 373, § 2, by which it was provided that where, by the laws of the state, any act is forbidden to be done by a corporation or any association of individuals, without express authority of law, and such act be done by a foreign corporation, it shall not be authorized to maintain any action founded upon such act or upon any liability or obligation, express or implied, arising out of or made or entered into in consideration of such act. The plaintiff company was prohibited from keeping an office for the purpose of receiving deposits or discounting promissory notes. They had kept such an office and loaned the money in question in pursuance thereof. The contract of loan, therefore, had grown out of the prohibited act, and no action could be maintained for the recovery of the money lent.

In Green v. Seymour (1846) 3 Sandf. Ch. 285, the complainants, standing in the place of the Utica Insurance Company, sought to enforce certain notes discounted by it and a mortgage assigned to it, both transactions being in violation of the Restraining Act. It was argued that the illegality of the transactions was a point which the defendants had no right to raise; that the sovereign power of the state had never interfered, and the original debtors to the corporation, instead of striving to avoid their obligations, sought to pay them by this assignment. But the court said: "The cases cited in support of this view were those in which the forfeiture of corporate franchises was set up to defeat a recovery, or in some other mode the continued existence of the corporation was questioned collaterally. This is not such a case. It is not denied that this corporation was in existence and could maintain suits till 1836, although its charter might have been forfeited at the instance of the people many years before. The question is whether the corporation obtained any title to this mortgage. The objection to their title is not that they had forfeited their charter but that the title was obtained by a positively illegal act. I confess that I cannot perceive any escape from the objection."

In New York Firemen Ins. Co. v. Sturges (1824) 2 Cow. 664, it was conceded that, if the discounting of the promissory note sued upon had been a transaction within the scope of the Restraining Act, the plaintiff could not have recovered. For another case in which the isolated discounting of a note was held not to be an infringement of the act, see New York Firemen Ins. Co. v. Ely (1824) 2 Cow. 678.

In Utica Ins. Co. v. Scott (1826) 8 Cow. 709, the action was upon a promissory note, and the defendant pleaded that the plaintiffs had discounted the note contrary to the porations in question.<sup>4</sup> Having regard to the facts involved in these cases, they may be said to import by implication that the circumstance of a defendant's having received the benefits of a transaction was not deemed by any of the courts which decided them to be a controlling element. But this particular aspect of the matter was not discussed, or even adverted to, by any of those courts.

After the doctrine of estoppel had been adopted, and also declared to be applicable only to unauthorized contracts, and not to those which are expressly prohibited, these earlier cases were treated as illustrating that doctrine in respect of the limitation by which it was thus qualified.<sup>5</sup> But in the opinions as reported there is nothing that sustains, and much that repels, the inference that the courts had in mind a doctrine of this character. An examination of the language used will, it is submitted, show with reasonable certainty that contracts which were expressly prohibited, as well as contracts which were merely unauthorized, were considered to belong to the category designated by the expression "ultra vires," and that both of these descriptions of contracts were equally, and for the same reasons, regarded as incapable of being enforced, irrespective of whether the action was brought before or after they had been performed on the side of the corporation.<sup>6</sup> If this conclusion is warranted, it will follow that the cases referred to must be taken as indicating that for a considerable period the doctrine adopted in New York was that, in an action brought by a corporation. The plaintiffs replied that they lent only a part of their surplus fund on the note. On demurrer to the reply, it was held that the company might lend their surplus fund on bond, note, or mortgage.

For the judgment of ouster rendered against the company which was the plaintiff in the above cases, see People ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Utica Ins. Co. (1818) 15 Johns. 358, 8 Am. Dec. 243.

<sup>4</sup>In New York Firemen Ins. Co. v. Ely (1824) 2 Cow. 678, the grounds upon which it was held that the plaintiff could not maintain an action on a promissory note which it had discounted were that it had been created for the "sole purpose of insurance," and that it had no power to lend money on any securities except those expressly specified in its charter. The contention of counsel that, though the note might be void, and the state might claim a forfeiture of the charter, the defendants could not object to paying the consideration, was not commented upon by the court.

In Life & F. Ins. Co. v. Mechanic F. Ins. Co. (1831) 7 Wend. 31, where the decision was similar, the court reasoned thus: "There is a fundamental objection to the plaintiffs' recovery. They have no authority by their charter to loan money except on bond and mortgage. Laws 1822, p. 54. They cannot make a valid contract of loan in any other manner; and therefore not only the security which may be taken, but the contract itself is void, and cannot be the foundation of an action. Where a corporation is prohibited from discounting notes or taking any other particular security, but have a general power given them by their charter to loan money, if they make a loan and take the prohibited security, the security is void, but the contract of loan is valid, and the money may be recovered under the general counts; but where not only the security, but the contract also is illegal, it cannot be enforced."

In Swift v. Beers (1846) 3 Denio, 70, the court refused to permit a recovery against the guarantor of a note which on its face was a violation of the act of 1840, prohibiting the issuing of post notes by banking associations.

In Seneca County Bank v. Lamb (1850) 26 Barb. 595, it was held that no action could be maintained upon a contract by which the plaintiff bank and the defendant mutually agreed, the one to deliver, and the other to receive, the note in suit upon a discount exceeding the rate to which the plaintiff was restricted by statute.

<sup>5</sup>See Pratt v. Short (1880) 79 N. Y. 437, 35 Am. Rep. 531 (where the court, referring to the Scott Case, note 3, supra, and several of those which followed it, said that they had been criticized, but had never been overruled); Pratt v. Eaton (1880) 79 N. Y. 449, reversing (1879) 18 Hun, 293.

In Bath Gaslight Co. v. Claffy (1896) 151 N. Y. 24, 36 L.R.A. 664, 45 N. E. 390, the following remarks were made: "Another principle of general recognition is that a corporation cannot enter into or bind itself by a contract which is expressly prohibited by its charter or by statute, and in the application of this principle it is immaterial that the contract, except for the prohibition, would be lawful. No one is permitted to justify an act which the legislature within its constitutional power has declared shall not be performed. The series of cases in this state, known as the Utica insurance cases, afford an apt illustration. It was held that the Restraining Acts which prohibited the exercise of banking powers, including the discount of paper, by other than banking corporations, rendered void securities taken on such discount by corporations not possessing banking powers, and this although the object of the Restraining Laws seems to have been the protection of the chartered banks in the monopoly of banking."

<sup>6</sup>See, for example, the last of the sentences quoted from the opinion in Beach v. Fulton Bank (1829) 3 Wend. 582, note 3, supra.

poration upon an ultra vires contract, the fact of the defendant's having received the benefits of the contract did not enlarge the corporation's remedial rights in such a sense as to entitle it to recover.<sup>6a</sup> The earliest case in which the modern doctrine of estoppel was distinctly formulated with reference to an action brought by a corporation<sup>7</sup> was decided by the supreme court soon after the middle of the nineteenth century. It was there laid down broadly that, "when it is a simple question of capacity or authority to contract, arising either on a question of regularity of organization or of powers conferred by the charter, a party who has had the benefit of the contract cannot be permitted to question its validity in an action founded upon it."<sup>8</sup> Two years afterwards this case was followed by another which has sometimes been regarded as authority for that doctrine. But the present writer ventures to think that no such significance can be ascribed to it.<sup>9</sup>

In 1860 the doctrine under which an

<sup>6a</sup> In Tracy v. Talmage (1856) 14 N. Y. 189, 67 Am. Dec. 132, the court, after referring to the doubts which, in New Hope Delaware Bridge Co. v. Poughkeepsie Silk Co. (1841) 25 Wend. 648, Nelson, J., had expressed with regard to the soundness of some of the cases relating to the Utica Insurance Company, observed: "There is, undoubtedly, 'great difficulty' in reconciling these cases with the settled rules in regard to illegal contracts; and the difficulty consists precisely in this, that the court in the Utica insurance cases have given to the guilty party the benefit of a principle which is only applicable to the more innocent." But this statement was made in a case in which the right of recovery was being considered with reference solely to the question whether the parties were in pari delicto. The decisions commented upon simply affirmed the inability of the corporation to maintain an action upon a contract which, according to accepted principles, was clearly void. In this point of view the comparative innocency of the parties was, it is submitted, a wholly irrelevant consideration.

<sup>7</sup> For a previous instance of the application of the doctrine in an action involving the liability of a corporation, see Indiana v. Woram (1843) 6 Hill, 33, 40 Am. Dec. 378.

<sup>8</sup> Steam Nav. Co. v. Weed (1853) 17 Barb. 378. The plaintiff, a Connecticut corporation, was authorized by its charter to transport freight and passengers and to tow vessels by the power of steam, and to transact other business incident thereto. There was also a proviso that nothing contained in that act should be construed to authorize or empower such corporation to use its funds for banking transactions. The questions presented were whether a temporary loan made for the accommodation of a customer was an act of banking and a violation of the Restraining Act; and whether the defendants were at liberty to set up as a defense that the plaintiff had no right under its charter to make the loan. The conclusions of the court were thus stated: "There was no good reason for supposing that the making of the loan in this case was a violation of the Restraining Act. 1 Rev. Stat. 3d ed. 893. It was not the discounting of a note. It was a loan of money for a single day, without taking any note or security; and, for aught that appears, without charge or intention to charge for its use. It was a single, isolated casual transaction, not for the purpose of gain, but to oblige a customer. It was not an act of banking. People v. Brewster (1830) 4 Wend. 498. The question, then, was not whether the loan was a violation of an express statute, but whether the corporation had power, express or implied, to make it. In other words, it was not a question of illegality, but of authority. I think, in such cases, the defendant who has received the money is not at liberty to question the authority of the lender."

<sup>9</sup> Mott v. United States Trust Co. (1855) 19 Barb. 589. There the plaintiff sought to restrain the receiver of the Knickerbocker Savings Institution from suing on a promissory note which, together with a certificate for 450 shares of the stock of that corporation, he had delivered to it as security for a loan. The grounds upon which his motion was denied were thus stated: "This loan, he now says, his friends in the Savings Institution had no legal right to make, and he therefore, however much accommodated at the time, is under no legal obligation to repay it; and he accordingly files his bill in equity—the conjunction can hardly fail to provoke a smile—very modestly praying that the supreme court, sitting in its character of chancellor, and as such, of course, the guardian of charities, will order the receiver, without payment, or any offer of payment, to deliver up the note and certificate, on the pretended faith of which, with the concurrence of the friendly managers of the charity (unlawfully, as he contends), he had abstracted of the savings of the poor the large amount of $10,000 and upwards! The charter of the Savings Institution, as amended in 1853, provides that its funds shall be invested in or loaned on public stocks or private mortgages: and that when loaned on—not invested in—such stocks or mortgages, 'a sufficient bond or other satisfactory personal security in addition shall be required of the borrower.' A stock note, therefore, like the one in question, being a personal security in itself, was perfectly lawful; and had the stock accompanying it been that of a 'town, city, county, or state,' no question could have been raised as to either. What, then, is the proposition advanced by the plaintiff? That if, as required by law, he had estoppel against pleading ultra vires is deemed to be created by the fact of the claimant's having performed the contract on his side was definitively established with respect to the class of cases in which the corporation is the defendant. See § 95 of the monograph appended to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment Co. v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. L.R.A.1917A, 749. But the decisions embodying that doctrine were not referred to in a case in which it was held five years afterwards that the plaintiff corporation could not recover in an action brought upon a draft which it had discounted at a higher rate of interest than that prescribed by statute.<sup>10</sup> Opinions were delivered by Brown and Wright, JJ. By both of these judges the fact of the transaction's having been in contravention of an expressly prohibitory provision was treated as being fatal to the right of action. In so far as the ruling was referable to this consideration, it was in harmony with all the New York decisions, whether early or recent. But, as the passage quoted in the footnote shows, Wright, J., also declared that the inability of the bank to recover was predicable on the ground that the transaction was ultra vires. It is apparent from his language that he assumed this expression to be applicable to contracts which are expressly prohibited as well as to those which are merely unauthorized. But this theory as to its connotation is manifestly inconsistent with the view which has ultimately prevailed in this state, that, so far at least as cases involving the doctrine of estoppel are concerned, it is to be regarded as covering only contracts which belong to the latter category. See infra.

In a later case the right of the corporation to maintain the action proceeded upon the broad ground that "one who has received from a corporation the full consideration of his engagement to pay money, either in services or property, cannot avail himself of the objection that the contract thus fully performed by the corporation was ultra vires, or not within its chartered privileges and powers. It would be contrary to the first principles of equity to allow such a defense to prevail in an action by the corporation."<sup>11</sup> This decision has been frequently followed in later cases, the most given good collateral security, his personal promise to pay, thus fortified, would have been binding; but having palmed off as collateral security a stock which was comparatively worthless, he cannot justly be called upon to pay anything, and is equitably entitled to be shielded from all possible prospective annoyance. . . . The bare statement of the proposition carries with it, to my mind, its own refutation." It is plain that the circumstances were such that the elementary principle, He who seeks equity must do equity, precluded the complainant from obtaining the relief asked for unless he should consent to restore the money borrowed, and that this was the real ground upon which the motion was denied, and the borrower was held liable on a counterclaim for the amount of the loan. The case, therefore, seems to have been improperly cited by Mr. Sedgwick (Stat. & Const. Law, p. 73) as an authority for the estoppel doctrine.

<sup>10</sup> Bank of Salina v. Alvord (1865) 31 N. Y. 473 (construing N. Y. Laws 1829, chap. 94, and Laws 1832, chap. 208). One of the grounds upon which Wright, J., relied, was thus stated: "The discount of the drafts by the banks was an act ultra vires, and not within its corporate power. It had no legal capacity to discount paper of the description of these drafts at a higher rate of interest than 6 per cent in advance. The charter of the plaintiffs limits their power, in the discount of paper maturing within sixty-three days, to discounts upon loans upon which only 6 per cent interest in advance shall be taken. Discounting the drafts in this case, and taking interest at and after the rate of 7 per cent per annum in advance, was exercising a power which the corporation did not possess. It requires no argument to prove that a contract which a corporation has no power to make is void and cannot be enforced."

<sup>11</sup> Whitney Arms Co. v. Barlow (1875) 63 N. Y. 62, 20 Am. Rep. 504, reversing (1875) 6 Jones & S. 554. There the plaintiff company, which had sold goods to the Seal Lock Company, brought an action against its trustees to enforce their statutory liability for having failed to file certain reports specifying the amount of the company's paid-up capital, debts, etc. Proceeding upon the theory that, in respect of the enforceability of the claim for the price of the goods sold, the position of the vendee company was the same as that of its trustees, the court held the action to be maintainable, arguing as follows: "Whether the contract as originally made was ultra vires is not a very important inquiry at this time. If it was, the state under whose sovereignty it dwells, and by whose act and favor it exists, has no interest in arresting its action for the recovery of moneys equitably due upon a contract fully executed and a work fully accomplished, whatever may be its right to annul its charter. The shareholders, whose confidence has been abused and whose funds have been diverted from their proper use, have a direct interest in reclaiming and restoring to proper custody and applying to legitimate uses the funds which have been diverted and improperly used for purposes dehors the legitimate business of the corporation. The plea of ultra vires should not as a general rule prevail, whether in-

instructive being one in which it was held that a corporation which had taken a lease of the property and franchises of another corporation could not defeat a claim for past due rent by the plea that the lease was ultra vires.<sup>12</sup>

terposed for or against a corporation, when it would not advance justice, but on the contrary would accomplish a legal wrong. Here, as between two corporations, the debtor and creditor corporation, the contract has been fully performed by the creditor, the plaintiff in this action, and the Seal Lock Company has received the full consideration of its promise to pay. The plaintiff has parted with its property to the latter corporation, and unless a legal liability exists on the part of the latter to pay, the plaintiff can neither reclaim the property or recover compensation, and under this technical plea a great wrong will be perpetrated. A purchaser who acquired by contract, and under an agreement to pay for it, the property of a corporation, cannot defeat the claim for the purchase price by impeaching the right of the corporation to become the owner of the property. . . . It is very evident, as well upon principle as upon authority, that, had this action been against the debtor corporation, the objection that the contract was not authorized by the charter of the plaintiff would have been untenable, and the plaintiff would have been entitled to recover. Does the defendant and appellant stand in a different position, or can he avail himself of a defense to the original cause of action of which the corporation could not? There may be defenses personal to the defendant, but objections which go to the foundation of the claim and demand against, and the obligation of, the corporation, are not personal to one sued as trustee upon the statutory liability."

<sup>12</sup> Bath Gaslight Co. v. Claffy (1896) 151 N. Y. 24, 36 L.R.A. 664, 45 N. E. 390. After referring to certain English cases which had been cited on behalf of the defendant, the court said: "Without questioning these cases, it is quite apparent that they stand in justice upon a very different basis from the action in this case, which is brought by the corporation to enforce a contract, the enforcement of which will indemnify the plaintiff and its stockholders for the deprivation of the use of the property of the corporation during its possession by the defendants under the unauthorized lease. . . . But the law affords ample remedy for the usurpation by corporations of unauthorized powers, through proceedings by injunction or for the forfeiture of their charters." The court then referred to what it regarded as the "misleading" use of the word "illegal" to designate ultra vires contracts, and, after conceding that, if the lease in question had been "illegal," no recovery could be had upon it, continued thus: "The lease now in question was not in any true sense of the word illegal. It was undoubtedly void as against the state. The L.R.A.1917B.

During the period that has elapsed since the right of a corporation to sue on an ultra vires contract which it had performed was established, the doctrine which, as has been shown above, was applied in all the earlier cases, viz., that no parties to the lease assumed it to be valid. It was contemplated, as the provisions of the lease show, that the lessee would continue and extend the business before carried on by the plaintiff, and it is not suggested that it did not, during its occupation, discharge all the obligations to the public which rested upon the plaintiff. The state has not intervened, and the possession of the property has now been restored to its original proprietors. The contract has been terminated as to the future, and all that remains undone is the payment by the lessee of the unpaid rent. We think the demands of public policy are fully satisfied by holding that, as to the public, the lease was void, but that, as between the parties, so long as the occupation under the lease continued, the lessee was bound to pay the rent, and that its recovery may be enforced by action on the covenant."

In Bowers v. Ocean Acci. & Guarantee Corp. (1906) 110 App. Div. 691, 97 N. Y. Supp. 485, affirmed without opinion in (1907) 187 N. Y. 581, 80 N. E. 1105, an action brought by the receiver of the Mercantile Credit Guarantee Company to recover from the defendant the percentage of premiums stipulated to be paid by it as the consideration of a contract for the purchase of the good will of the former's business, the contention of the defendant that this contract was illegal and void in that the mercantile company agreed to abandon the business for which it was incorporated, and to transfer that business to a foreign corporation, thus divesting itself of its lawful functions, which it had no right to do, and that the contract was beyond the power of the directors and ultra vires, was thus discussed: "The agreement did not provide for the turning over to the defendant of all the assets of the mercantile company, and the corporation did not thereby divest itself of all of its property, and hence it did not bring itself within the rule which the appellant seeks to invoke. Whether the contract was ultra vires or not, it was fully performed by the mercantile company, and the defendant had the full benefit of it by obtaining a list of all of its policy holders and reinsuring a very large proportion of them. After such performance and the acceptance of the benefits thereof, the defendant is estopped from interposing the defense that the corporation had no power to make such a contract."

For other cases in which the doctrine of estoppel was applied in favor of a corporate plaintiff, see Hurd v. Kelly (1879) 78 N. Y. 588, 34 Am. Rep. 567, affirming Hurd v. Green (1879) 17 Hun, 327 (action on a bond by which obligor undertook to pay a such remedial right exists in respect of expressly prohibited contracts, has been approved several times by the court of appeals and the supreme court.<sup>13</sup>

In one case where the argument of counsel that an implied prohibition might bank a certain sum, if it continued in business for a specified period); Rider Life Raft Co. v. Roach (1884) 97 N. Y. 378 (action to recover profits of a sale made in pursuance of contract giving defendant full control of company's business); Rome Sav. Bank v. Kramer (1884) 32 Hun, 270 (action on note), affirmed in Rome Sav. Bank v. Krug (1886) 102 N. Y. 331, 6 N. E. 682, on the ground that even if the note and other securities were void, the amount lent might be recovered; Homestead Bank v. Wood (1892) 1 Misc. 145, 20 N. Y. Supp. 640, reversing (1891) 18 N. Y. Supp. 718 (action on note indorsed by defendant); Fifth Ave. Bank v. Forty-Second Street & G. Street Ferry R. Co. (1892) 63 Hun, 629, 17 N. Y. Supp. 826 (action for damages caused by refusal to transfer on its books to plaintiff certain stock which it had taken as security; estoppel question not alluded to in affirming judgment (1893) 137 N. Y. 231, 19 L.R.A. 331, 33 Am. St. Rep. 712, 33 N. E. 378; Koehler & Co. v. Reinheimer (1898) 26 App. Div. 1, 49 N. Y. Supp. 755, reversing (1897) 20 Misc. 62, 45 N. Y. Supp. 337 (plaintiff, as guarantor of the covenants of a lessee, sued him, after being obliged to pay rent); Booth Bros. v. Baird (1903) 83 App. Div. 495, 82 N. Y. Supp. 432 (contract for sale and delivery of personal property); Patrons of Industry F. Ins. Co. v. Plum (1903) 84 App. Div. 96, 82 N. Y. Supp. 550 (principle of estoppel held not to be applicable, because defendant had received no benefit from contract).

In Auburn Sav. Bank v. Brinkerhoff (1887) 44 Hun, 142, where an action on a bond assigned to the plaintiff was held to be maintainable, it would seem that the doctrine applied in the above cases might have been invoked. But the ratio decidendi was that the regulating statute did not declare that a violation of the restrictive provisions with respect to the description of mortgages that might be taken should render the bonds and mortgages void.

<sup>13</sup> In Crocker v. Whitney (1877) 71 N. Y. 161, the following doctrine was laid down with respect to § 5137 of the Federal statute, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 9674, regarding national banks. "It is a settled principle that the courts will not enforce a contract, the subject-matter of which is either malum prohibitum or malum in se. A contract made in violation of a statute is void, and it is immaterial that it is not so declared in the statute itself." Since the date of this decision the Federal Supreme Court has placed a different construction upon this provision. See § 17, supra. But obviously this does not affect the significance of the statement as an expression of opinion by a New York court upon the general question of the right to be read into the corporate charter for the purpose of precluding it from suing on the contract in question, was rejected, the court might, as it would seem, have rested its conclusion upon the broad ground that the theory of an imposed contract. The same remark applies to the earlier case of Conklin v. Second Nat. Bank (1871) 45 N. Y. 655, the effect of which is stated in § 17, note 2, supra.

In New York State Loan & T. Co. v. Helmer (1879) 77 N. Y. 64, affirming (1877) 12 Hun, 35, where an answer alleging that the plaintiff corporation had violated the expressly prohibitory provisions in 1 Rev. Stat. p. 559, § 4, and 1 Rev. Stat. p. 661, § 3, by discounting the note on which it sued was held good, the court distinguished between contracts made in contravention of enactments of this type and contracts which are merely unauthorized.

In Pratt v. Short (1880) 79 N. Y. 437, 35 Am. Rep. 531, affirming (1877) 53 How. Pr. 506, it was held that, as the People's Safe Deposit and Savings Institution had no power under its charter to loan money on personal security, and was forbidden by the Restraining Act from engaging in the business of discounting notes and other commercial paper, its assignees in bankruptcy could not maintain an action on notes discounted in violation of the act. No allusion was made to the fact that, under the doctrine previously established the defendant would have been estopped to plead the invalidity of the contract so far as it was predicable merely on the ground of a defect of power. In this point of view it is plain that, in order to reconcile the decision with the modern New York cases, the inability of the plaintiffs to recover on the contract must be assumed to rest solely upon the illegality of the transaction under the Restraining Act. The same remark is applicable to the decision in Pratt v. Eaton (1880) 79 N. Y. 449, reversing (1879) 18 Hun, 293, where other notes discounted by the corporation were treated as being nonenforceable. In both cases the court held the plaintiffs to be entitled to relief independently of the contract.

In Duncomb v. New York, H. & N. R. Co. (1881) 84 N. Y. 190, where, in a suit to foreclose a mortgage and determine various conflicting rights, it was held to be error to reject certain bonds held by one Rucker as the assignee of the New York Loan and Indemnity Company, and those which he received as a pledge from the Bessemer Company. The objection made to the title of the loan and indemnity company, that it violated the law in discounting a note of $25,000, and so the pledge fell with it (Rev. Stat. pt. 1, title 20, chap. 20, §§ 1 and 5), was deemed to be answered by a reference to the charter of the company (Laws 1870, p. 1803), which authorized it to "advance moneys, securities, and credit upon any property, real or personal," and also by the plied prohibition could not be adopted without destroying the foundation of the doctrine of an estoppel, as applied in respect of contracts which fall within the unauthorized class. But the decision was referred to special considerations suggested by the language of the corporate charter and the nature of the contract under review.<sup>14</sup>

In several cases the principle of estoppel has been held to be applicable in respect of actions brought by municipal corporations.<sup>15</sup> decisions in the two cases last cited, which were regarded as embodying the doctrine that, even if the note discounted by such a company was void, the loan and its security were valid, and capable of being enforced.

In Otis v. Harrison (1862) 36 Barb. 210, the ground upon which it was held that the receiver of an insurance company could not sue on premium notes was that the taking of these instruments was not merely ultra vires, but expressly prohibited.

The distinction between ultra vires and unlawful contracts was also adverted to in Atlantic State Bank v. Savery (1880) 82 N. Y. 291 (note discounted at unlawful rate of interest).

In First Nat. Bank v. Cornell (1896) 8 App. Div. 427, 40 N. Y. Supp. 850, where a note taken for a loan constituted a violation of an expressly prohibitory provision, the ground upon which recovery was allowed was that the loan itself was valid. Compare some of the cases cited under notes 3 and 4, supra.

<sup>14</sup> Washington L. Ins. Co. v. Clason (1900) 162 N. Y. 309, 56 N. E. 755, affirming 10 App. Div. 434, 45 N. Y. Supp. 27. There a mortgagor offered to prove, under his answer in foreclosure, that at the time the plaintiff, an insurance company, made him the loan secured by the mortgage, the property was encumbered, and was not worth 50 per cent more than the loan, and therefore all did not satisfy the standard prescribed by the Insurance Law (Laws 1892, chap. 690, § 16, amd. by Laws 1893, chap. 112, and § 13, amd. by Laws 1893, chap. 725). Held, that the facts thus relied on did not constitute a good defense to the suit. The court said: "The statute does not declare that loans made upon encumbered real estate, or upon real estate not worth 50 per centum more than the amount loaned thereon, shall be void, nor does it expressly forbid them, as it does investments in insurance stock; but the defendant's argument is that such loans are by implication prohibited, and are therefore void. Why make only one express prohibition if more are intended? This prohibition was added to § 16 by the amendment of 1893. The manifest intent of these provisions is to add to the protection of policy holders in insurance companies by requiring the companies to invest the moneys

45. North Dakota.

One of the syllabi prepared by the court is to the following effect: "A contract of a corporation that is ultra vires not because prohibited by positive law or inherently vicious, and not because the corporation could not, under any circumstances, make the contract, but solely because of the existing circumstances and conditions under which it was made, is never void, and the plea of ultra vires will not avail either party to such contract when the contract has intrusted to their care in securities of unquestionable soundness, certainly not to withdraw such protection and bestow such moneys upon borrowers by invalidating the investment whenever the security should prove to be below the prescribed standard. The defendant contends that, since the corporation has none but conferred powers, and as the power to invest in a security below the prescribed standard is not conferred upon the plaintiff, the power is denied. If the state should make this argument in the proper action, it might be difficult for the plaintiff to answer it, but the defendant is not the sovereign. The state may complain that the mortgage is not up to the standard, without asserting that it is not good for what it purports to be. If we place the defendant in the shoes of the state he would have no better position. Regard being had to the manifest intent of the statute, we can import nothing into it to aid the defendant contrary to that intent, and cannot imply a penalty against the plaintiff for the benefit of the defendant, and if necessary we should resort to strict construction to exclude such implication. The plaintiff has loaned its money to the defendant upon the mortgage, and the defendant seeks to escape from the obligation into which he voluntarily entered to obtain the loan. The statute permits the plaintiff to invest in mortgages of the prescribed standard. Whether real estate is already encumbered is a fact which a reasonably diligent inquiry may fail to disclose. Whether it is worth 50 per centum more than the amount for which it is to be mortgaged is a matter of opinion; subsequent facts may show that the mortgagee was mistaken in fact or in opinion. Public policy does not require that such a mistake shall be punished by depriving the mortgagee of the security the mortgage is adequate to afford. The penalty due to iniquity is not in such a case visited upon mistake or misfortune. Thus we can understand why the express prohibition was not extended to mortgages, but only to insurance stocks. The defendant's offer did not charge iniquity or exclude mistake or misfortune, and therefore was properly overruled."

<sup>15</sup> New York v. Sonneborn (1889) 113 N. Y. 423, 21 N. E. 121 (lease); New York v.

been fully executed by the other party."<sup>1</sup> But the conception that there are two categories of ultra vires contracts, and that the theory of an estoppel is applicable only to one of them, was not explicitly recognized in two other cases in which that theory was adverted to.<sup>2</sup>

In one case the ratio decidendi was that, as the defendant had not received or retained any property of the corporation for which he was either morally or legally obligated to pay, he had nothing to restore, and consequently that the remedial rights of the parties were governed by the general rule that "a contract entered into contrary to law or public policy is simply void, and neither party to it is estopped from showing the fact."<sup>3</sup>

46. Ohio.

The earlier decisions in this state are founded upon the broad doctrine that a corporation cannot enforce a contract made by it in violation of a statutory prohibition.<sup>1</sup> The language used in the opinions shows that this doctrine was regarded as being applicable, irrespective of whether the prohibition was express or merely implied. When viewed with Huntington (1889) 114 N. Y. 631, 21 N. E. 998 (lease); Buffalo v. Balcom (1892) 134 N. Y. 532, 32 N. E. 7 (mortgage).

North Dakota.

<sup>1</sup> Tourtelot v. Whithed (1900) 9 N. D. 467, 84 N. W. 8, where the action was brought by the receiver of a national bank against the assignee of an insolvent company. Referring to the contract in question, under which the bank had taken the stock of the other company, the court said: "It is conceded that the bank might take the corporate stock as collateral security for a present loan, and in order to collect the loan it might sell the collateral and become the purchaser and legal owner thereof. It is also conceded that the bank might, in the language of counsel, 'take such stock in compromise of a doubtful or contested claim, where to do so would prevent a possible loss. If ultra vires, it was because of the circumstances under which it was made, and, as already stated, the plea of ultra vires will not avail.'"

<sup>2</sup> The syllabus of the court in Clarke v. Olson (1900) 9 N. D. 364, 83 N. W. 519, is as follows: "Where a building and loan association desires to do business in a state other than that in which it is chartered, and is authorized by its charter so to do, and in order to do so deposits, in compliance with the laws of such other state, its securities in a specified amount with the treasurer of such state, to be held in trust for the benefit of the shareholders and creditors in such state, and receives its license from such state to transact business therein, and so transacts business for a number of years, such association cannot, upon subsequent insolvency, nor can a shareholder not resident of such other state, plead that the act of the association in making such deposit of securities was ultra vires."

In Wald v. Wheelon (1914) 27 N. D. 624, 147 N. W. 402, the court made the following remarks, arguendo: "It has often been held that, where the loan is made on a contract which has been fully executed, the borrower cannot set up as a defense to an action on the contract the fact that it is ultra vires, or entered into in excess of the authority of the corporation, because to permit him to make such a defense in an action brought to recover on the indebtedness would result in his retaining the benefits, and this would be inequitable and unconscionable. Having dealt with the bank and received his consideration in such case, he is estopped from denying the authority of the bank to make the contract."

<sup>3</sup> Montgomery v. Whitbeck (1903) 12 N. D. 385, 96 N. W. 327 (receiver's action to recover assessment on policy of insurance).

Ohio.

<sup>1</sup> In Bank of Chillicothe v. Swayne (1838) 8 Ohio, 257, 32 Am. Dec. 707, the plaintiff bank sued in assumpsit on certain bills of exchange, the common counts being included in its declaration. Discussing the question whether the contract was void as having been made in violation of the clause in act incorporating the bank which provided that "the said corporation should not take more than at the rate of 6 per centum per annum on its loans or discounts," the court said: "This corporation has power to loan money, provided it loans it at a rate of interest not exceeding 6 per cent interest per annum; but it has no power or capacity to loan money at a rate above and beyond this. And if a contract, as before stated, relative to lands or goods would be void, certainly the unauthorized, the forbidden contract with respect to money must be . . . . The pleadings in the case before the court show that here was a loan of money, and a contract for the repayment of the principal sum with interest at a greater rate than that authorized by the plaintiffs' act of incorporation. This loan was effected by the discount of the bill of exchange now in suit. This contract is void not because the rate of interest is greater than the rate allowed by the general law of the land, but because it is such a contract as the plaintiffs had no capacity or power to make. In the present state of pleadings, the plaintiffs have no title to recover." This case was followed with respect to a similar contract in Creed v. Commercial Bank (1842) 11 Ohio, 489.

In Straus v. Eagle Ins. Co. (1855) 5 Ohio St. 59, the special point upon which the decision turned was that an insurance company authorized by its charter to invest its funds and capital stock as should be deemed best by the directors for the safety of the capital and interest of the stockholders had relation to the facts involved, these decisions are essentially inconsistent with the theory that the acceptance and enjoyment of the benefits of an ultra vires contract are a circumstance which creates an estoppel against denying its validity. But this particular aspect of the matter was not discussed in any of the opinions delivered. It will be perceived that these earlier cases proceed upon precisely the same lines as those decided in New York during the same period.

A change in the views of the court is indicated by some cases of later date. In one of these it was laid down that, even if the amount of the loan for which the note sued upon was given should be assumed to be excessive, "it would not affect the validity of the note. . . . No part of the consideration was illegal in the sense of the maxim, 'Ex turpi causa non oritur actio.' If invalid at all, it would be so simply from want of corporate capacity on the part of the bank to make a contract in derogation of the authority conferred by its charter, and not because of any illegal element entering into the consideration of the note."<sup>2</sup>

In another case in which an action was held to be maintainable by a foreign corporation for the recovery of royalties which had, under a contract of assignment to the defendant, been reserved in certain leases, the court proceeded upon the ground that the defendant was "estopped from denying the legal existence of the plaintiff as a New York corporation; from denying the power of the plaintiff to make a legal contract for the transfer of the leaseholds to him; from denying the right of the plaintiff to maintain an action to compel him to account. A person benefited by a contract, holding on to it and receiving the benefits arising out of it, cannot, in this collateral manner, question its validity."<sup>3</sup> The concluding statement in this passage embodies a rule sufficiently broad to cover all cases that involve ultra vires contracts. But it will be observed that the actual point decided was merely that the defendant's acceptance of the benefits of the contract estopped him, under the circumstances, from denying the capacity of the plaintiff to make such a contract in Ohio. See § 9 (b) supra.

In another case, where the corporation was the defendant, the following general rule was laid down: "Where a contract has been executed and fully no power to purchase upon credit the promissory note of one insured by the company and entitled to indemnity for a loss, for the purpose of setting off such note against the claim. The court said that, under the power of investment, the company "had no power to become a party to the contract of indorsement by which it obtained the notes in question, and no capacity to take or hold the legal title." This decision obviously implies that, in the opinion of the court, no action could be maintained upon a negotiable instrument acquired by means of an ultra vires transaction. One of the cases cited was Smith v. Alabama L. Ins. & T. Co. (1843) 4 Ala. 558. See § 19, note 2, supra.

In Vanatta v. State Bank (1858) 9 Ohio St. 27, the action was brought by the state bank upon a promissory note transferred to it by the Licking County Bank. The plaintiff was authorized by § 64 of the act under which it had been incorporated to discount notes of which the negotiability was restricted by special indorsement. The court was "satisfied that the Licking County Bank had no power, under its charter, to discount the note in question because a negotiable form was given to it, in contravention as well of the spirit and policy as of the terms of the statute. And if for this reason the note was void in the hands of the Licking County Bank, no action could be maintained upon it by the State Bank of Ohio, which, upon the commission of the act of bankruptcy, succeeded, by operation of the statute, merely to the rights of the bankrupt corporation." L.R.A.1917B.

In Niagara County Bank v. Baker (1864) 15 Ohio St. 69, it was held that no action could be maintained on a usurious instrument which the regulating statute expressly declared to be "void."

See also Miami Exporting Co. v. Clark (1844) 13 Ohio, 1, where it was held that, in an action of assumpsit against the acceptor of bills illegally discounted by the plaintiff, it could not recover, even on the common counts, the money lent by it. This decision was criticized and explained in Vanatta v. State Bank (Ohio) supra.

<sup>2</sup> Allen v. First Nat. Bank (1872) 23 Ohio St. 97. The precise doctrinal standpoint of the court is, however, rendered somewhat uncertain by the fact that it refers not only to First Nat. Bank v. Garlinghouse (1872) 22 Ohio St. 492, 10 Am. Rep. 751, in which the ratio decidendi was that the fact of a note's having been discounted at a usurious rate of interest merely avoids it to the extent of the illegal interest, but also to Bissell v. Michigan S. & N. I. R. Cos. (1860) 22 N. Y. 259, and Parish v. Wheeler (1860) 22 N. Y. 494, which are precedents for the principle of estoppel. It is submitted that the Ohio case does not sustain the statement based upon it, and that, in any event, the three cases cannot warrantably be grouped together as precedents, for they do not proceed upon the same doctrine. But the citation of the New York case may reasonably be regarded as indicating an approval of the principle of estoppel.

<sup>3</sup> Newburg Petroleum Co. v. Weare (1875) 27 Ohio St. 343.

performed on the part either of the corporation or of the other contracting party, neither will be permitted to insist that the contract and such performance by one party were not within the corporate power of the company."<sup>4</sup>

In another case in which the defendant railroad company had, for the purpose of facilitating the construction of the roadbed, obtained permission from the plaintiff to fill a tailrace with earth, on the understanding that, whenever requested, it would restore the race to its former condition, it was held that a demurrer to the plea raising the question of a want of power to maintain the race should have been sustained. The court said: "Having thus obtained possession from the plaintiff, and secured the benefits of the contract, the defendant is estopped from denying either the right or power of plaintiff to enjoy and maintain the tailrace. As well might a tenant dispute his landlord's title."<sup>5</sup> The last sentence of this passage renders it somewhat uncertain whether the previous reference to securing "the benefits of the contract" is to be regarded as reflecting a doctrine of general application, or should be construed in such a sense as would confine the principle of estoppel to cases which involve simply questions of the title of a plaintiff corporation to the property which is the subject matter of the suit.

But the most recent authorities evince a reversion, more or less complete, to the doctrine originally applied. In one case it was held that a director of a national bank to whom it had made a loan was not estopped, in an action brought for the recovery of the money, to plead ultra vires in bar of the claim so far as it related to interest.<sup>6</sup> The actual ratio decidendi in another case was that, "where property which the corporation, under certain circumstances, is authorized by its charter to acquire, is purchased in a mode or for a purpose not authorized,

. . . the title of the corporation to the property cannot be defeated by a party who is a stranger to the agreement by which the property was acquired, and who is not injured by the transfer."<sup>7</sup> But it was also remarked that, "where there is an absolute or total want of power in a corporation to deal in respect to a given subject, it may be that acts done in the name of the corporation, in regard to such subject, would, as corporate acts, be void for all purposes and as against all persons. But there is an obvious distinction between such a case and one where the corporation deals with a subject within the scope of its granted powers, but for a purpose or in a mode not authorized by its charter." The doctrine thus propounded manifestly involves the corollary that a contract ultra vires in the sense thus indicated could not be enforced on the basis of an estoppel.

In another case, where it was held that no action could be maintained by a corporation on a contract by which a person to whom a larger number of shares had been allotted than that which was specified by the limiting provision agreed to pay certain instalments of money to discharge a loan received as part of the transaction, it was laid down that "the power of the corporation to make rules and contract with its members in relation to their stock is limited to such shares as they may lawfully hold, and all contracts as well as by-laws in relation to shares in excess of that number are ultra vires and void." The court said: "The doctrine that a corporation cannot enforce by action a special contract entered into by it in excess of its corporate powers, although fully performed on its part, . . . has been so repeatedly approved by this court in subsequent cases that we do not deem it advisable to enter again upon its consideration. This doctrine must be regarded as settled in this state."<sup>8</sup> Here west Loan & T. Co. L.R.A.1917A, 749. But the court did not allude to this phase of the subject. The right to recover the principal was affirmed on the authority of Union Gold Min. Co. v. Rocky Mountain Nat. Bank (1877) 96 U. S. 640, 24 L. ed. 648, 1 Mor. Min. Rep. 432.

<sup>4</sup> Hays v. Galion Gaslight & Coal Co. (1876) 29 Ohio St. 330.

<sup>5</sup> Hamilton & R. Hydraulic Co. v. Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. (1876) 29 Ohio St. 341.

<sup>6</sup> National Bank v. Slemmons (1877) 34 Ohio St. 142, 32 Am. Rep. 364. The provisions violated were penal (National Bank Act, §§ 30, 31), so that the contract reserving excessive interest was "illegal" in the narrower sense which the word bears in those jurisdictions in which the doctrine of estoppel is held to be applicable to "unauthorized," but not "illegal," transactions. See § 70 of the monograph appended to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment Co. v. North-L.R.A.1917B.

<sup>7</sup> Ehrman v. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. (1880) 35 Ohio St. 324 (action on promissory note given by defendant to a company whose assets had been purchased by the plaintiff under a contract alleged to be unauthorized).

<sup>8</sup> Simpson v. Building & Sav. Assn. (1882) 38 Ohio St. 349.

the provision of the charter which was infringed was expressly prohibitory in its terms, and in treating the contract as ultra vires the court simply followed the earlier Ohio decisions.<sup>9</sup> But no reference was made to the theory adopted by many of the authorities, that the effect of the circumstance of the plaintiff's having performed the contract on his side is different according as the prohibition against making the contract in question is express or merely implied.

The same remark applies to another case, where it was held that no action could be maintained upon a contract by which the plaintiff agreed to take a certain number of shares of the defendant's stock in payment for goods to be manufactured for it. The court proceeded upon the ground that in Ohio, as well as elsewhere, "an incorporated company cannot, unless authorized by statute, make a valid subscription to the capital stock of another; that such subscription is ultra vires and void;" and that the contract came within the scope of the prohibitory provision in § 3266 of the Revised Statutes, to the effect that "no corporation shall employ its stock, means, assets, or other property for any other purpose whatever than to accomplish the legitimate objects of its creation."<sup>10</sup>

The apparent conclusion indicated by the foregoing summary of the decisions is that they cannot be fully harmonized upon any basis. The facts involved in most of them are such as to render it possible to consider them as being merely affirmations of the doctrine that the defendant's receipt of the benefits of a contract is not an element upon which an estoppel against raising the plea of invalidity can be predicated, if the contract was one which had been expressly prohibited. But so far the supreme court has not categorically declared its adhesion to the theory that, in respect of the operation of the principle of estoppel, there is an essential distinction between an express and an implied prohibition.

47. Oklahoma.

In one case where it was laid down that the charter of the plaintiff corporation was "full and sufficient notice to the defendant of the limitations of the plaintiff's authority," and consequently of the ultra vires character of the contract in question, it might possibly be inferred from the language of the court, as construed with reference to the facts involved, that it did not accept the doctrine of an estoppel as based upon performance by the corporation. But the decision really turned upon the circumstance that a settlement had been made between the parties.<sup>1</sup> Moreover, having regard to the position taken in the state, that the doctrine of estoppel is controlling in cases where the corporation is the defendant (see § 99 of the monograph appended to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment Co. v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. L.R.A.1917A, 737), there can be but little doubt that the court, whatever may have been its earlier views, could now apply that doctrine for the advantage of a plaintiff corporation.

48. Oregon.

In one case, where the plaintiff was a national bank, the court simply followed the Federal decisions with regard to the remedial rights of such a corporation.<sup>1</sup> See § 18, supra.

49. Pennsylvania.

The earliest case which calls for notice was one in which the defense of ultra vires was excluded on the ground that the commonwealth only was entitled to question the capacity of a corporation to hold real property which it is not authorized by its charter to acquire.<sup>1</sup>

In a subsequent case, where the action was brought upon certain notes purchased by a savings and loan company at a discount of more than 6 per cent, and it appeared that "this discount was not a single or casual act, but was made in the course of the business of purchasing and discounting notes and bills, which the plaintiffs had to a greater or less extent substituted for their legitimate business," the decision of Hare, J., turned upon the distinction between contracts which merely amount to "the misuse of a power by employing it for an end or purpose for which it ought not

<sup>9</sup> The precedent cited was Bank of Chilli-cothe v. Swayne, note 1, supra.

<sup>10</sup> Valley R. Co. v. Lake Erie Iron Co. (1888) 46 Ohio St. 44, 1 L.R.A. 412, 18 N. E. 486.

Oklahoma.

<sup>1</sup> Peck-Williamson Heating & Ventilating Co. v. Board of Education (1897) 6 Okla. 279, 50 Pac. 236. L.R.A.1917B.

Oregon.

<sup>1</sup> Portland Nat. Bank v. Scott (1891) 20 Or. 421, 26 Pac. 276.

Pennsylvania.

<sup>1</sup> Leazure v. Hillegas (1821) 7 Serg. & R. 313. For a later decision to the same effect, see Goundie v. Northampton Water Co. (1847) 7 Pa. 233.

to be employed, and was not given," and "contracts made without power in violation of an express legislative prohibition, or contrary to the plain intent and policy of the law." The conclusion reached, after an examination of the provisions of the statutes which defined the powers of the plaintiff, was that the transaction in question belonged to the latter of these categories, and consequently could not be made the basis of a legal claim.<sup>2</sup> Having regard to the circumstances under review, this decision was, by implication, inconsistent with the theory that an estoppel may be created by acceptance of the benefits of a contract. But this aspect of the matter was not adverted to, and, if it had been, the court would no doubt have taken the position that the theory was not applicable, because an express prohibition was involved.

In a case decided about ten years afterwards, in which it was held that an action of scire facias sur mortgage could not be maintained against a party to whom the mortgagor's estate had been assigned for the benefit of his creditors, the ground upon which the court proceeded was that the mortgage had been taken as a security for future advances, and was consequently a transaction which violated the provisions of the Federal statute by which the extent of the power of a national bank to hold real estate is defined.<sup>3</sup> The doctrine thus adopted, with respect to the consequences of an infringement of that statement, has been discredited by later rulings of the Federal Supreme Court. See § 17, supra. But this fact does not impair the significance of the case in so far as it bears upon the general theory entertained by the state court regarding ultra vires contracts of corporations. In this point of view, it is important to observe that the judgment contains a categorical statement to the effect that "there is no room for equitable presumptions or estoppels in cases of illegal contract." Having regard to the special meaning which, in the class of cases discussed in this monograph, has frequently been ascribed to the expression "illegal," these words might conceivably be treated as embodying the doctrine that the operation of the principle of an estoppel is excluded only where the contract upon which suit is brought is the subject of an express prohibition. But the actual position taken by the court is indicated by its subsequent statement that one of the points decided in the case was that the effect of the Federal act with respect to national banks is to "prohibit them, by necessary implication, from lending money on the security of a mortgage."<sup>4</sup>

In another case, in which it was held that a national bank was entitled to recover on a promissory note, although it had been given for a loan which exceeded the amount authorized by the Federal statute, the ratio decidendi was that "an excess known to the bank only" is not "such an unlawful act, entering into the vitality of the loan, as will avoid it. The fact of an excess of indebtedness over one tenth of the paid-in capital is a matter aside from the loan itself, not entering into its terms, and therefore collateral. The loan of the money is an act within the authorized power of the bank; a part of its proper business, and therefore not in itself illegal. The note or security given for the money was an instrument within the power of the bank to accept. The drawer had a right to make it, and the bank a right to discount it."<sup>5</sup> The court was also of the opinion that the limitation of the indebtedness to the one tenth specified by § 29 of the Act, "was intended as a general rule for conducting the business of the bank,—a rule laid down from experience to regulate its loans for its own best interest and those of stockholders and creditors, not a rule to regulate its customers." The grounds here assigned for allowing the action to be maintained resemble those which were afterwards relied upon by the Supreme Court of the United States in the cases cited in § 17, supra, and were obviously such as to render it inappropriate to invoke the principle of estoppel. The same remark applies to a later case in which it was again unsuccessfully contended that the same provision of the act operated so as to avoid a promissory note.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>2</sup> Manufacturers' & M. Sav. & L. Co. v. Conover (1862) 5 Phila. 18.

<sup>3</sup> Fowler v. Scully (1872) 72 Pa. 456, 13 Am. Rep. 699.

<sup>4</sup> In Stephens v. Monongahela Nat. Bank (1878) 88 Pa. 157, 32 Am. Rep. 438.

<sup>5</sup> In O'Hare v. Second Nat. Bank (1874) 77 Pa. 96; Fowler v. Scully, note 3, supra, was distinguished on the ground that the very instrument itself upon which suit was there L.R.A.1917B.

brought "was illegal and void, being forbidden to the bank as well as to the mortgagor, who was presumed to know the law."

<sup>6</sup> Stephens v. Monongahela Nat. Bank (1878) 88 Pa. 157, 32 Am. Rep. 438, where it was observed that "the powers conferred on banks must be distinguished from regulations for their business. An act done without authority, and forbidden, is not like one which violates a regulation."

In two subsequent cases the theory of an estoppel as predicated from the circumstance of the defendants having enjoyed the benefits of the contracts in question was explicitly relied upon as a reason for affirming the right of foreign corporations or their privies to recover upon contracts, the alleged invalidity of which consisted in the failure of the corporations to comply with the provisions of the act defining the conditions precedent to their doing business in Pennsylvania.<sup>7</sup> It should be observed, however, that in most of the instances in which this principle has been invoked in actions brought by foreign corporations, the estoppel against pleading their want of authority in the premises has been predicated not from the fact of a reception of the benefits of the contract, but from the fact that the party by whom the defense is set up had dealt with the foreign corporation as a corporate body. See § 9 (b), supra.

In another still more recent case the court simply followed the Federal decisions in holding that the plea of ultra vires could not be interposed as a defense to an action brought by a national bank to recover the rent accruing in respect of a portion of a building the erection of which was alleged to have been ultra vires.<sup>8</sup> But the principle of an estoppel was again relied upon as the ratio decidendi in a case in which it was held that the defense of ultra vires could not be interposed in an action upon a promissory note discounted by a corporation which, as was contended, had no authority to conduct a banking business. "The defendant," said the court, "having received the money on the discounted note, is not in a position to question the authority of the plaintiff to make the loan or to discount the paper. The defendant has received the benefit of the contract, and he cannot now deny the authority of the plaintiff to make it. Having the proceeds of the note in his pocket, neither the law nor common honesty will permit the defendant to avail himself of the plea of ultra vires."<sup>9</sup>

50. South Carolina.

In an early case, where the plaintiff bank was held to be entitled to maintain an action upon a bond, it was urged in behalf of the defendant "that the express grant of the power to discount bills of exchange and promissory notes, and of the power to make loans on bonds secured by mortgage, impliedly forbids the taking of a bond secured in any other way, and renders such bond and its guaranty void." But this contention did not prevail, the court being of the opinion that the correct rule of construction under such circumstances was this: "When

<sup>7</sup> In Holmes Co. v. Barnard (1884) 15 W. N. C. 110, the right of the plaintiff to recover the stipulated price of a commodity sold to the defendant was affirmed.

In Kilgore v. Smith (1888) 122 Pa. 48, 15 Atl. 598, where an action of replevin for certain goods in the possession of the defendants was held to be maintainable by plaintiffs, whose title was derived from a Maryland corporation, the defendants were members of that body, the business of which was conducted on the footing that its members should can their goods, and pack them, and hold them subject to the disposal of the corporation, which acted as a general agent for all its members in making sales of their commodities. A contract was entered into between the corporation and Smith & Wicks (plaintiffs below) for the sale of all the canned goods then held by the association unsold at that time. A part of these goods was the subject of the controversy. The court said: "In any view of the case, the plaintiffs have not been parties to any illegal transaction. The title to the goods in question was in the corporation under its by-laws, which were signed in Maryland. The defendants were Pennsylvania stockholders who assented to those by-laws. The title was therefore in the corporation by the defendants' own act. How, then, can they be heard to object to the plaintiffs' title after they had purchased the property in entire good faith and given a full consideration therefor? The defendants are estopped from setting up such a defense. If there have been any irregular transactions on the part of the company, the defendants have participated therein and enjoyed the advantages thereof, and they cannot now set up their own wrong against good faith parties who, for anything that appears, were in entire ignorance of all these matters."

<sup>8</sup> Farmers' Deposit Nat. Bank v. Western Pennsylvania Fuel Co. (1906) 215 Pa. 115, 114 Am. St. Rep. 949, 84 Atl. 374.

<sup>9</sup> Mutual Trust Co. v. Stern (1912) 235 Pa. 202, 83 Atl. 614.

In Suburban Rapid Transit Street R. Co. v. Monongahela Natural Gas Co. (1911) 230 Pa. 109, 79 Atl. 252, in a suit to enjoin the defendant from discontinuing the supply of gas, the court said: "The gas company, having accepted the right of way with the obligation to surrender it upon a failure to comply with the conditions of the grant, so long as undisturbed possession is enjoyed, is estopped from questioning the power of the turnpike company to make the grant." But the authorities cited show that the "estoppel" which the court had in mind was one analogous to that which precludes a tenant from questioning the title of his landlord.

the grant is silent as to the contract in question, we are to consider whether a power to make such a contract may not be implied as directly or indirectly necessary to enable the corporation to fulfil the purpose of its existence, or whether the contract is entirely foreign to that purpose." The position taken with reference to this rule was that the directions concerning bonds secured by mortgage seems to amount "rather to an express permission for an unusual course of dealing, with guards to prevent abuses in it, than to create any inhibition of other loans consistent with the purpose of the institution;" that "it is, however, too strict to insist that a power which is contained in a general grant, and which in various forms may be pertinent to the purpose of a corporation, may be restricted to a particular form of directions for its exercise in that form;" and that "the contract was good, as between the corporation and the defendant, although, for abuse of its powers, the corporation might be answerable to the government which created it."<sup>1</sup> This decision, it will be observed, proceeded upon grounds similar to those which have led the Federal Supreme Court to the conclusion that national banks have the right to sue on contracts which are outside the range of those authorized by the statute which defines their powers. See § 17, supra. The circumstance that the defendant had received the benefits of the contract was not adverted to as one of the elements in the case. Indeed, the notion that this element is one of differentiating significance in respect of the remedial rights of a corporation had not been in terms propounded at the date when the decision was rendered. That it cannot justifiably be cited as a precedent with regard to the doctrine of estoppel is manifest.<sup>2</sup>

In a much later case, where a demurrer to a complaint claiming damages in respect of the refusal of a purchaser to receive goods sold under a contract made by a corporation in pursuance of a partnership agreement was held to have been properly overruled, the ratio decidendi was that the well-established doctrine which declares that a corporation cannot enter into a partnership agreement "does not imply that the corporation does not acquire, as against the outside world, part ownership of property bought in part with corporate funds in the progress of an attempted partnership business. An incident of ownership is the power of sale, and the power to sell implies the power to hold those who agree to buy to perform their agreement or pay damages for its breach."<sup>3</sup> The theory of an estoppel as predicated from the receipt of the benefits of the contract was not adverted to, though the circumstances were apparently such that the sufficiency of the complaint might have been affirmed upon this ground. Having regard, however, to the fact that the court has accepted this theory so far as actions against corporations are concerned (see § 103 of the monograph appended to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment Co. v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. L.R.A.1917A, 737), it will presumably determine the enforceability of the claims of corporations on the same footing, whenever the point is directly presented.

51. Tennessee.

In one case the ratio decidendi was that a purchase of shares in another corporation for the express object of controlling and managing it "was ultra vires, and therefore unlawful and void. Being void, it was of no legal effect, and no rights result from it enforceable by or through the courts of the state, when such aid is invoked in furtherance of the unlawful agreement." The court rejected the contention of counsel for complainant, "that, where the contract has been fully executed by the plaintiff, the defendant should not be permitted to invoke such defense to a suit brought to compel performance; that to permit such a defense would work injustice and enable defendant to repudiate his liability while holding onto the price he has received." Certain classes of cases in which the defense of ultra vires has been excluded were enumerated, and questions involved in them were distinguished from that which was presented in the one

South Carolina.

<sup>1</sup> Bank of State v. Hammond (1845) 1 Rich. L. 281.

<sup>2</sup> For an example of such a mistake, see Texas Western R. Co. v. Gentry (1888) 69 Tex. 625, 8 S. W. 98.

<sup>3</sup> Huguenot Mills v. Jempson (1904) 68 S. C. 363, 102 Am. St. Rep. 673, 47 S. E. 687. The court said: "The defendants are charged with knowledge that the plaintiff L.R.A.1917B.

could not enter into a legal partnership (Pearce v. Madison & I. R. Co. (1858) 21 How. (U. S.) 441, 16 L. ed. 184), and that in the contract to purchase they were dealing with the plaintiff and Rountree as joint owners of the property, who as such had a right to sell it. For this reason they cannot now dispute the validity of the contract of purchase or the liabilities which fell upon them when they repudiated it."

under review. "The complainant sues upon its contract, and in affirmance of it seeks to have the defendant perform an agreement which sprang from and was collateral to it. It has received the shares it purchased, and holds onto them. It simply asks that the defendant be further compelled to perform his contract by contributing, in accordance with his agreement, his proportion of the liability paid off by complainant in protection of the property of the McMillin Marble Company. The suit is clearly in furtherance of the original, unlawful, and void contract. That the contract has been executed by the plaintiff does not make it lawful or entitle it to an enforcement of it."<sup>1</sup>

52. Texas.

In the earliest case in which the supreme court had occasion to express an opinion with regard to the significance of the circumstance that the claimant had performed the contract on his side, an action brought by a city to enforce a bond conditioned for the faithful performance by the defendant railway company of a contract to extend its line beyond the city in consideration of its being granted a right of way through the town was held to be maintainable. The actual ratio decidendi was that the city authorities had power to grant the defendant an easement in the streets. But the court also said: "After the company has received and is in the enjoyment of the fruits arising from such a contract, it will not be heard to complain and assert that the city could not confer upon it the right that it had thus received and is now enjoying."<sup>1</sup> This sentence clearly imports that the defendant would not have been permitted to raise the defense of ultra vires, even if the grant had been ultra vires.

Subsequently, in a case involving the remedial rights of a private corporation, the court approved a ruling of the trial judge to the effect that, as the defendants had received the money for which they had executed the note upon which the action was brought, they were "estopped from denying the power of plaintiff to lend the money."<sup>2</sup> It was conceded that, if the contract had been not merely ultra vires, but illegal, as having been expressly prohibited, no estoppel could have been predicated.<sup>3</sup> But the contention put forward by the defendant on this point of view was rejected on the ground that, having regard to the terms of the enactment relied upon (Rev. Stat. art. 589), the case was one which came within the scope of the doctrine asserted to be the more authoritative, that "where the statute has a specific, but at the same time an implied, application, the doctrine of estoppel against the beneficiary of an executed contract is not changed." There is some support for this doctrine; but it is submitted that the court was not justified in citing as a precedent in its favor the decisions of the Federal Supreme Court with respect to the remedial rights of national banks. See § 17, supra.

The decision reviewed in the preceding paragraph has been followed by the court of appeals in several cases.<sup>4</sup>

Tennessee.

<sup>1</sup> Buckeye Marble & F. Co. v. Harvey (1892) 92 Tenn. 115, 18 L.R.A. 252, 36 Am. St. Rep. 71, 20 S. W. 427. There Harvey, the owner of the shares, transferred them to a trustee named by complainant, for its benefit, and, as part of this contract, the transferee agreed to pay off one half of certain liabilities existing against the corporation whose shares were purchased. The complainant, having been compelled to pay off these liabilities in full, brought the action to recover back one half the amount from Harvey.

Texas.

<sup>1</sup> Indianola v. Gulf, W. T. & P. R. Co. (1882) 56 Tex. 594.

<sup>2</sup> Bond v. Terrell Cotton & Woolen Mfg. Co. (1891) 82 Tex. 309, 18 S. W. 691. The court said: "It seems now to be settled by the great weight of authority, that where there is question of a contract between a corporation and another party, and the contract has been performed by the other party, and the corporation has received the L.R.A.1917B.

benefit of the contract, it will not be permitted to plead that on entering into the contract it exceeded its chartered powers.

. . . This rule operates conversely. If the other party has received from a corporation the benefit of a contract fully performed in good faith by it, he will not be heard to resist enforcement of the contract as to him by pleading the mere want of power in a corporation to enter into the contract." It was stated that the views expressed were in conflict with only one group of decisions; viz., those of the supreme court of Alabama; but an examination of the cases of earlier date, which are cited in § 11, note 1, supra, will show that this assertion is erroneous.

<sup>3</sup> As to this distinction, see, generally, § 44 of the monograph appended to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment Co. v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. L.R.A.1917A, 737.

<sup>4</sup> Smith v. White (1893) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 25 S. W. 809 (action held to be maintainable by innocent holder of note given for a loan made by a corporation which had no power to discount); Keys v. Cleburne

53. Utah.

In one case the claim of an individual to be declared the legal owner of certain corporate stock because another claimant, a corporation, had no power to subscribe to stock, was rejected on the ground that "the doctrine of ultra vires, when invoked for or against a corporation, should not be allowed where it would defeat the ends of justice or work a legal wrong."<sup>1</sup> But the principle thus invoked was enounced not with reference to an estoppel created by the enjoyment of the benefits of the transaction, but as pointing to the conclusion that, as the wrongful subscription by one company to the stock of the other, and the wrongful issue of the stock in dispute, were brought about by the individual claimant and his coadjutor, he should "not be permitted to retain the property, or the stock which represented it, secured by his fraudulent designs and actions."

54. Vermont.

In an early case in which the action was brought by a railway company to recover for work performed in repairing, at the request of the defendants, a steamboat which the plaintiff had previously

Bldg. & L. Asso. (1893) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 25 S. W. 809 (borrower from bank held liable on note given for loan alleged to be ultra vires); Head v. Cleburne Bldg. & L. Asso. (1893) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 25 S. W. 810 (similar decision).

In Logan v. Texas Bldg. & L. Asso. (1894) 8 Tex. Civ. App. 490, 28 S. W. 141, where it was held that Logan, having obtained from the plaintiff the money for which the note in suit was given, was precluded from interposing the defense of ultra vires, it was urged that the defense relied upon was not that of ultra vires simply, but that the contract was illegal and void, as regards the plaintiff, because it was prohibited by § 16, art. 16, of the Texas Constitution, which provides that "no corporate body shall hereafter be created with banking or discounting privileges." But the court said: "The provision is a limitation upon the powers of the legislature in creating corporations; it does not denounce banking and discounting, but prohibits the creation of artificial persons endowed with such privileges. Discounting is a legal, moral, and highly necessary business to the commerce of the country, and may be engaged in by any person having legal capacity to transact such business. A corporation whose charter, purposes, and powers do not embrace that character of business would not be legally authorized to transact such business, if this constitutional provision did not exist. It has only such powers as are granted by the charter, and may not legally exercise powers not given by the law of its creation. Whether the legislature upon unlimited discretion declines to grant a particular power to a corporation, or refuses by reason of a constitutional limitation upon its discretion to grant such power, the corporation may not exercise the power for the same reason in either case; namely, if, under the law of its creation, it does not possess the power, the act is ultra vires. This was not a contract which was illegal, because immoral, against public policy, or denounced by the law of the state; the only objection that can be urged is that the power to engage in such business is by law withheld from such corporations. It is the simple defense of ultra vires."

In Cameron v. First Nat. Bank (1896) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 34 S. W. 178, affirming L.R.A.1917B.

(1893) 4 Tex. Civ. App. 309, 23 S. W. 334, one of the defenses set up in an action to recover money lent, that the plaintiff national bank had no power to become a partner in the milling business, was held inapplicable in the case, on the ground that "the bank certainly had the power to lend money, and this suit was brought to recover in the capacity of creditor, and not as a partner to recover a share of the profits, of which there were none." The court added: "Other reasons might be assigned for the insufficiency of the ultra vires defense in this case," a remark which was apparently a reference to the doctrine of estoppel.

In Moon Bros. Carriage Co. v. Waxahachie Grain & Implement Co. (1898) 13 Tex. Civ. App. 103, 35 S. W. 337, one of the allegations in a creditors' bill filed against the Waxahachie etc. Company and the Citizens' National Bank was that the bank had attached the goods of the company for a debt which was nonenforceable for the reason that it was for borrowed money in excess of the authorized capital stock of the company. The decision proceeded upon the ground that, even if it were assumed in favor of the complainants that they were entitled to raise the question of invalidity in the proceeding as instituted, the notes given for the debt were valid, at least for the amount which the company was allowed to lend, and that, upon this basis, the result would not change the decree which awarded to the bank the net proceeds of the sale of the attached property, which was less than the sum which could be lawfully lent. But it would seem that the claim of the bank was unassailable for another reason also; viz., that the debtor was precluded, under the circumstances, from pleading ultra vires, and that the creditors were consequently incapable of asserting rights which could not be enforced except upon the hypothesis that this plea would have afforded a defense to an action brought by the bank.

In Corpus Christi v. Central Wharf & Warehouse Co. (1894) 8 Tex. Civ. App. 94, 27 S. W. 803, the doctrine of the above cases was applied in favor of a municipality.

Utah.

<sup>1</sup> Bear River Valley Orchard Co. v. Hanley (1897) 15 Utah, 508, 50 Pac. 611.

sold to them, the defense was that an earlier contract of purchase, by which plaintiff had acquired the title to the boat and its furniture and to the shop at which the repairs were made, was ultra vires, and that the excess of power thus assumed by the company was illegal, and rendered all contracts connected with the transaction inoperative by reason of such illegality. But this contention did not prevail. "If," said the court, "there had been a positive prohibition of entering into a particular class of contracts, and especially if such contracts had been declared void by the charter of the company or the general laws of the state, most unquestionably no action would lie upon the prohibited contract. But when no such prohibition exists, and it is only by construction of the charter that a class of contracts is declared to be beyond the power of the company, and when upon this point there is such reasonable ground of doubt as to induce a court to suppose the directors may have acted in good faith, and where the question is raised by one having no interest in it except for purposes of unjust advantage, courts have never been inclined to listen to the objections."<sup>1</sup> The language thus used indicates that, in the opinion of the court, a contract which is merely unauthorized is not absolutely void in the same sense as a contract which infringes an express prohibition. As this theory was propounded with reference to the adverse claim of a stranger to the anterior transaction which was impugned, the decision left it uncertain whether the same position would have been taken if the defendant had been a participant in the transaction.

In a case decided a few years afterwards, it was urged, in defense of an action on promissory notes given for a loan made by a bank, "that, by force of the prohibition in the charter and the banking laws of this state, the fact that the notes embrace in the principal sum interest beyond the prescribed limit, and also reserve on their face interest exceeding that limit, renders said notes void as contracts in toto." But the court rejected this argument, basing its opinion on the doctrine that "there is an important distinction to be made between cases in which there has been a mere transcending of the limits of a conferred right, on the one hand, and cases, on the other, in which there is an entire prohibition of right, whether accompanied or not by a provision of a penalty for violating such prohibition, or a provision that the prohibited contract or act shall be void." In this point of view the appropriate conclusion was considered to be that, as the bank was authorized to loan its money and take securities therefor at the rate of interest specified, the reservation of a higher rate operated merely so as to prevent the recovery of the illegal excess.<sup>2</sup> The second contention of the defendants, viz., that the loan exceeded the amount authorized by law, and that this fact constituted a complete bar to the action, was also rejected for the reason that it involved substantially the same principle as the other, and was determinable upon a similar footing. That the actual points decided in this case were not such as to evince an intention on the part of the court to adopt the doctrine of estoppel is sufficiently evident; but the fact that it quotes with approval an oft-cited statement of that doctrine<sup>3</sup> is a significant indication of its views upon this subject. Having regard, however, to the most recent rulings of the court with respect to the inadmissibility of this doctrine as a differentiating factor in actions brought against corporations (see § 107 of the monograph referred to in note 3, supra), it would presumably not be treated at the present day as such a factor where the moving party is the corporation itself.

In a later case that bears upon the subject, the court discussed the rights of the claimant with reference solely to the extent of the relief to which he was entitled independently of the ultra vires contract in question. The doctrine pre-

Vermont.

<sup>1</sup> Rutland & B. R. Co. v. Proctor (1856) 29 Vt. 93.

<sup>2</sup> Farmers' Bank v. Burchard (1860) 33 Vt. 346. This case was followed in Bank of Middlebury v. Bingham (1861) 33 Vt. 621, where it was stated that the purport of the earlier decision was this: that a prohibition against the taking of more than a certain rate of interest by a banking institution "had no other or greater effect upon notes taken by them than the same prohibition has upon natural persons by the general law of the state; that it is not properly a case of a contract beyond the power and scope of their charter, but, like all usurious notes invalid, and not enforceable to the extent that it is usurious and in contravention of the statute."

<sup>3</sup> Sedgw. Stat. & Const. Law, p. 90. See § 41 of the monograph appended to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment Co. v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. L.R.A.1917A, 737.

vously laid down was assumed to be correct.<sup>4</sup>

In one case, where a national bank was the plaintiff, the court simply followed the Federal decisions as being of paramount authority.<sup>5</sup> See § 17, supra.

55. Wisconsin.

Having regard to the nature and incidents of the transaction involved in the earliest of the cases in this state, the decision might apparently be considered as a precedent for the doctrine that a corporation cannot maintain an action upon a contract which it had no authority to make, even though the adverse party has received the benefits of the transaction.<sup>1</sup> But, as the decision in this particular point of view was founded upon the theory that the contract was executory, it cannot warrantably be classified as an authority distinctly adverse to the principle of an estoppel. Whether the court was warranted in treating the contract as executory seems to be at least disputable.

In a later case, in which the action was brought to foreclose a mortgage securing a note given for a loan made by an insurance company,<sup>2</sup> it was argued that the debt was not recoverable, because the contract was unauthorized in two respects: (1) that the loan was for two years, the lawful period being one year; and (2) that a note was taken for the loan instead of a bond, which was prescribed by the statute. But this contention did not prevail, the court being of opinion that the remedial rights of the plaintiff were determined by the rule established by an earlier case;<sup>3</sup> viz., that there is a distinction "between contracts

<sup>4</sup> Roberts v. W. H. Hughes Co. (1912) 86 Vt. 76, 83 Atl. 807 (invalid issue of bonds).

<sup>5</sup> Howard Nat. Bank v. Loomis (1879) 51 Vt. 349 (mortgage of real estate).

Wisconsin.

<sup>1</sup> Madison, W. & M. Pl. Road Co. v. Watertown & P. Pl. Road Co. (1858) 7 Wis. 59. There the plaintiff, a corporation created for the purpose of building a plankroad, guaranteed the payment of a loan of money made to another corporation of like character, for the purpose of enabling it to build its road, the construction of which would be advantageous to the former. The borrower being in default, plaintiff discharged the debt. Held, that, as the guaranty was unauthorized, the payment created no legal liability on the part of the corporation for whose benefit the payment was made. The argument that, as the defendants had had the money for which the bills and mortgage in question were given, it was inequitable and fraudulent for them to set up the act of the plaintiff in aiding them to get the money, or in paying it when it became due to the lenders, for the purpose of defeating a recovery upon their mortgage was thus answered: "We do not think this view of the matter changes the legal rights of the parties. The plaintiff, of course, was aware of the extent of its own power. Those who managed the affairs of the corporation must have known that it had no authority to guarantee the payment of the notes or bonds of third persons, and that, if they attempted to do so, no legal obligation could result from such attempt. The payment of the money under such circumstances by the plaintiff was a payment in their own wrong, for which they cannot charge the defendants." The court also rejected the contention that the contract of the complainants had been executed, and that, as it was not illegal, but, at least, only unauthorized by the charter of the company, the court should not now interfere L.R.A.1917B.

to set it aside, after the defendants have reaped all its benefits, although, perhaps, it could not have been enforced. But this conclusion was based upon the theory that the contract, so far as it was relied upon for the purpose of affecting the defendants, was not executed, but executory merely.

<sup>2</sup> Germantown Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co. v. Dhein (1877) 43 Wis. 420, 28 Am. Rep. 549. The court observed that the case cited in note 1, supra, involved not a mere excess of power, but an entire want of power. The doctrine laid down in Littlewort v. Davis (1874) 50 Miss. 403, was approved.

<sup>3</sup> Rock River Bank v. Sherwood (1860) 10 Wis. 230, 78 Am. Dec. 669, where it was held that the plaintiff bank could recover the principal of a note and interest at the rate which it was authorized to take, although a higher rate was specified in the note. The court said: "Here the bank, it is conceded, had full and ample power to discount promissory notes, loan money, etc., and conduct a general banking business, but it could only reserve 10 per cent interest upon its loans. It is not a case where a corporation usurps a power not given by its charter, but where, in the exercise of a lawful power and in conducting its legitimate business, it has exceeded the limits fixed by law. Had the note been given drawing 10 per cent interest after it became due, there could have been no question as to the validity of the contract. But the objection is that the bank had no authority to discount a note at a greater rate of interest than the general banking law allowed; and if it does, the note is void for want of such power. Is this objection sound? I think not." The court declined to follow the decisions in Bank of United States v. Owens (1829) 2 Pet. (U. S.) 527, 7 L. ed. 508; Bank of Chillicothe v. Swayne (1838) 8 Ohio, 257, 32 Am. Dec. 707; Creed v. Commercial Bank (1842) 11 Ohio, 489; Spalding v. Bank of Muskingum (1843) 12 Ohio, 544; Orr v. Lacey (1846) 2 Doug.

of corporations which they have no authority to make, and those within the general scope of their powers, but which are, in some particulars, in excess of those powers," and that, "while the former class may be void, the latter are valid, unless by reason of such excess they are against public policy." It is clear that, whenever the contract under review is of such a character as to render the second subdivision of this rule applicable, the question whether the defendant is estopped from pleading ultra vires becomes an entirely negligible factor. But it should be remarked that the distinction thus predicated between the two specified classes of contracts has also been treated as the basis of a doctrine which affirms that the principle of estoppel is applicable to the latter class only. See § 43 of the monograph appended to Creditors' Claim & Adjustment Co. v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. L.R.A.1917A, 737.

In a subsequent case the inability of a member of a building and loan association to interpose the defense of ultra vires in a suit to foreclose a mortgage given by him to secure a loan made by the association was predicated from the consideration that, as a member of that body, he was bound to take notice of the limitations upon its contractual powers, and, having assented to the transaction, was estopped from contesting its validity.<sup>4</sup> Since the principle of an estoppel, as predicated from the defendant's receipt of the benefits of the contract, had, before the date of this case, been adopted with regard to actions against corporations, it would seem that the decision might with equal propriety have been referred to this description of estoppel also. But this aspect of the facts was not adverted to. It seems to be open to question whether the doctrine actually applied was correct. See § 3a, supra.

In some cases the ratio decidendi has been the principle "that, when a corporation enters into business relations not authorized by its corporate grant of power, the doctrine of ultra vires cannot be used by it or by the person with whom it assumes to deal as a means of defeating the obligations assumed. The state alone can take advantage of the abuse."<sup>5</sup>

From the foregoing summary it is apparent that, so far as regards actions in which the corporation is the plaintiff, the supreme court of this state has not only never enunciated categorically the principle that a defendant who has received the benefits of an ultra vires contract is estopped from pleading its invalidity, but has in some instances deliberately elected, even under circumstances which suggested the consideration, if not the application, of that doctrine, to refer the right of recovery to a doctrine under which the ultra vires character of the contract simply became an irrelevant factor. Nevertheless there can be but little doubt that, in view of the adoption of that principle with respect to actions in which the corporation itself is the defendant (see § 110 of the monograph referred to supra), it will be approved whenever the point is definitely presented.

(Mich.) 230. The authorities approved were Commercial Bank v. Nolan (1843) 7 How. (Miss.) 508, and McLean v. Lafayette Bank (1846) 3 McLean, 587, Fed. Cas. No. 8,888.

<sup>4</sup> Provident Loan & Bldg. Asso. v. Carter (1900) 107 Wis. 383, 83 N. W. 655.

In an earlier case Leahy v. National Bldg. & L. Asso. (1898) 100 Wis. 555, 69 Am. St. Rep. 945, 76 N. W. 625, the doctrine that the members of a body of this description, being bound to take notice of the limitations on its powers, were precluded from contesting the validity of the contract in question, had previously been laid down in receivership proceedings.

<sup>5</sup> Security Nat. Bank v. St. Croix Power Co. (1903) 117 Wis. 211, 96 N. W. 74 (national bank which had taken an assignment of a contract for the performance of construction work, in order to secure a loan made to the contractor, and had completed the work after his death, was held to be entitled to foreclose a mechanics' lien), citing John V. Farwell Co. v. Wolf (John V. Farwell Co. v. Josephson) (1897) 96 L.R.A.1917B.

Wis. 10, 37 L.R.A. 138, 65 Am. St. Rep. 22, 70 N. W. 289, 71 N. W. 109 (suit to enforce certain claims for damages, of which plaintiff had taken an assignment after they had been reduced to judgment).

In Madison v. American Sanitary Engineering Co. (1903) 118 Wis. 480, 95 N. W. 1097, the following remarks were made in a case where a municipal corporation was the plaintiff: "Taxpayers whose money is about to be spent, or property owners whose land is about to be charged, may challenge the legality of municipal acts and contracts calling for such expenditures, on the ground that the proper legal steps have not been taken; but persons who enter into a contract with the city stand in a different position. Such a person cannot even make the defense of ultra vires or total lack of power on the part of the corporation to make the contract. Security Nat. Bank v. St. Croix Power Co. (Wis.) supra. If the defense of ultra vires cannot be made, it is very evident that the lesser claim of failure to execute a given power in the statutory way must also be ineffective."

56. Canada.

The English authorities are controlling in this country, and will doubtless be followed whenever a case arises in which the evidence shows that the person sued by the corporation has received the benefits of the contract.<sup>1</sup>

Canada.

<sup>1</sup> In two cases actions on guaranties were held not to be maintainable. Williams Machinery Co. v. Crawford Tug Co. (1908) 16 Ont. L. Rep. 245; Union Bank v. McKillop & Sons (1913) 30 Ont. L. Rep. 87, affirming (1913) — Ont. —, 11 D. L. R. 449, 24 Ont. Week. Rep. 549. But such cases do not present in its ordinary form the question of the effect of a receipt of benefits by the defendant himself.

<sup>2</sup> Northern R. Co. v. Lister (1807) 27 U. C. Q. B. 57. There the defendant, being employed by the plaintiffs as their locomotive and car superintendent, made use of their materials and men in doing work for a sewing machine manufactory in which he was a partner, and untruly entered such time and materials as employed in the plaintiffs' service. The plaintiffs sued him upon the common counts, claiming in their particulars for goods furnished, but not for work and labor. Draper, Ch. J., in the judgment delivered for the court, argued thus: "We have no difficulty in holding that the plaintiffs' charter does not authorize them to carry on a trading or manufacturing business, or to deal in or manufacture for sale articles such as are stated in the particulars. . . . But it is obvious that the plaintiffs do not pretend to possess any such right. They are in fact complaining and seeking compensation from the defendant, because, when in their service he abused the confidence placed in him, and used their property and employed their workmen in making certain articles for his own use, and which he got possession of. Assume this to be true; can he be heard to say to the plaintiffs, 'You shall not recover from me the value of the materials and labor which belonged to you, and of which I am enjoying the products, because your charter does not authorize you to engage in such a business.' The answer is that the plaintiffs never intended to become manufacturers or vendors of articles manufactured for the purpose of being sold; that the manufacturing and sale appearing in this case were not carried on by them as a part of their business; but that they seek to treat the defendant as vendee, and themselves as vendors of articles produced (without their knowledge) but at their expense, which the defendant, without any authority from them, caused to be made for himself, and has taken away; and they urge that he should not be permitted to set up this flagrant breach of duty, if it be no more, as a reason for keeping these goods without paying for them. We think their claim is maintainable, and that the case of Hill v. Perrott (1810) 3 Taunt. 274, 128 Eng. Reprint, 109, justifies this conclusion."

The ratio decidendi in a case which involved somewhat peculiar circumstances was that the defendant was precluded by his own misconduct from setting up as a defense that the plaintiffs, under their charter, could not sue on the cause of action alleged in his declaration.<sup>2</sup>

C. B. L.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

MAYME PAUL, Admr., etc., of John P. Paul, Deceased, Appt.,

v.

M. M. STUCKEY.

(— Ark. —, 189 S. W. 676.)

Writ — service on attorney — attendance on court.

An attorney is not exempt from service of civil process while attending court in a professional capacity in a county other than that of his residence.

For other cases, see Writ and Process, II. d, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(November 20, 1916.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Pulaski Coun-

Note. — As to exemption of attorney from service of summons while in jurisdiction on legal business, see annotation following this case, post, 893.
L.R.A.1917B.

ty sustaining a motion to quash a service of summons and dismissing a complaint filed to recover the amount of an indebtedness alleged to be due plaintiff as administratrix of the estate of John P. Paul, deceased. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Carmichael, Brooks, Powers, & Rector, for appellant:

There is no state statute exempting either local or nonresident attorneys from any legal process.

Powers v. Arkadelphia Lumber Co. 61 Ark. 504, 54 Am. St. Rep. 276, 33 S. W. 842.

The common law does not allow counsel the privilege of immunity from service of civil summons.

Weeks, Attorneys at Law, §§ 107, 198; 3 Bl. Com. § 289; 8 Bacon, Abr. Privileges, B; Greenleaf v. People's Bank, 133 N. C. 292, 63 L.R.A. 499, 98 Am. St. Rep. 709, 45 S. E. 638.

The great weight of authority is decidedly against privileging attorneys in such a manner.

Peel v. January, 35 Ark. 331, 37 Am. Rep. 27; Tootle v. McClellan, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 942, note; Levin v. Gladstein, 142 N. C. 482, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 931, 115 Am. St. Rep. 747, 55 S. E. 371; Jaster v. Currie, 198 U. S. 144, 49 L. ed. 988, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 614; Netograph Mfg. Co. v. Scrugham, 197 N. Y. 377, 27 L.R.A. (N.S.) 333, 134 Am. St. Rep. 886, 90 N. E. 962; Plano Mfg. Co. v. Kaufert, 86 Minn. 13, 89 N. W. 1124; Grove v. Campbell, 9 Yerg. 7; Huntington v. Shultz, Harp. L. 452, 18 Am. Dec. 660; Martin v. Bacon, 76 Ark. 161, 113 Am. St. Rep. 81, 88 S. W. 863, 6 Ann. Cas. 336; Central Trust Co. v. Milwaukee Street R. Co. 74 Fed. 442; Holmes v. Nelson, 1 Phila. 217; Gilbert v. Vanderpool, 15 Johns. 242; Secor v. Bell, 18 Johns. 52; Lyell v. Goodwyn, 4 McLean, 29, Fed. Cas. No. 8,616; Larned v. Griffin, 12 Fed. 590; Mulhearn v. Press Pub. Co. 53 N. J. L. 153, 11 L.R.A. 101, 21 Atl. 186; Hoffman v. Bay County Circuit Judge, 113 Mich. 109, 38 L.R.A. 663, 67 Am. St. Rep. 458, 71 N. W. 480; Robbins v. Lincoln, 27 Fed. 342; Phillips v. Browne, 270 Ill. 450, 110 N. E. 601; Greenleaf v. People's Bank, 133 N. C. 292, 63 L.R.A. 503, 98 Am. St. Rep. 709, 45 S. E. 638.

Messrs. Campbell & Suits, for appellee:

Parties to pending litigation are exempt from service of summons while attending to that litigation outside the county or state of their residence.

Powers v. Arkadelphia Lumber Co. 61 Ark. 504, 54 Am. St. Rep. 276, 33 S. W. 842; Martin v. Macon, 76 Ark. 161, 113 Am. St. Rep. 81, 88 S. W. 863, 6 Ann. Cas. 336; Bridges v. Sheldon, 18 Blatchf. 295, 507, 7 Fed. 17; Lyell v. Goodwin, 4 McLean, 29, Fed. Cas. No. 8,616; Com. v. Ronald, 4 Call. (Va.) 97; Gilbert v. Vanderpool, 15 Johns. 242; Secor v. Bell, 18 Johns. 52; Parker v. Hotchkiss, 1 Wall. Jr. 269, Fed. Cas. No. 10,739; Holmes v. Nelson, 1 Phila. 217; Matthews v. Tufts, 87 N. Y. 568; Central Trust Co. v. Milwaukee Street R. Co. 74 Fed. 442; Hoffman v. Bay County Circuit Judge, 113 Mich. 109, 38 L.R.A. 663, 67 Am. St. Rep. 458, 71 N. W. 480; Whitman v. Sheets, 20 Ohio C. C. 1, 11 Ohio C. D. 179; Brooks v. State, 3 Boyce (Del.) 1, 51 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1126, 79 Atl. 790, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 1133; Williams v. Hatcher, 95 S. C. 49, 78 S. E. 615; Read v. Neff, 207 Fed. 890.

Defendant's privilege is not contrary to reason and public policy.

Woodruff v. Berry, 40 Ark. 263; Wernimont v. State, 101 Ark. 216, 142 N. W. 194, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 1156; Wood v. Keith, 60 Ark. 425, 30 S. W. 756; Seelbinder v. Witherspoon, 124 Ark. 331, 187 S. W. 325. L.R.A. 1917B.

Wood, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant filed her complaint against the appellee in the Pulaski circuit court, alleging that appellee was indebted to the estate of John P. Paul in the sum of $700, and asking that she, as his administratrix, have judgment for that amount. She had summons issued. Appellee is an attorney. He was engaged in defending one Atkinson, who was on trial charged with a felony in the Pulaski circuit court. Appellee, while thus engaged, was called to the door of the court room, and the summons issued in the civil suit was served upon him. Appellee at that time resided in Jackson county. He moved to quash the service of summons. The court sustained the motion, dismissed appellant's complaint, and she appeals.

Was the service valid? The action instituted against the appellee belongs to that class that may be brought in any county in which the defendant is summoned. Kirby's Dig. § 6072. We have a statute expressly exempting witnesses from being sued in counties where they do not reside, while going, returning, or attending in obedience to a subpoena. Kirby's Dig. § 3129. But there is no such statute concerning attorneys at law. They fall, so far as statutory enactment is concerned, within the general class against whom suits may be brought in any county in which the defendant is summoned. Kirby's Dig. § 6072, supra.

The appellee contends that attorneys, while attending court in their professional capacity in counties other than their residence, should be exempt from the service of summons in civil actions against them in those counties, under the doctrine announced by this court in Powers v. Arkadelphia Lumber Co. 61 Ark. 504, 54 Am. St. Rep. 276, 33 S. W. 842, and Martin v. Bacon, 76 Ark. 158, 113 Am. St. Rep. 81, 88 S. W. 863, 6 Ann. Cas. 336, to the effect that suitors, while in attendance upon judicial proceedings in courts other than that of their residence, are privileged from the service of summons in other adverse proceedings instituted against them in those counties.

In Powers v. Arkadelphia Lumber Co. supra, we said: "One line of authorities rests the privilege solely on the familiar constitutional ground of freedom from arrest on civil process; but we prefer to rest it also on the ground of a sound public policy, so aptly expressed by the supreme court of Ohio in the case of Andrews v. Lembeck, 46 Ohio St. 40, 15 Am. St. Rep. 547, 18 N. E. 483, thus: 'The question is one which profoundly concerns the free and unhampered administration of justice in the courts. That suitors should feel free and safe at all times to attend, within any jurisdiction outside of their own upon judicial proceedings in which they are concerned, and which require their presence, without incurring the liability of being picked up and held to answer to some other adverse judicial proceeding against them, is so far a rule of public policy that it has received almost universal recognition wherever the common law is known and administered."

And again, quoting from Lamkin v. Starkey, 7 Hun, 479, we said: "The court has power, independently of the statute, to protect its suitors, officers, and witnesses."

In Martin v. Bacon, supra, we quoted the language of Judge Elliott in Wilson v. Donaldson, 117 Ind. 356, 3 L.R.A. 266, 10 Am. St. Rep. 48, 20 N. E. 250, as follows: "High considerations of public policy require that the law should encourage him [the nonresident suitor] to freely enter our forums by granting immunity from process in other civil actions, and not discourage him by burdening him with the obligation to submit to the writs of our courts if he comes within our borders."

Public policy is defined as: "That principle of the law which holds that no subject can lawfully do that which has a tendency to be injurious to the public or against the public good; . . . the principles under which freedom of contract or private dealing is restricted by law for the good of the community the public good." 32 Cyc. 1251.

In Woodruff v. Berry, 40 Ark. 251, this court approved Lord Brougham's definition of public policy as follows: "Public policy, in relation to this question, is that principle of the law which holds that no subject can lawfully do that which has a tendency to be injurious to the public or against the public good, which may be termed the policy of the law, or public policy, in relation to the administration of the law."

Says the supreme court of Rhode Island: "The reasons assigned for the exemption of nonresident suitors . . . are that courts of justice ought to be open and accessible to suitors; that they ought to be permitted to approach and attend the courts in the prosecution of their claims and the making of their defenses without . . . molestation or hindrance; that . . . [they] ought not to be distracted . . . from prosecuting their just rights or making their just defenses to a suit by reason of their liability to suit in a foreign jurisdiction." Baldwin v. Emerson, 16 R. I. 304, 307, 27 Am. St. Rep. 741, 15 Atl. 85.

It is shown by numerous authorities collected in the note to Mullen v. Sanborn, 25 L.R.A. 721, that the rule arose and exists as one of the necessities of judicial administration, because without it it would be L.R.A.1917B.

impossible for the courts to fully and freely administer justice. It is there succinctly stated that "the rule exists in order that causes may be fully heard and justice administered in an orderly manner. . . . The privilege exists to subserve public interest."

Now the service of summons in a civil action upon an attorney while engaged in the trial of a cause pending in a county other than that in which he resides does not contravene any doctrine of public policy as above defined and as announced in our decisions supra. The service of summons is had by delivering to the defendant a copy thereof, or, if he refuses to receive it, by offering him a copy thereof. Kirby's Dig. § 6042.

We cannot see that the mere service of summons upon an attorney while in attendance upon a court in his professional capacity would in any way infringe upon the dignity or invade the prerogatives of the court. It could not interrupt the orderly progress of trials nor tend in the least to hamper and embarrass the courts in the administration of justice. Therefore, as we view it, the public good would not be adversely affected by such procedure, and the rule of public policy applicable to suitors does not obtain.

In Netograph Mfg. Co. v. Scrugham, 197 N. Y. 377, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 333, 134 Am. St. Rep. 886, 90 N. E. 962, it is held that (quoting syllabus): "The exemption of a suitor, or witness from process is not a natural right, but a privilege having its origin in the necessity for protecting courts from interruption and delay and witnesses or parties from the temptation to disobey process." It "is in derogation of the common natural right which every creditor has to collect his debt by subjecting his debtor to due process of law in any jurisdiction where he may find him, and therefore the privilege should not be extended beyond the reason of the rule upon which it is founded."

Our statute giving a right of action "in any county in which the defendant is summoned" is but declarative of and in conformity with this natural right.

The appellee contends that the rule of public policy declared by this court in Powers v. Arkadelphia Lumber Co. and Martin v. Bacon, supra, exempting nonresident suitors from the operation of the statute, should also be extended, by analogy, to attorneys at law while attending in their professional capacity upon judicial proceedings in counties other than that of their residence. This contention is unsound. The reason upon which the rule is founded, as we have shown, is that it is to the public interest and for the public good that courts should be untrammelled in their efforts to administer justice between parties to causes pending before them. Parties litigant are entitled to be heard in court by themselves and counsel. In criminal prosecutions the accused is guaranteed this right by express constitutional and statutory law. Const. 1874, art. 2, § 10; Kirby's Dig. § 2273. So far as the interest of the public is concerned, the ends of justice are fully satisfied when suitors are protected in the right to be heard by themselves and counsel. The selection of counsel by suitors is a matter purely of private concern, and not of public interest. It is not essential to the administration of justice, and no rule of public policy therefore requires, that courts should extend the privilege, which was intended for the protection of its own authority and dignity and to enable it to do justice between the parties, so as to grant immunities to attorneys from their individual liabilities. The attorney is only the alter ego of his client in the limited sense that he may plead in matters pertaining to his client's cause. The attorney is not subject, like the suitor, to the process of the court issued to enable it to carry out its orders in pending causes. He cannot stand in his client's shoes as to the consequences of the judicial proceedings. Therefore it is not necessary for courts, in order to deal out justice between parties litigant, to shield a nonresident attorney from the service of process in a matter that concerns him only, and which in no manner affects his client's cause.

The effect of the service of summons upon a nonresident attorney does not operate, like an arrest, to deprive the client of the services of his attorney, nor does it tend to interfere with the dignity and authority of the court, and thus to delay and obstruct its orderly procedure in the administration of justice. Nor can it be said that the mere service of a summons upon an attorney while in attendance upon the court could have the effect to so embarrass the attorney and distract his attention from the cause of his client as to virtually deprive the latter of the benefit of counsel, and thus deny him his legal right.

When an attorney goes into a jurisdiction other than that of his residence to represent a client before a court in a cause there pending, he does so by virtue of private contract and of his own motion. His case is not like that of one who has to attend upon the court as a suitor, a juror, or a witness. He is not under the protection of the court because he is in attendance thereon in obedience to its process or because he has entered its portals as a suitor. While he takes an oath to support the Constitution and laws, and is an officer of the court in the broad sense that he is licensed to practise before it and is amenable to rules adopted for the despatch of the business of the court, and subject to its orders in conducting any business he may have before the court, yet his employment is private, and while pursuing his practice before the court, he is engaged in his own private business. He does not occupy the relation to the court of one of the officers chosen by the public for the discharge of the public duty of assisting the court in the conduct of its business in the administration of justice. But, if he did, there is no rule of public policy requiring the court to shield even its officers from the service of process in civil actions, unless the service of such process would tend to impair the authority and dignity of the court, and to obstruct the administration of justice. We cannot see that the mere service of a summons in a civil action upon any of the officers of the court while in the discharge of their duties would in any manner reflect upon the dignity of the court, or lessen its authority or impede the administration of justice.

Our attention is directed by learned counsel for appellee to quite a number of cases in support of their contention that the privilege extends to attorneys as well as to witnesses and parties. We have examined these cases carefully, and it would too greatly extend this opinion to review them seriatim.

Mr. Blackstone says that "attorneys and all other persons attending the courts of justice (for attorneys, being officers of the court, are always supposed to be there attending) are not liable to be arrested by the ordinary processes of the court, but must be sued by a bill (called usually a bill of privilege) as being personally present in court." 3 Bl. Com. *289.

In 8 Bacon's Abridgment, "Privilege," B, p. 171, it is said: "And it hath lately been laid down by the court of C. P. as a general rule that all persons who have relation to a suit which calls for their attendance, whether they are compelled to attend by process or not, are entitled to privilege from arrest eundo et redeundo, provided they come bona fide. And in this description bail and barristers upon the circuit are included."

In 1 Tidd's Practice, p. 195, it is said: "The parties to a suit and their attorneys and witnesses are, for the sake of public justice, protected from arrest in coming to, attending upon, and returning from the courts.

"It was an ancient privilege of attorneys," says Mr. Weeks, "to be exempt from arrest on mesne process, or being held to bail, because attorneys, being obliged to attend officially, and, as the law presumes, continually—upon the courts, they were always amenable to their own courts, and could not be drawn away to attend others. . . . These privileges arose from the supposition that the business of their clients would suffer by their being drawn elsewhere." Weeks, Attorneys at Law, §§ 107, 108, and cases cited in note.

"An arrest," says Mr. Blackstone, "must be by corporal seizing or touching the defendant's body." 3 Bl. Com. * 288.

See also Huntington v. Shultz, Harp. L. 452, 453, 18 Am. Dec. 660.

Perhaps the strongest case cited by counsel for appellee is that of Brooks v. State, 3 Boyce (Del.) 1, 51 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1126, 79 Atl. 790, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 1133, where it is said: "The privilege of parties to judicial proceedings, as well as witnesses, attorneys, judges, jurors, and certain other officers of the court, of going to the place where they are held, and remaining as long as necessary, and returning wholly free from the restraint of process in other civil proceedings, has been long settled and liberally enforced. The rule is of ancient origin, and is mentioned in the Year Books as early as Henry VI. It came to us out of the common law with only such modifications as were required to make its principle harmonize with American institutions and to be in accord with American jurisprudence. . . . The privilege arises out of the authority and dignity of the court, it is founded on the necessities of judicial administration, it has for its primal object the protection of the court, and not the immunity of the person, and is extended or withheld only as judicial necessities require."

There was a time in England when men, however honest they may have been, if unable to pay their debts, were subject to arrest and imprisonment in the tower. This barbarous practice prevailed from the enactment of the "Statute of Merchants," in 1288, until it was finally abolished in the reign of Victoria, in 1868. Stat. 32 and 33 Vict. p. 571. There was also a long period in England when, under the influence and domination of a rampant ecclesiasticism, kings and popes alike granted numerous scandalous immunities and privileges to a favored few of special classes. 1 World's History & its Makers, p. 362; 1 Green's History of England, pp. 164 et seq. It is not surprising, therefore, that this doctrine of privilege from arrest should have taken root and flourished in the soil of England at a time when it was rich in the production of special privileges, and when poor but honest men had to live in mortal dread of being arrested and imprisoned for debt. It is L.R.A.1917B.

easy to see that in such times witnesses, jurors, suitors, and attorneys might be intimidated from attendance upon the courts, and that the courts would therefore be hampered in the administration of justice, and hence the necessity for extending the privilege from arrest to these persons while going to, attending upon, and returning from the courts. Thus arose the above doctrine of the common law which some American courts attempt, by analogy, to apply in this country. But there is no analogy. For here the whole fabric of government rests upon the principles of equality and liberty, and the doctrine of equal rights to all and special privileges to none finds expression not only in the Constitution of the United States, but in the organic law of every state in the Union.

We can readily understand how the arrest of an attorney during the progress of a trial, in the presence of the court, which would necessitate his giving bail, or else being removed from the court, would seriously encroach upon the dignity of the court and disturb its orderly procedure, and deprive the suitor of his right to be represented by the counsel of his choice, and also deprive the court of the aid of such counsel. But the service of a copy of a summons upon counsel, which is merely a notice to him that proceedings have been instituted against him in another jurisdiction, could have no such effect. There is no analogy whatever between the service of process of summons and the service of capias. All the reasons, therefore, for the common-law doctrine of privilege from arrest wholly break down in this country when they are attempted to be applied to the mere service of summons. Every reason for the rule having failed, the rule itself should fail.

To hold that nonresident attorneys are immune from the service of summons, or other process, not in arrest, while they are voluntarily in attendance upon the court upon their private business, would be to confer upon them a special privilege not enjoyed by resident attorneys. Kutner v. Hodnett, 59 Misc. 21, 109 N. Y. Supp. 1068. "The reason upon which those decisions are based" that so hold, as stated by the supreme court of North Carolina, "is not satisfactory to us." Greenleaf v. People's Bank, 133 N. C. 292, 63 L.R.A. 499, 98 Am. St. Rep. 709, 45 S. E. 638. We agree to the conclusions reached by Chief Justice Clark, in his concurring opinion in that case. It occurs to us that those decisions follow rather loosely the doctrine of the common law without a proper analysis and consideration of the reasons upon which such doctrine was founded.

The framers of our Code, who were presumably familiar with the doctrine of the common law, only exempted witnesses from being sued in counties other than that of their residence. Our court has exempted suitors, on the ground of public policy, and by this appeal we are asked to exempt non-resident attorneys. To do so would be approving a doctrine which is contrary to the genius of our institutions, and which should have no place in the jurisprudence of this country.

If we are correct in our conclusion that no rule of public policy in the administration of justice is infringed by denying the privilege to attorneys, then there is no more reason why the privilege from service of summons should be granted to them than to those of any other profession or business calling. To do so would put the courts in the attitude of establishing a highly discriminatory class privilege in favor of the legal profession.

In the case of Elam v. Lewis, 19 Ga. 608, a lawyer claimed the benefit of privilege from arrest because of the fact that he was a practising attorney in that state. Judge Lumpkin, rendering the opinion of the court, among other things, said: "Any decision which separates the bar from the people, in sympathy or identity of privileges, would prove one of the greatest curses which could befall the profession. From the day when it is made the bar itself will receive an impulse downwards in the eyes of the community. . . . So extensive a question should be determined upon the broad foundation that the general justice of the country should alike pervade all ranks and professions."

So we say.

The judgment is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to overrule the motion to quash.

Annotation—Exemption of attorney from service of summons while in jurisdiction on legal business.

Generally as to privilege and exemption of suitors and witnesses, see Index to L.R.A. Notes under the title, "Writ and Process."

Introduction.

The exemption of attorneys from the service of process by summons while attending court in jurisdictions other than those in which they reside is allowable, if at all, as are the exemptions of parties and witnesses, upon the ground of public policy; that is, for the purpose of protecting courts from interruption and delay, and for the promotion of the free and fair administration of justice. It is clear that the service of a capias upon an attorney while attending court, which necessitates the giving of bail, tends directly to interfere with and clog the wheels of justice, but the result of such service is entirely different from the service of a summons, which entails no arrest, and it will be noted that the present annotation deals only with the question whether attorneys are exempt from service of the latter kind. The cases may, for convenience, be considered under two groups; those where the service is attempted to be made when an attorney is in a county other than that in which he resides, and those in which, at the time of the attempted service, he is attending court in a state other than that of his residence. The authorities under both of these situations are in conflict. Some of the courts come to the conclusion that public policy does not justify an exemption of attorneys from the service of summons while they are attending court in a foreign county or foreign state, while others hold that such an exemption is justified on the ground of public policy; i. e., for the purpose of securing the fair and unhampered administration of justice in the courts. There would appear to be a much stronger ground for upholding the exemption from service while an attorney is actually engaged in the trial of a cause than where he is not, at the time, actually attending court; as, for example, where service is attempted to be made while he is waiting for a train, to return to his home, and this distinction has been emphasized in some of the cases.

In county other than that of attorney's residence.

As stated in the introduction, the cases as to an attorney's right to exemption from service of process while attending court in a county other than that of his residence are in conflict.

It will be noted that the court in PAUL v. STUCKEY, ante, 888, decided that an attorney, while trying a case in a county other than that of his residence, was not exempt from the service of summons in a civil suit, the court holding that such service was not against public policy, and that a statute exempting from service witnesses attending court in a county other than that in which they reside did not apply to attorneys. It will also be noticed that in this case the attorney was called from the court room while engaged in the trial of a criminal case, and that the summons was served upon him at the door of the court room, and that the facts, therefore, presented a strong case for arguing in favor of the attorney's privilege.

In Parker Sav. Bank v. McCandlas (1889) 6 Pa. Co. Ct. 327, service upon an attorney of Allegany county, which was had while he was waiting for a train, to return to his home at Butler, after having appeared as an attorney in a case in Pittsburgh, was held valid. The court referred to the ancient privilege of exemption of attorneys from arrest on mesne process, and stated that the privilege was that of the court in which the attorney appeared, rather than that of the attorney himself, and said: "The reasons for most of these ancient privileges from arrest or to sue or be sued have disappeared. There is good reason for exempting an attorney from arrest or service of summons while in actual attendance at court, or of a witness or party compelled to appear, and especially if called from another county. There is good reason for exempting from service of process an attorney from another county in attendance on the United States courts or in the Supreme Court. There might be good reason for exempting from service of process an attorney of another county casually here, and admitted to practise for a special case. But there is no more real necessity or propriety for exempting our own attorneys from service of process—except in presence of the court—than for exempting a merchant who is engaged in purchasing goods, or a bank officer during the banking hours. Some of these ancient privileges of barristers and attorneys have been abolished by statute in England. There is neither public good nor private advantage to the bar, nor public justice to be subserved by extending the privileges beyond the precedents. No precedent has been cited to us for this case although there are dicta that might cover it. We have several attorneys who are residents of adjoining counties, but whose business is that of practising attorneys of the Allegheny county bar. Many Philadelphia lawyers reside in the adjoining counties. Certainly the cause of justice is not to be promoted by requiring that attorneys so doing business shall be exempt from service of process in the county in which their business is transacted. We see no sufficient reason for extending to attorneys of our courts who reside out of the county privileges beyond those given to practising attorneys residing within the county."

And in First Nat. Bank v. Doty (1892) 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 287, it was held that an attorney who traveled from one county to another in the practice of his profession could not claim exemption from the service of a writ while going to or returning from court, it being stated that there was no good reason why he should be privileged, that his attendance upon the court was voluntary, and not in obedience to any subpoena or demand of the court, and it was held that the fact that he was sworn as a witness did not affect the question, where, so far as appeared, he was not in attendance as a witness.

But in Whitman v. Sheets (1899) 20 Ohio C. C. 1, 11 Ohio C. D. 179, it was held that a service of summons requiring an attorney to answer to a suit in a county other than that in which he lived could not be made upon him while he was attending court in the foreign county, the court stating that this holding was in accord with the rule of public policy which, in the proper administration of justice, recognizes the necessity of safe conduct to suitors and counsel to and from jurisdictions foreign to those of their residence and locality, and that counsel and client, whose presence are necessary at the forum wherein the rights of the suitor are pending, may be free to come and go without incurring liability or submitting to inconvenience.

And in Hoffman v. Bay County Circuit Judge (1897) 113 Mich. 109, 38 L.R.A. 663, 67 Am. St. Rep. 458, 71 N. W. 480, it was held that an attorney was privileged from the service of process while attending upon the supreme court, and also while going to and returning from the court to the county of his residence, the decision being upon the ground that public policy in the due administration of justice demanded it.

And this privilege from service of process was held not to be affected by a statute regulating the privilege of attorneys from arrest.

In several New York cases it does not clearly appear whether the attorney, at the time of the attempted service, was in the county where he resided or in another county, the question considered being the right of attorneys to exemption from service while the supreme court was in session.

Thus, in Gilbert v. Vanderpool (1818) 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 243, an act taking away the privilege of an attorney in cases of debt of a certain sum, "unless it shall appear that the court wherein he shall be such attorney or counselor shall be then sitting," was held to leave attorneys completely under the protection of their common-law privileges during the terms of their courts, and the service of process issued out of a justice court upon an attorney of the supreme court, which was sitting at the time the summons was issued and served, was held invalid, although the writ was returnable on a day subsequent to the last day of the term of the supreme court. The court reasoned that the term of the supreme court might continue until the day before the return day of the summons, and that the defendant would then have only one day instead of six to prepare his defense,—the legal intentment being that the attorney or counsel was occupied exclusively in the business of the term during its continuance.

The decision in this case was followed in Van Alstyne v. Dearborn (1829) 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 586, where a plea of privilege of an attorney of the supreme court was held to be effectual in a suit prosecuted against him in a justice court, which was commenced by a summons served while the supreme court was sitting.

In National Press Intelligence Co. v. Brooke (1896) 18 Misc. 373, 41 N. Y. Supp. 658, service of an order in supplementary proceedings upon an attorney while in the supreme court for the purpose of arguing a motion there was held valid. The court stated that at common law and prior to the passage of the Revised Statutes, providing that an attorney is "exempt from arrest during the sitting of the court of which he is an officer" if he is "employed in some cause pending and then to be heard in such court," an attorney was exempted from arrest or from being sued during the actual sitting of the court if he was employed in a pending cause. It was stated that the reason of exemption which obtained prior to the passage of the Revised Statutes was that an attorney should not be taken while in court in discharge of his duties by a ca. sa., but that, under the present procedure, a summons would not interfere with the discharge of the attorney's duties, and that the reason for the exemption had therefore ceased to exist. Although the L.R.A.1917B.

service was held legal in this case, the court stated that they strongly condemned the propriety of serving papers on an attorney in open court.

In state other than that of attorney's residence.

As before pointed out, the authorities do not agree upon the question of the exemption of an attorney from the service of process while he is in a state other than that of his residence, for the purpose of attending to legal business. Some of the courts reason that no necessity exists for the allowance of such an exemption.

Thus, in Kutner v. Hodnett (1908) 59 Misc. 21, 109 N. Y. Supp. 1068, an attorney of another state who voluntarily came into New York to conduct a litigation for a client was held not privileged from service of process, it being held that the reason for the exemption of parties and witnesses, that is, the promotion of a due and efficient administration of justice, did not apply to foreign attorneys at law, and that to extend the rule to them would enable foreign attorneys to practise law constantly in the state, and at the same time extend to them immunity from process of the courts of the state.

And in Greenleaf v. People's Bank (1903) 133 N. C. 292, 63 L.R.A. 499, 98 Am. St. Rep. 709, 45 S. E. 638, it was held that service upon a New York attorney at his hotel while attending the circuit court of the United States in North Carolina was valid, there being no statute exempting attorneys from such service, and nothing at common law which exempted an attorney from being served with process in the nature of a summons.

In Robbins v. Lincoln (1886) 27 Fed. 342, an Illinois statute providing that all attorneys should be liable to be arrested and held to bail, and be subject to the same legal process as other persons, but that attorneys should be privileged from arrest while they were attending court and while going to and returning from court, was construed to create a privilege only from being arrested and held to bail, and not to create a privilege from service of process not involving imprisonment or holding to bail; and it was held that an Illinois attorney might be served with summons while in attendance upon a Federal court in Illinois, and that an attorney from another state, attending one of the United States courts in Illinois, had no greater privilege, and might be served with a summons in a civil action.

In Coleman v. Tim (1886) 18 W. N. C. (Pa.) 240, a member of the Philadelphia bar who, for some years, had resided in New York, but who, according to some of the evidence, continued to practise in Philadelphia, was held not exempt from the service of a summons while in Philadelphia for the purpose of attending court, it being stated that he was still a member of the Philadelphia bar, and to some extent in practice there, and must take this privilege cum onere.

In some cases the privilege of an attorney attending court in a foreign state from service by summons is upheld on the ground that the administration of justice in the courts demands it.

Thus, in Williams v. Hatcher (1913) 95 S. C. 49, 78 S. E. 615, a nonresident attorney who came into the state of South Carolina for the sole purpose of attending court was held exempt from the service of process for the same reasons that parties and witnesses are exempt.

And in Nelson v. McNulty (1917) — Minn. —, L.R.A. —, —, 160 N. W. 795, where a resident of South Dakota, who was an officer of a corporation and also one of the attorneys in an action by its receiver, pending in South Dakota, went to Minnesota to take the deposition of a witness for use in the action, it was held that the attorney was not, under the circumstances, exempt from the service of process while in Minnesota. The court, in reaching their conclusion, stated that no case was pending in the courts of Minnesota with reference to which the attorney came into that state.

And in Read v. Neff (1913) 207 Fed. 890, an Illinois attorney employed to appear in an action pending in the United States court in Iowa was held privileged from being sued in the latter state while he was attending at the trial, and the fact that he did not leave immediately after the jury had retired, but waited over until the next day in anticipation that a verdict would be returned by the jury, was held not to affect the privilege. The court in this case said: "It may be true that Mr. Neff could have gotten an Iowa lawyer who could have presented his case just as well. But Mr. Neff desired the services of Mr. Strawn, and such selection was the concern of no other person. There is a spirit of comity between all courts, national and state, by reason of which any court allows, on motion, an attorney from another jurisdiction to appear in a particular case. And it is not within the spirit of fair dealing and such comity for this court to hold that, if a lawyer from another state comes into this court, he does so at the peril of being sued. The contention that Mr. Strawn should have left on the first train that left Creston after the jury had been charged need only be stated as a refutation of such a statement. Ordinarily it is the duty of a lawyer to be in attendance when a verdict is returned and judgment thereon rendered. Mr. Strawn elected to attend to his duty, but finally concluded to await no longer, and left the matter in the hands of his associate, Mr. Higbee."
L.R.A.1917B.

And in Central Trust Co. v. Milwaukee Street R. Co. (1896) 74 Fed. 442, where a New York attorney went to Wisconsin to attend the Federal courts there for a client, and immediately after a hearing, and while he was engaged in the office of the clerk of the Federal court in matters relating to his client's interest, he was served with a subpoena requiring his attendance as a witness, the service was held invalid on the ground that he was privileged from such service. It appeared in this case that the attorney's duty to his client required his departure immediately after he had completed his duties in Wisconsin to various distant points in other states. This decision was reached although the attorney was the president of a Wisconsin corporation which was a party to the suit in which he was summoned as a witness. The court stated that if the service was held valid, it would compel his attendance in Wisconsin at a time which would seriously interfere with the further attention which he owed to his clients in other courts, and that to so hold would avoid the principles which seem to protect all having business before the courts.

In Holmes v. Nelson (1850) 1 Phila. (Pa.) 217, which was an action against stockholders of a corporation, it was held that service on a nonresident while he was attending in Pittsburgh in the double capacity of a stockholder and attorney upon a notice to take depositions in a case pending in the Supreme Court of the United States between the state of Pennsylvania and the corporation of which such person was a stockholder, was invalid. It was admitted in this case that an attorney coming from another county to attend cases before the supreme court of Pennsylvania was exempt from the service of summons in a civil action, but the case was attempted to be distinguished on the ground that the nonresident attorney was a foreigner, and that the United States court was a foreign court, and that the defendant in the action in which the attorney appeared was a mere corporation, and not properly an individual person. There was, however, held to be no merit in either of the contentions raised, it being held that the law called upon the attorney to prepare for the trial of the cause brought against the corporation of which he was a member, and that the law protected him from all other civil process while obeying that call; that the fact that he was a citizen of another state did not distinguish the case from the general rule, as the Constitution of the United States declares that the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens of the several states; and that the Supreme Court of the United States was not a foreign court, but a part of the institutions of the state. J. T. W.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

SUSAN J. O'CONNOR
v.
KNIGHTS AND LADIES OF SECURITY,
Appt.

(— Iowa; —, 158 N. W. 761.)

Insurance — acceptance of payment over due — waiver.

The acceptance by a benefit society of a check for dues dated within the month during which they were payable, but not received by it until the following month, and its return of a receipt with notice where to pay future dues, which are accepted until death, waives a provision in the certificate suspending a member for failure to pay dues within the month when they are due, and providing that he cannot be reinstated unless he is in good health, and recovery may be had thereon, although when the payment was received he had been stricken with his last illness, of which fact the insurer was ignorant. For other cases, see Insurance, V. b, 5, d, in Dig. 1-52 N. 8.

(June 29, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Chickasaw County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a benefit certificate. Affirmed.

Statement by Gaynor, J.:

Action to recover amount alleged to be due on a benefit certificate issued on the life of plaintiff's husband. Judgment for the plaintiff in the court below. Defendant appeals.

Note.—As to waiver by officer of subordinate lodge of forfeiture for nonpayment of assessments, see notes to Royal Highlanders v. Scovill, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 421; Bixler v. Modern Woodmen, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 571; and Hartman v. National Council, K. L. S. L.R.A.1915E, 152. L.R.A.1917B.

Messrs. M. E. Geiser, for appellant:

The fact that Victor E. O'Connor was mortally ill from and after February 22d, 1914, would not excuse him from making payment within the time prescribed by the by-laws.

Kidder v. Supreme Commandery, U. O. G. C. 192 Mass. 326, 78 N. E. 469.

The by-laws of the defendant provided that a failure to pay the monthly dues or assessments within a certain time forfeited the policy or certificate of insurance without any action on the part of defendant. O'Connor, having failed to pay within the specified time, lost his membership and forfeited his policy.

Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. v. Marshall, 31 Ind. App. 534, 99 Am. St. Rep. 273, 68 N. E. 605; Supreme Lodge, L. H. v. Hahn, 43 Ind. App. 75, 84 N. E. 837; Fowler v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 116 N. Y. 389, 5 L.R.A. 805, 22 N. E. 576; Thompson v. Fidelity Mut. L. Ins. Co. 116 Tenn. 557, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1039, 115 Am. St. Rep. 823, 92 S. W. 1098.

The contract in relation to forfeiture was self-executing, and a failure to pay assessments within the specified time ipso facto terminated the contract and forfeited O'Connor's policy.

Lehman v. Clark, 174 Ill. 279, 43 L.R.A. 648, 51 N. E. 222; Munger v. Brotherhood of American Yeomen, — Iowa, —, 154 N. W. 879.

Under the contract and by-laws, the parties had agreed that O'Connor's membership should cease on the nonpayment of dues. It was competent for them to so agree, and the courts will enforce such agreement.

Ronald v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assn. 132 N. Y. 378, 30 N. E. 739.

The members of a mutual benefit association are conclusively presumed to know its laws, and the assured was held to know that a failure to pay assessments within the time prescribed caused a forfeiture, and that a payment thereafter would not reinstate him unless he was at the time in good health.

Royal Highlanders v. Scovill, 66 Neb. 213, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 421, 92 N. W. 206.

Being mortally ill prior to the time of forfeiture and up to the time of his death, under the express provisions of the by-laws Victor E. O'Connor could not be reinstated because of his ill health, and his policy was therefore void at and prior to the time of his death.

Kennedy v. Grand Fraternity, 36 Mont. 325, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 78, 92 Pac. 971; Munger v. Brotherhood of American Yeomen, supra; Brown v. Grand Council, N. W. L. H. 81 Iowa, 400, 46 N. W. 1086; Bosworth v. Western Mut. Aid Soc. 75 Iowa, 582, 39 N. W. 903; National Council, K. L. S. v. Dillon, 212 Ill. 320, 72 N. E. 367, 244 Ill. 202, 91 N. E. 417; Lyon v. Supreme Assembly, R. S. G. F. 153 Mass. 83, 26 N. E. 236; Fowler v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 116 N. Y. 389, 5 L.R.A. 805, 22 N. E. 576.

The fact that O'Connor paid to the local council assessments for February, March, and April, 1914, after his suspension, would not under the facts constitute a waiver of the forfeiture, and would not result in reinstating him.

McQuillan v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 112 Wis. 665, 56 L.R.A. 233, 88 Am. St. Rep. 986, 87 N. W. 1069, 88 N. W. 925; Ronald v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. supra; Rundell v. Anchor F. Ins. Co. 128 Iowa, 575, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 20, 105 N. W. 112; Dillon v. National Council, K. L. S. 244 Ill. 202, 91 N. E. 417; Lyon v. Supreme Assembly, R. S. G. F. 153 Mass. 83, 26 N. E. 236; Kennedy v. Grand Fraternity, 36 Mont. 325, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 78, 92 Pac. 971; Rice v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 92 Iowa, 417, 60 N. W. 726; Leffingwell v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 86 Iowa, 279, 53 N. W. 243.

A payment of assessments to the officers of the local council after forfeiture, even with knowledge of the ill health of the policy holder, was without authority, and not binding on defendant.

Royal Highlanders v. Scovill, supra; Kennedy v. Grand Fraternity, 36 Mont. 325, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 78, 92 Pac. 971; Brown v. Grand Council, N. W. L. H. 81 Iowa, 400, 46 N. W. 1086; National Council, K. L. S. v. Dillon, 212 Ill. 320, 72 N. E. 367.

The burden of proving waiver was on the plaintiff.

Kennedy v. Grand Fraternity, 36 Mont. 325, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 78, 92 Pac. 971.

Messrs. Smith & O'Connor, for appellee:

Forfeitures are not favored by the courts, and they are inclined to grasp any circumstances upon which to establish a waiver L.R.A.1917B.

thereof on the part of the insurance company.

Queen Ins. Co. v. Young, 86 Ala. 424, 11 Am. St. Rep. 51, 5 So. 116; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Tomlinson, 125 Ind. 84, 9 L.R.A. 317, 21 Am. St. Rep. 203, 25 N. E. 126; Trotter v. Grand Lodge, I. L. H. 132 Iowa, 513, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 569, 109 N. W. 1099, 11 Ann. Cas. 533; Appleton v. Phenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. 59 N. H. 541, 47 Am. Rep. 220.

The rule as to waiver is not less favorable to insured in fraternal or lodge insurance than in ordinary insurance.

Trotter v. Grand Lodge, I. L. H. 132 Iowa, 513, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 569, 109 N. W. 1099, 11 Ann. Cas. 533; 29 Cyc. 185.

If the society, with knowledge of facts giving it the right to avoid the contract, or to declare a forfeiture, recognizes the contract as continuing in full force and effect, it is thereby precluded, on the ground of estoppel or waiver, from afterward asserting those facts to avoid liability.

29 Cyc. 193; Murray v. Home Ben. Life Asso. 90 Cal. 402, 25 Am. St. Rep. 133, 27 Pac. 309; Modern Woodmen v. Colman, 68 Neb. 660, 94 N. W. 814, 96 N. W. 154; Rice v. New England Mut. Aid Soc. 146 Mass. 248, 15 N. E. 624.

The right to avoid liability for nonpayment of dues or assessments within the prescribed time is waived where the society accepts payment unconditionally after that time, or where it accepts from the member who is in default dues or assessments subsequently accruing.

Bailey v. Mutual Ben. Asso. 71 Iowa, 689, 27 N. W. 770; Tobin v. Western Mut. Aid Soc. 72 Iowa, 261, 33 N. W. 663; Warnebold v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 83 Iowa, 23, 48 N. W. 1069; Schuster v. Knights & Ladies of Security, 60 Wash. 42, 140 Am. St. Rep. 905, 110 Pac. 680; Collver v. Modern Woodman, 154 Iowa, 615, 135 N. W. 67.

Inferior lodges and their officers and agents are generally held to be the agents of the society, and hence they may, by acts or omissions founding an estoppel or waiver, preclude the society from relying on grounds of forfeiture.

29 Cyc. 42, 43, 189; Supreme Tribe, B. H. v. Hall, 24 Ind. App. 316, 79 Am. St. Rep. 262, 56 N. E. 780; Davidson v. Supreme Tribe, B. H. 135 Iowa, 88; Trotter v. Grand Lodge, I. L. H. supra; Collver v. Modern Woodman, 154 Iowa, 615, 135 N. W. 67; Alexander v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 119 Iowa, 519, 93 N. W. 508; Henton v. Sovereign Camp, W. W. 87 Neb. 552, 138 Am. St. Rep. 500, 127 N. W. 869; Pringle v. Modern Woodman, 76 Neb. 384, 107 N. W. 756, 113 N. W. 231; Modern Woodmen v. Colman, 64 Neb. 162, 89 N. W. 641, 68 Neb. 660, 94 N. W. 814, 96 N. W. 154; Rasicot v.

Royal Neighbors, 18 Idaho, 85, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 433, 138 Am. St. Rep. 180, 108 Pac. 1048; Young v. Grand Council, A. O. A. 63 Minn. 506, 65 N. W. 933; Murphy v. Independent Order, S. D. J. A. 77 Miss. 830, 50 L.R.A. 111, 27 So. 624; Supreme Lodge, K. P. v. Kalinski, 163 U. S. 289, 41 L. ed. 163, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1047; Bixler v. Modern Woodmen, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 571, note; Supreme Lodge, K. H. v. Davis, 26 Colo. 252, 58 Pac. 595; Bragaw v. Supreme Lodge, K. L. H. 128 N. C. 354, 54 L.R.A. 602, 38 S. E. 905; Supreme Lodge, K. P. v. Withers, 177 U. S. 260, 44 L. ed. 762, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 611.

Where a member of a benevolent association violates some provision of the laws of the association, and his subordinate lodge, with full knowledge of the violation, continues to recognize him as a member, a forfeit incurred by the violation is waived by the acts of the subordinate lodge.

Modern Woodmen v. Breckenridge, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 136, note.

Under the provision that failure to pay dues within a specified time shall work a forfeit, coupled with a further provision that a suspended member may be reinstated upon certain conditions, nonpayment does not operate ipso facto to terminate the contract, but some further affirmative act on the part of the association is necessary.

Brooks v. Conservative L. Ins. Co. 132 Iowa, 377, 119 Am. St. Rep. 560, 106 N. W. 913, 11 Ann. Cas. 339.

Where the facts and circumstances relating to waiver are admitted or clearly established, it becomes a question of law.

Swedish American Nat. Bank v. Koebornick, 136 Wis. 473, 128 Am. St. Rep. 1090, 117 N. W. 1020; Keller v. Robinson, 153 Ill. 458, 38 N. E. 1072; Schuster v. Knights & Ladies of Security, 60 Wash. 42, 140 Am. St. Rep. 905, 110 Pac. 680; Henton v. Sovereign Camp, W. W. 87 Neb. 552, 138 Am. St. Rep. 500, 127 N. W. 869.

Gaynor, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action is brought to recover an amount alleged to be due on a certificate of insurance, issued by the defendant company to Victor E. O'Connor, in the amount of $2,000. This certificate was issued on the 21st day of October, 1913, and the plaintiff was named as beneficiary. The assured, Victor E. O'Connor, died on the 2d day of April, 1914, within six months from the issuance of the certificate. The certificate provided that if the assured died within six months from the issuing of the policy, the beneficiary should be entitled to receive but 60 per cent of the total amount named in the policy. It is admitted that due proofs of death were filed as required by the certificate and laws of the company. The national executive committee of the appellant company passed upon plaintiff's claim and rejected the same. The assured paid all the assessments required by the certificate and the laws of the society up to the time of his death. The defense is based on the claim that the February, 1914, assessment and dues were not paid during the month of February; that the same were not paid to the local council until the 5th day of March, 1914; that he was at the time, and prior to the time of payment, in ill health, and dangerously sick, and that this fact was not known to the insurers at the time the February assessment was paid and received. The defense is based on the constitution and by-laws of the society, which provide, in substance, and so far as material to this controversy, as follows:

"On or before the last day of each month, the members shall, without notice, pay the sum of one assessment and the local dues to the financier of the local council. The financier of each subordinate council shall keep a book wherein all regular and special assessments and dues received from each member holding a valid certificate shall be credited. Such entries shall be made showing the date when actually received by the financier."

"All assessments for every month shall become due and payable on the first day of the month. The certificate of each member who has not paid such assessment or assessments and dues on or before the last day of the month shall, by the act of such nonpayment, stand suspended without notice, and no act on the part of the council or any officer thereof, or of the national council, shall be required as essential to such suspension, and all rights under said certificate shall be forfeited."

The constitution and by-laws further provide: "No right under such certificate shall be restored until it has been duly reinstated by the member complying with the laws of the order, with reference to reinstatement."

It further provides: "Each member who has been suspended for nonpayment of dues, or nonpayment of an assessment or assessments, shall only be reinstated in accordance with the constitution and laws of the order."

Under the heading, "How a Member May Be Reinstated Within Sixty Days," we find the following: "Any beneficiary member suspended by reason of nonpayment of an assessment or assessments or dues may, within sixty days from the date of such suspension, be reinstated upon the following conditions, and none other; By payment within sixty days from the date of suspension of all arrearages of every kind, including assessments and dues, for which he would have been liable had he remained in good standing: Provided, however, that he be in good health at the time of making payment to the financier, with a view to reinstatement. The payment of any such assessments and dues for reinstatement shall be a warranty by such member that he is in good health at the time of such payment. Provided, further, that the receipt and retention of such assessments and dues, in case the suspended member is not in good health, . . . shall not have the effect of reinstating said member, or of entitling him or his beneficiary to any rights under this benefit certificate."

The laws further provide: "The national council shall not be bound by the acceptance of arrears of assessments and dues from suspended members who are not entitled to reinstatement in accordance with the laws of the order. The receiving of such arrears and receipting therefor by any officer of a subordinate council, . . . or by any other person, or the payment by or on behalf of any suspended member, or arrears of assessments and dues, with a view of reinstatement, except as provided for in the laws of the order, shall not be binding upon the National Council. The failure of any financier to report to the National Council, as suspended, any suspended member of his council, shall not operate, in any case, as a waiver of the forfeiture occurring on account of the suspension."

The laws further provide: "The retention by the financier or by the order of assessments and dues paid by members, or for them, with a view to reinstatement, other than as provided in the laws of the order either before or after death, shall not constitute a waiver of any provision of these laws until a demand has been duly made for their return by such member or his beneficiary, or legal representative."

It is further provided: "The national council is not bound by knowledge of or notice to officers or members of local councils, and no officer of the society, or any local council officer, or member thereof, is authorized or permitted to waive any of the provisions of the by-laws of this society which relate to the contract between the member and the society, . . . and no knowledge or information obtained by or notice to any subordinate council or officer or member thereof . . . shall be held or construed to be the knowledge of or notice to the national council or officers thereof, until after said information or notice be given in writing to the national secretary of the order."

There is a further provision that the local L.R.A.1917B.

council and its officers are the agents of the members in making application for membership, admission of members, reinstatement of members, the collection and transmission of all assessments to the national council; and that the national council shall not be liable for any neglect in any of these members, nor be bound by any irregularity, neglect, or illegal action by a subordinate council, or by any of its officers.

It is the contention of the defendant that, under these by-laws, Victor E. O'Connor became suspended from the defendant society on the 1st day of March, and was not a member of the society at the time of his death; that in September, 1914, it tendered back to the representatives of Victor E. O'Connor and the plaintiff all assessments and dues received by it, or its local council, from said Victor E. O'Connor, from and after the date of his suspension aforesaid: to wit, March 1, 1914, which they refused to accept, and that it is now ready and willing to return said dues.

Defendant's contention, briefly stated, is this: That the February, 1914, assessment was due by the terms of the constitution and by-laws of the order, which were a part of the contract, on the 1st day of February: that a failure to pay this assessment during the month of February, on or before the last day, worked a forfeiture of the certificate and all rights under the certificate. Reliance is had upon the provision reading as follows: "All payments shall be due and payable on the first day of the month. On or before the last day of each month, the member shall, without notice, pay the monthly assessment and the local dues to the financier of the local council. The certificate of each member who has not paid such assessment or assessments and dues on or before the last day of the month shall, by the act of such nonpayment, stand suspended without notice. No act on the part of the council or any officer thereof shall be required as essential to such suspension, and all rights under said certificate shall be forfeited."

The assessment for the month of February was not paid on the last day of the month, was not paid until the 5th day of March following. It is therefore claimed that, under these provisions, which were a part of the contract, the assured became, by reason of the failure to pay within the month of February, suspended, and all rights under this certificate forfeited, and that the plaintiff, therefore, has no claim against this defendant upon the certificate. It must be conceded, and is conceded for the purposes of this case, that the insured, upon becoming a member of this order, was bound to take notice of its by-laws; that these by-laws entered into and became a part of the contract the same as if they were written in the contract itself. The contract so provides, and proof of a failure on the part of the assured to comply with these provisions of the contract would work a forfeiture of his certificate, and all rights under the certificate, and would be a complete defense to plaintiff's claim to recover upon the certificate, if nothing further appears.

The plaintiff, however, claims that the defendant company, with knowledge of the fact that the assessment and dues for the month of February were unpaid, accepted payment thereof on the 5th day of March, and issued to the assured a receipt in the following words:

No. .... $2.50
 Knights and Ladies of Security,
 Waterloo Council, No. 1051.
 Located at Waterloo, State of Iowa,
 March 5, 1914.
 Received of Victor E. O'Connor, two and fifty one hundredths dollars, payment for month of February, 1914.
 [Signed] John C. Kascht.

With the following words indorsed on the receipt: "Please send your remittance to J. C. Kascht, 229 East 4th St., after this."

That the company not only accepted and received the amount so remitted as payment of the dues for February, but has ever since retained the same; that thereafter, on the 28th day of March, 1914, assured paid the dues and assessments for the month of March, 1914, and that the defendant, with knowledge of the fact that the February dues had not been paid within the time provided by the laws of the order, accepted this March payment without objection, and issued a receipt in the following words:

March 28, 1914.
 Received of Mr. and Mrs. Victor E.
 O'Connor five and thirty-five hundredths dollars, payment for the month of March, 1914

That thereafter the assured paid the dues and assessments for the month of April, 1914, and the same were received by the company with knowledge of the fact that the February assessment had not been paid strictly within the time required by the laws of the order, and it has retained the said payment, and, upon receipt of the payment, issued to the assured the following receipt:

April 6, 1914.
 "Received of Victor E. O'Connor, two and fifty one hundredths dollars payment for the month of April, 1914.
 L.R.A.1917B.

That the defendant still holds and retains the payments made for the month of February aforesaid, and March and April; that the defendant accepted said payments with knowledge of all the facts then existing which could, under the laws of the order, constitute a forfeiture of the membership of Victor E. O'Connor; that by reason of the facts herein stated the defendant is now estopped from claiming any forfeiture by reason of the delay in making the February payment; that the assured made the subsequent payments relying upon the conduct of the defendant in accepting and retaining the payment made for the February assessment.

It will be noted that the defendant company seeks to avoid payment on this certificate, not alone on the ground that the assured was dangerously sick at the time the February payment was received, but because the payment was not made within the month of February, as required by the by-laws. The fact that the February assessment was not paid within the time required by the by-laws was known to the defendant company at the time it received and accepted for the payment, and directed, on the receipt, where future payments should be remitted. If this payment was made in time, if it had been made during the month of February, the fact that the assured was dangerously ill at the time of the making of the payment would be no ground for forfeiture of the policy. The only tenable ground for forfeiture is the ground laid in the constitution and by-laws; to wit, a failure to make the payment promptly within the time prescribed by the by-laws. It is the failure to make the payment within the time that, by the terms of the by-laws, forfeits all rights under the policy and suspends the member. We will concede that this required no affirmative action on the part of the company; that a failure to pay, in and of itself, suspended the member and forfeited all rights under the certificate. This provision of the policy is made, not for the benefit of the assured, but for the benefit of the company. It is a provision in the policy, therefor, which the company itself might waive, or by its subsequent conduct be estopped from insisting upon as against the insured, as we will endeavor to show hereafter more fully by the authorities bearing upon this point.

This controversy therefore turns upon this question: Did the company so conduct itself, after it knew the forfeiture had taken place by the terms of its contract, that it is now estopped to insist upon such forfeiture as against the plaintiff? Did it, by its subsequent conduct, waive, as between itself and the insured, a strict en-enforcement of these provisions of its contract, as to forfeiture against the insured? The record discloses that at the time this payment was received and accepted on the 5th of March, no inquiry was made touching the then health of the insured, nor was it accepted subject to any showing as to the health of the insured at that time, and this is true of the subsequent payments made and received and accepted by the company. Though the fact is that the assured was ill at the time this February payment was received by the company, and, conceding that if this had been known to the company at the time it received it, it might have rejected the payment and insisted upon the forfeiture, yet we are not prepared to say from this record, as will hereafter more fully appear, that the assured practised any fraud, or purposely concealed the fact of his condition from the company at the time. When this payment was made on the 5th day of March the company knew, or had reason to believe, we think, that the payment was not made for the purpose of reinstatement, but was made for the purpose, on the part of the assured, and with the intent, to comply strictly with the requirements of his contract, and pay, not for reinstatement, but for the purpose of complying with his contract.

The record discloses that the check for the February assessment was received by the president of the local council on the 5th day of March; that it came to him in an envelop properly addressed, and presumably properly stamped by the postoffice authorities. The envelop is not before us, nor is its absence accounted for. Upon the receipt of this letter containing the check, the president of the company carried it to the financier and delivered it to him, and it was duly recorded upon the books of the company as a payment of dues for the month of February. This check was dated on the 16th day of February, 1914, showing an intent on the part of the insured to pay his February assessment at that time. The date of this check was unquestionably known to the president of the local council and to the financier when they received it, cashed it, credited plaintiff on the book as for the month of February, and sent the receipt hereinbefore set out. They were then charged with notice, from the date of the check, that the purpose of the payment was not for reinstatement, but for the purpose of complying strictly with the requirements of his contract, and making the payment within the month of February. Why it was not received earlier than the 5th day of March does not appear. Some light might have been given us upon this question had the envelop in which the check was received been produced upon the trial. It seems that the company had been changing its financiers about that time. The remittances were made, as a rule, to the financier. This check seems to have been mailed to the president of the local council and received by him. The president and the financier in receiving this check, crediting the amount on the book, and receipting for it, treated it, not as for the purpose of reinstatement, but as made and received for the purpose of payment of the February dues. No notice was ever given the assured that his check was received too late, under the rules of the order, neither when this was received and credited, nor when the other subsequent payments were credited and receipted for. If the contention of the defendant is now to be sustained, the assured forfeited all his rights under the certificate on the 1st of March.

It is claimed that the assured knew that if his payments were not made during the month, he was automatically suspended, and all rights under the certificate forfeited, and we may concede this. The defendant also knew when it received this check, if its contention is now true, that a strict application of the contract and by-laws to the defendant's claim did automatically suspend the plaintiff and forfeit all his rights under the certificate. These laws were made, not only for the government of the assured, but also for the government of the insurer. They were made especially for the benefit of the insurer, and could be insisted on or waived by it. It chose not to insist upon the forfeiture, but to accept the payment, not for the purpose of reinstatement, but for the purpose of discharging the original obligation under the contract to pay within the month of February. All its conduct discloses this purpose and intent on its part, not only its conduct at the time of the receipt, but its subsequent conduct touching subsequent payments.

The record further discloses that, on the 16th day of February, at the time this check was prepared and signed, the assured was in good health; that he was not taken ill until the 22d day of February; that he was then taken suddenly ill with some acute trouble that required an operation, from the effect of which he died. There is no evidence that the assured knew that his check had not been received within the month of February. True, the receipt was dated on the 5th day of March, but it recited that the payment was made and received for the month of February, 1914. There was nothing to indicate to the assured, other than the date of this receipt, when this check was actually received by the company. Therefore no fraud or wilful concealment can be charged to the assured. His check was dated February 16th, in time to meet the requirements of the contract. It was forwarded to the society. Why it was not received earlier does not appear. When the society received it, and receipted for it, as a payment under the contract for the month of February, he had a right to assume that it was received and accepted as a payment made in time for the February dues, and that his contract was not forfeited, and was in full force as originally issued. His sickness was therefore immaterial. Sickness and death were what the company undertook to insure him against. If the payment had been made in February, the certificate would have been continued in full force, notwithstanding his sickness at the time of payment. If the payment was made as a payment for the month of February, and not for reinstatement, and was accepted by the company as such, with knowledge of the fact that it was made too late under the contract, it became, as between the parties, a payment under the original contract, preserving its life and vitality. The forfeiture was waived, and, the forfeiture being waived, the contract continued in full force, with its indemnity against sickness and death.

It is argued, however, that, as the company did not know that he was sick at the time it received these payments, it cannot be said to be estopped or to have waived the forfeiture. It did know of the provisions of its policy, and that a failure to pay within the month suspended the member, and forfeited all his rights under the policy, and this would be true even if he were not sick, and it was then that it could have insisted upon the terms of its contract and treated the plaintiff as suspended and the contract forfeited. It elected not to do this, not to treat the plaintiff as suspended, or his contract forfeited for a mere failure to pay within the time. It continued his contract in force, notwithstanding this fact and knowledge of this fact, and received further assessments and dues. It therefore waived any forfeiture based upon the failure to pay within the time.

A different question would arise if the forfeiture had been insisted upon and the assured had undertaken to be reinstated under the terms of the policy. Then it would be incumbent upon the assured to make a showing as to his health, and any fraud practised by him touching this matter would have avoided a reinstatement, or any concealment on his part of a fact that would prevent reinstatement would have been fatal to his right. We must keep always in mind the thought that the suspension and forfeiture relied upon here are related to and are involved in the one act, and that is, the failure to pay the February dues during the month of February. The right to be reinstated, if forfeiture had been insisted upon, is a different matter. Then the question of the health of the assured would be a matter for consideration.

It is insisted, further, that as the society did not know of his sickness at the time it received these dues, it cannot be held to have waived the forfeiture, because, as it is assumed, if it had this knowledge, it would not have done these acts which now are alleged to constitute the waiver. But, however, the record discloses that it made no inquiry touching his health at the time it received these dues; that the dues were not accepted subject to any showing as to his health; that the dues were received and accepted as a compliance with the requirements of the original contract. The company owed some duty, if it desired to insist upon the forfeiture, and if it desired to accept the fees subject to a showing as to health, to so indicate to the assured, or, at least, to have made some inquiry touching the matter before accepting the fees as a full performance of the original contract. If this is not so, we might have this situation presented: On a certain month the assured fails to pay his dues for that month within the time prescribed by the certificate and by-laws. It is provided that a failure to pay promptly within the time fixed automatically suspends the member and forfeits all his rights under the contract. After the time when the forfeiture could be insisted upon, the timely dues are paid, and accepted by the company on the contract. Plaintiff, at the time the defaulted payment was made, was sick, and continued such, and not in a condition for reinstatement, more than sixty days. He recovers and continues timely payments on his contract for five years, and then dies. Defendant finds that at the time the defaulted payment was made, the assured was very sick; that it had no knowledge of this fact at the time this payment was accepted, and did not learn of it until after his death. It then refused payment on the ground that, five years before, the assured had failed to make one monthly payment at the time stipulated in the contract. In a suit upon the certificate, defendant pleads this failure as a bar to the action, claiming that the assured became automatically suspended, and his policy forfeited, though during all this time it received and receipted for payments as if made upon the contract, and without objection and without insisting upon the forfeiture. An application of what the defendant contends for here would defeat the plaintiff in a suit upon the certificate, under the conditions supposed. This would be neither good law nor good morals.

It is a rule of general recognition that forfeitures are not favored in the law; that where a contract, rightly and intelligently entered into, provides for forfeiture, the one who desires to avail himself of the forfeiture must act promptly and fairly with the party whose rights are to be forfeited under the terms of the contract. As said in Trotter v. Grand Lodge, I. L. H. 132 Iowa, page 526, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 569, 109 N. W. 1099, 11 Ann. Cas. 533; "Courts will be vigilant and quick to discover and give effect to any act or circumstance from which it may fairly be argued that the insurer has waived the right to strict and literal performance."

Rice v. New England Mut. Aid Soc. 146 Mass. 248, 15 N. E. 624. This action was to recover on a mutual benefit certificate. The defense relied upon was that, under the laws of the order and the terms of the certificate, the certificate had lapsed for failure to make payment as required, and was therefore null and void. The certificate provided that if a member omitted or neglected to pay within thirty days of the date of notice, then the certificate should be null and void. The assured did not pay within the time. The assessment was made on the 17th day of July, and he was required to pay within thirty days. He did not pay until the 19th day of August. On the 17th day of August, he became violently ill. On the 19th, he was taken to his home in a weak condition. He died on the 17th day of December. The cashier of the defendant company received the assessment, without inquiry or objection, on the 19th day of August, two days after it was due, and stamped a notice, "This assessment is accepted on condition that the member is in good health," and receipted for the sum paid. At the time the payment was made, on the 19th day of August, the money was sent by a messenger, who gave no information to the company as to the condition of the assured. Thereafter, and before the death of the assured, six other payments were made on this certificate, each made within the proper time. These subsequent payments were received unconditionally by the defendant, and the defendant made no inquiry as to the health of the assured. No information was furnished as to his health. In fact the case disclosed the company was ignorant of the assured's health on the 19th day of August, and had no knowledge of his condition at the time of any subsequent payments. The lower court held that the acceptance of the six assessments, after the one paid on August 19th, without making any inquiry to ascertain the facts concerning the health of the assured, was a waiver of the breach of the certificate at the time of the August payment; that if the company received the assessments without inquiry subsequent to August 19th, this would amount to a waiver of a default of the payment made on August 19th. The supreme court of Massachusetts, in passing upon this question, said, in substance: If it be assumed that the payment on the 19th day of August was too late, the question remains whether the company, by subsequent acts, waived the right to treat the policy as voided on that ground.

It further said that, without expressing any opinion as to the effect of the retention of the money, the levy of the subsequent assessments and the acceptance of the money paid upon them amounted to such a waiver; that when the time came for the levy of a new assessment, if the company intended to treat the policy as still in force, he could properly be included in the assessment, otherwise not, and it held that as the company acted under no deception or misrepresentation from the assured, but with all the information which it cared to take the pains to acquire, it made the levy and received the assessment; that it was its duty to know the condition of the assured's health after the default, before accepting subsequent payments; and concluded by saying that an unconditional acceptance of an assessment waives all former known grounds of forfeiture. The court used this language: "If, before levying a new assessment, the company wished to know the particulars as to [Mr.] Rice's health, and thus to determine whether that payment was valid or not, it was incumbent on it to make inquiry. Instead of doing so; instead of notifying him that it wished for some positive evidence or statement upon the subject; instead of imposing a further condition relating back to the time of the former payment,—the company made an unconditional call upon him for the payment of a new assessment. . . . Suppose the payment of the former assessment had never been made at all, and the company, without insisting upon the nonpayment as a ground of forfeiture, had levied new assessments upon the assured, which were all . . . paid and accepted without condition, could it be contended that there was no waiver? An unconditional acceptance upon assessment waives all former known grounds of forfeiture."

See also Murray v. Home Ben. Life Asso. 90 Cal. 402, 25 Am. St. Rep. 133, 27 Pac. 309, an action similar to the one in question, in which it is said: "There can be no doubt that the failure of the deceased to pay the assessments of June and August within thirty days after notice thereof released the defendant from all further liability upon the certificate held by him, if the defendant company had so elected; but conditions like that before [us] . . . which, in effect, provide for a forfeiture of all rights thereunder unless payment of assessments is made within the time specified may always be waived by the party for whose benefit they are inserted in the contract; and the rule is firmly established in this class of cases that if the insurance company, after knowledge of any default for which it might terminate the contract, enters into negotiations or transactions with the assured which recognize the continued validity of the policy, and treat it as still in force, the right to claim a forfeiture for such previous default is waived" (citing authorities). "Imposing or collecting an assessment by a mutual insurance company, after the company has knowledge of facts entitling it to consider the policy no longer binding upon it, without its assent, is, upon this principle, held to be a waiver of the right to claim the forfeiture which otherwise it might have insisted upon. The cases are numerous which hold that the acceptance of a premium after the time when it should have been paid is a waiver of the forfeiture which might have been enforced because it was not paid when due. . . . In speaking of acts showing an election to continue the existence of the policy of insurance, and to waive a forfeiture incurred, the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. v. Norton, 96 U. S. 234, 24 L. ed. 689, say: 'It is conceded that the acceptance of payment has this effect: and we do not see why an agreement to accept, and a tender of payment according to the agreement, should not have the same effect. Both are acts equally demonstrative of the election of the company to waive the forfeiture of the policy.'

In Supreme Tribe, B. H. v. Hall, 24 Ind. App. 316, 79 Am. St. Rep. 262, 56 N. W. 780, it is said: "The courts not favoring forfeitures are usually inclined to take hold of any circumstances which indicate an election to waive a forfeiture. A waiver may be created by acts, conduct, or declarations, insufficient to create a technical estoppel. If the company, after knowledge of the breach, enters into negotiations or transactions with the assured, which recognize and treat the policy as still in force, or induces the assured to incur trouble or expense, it will be regarded as having waived the right to claim forfeiture" (citing authority).

See the following authorities supporting this contention: Rasicot v. Royal Neighbors, 18 Idaho, 85, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 433, 138 L.R.A.1917B.

Am. St. Rep. 180, 108 Pac. 1048; Henton v. Sovereign Camp, W. W. 87 Neb. 552, 138 Am. St. Rep. 500, 127 N. W. 869; Pringle v. Modern Woodmen, 76 Neb. 384, 107 N. W. 756, 113 N. W. 231; Schuster v. Knights & Ladies of Security, 60 Wash. 42, 140 Am. St. Rep. 905, 110 Pac. 680; Modern Woodmen v. Colman, 64 Neb. 162, 89 N. W. 641. We are not without support on these propositions in our own state. See Bailey v. Mutual Ben. Asso. 71 Iowa, 689, 27 N. W. 770; Tobin v. Western Mut. Aid Soc. 72 Iowa, 261, 33 N. W. 663; Collver v. Modern Woodmen, 154 Iowa, 616, 136 N. W. 67.

It is next contended that, under the by-laws and constitution of the order, this defendant was not charged with knowledge of the facts known to the local council, and that the waiver, if any, on the part of the local council was not binding upon this defendant. This contention cannot be sustained. All the acts which constitute the waiver are, by this record, laid at the door of the president of the local council or camp and its financier. This contention is answered by what is said in Trotter v. Grand Lodge, I. L. H. 132 Iowa, 519, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 569, 109 N. W. 1099, 11 Ann. Cas. 533, in which it is held that, notwithstanding the provisions of the contract to the contrary, the local council and its officers are the agents of the national council in respect to the matters here under consideration; that it does not matter what you call one; his character must be determined from what he is. The relationship of these parties to the national council created the agency which binds the principal. These parties were the agents of the mother lodge. Their conduct was its conduct. What they knew was its knowledge. It received the application for membership, received fees, charges, and assessments, kept the record, and made report. The knowledge of the agent is the knowledge of the principal within the scope of his employment. On this point see cases above cited. In Davidson v. Supreme Tribe, B. H. 135 Iowa, 92, 111 N. W. 46, it is said: "Whether a person is an agent of another or of an association must be determined by their relations one to another, and, if one is actually authorized to act for another in certain matters as agent, the mere fact that it has been agreed that the relationship of agency shall not exist does not obviate the fact of such agency. . . . Had the local scribe, as agent of defendant to collect and receive the dues of the supreme tribe, the power to waive the consequences of omission to make payment as required? The constitution, laws, and regulations do not deny such authority save as this may be inferred from declaring that suspension shall follow from failure to pay when due. Notwithstanding similar conditions, courts have repeatedly held that the acts of the agents may be such as will estop the company or association from taking advantage of a forfeiture" (citing Trotter v. Grand Lodge, I. L. H. supra).

As especially bearing upon this point, see Raicot v. Royal Neighbors, 18 Idaho, 85, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 433, 138 Am. St. Rep. 180, 108 Pac. 1048, and cases therein cited. In Supreme Tribe, B. H. v. Hall, supra, the court used this language: "It is true that . . . the by-laws after designating the officers of the subordinate courts, conclude: 'These officers, when duly qualified and installed, are the agents of the members of this court, and are not for any purpose agents of the supreme tribe.' The duties of an officer determine the question of his agency, and not what he may be called. He is the agent of the supreme tribe for doing what its by-laws require him to do as between the members of the order and the supreme tribe" (citing authority).

In Pringle v. Modern Woodmen, 76 Neb. 384, 107 N. W. 756, it is said: "It is the duty of an agent to communicate to his principal every fact affecting the transaction intrusted to his care which comes to his knowledge in the course of or during its performance, and this duty, in an action between the principal and the adverse party, the agent is conclusively presumed to have obeyed" (citing Hargadine McKettrick Dry Goods Co. v. Krug, 2 Neb. (Unof.) 52, 96 N. W. 286).

See also Alexander v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 119 Iowa, 519, 93 N. W. 508; Supreme Tent, K. M. v. Volkert, 25 Ind. App. 627, 57 N. E. 203.

It is contended, however, that, assuming that the local council and its officers were the agents of the defendant company, and that their act was its act, their knowledge was its knowledge, yet the payment of these dues, after the time fixed in certificate and by-laws, did not reinstate the defendant for the reason that, at the time of the payment, he was mortally ill, and therefore under the law could not be reinstated. This, we think, is begging the question which we have here under consideration. The date of the check indicated to the local officers, and therefore to the defendant company, that the intention of the assured in sending the check was not that he might be reinstated under the provisions of the law for reinstatement, but as a payment on the original contract. If it had been received by the defendant company within the month of February, the condition of his health would have nothing to do with the continuation of the policy. L.R.A.1917B.

The forfeiture is not traceable to the condition of his health, but to the fact of non-payment within the time provided in the policy. The defendant company, by accepting the money under these conditions as a payment under the original contract, and not for the purpose of reinstatement, continued the policy in force, and waived the failure to pay within the time. Waiver of the failure to pay within the time made the payment, in legal effect, the same as if made within the time. The acceptance of the payment after the time, with knowledge of the default, and the issuing of the receipt, with the words indorsed upon it directing the sending of future assessments, the acceptance of further assessments under the policy, were a waiver of the failure to pay within the time, and therefore made the payment the same in its legal effect as if made within the time, and bound the defendant to the contract as originally issued.

Reliance is had upon Kennedy v. Grand Fraternity, 36 Mont. 325, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 78, 92 Pac. 971, and Royal Highlanders v. Scovill, 66 Neb. 213, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 421, 92 N. W. 206. These cases involve the question of reinstatement after suspension, and after conditions had arisen which, under the contract, made the reinstatement impossible, and are not authority upon the question here.

We are not unmindful of the fact that some cases have held that all contracts of life insurance fall in one or the other of two classes. The first class comprehends all contracts which provide that upon default of the member he is liable to be suspended, and the second class comprehends all contracts by the terms of which the member's delinquency ipso facto works a suspension and forfeiture of rights under the policy. We are not unmindful that, under the first class, some affirmative action on the part of the society is necessary in order to fully terminate the membership, and that, under the second class, no affirmative action is required. We are not unmindful that under contracts of the first class, notwithstanding the delinquency, there is the necessity for affirmative action on the part of the society, without which the delinquent remains a member of the society, with certain rights and claims, while, under the second class, immediately upon the delinquency happening, the membership is terminated, and the delinquent is no longer a member of the society. With this distinction in mind, it has been argued that the assured never becomes a member of the society, under the second class, after delinquency, unless reinstated; that the reinstatement constitutes a new contract, which requires for its support some new consideration, while, in the first class, before affirmative action is taken, the delinquency may be forgiven or waived, and the member continued in the society under the original contract.

It is contended that the assured, in the case at bar, came under the second provision, and therefore, his relation having ceased upon his failure to pay for the month of February, within the month of February his contract ceased, and that it would require some affirmative action on the part of the assured to reinstate him; that the mere payment of the assessment after the time, or subsequent assessments, did not constitute a reinstatement; that there was no consideration; that the assured could not have been misled because there was nothing that he could have done to reinstate himself. He was mortally sick, and died from the sickness existing at the time of the default. The contract provided that the payment for the month of February should be made within the month of February. It provided that the member became suspended, and his contract forfeited, if that payment was not made within that time.

We are not dealing here with the question of estoppel, but rather with the question of waiver. Waiver involves an intention, on the part of the person who is charged with having waived, not to insist upon an enforcement of that provision of the contract concerning which the waiver is sought to be shown. Here, the waiver is of the failure to pay within the time; the acceptance of the dues for the month of February as paid within the time, with notice of the fact in the check itself that it was the intention of the assured to pay within the time. It is the waiver of the right to insist upon payment within the time stipulated by the contract, that holds the original contract in force, and therefore not under the holdings of some courts, the making of a new contract. As bearing upon this question, see Imperial F. Ins. Co. v. Dunham, 117 Pa. 460, 2 Am. St. Rep. 686, 12 Atl. 668; Buchanan v. Exchange F. Ins. Co. 61 N. Y. 26; Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. v. Norton, 96 U. S. 234, 24 L. ed. 689. In the last case, the policy provided that "if the said premium shall not be paid on or before twelve o'clock noon, . . . then, and in every such case, the company shall not be liable to pay the sum assured or any part thereof, and said policy shall cease and be null and void, without notice to any party or parties interested therein."

The policy provided that the premium should be paid annually on the 20th day of April in each year. The assured died, and the defense rested on the fact that the policy was forfeited by reason of the non-payment of certain notes given for the last premium, which was due April 20, 1875. The court said in passing upon the question: "The written agreement of the parties, as embodied in the policy, . . . was undoubtedly to the express purport that a failure to pay the notes at maturity would incur a forfeiture of the policy. It also contained an express declaration that the agents of the company were not authorized to make, alter, or abrogate contracts or waive forfeitures. And these terms, had the company so chosen, it could have insisted on, but a party always had the option to waive a condition or stipulation made in his own favor. The company was not bound to insist upon a forfeiture, though incurred, but might waive it. . . . Much stress, however, is laid on the fact that the extension claimed to have been given in this case was not given, or applied for, until after the first note became due and the forfeiture had been actually incurred. But we do not deem this to be material. . . . The material question is whether the forfeiture was waived; and we see no reason why this may not be done as well by an agreement made for extending the note after its maturity as by one made before. In either case, the legal effect of the indulgence is this: The company say to the insured, Pay your note by such a time, and your policy shall not be forfeited. If the assured agrees to do this, and does it, or tenders himself ready to do it, the forfeiture ought not to be exacted. In both cases, the parties mutually act upon the hypothesis of the continued existence of the policy."

The court further said: "Forfeitures are not favored in the law. They are often the means of great oppression and injustice."

See also Cohen v. Continental F. Ins. Co. 67 Tex. 325, 60 Am. Rep. 24, 3 S. W. 296, in which it is said, in substance, that it may be considered as settled law that when a policy provides for forfeiture upon a failure to pay premiums when due, but does not stipulate that upon such failure the overdue premiums shall be considered as earned, the demand and payment of such premium constitute a waiver of the forfeiture, and that this is upon the principle that in such cases the insurance and the premium are obligations which depend upon each other, and hence a receipt of the latter necessarily implies that the insurer recognizes or renews the original contract, and thereby assumes the continuance of the risk. The receiving of the premium, with knowledge of the fact that it was not paid in time to avoid a forfeiture of the policy, and the receiving of subsequent premiums, constitute an election on the part of the company not to avail itself of the provisions of the policy touching forfeiture. It is a waiver of the provisions of the policy touching forfeiture, and continues the policy in force.

The contract between these parties was to give and receive indemnity. The premiums were paid to secure indemnity. Subsequent payments were made for the purpose of continuing the right to indemnity under the original contract. The receipt and retention of the subsequent premiums said to the assured, "We continue your right to indemnity under your contract." We see now no legal reason why the company should not be required to make indemnity in accordance with the provisions of the original contract.

The facts in this case are not in dispute. There was no question of fact for the jury. The court did not err in sustaining the plaintiff's motion upon the record made. We find no ground for disturbing its judgment, and the case is therefore affirmed.

Evans, Ch. J., and Ladd and Salinger, JJ., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied.

MAINE SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

CITY OF BELFAST

v.

BELFAST WATER COMPANY.

(— Me. —, 98 Atl. 738.)

Municipal corporation — ultra vires contract — right of other person to avoid.

1. One cannot avoid his contract to furnish water to a municipal corporation because the municipality had no authority to enter into it.

For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, II. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Injunction — against cutting off water supply.

2. A water company will be enjoined from cutting off the water supply of a municipal corporation to force it to come to its terms with respect to compensation for the service.

For other cases, see Injunction, I. f, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Note.—For cases passing upon the construction, validity, and enforceability of contracts, franchise or charter stipulations fixing rates for service of public service corporations, see notes to Pinney & B. Co. v. Los Angeles Gas & E. Corp. L.R.A.1915C, 282; Benwood v. Public Service Commission, L.R.A.1915C, 261; and State ex rel. Webster v. Superior Ct. L.R.A.1915C, 287; and the following recent cases in this series: Union Dry Goods Co. v. Georgia Public Service Co. L.R.A.1916E, 358, and Raymond Lumber Co. v. Raymond Light & Water Co. L.R.A.—, —.

BELFAST v. BELFAST WATER Co., it will be observed, is against the great weight of authority, which holds that statutes forbidding discrimination in rates are applicable to existing contracts, and that statutes creating public service commissions, and authorizing them to regulate rates, permit the latter to set aside prior contracts, valid when made, without violating constitutional provisions against the impairment of L.R.A.1917B.

Water — perpetual contract for municipal supply — validity.

3. A contract for a municipal water supply, adopted under legislative authority, is not unenforceable against the water company because it ignores the right of the state to control the terms and conditions of service by fixing terms and conditions unalterable for all time.

For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, II. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Public service corporation — free service to municipality — discrimination.

4. A contract to furnish free water service to a municipality forever after it has paid certain rates for a period of time is not invalid after the payments have been made, for discrimination against other consumers, since the service is purchased by the payments made.

For other cases, see Waters, III. b, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — free public service — validity.

5. Free service by a public service corporation to the public is not invalid for discrimination against other consumers.

For other cases, see Public Service Corporations, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

contracts. It will be observed that the rights of three parties may be involved in contracts fixing rates for public service. As to the rights of the corporation, under its charter or its franchise, and as to the rights of the municipality under its charter, it is held that the regulation of rates by the state, or the enactment of a statute authorizing a commission to regulate rates, is a valid exercise of the reserved power to alter corporate or municipal charters; and it is also held that it is competent for the state to waive the rights of the public in contracts fixing rates for public service. As to the rights of patrons and consumers in contracts with public service corporations fixing rates, it is held that such contracts must be considered as having been made in contemplation of and with reference to the power of the state to regulate rates, since the parties could not, by contract, suspend the power of the state to regulate rates.

Statute — retroactive effect — existing contracts.

6. A statute forbidding rebates, discount, or discrimination in respect to service rendered or to be rendered by a public utility does not apply to existing contracts.

For other cases, see Statutes, II. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Tax — remission — power of municipality.

7. A municipal corporation may be authorized to remit taxes upon a public service corporation in consideration of service rendered to it.

For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, II. a, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(September 28, 1916.)

REPORT by the Supreme Judicial Court for Waldo County for the determination by the full bench of a bill filed to enjoin defendant from preventing plaintiff's use of hydrants, to compel defendant to maintain the hydrants, and to furnish an adequate water supply. Bill sustained.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Carleton Doak and Robert F. Dunton, for plaintiff:

The parties to this suit were legally authorized to make the contract.

40 Cyc. 788; 3 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 1307.

The defendant corporation, having adopted the contract entered into by its promoters, and obtained its benefits, "must take it with its obligations and burdens, cum onere. It must do what the promoters agreed to do."

Robbins v. Bangor R. & Electric Co. 100 Me. 496, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 983, 62 Atl. 136; 1 Clark & M. Priv. Corp. p. 310.

Public service corporations are required to serve.

Wood v. Auburn, 87 Me. 287, 29 L.R.A. 376, 32 Atl. 906; Wyman, Pub. Serv. Corp. §§ 330, 331.

A city may agree, as a part of the consideration for a municipal water supply, to remit all municipal taxes on the property of the water company, or to pay all taxes assessed on its property up to a certain limit.

40 Cyc. 788; Alpena City Water Co. v. Alpena, 130 Mich. 518, 90 N. W. 323; Ludington Water-Supply Co. v. Ludington, 119 Mich. 480, 78 N. W. 558; Washburn v. Washburn Waterworks Co. 120 Wis. 575, 98 N. W. 539; Monroe Waterworks Co. v. Monroe, 110 Wis. 11, 85 N. W. 685; Little Falls Electric & Water Co. v. Little Falls, 74 Minn. 197, 77 N. W. 40.

Defendant, having received the benefits of the contract, is estopped from denying its validity.

2 Parsons, Contr. 9th ed. p. 961; Hathaway v. Payne, 34 N. Y. 92; 16 Cyc. 787; L.R.A. 1917B.

Ft. Worth City Co. v. Smith Bridge Co. 151 U. S. 294, 38 L. ed. 167, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 339; Richardson v. Welch, 47 Mich. 309, 11 N. W. 172; Joy v. St. Louis, 138 U. S. 1, 34 L. ed. 843, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 243; Doane v. Lake Street Elev. R. Co. 165 Ill. 510, 36 L.R.A. 97, 56 Am. St. Rep. 265, 46 N. E. 520; Clark v. Deadwood, 22 S. D. 233, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 402, 117 N. W. 131.

The contract is not ultra vires the city, either as regards the obligation to pay hydrant rental, or as regards the provision for payment of taxes for certain water service.

Maine Water Co. v. Waterville, 93 Me. 586, 49 L.R.A. 294, 45 Atl. 830; Portland v. Portland Water Co. 67 Me. 135; 40 Cyc. 788; Alpena Water Co. v. Alpena, 130 Mich. 518; Ludington Water-Supply Co. v. Ludington, 119 Mich. 480, 78 N. W. 558; Washburn v. Washburn Waterworks Co. 120 Wis. 575, 98 N. W. 539; Monroe Waterworks Co. v. Monroe, 110 Wis. 11, 85 N. W. 685; Little Falls Electric & Water Co. v. Little Falls, 74 Minn. 197, 77 N. W. 40; Bartholomew v. Austin, 29 C. C. A. 568, 52 U. S. App. 512, 85 Fed. 359; Grant v. Davenport, 36 Iowa, 396; Utica Waterworks Co. v. Utica, 31 Hun, 431; 3 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 1310; Atlantic City Waterworks Co. v. Atlantic City, 48 N. J. L. 378, 6 Atl. 24.

If it should be held that the provision of the contract relating to the remission of taxes in consideration of a supply of water for certain purposes is ultra vires, the remainder of the contract may be enforced.

Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank v. Arkansas City, 34 L.R.A. 518, 22 C. C. A. 171, 40 U. S. App. 257, 76 Fed. 271; Oregon Steam Nav. Co. v. Winsor, 20 Wall. 64, 22 L. ed. 315; Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 154 U. S. 362, 38 L. ed. 1014, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 560, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1047; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Baltimore & S. W. R. Co. 3 McCrary, 130, 11 Fed. 1; Saginaw Gaslight Co. v. Saginaw, 28 Fed. 529.

Injunction is a proper remedy, if the defendant is under legal obligation to furnish the service which it threatens to discontinue.

2 Joyce, Inj. § 1285; 3 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 1317; Wood v. Auburn, 87 Me. 287, 29 L.R.A. 376, 32 Atl. 906.

Messrs. Harvey D. Eaton and H. C. Buzzell, for defendant:

The government has the complete right at all times to regulate and control the service of this company and the prices to be charged therefor, and its right in this respect cannot be thwarted by a contract.

Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mottley, 219 U. S. 467, 55 L. ed. 297, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.)

671, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 265; Legal Tender Cases, 12 Wall. 457, 20 L. ed. 287.

Hydrant service shall be rendered without compensation after twenty years. This is a large and important service which should be paid for by the city in its corporate capacity.

Home Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Los Angeles, 211 U. S. 265, 53 L. ed. 176, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 50; Freeport Water Co. v. Freeport, 180 U. S. 587, 45 L. ed. 679, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 493.

Savage, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In 1886, two men, who will be called the promoters, entered into a written contract with the city of Belfast. The contract contained these provisions, among others: The promoters agreed to construct in Belfast a complete system of waterworks for the extinguishment of fires, and for domestic, manufacturing, and other purposes. They agreed to place in the system 45 hydrants, and more, if desired by the city. The city agreed to pay, for not exceeding 50 hydrants in number, set upon pipe described in the construction plan, an annual rent of $900. For additional hydrants set upon new pipe the promoters were to receive $40 each annually. It was agreed by the promoters that at the expiration of twenty years from the time water was first let into the pipes the payment of rent for each and all hydrants should cease, and that at all times thereafter they would furnish water for the hydrants free to the city.

The promoters further agreed to supply all water for sprinkling streets and flushing gutters, and for all buildings within the limits supplied by its pipes, used by the city for municipal and school purposes, including the public library and a city hospital, and for four drinking troughs or fountains for man and beast, and for two ornamental fountains, for such sums annually as the city should assess taxes upon the franchise and works of the water system.

Further, the promoters agreed to sell and convey the system to the city at any time for such price as might be agreed upon, or, in case of failure to agree, for such price as might be determined by commissioners in a manner prescribed by the contract.

The city agreed that the promoters should have the privilege and right to supply water for domestic and other purposes, and should be authorized to dig up the ways and streets for the purpose of laying pipes, and for doing such other work as might be necessary in the operation of the waterworks.

It was agreed that such of the agreements and stipulations in the contract as the city might not then have the power to L.R.A.1917B.

make without authority of the legislature were not to be binding until such authority was granted by a charter satisfactory to the city, to be procured by the promoters.

In accordance with the contract, the promoters procured a charter from the legislature by which they and one other were incorporated under the name of the Belfast Water Company, the defendant in this case. P. & S. Laws of 1887, chap. 94. The chartered purpose of the corporation was to furnish water to the people of Belfast for domestic and other usages, and to the city of Belfast for the extinguishment of fires and other public uses. Among other things, the corporation was empowered to dig up the streets for the purpose of laying its pipes, and to fix and collect water rates. The charter provided that, after the corporation should commence receiving pay for water supplied by it, it should be bound to furnish, at a reasonable rate, water for the inhabitants of the city for said uses, and to the city in its corporate capacity for public uses. The charter authorized the city to contract with the corporation for water for public uses, on such terms as the parties might agree upon, including the remission of taxes upon the real estate, fixtures, and plant of the corporation.

The Belfast Water Company, in 1887, constructed its waterworks in Belfast. The contract between the promoters and the city was not assigned by the promoters to the water company. And no new contract was made by the city with the defendant company, as was authorized by the company's charter. But December 1, 1887, the defendant notified the city of the completion of its works in this language: "The works of the Belfast Water Company, so far as they relate to the fire service contracted for with the city are now ready for use, and we have the honor of turning over to the city the hydrant wrenches, and the use of the hydrants for fire service, in accordance with the terms of said contract."

And from that time until recently both parties have conducted themselves in apparent recognition of the contract with the promoters. The company has set the hydrants and furnished water, and the city has paid the agreed hydrant rental, amounting to between $30,000 and $40,000. And the company has brought divers suits to enforce contract rights. The compensation for the use of water for sprinkling and other public uses mentioned in the contract, except for hydrants, has been paid by the remission of taxes, as the contract provided.

In January, 1916, the defendant, being advised, as it says, that the contract between the promoters, or the company itself, and and the city, was illegal, and that it was wrong for it to be performed further, notified the city that from and after April 1, 1916, it should refuse to recognize it as of binding force, and should thereafter refuse to perform thereunder. It also notified the city that unless arrangements were made by the city to pay a fair compensation for all hydrants in use, it would, after April 1st, cease to maintain said hydrants or permit their use by the city.

Thereupon this bill was brought, setting forth the essential facts, and praying that the defendant be enjoined from preventing the plaintiff's use of the hydrants, and that it be commanded to maintain the hydrants and to furnish an adequate supply of water therefor. The case comes before us on report.

In argument, the defendant does not question the conclusion that the promoters' contract has been impliedly adopted by both parties, nor that the defendant is bound by the engagements entered into by its promoters as far as they were legal. It is settled that if a corporation expressly or impliedly adopts the contract made by its promoters, and obtains its benefits, it must take it with its obligations and burdens. It must do what the promoters agreed to do. Robbins v. Bangor R. & Electric Co. 100 Me. 496, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 963, 62 Atl. 136.

But the defendant contends that the contract, is illegal, null, and void for three reasons: (1) That it "ignores the right of the state to regulate and control the terms and conditions of service by fixing terms and conditions unalterably for all time;" (2) that it "ignores the principle that utilities must serve all alike on fair terms, by a provision that a large and important part of the service shall be rendered without compensation for all time after the expiration of twenty years;" and (3) that it "ignores the right of the state to levy taxes upon a just and reasonable basis by fixing for all time certain public services as the measure of all taxation of the company's property."

For these reasons the defendant claims that it is under no duty or obligation to furnish water to the city, and that it has a legal right to discontinue the water service to the city, unless and until the city will make arrangements to pay fair compensation.

The city takes issue with the defendant on all these propositions. But it contends, also, that the defendant is now estopped from denying the validity of the contract which it adopted, and the benefits of which it has received. It is also urged that if the contract was ultra vires, it was so only as to the city, and that the question of ultra vires, and the contention that the contract was against public policy, can be raised only by the municipality affected, and not by the other contracting party.

It has been repeatedly held, and we think with good reason, that when a party has accepted the benefits of a contract, not contra bonos mores, he should not be permitted to question the validity of it; that he is estopped. Ft. Worth City Co. v. Smith Bridge Co. 151 U. S. 294, 38 L. ed. 167, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 339; Richardson v. Welch, 47 Mich. 309, 11 N. W. 172; Doane v. Lake Street Elev. R. Co. 165 Ill. 510, 38 L.R.A. 97, 56 Am. St. Rep. 265, 46 N. E. 520; Collins v. Cobe, 202 Ill. 469, 66 N. E. 1079; State ex rel. Pope v. Germania Bank, 90 Minn. 150, 95 N. W. 1116; Gibbs v. Craig, 58 N. J. L. 661, 33 Atl. 1052; Flower v. Barnekoff, 20 Or. 132, 11 L.R.A. 149, 25 Pac. 370; Dyer v. Walker, 40 Pa. 157; 2 Parsons Contr. 961. And in Joy v. St. Louis, 138 U. S. 1, 34 L. ed. 843, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 243, where a railroad company was in the enjoyment of a right of way through a park, and had received the benefit of a large sum of money expended by the park commissioners, under an agreement with them, the court said that, without offering to return the property obtained by virtue of the agreement, it could not be heard to allege that the agreement was against the policy of the law.

Again, while it is true that in general the courts will refuse to enforce contracts contra bonos mores, there is good reason for saying that the defense of ultra vires can be made only by the party whose acts, or the acts of whose agents, are claimed to be ultra vires. The ultra vires contract of a municipality is a legal wrong. The party that is wronged may be relieved. The other contracting party is not wronged in the eye of the law. And it would seem that it cannot seek to be relieved from a contract with which the other party is content. We have found no case where the other contracting party has been relieved, and no case where it has sought to be relieved, from a contract ultra vires a municipality. Ultra vires is properly a defensive proposition. It is a defense to an action seeking to enforce a contract. In every case, we think, it has been the municipality that sought relief. It is well settled that courts will not declare a statute unconstitutional except at the instance of those whose rights are injuriously affected by the unconstitutional provision. They, and they alone, can do this. Courts will never, at the suit of one, pronounce a statute unconstitutional because it may impair the rights of others not complaining. Williamson v. Carlton, 51 Me. 449; Re Wellington, 16 Pick. 87, 26 Am. Dec. 631; Hingham, & I. Bridge Turnp.

Corp. v. Norfolk County, 6 Allen, 353; Red River Valley Nat. Bank v. Craig, 181 U. S. 548, 45 L. ed. 994, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 703. And if an unconstitutional provision cannot be attacked except by one whose constitutional rights have been invaded, much more it would seem for like reasons that a mere ultra vires contract could be attacked only by the party as to whom it is ultra vires. The decisions of the Federal courts in national bank cases are illustrative. They point to the doctrine that the ultra vires transactions are utterly void when made the basis of suit to charge the bank with liability, but when the bank seeks to enforce advantages obtained through such transactions, even though they were impliedly forbidden, they are valid unless questioned by the government. California Nat. Bank v. Kennedy, 167 U. S. 362, 42 L. ed. 198, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 831; Union Gold Min. Co. v. Rocky Mountain Nat. Bank, 96 U. S. 640, 24 L. ed. 648; Union Nat. Bank v. Matthews, 98 U. S. 621, 25 L. ed. 188; Reynolds v. First Nat. Bank, 112 U. S. 405, 28 L. ed. 733, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 213; Schuyler Nat. Bank v. Gadsden, 191 U. S. 451, 48 L. ed. 258, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 129.

Again, we think it should be said that it is at least questionable whether the company should be permitted to discontinue its service, in order to compel the city to come to its terms, for that would be the effect of it. After maintaining relations for nearly thirty years, strictly under the provisions of the promoters' contract, it is now too late to say that the parties have not adopted it, and are not bound by it, so far as lawful. A controversy as to its legality has arisen. The city certainly had sufficient reason to assert its legality. The courts are seldom willing to give a water company the arbitrary power to compel the settlement of disputed claims by refusing to supply water. Wyman, Pub. Serv. Corp. § 458. Some expressions of the court in Wood v. Auburn, 87 Me. 287, 29 L.R.A. 376, 32 Atl. 906, are peculiarly apposite. Applying them to this case, they would read as follows: The parties are not on equal ground. The city, once taken onto the system, becomes dependent on that system. To suddenly deprive it of water puts it to an enormous disadvantage. It must surrender its sense of injustice. Such a power in the company places the city at its mercy. The city cannot resist lest it lose the water. The case of Wood v. Auburn, supra, is not a precedent for this case, for the circumstances are not alike. But the reasoning of the court is significant.

The foregoing considerations impress us strongly, and we think afford sufficient grounds for awarding an injunction against L.R.A.1917B.

the defendant. But were it otherwise, we think the contention of the defendant cannot be sustained.

By the charter of the company, the city was authorized to contract with it for water for public uses on such terms as the parties might agree upon, including the remission of taxes. Instead of making a new contract, the parties, as we have seen, adopted an existing contract. And this we think they might do under the statute. It was in effect making a contract. So that the contract which the parties have mutually acted under for nearly thirty years is based upon legislative authority. The state gave the authority. We are not called upon to consider now whether the state has reserved authority to regulate and control the terms and conditions of service. The state has not yet undertaken to do it, in this case. The state so far has said only that the parties might contract on such terms as they might agree upon. And so far as the contract was within the authority given by the charter, it must be held to be valid. The legislature placed no limit upon the length of time for which they might contract, and therefore we cannot. Whether the legislation was wise or unwise was a question of public policy. It was a question for the legislature. And a legislative determination of public policy, within constitutional limitations, is conclusive upon the courts. Cities, as well as corporations, are creatures of the state. And we know of no constitutional provision which forbids a contract between city and company for a supply of water for an unlimited period.

A similar question arose in Atlantic City Waterworks Co. v. Atlantic City, 48 N. J. L. 378, 6 Atl. 24, where the city resisted the payment of water rates, on the ground that the contract for the same was without limit as to time. The court suggested that the contract, like the contract in this case, was not necessarily unlimited in time, because the city had the right at any time to put an end to it by purchasing the works. The court then said: "But, waiving this, the conclusive answer to the position is that the power to provide the city with a supply of water has been conferred by the legislature upon the common council in an unqualified form, and that the court has no competency to circumscribe such a grant."

Mr. Dillon says: "When a city has statutory authority to enter into contracts for a supply of water and gas for its own use, and for the use of its inhabitants, the manner in which its statutory authority shall be exercised and the terms of any contract which it may enter into, including the number of years during which it is to continue, rests within the discretion of the municipal authorities; and the courts will not review it or set it aside in the absence of fraud, or an abuse or excess of authority, or unless the contract is so unreasonable, inequitable, or unfair as to justify the interference of a court on the established principles of law or equity. . . . The decisions do not disclose that there is any stated term which the courts will regard as so unreasonable as to be an unfair and unreasonable exercise of the discretionary powers of the municipality." 3 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 1307.

But it is said that, even if the city had authority to make a contract unlimited in time, it had no authority to make one that violates the legal principle that public utilities must serve all alike, without discrimination. In other words, it could not make an illegal contract. And it is claimed that the provision for free hydrant service after twenty years is violative of that principle. It is true that, by the common law, a public service corporation must serve all similarly situated whom it is under a duty to serve, upon equal terms, and without discrimination. Free service to some is discriminatory. The same principle is declared in the public utilities law of this state. Laws of 1913, chap. 129, § 32. The purpose of the law, both common and statutory, is to protect the public. Persons sui juris, and business corporations, are presumed to be able to protect themselves.

But one answer to the contention is that the hydrant service is not free. It has been bought and paid for. Under the unlimited powers given by the charter we see no reason why the parties might not lawfully have contracted for a hydrant service for all time, to be paid for in one gross sum. If so, there is no reason why they might not contract for a gross sum to be paid in instalments. The company, on the whole, is entitled to reasonable returns only. And the sums contributed by the city whether at one or many times, serve so far to lessen the burden upon other consumers. We can see no more reason why a city whose statutory power is without expressed limit may not lawfully contract for a future perpetual hydrant service for a present payment than that it may buy or build and pay for a municipal structure for a future perpetual use. There is no mystery about a hydrant rental contract. It is a pure business proposition. The state invested the city with wide discretionary powers. It must be assumed, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that the powers have been exercised in a manner supposed to be advantageous to both parties. There is nothing in the case which shows that the contract was unreasonable, inequitable, or unfair to the city. Instead of contracting for a gross sum, or for annual payments, they contracted for 20-year payments. In effect, the city paid the entire hydrant rental in twenty years. A telling point is that the city has paid the entire contract price. The company has received it, and still keeps it. It would be grossly inequitable to permit the company to repudiate the contract now. See Union Nat. Bank v. Matthews, 98 U. S. at page 629, 25 L. ed. 188. It must abide the contract so far as hydrant rentals are concerned.

Another answer is that free service to the public is not, at common law, unreasonable, and therefore unlawfully, discriminatory. The law against unreasonable discrimination rests on public policy. It is forbidden because it is opposed to the interest of the public, which requires that all should be treated alike under like circumstances. Discriminations, however, in favor of the public, are not opposed to public policy, because they relieve the people generally of part of their burdens. In the absence of legislation upon the subject such discriminations cannot be held illegal as matter of law without overturning the foundation upon which the rule itself is built. New York Teleph. Co. v. Siegel-Cooper Co. 202 N. Y. 511, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 560, 96 N. E. 109. So in Superior v. Douglas County Teleph. Co. 141 Wis. 363, 122 N. W. 1023, a contract binding a telephone company to maintain, without charge, telephones in the public offices of the city, was held not to be invalid as against public policy. The court said: "The contract in this case having been made before the legislation occurred prohibiting discriminatory rates, such legislation does not cut any figure in the case. If the contract were valid when made, it is within the constitutional protection precluding the legislature from impairing the obligations of contracts. . . . Discriminatory contracts between public utility corporations and their patrons which are held to be void as inimical to the public good are so held because unreasonable advantage is thereby given to one customer or a class over others, whereas all have a moral and legal right to equality of treatment. In case of the contract being between a private corporation and the state or other public corporation, whatever advantage the particular customer has over general customers obviously inures to the benefit of the latter in the aggregate. In other words, in the ultimate there is no discrimination which is inimical to the public good, and hence no violation of public policy."

See Willcox v. Consolidated Gas Co. 212 U. S. 19, 53 L. ed. 382, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.)

1134, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 192, 15 Ann. Cas. 1034; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 145 U. S. 278, 36 L. ed. 699, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 92, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 844; National Waterworks Co. v. School Dist. (C. C.) 4 McCrary, 198, 48 Fed. 523; Dempsey v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 146 N. Y. 290, 40 N. E. 867; Wyman, Pub. Serv. Corp. § 1304.

This states the case as at common law. If it be said that the common-law rule has been abrogated by statute, and that the state under its reserved power may enact regulatory provisions which in effect abrogate the contract, it may be answered that the state has not attempted to do so in this case, except, as it may be urged, by the Public Utilities Statute (Laws of 1913, chap. 129). Section 31 of that statute forbids unreasonable preferences. But, as we have seen, discrimination in favor of a municipal corporation is not unreasonable. Section 32 makes it unlawful for any person or corporation to receive any rebate, discount, or discrimination in respect to any service rendered, or to be rendered, by any public utility. We think there is nothing in this statute which tends to show that the legislature intended to impair the obligation of any existing lawful contract. The language indicates that the legislation was to have a prospective, not a retroactive, effect. See similar case of Public Service Electric Co. v. Public Utility Comrs. 88 N. J. L. 603, P.U.R.1916D, 107, 96 Atl. 1013. Besides, to give it a retroactive effect would impair the obligation of a contract valid at common law, which is forbidden by the Federal Constitution. See Superior v. Douglas County Teleph. Co. supra.

But it is said further that the contract is illegal because of the provision for the remission of taxes in consideration of water furnished for several public uses. With respect to this contention it may fairly be said that its determination is not necessarily involved in this case. The contract provision for free hydrant service and for other public service to be compensated by remission of taxes are distinct and separable. One might be invalid without affecting the validity of the other, and we have held the hydrant service provision to be valid. The issues raised by the bill in this case relate only to the hydrant service. But the question of remission of taxes has been argued, and we will notice it briefly.

The power of remission is granted by the charter. And it may be said here that all the cases where municipalities have attempted to contract without legislative authority are not pertinent to the present discussion. Here the legislative permission, which is precise and express, must control, L.R.A:1917B.

unless unconstitutional. It is not claimed to be unconstitutional. The state has said that these parties may, by contract, fix the value of certain public services, as the equivalent of the amount of taxes assessed upon the company's property, so that one may offset the other. In Portland v. Portland Water Co. 67 Me. 135, it was settled that the legislature may authorize the exemption or remission of taxes as equivalent compensation for public service rendered. So are the cases elsewhere. See cases collected in 40 Cyc. 788. In the Portland Case the power was granted by statute for six years only. In Maine Water Co. v. Waterville, 93 Me. 586, 49 L.R.A. 294, 45 Atl. 830, it appeared that there was legislative authority for a contract for a municipal supply of water, for which such compensation was to be paid as might be agreed upon, but nothing was said about remission of taxes. A contract was made by which the city agreed to pay for water service a sum annually which should "be equal to the tax annually assessed against the company." The court held the contract, which was limited in time to twenty years, to be valid. It said: "A municipality may, for a reasonably adequate consideration, in the way of service rendered to it for municipal purposes, agree to make compensation therefor, for a term of years not unreasonably long, either in whole or in part, by reimbursing the company, in whole or in part, the amount that the company . . . may be obliged to pay as taxes assessed upon its property."

The Waterville Case is to be distinguished from the one at bar in this respect: That in that case there was no express legislative authority to remit taxes. The remission was made and upheld under a general grant of power to make a contract. In this case the charter is express, and fixes no limit of time for the operation of the contract. This distinction is noticed in Home Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Los Angeles, 211 U. S. 265, 53 L. ed. 176, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 50, cited by the defendant.

And if, notwithstanding the charter, the question of public policy were open to us, it may be said that if such a contract is to be deemed reasonable at the outset, for a limited time, it is not unfair to presume, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that the value of the public services and the amount of taxes assessed would continue, pari passu, to be equivalent.

We conclude that the contract is valid, and that an injunction should be awarded as prayed for.

Bill sustained, with costs.

Permanent injunction to issue as prayed for.

MISSISSIPPI SUPREME COURT.
(Division B.)MISSISSIPPI CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.,
v.

DAVE McWILLIAMS.

(— Miss. —, 72 So. 925.)

Master and servant — wood thrown from engine — liability for injury.

A railroad company is not liable for injury to one walking along its right of way by wood thrown from an engine by a fireman, for his own use, without the knowledge or consent of the company, and against its rules.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, III. a, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(November 27, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Forrest County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. S. E. Travis, for appellant:

Defendant is not liable for plaintiff's injury, which resulted from the act of the fireman on the train while engaged in his own personal enterprise, throwing wood from the tender for his private use, without the knowledge or consent of defendant.

6 Labatt, Mast. & S. p. 6906; Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Maurer, 21 Ohio St. 421; Burke v. Shaw, 59 Miss. 443, 42 Am. Rep. 370; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Latham, 72 Miss. 32, 16 So. 757; Sullivan v. Morrice, 109 Ill. App. 650; Goodloe v. Memphis & C. R. Co. 107 Ala. 233, 29 L.R.A. 729, 54 Am. St. Rep. 67, 18 So. 166; Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. v. Douglass, 69 Miss. 723, 30 Am. St. Rep. 582, 11 So. 933; Canton Cotton Warehouse Co. v. Pool, 78 Miss. 147, 84 Am. St. Rep. 620, 28 So. 823; Walton v. New York Cent. Sleeping Car Co. 139 Mass. 556, 2 N. E. 101; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Epperson, 26 Ill. App. 79; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Currie, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 396, note; Walker v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 121 Mo. 575, 24 L.R.A. 363, 42 Am. St. Rep. 547, 26 S. W. 360.

Plaintiff was at most a mere licensee upon defendant's right of way at the time of his injury, to whom it owed no duty, except that of not inflicting upon him a wilful or wanton wrong.

Note.—As to liability of railroad company for personal injuries by objects thrown from moving train, see annotation following this case, post, 916.
L.R.A.1917B.

Illinois C. R. Co. v. Arnola, 78 Miss. 787, 84 Am. St. Rep. 645, 29 So. 768; Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Smith, — Miss. —, 71 So. 75.

Messrs. Currie & Currie for appellee.

Potter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellee in this case, plaintiff in the court below, recovered a judgment for $250 against the appellant, defendant in the court below, on account of personal injuries sustained by him. The plaintiff in this case alleged and proved that he was walking on a path used a number of years by the general public as a footpath across the railroad right of way of the defendant company, and that when he reached a point on the railroad where the said path crosses same, a worktrain of the appellant was returning to the city of Hattiesburg, and the fireman on said train, for his own private use, and without the knowledge or consent of appellant or any of its agents, threw some wood from the tender of the engine in question opposite his home, and, without seeing or knowing where the appellee was, struck him with the wood and injured him. It appears without contradiction in this record that the fireman was engaged in an enterprise of his own when he was hauling the wood on the tender of the engine. He had done this only two or three times previous to this occasion, and the conductor of the train did not know that the fireman was hauling wood on the tender of the engine. And, further, that this act on the part of the fireman was in violation of the rules of the railroad company, and the fireman was ordered to stop this practice, if such it had become, as soon as the conductor found out about it, at the time the accident occurred.

This case must be reversed. The fireman on defendant's engine was acting entirely outside of the scope of his employment. The enterprise he was engaged in was his own. He was hauling wood for his own use, without the knowledge or consent of defendant's agents. Burke v. Shaw, 59 Miss. 443, 42 Am. Rep. 370; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Latham, 72 Miss. 32, 16 So. 757; Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. v. Douglass, 69 Miss. 723, 30 Am. St. Rep. 582, 11 So. 933; Canton Cotton Warehouse Co. v. Pool, 78 Miss. 147, 84 Am. St. Rep. 620, 28 So. 823.

Reversed, and judgment here for appellant.

Annotation—Liability of railroad company for personal injuries by objects thrown from moving train.

The earlier cases on the question under discussion may be found in note to Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Eaden, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 581.

The liability of railroad company for injuries to an employee by object thrown from train by train employee in course of his duty is the subject of a note to Illinois C. R. Co. v. Hart, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1117.

The following annotations are also pertinent to the question discussed in this note:

Liability of master for injury from the sportive manner in which a servant performs an act done in the discharge of his duty. Soderlund v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1193. Liability of master for injuries inflicted upon an employee maliciously or in sport by other employees. Medlin Mill. Co. v. Boutwell, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 109 and Robinson v. Melville Mfg. Co. 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 385.

Liability to passenger for injury by article falling from passing train. Bradley v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1148.

Liability of railroad company for personal injuries from negligent operation of trains, to persons on adjoining property or highway. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Jackson, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 980.

Liability of railroad company for injury to persons, not employees, caused by defectively loaded car. Covington & C. R. Transfer & Bridge Co. v. Mulvey, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 204.

Liability of elevated railway company for personal injury to one on surface. Carney v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 90.

As stated in the note in 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 581, it is generally held, in cases of injury by mail bags thrown from moving train, that the fact that a mail agent is not in the railroad company's employ will not relieve it from liability if it appears that it is the custom to throw the pouch from the moving train and the railroad company has knowledge of such negligent practice.

So it is stated in Southern R. Co. v. Rhodes (1898) 30 C. C. A. 157, 58 U. S. App. 349, 86 Fed. 422, 4 Am. Neg. Rep. 733, that in order to affect the railway company with the charge of negligence, it is necessary to prove that the company had notice of a practice of the L.R.A.1917B.

postal employees to throw off the mail pouch at a place where it was dangerous; that notice may be expressed or implied from a long continuance of such practice. The company was held not liable for injury to passenger on platform by mail pouch thrown by employee of postoffice department, the evidence being insufficient to justify a finding that the custom existed for a period sufficiently long prior to the accident to charge the company with notice.

But where a passenger, after visiting a restaurant, stood in the public street alongside of the platform and train which he had just left and received an injury resulting in death by being struck with a piece of timber thrown from a car by an employee, the company was, in Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. v. Riley (1872) 39 Ind. 568, held liable; the court upheld instructions to the effect that the deceased, whether a passenger or not, had a right to stand in the street in or alongside of which the railroad was located, and being properly there, the railroad company had no right to throw sticks of wood from the train to the street without first ascertaining whether such action would endanger the person of anyone walking or standing there. "It is not necessary that a person should actually be on the train of the railroad in order to be regarded as a passenger, and have the rights of such against the company. He may sustain that relation and not be actually on the train or in a car. This, as well as other companies, had its places of stopping for refreshments. Accommodations for leaving the train, and going to and returning from the dining rooms, had been provided, and passengers were thus invited to leave the train for that purpose. This was a necessary and proper purpose. The deceased was not negligent or in fault in leaving the train, or in standing by it on his return. On the contrary, he was doing only that which was customary, and what he was, by the surroundings, invited and expected to do. It is true that he was not on the main platform in front of the depot, for that was on the other side of the train from the dining room. Nor does the evidence show that he was actually standing on the narrow platform on the west side of the train; but he was near to it, and it is not material that he should have been exactly on that platform," there probably being no regulation or usage which required passengers to walk on the planks and nowhere else.

In these cases it is essential that the evidence should show that it was the custom to throw the mail where it was liable to do injury to some person, but it is not essential that the evidence show that it was thrown customarily at the exact spot where the party was eventually struck. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Warrum (1907) 42 Ind. App. 179, 82 N. E. 934, rehearing denied in (1908) 42 Ind. App. 196, 84 N. E. 356.

In Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Warrum (Ind.) supra, a railroad was held liable where a person passing along a platform dedicated by the company to the public for a street was injured by mail sacks thrown by a postal clerk from a train passing at a high rate of speed. The person was neither a trespasser nor mere licensee, but was where he had a lawful right to be, and the railroad company was bound, in the exercise of its rights, to observe reasonable care not to injure him. It was bound to observe the same care toward him as it was required to exercise toward those who used the platform for some purpose connected with the company's business. The court says that the distinction between this case and the Muster Case (1884) 61 Wis. 325, 50 Am. Rep. 141, 21 N. W. 223 (employee injured by mail sack) set out on page 582 of the note 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) is that in this case the evidence affirmatively shows that at the point where the mail was customarily discharged there was danger of injuring persons by throwing it from the moving train, while in the Muster Case the evidence does not disclose that the place where the mail was discharged was one where danger of injury to any person could reasonably have been apprehended.

So where a railroad ran through a public street and a boy fifteen years old, while passing along the walk of the baggage car, was injured by a trunk thrown out of the car by an employee, the railroad company was, in St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Underwood (1905) 74 Ark. 610, 86 S. W. 804, held liable, the railroad company owing the boy a duty to employ reasonable means and exercise reasonable care to avoid injuring him. The court held inapplicable the principle that the railway company owed plaintiff no duty except to use ordinary care not to injure him after having discovered his place of peril, or, in L.R.A. 1917B.

other words, that it was the duty of the railway company only to avoid such gross and wanton negligence as was equivalent to a wilful or intentional injury. The court observed that there was no error in assuming that plaintiff was rightfully in the place where he was injured, and in refusing the request of defendant for an instruction to the effect that defendant was not liable unless its employees inflicted the injury upon plaintiff with "wilful and wrongful intention."

So the railroad company was held liable in Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Maine (1873) 67 Ill. 298, where a person, rightfully upon a depot platform for the purpose of ascertaining the departure of a certain train, was injured by a piece of timber thrown from a box car standing on the track beside the platform, which car the employees of the company were at the time unloading.

The case of Willis v. Maysville & B. S. R. Co. (1905) 119 Ky. 949, 85 S. W. 716 (1906) 122 Ky. 658, 92 S. W. 604, 13 Ann. Cas. 74, set out in the earlier note on page 583, and involving injury to boy standing on street, was reaffirmed on third appeal (1907) 31 Ky. L. Rep. 1249, 104 S. W. 1016, the court stating that "the jury were instructed that if the agent 'negligently threw or kicked' the lump of ice from the train, injuring appellee, they should find for him in damages. It is objected that the word 'threw' had no place in this instruction, as it was entirely unsupported by the evidence, which showed that the ice was kicked from the train. In the connection these words were used, there is no substantial difference between them; and it would be exceedingly far-fetched to say that the jury were misled, or the right of the appellant prejudiced, by the insertion of the word 'threw,' when the evidence showed that the lump of ice was kicked from the train."

Where a section hand was injured by a crossarm thrown by a telegraph employee from a moving freight train, the railroad company was held liable in Geddings v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. (1912) 91 S. C. 477, 75 S. E. 284, the court stating that it was the duty of the railroad company to unload its freight, and it could not escape liability by delegating such duty to the telegraph company. The court observed that the fact that the right of way where the injury was sustained was constantly, and with the knowledge and consent of the railroad company, traveled by the public, tended to show that it was recklessness to throw the crossarm from the train at that point.

Where, however, a baggage-master, for the purpose of assisting a contractor under defendant railroad company in dropping tools along the route, threw from a passing train a crowbar, injuring an employee of the contractor, the railroad company was, in Cunningham v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (1871) 31 U. C. Q. B. 350, held not liable, the baggage-master's act not being within the scope of his employment.

A railroad company has been held liable to a trespasser injured by ice thrown from a moving train by a baggageman, who was acting within the scope of his employment, and had discovered the presence of the former in time to have prevented the injury. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Petrey (1915) 167 Ky. 223, 180 S. W. 370.

So the decision in Dorsey v. Kansas City, P. & G. R. Co. (1901) 104 La. 478, 52 L.R.A. 92, 29 So. 177, held the railroad liable where a brakeman, instead of waiting a few moments to oust a trespasser after a stop of the train, chose to pelt him with rocks and clods to make him get off the rod where he was riding, stealing a ride under the car. The trespasser, in endeavoring to escape from under the car while it was running, fell and was killed. It was, observed the court, within the course of the brakeman's employment to compel him to stop trespassing and leave the car, and had he exercised the right in a proper and legal manner, there would have been no good cause to complain. The damage arose from the manner of the removal. It was unnecessarily violent and illegal. The act of trespassing was not of itself contributory negligence justifying defendant's servant to resort to the acts he did, when there was not the least reason to infer that there was necessity to resort to any violence at all to remove the trespasser.

So the decision in Pierce v. North Carolina R. Co. (1899) 124 N. C. 83, 44 L.R.A. 316, 32 S. E. 399, held that the tortious act of a brakeman in throwing coal at a boy on the tender of an engine, by which he knocked him off or frightened him so that he jumped off, causing him to be run over and killed by the engine, rendered the railroad company liable.

So, in a similar case, Towanda Coal Co. v. Heeman (1878) 86 Pa. 418, it was stated that although the plaintiff had no right to be on the car, the jury would have been justified in finding, as they L.R.A.1917B.

did, such reckless, gross, and culpable negligence as to render the defendant liable for damages, if the brakeman had been shown to have been acting in the line of his duty and within the scope of his employment. In this case a brakeman attempted to drive boys off a moving coal car by throwing coal at them, some pieces of which struck the plaintiff in the face and partially blinded him, in consequence of which he slipped and fell in trying to get off the train.

The doctrine that railway companies are liable for injuries to trespassers caused by failing to exercise ordinary care to avoid injuring them after their perilous situation has been discovered has no application in cases where the servants' acts causing the injury are beyond the scope of their employment. Consequently, where a yardmaster in violation of the rules of the company threw coal from a freight car, injuring a trespasser walking through the yards, the company was, in St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Laven-dusky (1908) 87 Ark. 540, 113 S. W. 204, held not liable, the yardmaster's act being beyond the scope of his employment and of no benefit to the railroad. The court distinguished such cases as Fletcher v. Baltimore & P. R. Co. (1897) 168 U. S. 135, 42 L. ed. 411, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 35, set out in the earlier note on page 583, where the person at the time of his injury was upon a street crossing where he had the right to be and where the company owed him the duty to exercise ordinary care to avoid injuring him; and St. Louis South Western R. Co. v. Underwood (1905) 74 Ark. 610, 86 S. W. 804, where the person injured was upon a public street.

So a railroad company was held not liable in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Routt (1903) 25 Ky. L. Rep. 887, 76 S. W. 513, where a fireman on a passing train purposely and maliciously threw a piece of coal at and injured a person, such act not being within the scope of the servant's employment. In this case plaintiff testified that he was walking along the path, at the edge of the ties, usually taken by people on their way to town, when, on stepping out of the way of an oncoming train, he was struck by a piece of coal.

See also MISSISSIPPI C. R. Co. v. Mc-WILLIAMS, ante, 915, where railroad is held not liable for personal injury by wood thrown from engine by fireman for his own use. The plaintiff in this case alleged and proved that he was walking on a path used a number of years by the general public as a footpath across the railroad right of way.

So it was held in Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Ford (1914) 158 Ky. 800, 166 S. W. 605, that the railroad company cannot be held liable for injury to person walking along a railroad right of way caused by being struck and scalded by a stream of hot water thrown from a locomotive by those in charge, the act being malicious and wilful, and not within the scope of the servant's employment. The court said: "If the plaintiff, in the case at bar, had been on the freight train, or attempting to board it, and the railway company's servants, in an effort to prevent his boarding the train, or in an effort to eject him after he had boarded it, had thrown the scalding water upon the plaintiff and thereby injured him, the company would be liable for such act, upon the ground that it was an act performed within the scope of the authority of the servants in question.

"But it is not shown in the record, and the court, in the absence of evidence to that effect, will not presume, that those in charge of a freight train are charged by the company with any duty of driving trespassers off of the right of way. Had such duty been proven, and had the servants of the company, in the discharge of that duty, thrown the hot water upon the plaintiff and thereby injured him, the company would be responsible for the act.

"If the plaintiff had been in a place where he had a right to be, and it had been the duty of the company's servants upon the locomotive to have thrown the water, and the servants had negligently performed that duty and thereby injured plaintiff; or if such servants in the performance of their duty had intentionally and maliciously thrown hot water upon plaintiff and thereby injured him, the company would be liable, even though plaintiff may have been a trespasser. But there is no claim by the plaintiff that any duty was being performed by the company's servants at the time they threw the hot water upon plaintiff; in fact, all the evidence for plaintiff goes to show, upon the part of such servants, a wilful and deliberate departure from the course of their employment, and the performance by them intentionally and wilfully of an act wholly without the scope of their authority; and, under this state of fact, the lower court erred in overruling the motion of defendant to direct the jury to find a verdict for it.

L.R.A.1917B.

"The only instruction given by the court for the plaintiff directed the jury to find for plaintiff if they believed from the evidence that plaintiff, 'while walking along on the right of way of defendant company in a peaceable and orderly manner, and not interfering with the company's servants in the operation of the train, was injured by the servants of defendant company wrongfully, unlawfully, and maliciously throwing hot water upon him.' If there had been evidence to authorize an instruction upon the theory that defendant company's servants were acting within the scope of their authority, and such instruction had been given, then the instruction that was given by the court would have been proper if changed so as to direct the jury to find for defendant, instead of plaintiff, if they believed as stated in this instruction." (As to liability of railroad company for injuries inflicted by its employees, on a trespasser after the latter had left the train, see note to Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Rue, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 200.

The decision in Johnson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1913) 157 Iowa, 738, L.R.A.1916F, 945, 141 N. W. 430, holds that a railroad company does not by its trusting signal torpedoes to a brakeman become liable for injury caused by his using one for a weight to aid in delivering a personal note, to a person living near the right of way, by throwing it from the train. In this case the act complained of was not within the real or apparent scope of the brakeman's employment in a legal sense, being, apparently, purely personal between the brakeman and the plaintiff. J. D. C.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

ROZE E. BENNETT, Appt.,

v.

J. R. THOMPSON.

(— Ark. —, 189 S. W. 363.)

Appeal — peremptory instruction — question open.

1. The question before the reviewing court where the trial court gave a peremptory instruction is whether or not the evidence in favor of the prevailing party,

Note. — For right of broker to recover commissions where owner has refused to make the sale for a price otherwise satisfactory, because of broker's misrepresentations as to offers obtained, see annotation following this case, post, 922.

viewed in its strongest light, is sufficient to sustain the verdict.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Broker — compensation — concealment of facts.

2. A broker employed to find a purchaser for real estate is entitled to no compensation if he conceals from his employer the true amount offered for the property, by reason of which the employer refuses to transfer the property.

For other cases, see Brokers, II. b, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(November 6, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Pulaski County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the amount of broker's profit on a sale by plaintiff of defendant's real estate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. W. House, J. W. House, Jr., and A. F. House, for appellant:

Whether one acts as a broker or agent, the duty to his principal is the same, and the compensation, when not expressed, is the same.

Haas v. Ruston, 14 Ind. App. 8, 56 Am. St. Rep. 288, 42 N. E. 298; Murray v. Doud, 167 Ill. 368, 59 Am. St. Rep. 297, 47 N. E. 717; Featherston v. Trone, 82 Ark. 381, 102 S. W. 196; Taylor v. Godbold, 76 Ark. 396, 88 S. W. 959; Little v. Phipps, 208 Mass. 331, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1046, 94 N. E. 260.

Another prerequisite for the recovery of commissions is that the agent must show that he has produced a purchaser who was ready, willing, and able to take the property upon the exact terms proposed by the seller.

Poston v. Hall, 97 Ark. 23, 132 S. W. 1001; Fairchild v. Cunningham, 84 Minn. 521, 88 N. W. 15; Cadigan v. Crabtree, 179 Mass. 480, 55 L.R.A. 77, 88 Am. St. Rep. 397, 61 N. E. 37; 4 R. C. L. Brokers, § 52; McGavock v. Woodlief, 20 How. 224, 15 L. ed. 884; Boysen v. Robertson, 70 Ark. 58, 68 S. W. 243; Snow v. Macfarlane, 51 Ill. App. 448; Kellogg v. Keeler, 27 Ill. App. 244; Gross, Real Estate Brokers, ¶ 216; Matheney v. Godin, 130 Ga. 713, 61 S. E. 703.

Messrs. Hutton & Harkey for appellee.

McCulloch, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action instituted by appellee against appellant to recover the amount of brokers's profit on a sale of real estate. Appellant owned a tract of land at Magazine, Arkansas, and authorized appellee to find a purchaser for her, which he did, and reported the sale to her; but appellant refused to consummate the deal on the ground that appellee had deceived her by withholding the true amount of the agreed price, and appellee sues to recover the difference between the amount of the price which appellant agreed to accept for the land and the amount he was to receive from the purchaser. The case was tried before a jury in the circuit court, and both sides asked a peremptory instruction. The court gave the appellee's requested instruction, so the question presented to us on this appeal is whether or not the testimony, viewing it in its strongest light in appellee's favor, is sufficient to sustain the verdict. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Mulkey, 100 Ark. 71, 139 S. W. 643, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1339. The testimony will therefore be stated in its strongest light favorable to appellee's right of recovery.

The two parties to the controversy met in Little Rock, where appellee resided, and appellant informed appellee that she owned land at Magazine, and asked him to find a purchaser for her. Nothing was said at that time about the price, nor about the payment of any commission. Appellant then returned to her home in Muskogee, Oklahoma, and later appellee found a prospective purchaser who agreed to take the land at the price of $750. He wrote to appellant, informing her that he had found a purchaser, and that he could sell the land so as to get her the net price of $500, but said nothing about the price he was to get from the purchaser. She replied by telegram, accepting the offered price, and appellee then wrote to her instructing her to make the deed to the purchaser, reciting a consideration of $750, and forward the deed to one of the banks in Little Rock, with instructions to pay him (appellee) $250 out of the consideration to be paid. Appellant refused to consummate the sale when she ascertained the true price for which the land was sold.

Appellee testified that he was not acting as agent for Miss Bennett, the appellant, and was not buying the property for himself, but was acting as a broker, and expected to earn as a profit the difference between the price Miss Bennett agreed to accept and the price to be paid by the purchaser. He testified that the customary commission of a real estate agent was 5 per cent on the amount of the sale, but that it was customary for a broker to earn a greater profit on a deal negotiated by him. Under this state of facts, we are of the opinion that appellee's conduct in withholding from appellant the information as to the amount of the purchase was a wrongful act which prevents him from recovering the amount claimed, or any amount. The case is ruled by several decisions of this court.

In Boysen v. Robertson, 70 Ark. 56, 68 S. W. 243, the facts were that Robertson, a real estate broker, agreed to seek a purchaser for Mrs. Jones, the owner of certain lands, at the price of $3 per acre net to her. Boysen's agent, Thweatt, was authorized to purchase the land at $4 an acre, and the two agents Robertson and Thweatt, got together and negotiated a sale and purchase between their principals for $4 an acre. One half of the difference between the net price which the owner had agreed to accept and which the prospective purchaser had agreed to pay was to be allowed to Robertson for his commission. The two principals subsequently disregarded this agreement, and negotiated a sale direct between themselves at the price of $4 per acre. Robertson sued Boysen for the commission he was to receive, and in denying the relief sought this court said: "The contract meant that the land must bring to Mrs. Jones $3 per acre over and above all expenses and deductions. . . . This was only a limitation upon his power to sell. It was still his duty to sell the land for the highest price obtainable, and to account to Mrs. Jones for the proceeds, less a compensation not greater than the excess of the purchase money over $3 per acre net, and at the same time not exceeding a reasonable compensation. The whole amount for which he sold the land was due to and recoverable by Mrs. Jones. If he had collected it, he might have reserved out of it what his principal was owing him on account of the sale. But the contract made by him was never completed."

In Taylor v. Godbold, 76 Ark. 395, 88 S. W. 959, the facts were similar, except that the subject-matter of the contract was personal property. The court delivering the opinion quoted the following statement of the law from Mechem on Agency, § 952: "Like other agents in whom trust and confidence are reposed, the broker owes to his principal the utmost good faith and loyalty to his interests. . . . It is his duty, therefore, to fully and freely disclose to his principal at all times the fact of any interest of his own or of another client which may be antagonistic to the interests of his principal, and he will not be permitted to take advantage of the situation to make gain for himself by forestalling or undermining his principal."

It was held that the broker was not entitled to recover any commission.

The same doctrine is announced in Featherston v. Trone, 82 Ark. 381, 102 S. W. 196.

It is contended by counsel for the appellee that the principle announced by this court does not control for the reason that he was acting not as an agent, but as a broker. This argument overlooks the fact L.R.A.1917B.

that a brokerage transaction is governed by the doctrine of agency. "A broker is a peculiar kind of an agent," says the Indiana court, "and brokerage is a peculiar kind of agency. It is the business of a broker to negotiate contracts between others in matters of trade and commerce. He usually deals with the contracting parties, and not with the things which may be the subject of the contract. He has neither interest in nor possession of the property which it is his business to buy or sell for others, and ordinarily he has no implied power to buy or sell in his own name. It is in these respects that a broker differs from a factor and from an ordinary agent." Haas v. Ruston, 14 Ind. App. 8, 56 Am. St. Rep. 288, 42 N. E. 298.

The rule is again stated as follows: "A broker acting strictly as middleman to effect a purchase and sale of property is the common agent of both buyer and seller; otherwise he is the agent of the party originally employing him." 19 Cyc. 191.

To the same effect, see Rapalje, Real Estate Brokers, § 2, and Gross, Real Estate Brokers, § 141.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 39 L. ed. 297, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 610, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207, quoted with approval a text-writer's definition of "broker" and "principal" as follows: "The engagement of a broker is like to that of a proxy, a factor, or other agent; but with this difference, that the broker, being employed by persons who having opposite interests to manage, he is, as it were, agent both for the one and the other to negotiate the commerce and affair in which he concerns himself. Thus, his engagement is twofold, and consists in being faithful to all the parties in the execution of what every one of them intrusts him with. And his power is not to treat, but to explain, the intentions of both parties, and to negotiate in such a manner as to put those who employ him in a condition to treat together personally."

The duty therefore rests upon the broker the same as any other agent to make disclosure to his principal of the terms of the negotiation, so that the principal may act advisedly in determining whether or not the proposal is satisfactory. A broker can undoubtedly make a contract whereby he will be entitled to the difference between the amount of the price the seller agrees to accept and the amount the purchaser agrees to pay, regardless of what the amount is. But such a contract must be plainly expressed in order to relieve the broker of the duty he owes to his principal to make full disclosure concerning the terms of the negotiation.

This rule is very aptly stated by the Georgia court as follows: "We do not mean to hold that, if the real estate brokers who are plaintiffs in this case had alleged an express contract that if they should procure a purchaser for the property listed with them, they might have as compensation for their services all that they might sell the property for, above a fixed sum, they would not be entitled to such excess as compensation for their services, in case they procured a purchaser. But where the owner agrees with brokers for them to sell property for a named amount 'net to him,' such language will not be held to import by implication a contract to allow the brokers, as a fee or profit, all of the purchase price in excess of the sum so named." Matheney v. Godin, 130 Ga. 713, 61 S. E. 703.

It follows therefore that appellee is not entitled to recover the profit which he claims to have earned by the sale. If appellant, after receiving knowledge of the terms of the sale, had accepted the price offered and consummated the sale, she would have been liable to appellee for a reasonable compensation. Boysen v. Robertson, supra. But appellant refused to consummate the sale after she ascertained the true conditions, and appellee did not ask for a consummation on any other terms. Appellant had a right to disregard the trade on account of appellee's unfaithfulness, and is therefore not liable to him for any amount. Featherston v. Trone, supra; Little v. Phipps, 208 Mass. 331, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1046, 94 N. E. 260.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is therefore reversed, and the cause is dismissed.

Annotation—Right of broker to recover commissions where owner has refused to make the sale for a price otherwise satisfactory, because of broker's misrepresentations as to offers obtained.

Generally, as to real estate broker's commissions as affected by default of principal in entering into or carrying out contract with purchaser, see note to Brackenridge v. Claridge, 43 L.R.A. 593. And as to right of broker to commissions where he procures purchaser at price stated by his principal, but on slightly different terms in regard to cash or time of payment, and the owner refuses to consummate the sale, see note to Jepsen v. Marohn, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 935. And, generally, as to fraud and secret dealings or interest of real estate brokers as affecting their commissions, see extensive annotation to Leathers v. Canfield, 45 L.R.A. 33. Many other concrete questions concerning the right of a broker to commissions are treated in notes referred to in the Indexes to L.R.A. Notes under the title, "Brokers."

The few authorities which have passed upon the question presented in the present annotation seem to be unanimous to the effect that a broker employed to sell property is entitled to no compensation from the principal if he conceals or makes misrepresentations with respect to the amounts of offers for the property obtained by him, by reason of which the principal refuses to transfer the property.

This was the rule applied in BENNETT v. THOMPSON, ante, 919, it being held that where a broker employed to sell certain lands without agreement as to commissions obtained a purchaser for $750, L.R.A.1917B.

and reported that he could sell so as to net the principal $500, but said nothing about the offer of $750 received by him, which offer of $500 was accepted, the broker could recover neither the $250 difference in price, nor the reasonable commission to which he would have been entitled had the sale been consummated, the principal having refused to convey after receiving knowledge of the true terms of sale.

And the rule above outlined finds direct support in Bolla v. Martin (1914) 187 Ill. App. 266, wherein it was held that where a broker authorized to sell property for $1,600, of which $75 was to be commission, sold same for $1,700, but reported to his principal that he had sold it for $1,600, and concealed the fact that the purchaser was his wife, but the principal, becoming suspicious, repudiated the sale, the broker could not recover a commission.

And in Braden v. Randles (1905) 128 Iowa, 653, 105 N. W. 195, where a real estate agent who was to have as commission all that certain property sold for over $2,000 found a purchaser who was willing to pay $2,100, but reported to the principal that the purchaser would not pay more than $2,000, and that if he closed the deal he should have some compensation, whereupon it was agreed that he would be paid $20 upon the closing of same, it was held that the agent's fraud in procuring the agreement for the added compensation violated the en-fire contract so as to prevent recovery of commissions for services rendered in procuring a purchaser, the principal having repudiated the agreement, and having refused to convey the land thereunder. In reaching this conclusion the court stated the rule as follows: "An agent owes his principal the utmost good faith, and if he fraudulently and falsely misrepresents the situation for the purpose of increasing his compensation and securing a more advantageous contract for himself, he cannot recover anything thereunder."

So, in Murphy v. Earle (1912) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 150 S. W. 486, where an agent employed to sell land at $40 per acre for a 10 per cent commission procured a purchaser at that price, but induced the principal to execute a contract in favor of a third person at $20 per acre, who was to convey to the real purchaser, by fraudulently concealing the offer of $40, and representing that only $20 per acre could be obtained, it was held that the agent could not maintain an action based on the owner's failure to perform the contract of sale, he having refused to carry out the contract after discovering the true facts.

And again in Cardozo v. Middle Atlantic Immigration Co. (1914) 116 Va. 342, 82 S. E. 80, it was held that commissions for having procured a purchaser for real estate could not be recovered where the broker had not dealt fairly with the principal, and because of this the sale was not completed. In this case the broker had a contract with defendant to sell a farm upon a 10 per cent commission, and procured a purchaser for $13,000, and entered into a contract with him on that basis. The broker notified defendant that he had a purchaser, and asked if he would take $8,500, and, upon his refusal, asked if he would take $10,500 net, which latter offer was accepted in ignorance of the contract of sale for $13,000, by reason of which the broker's commissions were increased from $1,300 to $2,500. In addition to the mentioned concealment, it also was not positively denied that the plaintiff had led defendant to believe that he was getting only $11,000 for the property. And in holding that such conduct constituted unfair dealing and precluded the broker from recovering commissions in an action based on the ground that the sale was not completed because of the fault of defendant, the following controlling principles were stated: "A broker or agent who undertakes to procure a purchaser of property placed with him for sale is required to act in good faith in presenting to his principal a purchaser. It is the duty of the agent to place his principal in full possession of the facts bearing upon his personal interest and relations to the subject and toward the prospective purchaser. It is not enough for the broker or agent to say that he thought his principal was advised as to all the facts, nor is it sufficient if he be able to point out circumstances from which an inference might be drawn that the principal knew or had means of knowledge. It may be true that the principal has suffered no injury by reason of his ignorance of the facts, but the law makes no such inquiry. In order to remove temptation from the path of agents, as far as can be done, it stamps, from motives of public policy, all such dealings with the seal of its condemnation. Loyalty to his trust is the most important duty which the agent owes to his principal. Reliance upon his integrity, fidelity, and ability is the main consideration in the selection of agents, and so careful is the law in guarding this fiduciary relation that it will not allow an agent to act for himself and his principal, nor to act for two principals on the opposite side in the same transaction."

And in Taylor v. Godbold (1905) 76 Ark. 395, 88 S. W. 959 (referred to in BENNETT v. THOMPSON, ante, 919), where an owner of cotton seed quoted same to a broker at $14 per ton, and the broker obtained a purchaser at $15, but did not inform his principal of the price offered, it was held that the broker, upon the refusal of the principal to consummate the sale at $14 per ton, could not recover a commission on the alleged sale, the court saying that "it is unquestionably good law, as well as good morals, that the unfaithful broker who seeks a profit from the transaction other than the commission for his brokerage could not recover of his principal for any commissions."

And the same principle was laid down in Humphrey-Gibson v. Robinson (1904) 134 N. C. 432, 46 S. E. 953, wherein the owner of $12,000 in notes employed brokers to invest same in real estate, who thereupon procured an offer of certain lands for $10,155, which were offered to the principal for $12,300, the actual price to be paid for the land not being disclosed. The principal failed to comply with the contract calling for $12,300, and it was held that the brokers could not recover damages for such failure, the court saying that it was their duty as agents "to communicate to their principal all the facts known to them and which were material to the transaction, and they will not be permitted to benefit either directly or indirectly by any dealing conducted in her name in which this was not done. The principal reposes trust and confidence in the agent, and the latter owes in return the duty to his principal of being faithful in all things, and he must at all times and in all circumstances put his principal's advantage above his own. This relation involves the duty of carefully guarding the interests of the principal and reporting to him all material matters which may come to the agent's knowledge. The principle is of universal application that an agent or trustee, undertaking a special business for another, cannot, on the subject of that trust, act for his benefit to the injury of the principal. . . . We think it is well settled that a broker cannot recover his commissions, and certainly not damages in the place of them, if he has failed in any respect to make a full disclosure of the material facts to his principal, nor if the latter is prejudiced thereby."

Another case of interest is Martin v. Bliss (1890) 57 Hun, 157, 10 N. Y. Supp. 886, affirmed without opinion in (1892) 132 N. Y. 551, 30 N. E. 865, wherein it was held that a broker employed to sell real estate for $50,000, who attempted to induce his principal to sell at a less sum, although such price had already been accepted by a proposed purchaser, could not recover any commission for his services, the principal having refused to complete the contract. G. J. C.

MISSISSIPPI SUPREME COURT.

MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY,
Impleaded, etc., Appt.,

v.

GREENWALD & CHAMPENOIS.

(104 Miss. 417, 61 So. 426.)

Commerce — interference by state — penalty for failure to settle claim.

1. A penalty imposed by a state upon a carrier for failure promptly to settle a claim for injury to property in its possession for transportation is not invalid as an interference with interstate commerce.

For other cases, see Commerce, II. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Courts — jurisdiction — amount involved — statutory penalty.

2. The amount of the statutory penalty for failure to settle a claim for injury to property in possession of a carrier for transportation, which is included in the complaint against the carrier for damages, should be considered in determining whether the suit involves a sum within the jurisdiction of the courts in which it is brought.

For other cases, see Courts, II. a, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Appeal — failure of jury to assess damages — assessment by court.

3. The entry of judgment for the amount demanded in the petition upon a verdict merely finding for plaintiff, without naming the amount of damages, is not reversible error if, from the evidence, it appears that a new trial would result in a verdict for that sum.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII. m, 8, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(March 31, 1913.)

APPEAL by defendant Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Lauderdale County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for injury to property while in defendant's possession for transportation, and to recover the amount of the statutory penalty for failure to promptly settle the claim. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Baskin & Wilbourn for appellant.

Messrs. Fewell & Cameron for appellee.

Cook, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellees obtained judgment for $215 against appellant for damages to a mule occurring in its transportation from Tupelo to Meridan. The suit was filed against the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company and the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Company, jointly, for actual damages to the mule, $190, and for $25 damages for the failure of the railroad company to settle the claim for damages within the time prescribed by chapter 196 of the Laws of 1908.

To this declaration a demurrer was interposed, upon the grounds: (a) The circuit court was without jurisdiction, because the suit was for less than $200; (b) that chapter 196 of the Laws of 1908 is in violation of the interstate commerce clause of the national Constitution. This demurrer was overruled.

Note.—As to constitutionality of statute imposing penalty or added liability for failure of railroad or carrier to pay claim, see annotation following this case, post, 926. L.R.A.1917B.

The verdict of the jury was as follows: "We, the jury, decide for plaintiff against the Mobile & Ohio R. R. Co." Upon this verdict the court entered a judgment against appellant for $215.

Appellant says that the judgment should be reversed for two reasons, viz.: Because the court erred in overruling its demurrer; and because the court erred in entering the judgment for $215 on the verdict of the jury, the jury having failed therein to assess the damages to be recovered by plaintiff.

We will consider the constitutional question first. Appellant cites two cases decided by this court to support its contention that chapter 196 of the Laws of 1908, prescribing a penalty of $25 to be recovered by shippers from railroads that fail to settle claims for damages to freight within the prescribed limits, is void as an attempt to regulate commerce between the states. The first case is Alexander v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 66 Miss. 162, 3 L.R.A. 71, 14 Am. St. Rep. 556, 5 So. 397, and the second is Marshall v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 79 Miss. 154, 89 Am. St. Rep. 586, 27 So. 614.

In Alexander v. Western U. Teleg. Co. it is decided that the statutory penalty cannot be recovered for a failure to deliver a telegram sent from Starkville, Mississippi, to Chattanooga, Tennessee. We think this decision correctly announces the law. It is undoubtedly true that the penal statutes of a state can have no extraterritorial effect. The state cannot penalize an omission of duty occurring wholly within another jurisdiction. In Marshall v. Western U. Teleg. Co. the question here involved is not decided at all, because the court said that the statute did not penalize delays in the transmission of telegrams.

It is certain that this court in neither of the cases cited has said anything tending to support appellant's contention. In Marshall v. Western U. Teleg. Co. supra, Judge Whitfield cites and comments upon Western U. Teleg. Co. v. James, 162 U. S. 650, 40 L. ed. 1105, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 934, which case is directly in opposition to appellant's view of the law.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Crovo, 220 U. S. 364, 55 L. ed. 498, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 399, decided April 3, 1911, puts this question entirely at rest. In that case Judge Lurton states the question decided in this way: "The only question for decision is whether a statute of the state of Virginia, which imposes a penalty for the failure to transmit a despatch received at an office of the company in the state for transmission to a person in another state, is a valid exercise of the power of the state; the delay occurring in the state." After reviewing other cases decided by that court, Judge Lurton announces the court's opinion upon the validity of a state statute penalizing a failure to transmit a message sent from one state to be delivered in another state, as follows: "The requirement of the Virginia statute as here applied is a valid exercise of the power of the state, in the absence of legislation by Congress. It is neither a regulation of, nor a hindrance to, interstate commerce, but is in aid of that commerce."

It will be observed that Judge Whitfield, when he said in Marshall v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 79 Miss. 161, 89 Am. St. Rep. 585, 27 So. 615: "We also think it fairly deducible from both cases that a state statute imposing a penalty for delay in the transmission of the message over the wires from one state to another state would be an interference with interstate commerce within the meaning of the Federal Constitution (§ 8 of article 1)," interpreted the decisions of the United States Supreme Court differently from that court's subsequent interpretation thereof in Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Crovo, supra.

It is idle to discuss the relative value of the decisions of this court and the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States upon questions involving the interpretation of the national Constitution, as, right or wrong, we are bound by the decisions of the latter tribunal. So we conclude that the court below did not err in overruling the demurrer challenging the validity of chapter 196 of the Laws of 1908.

Coming, now, to the first ground of demurrer, that the circuit court was without jurisdiction to try the case. The declaration demands judgment for actual damages and for the penalty of $25, making in all $215. It is contended that the amount which controls the jurisdiction of the court is the actual damages inflicted upon the mule, and that the penalty is a mere incident to the suit, like interest and costs. In the many cases touching the jurisdiction of the justice of the peace and circuit courts, in none do we find any aid in the solution of this question. The precise point seems never to have been raised; if so, the case has not been called to our attention, and we have found no such case. The penalty inflicted by the statute does not depend upon the railroad's contract to transport the freight. The railroad may be ever so derelict in its duties and grossly unmindful of its contractual obligations, and still the penalty does not follow. For the negligent loss of, or damage to, freight, the company is responsible; but this alone forms no basis for the recovery of the statutory penalty. The penalty arises from the failure and refusal to settle the claim for damages; and this must be disclosed and proven independently before the penalty may be recoverable. There must be a claim made, it is true; but the settlement of the claim does not necessarily defeat the right to recover the penalty.

While the recovery of the penalty depends upon the right to recover actual damages, yet it is not necessary that suit be brought for actual damages before a suit is maintainable for the penalty. The railroad company may have paid the claim after the time limit had expired, but this would not defeat the right to recover the penalty. We decide that the circuit court was the proper court in which to bring this suit, the amount of demand being in excess of $200.

The jury, by its verdict, merely found against appellant, but did not find the damages of the plaintiff. Upon this state of the record, the court rendered judgment for the full amount declared. This is assigned as error, and it is earnestly urged that for this error the judgment must be reversed, and the cause remanded, if for no other reason, because there was a conflict in the evidence upon the quantum of damages. We have given very careful consideration to the evidence disclosed by the record, and, properly understood and interpreted, we believe that there is no real conflict in the evidence. A casual reading of the testimony of the veterinary surgeon would disclose an apparent conflict between him and the other witnesses with reference to the value of the animal after the injury; but a more careful reading has convinced us that his opinion of value was mere vague conjecture, or estimation, and could have no weight with the jury. If the case should be reversed, the question of the amount of damages alone would be submitted to the jury, and, as we believe from the record that the finding would necessarily correspond with the amount for which judgment was given, we are of opinion that a reversal would be unwarranted.

Affirmed.

Writ of error dismissed by the Supreme Court of the United States, under agreement of the parties August 17, 1914, 235 U. S. 717, 59 L. ed. 438, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 197.

Annotation—Constitutionality of statute imposing penalty or added liability for failure of railroad or carrier to pay claim.

This note is supplemental to the two notes in 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 102 and 106, where the earlier cases are collected.

The question of validity of provision for attorney's fee is excluded, as it is treated in the notes to Builders' Supply Depot v. O'Connor, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 910, and Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Harris, L.R.A.1915E, 943.

Statutes affecting carrier as such.

Supplementing note in 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 106.

—as interference with interstate commerce.

It seems to be generally considered that state statutes of this character as regards interstate shipments have been superseded since the so-called "Carmack amendment of 1906," and that this effect is to be given to the decision in the Varnville Case (U. S.) infra, in 1915. Under this view the case of MOBILE & O. R. Co. v. GREENWALD, ante, 924, is no longer authority.

It was provided in such Carmack amendment: "That any common carrier, railroad, or transportation company receiving property for transportation from a point in one state to a point in another state shall issue a receipt or bill of lading therefor, and shall be liable to L.R.A.1917B.

the lawful holder thereof for any loss, damage, or injury to such property caused by it or by any common carrier, railroad, or transportation company to which such property may be delivered, or over whose line or lines such property may pass, and no contract, receipt, rule, or regulation shall exempt such common carrier, railroad, or transportation company from the liability hereby imposed; Provided, That nothing in this section shall deprive any holder of such receipt or bill of lading of any remedy or right of action which he has under existing law.

"That the common carrier, railroad, or transportation company issuing such receipt or bill of lading shall be entitled to recover from the common carrier, railroad, or transportation company on whose line the loss, damage, or injury shall have been sustained the amount of such loss, damage, or injury as it may be required to pay to the owners of such property, as may be evidenced by any receipt, judgment, or transcript thereof."

It was held in Charleston & W. C. R. Co. v. Varnville Furniture Co. (1915) 237 U. S. 597, 59 L. ed. 1137, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 715, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 333, reversing (1913) 98 S. C. 63, 79 S. E. 700, a case where it did not appear where the loss occurred, that Congress has so far taken over the subject of a carrier's liability for loss or damage to interstate shipments by the act of June 18, 1910 (36 Stat. at L. 539, chap. 309, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 8563), and the act of June 29, 1906, known as the "Carmack amendment" (34 Stat. at L. 584, chap. 3591, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 8563), amending respectively §§ 1 and 20 of the act of February 4, 1887 (24 Stat. at L. 386, chap. 104), as to invalidate the provisions of S. C. Civ. Code 1912, § 2573, in so far as they may subject a terminal carrier to the prescribed penalty of $50 for failure to pay promptly a claim for damages to an interstate shipment, no matter where the loss occurred, unless the carrier proves that the shipment never came into its possession, or succeeds, within the forty days allowed, in shifting the loss by giving notice as to when, where, and by which carrier the property was damaged, or by showing that it used due diligence, but was unable to discover where the damage occurred; nor is the statute saved by calling it an exercise of the police power, nor by the proviso in the act of June 29, 1906, saving the rights of holders of bills of lading under existing law. The court said, inter alia: "As was said in Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Harris (1914) 234 U. S. 412, 420, 58 L. ed. 1377, 1382, L.R.A. 1915E, 942, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 790, the result of many recent cases there cited, beginning with Adams Exp. Co. v. Croninger (1913) 226 U. S. 491, 57 L. ed. 314, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 257, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 148, and coming down through Boston & M. R. Co. v. Hooker (1914) 233 U. S. 97, 58 L. ed. 868, L.R.A.1915B, 450, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 526, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 593, is that 'the special regulations and policies of particular states upon the subject of the carrier's liability for loss or damage to interstate shipments, and the contracts of carriers with respect thereto, have been superseded.' It is true that in that case the inclusion of the attorney's fee, not exceeding $20, in the costs upon judgments for certain small claims, was upheld, although incidentally including some claims arising out of interstate commerce. But, apart from the effect being only incidental, the ground relied upon was that the statute did not 'in any wise enlarge . . . the responsibility of the carrier' for loss, or 'at all affect the ground of recovery, or the measure of recovery' (pp. 420, 422)." The court points out that the claims dealt with in Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Mazursky (1910) 216 U. S. 122, 54 L. ed. L.R.A.1917B.

411, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 378, cited in the earlier note in 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 107, arose before the date of the Carmack amendment.

Upon the authority of the foregoing Varnville Case, it has been held that state statutes imposing a penalty for failure to pay claims within a specified time do not relate to interstate shipments. Farmers Elevator Co. v. Great Northern R. Co. (1915) 131 Minn. 152, 154 N. W. 954; Blalock Hardware Co. v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. (1915) 170 N. C. 395, P.U.R.1916A, 1051, 86 S. E. 1025; J. S. Pinkussohn Cigar Co. v. Clyde S. S. Co. (1915) 101 S. C. 429, 85 S. E. 1060; Trakas v. Southern R. Co. (1915) 102 S. C. 211, 86 S. E. 492.

In the Minnesota case the claim was for part of the goods lost in transit, shipped from without the state to within the state, the defendant being the carrier throughout the journey; in the North Carolina case the claim was for overcharge on the entire journey, against the terminal carrier, whose carriage was entirely within the state, on a shipment from without the state. As to the South Carolina cases it is sufficient to refer to the view taken by the state court of the United States Supreme Court decision in the Varnville Case. In the Pinkussohn Case (1915) 101 S. C. 429, 85 S. E. 1060, the South Carolina court said: "Since the decision of this case on circuit, the decision of this court in Varnville Furniture Co. v. Charleston & W. C. R. Co. (1913) 98 S. C. 63, 79 S. E. 790, affirming the constitutionality of the statute under which the penalty of $50 was recovered in this case, has been reversed by the Federal Supreme Court, which holds that the statute is unconstitutional and void as applied to interstate commerce. (1915) 237 U. S. 597, 59 L. ed. 1137, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 715, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 333, 100 S. C. 229a. The penalty must, therefore, be remitted." And in the Trakas Case (1915) 102 S. C. 211, 86 S. E. 492, it was said: "We think the judgment of the circuit court must be affirmed, except as to so much of it as allows the penalty. The final arbiter of that question has, since the trial on circuit, outlawed our penal statute in those shipments which move from one state to another; and this is one of that sort."

These recent decisions in North Carolina and South Carolina dispose of the authority of the earlier cases of Thurston v. Southern R. Co. (1914) 165 N. C. 598, 81 S. E. 785; Macon County Supply Co. v. Talluloh Falls R. Co. (1914) 166 N. C. 82, 82 S. E. 13; Du Pre v. Colum- bia, N. & L. R. Co. (1912) 98 S. C. 468, 79 S. E. 310; Stukes v. Southern Exp. Co. (1913) 96 S. E. 383, 80 S. E. 612.

In Morphis v. Southern Exp. Co. (1914) 167 N. C. 139, 83 S. E. 1, decided before the Varnville Case, it was held that a state statute imposing a penalty on common carriers for failure to pay claims for damages no longer applied to interstate shipments, since "the Interstate Commerce Commission, acting under the authority conferred by Congress, adopted a rule on 24 July, 1913, to be effective 1 February, 1914, applicable to common carriers, providing that 'in the event of a claim being made in writing, the company shall immediately acknowledge its receipt, and shall, within six months of the date thereof, notify the claimant in writing of the disposition made thereof. Claims for personal loss or damage shall be given equally prompt disposition.'"

Prior to the Varnville Case it had been held in South Carolina that an action by the shipper of goods from South Carolina to North Dakota against the initial carrier, to recover the penalty of $50 provided by the state statute of 1910 (26 Stat. at L. 717), for failure to pay the loss or damage or trace the property and inform the person interested when, where, and by which carrier the said property was lost, damaged, or destroyed, within forty days, could not be sustained, as the "Carmack amendment" of 1906 controlled the matter. Meetze v. Southern Exp. Co. (1912) 91 S. C. 379, 74 S. E. 823.

(In this connection reference may be made to Wichman v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. (1915) 100 S. C. 138, 84 S. E. 420, where, after a carriage from Illinois to Charleston, South Carolina, was completed, the defendant tortiously took the property from the carrier and forwarded it to Waterboro, South Carolina, and refused to deliver it except in payment of the additional cost of transportation from Charleston to Waterboro; and it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the overcharge and penalty for failure to pay the claim within forty days.)

—other constitutional questions.

As pointed out in the note in 42 L.R.A. (N.S.) 106, statutes imposing a penalty for delay in payment ought to be limited to cases where the recovery equals or exceeds the amount of the claim which the carrier failed to pay. With this limitation, such statutes imposing moderate penalties have been generally approved. L.R.A.1917B.

Thus, a statute imposing upon a common carrier a penalty of $25 for the failure to settle and adjust within sixty days a claim against it, and imposing a like penalty upon a person presenting a fraudulent claim, no penalty to be recovered unless the claimant recovers the full amount claimed by him, is not against due process of law; nor does it deny to the carrier the equal protection of the law; nor is it unconstitutional as class legislation. Riskin v. Great Northern R. Co. (1914) 126 Minn. 138, 147 N. W. 960, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 823.

So, a statute is not against due process of law which provides for a penalty of $50 for failure of a common carrier to adjust and pay within a time named every claim for loss or damage to property or overcharge for freight, "provided, that unless such claimant shall in such action recover the full amount claimed, no penalty shall be recovered, but the recovery shall be limited to the actual loss or damage or overcharge, with interest thereon from the date of filing said claim;" nor does such a statute infringe the constitutional provision that "no person shall be deprived of the right to prosecute or defend his own cause in any of the courts of this state in person, by attorney or both." Southern R. Co. v. Lowe (1913) 139 Ga. 362, 77 S. E. 44; but the judgment for the plaintiff was reversed on another ground.

A statute requiring a common carrier to furnish cars, etc., and providing that on failure to pay damages within thirty days after notice, double damages and attorney's fee may be recovered, is not unconstitutional in that the title of the act did not permit the provision giving the right to recover double damages when such right is not placed "within the control of the board of railroad commissioners,"—the title being: "An Act to Regulate Common Carriers and to Define the Powers and Duties of the Board of Railroad Commissioners of the State of South Dakota in Relation Thereto, and Imposing Penalties for the Violation of the Provisions of This Act." Dunlap v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1913) 32 S. D. 581, 144 N. W. 226.

It has been held in North Carolina that it was not contrary to due process of law to enable a plaintiff to recover the penalty for failure to pay a claim for a charge in excess of its printed tariff, even if his demand or notice was for more than he recovered, although the statute provided that the shipper must recover the amount claimed in his notice, to entitle him to the penalty. Macon County Supply Co. v. Tallulah Falls R. Co. (1914) 166 N. C. 82, 82 S. E. 13; Tilley v. Southern R. Co. (1916) — N. C. —, 90 S. E. 309.

Compare Stupeck v. Union P. R. Co. (1912) 200 Fed. 192, in the second division of this note.

Statutes affecting railroads in capacity other than that of carrier.

Supplementing note in 42 L.R.A. (N.S.) 102.

As to the constitutionality of statutes imposing penalties upon railroad companies for failure to fence track or build cattle guards, see the note in 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 863.

And as to the constitutionality of statutes making railroad companies absolutely liable for damages by fire or to stock, irrespective of negligence, see the note in 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1016.

As shown in the earlier note, statutes of this character ought to be limited to cases where the recovery equals or exceeds the amount of the claim which the carrier failed to pay.

In a case where the owner's demand and declaration were for more than his recovery, it was held that a statute is unconstitutional, as depriving a railroad company of its property without due process of law, which provides that the company, in case of a loss by fire set by its locomotive, shall be liable for double the amount of damage actually sustained unless it pays the full amount within sixty days from notice, but that if, within sixty days, it shall "offer in writing to pay a fixed sum, being the full amount of the damages sustained, and the owner shall refuse to accept the same, then in any action thereafter brought for such damages, when such owner recovers a less sum as damages than the amount so offered, then such owner shall recover only his damages, and the railway company shall recover its costs." Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Polt (1914) 232 U. S. 165, 58 L. ed. 554, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 301, reversing (1910) 26 S. D. 378, 128 N. W. 472, where the court said: "No doubt the states have a large latitude in the policy that they will pursue and enforce, but the rudiments of fair play required by the 14th Amendment are wanting when a defendant is required to guess rightly what a jury will find, or pay double if that body sees fit to add one cent to the amount that was tendered, although the tender was obviously futile because of an excessive demand. The case is covered by St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Wynne (1912) 224 U. S. 354, 56 L. ed. 799, 42 L.R.A. (N.S.) 102, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 493. It is not like those in which a moderate penalty is imposed for failure to satisfy a demand found to be just. Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Jackson Vinegar Co. (1912) 226 U. S. 217, 57 L. ed. 193, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 40."

Followed in Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Kennedy (1914) 232 U. S. 626, 58 L. ed. 762, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 463, reversing (1911) 28 S. D. 94, 132 N. W. 802.

In Stupeck v. Union P. R. Co. (Fed.) supra, where it does not appear what the claim was for, it was said: "The demand made upon the defendant was greatly in excess of the amount which the judgment of the court declared to be its legal liability. The effect of the statute, if given the construction contended for by plaintiff, is thus to penalize the defense of the company against what the result shows to have been an excessive claim, and is therefore repugnant to the 14th Amendment of the Constitution. The case is thus controlled by St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Wynne (U. S.) supra."

It was held in Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Robinson (1914) 68 Fla. 407, 67 So. 139, that the statute authorizing a recovery of double damages and attorney fees for failure of a railroad company to pay for live stock killed by a train of the railroad company, within sixty days after presentation of the claim for such stock killed, is not invalid in its application, where a verdict is rendered for the amount agreed to have been demanded and to be the value of the live stock killed.

Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Anderson (1912) 104 Ark. 500, 149 S. W. 58, cited in note in 42 L.R.A. (N.S.) 103, was affirmed in the United States Supreme Court in (1914) 233 U. S. 325, 58 L. ed. 983, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 599, and the statute which was held unconstitutional in St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Wynne (U. S.) supra, as applied to a case where the claimant sued for less than the amount demanded before suit, was sustained as to a case of stock killed, where the jury awarded the amount claimed before suit; the statute providing for double damages and an attorney's fee for stock killed or injured by railroad trains. The decision passed on the due process clause and also denied the contention that the statute deprived the railroad company "of the equal protection of the laws, in that it singles out railroads and subjects them to the payment of double damages and attorneys' fees when litigants in general are not subject to the same burdens."

B. B. B.

NEW JERSEY COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS.

PUBLIC SERVICE GAS COMPANY, Appt.,
v.

BOARD OF PUBLIC UTILITY COMMISSION et al.

(— N. J. —, P.U.R.1915E, 251, 94 Atl. 634.)

Certiorari — to review rates fixed by Public Commission.

1. Certiorari lies to review an order of a Public Utility Commission fixing rates for the service rendered by a public service corporation, either on behalf of the public, because the rate fixed is too high, or on behalf of the utility company, because it is too low.

For other cases, see Certiorari, I. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Public service corporation — rates — going value.

2. The value of the property of a gas company organized to serve the public, upon which rates are to be based, should include "going value," which includes the permission which it has to use its property for the purposes of its incorporation and to occupy public streets with its mains, and also the burdens which it has assumed and performed in the public interest, as contemplated by the legislature.

For other cases, see Gas, III. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — earning capacity — right to consider.

3. In fixing the value of the franchises of a public service corporation for the purpose of establishing rates, nothing should be included because of earning capacity, although such element is taken into consideration for purposes of taxation, and affects the value of the stock, since the state's omission to enforce reasonable rates in the past, which may have resulted in high earning power, does not affect the duty to charge only reasonable rates in the future, and the right to exact reasonable rates cannot be capitalized so as to entitle the corporation to earnings on the increased value thereby

Note.—The treatment to be given to "going concern" value or "going" value in the valuation of the property of public service corporations is discussed in an exhaustive note to Omaha v. Omaha Water Co. 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1084. See also the following recent cases in this series: People ex rel. Kings County Lighting Co. v. Wilcox, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1; Oshkosh Waterworks Co. v. Railroad Commission, L.R.A.1916F, 592; Murray v. Public Utilities Commission, L.R.A.1916F, 756. L.R.A.1917B.

added, since such addition would at once make the rate unreasonable.

For other cases, see Gas, III. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Gummere, Ch. J., and Parker, Bergen, and Vredenburg, JJ., dissent.)

(June 14, 1915.)

A PPEAL by the Gas Company from a judgment of the Supreme Court affirming an order of the Public Utility Commission, fixing the rate to be charged the public by it for gas. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Frank Bergen, Robert H. McCarter, and Richard V. Lindabury, for appellant:

Before the Utility Commission is authorized to prescribe a rate for gas furnished by a company it must find that the existing rate is "unjust, unreasonable, insufficient, or unjustly discriminatory or preferential."

Marshall Oil Co. v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 14 Inters. Com. Rep. 210.

The Commission can only proceed in the manner provided by the statute, and must prescribe "a just and reasonable rate;" not a rate that may just escape condemnation as confiscatory. A hearing under the statute means a full and fair hearing that must take into consideration all of the property of the public utility, and all elements of its value.

Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Tompkins, 176 U. S. 167, 44 L. ed. 417, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 336; People ex rel. Bridge Operating Co. v. Public Service Commission, 153 App. Div. 129, 138 N. Y. Supp. 434; Washington ex rel. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. Fairchild, 224 U. S. 510, 56 L. ed. 863, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 535; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 42 L. ed. 819, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418; Franklin County v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. 12 Lea, 521; Pittsburgh C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus, 154 U. S. 421-429, 38 L. ed. 1031-1037, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1114; Columbus Southern R. Co. v. Wright, 151 U. S. 470-479, 38 L. ed. 238-242, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 396.

The inquiry whether an existing rate for public service is reasonable or not is a judicial proceeding.

Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 154 U. S. 362, 397, 38 L. ed. 1014, 1023, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 560, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1047.

Special franchises cannot be disregarded in estimating the value of property for rate making.

Hoboken Land & Improv. Co. v. Hoboken, 36 N. J. L. 540; State, Richards, Prosecutors, v. Dover, 61 N. J. L. 400, 39 Atl. 705; People ex rel. Metropolitan Street R. Co. v. State Tax Comrs. 174 N. Y. 417, 63 L.R.A. 884, 105 Am. St. Rep. 674, 67 N. E. 77; New York Electric Lines Co. v. Empire City Subway Co. 235 U. S. 179, 59 L. ed. 184, L.R.A.—, —, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 72, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 906; 3 Kent, Com. pp. 377, 378; West River Bridge Co. v. Dix, 6 How. 507, 12 L. ed. 535; Parker v. Elmira, C. & N. R. Co. 165 N. Y. 274, 59 N. E. 81; Railroad Commission Cases, 116 U. S. 307, 331, 29 L. ed. 636, 644, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 334, 388, 1191; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 134 U. S. 418, 33 L. ed. 970, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 209, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 462, 702; Willcox v. Consolidated Gas Co. 212 U. S. 19, 53 L. ed. 382, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1134, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 192, 15 Ann. Cas. 1034.

Authority to alter, amend, or repeal a charter does not reserve the right to destroy or impair the value of property acquired while the corporation exists.

Detroit v. Detroit Citizens' Street R. Co. 184 U. S. 368, 46 L. ed. 592, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 410; Lord v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. 194 N. Y. 212, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 420, 87 N. E. 443; New York v. Twenty-Third Street R. Co. 113 N. Y. 311, 21 N. E. 60; People v. O'Brien, 111 N. Y. 1, 2 L.R.A. 255, 7 Am. St. Rep. 684, 18 N. E. 692; Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 700, 25 L. ed. 496; State ex rel. Northern P. R. Co. v. Railroad Commission, 140 Wis. 145, 121 N. W. 919; Com. v. Essex Co. 13 Gray, 239; Williamson v. New Jersey Southern R. Co. 29 N. J. Eq. 311; Belvidere Water Co. v. Belvidere, 82 N. J. L. 601, 83 Atl. 241; West Jersey R. Co. v. Cape May & S. L. R. Co. 34 N. J. Eq. 164; National Docks R. Co. v. Central R. Co. 32 N. J. Eq. 755; Stout v. Zulick, 48 N. J. L. 599, 7 Atl. 362.

Messrs. Edward F. Merrey, Albert O. Miller, and George L. Record, for appellees:

Franchise value cannot be allowed as basis of rate making.

Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 545, 546, 42 L. ed. 848, 849, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418; Stanislaus County v. San Joaquin & K. River Canal & Irrig. Co. 192 U. S. 201, 213, 214, 48 L. ed. 406, 413, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 241; Pioneer Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Westenhaver, 29 Okla. 429, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1209, 118 Pac. 354; Spring Valley Waterworks v. San Francisco, 192 Fed. 137; Re Advances in Rates—Western Case, 20 Inters. L.R.A.1917B.

Com. Rep. 307; Cedar Rapids Gaslight Co. v. Cedar Rapids, 144 Iowa, 426, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1025, 138 Am. St. Rep. 299, 120 N. W. 966, affirmed in 223 U. S. 655, 669, 56 L. ed. 594, 604, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 389; Contra Costa Water Co. v. Oakland, 159 Cal. 323, 113 Pac. 668; Mayhew v. Kings County Lighting Co. 2 P. S. C. R. (1st Dist. N. Y.) 659; Consolidated Gas Co. v. New York, 157 Fed. 849; Willcox v. Consolidated Gas Co. 212 U. S. 19, 44, 53 L. ed. 382, 396, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1134, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 192, 15 Ann. Cas. 1034; Lincoln Gas & Electric Light Co. v. Lincoln, 182 Fed. 926; Appleton v. Appleton Water Works Co. 5 Wis. R. C. R. 215; Savannah & Suburban R. Improv. Assn. v. Savannah & Electric Co. (Ga. R. Com.) decided Jan. 5, 1912.

Nor can going values be considered.

Cedar Rapids Gaslight Co. v. Cedar Rapids, 144 Iowa, 426, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1025, 138 Am. St. Rep. 299, 120 N. W. 966; Mayhew v. Kings County Lighting Co. 2 P. S. C. R. (1st Dist. N. Y.) 659; Contra Costa Water Co. v. Oakland, 159 Cal. 323, 113 Pac. 668; Re Third Ave. R. Co. 2 P. S. C. R. (1st Dist. N. Y.) 94; Appleton v. Appleton Waterworks Co. 5 Wis. R. C. R. 215; Re Queens Borough Gas & E. Co. 2 P. S. C. R. (1st Dist. N. Y.) 544; Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Louisville, 187 Fed. 637; Brunswick & T. Water Dist. v. Maine Water Co. 99 Me. 371, 59 Atl. 537; Knoxville v. Knoxville Water Co. 212 U. S. 1, 9, 53 L. ed. 371, 378, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 148.

No allowance should be made for goodwill value.

Bristol v. Bristol & W. Waterworks, 23 R. I. 274, 49 Atl. 974; Consolidated Gas Co. v. New York, 157 Fed. 849; Spring Valley Waterworks v. San Francisco, 192 Fed. 137; Kennebec Water Dist. v. Waterville, 97 Me. 185, 60 L.R.A. 856, 54 Atl. 6.

White, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case and the two city appeals (Nos. 3 and 4 of this term) present appeals by two municipalities upon one side and by a public utility company on the other from the judgment of the supreme court with respect to an order by the Public Utilities Commission fixing the rate to be charged the public for gas by the utility company in a district which includes the two municipalities.

I am unable to agree with the supreme court that certiorari is not the municipalities' remedy in their cases. I know of no other remedy, and, of course, it cannot be that they have none. The Commission has fixed a rate of 90 cents, and the municipalities are dissatisfied with the order fixing that rate. They think the rate fixed is too high, just as the utility company thinks the rate too low. Neither can bring mandamus, because the Utilities Commission is vested by law with a discretion in fixing the rate. It would be like asking the court to mandamus or order a jury to agree upon a certain smaller named sum as its verdict in a case where a question of fact involving the amount of the verdict was to be decided. The verdict rendered might be too high or too low to accord with the legal principles governing the case; but, while a question of fact remains, a mandamus or a court direction is out of the question. The remedy is to set the verdict aside. So here the remedy is to set the Commission's order aside because erroneous, and the proper procedure to accomplish this is by certiorari, irrespective of whether the claim is that the rate fixed is too high or too low. I think, therefore, that the municipalities' cases cannot be dismissed upon the ground stated by the supreme court, and that, that court having in fact passed upon the facts involved, we should, as it seems to me, now consider these cases also upon the merits.

Two principal questions are involved in the cases before us: One, was it improper to allow an element of "going value" in coming to a valuation of the commercial value of the utility company to be protected in a rate-making order? and the other, was it improper to exclude the element of the commercial value of the franchise (not an exclusive one) in reaching such valuation? The municipalities maintain the affirmative of the first proposition, and the gas company the affirmative of the second.

Taking up the first inquiry: It is quite evident from the testimony and from the findings of the supreme court that, with the exception of the commercial value of the franchise, the term "going value" in these cases embraced what the Commission thought was the fair present value of all of the elements of the intangible property of the gas company, including the necessary spark of life represented by adequate permission to use its property for the purposes of its incorporation and in the public streets where it was locally authorized to go. To this extent I think the property of the gas company is entitled to protection in rate-making orders, because a failure of such protection permits confiscation. I agree, therefore, with the view of the Commission upon this point. To value the present mere physical property of the company, in absolute disregard of its previously discharged burdens assumed and performed in the public interest and clearly L.R.A.1917B.

contemplated by the legislation by which it was invited to enter upon the public service, is, in my judgment, confiscatory. Likewise, to value it without considering it as endowed with its life-giving permission to continue its public functions would be confiscation.

I therefore favor an affirmance, upon the merits, of the order of the Commission in the cases wherein the cities of Paterson and Passaic complained that "going concern value" had been used as an element of value in establishing the rate.

Coming now to the gas company's appeal, wherein the complaint is that an additional value of the franchise (apart from its life-giving function to the company's other property), and dependent upon earnings present and prospective of the company, was not included, I incline to the opinion that the Commission took the proper view of this point also.

I take it that this claim must resolve itself into dependence upon one or both of two propositions, viz.: (1) That the gas company has a property right to continue to charge unreasonably high rates in the future because of the present market value of its securities as a result of its having been suffered to do so, in violation of its charter obligations, in the past; or (2) that its charter right to charge reasonable rates is, of itself, a valuable property right which must be permitted, under the guise of its own protection, to enlarge itself into a right to charge unreasonable rates.

Taking up the first of these propositions: It is not questioned that the universally acknowledged obligation of the gas company to serve the public at reasonable rates reserves to the public (the state) the right to regulate the rates to be charged so that they shall conform to this obligation. It follows as a necessary corollary that the franchise of the gas company to charge rates is at all times subject to this right of the state to so regulate them. That the granted franchise to charge rates is a property right protected by law, which cannot be destroyed or impaired, except by due process of law and upon compensation, and that it, as an element of property value (dependent in amount upon the rate permitted and likely to be permitted to continue), is subject to taxation, seems to me to be quite apparent; but that this fact should not be held to work a forfeiture of one of the conditions of the grant, viz., that the state should have the right at all times to require that the rates charged shall be reasonable, seems to me to be equally clear. A man might build a hotel, 20 stories high, at the seashore, and so arranged that nearly half of its guest rooms have an unobstructed ocean exposure and view to the southwest over his neighbor's land, and the probabilities may seem to indicate that, by reason of lack of demand for additional hotel accommodations, or inability, or lack of inclination, of the neighbor to build, this exposure and view would continue uninterrupted for a long time, and by reason of this advantageous exposure the hotel might be very profitable, so that it had a fair market value of $2,000,000. No one would doubt that it could not be condemned and taken by the state or the municipality for any public purpose without the owner being paid this market value, nor could he doubt that it was subject to be taxed at this value; but, on the other hand, no one would contend that the owner had thereby acquired a right to prevent his neighbor from building a like hotel, 20 stories high, on his own land, shutting off the ocean exposure and view of the first one, although the effect of his so doing would be to decrease the market value and the tax value of the first one by $1,000,000. If in fact the first hotel had been sold in the interim for $2,000,000, this circumstance would not in any respect alter the ultimate result.

So in the case of a gas franchise, subject, as here, to reasonable rate regulation by the state; it is quite evident that if the state, for what reason soever (and many may be thought of), omits for a great number of years to enforce its rights, and thus allows the company to charge unreasonably high rates, and there seems every likelihood that this permissive omission would continue, the property value of the franchise in the open market, as reflected by the market value of the company's stock, would be much higher than it would be if the state had at all times and consistently enforced its rights, and there was every prospect that it would continue to do so. Assuming, for the purpose of illustration, that an unreasonably high rate has been charged by this company in the past, upon what theory can it be contended that, because of this permissive omission on the part of the state in favor of the company, during all these years, the state has now forfeited the rights of the public to enforce a condition which it was always the duty of the company to perform, whether the state compelled it to do so or not? I think there is none. I suppose it may fairly be assumed that, with all the other conditions exactly as they were in this case at the time of the order, if the rate charged by this company in the district in question before the order had been $1.40 instead of $1.10, the claim of the company to be allowed for value of franchise would have been at least double in amount what it now is, and that the higher property value, as indicated by market value of securities and by valuation of franchise for taxation, would have more than substantiated such enlarged claim. Clearly no part of such increase of claim could have any proper foundation for consideration in arriving at a just and reasonable rate, although it would have all the property right backing now urged for the present claim.

I think we may properly conclude, therefore, that the charging of unreasonably high rates in the past, if they have been so charged, can furnish no ground for the continuation of these rates in the future, and this although a shrinkage of commercial and taxing value of the franchise will be the result of the state's enforcement of its contract right to require the rates to be reasonable in the future.

Taking up the second proposition, that the company's charter right to charge reasonable rates is in itself a valuable property right entitled to consideration in rate making, I suppose it must be conceded that the franchise to charge as a "reasonable rate," sufficient to yield a net profit of 8 per cent on the value of the company's property, as allowed and established respectively by the findings of the Utilities Commission in this case, is a very valuable property right. Certainly I think it is. That this valuable privilege is the company's is beyond question. That it is property is undoubted. That the law protects it against confiscation and subjects it to taxation follows as a matter of course. But that this valuable property right to charge "reasonable rates" should, by virtue of its own existence, have the effect of converting itself into a still more valuable property right to charge "unreasonable rates," is, of course, preposterous. Presumably the incorporators went into this public utility business because they expected that their charter privilege to charge "reasonable rates" for the gas they were to manufacture, distribute, and sell would be a valuable one; but that fact, and the fact that it has become so, cannot have the effect of altering the terms of the contract made with the state. The mere statement of this proposition is sufficiently convincing, but, if anything more were needed, a glance at the absurd practical result of the contrary view would be illuminating. If the franchise to charge 90 cents in order to pay 8 per cent on the value of the company's property, not including the franchise, is worth $1,000,000, and must be included and have 8 per cent paid on it also, the rate would have to be $1 instead of 90 cents; but, if the company has the property right to charge $1, the franchise is worth $2,000,000 instead of $1,000,000, and so the rate must be $1.10 in order to pay 8 per cent. On this additional million, and so on indefinitely.

That the company's contract with the state to charge "reasonable rates" cannot be thus evaded is, of course, quite obvious. The plain fact is that the commercial value of the company's property right in its franchise can have no effect in fixing the rate it can charge, because by the terms of its contract with the state the stream of its franchise value arises from the spring of its right to charge "reasonable rates," and in the very nature of things no stream can rise higher than its source.

For the reasons above stated, I concur in the affirmance of the judgment of the Supreme Court in the gas company's appeal.

Gummere, Ch. J., and Parker, Bergen, and Vredenburg, JJ., dissent.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

W. B. MURPHY, Appt.,

v.

CONTINENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY.

(— Iowa, —, 157 N. W. 855.)

Insurance — statement by agent — effect.

1. An insurance company is not bound by a statement of a mere soliciting agent as to what the policy will cover when issued, so as to require settlement according to such statement in case of loss, if the policy does not in fact correspond with the statement.

For other cases, see Insurance, I. d., in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — haystacks.

2. Insurance on hay in stacks does not cover hay in a mow in a barn.

For other cases, see Insurance, III. d, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — farm utensils — windmill and scales.

3. A windmill and farm scales are within insurance on farm utensils, although not in use, and stored in the farm buildings.

For other cases, see Insurance, III. d, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(May 10, 1916.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Iowa County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a fire insurance policy. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. W. E. Wallace for appellant.

Messrs. Stapleton & Stapleton, for appellee:

Talks and agreements in reference to matters in future performance are merged in and presumed to be expressed in the policy, which, as in cases of other contracts, becomes effective as the consummation of their issues and contentions by its delivery on the part of the company and its acceptance by the assured.

Note. — As to property covered by policy of insurance on "farming utensils," see annotation following this case, post, 937. L.R.A.1917B.

Cornelius v. Farmers Ins. Co. 113 Iowa, 185, 84 N. W. 1037; Moore v. State Ins. Co. 72 Iowa, 416, 34 N. W. 183; Baldwin v. State Ins. Co. 60 Iowa, 497, 15 N. W. 300; Stephens v. Capital Ins. Co. 87 Iowa, 283, 54 N. W. 139; Ostrander, Ins. p. 186.

Nor can anything the soliciting agent may impart concerning the future contingency operate as an estoppel against the insurer or the company.

Cornelius v. Farmers Ins. Co. 113 Iowa, 186, 84 N. W. 1037; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Davenport, 37 Mich. 609; Fuller v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 61 Iowa, 350, 16 N. W. 273.

If personal property is described as kept or contained in a certain building, its loss will not be covered if destroyed elsewhere. And the removal of the property to another building or location takes it out of the description of the policy.

19 Cyc. 664, 665; Lakings v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 94 Iowa, 476, 28 L.R.A. 70, 62 N. W. 783; Harris v. Royal Canadian Ins. Co. 53 Iowa, 236, 5 N. W. 124; British-American Assur. Co. v. Miller, 91 Tex. 414, 39 L.R.A. 545, 66 Am. St. Rep. 901, 44 S. W. 60; Green v. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. 91 Iowa, 615, 60 N. W. 189; L'Anse v. Fire Asso. of Philadelphia, 119 Mich. 427, 43 L.R.A. 838, 75 Am. St. Rep. 410, 78 N. W. 465; Rosenthal v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 158 Wis. 550, L.R.A.1915B, 361, 149 N. W. 155.

Insurance on grain in stacks cannot be construed to cover unthreshed grain in a mow in a barn.

Benton v. Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. 102 Mich. 281, 26 L.R.A. 237, 60 N. W. 691.

A windmill is a fixture, and is not a farm implement, and when attached to or used in connection with a farm for the purpose of pumping water, etc., constitutes an appurtenance to the real estate.

Phelps & B. Windmill Co. v. Baker, 49 Kan. 434, 30 Pac. 472; Badger Lumber Co. v. Marion Water Supply E. L. & P. Co. 48 Kan. 182, 15 L.R.A. 652, 30 Am. St. Rep. 301, 29 Pac. 476; Phelps & B. Windmill Co. v. Shay, 32 Neb. 19, 48 N. W. 896.

A scales, such as described in the testimony, when used upon a farm, is not a utensil or farm tool, but is a fixture.

Thomson v. Smith, 111 Iowa, 718, 50 L.R.A. 780, 82 Am. St. Rep. 541, 83 N. W. 789; 19 Cyc. 1042-1047; State Security Bank v. Hoskins, 130 Iowa, 339, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 376, 106 N. W. 764; Ottumwa Woolen Mill Co. v. Hawley, 44 Iowa, 57, 24 Am. Rep. 719; Bacon v. Thompson, 60 Iowa, 284, 14 N. W. 312; Stillman v. Flenniken, 58 Iowa, 450, 43 Am. Rep. 120, 10 N. W. 842; McGorrick v. Dwyer, 78 Iowa, 279, 5 L.R.A. 594, 16 Am. St. Rep. 440, 43 N. W. 215.

Ladd, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant issued its policy of insurance to plaintiff on February 19, 1912, agreeing to indemnify him against "loss or damages by fire $700 on farming utensils, cream separator, mowers, harvesters, reapers, corn binders, farm and garden tools (other than threshers, clover hullers, and engines) on the premises of the assured, . . . $500 on hay in stacks on cultivated premises on farm herein described . . . situated (except as otherwise above provided) and confined to premises described in application, occupied by assured, . . . 440 acres, sections 28, 29, 33, township 81, range 11, county of Iowa, state of Iowa."

The plaintiff had purchased a new windmill several years previous and stored it in his corner crib until he could put it up. Stock scales had been taken down and stored in an old granary. Both buildings, with their contents, were destroyed August 20, 1913. A few days previous hay estimated at 30 tons in a barn situated on what is designated the Hall farm was burned. This Hall farm was operated under oral lease by the assured when the policy issued, and until bought by him June 7, 1913.

I. The policy, among other things, insured the barn and "$100 on hay therein." This was the fifth item, and the twelfth item read, "$500 on hay in stacks on cultivated premises on farm herein described." In the application, instead of "on cultivated premises," as in the policy, the words "or cultivated premises" followed "farm," and plaintiff testified that after preparing the application it was found the insurance was not rightly distributed on hay, and that the agent added the words as stated, and explained that by changing the application the policy would cover all hay the insured raised, and it was alleged in an amendment to the petition that they agreed: "That said policy was to cover and insure all hay that plaintiff might raise or produce on said sections, and that said written insertion was made with mutual intention and understanding to cover their agreement as aforesaid to cover all such hay."

But the insured must be assumed to have L.R.A.1917B.

known that the application was not the contract, and that the policy for which he was applying would state the terms of their agreement. The insured does not contend that any fact was misrepresented or that any fraud was practised on him by the agent. His contention is that, the agent having advised what the policy would insure, the company is estopped from asserting otherwise. To construe or interpret the policy issued or to be issued is no part of the agent's duty. In Dryer v. Security F. Ins. Co. 94 Iowa, 471, 62 N. W. 798, the insured testified that the agent told him that he could move his property to any place in the county by giving notice to the company, and in denying liability for loss of property elsewhere than covered by the policy the court, speaking through Robinson, J., said: The agent "appears to have been only a soliciting agent, and, if that was his true character, it was no part of his duty, and not within the scope of his powers, to contract for his principal, to construe its policies, or to determine their legal effect. As he was a special agent, not clothed with any apparent right to do more than to solicit insurance, and to perform such acts as were incident to that power, the plaintiff was charged with knowledge of the limitations of his agency, and was not authorized to give any contractual effect to the statements he made. His principal was bound by the knowledge he had when the application was prepared and accepted, but not by statements he made outside the scope of his apparent powers."

In Cornelius v. Farmers Ins. Co. 113 Iowa, 184, 84 N. W. 1037, the agent had represented that, for an additional premium, he would make the application so that the property would be insured when vacant, and we there said: "It thus appears that the application contained no misstatement of any existing fact or past transaction, nor did it omit any. What was said related solely to an anticipated, though no settled, use of the property. It was an arrangement as to conditions of the policy, with which a soliciting agent had nothing to do, rather than a representation of the existing or past conditions of the property to be insured. That such an agent has no authority to make a binding contract for insurance, or what shall be the provisions of a policy, is too well settled to require any citations. The scope of his authority is limited to taking applications; and as, within this, it is his duty to see that the condition of the property is truly and fully disclosed when he undertakes to prepare them for the assured, the company may not take advantage of omissions or misstatements of facts or conditions affecting the risk. Fitchner v. Fidelity Mut.

Fire Asso. 103 Iowa, 280, 72 N. W. 530. But, whatever he may say as to the effect of the policy or what it shall cover, or of its conditions, is mere opinion on his part, pertaining to matters wholly without the scope of his employment. Talks and agreements in reference to matters of future performance are merged in, and presumed to be expressed in, the policy, which, as in the case of other written contracts, becomes effective as the consummation of their wishes and intentions by its delivery on the part of the company and acceptance by the assured. Moore v. State Ins. Co. 72 Iowa, 416, 34 N. W. 183; Baldwin v. State Ins. Co. 60 Iowa, 497, 15 N. W. 300; Stephens v. Capital Ins. Co. 87 Iowa, 283, 54 N. W. 139; Ostrander, Ins. 186. Nor can anything he may impart concerning a future contingency operate as an estoppel against the insurer. This is: First, because he is given no such authority; and, secondly, for the reason that the doctrine of estoppel is never applied save where the representation relates to a present or past fact, or state of facts, unless it has reference to an intended abandonment of an existing right, upon which another has relied."

Here there was no misrepresentation of or omission to state any fact of which the company would be assumed to know from the knowledge of its agent. See Funk v. Anchor F. Ins. Co. 171 Iowa, 331, 153 N. W. 1048. What the agent undertook was to tell the assured what the policy would cover, and this was clearly beyond the scope of his agency. In so far as appears from the record, the only evidence bearing thereon was that he solicited the insurance and prepared the application which was signed by the assured. This was the work of a soliciting agent, and, in the absence of evidence that he possessed powers in excess of those exercised therein, it ought not to be assumed that he was something more. In other words, we cannot assume without proof that the agent was endowed with authority to say what the policy in response to the application will be or its meaning. It was retained by the assured without objection and without claim but that he was aware of its contents. Unless it covered the hay put in the barn, then there can be no recovery for loss of the hay. The insurance was on "hay in stack" only. A stack of hay, grain, straw, or the like is a large quantity thereof collected and usually built up in layers in conical, oblong, or rectangular form to a point or ridge at the top so that it will be preserved against the inclemencies of weather. See People v. Doyle, 13 Cal. App. 611, 110 Pac. 458; Farmers' Mutual v. Reser, 43 Ind. App. 634, 88 N. E. 349. Of course, it may be stacked under cover or cover may be placed over it. In Farmers' Mutual v. Reser, supra, it was stacked in a shed. In Reg. v. Munson, 2 Cox, C. C. 186, haulm was stacked under cover in a building which had been used as a stable. The accused insisted that there was a variance between the charge of having set fire to a stack of haulm and the proof, but Coleridge, J., said: "I do not think it essentially necessary to the character of a 'stack' that it should be erected out of doors. It is enough if the material is collected direct in the field and 'stacked' in a building."

In Benton v. Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. 102 Mich. 281, 26 L.R.A. 237, 60 N. W. 691, the court decided that "the term 'stack' has a well-defined meaning, and cannot be said to include grain in a mow in a barn."

Nor do we think "hay in stack" susceptible to being construed as hay in the mow of a barn. Such is not the ordinary meaning of the expression. No one would think of hay stowed away in a barn as being a stack. The court rightly denied recovery for the hay burned.

II. Was the windmill or scale a farm tool or farming utensil? "Tool" is defined in Webster's Dictionary as: "An instrument of manual operation, as a hammer, saw, plane, file, or the like, used to facilitate mechanical operations as distinguished from an appliance moved and regulated by machinery; the instrument of a handicraftsman or laborer at his work; an implement; as the tools of a joiner, smith, shoemaker, etc."

A similar definition is to be found in the Century Dictionary. Evidently by the words "garden tools" is meant instruments or devices movable in character and operated by hand, or possibly by other motive power in the performance of work or in doing work in the garden or on the farm. The word "utensils" is much broader in meaning, though it may be applicable to many implements designated tools in common parlance. The Century Dictionary defines "utensils" as: "An instrument or implement; as utensils of war; now, more especially, an instrument or vessel in common use in a kitchen, dairy, or the like, as distinguished from agricultural implements and mechanical tools."

Webster's Dictionary says it is: "An instrument or vessel, especially one used in the kitchen or in a dairy."

The supreme court of North Carolina, in Elliott v. Posten, 57 N. C. (4 Jones, Eq.) 433, said: The word "'utensil' will embrace everything . . . 'for household purposes or applicable to the trade to which the term has reference.'"

In Laporte v. Libbey, 114 La. 570, 38 So. 457, the court expressed the same view: "The word 'utensils' more especially means an implement or vessel for domestic or farming use. See Standard Dictionary, verbo. As used in Civil Code, art. 3259, 'utensils' is a translation of 'ustensiles,' used in article 2101 of the Code Napoléon. This word in France has been held to include a . . . threshing machine. Fuzie-Herman, Code Civil, vol. 4, 873. In French jurisprudence the word is used as synonymous with 'agricultural instruments,' whatever may be their nature. Baudry-Lacantinerie, Detroit Civil, Des Privilèges, vol. 1, 445, No. 472. Laurent says that the word 'ustensiles' has a very extended meaning. It has been held in other states of the Union that 'mowers' and 'combined harvesters' used by debtors for necessary farmwork are within the meaning of the term 'farming utensils or implements,' as used in exemption laws. . . . We are of the opinion that a steam thresher is clearly within the term 'farming utensils' as used in Civil Code, article 3259."

A combined harvester was held to be a utensil in Re Klemp, 119 Cal. 41, 39 L.R.A. 340, 63 Am. St. Rep. 69, 50 Pac. 1062, and a thresher was so found to be in Spence v. Smith, 121 Cal. 536, 66 Am. St. Rep. 62, 53 Pac. 653, 933. In Lahn v. Carr, 120 La. 797, 45 So. 707: A steam engine, used in connection with a pump for irrigation, with a thresher, and with machinery for cultivating a crop of rice, and not shown to have been used for any other purpose than the cultivation and harvesting of such crop, is a "farming utensil" within Civ. Code, art. 3259, on which the privilege of the vendor is superior to that of the lessor of the land, and this whether the engine was bought as part of the pump, or of the thresher, or any other time and from any other source.

In Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Stewart, 53 Ill. App. 273, the court adjudged a hay press a farming utensil. In Royston v. McCulley, — Tenn. Ch. App. —, 52 L.R.A. 899, 59 S. W. 725, blacksmith tools used in operating a farm were held to pass under a bill of sale as utensils. This court found "binding twine" to be included in "stock of implements" in Davis v. Anchor Mut. F. Ins. Co. 96 Iowa, 70, 64 N. W. 687. See Reynolds v. Iowa & N. Ins. Co. 80 Iowa, 563, 46 N. W. 659. No case precisely in point has been cited, nor have we been able to discover any. Of course, neither the windmill nor the scale can be said to come within the definition of "farm tool." But "farming utensil," as pointed out, is of much broader significance than "farm tools." The policy does not limit the expression to any particular phase of farming. The word is used in its generic sense. See Bank of Dearborn v. Matney (D. C.) 132 Fed. 75. And by "farming utensils" was intended any instrumentalities within the meaning of the word "utensils" made use of on a farm. The assured was engaged in general farming, including the keeping and raising of stock. Teams and stock must have water, and the modern farmer requires scales by which to test the values of feed, the growth of his stock, and to protect himself in the matter of weight when disposing of grain or stock on the market. Both are in common use and are appropriate to successful operation of the farm, and, as we think, are fairly within the meaning of "farming utensils;" at least, when not permanently attached to the realty. That they may be so annexed to the soil as to become part of the realty is well settled. See Thomson v. Smith, 111 Iowa, 718, 50 L.R.A. 780, 82 Am. St. Rep. 541, 83 N. W. 789; State Security Bank v. Hoskins, 130 Iowa, 339, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 376, 106 N. W. 764; Phelps & B. Windmill Co. v. Baker, 49 Kan. 434, 30 Pac. 472. But either may be so attached as to be removable as a trade fixture. Neither was attached at all, and it would not seem that, even though designed for permanent annexation to the soil, this alone would preclude their classification as farming utensils. Surely an implement establishment carrying a full line of farm implements would not exclude windmills from their stocks. That its motive power is wind is not controlling; for many utensils are operated by steam. Moreover, were the pumping done by an engine, as is common, there would be no hesitancy in declaring it a utensil, which, in its derivation, means an implement for use. These were implements for pumping and weighing, and, though not in actual use, were utensils within the language of the policy. If not, what were they? They were not appurtenances to the land, and that they might become such did not obviate the application of nomenclature which seems correct, appropriate, and fairly within the terms of the contract.

Reversed.

Evans, Ch. J., and Gaynor and Salinger, JJ., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied.

Annotation—Insurance: property covered by policy on "farming utensils."

In MURPHY v. CONTINENTAL INS. CO. ante, 934, a windmill which had not been put up, and stock scales stored in a granary, were held to be "farming utensils" and within the protection of a policy issued to one engaged in general farming, which insured such utensils.

But one other case has been disclosed dealing with the question under annotation.

In Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Stewart (1893) 53 Ill. App. 273, a hay press was held to be covered by a clause insuring for a stated sum "on reapers, mowers, harvesters, and other farming utensils." The court here said: "We are not inclined to hold, as insisted by appellant, that the term 'farming utensils' includes only such utensils as are generally used upon an ordinary farm. If the utensil is used in carrying on a particular kind of farm, as, for instance, a hay farm, it would be a farming utensil. Nor is it necessary to be in general use. The hay press is included within the term 'farming utensils.'"

The meaning of the term "utensils" in connection with other subjects than insurance is discussed by the court in MURPHY v. CONTINENTAL INS. CO.

J. T. W.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, SECOND CIRCUIT.

DIETRICH E. LOEWE, Surviving Partner of the Firm of D. E. Loewe & Company, Plff. in Err.,
v.

SAVINGS BANK OF DANBURY.

(236 Fed. 444.)

Garnishment — bank deposit — right to interest.

1. Where savings bank deposits may be garnished to meet an anticipated judgment, and the attachment binds the obligation as it exists when the attachment is served, the attachment binds dividends subsequently declared, as against an assignee of the attachment debtor, since they are incident to the deposits.

For other cases, see Garnishment, II. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Interests — wrongful withholding of money — rival claimants.

2. A bank which withholds funds attached as those of its depositor because of a claim to them by a stranger, until the true title can be ascertained, does not act wrongfully within the rule making one wrongfully withholding money liable for interest thereon.

For other cases, see Interest, I. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(July 3, 1916.)

ERROR to the District Court of the United States for the District of Connecticut (Thomas, District Judge) to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff, in part only, in an action brought to recover certain savings bank accounts which had been levied upon by attachment. Modified and affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Cox and Rogers, Circuit Judges, and Augustus N. Hand, District Judge.

Messrs. Daniel Davenport and Walter Gordon Merritt for plaintiff in error.

Note.—On the question of levy upon property as including increase thereof, see annotation following this case, post, 944. L.R.A.1917B.

Messrs. John H. Light, John R. Booth, and J. Moss Ives, for defendant in error:

The depositors, whose accounts were attached, are not entitled to anything more by way of interest than the 4 per cent dividends declared, and plaintiff did not gain a greater right by virtue of his attachment.

National Bank v. Western P. R. Co. 157 Cal. 573, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 987, 108 Pac. 676, 21 Ann. Cas. 1391; Shirk v. Thomas, 121 Ind. 147, 16 Am. St. Rep. 381, 22 N. E. 976; Rogers v. Highland, 69 Iowa, 504, 58 Am. Rep. 230, 29 N. W. 429; Lyman v. Gaar, S. & Co. 75 Minn. 207, 74 Am. St. Rep. 452, 77 N. W. 828; Hope v. Blair, 105 Mo. 85, 24 Am. St. Rep. 366, 16 S. W. 595.

Plaintiff is not entitled to recover 6 per cent interest on attached bank accounts from the date of the marshal's demand on December 24th, 1912.

Osborn v. Byrne, 43 Conn. 159, 21 Am. Rep. 641.

Plaintiff is not entitled to recover 6 per cent interest because of use of the funds attached.

Bank Comrs. v. Watertown Sav. Bank, 81 Conn. 265, 70 Atl. 1038; Candee v. Skinner, 40 Conn. 464; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Carey, 80 Conn. 426, 68 Atl. 993.

Messrs. Martin J. Cunningham and William F. Tammany for the United Hatters.

Rogers, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

An action was commenced by the present plaintiff and others in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Connecticut thirteen years ago to recover damages from the members of a trade union charged with conspiracy in restraint of interstate commerce. The questions involved were before that court at various times, and were before this court on several occasions, and were three times before the Supreme Court of the United States. The plaintiffs were manufacturers of hats at Danbury, Connecticut, where they maintained a factory. The defendants in the original suit were members of a combination called the United Hatters of North America, and they were charged with being in a conspiracy to compel the plaintiffs to unionize their factory. The Supreme Court in Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U. S. 274, 52 L. ed. 488, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 301, 13 Ann. Cas. 815 (1908), sustained the right to maintain the action. In 1912 the Supreme Court refused a writ of certiorari, and in 235 U. S. 522, 59 L. ed. 341, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1170 (1915), that court, affirming the decision of this court in 128 C. C. A. 445, 209 Fed. 721 (1913), sustained a judgment rendered against the defendants in that action in the sum of $353,130.90.

When the action above referred to, known as the Danbury Hatters' Case, was commenced, a writ of attachment was issued, dated August 31, 1903, demanding $240,000 damages and costs. The writ directed the United States marshal for the district of Connecticut to attach to the value of $250,000 the goods and estate of over 150 named defendants, and it was duly served upon them and upon the Savings Bank of Danbury, defendant herein, "as agent, trustee, and debtor of and to each of the aforesaid persons named therein as defendants."

The process under which the money deposited in the Savings Bank was attached was issued under § 880 of the General Statutes of Connecticut, Revision of 1902, which reads as follows: "When the effects of the defendant in any civil action in which a judgment or decree for the payment of money may be rendered, are concealed in the hands of his agent or trustee so that they cannot be found or attached, or where a debt is due from any person to such defendant, or where any debt, legacy, or distributive share, is or may become due to such defendant from the estate of any deceased person or insolvent debtor, the plaintiff may insert in his writ a direction to the officer to leave a true and attested copy thereof and of the accompanying complaint, at least twelve days before the session of the court to which it is returnable, with such agent, trustee, or debtor of the defendant, or, as the case may be, with the executor, administrator, or trustee of such estate, or at the usual place of abode of such garnishee; and from the time of leaving such copy, all the effects of the defendant in the hands of any such garnishee, and any debt due from any such garnishee to the defendant, and any debt, legacy, or distributive share, due or that may become due to him from such executor, administrator, or trustee in insolvency, not exempt from execution, shall be secured in the hands of such garnishee to pay such judgment as the plaintiff may recover."

L.R.A.1917B.

When the judgment was obtained in the main action, an execution was taken out and put into the hands of the marshal, who, acting by the direction of the plaintiffs made demand upon the Savings Bank of Danbury, the defendant herein, as agent, trustee, and debtor of and to each of the judgment debtors severally of the sums named in the execution and of any estate of each of the several judgment debtors severally. This demand the Savings Bank refused to comply with, although at the time it was served it was indebted to each of the defendants severally in various amounts which it refused at the time to disclose. At the time the marshal made his demand, the Savings Bank had on deposit $18,461.54 to the credit of various of the defendants. The execution was returned wholly unsatisfied.

An action in scire facias was then brought, pursuant to § 931 of the General Statutes of Connecticut, Revision of 1902, to recover attached Savings Bank accounts levied upon by the writ of attachment above mentioned. Section 931 reads as follows: "If judgment be rendered in favor of the plaintiff in any action by foreign attachment, all the effects in the hands of the garnishee at the time of the attachment, or debts then due from him to the defendant, and any debt, legacy, or distributive share, due or to become due to the defendant from any garnishee as an executor, administrator, or trustee, shall be liable for the payment of such judgment; and the plaintiff, on praying out an execution, may direct the officer serving the same to make demand of such garnishee for the effects of the defendant in his hands, and for the payment of any debt due to the defendant, and such garnishee shall pay said debt or produce said effects, to be taken and applied on said execution; and if he shall have, in any manner, disposed of the effects of the principal in his hands when the copy of the writ was left with him, or shall not expose and subject them to be taken on the execution, or shall not pay to the officer, when demanded, the debt due to the defendant at the time the copy of the writ was left with him, such garnishee shall be liable to satisfy such judgment out of his own estate, as his proper debt, if the effects, or debt, be of sufficient value or amount; if not, then to the value of such effects, or to the amount of such debt. A scire facias may be taken out from the clerk of the court where the judgment was rendered, to be served upon such [court] garnishee, requiring him to appear before such court and show cause, if any he have, to the contrary; and the plaintiff may require the defendant, and the defendant shall have the right, to disclose, on oath, whether he has any of the effects of the debtor in his hands, or is indebted to him; and the parties may introduce any other proper testimony respecting such facts. If it be found that the defendant has the effects of such debtor in his hands, or is indebted to him, or if he makes default of appearance, or refuses to disclose on oath, judgment shall be rendered against him, as for his own debt, to be paid out of his own estate with costs; but if it appear on the trial that the effects are of less value, or the debt of less amount than the judgment recovered against the debtor, judgment shall be rendered to the value of the goods, or to the amount of the debt; and if it appear that the defendant has no effects of such debtor in his hands, or is not indebted to him, he shall recover costs."

An Congress in 1872 provided as follows: "In common-law causes in the circuit and District courts . . . the plaintiff shall be entitled to similar remedies, by attachment or other process against the property of the defendant, which are now provided for by the laws of the state in which such court is held" for the courts thereof; "and such circuit or district courts may, from time to time, by general rules, adopt such state laws as may be in force in the" states where they are held "in relation to attachments and other process: . . . Provided, that similar preliminary affidavits or proofs, and similar security as required by such" state "laws, shall be first furnished by the party seeking such attachment or other remedy." Act June 1, 1872, chap. 255, § 6, 17 Stat. at L. 197, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 1539.

No question has been raised but that the action is one which the plaintiff is entitled to bring under the laws of Connecticut and of the United States.

It appears that in December, 1903, after the attachment of the deposits in the Savings Bank and before the rendition of final judgment in the original action, the defendants in that action assigned to the United Hatters of North America, a voluntary association having an office or principal place of business in the city and state of New York, the dividends or interest accruing on said deposits and which were declared after the attachment.

The United Hatters of North America was given notice of the pendency of the proceeding according to the terms of the Connecticut statute under which the proceeding was instituted, and it appeared and filed an answer in which it alleged that the dividends or interest accruing and declared subsequent to the original attachment were not held by the attachment, but passed to it and became its property by virtue of the assignments. The United Hatters notified L.R.A.1917B.

the Savings Bank that it claimed to own the dividends declared or the interest due on such accounts, and demanded payment of the same, which payment was refused.

It is admitted that at the time of the attachment the amount held in the Savings Bank account to the credit of the various defendants in the original action amounted to $18,461.54. And the district judge has found that, subsequent to the commencement of the present proceeding, the defendant, with the consent of the United Hatters, paid to the plaintiff $17,558.37, on June 26, 1915, and the further sum of $474.65 on account of the principal of said deposits.

The important question involved is whether the interest or dividends which have accumulated in the hands of the defendant, and which would belong to the depositors but for the assignment, belong to the judgment creditor by virtue of the original attachment, or to the assignee of the fund by virtue of the assignment made after the attachment.

It is understood that similar actions are pending, brought by the plaintiff against other savings banks in Connecticut, involving the same issue, and that the parties have stipulated that the judgment in those actions is to be controlled by the decision in this suit. The accumulated dividends on the various deposits in the various actions are said to amount to about $20,000.

The district judge came to the conclusion that the attaching creditor was not entitled to the interest or dividends, but that the same belonged to the United Hatters as assignee. He accordingly gave judgment to the plaintiff in the sum of $428.52; that being the amount of the principal which it is admitted remained unpaid in the hands of the Savings Bank of Danbury, the defendant in the action.

The attachment of deposits in a savings bank is a proceeding unknown to the common law. In Haber v. Nassitts, 12 Fla. 589, 608, the supreme court of Florida declares that "no such process was known at common law, and the proceeding is traced to a custom of London whereby, 'if a plaint was affirmed and returned nihil,' the plaintiff had a garnishment against debtors of the defendant, and after certain proceedings was entitled to judgment."

However that may be, the remedy by attachment in this country owes its existence entirely to statutory enactment. In Penoyar v. Kelsey, 150 N. Y. 77, 34 L.R.A. 248, 44 N. E. 788 (1896) the New York court of appeals, in speaking of the remedy by attachment, says: "It exists, as a provisional remedy, only when authorized by statute, and, as such, is comparatively recent in its origin."

And see Gause v. Cone, 73 Tex. 241, 11 S. W. 162 (1889); Hubbell v. Kingman, 52 Conn. 19 (1884); Kittredge v. Bellows, 7 N. H. 399; Baldwin v. Flagg, 43 N. J. L. 496. But in Mack v. Parks, 8 Gray, 517, 69 Am. Dec. 267 (1858), the court said: "Our system of attachment on mesne process was derived from the ancient rule of the common law, by which, as part of the service of civil process, goods which were properly subject to distress were allowed also to be taken by a species of distress, and held as vadii or pledges to compel the appearance of the defendant."

As the remedy by attachment is statutory, the rights of an attaching creditor are governed by the state law as declared by the highest court of the state enacting the statute, and the decisions of that court will be followed by a court of the United States having jurisdiction of the proceedings. Wolf v. Cook (C. C.) 40 Fed. 432 (1889); Rice v. Alder-Goldman Commission Co. 18 C. C. A. 15, 36 U. S. App. 266, 71 Fed. 151 (1895); L. Bucki & Son Lumber Co. v. Fidelity & D. Co. 48 C. C. A. 436, 109 Fed. 393 (1901).

And as the remedy by attachment is regarded as being in derogation of the common law, the courts have sometimes construed strictly the statutes giving the remedy. Ritchie v. Sayers (C. C.) 100 Fed. 520; Brigham v. Avery, 48 Vt. 602; Penoyar v. Kelsey, supra. But in a number of the states the statutes themselves expressly provide that they are not to be strictly construed. See 6 C. J. 37. In other states the courts, having regard to the intention of the legislatures, have been inclined to adopt a liberal construction independently of express statutory provision. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Crane, 102 Ill. 249, 40 Am. Rep. 581; Gunby v. Porter, 80 Md. 402, 31 Atl. 324; Best v. British & A. Mortg. Co. 128 N. C. 351, 38 S. E. 923; Strock v. Little, 45 Pa. 416; Cole v. Utah Sugar Co. 35 Utah, 148, 99 Pac. 681. The Connecticut statute, once construed strictly (Hubbell v. Kingman, 52 Conn. 19 (1884)), is now liberally construed (Ransom v. Bidwell, 89 Conn. 137, 93 Atl. 134 (1915)). The policy of the state of Connecticut is declared by its highest court in the case last cited to be that "all the property of a debtor not exempt from execution shall be made subject to the payment of his debts, and that every facility consistent with the reasonable immunity of the debtor should be afforded to subject such property to legal process."

Under such statutes as that in Connecticut, it is, of course, not questioned but that a creditor of a depositor in a savings bank can attach the deposit. A bank is bound to respect such process, and the courts do not permit it to apply the fund attached to the payment of any debt due from the depositor to anyone. Bolles, Bkg. vol. 2, p. 778. The difficulty arises when the fund so deposited is upon the interest, and it becomes necessary to determine whether the attachment binds interest thereafter accruing. The district judge thought it did not. He fully recognized the principle that the question should be governed by the decisions of the Connecticut court, so far as those decisions throw light upon the subject. He reviewed at some length the decisions in that state. There are a number of cases in which the Connecticut court has decided that attaching creditors acquire no more or greater rights than the depositors had at the time of the attachments, and he therefore concluded that all interest accruing after the attachment belonged to the assignee by virtue of the assignment, and not to the attaching creditors.

But the exact question presented in this action has never been presented to the supreme court of the state of Connecticut. That court has held that, under the foreign attachment statute of that state, there is no right to attach unless there is an existing obligation or debt due; and that where there is a condition precedent to the liability, there is not an existing indebtedness which can be garnished. See Fitch v. Waite, 5 Conn. 117 (1823); Coburn v. Hartford, 38 Conn. 290 (1871); Holcomb v. Winchester, 52 Conn. 447, 52 Am. Rep. 609 (1885); Sand-Blast File-Sharpening Co. v. Parsons, 54 Conn. 310, 7 Atl. 716 (1886); Cunningham Lumber Co. v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 77 Conn. 628, 60 Atl. 107 (1905). These decisions, however, are not conclusive of the question involved in the present action. Not only is the question one upon which the Connecticut courts have not passed, but it is one upon which there seems to be little authority. While it is true that under the Connecticut decisions it is the existing obligation or the debt due which is bound by the attachment, and that at the time the attachment was served the dividends in question had not been declared and were not in existence, nevertheless they would be subject to the attachment if they are to be considered a necessary incident of the deposits. For whatever binds the principal binds that which is inseparable from the principal. An attachment of a freehold, for example, gives a lien on the timber trees and on the building attached thereto. In Coke on Littleton, vol. 1, 151b, it is said that a thing is "incident to another when it appertains to, or follows on, that other which is more worthy or principal." The lexicographers say that an "incident" is a thing that is necessarily or inseparately connected with another. That it is something characteristically, naturally, or legally depending upon, connected with, or contained in another thing as its principal. Webster says that it is something necessarily appertaining to or depending on another, which is termed the principal. So that the question is whether the "dividends" on these deposits so appertained to and were so connected with the latter that the attachment of the deposits created a lien on the deposits and the dividends, including those subsequently declared. In Shinn on Attachment and Garnishment, 1896, vol. 1, § 316, pp. 609, 610, the writer says: "Whether or not the rents and profits accruing upon the attached property are subject to the attachment lien cannot be said to be judicially ascertained."

In Cook on Corporations, 7th ed. 1913, vol. 2, § 484, p. 1359, that writer says that "dividends on the stock which is attached follow the stock and are covered by the attachment."

In Jacobus v. Monongahela Nat. Bank (C. C.) 35 Fed. 395 (1888), a case in a United State district court, a creditor attached shares of stock in a railroad company, the shares standing in the name of Jacobus, and, when the railroad company and Jacobus were summoned as garnishees, Jacobus pleaded nulla bona and the railroad company pleaded that the stock belonged to Jacobus. The original case was decided in 1883 by the Supreme Court of the United States (109 U. S. 275, 27 L. ed. 935, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 219) in favor of the garnishees. It appears that, at the time the attachment was served, the railroad company had in its hands a dividend of $264 on said stock, and from time to time thereafter 21 other dividends of $264 each were declared, and all said dividends were retained by said railroad company until the decision by the Supreme Court, when the railroad company paid the money to Jacobus without interest. Suit was then brought on the recognizance furnished by the bank to pay damages caused by the attachment, and the question arose as to whether the attachment compelled the railroad company to withhold the payment of subsequent dividends. The court held that the attaching creditor was entitled to the dividends and said: "The dividends were but an incident to the stock—the mere fruits thereof—and were as much within the grasp of the attachment as the corpus of the stock was."

In Moore v. Gennett, 2 Tenn. Ch. 375 (1875), Chancellor Cooper in an attachment case said that "Dividends are as much an incident to the stock as rent is to the reversion of land, or interest to a debt." L.R.A.1917B.

He added: "Besides, the increase or income of property, after the levy of an attachment, is given to the creditor by Code, § 3536."

The connection clearly shows that in his opinion the provision of the Code was merely declaratory of what the law would have been without the Code.

In Syracuse City Bank v. Coville, 19 How Pr. 385 (1860), the court held that, where an attachment issued and was levied on a money bond payable in instalments, and at the time only one instalment was due, the creditor only acquired a lien on the amount actually due upon the bond at the time of service of the writ. The case is distinguishable from the case of Jacobus v. Monongahela Nat. Bank, supra, and is not to be regarded as controverting it in the least. What was attached in the Syracuse City Bank Case was the debt due at the time of the levy. The debts due on the subsequent instalments were not incidents of the debt attached, but were wholly independent thereof.

In the case under consideration the property attached was not stock, but deposits in the Savings Bank. Now a savings bank is conducted solely for the benefit of its depositors. It receives deposits and loans them for their benefit; and a savings bank, which is conducted solely for the benefit of the depositors, and in which the profits, after deducting necessary expenses, inure wholly to the benefit of the depositors, does not stand in the relation of a debtor to a creditor, as does an ordinary bank to its depositors. Its relation is more nearly that of trustee and cestui que trust. State v. People's Nat. Bank, 75 N. H. 27, 70 Atl. 542, 21 Ann. Cas. 1204. The depositors intrust their money to the bank as their trustee to keep and invest the same according to the charter and the laws. If there is a profit, they receive it; if there is a loss, they share it according to the amount of their deposits. In Cary v. San Francisco Sav. Union, 22 Wall. 38, 22 L. ed. 779 (1874), the Supreme Court held that the share of profits paid by a savings bank to its depositors constituted "dividends." Chief Justice Waite wrote the opinion, in the course of which he said: "The interest received for the loan of each deposit was not kept by itself, and paid to the depositors after deducting a charge to cover expenses, but all was placed in a common fund, and, when the net result of the business was ascertained, that was divided among the several contributors according to the value of their contributions. Such a division clearly produces a dividend according to the common understanding of that term."

The question in the case was whether the share of the profits paid a depositor was to be considered as "interest" or as "dividends." But that was a case where the Savings Bank had a capital stock and a reserve fund, and under its charter the directors, at the expiration of every six months, after deducting certain salaries and expenses, would set apart a certain proportion of the profits, not exceeding one tenth, to the stockholders as a compensation for furnishing the capital. "Although a bank may be called a savings bank, if it is really a stockholders' bank, where the capital is owned by the shareholders, the name will amount to nothing." 2 Morse, Banks & Bkg. § 618. The mere designation of a bank as a savings bank does not make it one. To determine its true character, its organization, powers, and mode of doing business must be considered. 3 R. C. L. p. 694. And the record in this case does not disclose the organization, powers, and mode of doing business of the Danbury Savings Bank. We do not know whether it had a capital stock or not. If it did not have, but held the deposits as a trustee, and not as a debtor, the plaintiff could still attach them. The law is clear that, if a trustee has funds in his hands belonging to a cestui que trust, they are liable to foreign attachment. Easterly v. Keney, 36 Conn. 18 (1869). Whether the income funds so held produce "dividends" in a technical sense is not important to the decision of this case, such income being, in our opinion, an incident of the deposits in either case.

The matter may be considered from another view point. In Mattingly v. Boyd, 20 How. 128, 15 L. ed. 845 (1857), the Supreme Court said that "as a general rule, a garnishee is not bound to pay interest, because he is liable to be called on to pay at all times. Updegraff v. Spring, 11 Serg. & R. 188; Drake, Pr. 725; Hunter v. Spotswood, 1 Wash. (Va.) 149."

Undoubtedly what the court referred to was not the interest due from a debtor to a creditor at the time of the service of the process, but interest on the money thereafter; and in that case, while acknowledging the general rule to be as stated, the garnishee was charged with interest from the time when the attachment process was served, for the reason that he had used the money, and interest was charged from October 23, 1827, when process was served, to August 25, 1861.

In Woodruff v. Bacon, 35 Conn. 97 (1868), the supreme court of Connecticut applied the same principle to a case in which the garnishee had used the fund. The court said: "But we cannot recognize the principle that should allow the plaintiffs to recover the debt and not allow them to recover the interest which is the mere incident to the debt, arising from the defendant's use of it."

So in Cox v. Cronan, 82 Conn. 176, 135 Am. St. Rep. 268, 72 Atl. 927 (1909), the same court said: "When money belonging to a defendant is attached in the hands of a third party by process of foreign attachment, the garnishee cannot safely pay it over to either party pending the continuance of the suit in which it is attached, but must hold it to abide the result of the action. If he is not under contract to pay interest, and makes no use of the money, but retains it as a mere stakeholder, he will not be liable for interest until the result of the suit determines to which party he shall pay it. Candee v. Skinner, 40 Conn. 464, 468; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Carey, 80 Conn. 426, 432, 68 Atl. 993. But when he mingles the money attached with his own and has the use of it, he is liable for the interest on it."

In 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 837, 838, the rule is laid down as follows: "It is well settled that a garnishee is liable to the plaintiff for interest on the amount of his indebtedness to the defendant during the pending of the garnishment proceedings if he had promised the defendant to pay interest, or if he received interest or used the money during that time."

In 22 Cyc. 1559, 1560, the rule is stated as follows: "Attachment or garnishment.—

(1) In general.—Where interest upon a debt is recoverable as damages, and not by reason of a contract to pay it, the debtor is not usually liable for interest during a period in which he is prevented from making payment by reason of the debt being attached or garnished in his hand by some third person, or by the debtor being summoned as a trustee of the creditor under trustee process. But if the contract on which the debt is founded draws interest during the time payment is thus delayed, interest will not be suspended. If a debtor against whom trustee or garnishment proceedings are issued causes unreasonable delay in making his answer thereto or otherwise, for the purpose of obtaining a longer use of the money, or falsely denies his indebtedness, he will be liable for interest during the pendency of the proceedings. (2) Use of funds by garnishee.—If a garnishee, during the pendency of the proceedings, employs the funds in his hands so as to derive a profit therefrom, he will generally be held to account for interest."

In Bassett v. Kinney, 24 Conn. 267, 63 Am. Dec. 161 (1855), the court held that a person to whom money is intrusted to be paid over to a designated recipient, and who deposits the money in bank for some time, afterward paying it over to the person entitled to receive it, is liable to such person for the interest paid to him on the money while deposited in the bank, although such interest is paid after the money has been turned over. Where it affirmatively appears that the funds have been profitably employed, and the principal has been augmented by virtue of such profitable employment, the principal and the increment are inseparable and belong to the attaching creditor. If the attached fund, in this case the deposits, produces earnings during the period of the attachment, those earnings are an incident of the attached fund and subject to the lien. It makes no difference by what name the earnings may be called, whether interest or dividends. As long as the attached fund is used for profit, the profit, whether earned for the benefit of the garnishee or the debtor, is impounded for the benefit of the attaching creditor, and is subject to the same ultimate disposition as the principal of which it is the incident. Is it said that in this case the Savings Bank was not using the funds for its own benefit, but for the benefit of the depositors? But surely that cannot help the case, for, if the argument be sound, then this extraordinary result would follow: That a person garnished could not use the attached funds for his own benefit without being chargeable with interest, but he could use them for the benefit of the debtor defendant who is being pursued by the attaching creditor, and if he did, the defendant, and not the attaching creditor, would be entitled to the accumulated interest. A principle leading to such an unjust and irrational result cannot be sound and need not be further considered.

That the deposits attached were used and earned a profit during the period of litigation is conceded. The court below made the following finding of fact which was embodied in the judgment: "That since that attachment, the defendant herein has, in accordance with the terms of its charter, used and improved the moneys so deposited with it, and has regularly declared dividends upon said several deposits, payable from the income and profits earned by the defendant from these and its other deposits, and that the aggregate amount of dividends so declared upon the several deposits, levied upon by said writ of attachment, is $11,278.13."

The plaintiff contends that he is entitled to recover 6 per cent interest from the date of the demand made by the marshal after final judgment on December 24, 1912. The General Statutes of Connecticut, Revision of 1902, § 3440, provide that the net income of savings bank in excess of  $\frac{1}{2}$  of 1 per cent of its deposits, actually earned during the six months last preceding, and no more, may be semiannually divided among its depositors. It is then added that no dividend shall exceed a rate of 4 per cent per annum except as provided in § 3441. The plaintiff's claim to 6 per cent does not rest upon anything in that section, but upon the principle that the refusal to comply with the marshal's demand was wrongful, and, when one wrongfully withholds moneys, he is chargeable with the legal rate of interest, which, in Connecticut, is 6 per cent. At the time the marshal made his demand, the interest or dividends were claimed by the United Hatters of North America under the assignment, and the proceeding now under review was instituted to determine the rights of the respective parties. A withholding by the defendant under such a circumstance cannot be regarded as unlawful, and the interest to be allowed must be limited to the savings bank rate.

The judgment below must be modified so as to include the dividends declared by the defendant according to law. Those dividends the plaintiff is entitled to recover in addition to the balance of the deposits, $428.52, and his costs in both courts.

The judgment, so modified, is affirmed.

Affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, January 8, 1917, 242 U. S. 357, 61 L. ed. —, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 172.

Annotation—Levy upon property as including subsequent increase thereof.

This note is intended to include cases which have considered the question whether, when property of a debtor has been levied upon, the natural increase of such property, as, for example, dividends on stock, rents of land, or offspring of animals, follows the thing levied upon; and upon such question there is a surprising lack of authority.

The real question before the court in LOEWY v. SAVINGS BANK, ante, 938, so far as it relates to the question under annotation, seems to have been whether the interest on savings bank deposits was dividends; and such question having been decided in the affirmative, it followed as a matter of course that the attachment covered interest subsequently accruing, as, by the statutes of Connecticut, which controlled in this case, levies of attachments and executions upon shares of a corporation include dividends growing due thereon.

No other case has been found involving interest on bank deposits, and it is doubtful whether LOEWE v. SAVINGS BANK would be authority in a case where the deposit was in a bank other than a savings bank.

LOEWE v. SAVINGS BANK was affirmed by United States Supreme Court in (1917) 242 U. S. 357, 61 L. ed. —, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 172, that court holding that a garnishment of savings bank deposits reaches the so-called dividends accrued since the writ was served upon the garnishee, where, under the local laws, a garnishment, while reaching only effects in the hands of the garnishee at the time of such service, holds the subsequently accruing interest on an interest-bearing debt as well as the principal, although such local law gives the right to release the attachment by giving a bond equal to the value of the effects attached.

On the question as to the analogy between the so-called dividends of a savings bank and dividends of a corporation, or interest due by contract upon a debt, the court said: "The plaintiff in error is an ordinary savings bank without stockholders. It is subject to a fiduciary duty to hold and invest for the benefit of its depositors all the funds that it receives, and to pay over to them all the net income earned, after the retention of enough to constitute a small safety fund. . . . This duty certainly is no less because created by statutes rather than by contract. It is guarded by other statutes limiting the investments allowed and requiring inspection, with the object of making principal and income secure rather than large. . . . The minimum amount of the dividends generally is as fixed in practice as if it were written in a bond. The practical certainty that a savings bank will pay is greater, in short, than that an average debtor will pay 6 per cent, according to his promise in a note. The only element of uncertainty other than that conditioning all future conduct is the possibility that the dividends may be greater than that which experience has led the depositor to expect. He has a vested right to the dividends,—a vested right that the corporation should take the most prudent steps to secure them, with an identified fund devoted to the result. We do not perceive why the possibility of there being no earnings because of fraud or a cataclysm, or a possibility of the earnings being greater than was expected, should make the right less a present one, subject to and covered by the attachment, than the L.R.A.1917B.

right to the capital which runs the same risk, . . . or than that arising from the promise of a debtor, who may fail or abscond, or, if a corporation, may have no assets. The case certainly is not weakened, it rather seems to us to be strengthened, by the fact that the statutes of Connecticut provide that the levy of attachments and executions upon even the shares of a corporation shall include dividends growing due thereon. The provision indicates a policy, and although, of course, the words do not include dividends from savings banks, as, in our opinion, they did not need to, it is only by imagining unreal distinctions that the policy embodied in the statute, and extending by the common law to interest due upon contract, can be held to exclude the claim to subsequently earned income of ordinary savings banks, when that claim, as we have tried to show, is a vested right. . . . No argument against our conclusion can be based on the right to release the attachment by giving a bond equal to the value of the effects attached. . . . We presume that ordinarily a plaintiff would be satisfied with a bond for the principal of a debt or deposit. If he should raise a question, we will wait for the Connecticut courts to decide whether he might or might not be entitled to more. Finally, the assignment, of course, has no effect upon the rights of the defendant in error. If the attachment would have held dividends as against the original defendant, it holds them as against the assignee."

That dividends on stock which is attached are covered by the attachment was held in Jacobus v. Monongahela Nat. Bank (1888) 35 Fed. 395. The court stated that it is not a case of a distinct and independent fund coming into the garnishee's possession after plea filed, but that the dividends are but an incident to the stock,—the mere fruits thereof,—and are as much within the grasp of the attachment as is the corpus of the stock.

And that dividends to accrue are impounded by a levy upon stock of the debtor is the decision in Farmers & M. Nat. Bank v. Mosher (1904) 68 Neb. 713, 94 N. W. 1003, 100 N. W. 133; Norton v. Norton (1885) 43 Ohio St. 509, 3 N. E. 348.

So, also, in McCarthy Co. v. Boothe (1905) 2 Cal. App. 170, 83 Pac. 175, the court declared that profits and dividends to accrue from stock are impounded equally with the stock itself. And see, to the same effect, Cates v. Consolidated Realty Co. (1914) 25 Cal. App. 531, 144 Pac. 301.

And in Moore v. Gennett (1875) 2 Tenn. Ch. 375, the court said the increase or income of property after the levying of an attachment is given to the creditors by the Code, § 3536.

Rents are not impounded by reason of the levy of an attachment on real estate. Columbia Bank v. Ingersol (1888) 21 Abb. N. C. 241, 1 N. Y. Supp. 54.

That the levy of an attachment upon land confers no right to take the issues or profits of the land so attached was also held in Kothman v. Markson (1886) 34 Kan. 542, 9 Pac. 218. Until the sale and conveyance are made, the court said, the right of possession remains in the debtor; and until the sale is completed in pursuance of the judgment and decree, neither the judgment creditor nor the purchaser at the sale acquires any right to the rents, issues, or profits of the real estate.

But in Stockton v. Hyde (1850) 5 La. Ann. 300, it was held that, by the service of an attachment, the sheriff is in possession of land for the benefit of whom it may concern, the attaching creditor or other parties interested, and so rents accruing from the possession belong to the party for whose benefit the possession is held.

And to the same effect is Summers v. Clark (1878) 30 La. Ann. 436. The decisions in these Louisiana cases, however, are based on the Code provision that "the fruits of an immovable . . . produced while it is under seizure are considered as making part thereof and inures to the benefit of the person making the seizure;" and the further provision that "when the sheriff seizes houses or land he must take at the same time all the rents, issues and revenue which this property may yield."

And in Young v. Hail (1880) 6 Lea (Tenn.) 179, it was held that rents follow the land and go first to the attaching creditors, by virtue of the Code provision that "the property attached if not replevied with its proceeds or increase from the date of levy will be subjected to the satisfaction of the judgment or decree."

Earnings of an attached vessel between the time of the levy of the attachment and the time of sale belong to the owners of the vessel. Richardson v. Kimball (1848) 28 Me. 463.

A colt foaled after the levy is as much in the possession of the constable as the mare; and the rights of property therein are not different from those in the mare. Talbot v. Magee (1894) 59 Mo. App. 347.

And in Blum v. Light (1891) 81 Tex. 414, 16 S. W. 1090, there is a dictum to the effect that if a lien has been acquired by levy on cows with calves, it will, as between the parties themselves, carry with it a lien on the calves after they are born.

J. H. B.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS
EX REL. JOHN B. GASKILL, Appt.,

v.

FOREST HOME CEMETERY COMPANY et al.

(258 Ill. 36, 101 N. E. 219.)

Cemetery — right to exclude colored persons.

1. An incorporated cemetery association, having no power of eminent domain, and no monopoly of the burial places in the vicinity, is not bound to admit to burial the bodies of colored persons who are not lot owners.

For other cases, see Civil Rights, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — tax exemption — effect.

2. The mere exemption of a cemetery from taxation does not fix its character as a public one, so as to prevent its excluding colored persons from burial within its limits. For other cases, see Civil Rights, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Note. — On forbidding burial of negro in cemetery controlled by white persons, see annotation following this case, post, 948. L.R.A.1917B.

Civil rights — cemeteries.

3. A statute giving colored persons the right to equal accommodation in public conveyances and funeral hearses "and all other places of public accommodation and amusement" does not entitle them to accommodation in cemeteries.

For other cases, see Civil Rights, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Constitutional law — 14th Amendment — acts of private corporation.

4. The 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution does not prevent the exclusion of colored persons from the right to burial in cemeteries owned by private corporations.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, II. a, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 20, 1913.)

APPEAL by relator from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Cook County dismissing a petition for a writ of mandamus to compel respondents to receive the body of relator's wife for burial. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. George W. Wilbur for appellant.

Messrs. Pearson & Herrick for appellees.

Cartwright, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The circuit court of Cook county sustained the demurrer of appellees, the Forest Home Cemetery Company and its officers, to the petition of the people, on the relation of John B. Gaskill, for a writ of mandamus, commanding the appellees to receive for burial the body of Pinkie G. Baskill, deceased, late wife of the relator, and to permit the burial thereof in the usual and customary manner, and in a place suitable for such burial, upon the payment of the usual and fixed charges for such service and accommodation. The relator elected to stand by the petition, whereupon it was dismissed at his cost. The petition alleged that the denial by the appellees of the right of burial in the Forest Home Cemetery was an infringement of the rights of the relator under the Constitution of this state and the United States, and an appeal to this court was prayed for, allowed, and perfected.

The following are the material facts alleged in the petition and admitted by the demurrer: The Forest Home Cemetery Company is a corporation organized under the general incorporation act of 1872 (Laws 1871-72, p. 296) to establish a cemetery in Cook county, to acquire lands for that purpose and subdivide and improve the same, and to sell lots for burial purposes. The corporation obtained about 200 acres of land about  $3\frac{1}{2}$  miles west of the city limits of Chicago, and entered upon the business for which it was formed. It has sold many lots to the general public for burial purposes, and still owns and holds many lots for sale for the same purpose. The relator is a colored citizen of the United States and of Cook county. From 1890 to 1896 four of his children died, and they were buried in the cemetery in single burial places, separate from each other. The corporation passed a resolution that, after December 31, 1907, the cemetery would be maintained for the interment of the remains of persons of the white race only, but the remains of colored persons owning lots in the cemetery, and their direct heirs, should be admitted for burial in the lots owned by them. On March 16, 1912, Pinkie B. Gaskill, wife of the relator, died, and he applied for space for the burial of her body, and permission was refused L.R.A.1917B.

solely because it was the body of a colored person. He was ready, willing, and able to pay the fixed charges for the accommodation asked for, but the privilege was denied, and the reason was explained in a letter stating that the officers had no personal prejudice nor ill will toward the colored people, but there had been so much trouble and objection that it was for the best interest of the cemetery to exclude them, and saying: "If the colored people did buy lots it would only make the neighbors angry and kick and remove to some other part of the cemetery or possibly to some other cemetery." The letter placed the refusal upon business grounds and the necessity for the corporation to do what was best for its own interest.

Corporations are creatures of the legislative branch of the government, and their powers and duties are to be determined from their charters, where such powers and duties are defined, having in view at all times the presumption that the general assembly intended to promote the public interest by creating them. If they are created for the purpose of performing a service for the public, or invested with powers concerning which the public at large have a direct and substantial interest, they cannot arbitrarily select the persons for whom they will perform the service or exercise their powers, contrary to the public policy of the state. A corporation formed to serve the public must serve all who apply, on equal terms, and if the corporation devotes its property to a use in which the public have an interest, the owner must submit to be controlled and regulated by the public to the extent of the interest created. Corporations organized to serve the public generally, such as those which furnish water, gas, or electric lights in cities, cannot select their patrons, but must furnish accommodations to all who apply, on equal terms and at reasonable rates. Wagner v. Rock Island, 146 Ill. 139, 21 L.R.A. 519, 34 N. E. 545; Danville v. Danville Water Co. 178 Ill. 299, 69 Am. St. Rep. 304, 53 N. E. 118. As to such corporations there is the additional reason that they have exclusive control of the supply, and those whom they refuse to serve cannot be served at all, which impresses the property with a public interest. One reason for determining that the property of the corporation is affected with a public interest and devoted to a public use is that the corporation may exercise the sovereign power of eminent domain, which can only be granted to a corporation for a public use. That was the fact in the case of Inter-Ocean Pub. Co. v. Associated Press, 184 Ill. 438, 48 L.R.A. 568, 75 Am. St. Rep. 184, 56 N. E. 822, in addition to the fact that the Associated Press had a practical monopoly of furnishing news required by the public and in which the public were vitally interested. So, also, property becomes clothed with a public interest when used in such a manner as to make it of public consequence, and to affect the community at large. New York & C. Grain & Stock Exch. v. Board of Trade, 127 Ill. 153, 2 L.R.A. 411, 11 Am. St. Rep. 107, 19 N. E. 855. None of these considerations apply to the Forest Home Cemetery Company. There is no provision of its charter or rule of public policy declared by any authority competent to make known or establish such policy, requiring it to admit for burial all persons who may apply for the privilege. There is no element of monopoly, since it does not control all burial places in the vicinity of Chicago, and the community at large is not affected so as to impress its property with a public interest. In Rosehill Cemetery Co. v. Hopkinson, 114 Ill. 209, 29 N. E. 685, the corporation possessed the right to condemn property, and on that ground it was held to be a quasi public corporation, and bound to exercise its rights and privileges fairly and impartially as between the owners of lots. The relator in this case was not the owner of a lot, and did not come within the decision in that case, nor the case of Mt. Moriah Cemetery Asso. v. Com. 81 Pa. 235, 22 Am. Rep. 743, where the colored man was the owner of a lot in the cemetery. This corporation did not deny the right of burial to anyone who was the owner of a lot. Undoubtedly a corporation for cemetery purposes may be incorporated to serve the public generally, and endowed with the power of eminent domain. A corporation organized under the Act of 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 90), is authorized to acquire land by condemnation which is necessarily for a public use. But this corporation has no such power.

It is argued that exemption from taxation fixes the character of the corporation as a public one, but the right to exempt it rests on the constitutional provision which includes property used for schools, religious and other purposes, where the corporations are not required to admit to their privileges all persons who may apply. As to private schools, it has been held that they may refuse to admit colored students. State ex rel. Clark v. Maryland Institute, 87 Md. 643, 41 Atl. 126; Booker v. Grand Rapids Medical College, 156 Mich. 95, 24

L.R.A.(N.S.) 447, 120 N. W. 589. The exemption from taxation does not fix the character of the corporation. (238 U. S. 606, 59 L. ed. 1486, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 602.)

It is also claimed that the duty sought to be enforced is conferred by the Act of 1911, concerning civil and legal rights. Laws 1911, p. 288. That act declares that all persons within the jurisdiction of this state shall be entitled to the full and equal enjoyment of the accommodation, advantages, facilities, and privileges of various enumerated places of public accommodation and amusement, including with railroads, street cars, and other public conveyances, funeral hearses, the use of which is not involved in this case, and concluding with the words, "all other places of public accommodation and amusement." Cemeteries are not of the same class as those places which are enumerated, and there is a special provision concerning cemeteries, which shows that they were not intended to be embraced within the description of places of public accommodation and amusement. That provision is that there shall be no discrimination on account of race or color in the price to be charged and paid for lots or graves in any cemetery or place for burying the dead, and that provision would be superfluous if cemeteries were already included in the general provision. It was held in Cecil v. Green, 161 Ill. 265, 32 L.R.A. 566, 43 N. E. 1105, that a drug store in which soda water was sold was not a place of public accommodation and amusement within the Civil Rights Act (Hurd's Rev. Stat. 1911, chap. 38, §§ 42i-42j) then in force, and that the keeper thereof might refuse to sell soda water to a colored person. At least as convincing reasons could be given for excluding cemeteries.

The refusal to permit the body of relator's late wife to be buried in the Forest Home Cemetery did not infringe any right of the relator under the Constitution of this state, and he has no right respecting such burial under the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, which only applies to acts of the state. Virginia v. Rives, 100 U. S. 313, 25 L. ed. 667, 3 Am. Crim. Rep. 524.

The judgment is affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied April 3, 1913.

Writ of error dismissed by the Supreme Court of the United States, March 8, 1915.

Annotation—Forbidding burial of negro in cemetery controlled by white persons.

Supplementing the note to Richmond Cemetery Co. v. Walker, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 155. L.R.A.1917B.

PEOPLE EX REL. GASKILL v. FOREST HOME CEMETERY Co. ante, 946, appears to be the only case decided since the preparation of the earlier note. But attention is directed to Hertle v. Riddell, 127 Ky. 623, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 796, 128 Am. St. Rep. 364, 106 S. W. 282, holding that the property rights of a lot owner in a cemetery set apart for the burial of the white race, and for cemetery purposes only, are violated by the burial of a dog in an adjoining lot, and that the fact that a physical nuisance is not thereby created is immaterial. It was further held in this case that such burial of a dog might be remedied by mandatory injunction against the cemetery and the offending lot owner.

See also St. Peters Evangelical Lutheran Church v. Bean (1906) 15 Pa. Dist. R. 636, holding that a certificate declaring that the holder is entitled to a certain lot, to be used for burial purposes only, but transferring no interest in the soil, authorizes the interment only of human bodies, and that the holder can neither bury his dog nor erect a monument thereon to its memory. It is further held that such a use might be enjoined, although there was no general regulation on the subject, inasmuch as the authorities were not required to anticipate an attempt to do such an act.

As to the validity of regulations concerning the care or improvement of cemetery lots, see the note to Nicholson v. Daffin, L.R.A.1915E, 168.

Various other questions in relation to cemeteries are treated in notes cited in Indexes to L.R.A. Notes, under the title, "Cemeteries," and many phases of discrimination against colored persons are discussed in notes indexed under the title "Civil Rights" and other titles referred to by cross references under that title.

L. A. W.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

FALK J. YOUNKER, Appt.,

v.

R. R. McCUTCHEN et al.

(— Iowa, —, 159 N. W. 441.)

Party wall — change of temporary to permanent building — duty to contribute to cost of wall.

1. That the building on one side of a wall used as a party wall was constructed by tenants with the right to remove it, and that for most of its length the wall was constructed entirely on the property of the adjoining owner, does not, in case the latter removes it and constructs a new wall on the true line, to bear the weight of a larger building, replacing the connections of the tenants' building as they were before, take it out of the operation of a statute giving every coproprietor of a wall the right to increase its height and strength at his own expense, to which the adjoining owner shall contribute when he utilizes the addition, and therefore the owner of such adjoining property is not, upon purchasing his tenant's interest and improving the building on his property, bound to contribute to the cost of the additions to the wall unless he makes use of them, although his building has become part of the reality.

For other cases, see Party Wall, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — use by tenant — contribution by property owner.

2. A property owner is not bound to contribute to the cost of a party wall erected by his adjoining owner, and utilized by his own tenant while the lease continues.

For other cases, see Party Wall, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(September 29, 1916.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Polk County sustaining a motion to dismiss a petition filed to recover the value of one half of a party wall owned and constructed by plaintiff and used by defendants, and to recover the value of one half of the ground upon which the wall was located. Affirmed.

Statement by Preston, J.:

Action at law brought by appellant to recover the value of one half of what plaintiff calls a wall in common, owned by and constructed at the cost of the appellant and used by appellee, and to recover for the value of 9 inches of ground, being one-half of the ground upon which said wall is located. Appellant alleged in his petition that shortly after the plumbing company removed from defendants' premises, and when, as he says, it had no longer any right in, or to, the use of the premises nor the building situated thereon, the defendants used and are using the west wall of plaintiff's building up to the top of the second floor thereof, being a distance of 42 feet, as a wall in common or party wall, and is the east wall of the building on their premises; that defendants have made openings in said wall, inserted joists and timbers for the building, and removed bricks therefrom; that they have failed and refused to pay plaintiff the value of so much of said

Note. — For utilization of party wall by lessee as affecting lessor's duty to contribute to cost thereof see annotation following this case, post, 960.

L.R.A.1917B.

wall as they are using as a wall in common and for 9 inches, or one half of the ground upon which said wall is located; that the value of the wall as used by defendants is $750, and the value of the 9 inches of ground $1,125. Trial was had to the court without a jury. At the close of the evidence defendants moved that plaintiff's petition be dismissed and the motion was sustained. Judgment was rendered against plaintiff for costs, and he appeals.

Messrs. Strock & Wallace and Miller & Wallingford, for appellant:

The building joined temporarily to plaintiff's wall was personal property up to the time it was acquired by defendants under contract and bill of sale from their tenants.

Corwin v. Moorehead, 43 Iowa, 466; Jones v. Cooley, 106 Iowa, 165, 76 N. W. 652; Fischer v. Johnson, 106 Iowa, 181, 76 N. W. 658; McCarthy v. Trumacher, 108 Iowa, 284, 78 N. W. 1104; Union Terminal Co. v. Wilmar & S. F. R. Co. 116 Iowa, 392, 90 N. W. 92; Daly v. Simonson, 126 Iowa, 716, 102 N. W. 780.

Temporary or provisional use of a wall abutting a division line will not suffice to charge the adjoining owners; nor will such use justify a purchaser in assuming that all rights with reference to party walls between neighbors have been adjusted.

Deere, W. & Co. v. Weir-Shugart Co. 91 Iowa, 422, 59 N. W. 255; Beggs v. Duling, 102 Iowa, 13, 70 N. W. 732; Percival v. Colonial Invest. Co. 140 Iowa, 275, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 293, 115 N. W. 941; Pew v. Buchanan, 72 Iowa, 637, 34 N. W. 453.

The right to recover contribution for the party wall arose when the adjoining owners made permanent use of it.

Zugenbuhler v. Gilliam, 3 Iowa, 391; Bertram v. Curtis, 31 Iowa, 46; Deere, W. & Co. v. Weir-Shugart Co. 91 Iowa, 422, 59 N. W. 255; Pew v. Buchanan, 72 Iowa, 637, 34 N. W. 453; Molony v. Dixon, 65 Iowa, 136, 54 Am. Rep. 1, 21 N. W. 488; Monroe Lodge v. Albia State Bank, 112 Iowa, 487, 84 N. W. 682; Beggs v. Duling, 102 Iowa, 13, 70 N. W. 732; Pier v. Salot, 134 Iowa, 357, 111 N. W. 989.

Every proprietor joining a wall has the right of making it a wall in common by repaying to the owner thereof one half of the value of the part he wishes to hold in common, and one half of the value of the ground on which it is built, if the person who has built it has laid the foundation entirely upon his own ground.

Molony v. Dixon, 65 Iowa, 136, 54 Am. Rep. 1, 21 N. W. 488; Murrell v. Fowler, 3 La. Ann. 165; Heine v. Merrick, 41 La. Ann. 194, 5 So. 760, 6 So. 637. L.R.A.1917B.

Messrs. Cummins, Hume, & Bradshaw, for appellees:

Iowa's "Party Wall Statute" violates the Constitution of the state, taking, as it does, private property for private use, without just compensation, and without due process of law, and is sustained by this court only under the doctrine of stare decisis, and as an extreme exercise of the police power of the state.

Thomson v. Curtis, 28 Iowa, 229; Bertram v. Curtis, 31 Iowa, 46; Lederer v. Colonial Invest. Co. 130 Iowa, 157, 106 N. W. 357, 8 Ann. Cas. 317; Swift v. Calnan, 102 Iowa, 206, 37 L.R.A. 462, 63 Am. St. Rep. 443, 71 N. W. 233.

In the legal sense of the term, a party wall can only exist in two ways,—by contract or statute. The common law creates no such right.

30 Cyc. 775; 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 240, 242; Whiting v. Gaylord, 66 Conn. 337, 50 Am. St. Rep. 87, 34 Atl. 85; Gilmore v. Driscoll, 122 Mass. 207, 23 Am. Rep. 312, 14 Mor. Min. Rep. 37; Quinn v. Morse, 130 Mass. 317; List v. Hornbrook, 2 W. Va. 340; Bonomi v. Blackhouse, 9 H. L. Cas. 504; Priess v. Parker, 67 Ala. 500; Sherred v. Cisco, 4 Sandf. 480; Orman v. Day, 5 Fla. 385.

The right to enforce contribution to the cost of party walls is to be strictly limited to the terms of the statute.

Hoffstot v. Voight, 146 Pa. 632, 23 Atl. 351.

Where a lot owner does not build exactly upon the dividing line between his and his neighbor's lot, as provided by the statute, but, by mistake, extends his wall a few inches over upon the adjoining lot, the wall cannot be regarded as a statutory party wall, and the builder will be compelled, by order of court, to remove the projecting portion of the wall from off the adjoining lot.

Pile v. Pedrick, 167 Pa. 296, 46 Am. St. Rep. 677, 31 Atl. 646, 647.

Where "party walls" bestride a coterminal line, the coproprietors own in severalty the portions of the wall resting upon their own land, and the middle line of the wall marks the line of the adjacent lot owners.

Lederer v. Colonial Invest. Co. 130 Iowa, 157, 106 N. W. 357, 8 Ann. Cas. 317.

In the absence of proof overcoming the presumption that the cost of the wall has been adjusted, and that it is a wall in common, both de facto and de jure, the wall, to the center thereof, passes to the vendee of the adjacent owner, free from any liability to contribute to its cost.

Bertram v. Curtis, 31 Iowa, 46.

Party walls do not necessarily have to be located exactly upon the true dividing line, but, provided they are used for party-wall purposes, they may stand a considerable distance therefrom, and do not thereby lose their character as party walls under the statute.

Molony v. Dixon, 65 Iowa, 136, 54 Am. Rep. 1, 21 N. W. 488; Zugenbuhler v. Giliam, 3 Iowa, 391.

Where, by agreement of adjoining owners, the wall of an old building belonging to one of them is destroyed, and the wall of a new building belonging to the other is erected in its place, the insertion of the joists of the old building into the new wall, thereby connecting it with the new building, does not make the owner of the old building liable for contribution, even though the old building be extended some feet to the rear, and the new wall be used as a wall of this extension.

Shaw v. Hitchcock, 119 Mass. 254; Fox v. Mission Free School, 120 Mo. 349, 25 S. W. 172.

The Des Moines Plumbing & Heating Company being the "first user" of the new wall, it, and it alone, if anyone, became liable for contribution to the plaintiff.

Thomson v. Curtis, 28 Iowa, 229; Bert-ram v. Curtis, 31 Iowa, 46; Beggs v. Duling, 102 Iowa, 13, 70 N. W. 732; Capital City Invest. Co. v. Burnham, 143 Iowa, 147, 121 N. W. 708; Percival v. Colonial Invest. Co. 140 Iowa, 275, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 293, 115 N. W. 941.

All liability for contribution for that portion of the wall built by plaintiff and now used by defendants as their west wall, if any there was, was adjusted, settled, and discharged by the written contract of July 12, 1909, between plaintiff and defendants' lessee, the Des Moines Plumbing Company, which contract was thereafter fully executed and performed.

Harvey v. Tama County, 58 Iowa, 228, 5 N. W. 130; Porter v. Chicago, I. & D. R. Co. 99 Iowa, 351, 68 N. W. 724; Leavitt v. Morrow, 6 Ohio St. 71, 67 Am. Dec. 334; Crumlish v. Central Improv. Co. 38 W. Va. 390, 23 L.R.A. 120, 45 Am. St. Rep. 872, 18 S. E. 456.

Preston, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The case is somewhat complicated, but the facts are not in dispute. There was some evidence introduced, but the facts are shown largely by the pleadings and the admissions therein and the stipulations of counsel. That there may be a better understanding of the situation we attach a plat of the properties in controversy.

L.R.A.1917B.

The plaintiff and defendants bought their properties at about the same time in November, 1906. The defendants claim that the wall between the properties is a party wall under § 2999 of the statute, to be later referred to, and, as we understand it, appellant claims it to be a party wall under § 2994 and other sections of the statute, though in his reply argument he claims that the east wall was at no time a party wall, but that, if it was such, that characteristic of the wall was lost when the appellees and appellant entered into the contract fixing the dividing line, and made the conveyances to each other which put almost, if not all, of this wall on plaintiff's premises. No mention is made in that contract and the conveyances of the wall in question.

The contract fixing the dividing line and the conveyances to each other were executed May 7, 1907. Plaintiff purchased his property of one Bertha Clapp Harbach. On said May 7, 1907, plaintiff was the owner, and by and through his tenants was in possession of his property, which is described: "The east third of lot 1 and of the north third of lot 2 in block 1 of the town of Fort Des Moines, now within the corporate limits of the city of Des Moines, Polk county, Iowa."

Plaintiff's property comprised two business lots fronting north on Locust street, and the business lots were locally known as 712 and 714 Locust street. There was a public alley east of it, and the property extended south from Locust street 88 feet. The building on the property was 80 feet deep, leaving a private alley 8 feet wide in the rear. On the date last mentioned defendants were owners in fee and by their tenants were in possession of their property described as follows: "The middle third of lot 1 and of the north third of lot 2, in block 1 of the town of Fort Des Moines, now within the corporate limits of the city of Des Moines, Polk county, Iowa."

This parcel of land also comprised two business lots, fronting north, adjoining on the west the plaintiff's property. Defendants' lots were locally known as 716 and 718 Locust street 716 being east of 718. There were buildings upon both plaintiff's and defendants' properties, partly two story and partly one story. After plaintiff purchased his property, it was learned that the frontage on Locust street from the alley to Eighth street was about 2 feet more than 132 feet, as then supposed; that there was some dispute as to the west boundary line of the property described in his contract of purchase. The frontage was divided equally by the three lot owners, so that appellant owned one third, or 44.72 feet west of the alley, and defendants owned 44.72 feet next west; and on May 7, 1907, a written contract, before referred to, was entered into, fixing the boundary line between appellant's and appellees' properties.

The contract of May 7th was signed by plaintiff and defendants and their wives, and by plaintiff's grantor, Bertha Clapp Harbach. The contract established a line 44 feet and 6 $\frac{1}{2}$  inches west of the east line of lot 1, and north one third of lot 2, as the boundary line between the properties, and each party quitclaimed to the other the real estate lying on the other side so established. But no mention was made in this agreement or in any agreement entered into between the plaintiff and defendants of or concerning the party wall then and theretofore separating the buildings upon the adjoining lots.

As the east side of the east wall of the old building No. 716 Locust street (defendants' east lot) was  $\frac{1}{2}$  of a foot, or 4.8 inches, east of the newly established dividing line at the rear, and as it veered slightly to the east as it approached Locust street, until, at the south line of Locust street, its east side was  $\frac{1}{2}$  of a foot, or 10.8 inches, east of said newly established dividing line, this newly established dividing line cut off most of the east wall, and, at the front, 2 or 3 inches of the building No. 716. In other words, most of the old wall and 2 or 3 inches of the building itself, near Locust street, were thus made to extend over and to rest upon the plaintiff's lot. For this reason, as defendants claim, and for the reason that the Des Moines Plumbing Company still held a lease of said building which did not expire until April 1, 1910, the following provisions were incorporated in the agreement, to wit:

"This agreement and conveyance is made subject to the lease or leases now held by the Des Moines Plumbing Company, covering a portion of the premises hereinbefore described, and is not in any way to affect or disturb any rights of said Des Moines Plumbing Company which have been heretofore acquired upon said lease or leases, or which have been acquired by it, by possession and occupancy of said premises, or any part thereof.

"Neither shall this agreement convey or give any right whatsoever to the said Bertha Clapp Harbach and Falk I. Younker, or either of them, their successors or assigns, to any lease or leases with the Des Moines Plumbing Company, nor to collect or receive any part or portion of the rents payable by said company under said lease or leases, or any part of the premises now occupied by it thereunder; but the said R. R. McCutchen and W. F. Mitchell, their successors or assigns, shall have the same right to said rents, and to collect and receive the rents hereafter payable by said Des Moines Plumbing Company, its successors or assigns, under said lease or leases, for the use and occupancy of any part of the said premises now occupied by the said Des Moines Plumbing Company thereunder, until the expiration of the period covered by said lease or leases, as though this agreement had not been made."

At the time this contract was executed defendants' property No. 716 Locust street was occupied by the Des Moines Plumbing & Heating Company, a copartnership composed of W. M. Kubec and C. W. Rosene, under a ten-year written lease from the former owner of the property, one Sarah A. Clapp. The lease will be referred to later. Some fifteen years before the date of the contract fixing the dividing line, or on October 1, 1892, Sarah A. Clapp, the then owner of the premises now owned by defendants, had made an eight-year lease of the premises No. 716 Locust street to one C. W. Fowler, which lease expired April 1, 1900. The Fowler lease provided that the lessee "agrees not to sell, assign, or transfer this lease, nor underlet said premises, or any portion thereof, without the written consent of the lessor." Another paragraph of the lease provides that the lessee "agrees to erect a building, to be used for plumbing and gas-fitting purposes on said premises." Another paragraph of the lease provides that the lessee reserve the right "upon the termination of this lease to remove the buildings from said premises provided he has complied with the covenants and agreements herein contained; otherwise the same shall remain as security for the performance and discharge thereof."

Fowler built the building No. 716 shortly after he leased the premises, and plaintiff, in his petition, alleges that he built it in compliance with said written lease. Defendants, in their answer, admit that Fowler built the building in the summer of 1892. Kube, one of the occupants, testified that he had been a member of the Des Moines Plumbing & Heating Company for nineteen or twenty years, and that Fowler built the building and that the plumbing company went into the property in the early 90's. The ten-year lease, before referred to, from Sarah A. Clapp to the plumbing company for the property known as 716 Locust street began April 1, 1900, and expired April 1, 1910. The lessee named in and who subscribed this lease is the Des Moines Plumbing Company, and appellees regard it as important that in this lease the premises are described as real estate is usually described, with no reservation of or reference to the ownership of the brick building located thereon. The plaintiff alleges in his petition that the Des Moines Plumbing Company, a partnership consisting of C. W. Rosene and W. M. Kube, some time during the year 1895, with the consent of the lessor, succeeded to all the rights of the lessee, C. W. Fowler, in and to the eight-year lease and the building erected by said Fowler. This is denied by the answer, and defendants specifically deny that the Des Moines Plumbing Company, or any other person, firm, or corporation other than the owner in fee of the leased premises, viz., the said Sarah A. Clapp, became the owner of said building upon the termination of said lease. While, as above stated, plaintiff alleges in his petition that the plumbing company, with the consent of the lessor, succeeded to the rights of Fowler, there is no evidence in the record of the assignment of the eight-year lease by Fowler to the plumbing company or its members or to anyone; nor is there any evidence in the record of the written consent of the lessor, Sarah A. Clapp, to an assignment of that lease, nor of her verbal consent to an assignment of it; and there is nothing to show that Mrs. Clapp ever waived any provision of the lease. It should be noticed also that the ten-year lease was granted to the Des Moines Plumbing Company, a different person than C. W. Fowler, who was the lessee of the prior eight-year lease; the lease to the plumbing company gives no title to, or right of removal of, the brick building located upon the premises. There is nothing in the ten-L.R.A.1917B.

year lease itself showing it to be a renewal or extension of the eight-year lease, and nothing to show that the plumbing company was the vendee of Fowler of the building built by him, or the assignee of his conditional right to remove said building at the termination of his lease. The situation remained the same from May 7, 1907, until July 12, 1909, when the plaintiff, having, in the fall of 1908, acquired a deed from his vendor, Bertha Clapp Harbach, and being about to erect a new brick building upon his lots, three stories in height, with a basement under it, by written agreement of said date, plaintiff purchased from the Des Moines Plumbing & Heating Company, lessee, a right to remove that portion of the building No. 716 Locust street which extended east of the dividing line theretofore agreed upon by the owners of the properties, and to build the west wall of his new building upon the dividing line theretofore established by the fee owners. This agreement provided, among other things, as follows: "And the said party of the second part (the plaintiff) will, at his own cost and expense, insert the joists that reach said new wall and attach the building now occupied by the party of the first part (the Des Moines Plumbing Company) to the said wall constructed by the party of the second part, and finish the west surface of said newly constructed wall for a distance of two (2) stories above the ground, so that the rooms in said building and the building now occupied by the said party of the first part shall, as soon after the completion of the said wall as possible, be left in as good condition as the same are now in; that the party of the second part will do such repapering and refinishing on the inside of the rooms now occupied by the party of the first part as shall be necessary to leave the same in as good condition as they are now in. And the said party of the second part agrees that he will construct said new wall and perform the terms of this contract as soon as practicable."

The defendants were not parties to this agreement. Upon the execution of this agreement plaintiff proceeded to erect his building. He tore down the east wall of defendants' building, a party wall, as is claimed, and undermined it. The concrete foundation, or at least the footing for the foundation of the new wall, was built so as to project from 4 to 6 inches west of the dividing line and upon defendants' property. The brick wall of the basement, above the foundation, was built entirely upon plaintiff's ground, the west side thereof abutting upon the dividing line agreed upon in the contract of May 7, 1907, excepting at the north or Locust street end, where it was widened into a pier 3 feet wide east and west, and 4½ feet long north and south. Seventeen inches of this pier projects west of the dividing line and over and upon defendants' lot.

In accordance with the contract between the plaintiff and the plumbing company of July 12, 1909, as plaintiff's west wall was being built, the plaintiff himself inserted in it the joists of the main floor, the second floor, and the roof of the building No. 716, and restored, or at least partially restored, the inside of the east wall of said No. 716, as provided in said contract with the lessee of the building. On March 25, 1910, the ten-year lease of the Des Moines Plumbing Company of the building No. 716 being about to expire, and, as defendants claim, in order to settle and amicably to adjust the rights of said company, or, as it was then styled, the Des Moines Plumbing & Heating Company, if any it had in and to the building, heating plant and fixtures in the buildings, the defendants entered into a written contract with the Des Moines Plumbing & Heating Company with reference thereto. This contract provides among other things: "Party of the first part (Des Moines Plumbing & Heating Company) does hereby sell, assign and transfer to the parties of the second part (R. R. McCutchen and W. F. Mitchell) all their right, title, and interest in and to the building now owned, and warranted to be free from liens and encumbrances, and occupied by the party of the first part; except the party of the first part reserves the right to take from said building the heating plant, and pipes and radiators connected with the same, the glass and doors in the present front of the first story of said building, the sash at the rear end of the present building, and the sash in the front of the rear of the second story, and the plumbing fixtures on the first floor."

About April 15, 1910, the "Des Moines Plumbing Company," or the "Des Moines Plumbing & Heating Company," having surrendered possession of the building No. 716 to the successor of its lessor, the defendants herein, the latter commenced and proceeded to remodel the front thereof, strengthen its floors, repair its roof, and repair and redecorate its interior walls, without paying, or offering to pay, or in any way acknowledging liability to, the plaintiff for any portion of the cost of the west wall of plaintiff's building with which he had replaced the old wall of defendants' building.

In making the changes or repairs on their building, defendants have not put any basement thereunder. Defendants' building No. 716 Locust street was built about the year 1892. It was 80 feet deep. It had no cellar or basement under it, and, as we understand it, there was no cellar or basement under plaintiff's building until he rebuilt. The foundation of the east wall of defendants' building, for its full length, rested upon the surface, or upon the ground a few inches below the surface, of the lot. For a distance of 25 feet south of Locust street the brick wall of defendants' building was two stories high; thence south 20 feet it was one story high, and built of brick. For the next 19 feet south it was two stories high, the first story built of brick, the second story built of wood; 2 by 6 studding or uprights resting upon the top of the brick wall, not lathed or plastered, but built against the adjoining weather board wall of the building to the east, No. 714. There was no space between this wooden portion of defendants' wall and the corresponding wall to the east; one was built against the other. The rear 16 feet of this wall, two stories high, was built of studding, and this portion of the wall was the wall for both buildings, Nos. 716 and 714. Testimony shows that the roofs were practically one roof over the two buildings and that there was no division between the two roofs. One of plaintiff's witnesses, a general contractor whose shop was the second story of plaintiff's building, No. 714 Locust street, up to the time it was demolished by plaintiff, testified: "I moved out just before Younker commenced to improve; noticed the work occasionally as it progressed. He tore down the walls along the west side of his property and built a brick wall there. They sawed off the joists of the other, to my recollection, and let them stick in on the brick wall they were building up, and bricked around them, and that held the joists. When they built up their wall to the first floor, they cut off the joists long enough to stick into that wall, and then bricked up. When they came to the second floor, they did the same thing. When they came to the roof, they did the same thing, and I should say they flashed the roof on the Younker wall. It is flashed there now, so that Younker's new wall now, the west wall, is the dividing wall, and the east wall of the building No. 716 Locust street, back 80 feet."

One of the defendants' witnesses who is also a general contractor, testifies: "They built, in the construction of our building into their wall, the whole distance of 80 feet. The joists at the rear end and towards the rear of the building reached to the new wall. Probably all of them did not reach. On the short pieces they spiked pieces, or nailed pieces of joists onto the sides of them, and extended them through so they would reach into the wall. I am sure all the first-floor joists went into the new wall. The second story was connected in the same manner, and the floor joists were put into the Younker wall by Younker. The ceiling and the roof were connected in the same manner. They finished the repairs of the building and put it back in the same condition it was before they tore this wall down. They plastered portions of the brick wall, and papered some of them, and put baseboards along the brick wall on that side where it had been taken out; restored the building practically in accordance with the Younker contract with the Des Moines Plumbing Company. The roof was fastened on. I do not think it was counter-flashed. What I mean by 'counter-flashed' is putting tin up over the tarred and graveled roof, so as to keep the water from running down behind at any time."

In April or May, 1910, soon after it was vacated by the plumbing company, defendants commenced repairing their building, No. 716. The dimensions of the building were not changed in any particular nor was the east wall extended in any direction, either up or down, or north or south.

In describing what they did, one of the defendants testified as follows: After the plumbing company vacated, we put in a new plate glass front in our building; put in a new floor on the first floor; plastered all the walls of the first floor—a part of the first floor was plastered. We finished plastering the back, to the rear, put new windows at the rear to give more light, and new doors, and fixed up the skylight with new glass, new frame, and painted it. We did nothing with the east wall except plastering, papering, and painting it, except in front, at the sidewalk line, against the east wall, we put in an iron post where there was a wooden one. The iron post rested on the foundation that the wooden post rested on.

Q. Was that all you did with the wall?

A. Yes, sir; we put in some extra floor joints along by the side of some that were not, we considered, strong enough, in the way they had been spliced, to reach the brick wall.

Q. Where Younker had spliced them in some places, you put in new solid ones?

A. Joists. We in no way changed the size or the shape of the building, nor occupied any more wall than before. Did not increase the size of the light wall, did not excavate under the building. Our east wall is no longer in any dimension than it was prior to the Younker improvement.

Upon cross-examination Mr. Mitchell said:

In putting in these new joists we took out the brick alongside of the joists that had been built in, and made that hole larger, L.R.A.1917B.

and stuck our joists into that hole, by the side of the other joists. We made a new hole for the new joists. Enlarged the hole that was there.

And upon redirect examination, to the following questions he made the following answers:

Q. Did you make new holes, or simply enlarge the holes that Younker had already made?

A. Enlarged the holes that were already made.

Q. And put these new joists alongside of the old ones, which had already been run into the wall?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were there no no other joists put in except those by you?

A. No, sir.

This testimony is not disputed. It was stipulated that the surface area of the Younker wall, now used as the east wall of defendants' property, is 80 feet by 23 feet, less 20 by 10 feet above the first-floor joists. As we understand it, the 20 by 10 feet just referred to is the east side of the open court or light well which is and has always occupied a space in the center of the second story of defendants' building. Defendants allege that they paid to the plumbing company $148.40, referred to in the contract of March 25, 1910, and permitted the plumbing company to occupy the premises free of rent to April 15, 1910, and claim that by this they paid to the plumbing company for the use of the wall for which plaintiff is now asking pay, and the evidence shows that they did pay such sum of money and permitted the plumbing company to remain in the building, but plaintiff denies that this constitutes a payment for the interest in the wall. The east line or side of the plumbing company building extended over and upon plaintiff's property its entire length; but, as the witnesses put it, it was askew, so that it extended farther on the north line than it did at the south. The plaintiff, in his petition, at first offered to remove so much of the foundation or footing as extended on defendants' lot, but by an amendment withdrew such offer, and pleaded as an estoppel against defendants that defendants were present when the footing and foundation of plaintiff's new wall was being constructed. There may be some other facts to which it may be necessary to refer in discussing the different points.

At the close of the testimony appellees moved the court to dismiss appellant's petition and to enter judgment against him for costs on substantially the following grounds: That the evidence fails to establish a cause of action against the appellees, or that they are indebted to the appellant; that the first person who used the appellant's west wall as a party wall was the Des Moines Plumbing & Heating Company, appellees' leasees, said leasees, if anyone, being liable to appellant for the cost of said wall; that all liability of appellant's neighbor to contribute to the cost of appellant's wall was adjusted and settled by the contracts exhibit D, dated July 12, 1909, between the appellant and the Des Moines Plumbing & Heating Company, and that appellees are not liable to appellant because they received a bill of sale dated March 25, 1910, from the Des Moines Plumbing & Heating Company, conveying the Des Moines Plumbing & Heating Company building to appellees free from liens and encumbrances; and that the wall erected by appellant comes within § 2999 of the Code, and the evidence fails to show that the appellees were using as the east wall of their building any more of the new wall erected by the appellant than of the old wall which formerly divided the coterminous properties.

1. Appellant's first proposition is that the building joined temporarily, as they say, to appellant's wall, was personal property up to the time it was acquired by appellees under contract and bill of sale from appellees' tenants, and they cite in support of the proposition: Corwin v. Moorehead, 43 Iowa, 466; Jones v. Cooley, 106 Iowa, 165, 76 N. W. 652; Fischer v. Johnson, 106 Iowa, 181, 76 N. W. 658; McCarthy v. Trumacher, 108 Iowa, 284, 78 N. W. 1104; Union Terminal Co. v. Wilmar & S. F. R. Co. 116 Iowa, 392, 90 N. W. 92; Daly v. Simonson, 126 Iowa, 716, 102 N. W. 780.

Appellees contend that, under the circumstances of this case, the cases cited do not support appellant's contention. Some of them are cases where a building was erected on leased land; that, as between the parties, the building should be considered as personal property. Others involved the question of purchasers with notice of the agreement. In one of them it was held that the execution of a lease providing that the lessee should deliver the leased premises in as good condition as they were then in, upon the termination of the lease, does not deprive the lessee of the right granted to him by the lessor under a prior lease to the same premises to remove improvements erected by him, the occupancy being continuous under both leases. Counsel for appellees concede that from these holdings the court is inclined to hold that where a lessee holds under a lease which reserves to him the right to remove the fixtures, by taking a renewal lease which contains no such reservation he does not surrender his claim to the fixtures. But that this is where the L.R.A.1917B.

subsequent lease ran from the same owner, or his grantee, who had notice of the reservation, to the same lessee. This is true, that in none of the cases cited is recognized the right of removal by a lessee of a building erected upon real estate by a prior and different lessee, under a prior and different lease, simply because the first lease granted to the lessee therein any such right of removal.

On the other hand, it is contended by defendants at this point that at all times during their ownership of the east building lot now owned by them they have been owners of the building No. 716 located on the east of said lots as well as of the earth beneath it, and that the plumbing company, defendants' lessee, has never been the owner of said building, and they cite in support of this 1 Co. Inst. 4; 2 Bl. Com. 17-19; Tiedeman, Real Prop. § 2; and that a conveyance of land, unless exceptions or reservations be therein made, includes not only the earth, but everything attached to it, whether by nature, as trees, etc., or artificially, by man, as buildings and the like; citing Van Wagner v. Van Nostrand, 19 Iowa, 422. And they say that, in cases where walls in common or party walls bear on a coterminous line, the coproprietors own in severalty the portions of the wall resting upon their own land, and the middle line of the wall marks the line of the adjacent lot owners; citing Lederer v. Colonial Invest. Co. 130 Iowa, 157, 106 N. W. 357, 8 Ann. Cas. 317. Appellant also contends that the temporary or provisional use of a wall abutting a division line will not suffice to charge the adjoining owners; nor will such use justify a purchaser in assuming that all rights with reference to party walls between neighbors have been adjusted. As we understand it, appellant's theory is that because, as they claim, the building erected by Fowler was personal property, and, being such, was movable and temporary in character, and that the east wall of the building was, for the same reason, but temporarily joined to appellant's west wall, that it was a temporary or provisional use of the wall. In support of the proposition they cite Beggs v. Duling, 102 Iowa, 13, 70 N. W. 732; Deere, W. & Co. v. Weir-Shugart, 91 Iowa, 422, 59 N. W. 255; and other cases.

Appellees refer to the same cases in support of their contention that the east wall of appellees' building and the west wall of appellant's building, after the same was reconstructed by appellant, is permanent in character, and forms the partition wall of the two buildings. We think the fact that a building may be torn down or removed from leased premises at the termination of the lease does not necessarily affect the character of its walls or the permanency of their jointure with adjoining walls. We are dealing now with the new wall as reconstructed by appellant, and the rights and obligations of the parties therein under the record in this case. Again, if appellant's theory is that, because the building No. 716 was personal property, the east wall, prior to its destruction by appellant, was temporary in character, then we think such a claim is not borne out by the testimony. It is shown that the whole building and wall were built in 1892. The wall had been used as a wall in common of the adjacent properties for eighteen years. Had it not been replaced by the appellant, it would doubtless still be doing duty as a party wall. It is suggested by appellees that, even if the plumbing company had the right to remove the old building, upon the ground that it was personal property belonging to it, without proof that it had succeeded to the rights of a prior owner, it would have no right to remove the east wall,—a wall in common used by it and its neighbor on the east. But, after all, it seems to us the question is, What are the rights and obligations of the parties as to the new wall? No claim is made by appellant that it is entitled to contribution for the old wall, but only as to the new wall built by appellant to take its place. It seems to us that these propositions are not controlling in this case, but that the determination of the case turns upon points discussed later in the opinion.

It should be said here that appellant also claims that he built the new wall under § 2994 of the Code, and that the right to recover contribution for the party wall arose when the adjoining owners (defendants) made permanent use of it. They claim also that, under the statute and decisions, every proprietor adjoining a wall has the right of making it a wall in common by repaying to the owner thereof one half of the value of the part he wishes to hold in common, and one half the value of the ground upon which it is built, if the person who has built it has laid the foundation entirely upon his own ground. We shall hereafter refer to the party wall statutes. As shown in the statement of facts we have given, the plumbing company, appellees' tenants, were the first users of the new wall reconstructed by appellant as a party wall, and they had so used the old wall for many years, and it appears without dispute that the defendants have not used the new wall in any different way than was the old and the new wall used by the plumbing company. There has never been any agreement between the owners of the fee in regard to the party wall in controversy. The contract of May 7, 1907, before referred to, makes no reference to the party wall in question, so that, as before shown, the only agreement in regard to this wall was between the tenants of some of the owners and some of the owners.

2. Appellant concedes the correctness of the first and second legal propositions of appellees. The first of these propositions is that the Iowa Party Wall Statute, title 14, chap. 10, of the Code (§§ 2994-3003), was taken from articles of the Civil Code of Louisiana; these from the Code Napoleon; that the constitutionality of the statute is sustained by the courts only under the doctrine of stare decisis, and as an extreme exercise of the police power of the state. The second proposition of appellees is that party walls are unknown to the common law. They are creations either of contract or of statute. Being derogatory of the common law, they are strictly construed, and, in order to enforce any rights thereunder, the party must bring himself strictly within the letter of the law. That in the case at bar there is no special agreement between the adjoining owners concerning the wall on the line between them; that plaintiff's rights, therefore, must be determined solely by our statute laws applicable to the facts established by the evidence.

In support of the second proposition, appellees cite 30 Cyc. 775; 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 240, 242; Whiting v. Gaylord, 66 Conn. 337, 50 Am. St. Rep. 87, 34 Atl. 85. Under this proposition they also cite List v. Hornbrook, 2 W. Va. 340. To the point that where a wall has been erected by the owner of a lot upon the boundary line between his and the adjoining lot, resting partly upon each, in the absence of an agreement so to do the common law imposes no obligation upon the owner of the adjoining lot to contribute to the cost of its erection, and, as sustaining the point, they cite Preiss v. Parker, 67 Ala. 500; Orman v. Day, 5 Fla. 385. They also cite Wachstein v. Christopher, 128 Ga. 229, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 917, 119 Am. St. Rep. 381, 57 S. E. 511, as holding that in such a case the builder of the wall may be ejected, although only a few inches of the foundation of his wall projects upon the adjoining owner's lot, and even though to cut away this projection would cause great damage to the builder's property. It was held in Hoffstot v. Voight, 146 Pa. 632, 23 Atl. 351, that the right to enforce contribution to the cost of party walls is to be strictly limited to the terms of the statute.

3. We shall now take up the proposition which seems to us to be controlling and decisive of the case. Appellees contend that the new wall was erected under § 2999 of the Code, and not under other sections of the Party Wall Statute, as contended by appellant. Defendants claim that, the wall having been erected under § 2999, plaintiff was bound to bear the expense thereof, and, the defendants having utilized no more of the new wall than the space occupied by their old wall, they cannot be forced to contribute to the cost of the new wall. We think, under the record, this must be so, at least so long as defendants do not use more of the new wall or in a different way than they or their tenants used the old wall and the new wall for a time after its construction. It would seem that under our Party Wall Statute there are three cases in which walls dividing adjoining lots may be made walls in common. First, under §§ 2994, 2995, and 2997. We shall not take the space to quote these at this point. These sections, or at least the first one, applies only where two adjoining building lots are vacant and unoccupied. Section 2995 authorizes the owner of the adjoining lot to pay one half the cost of the wall at the time of its construction, and thus make it a wall in common, but may not be required to pay until such time as he actually makes use of it. Section 2997 provides for the repairing and rebuilding of walls in common at the expense of all who have a right to them and in proportion to the interests of each therein. It will be remembered that in the instant case the plaintiff took it upon himself to destroy the old wall and replace it with a new one at his own expense, and to carry out his own purposes, and under arrangement with the tenants occupying defendants' lot.

Another way to make a dividing wall a party wall is under § 3000 of the statute, which reads as follows: "Paying for share of adjoining wall.—Every proprietor joining a wall has the right of making it a wall in common, in whole or in part, by repaying to the owner thereof one half of its value, or one half of the part which he wishes to hold in common, and one half of the value of the ground on which it is built, if the person who has built it has laid the foundation entirely upon his own ground."

It is contended by appellees that this section applies only to cases where the owner of a lot has already built a wall on or near his lot line, and the adjoining lot is vacant and unimproved; and they cite Cornell v. Bickley, 85 Iowa, 219, 52 N. W. 192. However this may be, this section does provide that the proprietor of the lot joining the wall may make the wall a wall in common by paying one half of the value of the part of it which he wishes to hold in common, in case the person who has built has laid the foundation entirely upon his own ground. L.R.A.1917B.

In such case the adjoining proprietor "has the right of making it a wall in common, in whole or in part, by repaying to the owner thereof one half of its value, or one half of the part which he wishes to hold in common, and one half of the value of the ground on which it is built." This section might have been of some avail to plaintiff if there had been no wall on the line between him and his neighbor at the time he built this wall, and under the circumstances under which the old wall was built, and if plaintiff had laid the foundation of the west wall of his building entirely upon his own ground. But as shown, neither of these conditions existed. As already stated, plaintiff removed the old wall and replaced it with the new one because the old wall was not sufficient to support the new building, and because he wanted a three-story wall instead of the old two-story wall with no basement wall under it.

A third method of creating a party wall is under § 2999, which reads: "Height of wall—rebuilding.—Every coproprietor may increase the height of a wall in common at his sole expense, and he shall repair and keep in repair that part of the same above the part held in common. If the wall so held in common cannot support the wall to be raised upon it, one who wishes to have it made higher must rebuild it anew and at his own expense, and the additional thickness of the wall must be placed entirely on his own land. The person who did not contribute to the heightening of a wall held in common may cause the raised part to become common by paying one half of the appraised value of raising it, and half the value of the ground occupied by the additional thickness thereof, if any ground was so occupied."

There is no way under our statute in which a wall in common can be created and a neighbor coerced to contribute to its cost, except some of the methods prescribed by these statutes. It is contended by appellees, and we think their contention must be sustained, that § 2999 applies to the situation here presented, and that plaintiff was proceeding under that section. As already shown, there was a wall in common, or party wall, before plaintiff built his new wall. This section applies where there is already in existence a wall in common between proprietors of adjoining lots, and one of these proprietors desires to heighten, strengthen, or rebuild. The section provides that, if the wall so held in common cannot support the wall to be raised upon it, one who wishes it made higher must rebuild it anew and at his own expense. If he makes the wall thicker, the additional thickness must be placed entirely upon his own ground. The adjoining owner may cause the raised part to become common by paying one half the appraised value of raising it and one half the value of the ground occupied by the additional thickness, if any ground was so occupied. The plaintiff did remove the wall in common which had before existed and rebuilt it anew at his own expense, building it one story deeper and one story higher. It is undisputed that defendants had not used any portion of this rebuilt wall beyond the dimensions of their old wall and in no different way. Should they make use of plaintiff's new wall in a different manner, the circumstances might be such as to create a liability for contribution on their part. But this we do not now determine. But this seems to be clear, that there is no provision of the statute which compels them to pay before such time. We think the fact that the center of the old party wall did not coincide for its entire length with the dividing line established by the agreement of May 7, 1907, and that towards its north end it encroached upon plaintiff's lot several inches, did not change its character as a party wall. It has been held that party walls do not necessarily have to be located exactly upon the true dividing line, provided they are used for party wall purposes. Molony v. Dixon, 65 Iowa, 136, 54 Am. Rep. 1, 21 N. W. 488; Zugenbuhler v. Gilliam, 3 Iowa, 391. We said in Howell v. Goss, 128 Iowa, 569-574, 105 N. W. 63: "Defendant Goss had the right to increase the height of the wall at his own expense, and in so doing had the right to rebuild the old party wall anew and at his own expense. So long as his neighbor used no more of the reconstructed wall than he did of the old one, he was under no obligation to contribute to the expenses of the improvement. But the statute says that, when he wishes the raised part to become a wall in common, he must pay one half the appraised value of raising it, and one half the value of the ground occupied by the additional thickness of the wall. This statute evidently contemplates the rebuilding of an old wall, as part of the expense of raising it, which must be paid for in the first instance by the party making the improvement; and so long as his neighbor uses no more of the new wall than he did the old, he is under no obligation to contribute anything. But as soon as he desires to advantage himself of the new wall by carrying his building further up, he must pay his proportion of 'the appraised value of raising it.' This, as we have seen, includes in this case the expense of rebuilding the old wall of sufficient thickness and strength to carry the added height. This construction fulfils the letter of the statute L.R.A.1917B.

and comports with its spirit. It is fair and equitable to all parties and is in line with the objects and purposes of the act."

We think the fact that the insertion of joists in the new wall in substantially the same way as they were inserted in the old wall does not make defendants liable for contribution. As bearing upon this point, see Shaw v. Hitchcock, 119 Mass. 254; Fox v. Mission Free School, 120 Mo. 349, 25 S. W. 172. These cases arose under a contract between adjoining owners, and not under a statute, but the provisions of the contracts gave substantially the same right which our party wall statute gives to adjoining owners. For these reasons it is our conclusion that plaintiff has not shown himself entitled to recover. Other questions are argued, but, because the point last mentioned is decisive of the case, we ought not to prolong the opinion to discuss at any length the other questions.

4. We shall notice in a brief manner only, some of the other points. One is that the plumbing company was the first person who used the new wall erected by plaintiff as a wall in common, and that this is so whether the plumbing company was the owner of the building No. 716, or was only the holder of it as lessee of the defendants; and, being the first user, it, and it alone, if anyone, became liable for contribution to the plaintiff. This contention of appellees is presented subject to the proposition discussed in the preceding paragraph of the opinion. The argument is that there is no provision in the statute which makes any person liable for contributions to a party wall prior to the time he uses it; and that, under the circumstances here shown, according to the holdings of this court, the one half of a dividing wall, not exceeding 18 inches in thickness above the cellar, which rests upon adjoining lot, is not an encumbrance upon the adjoining lot. Neither is the duty to contribute to the cost of such a wall a lien or charge upon the adjoining lot. However, it is something which "runs with the land," and becomes a personal liability of the first person who uses the wall, in a substantial, permanent way, as a wall of an adjacent building. Thomson v. Curtis, 28 Iowa, 229; Bertram v. Curtis, 31 Iowa, 46; Beggs v. Duling, 102 Iowa, 13, 70 N. W. 732; Capital City Invest. Co. v. Burnham, 143 Iowa, 147, 121 N. W. 708.

The liability to contribute to the cost of a party wall becomes enforceable against and is a personal liability of the first person who uses the wall, whether he be the original coproprietor of the adjoining lot or his grantee. But where the adjoining lot is held by a lessee of the original owner or his grantee, who is the first person who uses the wall, there is no liability on the part of the lessor, who has made no use of it, either to pay to the one who erected the wall, or to reimburse his lessee, who first availed himself of it. The lessee, and he alone, is liable. Percival v. Colonial Invest. Co. 140 Iowa, 275, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 293, 115 N. W. 941, and they suggest: "Supposing the lessee of a long-time lease of a vacant city lot, on the side lines of which great party walls have already been erected, constructs a building on his lot, using his neighbors' walls in its construction; can anyone be found to say that his lessor must pay for the walls? The neighbors might by injunction prevent the lessee from building into their walls until payment has been made or secured (Code, § 3002, and Crapo v. Cameron, 61 Iowa, 447, 16 N. W. 523); but if once they permitted such a proceeding without payment or the giving of security, their only remedy would be a suit at law against the man who utilized their walls, and made them de facto walls in common. But we inquire by what principle, law, or authority could liability therefor be cast upon the landlord?"

We are inclined to this view, but deem it unnecessary to determine this point. We may observe here that while the old wall which was removed by plaintiff was in a sense permanent and the new wall is so, the use of the new wall by defendants' tenants for a time was not more or different than their use of the old wall, nor is defendants' use thereof more or different than was that of their tenants. It will be remembered that there is no basement under defendants' building on No. 716, and their building is an old one. They may, some time in the future, desire to build a new building with a basement. When that time comes, and if defendants should make different use of the wall in question, a question may arise which manifestly ought not to be now determined.

We may add, too, that it is clear that up to the time the plumbing company's lease expired there was no liability to plaintiff from defendants for contribution. Suppose a lease of the plumbing company had run ten years longer, or say until 1920; it is clear that there would be no liability for contribution to plaintiff by defendants until then. So that, under the record in this case, the fact that the lease of the plumbing company expired in 1910 and they then vacated the building does not alter the situation.

5. It is also contended by appellees that all liability for contribution for that portion of the wall built by plaintiff and now used by defendants as their west wall, if any there was, was adjusted, settled, and discharged by the written contract of July 12, 1909, between plaintiff and defendants' lessee, the plumbing company, which contract was thereafter fully executed and performed, and that plaintiff is not entitled to be paid twice for the same thing. This involves a construction of that contract, and we do not feel warranted in consuming further time to discuss that proposition, because other points already decided determine the case, and this is true as to some other points argued. It is our conclusion that the judgment of the District Court is right, and it is therefore affirmed.

Evans, Ch. J., and Deemer and Weaver, JJ., concur.

Annotation—Utilization of party wall by lessee as affecting lessor's duty to contribute to cost thereof.

For liability of landlord where a tenant's property is damaged through interference with party wall of adjoining owner under agreement with landlord, see the note to Di Palma v. Weinman, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 423.

It will be seen that it is the theory of the Iowa court that, under the Party Wall Statute, the utilization of a party wall by a lessee does not obligate his lessor to contribute to the cost thereof, and, further, that if, after the lessee vacates, the lessor makes only the same use of the wall that the lessee made, he is not liable to contribute, as it is only the first user that is liable to contribute.

In Percival v. Colonial Invest. Co. L.R.A.1917B.

(1908) 140 Iowa, 275, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 294, 115 N. W. 941, it was held, under this statute, that the lessee of property, the owner of which is entitled to the use of the party wall by contributing to the cost thereof, cannot, under a covenant for quiet enjoyment, hold his lessor liable for the amount which he contributes to the cost of the wall. The theory of this decision is that the lessee is in the position of a grantee, and that the wall is not an encumbrance for which a grantor would be liable under the covenants in a deed, the court distinguishing cases arising under agreements, and not under the statute.

The problem is not an easy one. It may, for example, be urged, particularly in cases of walls built under agreement, and not under statute, that, so far as his neighbor is concerned, the lessor is supposed to have the benefit of the increased rent, and therefore should bear the expense; and that the neighbor ought not to be affected by the particular contracts of lease. Further, if only the first user is liable, the lessor might arrange with an impecunious lessee to build and vacate, leaving the lessor to use the wall without cost.

In Louisiana, from which state the Iowa statute was derived, the court seems to think the landlord the proper contributor. Thus, in Auch v. Labouisse (1868) 20 La. Ann. 553, where the landlord was sued under the Louisiana statute for one half the value of a partition wall, he was not allowed to call his lessees in warranty. The court said: "There is nothing in the contract of lease which makes the lessees responsible for this wall. It was standing when they leased the premises, and whether used by the express authority of the defendants or not, the latter knew that it was used, as shown, and did not object. By the contract of lease all the improvements made by the lessors are to belong, without compensation, to the lessors, at its termination. We think the right to the use of the wall passed with the property, as it was not excluded by the contract."

In the case of a wall built under contract, the lessor was held responsible.

Thus, one liable, by reason of a contract (by her predecessor), to pay one half the value of a party wall whenever the contractor or his assigns "shall use the same," uses the wall when her lessees use it with her consent. Pillsbury v. Morris (1893) 54 Minn. 492, 56 N. W. 170, where the court said: "Her lessees are in possession under her, and she is bound to protect them. The wall is embraced in their lease, which contains no covenant releasing her or binding them in respect to the obligations of the contract. She is, by her tenant, enjoying the possession of the wall and the rents accruing therefrom. Scott v. McMillan (1888) 16 N. Y. S. R. 795, 4 N. Y. Supp. 435 (City Ct. N. Y.). This was a sufficient 'user' of the wall, within the contract."

(In Scott v. McMillan, cited in the last case, it was held that one who entered into a contract that she or her legal representative might use a party wall, to be erected, on paying one half the cost thereof, and who afterward granted the land, was liable to contribute to the cost of the wall on its use by her grantee, who was not liable.)

Statute, Geo. III.

Reference should be made in this connection to the Statute 14 Geo. III. chap. 78, § 41, which endeavored to deal with the matter by holding the owner of the "improved rent" liable to contribute. Thus it enacted: "That the person or persons at whose expense any party wall or party arch shall be built agreeably to the directions of this act shall be reimbursed by the owner or owners who shall be entitled to the improved rent of the adjoining building or ground, and who shall, at any time, make use of such party wall or party arch, a part of the expense of building the same, in the proportion after mentioned;" and on notice "it shall be lawful for the tenant or occupier of such adjoining building or ground to pay one moiety, or such proportional part, as aforesaid, to such first builder or builders for the same," etc., "and to deduct the same out of the rent which shall become due from him or her to such owner or owners, under whom he or she holds the same respectively, until he or she shall be reimbursed the same."

Considerable litigation arose under this statute as to who was the owner of an improved rent. In Sangster v. Birkhead (1798) 1 Bos. & P. 304, 126 Eng. Reprint, 918, Eyre, Ch. J., said: "I dare say that the leading object of the legislature was to make the owner of the improved rent liable, as opposed to the ground landlord. But though that may have been the leading object, yet the expressions of the act being such as they are, we must deal with them as well as we can, and find an owner of the improved rent in all cases, though there should be no ground rent reserved. . . . I think that it was intended by the legislature that the tenant should pay a moiety of the expense to the person building the wall, and reimburse himself by deducting the amount out of the rent of his immediate landlord, leaving it to him to make his claim on such other persons as he may think liable."

As illustrating various questions under the same statute, reference may be made to Lambe v. Hemans (1819) 2 Barn. & Ald. 467, 106 Eng. Reprint, 437; Southall v. Leadbetter (1789) 3 T. R. 458, 100 Eng. Reprint, 676; Peck v. Wood (1793) 5 T. R. 130, 101 Eng. Reprint, 75; Moore v. Clark (1813) 5 Taunt. 90, 128 Eng. Reprint, 620; Taylor v. Reed (1875) 6 Taunt. 249; 128 Eng. Reprint, 620; Beardmore v. Fox (1799) 8 T. R. 214, 101 Eng. Reprint, 1352.

Miscellaneous.

If a tenant uses a party wall, not under the agreement between the neighbor and the landlord, but under a new and special agreement, he will not be liable to his landlord for the value of the wall used, although the latter has, on demand, paid it to the neighbor. Smith v. Kennard (1898) 54 Neb. 523, 74 N. W. 859.

Under the Pennsylvania statute providing that "the first builder shall be reimbursed one moiety of the charge of such party wall or for so much thereof as the next builder shall have occasion to make use of before such next builder shall anyways use or break into the said wall," it is sufficient to aver, as to use, the ownership of the premises upon which the party wall was built, that the defendant was the owner or lessee of the adjoining premises, and that he was the next builder, having erected and built a messuage upon the adjoining premises, and having made use of the plaintiff's party wall therefor. Fidelity Ins. Co. v. Hafner (1897) 6 Pa. Super. Ct. 48.

B. B. B.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.
(In Banc.)

STATE OF WASHINGTON, Resp.,
v.

ALVIN HEMRICH, Appt.

(— Wash. —, 161 Pac. 79.)

Statute — construction — liberality.

1. The rule that penal statutes must be strictly construed does not apply to a statute prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors which declares that it is to be liberally construed.

For other cases, see Statutes, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Intoxicating liquors — prohibition of sale of nonintoxicating ones.

2. The sale of nonintoxicating liquors may be prohibited when necessary to aid the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating ones.

For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, I. a, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — liquor — intoxicating.

3. Prohibition of the sale of liquor is not limited to intoxicating liquors.

For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, III. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Statutes — construction — limitation — ejusdem generis.

4. The statutory prohibition of the sale of certain specified liquors is not limited to those that are intoxicating, by the addition of a clause, "and every other liquor containing intoxicating properties."

For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, III. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Intoxicating liquor — malt — nonintoxicating properties.

5. Prohibition of the sale of malt liquor does not include liquor produced from malt, but having no alcohol or intoxicating properties.

For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, III. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(November 22, 1916.)

Note. — As to whether statutes forbidding the sale of a certain class or classes of liquor include nonintoxicating liquor, see annotation following this case, post, 974. L.R.A.1917B.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for King County convicting him of violating the prohibition law. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. McClure & McClure and Greene, Henry, & Hemrich, for appellant:

The term "malt liquor" is restricted to liquids containing alcohol, and hence having intoxicating properties, which are capable of being used as a beverage.

The law is a penal law, and as such must be strictly construed.

36 Cyc. 1185-1187; 2 Lewis's Sutherland, Stat. Constr. 2d ed. § 531; State ex rel. Spriggs v. Robinson, 253 Mo. 271, 161 S. W. 1169; Ex parte De Vore, 18 N. M. 246, 136 Pac. 47; F. W. Brockman Commission Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 180 Mo. App. 626, 163 S. W. 920; State v. Read, 162 Iowa, 572, 144 N. W. 310; Anderson v. Fant, 96 S. C. 5, 79 S. E. 641; State v. Coolidge, 72 Wash. 42, 129 Pac. 1088; McCarty v. State, 1 Wash. 377, 22 Am. St. Rep. 152, 25 Pac. 299; McCord v. State, 2 Okla. Crim. Rep. 214, 101 Pac. 280; State ex rel. Moose v. Frank, 114 Ark. 47, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1149, 169 S. W. 333, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 983.

The word "liquor" means an alcoholic liquor.

Black, Intoxicating Liquors, § 7; Joyce, Intoxicating Liquors, § 2; Smith v. State, 17 Ga. App. 118, 86 S. E. 283; Kinnanne v. State, 106 Ark. 337, 153 S. W. 264; Ex parte Flake, 67 Tex. Crim. Rep. 216, 149 S. W. 146.

The term "malt liquor" means a malted liquor containing alcohol.

State v. Maroun, 128 La. 829, 55 So. 472; Shreveport v. Smith, 130 La. 126, 57 So. 652; Howard v. Aeme Brewing Co. 143 Ga. 1, 83 S. E. 1096; Roberts v. State, 4 Ga. App. 207, 60 S. E. 1082; Carroll v. Wright, 131 Ga. 728, 63 S. E. 261; People v. Strickler, 25 Cal. App. 60, 142 Pac. 1121; Figueroa v. State, 71 Tex. Crim. Rep. 371, 159 S.

W. 1188; Cannan v. State, 71 Tex. Crim. Rep. 416, 169 S. W. 1186.

The word "other" in the clause, "and every other liquor or liquid containing intoxicating properties," ties together the two clauses, and limits their application to such liquors or liquids as contain intoxicating properties.

Bowling Green v. McMullen, 134 Ky. 742, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 895, 122 S. W. 823; Com. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 140 Ky. 21, 130 S. W. 798; Howard v. Acme Brewing Co. 143 Ga. 1, 83 S. E. 1096; People v. Strickler, 25 Cal. App. 60, 142 Pac. 1121; State v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 97 Miss. 35, 51 So. 918, 53 So. 454, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1150; State v. Fargo Bottling Works, 19 N. D. 396, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 872, 124 N. W. 387.

If the term "malt liquor" may be thought broad enough to include a liquid which contains no alcohol and has no intoxicating properties, then an ambiguity arises as to the meaning of the statute, and it becomes the duty of the court to ascertain what was the intention of the lawmakers, and to construe the law according to its true meaning.

36 Cyc. 1102; State ex rel. Abel v. Eggers, 36 Nev. 372, 136 Pac. 100; National Surety Co. v. Schafer, 57 Colo. 56, 140 Pac. 199; State ex rel. Rippee v. Forest, 177 Mo. App. 245, 162 S. W. 706; Re Meyer, 209 N. Y. 386, L.R.A.1915C, 615, 103 N. E. 713, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 263; Hoyne v. Danisch, 264 Ill. 467, 106 N. E. 341; Clough v. Boston & M. R. Co. 77 N. H. 222, 90 Atl. 863, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 1196; Hazzard v. Gallucci, 89 Conn. 196, 93 Atl. 230; St. Louis v. Christian Bros. College, 257 Mo. 541, 165 S. W. 1057; Krome v. Halbert, 263 Ill. 172, 104 N. E. 1066; Forrest v. Roper Furniture Co. 267 Ill. 331, 108 N. E. 328; Drew v. White Plains, 157 App. Div. 304, 142 N. Y. Supp. 577; People v. Merrill, 24 Cal. App. 206, 140 Pac. 1075; Dietz v. Big Muddy Coal & L. Co. 263 Ill. 480, 105 N. E. 289, 5 N. C. C. A. 419; State v. Read, 162 Iowa, 572, 144 N. W. 310; Hughes v. Indiana Union Traction Co. 57 Ind. App. 202, 105 N. E. 537; Burns v. Bay State Street R. Co. 77 N. H. 112, 88 Atl. 710; Church of the Holy Trinity v. United States, 143 U. S. 457, 36 L. ed. 226, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 511; Austin v. State, 22 Ind. App. 226, 53 N. E. 481; Ex parte Peede, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 170 S. W. 740; State ex rel. Winnett v. Omaha & C. B. Street R. Co. 96 Neb. 725, 148 N. W. 946; Ho Ah Kow v. Nunan, 5 Sawy. 552, Fed. Cas. No. 6,546; United States v. Tithing Yard, 9 Utah, 273, 34 Pac. 55; Wadsworth v. Boysen, 78 C. C. A. 437, 148 Fed. 771; American Net & Twine Co. v. Worthington, 141 U. S. 468, 35 L. ed. 821, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 55; Mosle v. Biddell, 65 C. C. A. L.R.A.1917B.

533, 130 Fed. 334; People ex rel. Cohen v. Butler, 125 App. Div. 384, 109 N. Y. Supp. 900; Ross v. Erickson Constr. Co. 80 Wash. 634, L.R.A.1916F, 319, 155 Pac. 153; Huntworth v. Tanner, 87 Wash. 670, 152 Pac. 523; Tolliver v. Blizzard, 143 Ky. 773, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 890, 137 S. W. 509; Intoxicating-Liquor Cases, 25 Kan. 751, 37 Am. Rep. 284; Elder v. State, 162 Ala. 41, 50 So. 373.

Messrs. Alfred H. Lundin, Frank P. Helsell, and Walter F. Meier, for respondent:

The term "malt liquor" means a "malt beverage" produced from malted grain, without reference to whether the beverage contains alcohol, and without regard to whether it is intoxicating in fact or not.

Purity Extract & Tonic Co. v. Lynch, 100 Miss. 650, 56 So. 316; Fuller v. Jackson, 97 Miss. 237, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1078, 52 So. 873; Re Lockman, 18 Idaho, 465, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 759, 110 Pac. 253; Brown v. State, 17 Ariz. 314, 162 Pac. 578; Douglas v. State, 21 Ind. App. 302, 52 N. E. 238; United States v. Cohn, 2 Ind. Terr. 474, 52 S. W. 38; Sawyer v. Botti, 147 Iowa, 453, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1007, 124 N. W. 787; Luther v. State, 83 Neb. 455, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1146, 120 N. W. 125; La Follette v. Murray, 81 Ohio St. 474, 91 N. E. 294; State v. O'Connell, 99 Me. 61, 58 Atl. 59; Feibelman v. State, 130 Ala. 122, 30 So. 384; Com. v. Timothy, 8 Gray, 480; Com. v. Dean, 14 Gray, 99; Com. v. Anthes, 12 Gray, 29; State v. Frederickson, 101 Me. 37, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 186, 115 Am. St. Rep. 295, 63 Atl. 535, 8 Ann. Cas. 48; State v. Danenberg, 151 N. C. 718, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 890, 66 S. E. 301; State ex rel. Guilbert v. Kauffman, 68 Ohio St. 635, 67 N. E. 1062; Flanders v. Com. 140 Ky. 38, 130 S. W. 809; People v. Kinney, 124 Mich. 486, 83 N. W. 147; Com. v. Goodwin, 109 Va. 828, 64 S. E. 54; State v. Spaulding, 61 Vt. 505, 17 Atl. 844; State v. Walder, 83 Ohio St. 68, 93 N. E. 531; Monroe v. Lawrence, 44 Kan. 607, 10 L.R.A. 520, 24 Pac. 1113; Campbell v. Thomasville, 6 Ga. App. 212, 64 S. E. 815.

If the term "malt liquor" was adopted from the laws of other prohibition states, this court will be strongly inclined to follow the construction placed upon that term by the courts of those states.

Lewis's Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 470; Keyport & M. P. S. B. Co. v. Farmers Transp. Co. 18 N. J. Eq. 13; Richmond v. Henrico County, 83 Va. 204, 2 S. E. 26; Stewart v. Atlanta Beef Co. 93 Ga. 12, 44 Am. St. Rep. 119, 18 S. E. 981; State v. Burk, 88 Iowa, 661, 56 N. W. 180; Aldridge v. Williams, 3 How. 1, 11 L. ed. 469; Tenant v. Kuhlmeier, 142 Iowa, 241, 120 N. W. 689, 19 Ann. Cas. 1026; State v. Lancashire F. Ins. Co. 66 Ark. 406, 45 L.R.A.

348, 51 S. W. 633; District of Columbia v. Washington Market Co. 108 U. S. 243, 27 L. ed. 714, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 543; United States v. Union P. R. Co. 91 U. S. 72, 23 L. ed. 224; United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Asso. 166 U. S. 290, 41 L. ed. 1007, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 540; American Net & Twine Co. v. Worthington, 141 U. S. 468, 35 L. ed. 821, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 55; United States v. Oregon & C. R. Co. 57 Fed. 426; Leese v. Clark, 20 Cal. 387; Omaha & C. B. Street R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 230 U. S. 324, 57 L. ed. 1501, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 385, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 800; Ex parte Goodrich, 160 Cal. 410, 117 Pac. 451, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 56; Bernier v. Bernier, 72 Mich. 43, 40 N. W. 50; Bayon v. Beckley, 89 Conn. 154, 93 Atl. 139, 8 N. C. C. A. 588.

Ellis, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Defendant was accused of a violation of the state-wide prohibition law commonly known as Initiative Measure No. 3 (Laws 1915, p. 2; Rem. Code 1915, §§ 6262-1 et seq.). The information charged that "he, said Alvin Hemrich, in the county of King, state of Washington, on the 9th day of February, 1916, did then and there wilfully and unlawfully sell to one Fred M. Lathe certain intoxicating liquor, to wit, two bottles containing malt liquor, said malt liquor not then and there containing any alcohol, and being commonly known as 'Lifestaff,' receiving in payment therefor from said Fred M. Lathe the sum of 25 cents."

He demurred to the information, and it was stipulated that, in considering the demurrer, the court might consider as established certain agreed facts so far as they would be admissible as evidence if the cause were being tried on its merits after a plea of not guilty. These agreed facts were, in substance, as follows:

(1) That defendant was, and for a long time had been, president of a corporation which, prior to January 1, 1916, was engaged in the manufacture and sale of beer in the state of Washington; that immediately after that date it surrendered its government license, and remodeled its brewery and plant for the manufacture of Lifestaff, so that, on February 9, 1916, they were not adapted to the manufacture of beer without extensive alterations in equipment and the issuance of a new license from the United States government.

(2) "That the liquor in the information herein referred to as 'Lifestaff' is an unfermented liquid, and is entirely free from alcohol, preservatives, or other harmful substances, but contains between 6 and 7 per cent of extract of malt; that it is a healthful and nutritious liquid, capable of being drunk, but the character of the liquid itself is such that it is not intoxicating, does not in fact contain intoxicating properties, and is not capable of being imbibed in unusual quantities for merely social purposes."

(3) That the term "Lifestaff" has been copyrighted under the Federal laws, and appropriated as a trademark under the state law.

(4) That L. E. Kirkpatrick, president and attorney of the Antisaloon League for the state of Washington, and who prepared Initiative Measure No. 3 as submitted to and adopted by the people, would testify that, in the conferences held to prepare the act, there was, to his knowledge, no discussion of or expressed intention to prohibit by the act the manufacture or sale of any liquor not containing alcoholic properties; that he was then not aware that a process had been discovered for removing all alcohol from malt liquor, and that the question of prohibiting the manufacture and sale of malt liquor not containing alcohol was not considered by him, nor discussed by others in his presence; that in preparing the original draft of the act the definition of intoxicating liquors as given therein was prepared, using as a basis the definition as given in the laws of various states having prohibition laws, and that he did not consider, nor did others with whom he consulted discuss, the operation of the proposed law as affecting the manufacture and sale of malt liquors not containing alcohol; that, so far as his knowledge goes, the general policy of the Antisaloon League and those associated with it has been to abolish only the manufacture and sale of liquors containing alcohol.

(5) That George D. Conger, state superintendent of the Antisaloon League, would testify substantially to the same effect.

(6) That the title of the measure as originally drafted and filed in the office of the secretary of state was as follows: "An Act Relating to Intoxicating Liquors, Prohibiting the Manufacture, Keeping, Sale, and Disposition Thereof, Except in Certain Cases, the Soliciting and Taking of Orders Therefor, the Advertisement Thereof and the Making of False Statements for the Purpose of Obtaining the Same, Declaring Certain Places to be Nuisances and Providing for Their Abatement, Regulating the Keeping, Sale, and Disposition of Intoxicating Liquors by Druggists and Pharmacists, the Prescription Thereof by Physicians, the Transportation Thereof, and Providing for the Search for and Seizure and Destruction Thereof, Prescribing the Powers and Duties of Certain Officers, and the Forms of Procedure and the Rules of Evidence in Cases and Proceedings Hereunder, and Fixing Penalties for Violations Hereof, and the Time When This Act Shall Take Effect." Laws 1915, p. 2.

(7) That the ballot title as proposed by the attorney general was as follows: "An act prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or other disposition of intoxicating liquors, except in certain cases; regulating the keeping, use, and transportation of the same; providing for the enforcement of this act; and fixing punishments and penalties for the violation thereof."

(8 and 9) That in the printed arguments for and against the measure distributed among the legal voters of the state a required by law, there was nothing advising the voters that the act was intended to prohibit the manufacture or sale of nonalcoholic malt liquors as a means to the more effective enforcement of the law as against alcoholic liquors. The two bottles of Lifestaff were submitted as exhibits. The trial court overruled the demurrer. Defendant, electing to stand upon his demurrer and the stipulated facts, was adjudged guilty as charged. From the judgment and sentence thereon he has appealed.

Appellant broadly contends that Lifestaff is not a liquor the manufacture and sale of which is intended to be prohibited by our statute, because it is admitted that it contains no alcohol, no intoxicating properties, and will not in fact intoxicate.

It is first argued that our prohibition law, Initiative Measure No. 3 (Laws of 1915, p. 2; Rem. Code 1915, §§ 6262-1 et seq.), is a penal statute, and hence, under the general rule, must be strictly construed, and that, so construed, it embraces only intoxicating liquors. We shall not review the many authorities cited, announcing the general rule that penal statutes must be strictly construed, since the 1st section of the law itself answers this argument. It imposes its own rule of construction. It says: "This entire act shall be deemed an exercise of the police power of the state, for the protection of the economic welfare, health, peace, and morals of the people of the state, and all of its provisions shall be liberally construed for the accomplishment of that purpose." Rem. Code 1915, § 6262-1.

We must therefore construe the act liberally and inclusively, with a view to the accomplishment of its full purpose. It is true that the dominant purpose of the law is to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, to the end that the economic welfare, health, peace, and morals of the people may be promoted. Both the title of the act and the ballot title by which it was submitted to vote so show.

But in the exercise of the police power the legislature, or the people acting in a L.R.A.1917B.

legislative capacity, may, without impinging either the state or the Federal Constitution, prohibit the sale of beverages not intoxicating in fact and wholly innocuous, when separately considered, and may conclusively define such beverages as intoxicating liquors within the meaning of the prohibitory law, whenever that course has any reasonable relation to the accomplishment of the dominant purpose. "This is no longer a question for argument or even of doubt." State v. Frederickson, 101 Me. 37, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 186, 115 Am. St. Rep. 295, 63 Atl. 535, 8 Ann. Cas. 48; Purity Extract & Tonic Co. v. Lynch, 226 U. S. 192, 57 L. ed. 184, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 44. If, therefore, any beverage of such composition and character as reasonably to include the stuff called "Lifestaff" is expressly prohibited or defined by our law as an intoxicating liquor, then Lifestaff is prohibited.

It is next argued that nothing except "liquor" is prohibited, and that the word "liquor" ex vi termini means an alcoholic or intoxicating liquid, and that therefore nothing but alcoholic or intoxicating liquids is prohibited. It is true that such is one of the meanings of the word "liquor," but all of the standard dictionaries agree that it also means a liquid of any sort. See Century Dict., Webster's New Int. Dict., and Standard Dict. The first two of these, the three leading dictionaries, give the meaning of the noun "liquor" as synonymous with the noun "liquid," and the third gives the same meaning as a secondary definition. It can hardly be said, therefore, that the word "liquor" has any such settled and exclusive meaning of an alcoholic or an intoxicating liquid as to make it the basis of a persuasive, much less of a conclusive, argument, for such a construction of the statute. Appellant's minor premise failing, his argument fails.

A further argument is based upon the statutory definition of the term "intoxicating liquor" as found in § 2 of our prohibitory law (Laws of 1915, p. 2; Rem. Code 1915, § 6262-2), which reads as follows: "The phrase 'intoxicating liquor,' wherever used in this act, shall be held and construed to include whisky, brandy, gin, rum, wine, ale, beer, and any spirituous, vinous, fermented, or malt liquor, and every other liquor or liquid containing intoxicating properties, which is capable of being used as a beverage, whether medicated or not, and all liquors, whether proprietary, patented, or not, which contain any alcohol, which are capable of being used as a beverage."

Respondent concedes that the only term in this definition which can reasonably include a nonalcoholic nonintoxicating liquor, such as Lifestaff is admitted to be, is the term

"malt liquor." Appellant urges that the clause, "and every other liquor or liquid containing intoxicating properties," limits and restricts the classes of liquor specifically enumerated and preceding it to such liquors or liquids as contain intoxicating properties, and that therefore the term "malt liquor" cannot include Lifestaff. It is insisted that such is the necessary significance of the word "other" as found in the alleged qualifying clause. Several decisions from other states are cited as sustaining this view. Typical and strongest of these are Bowling Green v. McMullen, 134 Ky. 742, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 895, 122 S. W. 823, and People v. Strickler, 25 Cal. App. 60, 142 Pac. 1121. In the McMullen Case the stipulated facts admitted that the liquor called "next-to-beer" was a malt liquor containing less than 2 per cent and more than one half of 1 per cent of alcohol, and was nonintoxicating; that is to say, in the largest quantities in which it might be drunk it would not intoxicate. The statute defined the inhibited liquors as "spirituous, vinous, malt, and other intoxicating liquors." The question was whether malt liquor which would not intoxicate was within this definition. It was held that the inhibition was only against intoxicating drinks. The court said: "If not, why use the words, 'or other intoxicating liquors?'" However conclusive this may seem to the court which announced it, it seems far from conclusive to us. The answer to the court's question seems plain. The general words, "or other intoxicating liquors," were intended to add to the things theretofore specifically enumerated, not to take away from or limit what had already been included. Moreover, even assuming the argument sound as applied to the statute there involved, that statute is palpably different from ours. It might be argued with some show of reason that the word "other" as there used qualifies the term "intoxicating liquors" as a whole. That statute says, "or other intoxicating liquors." In our statute the collocation of the words is different. It says, "every other liquor or liquid," the word "other" thus qualifying only the words, "liquor or liquid," which are subsequently qualified by the words, "containing intoxicating properties." State v. Bailey, 67 Wash. 336, 121 Pac. 821.

Our statutory definition was clearly intended to define as intoxicating liquors three distinct groups: (1) Whisky, brandy, gin, rum, wine, ale, beer, and any spirituous, vinous, fermented, or malt liquor; (2) every other liquor or liquid containing intoxicating properties which is capable of being used as a beverage, whether medicated or not; (3) all liquids, whether proprietary, L.R.A.1917B.

patented, or not, which contain any alcohol, which are capable of being used as a beverage. The first group defines, eo nomine, as intoxicating liquors, certain specific liquids without reference to their properties, because they are all liquors which are generally understood to contain alcohol in some quantity. The second group merely adds to the things prohibited another class of prohibited liquors, with no description save the intoxicating quality. The third group adds still another class to the things already prohibited, namely, liquids, whether proprietary or not, describing them by their alcoholic property. The words, "every other liquor or liquid containing intoxicating properties," qualify nothing else, but describe and add another class of the things the sale and manufacture of which are prohibited. The clause quoted was intended to add and include, not to limit or restrict.

In the case of People v. Strickler, supra, a demurrer to an information charging the sale of malt liquor containing less than 1 per cent of alcohol was sustained by the trial court, and the people appealed. The statute defined the term "alcoholic liquors" as follows: "The term 'alcoholic liquors' as used in this act shall include spirituous, vinous and malt liquors, and any other liquor or mixture of liquors which contain 1 per cent by volume, or more, of alcohol and which is not so mixed with other drugs as to prevent its use as a beverage."

The supreme court affirmed the judgment on the ground that under the rule eiusdem generis the specific words, "spirituous, vinous, and malt liquors," were qualified and controlled by the succeeding clause, "any other liquor or mixture of liquors which contain 1 per cent by volume, or more, of alcohol." The decision is obviously unsound. It reverses the rule of eiusdem generis in order to make the general terms of the statutory definition control the particular terms. The correct application of that rule in statutory construction is just the converse.

"In statutory construction, the 'eiusdem generis rule' is that where general words follow an enumeration of persons or things by words of a particular and specific meaning, such general words are not to be construed in their widest extent, but are to be held as applying only to persons or things of the same general kind or class as those specifically mentioned." Black's Law Dict. p. 415.

See also Bouvier's Law Dict. Rawie's 3d Rev. p. 979.

The fact is that the rule eiusdem generis has nothing to do with the case. The statute there under construction, as ours, defined one group by specific enumeration and a second group by quality. The McMullen

Case makes the same mistake in argument, though not labeling the process as an application of the rule ejusdem generis. In the following cases in which the same argument was advanced as that of appellant here the courts have ruled contrary to his contention. In each of these cases the general clause in the statute included the word "other" as here. Marks v. State, 159 Ala. 71, 133 Am. St. Rep. 20, 48 So. 864; Fuller v. Jackson, 97 Miss. 237, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1078, 52 So. 873; La Follette v. Murray, 81 Ohio St. 474, 91 N. E. 294; United States v. Cohn, 2 Ind. Terr. 474, 52 S. W. 38. In the Marks Case the statute was much like ours. It prohibited "any alcoholic, spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors, intoxicating bitters or beverages, or other liquors or beverages by whatsoever name called, which if drunk to excess will produce intoxication. . . ."

In answer to the argument here advanced the court said: "While we agree in part with counsel for appellant, we cannot concur with them in the contention (so forcefully and ably insisted upon) to the effect that the clause, 'which if drunk to excess will produce intoxication,' qualifies and relates to each and all of the liquors or beverages which precede it; that is, to alcoholic, spirituous, vinous, or malt drinks. We are inclined to the opinion that this phrase qualifies or refers only to the clause, 'or other liquors or beverages by whatsoever name called,' which immediately precedes it, and which two phrases, taken together, constitute one of the six classes of liquor and beverage the sale of which is prohibited. We are led to this conclusion not alone by the composition and grammatical construction of this section of the act, but also by a reference to the history of such legislation in this and other states, and the judicial construction put upon the terms 'spirituous,' 'vinous,' 'malt,' and 'intoxicating' liquors and beverages by this and other courts. These terms each had a well defined and accepted judicial construction by the courts, when used in such statutes; and it does not appear that there was any intention to change that well-accepted judicial construction. They were severally treated as being well known and defined; but the phrase, 'or other liquors or beverages by whatsoever name called,' is clearly shown not to refer to every well known or defined class, but is intended to include any and all other classes or kinds not embraced in the foregoing five classes named, 'which if drunk to excess will produce intoxication.'"

The reasons given in the other decisions cited for holding the same way are equally cogent. It will not avail to use the argument of convenience to the effect that our construction will make the sale of "ginger ale" and "root beer" criminal. These things have as distinctive a meaning in common parlance as ale or beer have when standing alone. They, like other unnamed beverages, will have to be tested by the fact whether they contain intoxicating properties, since they are not enumerated by name in the statutory definition of intoxicating liquors. Sawyer v. Botti, 147 Iowa, 453, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1007, 124 N. W. 787.

We hold, therefore, that the liquors enumerated by name in our statutory definition of intoxicating liquors are conclusively presumed to be intoxicating liquors without regard to their actual intoxicating properties, and whether in potable quantities they will in fact intoxicate or not; that as to such liquors it is only necessary to prove that the thing sold was one of the class named, but that as to other liquors or liquids capable of being used as a beverage it is necessary to prove their intoxicating properties. It is conceded that Lifestaff cannot belong to either the second or third class mentioned in the statutory definition. By this process of elimination the question here involved is finally reduced to this: Is the stuff called "Lifestaff" a malt liquor? If it is, it is prohibited whether it contains intoxicating properties or not, and whether it contains alcohol or not.

The first cardinal rule of construction is that words used in a statute, unless the context shows that they are used in a technical or particular sense, are to be given their ordinary meaning. 2 Lewis's Sutherland, Stat. Const. 2d ed. p. 749, § 390; Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, p. 4, § 2.

It follows that the words, "malt liquor," which are evidently used in no technical sense, must be given the meaning accorded to them in the standard dictionaries of our language. The following are the definitions given by the three dictionaries universally recognized as authority: Standard Dict.: "Malt liquor. Any alcoholic beverage brewed from malt."

Century Dict. "Malt liquor. A general term for an alcoholic beverage produced merely by the fermentation of malt, as opposed to those obtained by the distillation of malt or mash."

Webster's New Int. Dict.: "Malt liquor. An alcoholic liquor as beer, ale, porter, etc., prepared by fermenting an infusion of malt."

We have been unable to find any definition giving to the term "malt liquor" any other meaning than the above, whether technical or not. The text-books are equally in unison. Joyce, Intoxicating Liquors, p. 12, § 12, defines malt liquor as follows: "The common and approved usage of the term 'malt liquor' is 'an alcoholic liquor as beer, ale, or porter, prepared by fermenting an infusion of malt.' 'Malt liquors' embrace porter, ale, beer, and the like, which are the result or product of a process by which grain—usually barley—is steeped in water to the point of germination, the starch of the grain being thus converted into saccharine matter, which is kiln dried, then mixed with hops, and, by a further process of brewing, made into a beverage. In Alabama it has been decided that the court will take judicial notice of the meaning of the words, 'malt liquor,' as used in a penal statute, and may, in a proper case, give its definition in a charge to the jury."

Black's Law Dictionary, p. 752, defines the terms as follows: "Malt liquor. A general term including all alcoholic beverages prepared essentially by the fermentation of an infusion of malt (as distinguished from such liquors as are produced by the process of distillation), and particularly such beverages as are made from malt and hops, like beer, ale, and porter."

26 Cyc. 121, defines the term as follows: "Malt liquor. An alcoholic liquor, as beer, ale, or porter, prepared by fermenting an infusion of malt; a general term for alcoholic beverages produced merely by the fermentation of malt, as opposed to those obtained by distillation of malt or mash."

19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Laws, 2d ed. p. 705, defines it as follows: "Malt liquor. Malt liquor is a general term for an alcoholic beverage produced merely by fermentation of malt, as opposed to those obtained by distillation of malt or mash."

Wherever any court has essayed a definition of the term "malt liquor," it is in strict accord with the foregoing definitions.

In Pennell v. State, 141 Wis. 35, 123 N. W. 115, the court defined the terms "spirituous liquor," "malt liquor," and "vinous liquor" as follows: "The word 'liquor' in a statute regulating or forbidding the sale of intoxicants should be taken to mean an alcoholic beverage. Century Dict.; Standard Dict.; People v. Crilley, 20 Barb. 246; United States v. Cohn, 2 Ind. Terr. 474, 52 S. W. 38. The associated word 'drinks' in such statute means an alcoholic beverage. State v. Oliver, 26 W. Va. 422, 53 Am. Rep. 79. Alcohol is a product of fermentation. Malting is a process preliminary to fermentation. Alcohol is separated, not produced, by distillation, and the liquor thus separated containing a percentage of alcohol is called 'spirituous liquor.' Where there is no such separation, but the alcohol produced by fermentation remains in the liquid drawn off from the malt, the product is called 'malt liquor.' Where the production of alcohol by fermentation is preceded by no malting process, as in the case of wine, the product is called 'vinous liquor.'"

L.R.A.1917B.

In Marks v. State, 159 Ala. 71, 133 Am. St. Rep. 20, 48 So. 884, the court says: "Malt liquors' are the product of a process by which grain is steeped in water to the point of germination, the starch of the grain being thus converted into saccharine matter, which is kiln dried, then mixed with hops, and, by a further process of brewing, made into a beverage. The term embraces porter, ale, beer, and the like."

Though in the last definition the term "fermentation" is not used, but "brewing" instead, the term "brewing" itself includes fermentation. See Standard Dict.; Webster's New Int. Dict.; Century Dict.

In United States v. Ducournau (C. C.) 54 Fed. 138, it was said: "The ordinary acceptance of the term 'malt liquor' imports a fermented liquor, made chiefly of malt."

In Sarlls v. United States, 152 U. S. 570, 38 L. ed. 556, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 420, Justice Shiras adopted the definition given in the Century Dictionary and above quoted.

In State v. Gill, 89 Minn. 502, 95 N. W. 449, the court said: "But the defendant claims that there are some malt liquors which are not intoxicating; hence the complaint should have alleged the sale of an intoxicating malt liquor. This is just what the complaint did do without any tautology, for the term 'malt liquors' is used in the charter of the city, in the ordinance in question, and in the complaint in accordance with the common and approved usage of the term, and not in any technical sense. Gen-Stat. 1894, § 255. The common and approved usage of the term 'malt liquor' is 'an alcoholic liquor, as beer, ale, or porter, prepared by fermenting an infusion of malt.' Webster's Int. Dict."

In State v. Lynch, 5 Boyce (Del.) 569, 96 Atl. 32, the court used the following language: "Malt liquor, or beer, as is commonly known, is a brewed liquor made of grain, especially barley, flavored with hops, and is a liquor which has undergone fermentation, and contains alcohol."

In Ex parte Townsend, 64 Tex. Crim. Rep. 350, 144 S. W. 628, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 814, we find the following language: "This leads to the inquiry of what is malt liquor. Mr. Joyce, in his work on Intoxicating Liquors, § 12, defines it as follows: 'The common and approved usage of the term "malt liquor" is an alcoholic liquor, as beer, ale, or porter, prepared by fermenting an infusion of malt.' The Century Dictionary defines it as a 'general term for an alcohol [alcoholic] beverage, produced merely by the fermentation of malt.' So, then, it is clear that all malt liquor is an alcoholic liquor, and the legislature in this instance was dealing with a nonintoxicating alcoholic liquor. Intoxicating liquor is any liquor containing alcohol which can be drunk as a beverage in such quantity as will produce intoxication."

We have set out the foregoing definitions in order to show the absolute unanimity of opinion that "malt liquor" is an alcoholic liquor and is a fermented liquor. Fermentation produces alcohol. Every malt liquor is fermented, and hence contains at least some percentage of alcohol. Unless the foregoing definitions are all wrong, such is the inevitable conclusion to which we are driven. The mere fact that a liquid contains malt does not bring it within any definition of the words, "malt liquor," which can be found in any recognized dictionary, text-book, or in any definition given by any court. Malt is neither fermented nor does it contain alcohol. It is defined in the Century Dictionary as follows: "Grain in which, by partial germination, arrested at the proper stage by heat, the starch is converted into saccharine matter (grape sugar), the unfermented solution of the latter being the sweetwort of the brewer. By the addition of hops, and the subsequent processes of cooling, fermentation, and clarification, the wort is converted into porter, ale, or beer. The alcoholic fermentation of the wort without the addition of hops, and distillation, yield crude whisky."

It is defined in Black's Law Dictionary as follows: "Malt, a substance produced from barley or other grain by a process of steeping in water until germination begins and then drying in a kiln, thus converting the starch into saccharine matter."

We have been cited to but one case, and have been unable after many days of search to find another, in which any liquor or liquid has been held to be a malt liquor merely because it contained some percentage of malt. That case is Purity Extract & Tonic Co. v. Lynch, 100 Miss. 650, 56 So. 316. The liquid there involved was called "Poinsetta." It was admitted that it contained no alcohol, preservatives, or saccharine; that it was sold as a beverage; that it was composed of 90.45 per cent pure distilled water, 0.55 per cent of solids derived from cereals in an unfermented state; and that it contained 5.73 per cent of malt. It was admitted that the grain used was not fermented or steeped in such a way as to produce either saccharine matter or alcohol. On these facts the court said: "In the discussion of this case we start out with the admission of counsel that this drink is a beverage containing no alcohol, it is true, but containing 5.73 per cent of malt, and we unhesitatingly pronounce the beverage a malt liquor. It can be nothing else."

Had that court hesitated long enough to look at any standard dictionary, any law dictionary, or the decision of any court in which the term "malt liquor" had been defined, it would have found that the mere fact that a liquid beverage contains malt does not make it a malt liquor, unless it be also fermented and is alcoholic. We are asked to proceed in the same unhesitating manner and pronounce the beverage here involved a malt liquor in the face of every other decision where the question has arisen. Malt liquor is both alcoholic and fermented. While the generic term "malt liquor" includes both intoxicating and nonintoxicating liquors, this is because some liquors which are both fermented and contain alcohol have too small a percentage of alcohol to produce intoxication in any quantity which a person may be able to take at one time. This is the distinction found in many of the cases between intoxicating and nonintoxicating malt liquors. Lifestaff, the liquid here involved, is concededly neither alcoholic nor fermented. It is therefore not a malt liquor. None of the decisions cited by either side, save the Lynch Case, sustains the other view. On the contrary, so far as they have any bearing at all on the meaning of the term "malt liquor," they impliedly sustain the conclusion which we have reached. The Lynch Case was appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States (Purity Extract & Tonic Co. v. Lynch, 226 U. S. 192, 57 L. ed. 184, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 44), but that court, holding itself bound by the decision of the state court as to the scope of the Mississippi statute, did not pass upon the question whether Poinsetta was or was not a malt liquor. On the contrary it held that it had no jurisdiction to pass upon that question.

In the following cases cited by respondent the sale of malt liquor was prohibited eo nomine by the statutes involved. It was held that it was neither necessary to allege nor prove that the malt liquor in question in the given case was capable of producing intoxication. But in each of these cases the liquor involved was either admitted to be a malt liquor, or admitted or proved to be a fermented liquor, containing both malt and alcohol,—hence was either admitted to be or proven to be such a liquor as is defined to be a "malt liquor" by the dictionaries. In Fuller v. Jackson, 97 Miss. 237, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1078, 52 So. 873, same case on suggestion of error, 97 Miss. 253, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1081, 52 So. 876, the liquor was malt ale. The agreed facts showed that it contained 2.71 per cent of alcohol by volume, and conceded that it was a malt liquor. The statute (Code 1906, § 1746, as amended by Laws 1908, chap. 115) prohibited: "Any vinous, alcoholic, malt, intoxicating, or spirituous liquors, or intoxicating bitters, or other drinks, which if drunk to excess will produce intoxication. . . ."

It was held that the liquor in question, being malt liquor was prohibited in terms, whether it would in fact intoxicate or not.

In Re Lockman, 18 Idaho, 465, 46 L.R.A. (N.S.) 759, 110 Pac. 253, the liquor was near beer. It was admitted that this near beer was a malt liquor. The undisputed evidence showed that it contained 1.28 per cent alcohol and 7.1 per cent malt extract, but did not contain enough alcohol to intoxicate in the largest quantity which could be consumed at one time. The statute (Laws 1909, p. 18, § 31) defined intoxicating liquors as follows: "The words, 'intoxicating liquors,' as used in this act, shall be deemed and construed to include spirituous, vinous, malt and fermented liquors, and all mixtures and preparations thereof, including bitters and other drinks that may be used as a beverage and produce intoxication."

The court said: "The legislature likewise recognized the fact that vinous, malt, and fermented liquors all contain, to some extent, the element of alcohol, although it may not be to such a degree as will produce intoxication. They therefore concluded when writing this statute defining the words, 'intoxicating liquors,' to declare as a matter of law that all 'spirituous, vinous, malt, and fermented liquors' are intoxicating, irrespective of the amount of alcohol they may contain, and whether or not the particular kind of drink will in fact produce intoxication."

Held, the liquor in question, being concededly a malt liquor was declared by the statute as a matter of law to be an intoxicating liquor, and prohibited.

In Brown v. State, 17 Ariz. 314, 152 Pac. 578, the liquor was called "Barette." It was conceded that it contained 1.96 per cent of alcohol by volume. It was conceded to have been made by the same process as beer, except that it was made from "barley, rice, and hops," while beer is made from "barley and hops." The undisputed evidence showed that it was nonintoxicating in the largest quantity which could be drunk. The Constitution of Arizona prohibits the manufacture or sale in that state of any "ardent spirits, ale, beer, wine, or intoxicating liquor or liquors of whatever kind." The case was tried to the court without a jury. The court said: "We are forced to the conclusion that the word 'beer,' as used in the Constitution, does not mean an intoxicating liquid only, but also a nonintoxicating fermented malted liquor, even though it be not intoxicating; that is, if the liquor be 'beer' as defined and historically known by the standard lexicographers and by the courts, its traffic is forbidden by the Constitution. If the article L.R.A.1917B.

involved in this case falls within the well-known definition of 'beer,' whether it be intoxicating or not, the appellant's act was criminal and subjects him to punishment."

Then quoting various definitions of "beer" from Century Dict.; Webster's Dict.; Standard Dict.; Encyclopedia Britannica; Joyce, Intoxicating Liquors, and Woollen & T. Intoxicating Liquors, the court held that the liquor, being beer, was prohibited, eo nomine, by the Constitution, whether intoxicating or not.

In Douglas v. State, 21 Ind. App. 302, 52 N. E. 238, the stuff sold was called "hop ale." The indictment charged a sale of "beer." There was evidence tending to show that it was in fact beer. There was also evidence that it was not beer, and was not in fact intoxicating. There was no evidence that it was not of a malted and fermented quality. The statute declared: "The words, 'Intoxicating liquor,' shall apply to any spirituous, vinous, or malt liquor, or to any intoxicating liquor whatever which is used or may be used as a beverage."

The court instructed the jury that " 'beer,' in the estimation of the law, is fermented liquor, made from any malted grain, with hops or other bitter flavoring matter." He also instructed that only a sale of "beer," as charged in the indictment, could sustain a verdict of guilty, and that "it is claimed by the defendant that the liquor on the occasion referred to in the indictment was hop ale, which is not intoxicating. As heretofore stated, the question for you to determine is not whether hop ale was sold, or whether hop ale is intoxicating, or whether beer is intoxicating, but your attention must be directed to the fact whether the liquor called hop ale was in fact beer, and whether it was sold as charged in the indictment."

On appeal these instructions were approved. The court said: "If the court, as matter of law, must know that beer is a malt liquor, it is not necessary to a conviction for the jury, besides finding a sale of beer, to find also, as a matter of fact, that beer—that is, malt liquor—is intoxicating."

In United States v. Cohn, 2 Ind. Terr. 474, 52 S. W. 38, the liquor sold was "Rochester tonic." The evidence showed that it was made in the same manner as beer, and was in fact the second draw or brew from the mash from which beer had previously been made, and that it was simply beer with a less percentage of alcohol than is contained in ordinary beer. It contained 3 per cent of malt extract and 1.73 per cent alcohol. It was admitted that Rochester tonic was a malt liquor. It was conceded in argument that the stuff contained 2 per cent and under of alcohol, and would not intoxicate. The statute prohibited the sale of "any vinous, malt, or fermented liquors, or any other intoxicating drinks of any kind whatsoever." A prior statute had prohibited "ale and beer." The court said, at pages 500, 502, of 2 Ind. Terr.: "The evident object of Congress in making the change of phraseology in the statute from 'ale and beer' to 'any malt of fermented liquors' was not to exclude that which the old had included, but it was to include in the new law that which was excluded by the old, by using an expression broad enough to cover all forms and kinds of alcoholic drinks. . . . The law as it existed prior to the act of 1895 prohibited ale and beer in all of their forms. The first act passed afterwards, relating to the same conditions prohibits malt liquors, ale, and beer, in all of their forms. Did Congress intend to make an exception in the act of 1895? We think not, and therefore hold that malt and fermented liquors, when to be used as beverages or for drinks, are prohibited by the statute, in all of their forms, and the question as to whether or not they are intoxicating is immaterial."

In Sawyer v. Botti, 147 Iowa, 453, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1007, 124 N. W. 787, the action was to enjoin the sale of "justus beer," and was of course tried to the court. The evidence showed that in the manufacture of justus beer the same materials were used as in lager beer, and the process of malting and extracting was the same, except that the process of fermentation was arrested before any considerable amount of alcohol was produced, so that justus beer contained about one half of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume, while lager beer contains 3½ per cent of alcohol. The evidence further showed that justus beer was not intoxicating because no ordinary person could imbibe enough at one time to get sufficient alcohol to produce intoxication. The statute prohibited the sale of "intoxicating liquor," except as otherwise provided, and defined that term to mean "alcohol, ale, wine, beer, spirituous, vinous, and malt liquor, and all intoxicating liquor whatever." The injunction was granted. On appeal the supreme court affirmed the decree saying: "We reach the conclusion without the slightest doubt that the beverage in question, being a liquor manufactured from malted grain by a process involving fermentation, no matter how slight the fermentation may be, and irrespective of the amount of alcohol which it actually contains, and also without regard to whether it is in fact intoxicating, is within the statutory description of liquors the sale of which is prohibited. It is conceded that the process of manufacture of justus beer is the same as that of lager beer, save that the fermentation is arrested at an earlier stage, and therefore less alcohol is contained in the product. We think that such liquor is 'beer' within the statutory definition, but, whether so or not, it is unquestionably a malt liquor." (Italics ours.)

The court thus clearly recognized the elements of fermentation of malt and at least some trace of alcohol as the essential and distinctive features of malt liquors, just as do all of the dictionaries, though the liquid in question was not intoxicating.

In Luther v. State, 83 Neb. 455, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1146, 120 N. W. 125, the defendant was charged with selling, without a license, "a certain malt and intoxicating liquor; to wit, malt tonic." The undisputed evidence showed that the liquor contained 1.1 per cent of alcohol and was "in the class of beers." The manufacturer's label stated that it contained "less than 2 per cent of alcohol" and was "brewed." The statute prohibited the sale of "malt, spirituous, or vinous liquors, or any intoxicating drinks," without a license. The court held that, as to the character of the liquor, it was not necessary to prove more than that it was a "malt liquor." In answer to the claim that there was no proof that it would intoxicate the court said: "At any rate, the law prohibits the sale of 'malt liquors' without a license, and we must obey its plain mandate. Alcoholic beverages are under the ban of the law in some form or other, in most civilized countries. They are known to be the cause of crime, destitution, and pauperism. Malt liquors used as beverages are known to contain that destructive ingredient. It was proven upon the trial of this case that the beverage kept and sold by plaintiff in error contained it. The liquor sold by him was simply an effort to evade the law. The title of the act is 'An Act to Regulate the License and Sale of Malt, Spirituous, and Vinous Liquors,' etc. Laws 1907, chap. 82, p. 297. The whole act is built upon that title. Malt liquors are as much within both the letter and spirit of the law as either of the other classes named. To say that the legislature intended to provide for the regulation and license of intoxicating malt liquors would require the same word to be used as defining the other classes, and would be legislating and reading into the statute a word which the legislature clearly intended should not be there. This is not the province of the courts." (Italics ours.)

While the court did not define "malt liquor," it recognized that all malt liquors contain alcohol, thus agreeing with the definitions of the lexicographers, all of which, as we have seen, include the alcoholic element.

In La Follette v. Murray, 81 Ohio St.

474, 91 N. E. 294, the liquor involved was "Friedon beer." Defendant was sued for an occupation tax laid by statute in the trafficking in "spirituous, vinuous, malt, or other intoxicating liquors." The case was tried on an agreed statement of facts, in which it was admitted that the stuff was "a malt liquor containing .47 of 1 per cent of alcohol, but not intoxicating." The court sustained a judgment for the tax, holding that the generic term "malt liquors" includes both nonintoxicating and intoxicating malt liquors. It did not attempt to define malt liquors, because the liquor in question was admitted to be a malt liquor and contained alcohol.

In State v. O'Connell, 99 Me. 61, 58 Atl. 59, the defendant was indicted for being a common seller of intoxicating liquors. While the statute then in force in Maine is not set out in the opinion, the court said: "Rev. Stat. 1883, chap. 27, § 33, amounts to a prohibition of the sale of malt liquor."

The evidence showed a sale of "Uno beer, brewed from malt, and containing 2.36 per cent of alcohol." On the trial the court refused to instruct that the jury must find the liquor was intoxicating, but did instruct that "if you find beyond a reasonable doubt that the beer in question was brewed from malt, it was a malt beer, and comes within the prohibition of the statute."

The supreme judicial court held that this was not error, saying: "The issue was whether the defendant sold malt liquor. If he did sell it, it was in violation of the statute, and it was not necessary, in order to establish his guilt, for the jury to go further, revise the judgment of the legislature, and determine whether malt liquor was or was not in fact intoxicating. . . . The presiding justice was not bound to define the term 'malt liquor.' State v. Starr, 67 Me. 242, 2 Am. Crim. Rep. 390; State v. Wall, 34 Me. 165. While the court should define to the jury legal terms to which the law has attached a specific meaning, it is not required to define words in common and ordinary use, the definition and meaning of which jurors are presumed to understand as well as the court."

If, as the court says the common meaning is the true meaning of the term "malt liquor," then where the question as here is presented as one of fact for the court, we can only take that definition on which the dictionaries in common use are unanimous; namely, an "alcoholic beverage brewed from malt" or "produced by fermentation from malt." See Standard, Century, and Webster's International Dictionaries, above quoted.

In Feibelman v. State, 130 Ala. 122, 30 So. 384, the cause was tried to the court L.R.A.1917B.

without a jury. The liquor sold was "hop jack." The evidence showed that it contained from 1.75 to 2 per cent alcohol, and "was produced by fermentation of malted barley, diluted with water, and was therefore a malt liquor," but in potable quantity was not capable of producing intoxication. The statute prohibited "the selling of spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors, or intoxicating bitters or beverages." The supreme court sustained a conviction on the ground that the statute expressly prohibited the sale of "malt liquor," and that the evidence showed that "hop jack" was a malt liquor. The court further said: "We may, for all the purposes of this case, concede, without indicating any opinion upon the question, that the legislature may not, in the exercise of the police power, prohibit the sale of a malt liquor which is not intoxicating, nor otherwise deleterious in any way, where the sole purpose and object is the prevention of the sale of that particular character or quality of malt liquor. But it is common knowledge that most malt liquors are intoxicating and harmful when used excessively, and are capable of excessive use as a beverage. The sale of all such, of course, the legislature has the power to prohibit."

Clearly the evidence there brought the hop jack within the exact terms of the Century Dictionary definition, "an alcoholic beverage produced merely by fermentation of malt," and within the specific meaning of the definitions found in the Standard and Webster's International Dictionaries.

State ex rel. Guilbert v. Kauffman, 68 Ohio St. 635, 67 N. E. 1062, was a suit in mandamus to compel the enforcement of a statute imposing a tax "on the business of trafficking in any intoxicating liquors, and also on the business of trafficking in spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors." The petition alleged that the liquor involved was "a malt liquor or beverage, commonly known as 'Bishop's beer,' . . . which malt liquor or beverage contains less than 2 per cent of alcohol, and is not intoxicating." The court overruled a demurrer to the petition on the ground that "the generic term 'malt liquors' includes both nonintoxicating and intoxicating malt liquors."

The court did not define the term "malt liquors," because the demurrer admitted the allegation of the petition that the stuff was a malt liquor and contained alcohol.

In Flanders v. Com. 140 Ky. 38, 130 S. W. 809, the liquor involved was called "temperance beer" or "Dr. Fizz." It was admitted to contain 1 per cent of alcohol. Witnesses who drank it testified that "the liquor looked like beer, smelt like beer, foamed like beer, and tasted like beer. Several of them testified that they drank beer many times, one of them that he had been a barkeeper, selling beer for some years, and that in their opinion the liquor was beer somewhat diluted."

Defendant and the manufacturer testified that it was merely a carbonated water, with 1 per cent of alcohol added. The statute prohibited the sale of "spirituous, vinous, and malt liquors." The court took judicial notice that beer is a malt liquor, and instructed the jury that if it found that the concoction in question was "ordinary beer, a malt liquor," defendant should be found guilty. The appellate court approved this instruction, saying: "As, therefore, the statute in terms prohibits the sale of malt liquors in local option territory, it is enough to inquire whether the liquor sold is malt liquor; if it is, the guilt is fixed. Whether it intoxicates some people or not, or is only a mild intoxicant, or whether defendant believed that it was an innocent soft drink, is immaterial."

In Com. v. Goodwin, 109 Va. 828, 64 S. E. 54, a statute known as the "Byrd Law," a state revenue act, permitted the sale of "malt beverages," which it defined as "the product of a brewing plant, or brewery, and shall, as to its composition, comply with the standards now, or as may hereafter be prescribed by the pure food commissioner of the United States, but shall be nonintoxicating and in no event contain in excess of 2½ per cent in volume of alcohol."

Another statute prohibited licensing the sale of "ardent spirits, malt liquors, or any mixture thereof or any bitters containing alcohol," in any town except upon the written consent of the town council. The court held that "malt beverages" as defined in the first statute were "malt liquors" within the meaning of the second statute. Since "brewing" essentially involves fermentation, it is clear that the definition of "malt beverages" in the Byrd Law brings such beverages within the definition of "malt liquor" as found in all the dictionaries.

In State v. Walder, 83 Ohio St. 68, 93 N. E. 531, the statute defined "intoxicating liquor" as including "any distilled, malt, vinous, or any intoxicating liquor whatever." The liquor sold was near beer. The accused testified that it was made as other beer, only weaker; that it was then boiled so as not to contain any alcohol; that "sugar, etc.," was then added, and the mixture was "carbonated;" that "if you keep it in a warm place, it would generate alcohol right away," but if kept cool "it might go two or three weeks . . . and never get alcohol." That this was why he did not ship it or sell it except on his own place; that in the beer he sold at the time in question there was probably .2 of 1 per cent of alcohol. He admitted that if left standing it would become intoxicating. The court held that the concoction was a malt liquor, and was hence in law an intoxicating liquor because the legislature had defined it so. It is clear that it was brewed from malt and contained at least a trace of alcohol as admitted by the defendant, and would soon develop sufficient alcohol to become intoxicating. It plainly fell within the standard definition of malt liquor as an "alcoholic beverage brewed from malt." The facts showed a plain attempt to evade the statute by selling a potential beer.

The case of Campbell v. Thomasville, 6 Ga. App. 212, 64 S. E. 815, has no bearing upon the case before us. The court there defines "near beer" as "a term now of general currency in this state, and perhaps elsewhere, used to designate any and all of that class of malt liquors which contain so little alcohol that they will not produce intoxication, even though drunk to excess. It includes all malt liquors which are not within the purview of the general prohibition law."

The case merely held that, because its sale was not prohibited by the general statute, it could not be prohibited by a city ordinance, but because it was an imitation and substitute for beer, and liable to be used as a cover for the sale of real beer, it was within the police power of the city to regulate its sale by ordinance. This is elementary. In fact it is admitted in the case before us that the sale of beverages containing no alcohol whatever may be by state statute absolutely prohibited in the exercise of the police power as an aid to the enforcement of the prohibition of alcoholic beverages. But our statute contains no such provision unless every liquid containing malt, whether fermented or not, and whether containing alcohol or not, is a malt liquor, which is the real question here involved.

In People v. Kinney, 124 Mich. 486, 83 N. W. 147, the court merely held that fermented cider was a "fermented liquor," and hence prohibited by the statute, whatever the degree of fermentation.

We shall not review in detail the other cases cited by respondent, involving statutes prohibiting the sale of "cider" eo nomine. They merely hold that, cider being in terms prohibited, the courts will not inquire whether the given cider is or is not "sweet" or "hard," fermented or unfermented, new or old, intoxicating or nonintoxicating. They throw no light on the question before us. Com. v. Dean, 14 Gray, 99; State v. Frederickson, 101 Me. 37, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 186, 115 Am. St. Rep. 295, 63 Atl.

535, 8 Ann. Cas. 48; State v. Spaulding, 61 Vt. 505, 17 Atl. 844.

We want it distinctly understood we do not hold that the statute does not prohibit the manufacture and sale of a malt beverage of such composition that of itself under proper conditions it will generate alcohol. We hold just the contrary. Such a liquor would be potentially a malt liquor. In the language of the statutes it would contain "intoxicating properties." Its manufacture or sale would be a palpable evasion of the statute. State v. Walder, supra. But the liquid here involved, it is admitted, "is entirely free from alcohol," and "does not in fact contain intoxicating properties." The admission clearly negatives the idea that it will of itself generate any alcohol whatever. It is not even claimed by the state that it will. We have therefore neither allegation nor proof to bring the beverage here involved within any definition of malt liquor, actual or potential.

We further want it distinctly understood that we are not giving to the stuff called "Lifestaff" a certificate of character. We are merely passing on the admitted facts now before us. If in any future case it shall be either admitted or proved that Lifestaff, or any other beverage by whatever name called, is in fact a malt liquor, either actual or potential, as the dictionaries, text-books, and courts have defined the term "malt liquor," then in such a case it must be held an "intoxicating liquor" as defined in the statute, and hence prohibited.

Neither do we hold that liquids absolutely harmless, wholly free from alcohol and wholly free from intoxicating properties of any kind, might not be directly prohibited, or might not be conclusively defined as intoxicating liquors, and so prohibited, by a law so declaring in order to aid in the enforcement of the purpose of the prohibition law. The legislature, or the people in a legislative capacity, have the undoubted power to prohibit any liquid, however harmless in itself, but which might be used as a cover for the sale of the harmful liquors, or to prohibit all imitations or substitutes for intoxicating liquors, however harmless separately considered. But we have no such statute and this court cannot pass one. It cannot legislate. Experience in the enforcement of the law as it is now written may eventually show such a need, but this court cannot supply it. The law as it now is contains no such provision, either in terms or by any possible implication, however liberally construed.

Again we do not hold that the prohibition law as it now reads prohibits nothing but liquors or liquids capable of producing intoxication when taken to capacity. On the contrary, we hold that every malt liquor, though containing only a trace of alcohol, is in terms prohibited because it is a "malt liquor" under the common meaning of that term as defined by every standard dictionary and every court which has attempted to define it.

We merely hold that a liquid containing malt, if unfermented and containing no alcohol whatever, is not a "malt liquor," as defined by any standard dictionary of our language, or as defined by any text-book, or as defined by any court which has attempted to define the term, to which our attention has been directed, or which, after many days of careful search, we have been able to find. In this we are not merely following precedent. We are simply giving to the term "malt liquor" the only meaning that it has in our language. We are not even selecting between a primary and secondary meaning. We are taking the only meaning which the words have. It is admitted that the liquid here involved does not come within that meaning. We are bound by the admitted facts.

The judgment is reversed.

Morris, Ch. J., and Parker, Mount, Main, Holcomb, and Chadwick, JJ., concur.

Annotation—Do statutes forbidding the sale of a certain class or classes of liquor include nonintoxicating liquor.

This note is supplemental to the notes to Luther v. State, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1146; Bowling Green v. McMullen, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 895, and Ex parte Lockman, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 759.

The constitutional power to prohibit or regulate the sale of nonintoxicating alcoholic liquors is discussed in the note to State v. Fargo Bottling Works Co. 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 872; and the power of the municipality to regulate the sale of such liquors in the note to State v. Dannenburg, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 890. As to power to prohibit or regulate the sale of "soft" drinks, see the note to Tolliver v. Blizard, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 890.

Upon the question whether allegation or proof of the sale of beer is sufficient to sustain a conviction under statutes prohibiting sale of vinous, malt, fermented, or intoxicating liquors, see the notes to People v. Anderson, 25 L.R.A.

(N.S.) 446, and State v. Billups, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 308.

Other related questions are discussed in notes cited in the Indexes to L.R.A. Notes under the title, "Intoxicating liquors."

Cases under statutes prohibiting the sale of beverages containing alcohol in any quantity whatever are excluded from the question now under consideration, as are those under statutes relating in terms to nonintoxicating liquors.

As is shown in the earlier notes, the authorities upon this question are in direct conflict; the weight of authority taking the view that, where the statute expressly forbids the sale of a certain class of liquor, nonintoxicating as well as intoxicating liquors of that class are included within the prohibition. The same may be said of the more recent cases.

Thus, in Bradley v. State (1912) 3 Ala. App. 212, 58 So. 95, the defendant was held subject to conviction under the Alabama statute, where he sold a malt liquor, whether or not it was an intoxicant; the court following the Alabama cases in the note in 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1146.

So, in Berner v. McHenry (1915) 169 Iowa, 483, 151 N. W. 450, the court followed Sawyer v. Botti (1910) 147 Iowa, 453, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1007, 124 N. W. 787, cited in the note in 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 895, and held that a liquor containing malt and alcohol, which could be and was used as a beverage, was malt liquor prohibited by the statute.

So it was held that a fermented malt liquor containing alcohol, whether intoxicating or not, is within a statute prohibiting the sale of "any spirituous, malt, ardent, or intoxicating liquors or drinks." Pennell v. State (1909) 141 Wis. 35, 123 N. W. 115.

And in Brown v. State (1915) 17 Ariz. 314, 152 Pac. 578, referred to in State v. Hemrich, ante, 962, it was held that beer, whether intoxicating or not, is within a prohibition of "ardent spirits, ale, beer, wine, or intoxicating liquor or liquors of whatever kind."

So, also, it has been held that a fermented liquor containing .55 of 1 per cent of alcohol at 60 Fahrenheit, though not intoxicating, is within a prohibiting statute declaring that, "by the words, 'spirit,' 'spirituous liquors,' or 'intoxicating liquor,' shall be intended all distilled liquors or rectified spirits, vinous, fermented, brewed, and malt liquors and wines, and any beverage, by whatever name called, containing more than 1 per L.R.A.1917B.

cent of alcohol by volume at 60 Fahrenheit." State v. Lebreque (1916) — N. H. —, 97 Atl. 747.

And an indictment charging the sale of "ardent, vinous, malt, fermented, spirituous, alcoholic, and intoxicating liquors" is supported by proof of sale of any of such liquors which contain any alcohol at all, whether they are intoxicating or not, under a statute prohibiting the sale of "alcohol or any spirituous, ardent, vinous, malt, or fermented liquors in this state, or any compound or preparation thereof, commonly called tonics, bitters, or medicated liquors, or intoxicating spirits of any character which are used and drank as a beverage in any quantity or for any purpose whatever," etc. Seibert v. State (1915) 121 Ark. 258, 180 S. W. 990.

It is not necessary for the prosecution to prove that the liquor sold would actually intoxicate a person or that anybody had become intoxicated; but simply that the accused has sold distilled, spirituous, vinous, fermented, or malt liquors, whether strong or weak, and whether in fact intoxicating or not, where the statute provides that the term "intoxicating liquors" in that statute shall include all distilled, spirituous, vinous, fermented, and malt liquors. People v. Stone (1910) 154 Ill. App. 7.

In State v. Martin (1910) 230 Mo. 1, 139 Am. St. Rep. 628, 129 S. W. 931, the Local Option Act prohibiting the selling of a beverage containing alcohol in any quantity whatever was attacked as unconstitutional in that this provision was not embraced in the subject of the title, "submitting the question of prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors." But the court held that the legislature must be deemed to have had in mind the definition of intoxicating liquors in the so-called Dramshop Law; viz., "The term 'intoxicating liquor,' as used in this chapter, shall be construed to mean fermented, vinous, or spirituous liquors, or any composition of which fermented, vinous, or spirituous liquors is a part, and all the foregoing provisions shall be liberally construed as remedial in their character."

On the other hand in Georgia it is held that a law prohibiting the sale of "any alcoholic, spirituous, malt, or intoxicating liquors, or other drinks which, if drunk to excess, will produce intoxication," comprehends only such beverages as, "if drunk to excess, will produce intoxication." Abbott v. State (1912) 11 Ga. App. 43, 74 S. E. 621, holding that the expression "near beer" does not import an intoxicating liquor, and that evidence of the sale of such a beverage, without proof that, if drunk to excess, it will produce intoxication, will not support a conviction of violation of the statute, the court observing that "this court has defined 'near beer' as a malt liquor containing such a small percentage of alcohol that it will not produce intoxication if drunk to excess."

So, in Howard v. Aeme Brewing Co. (1914) 143 Ga. 1, 83 S. E. 1096, it was held that neither the statute aforesaid nor the Blind Tiger Statute was intended to apply to the sale of a nonintoxicating malt liquor, the latter statute providing for the abatement as a nuisance of a place "commonly known as a 'blind tiger,' where spirituous, malt, or intoxicating liquors are sold in violation of law."

In Hoskins v. Com. (1916) — Ky. —, 188 S. W. 348, where the indictment was for the offense of having in possession for the purpose of selling any spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors in local option territory, the court said: "Beer is a malt liquor, and, while it is essential to constitute guilt of the offense for which appellant was indicted, that the malt liquor should be also intoxicating, when it is proven to be beer, the court will presume or take judicial knowledge that it is intoxicating, without proof to that effect." But the conviction was reversed on another ground.

In South Carolina it is held that liquor which cannot intoxicate because sickness would intervene before intoxication is not within a statute prohibiting delivery of intoxicating liquors. Geer Drug Co. v. Atlantic Coast Co. (1916) — S. C. —, 88 S. E. 448.

Under the Texas Local Option Law, it is held that the expression "intoxicating liquors" means "a liquor intended for use as a beverage, or capable of being so used, which contains alcohol, either obtained by fermentation or by the additional process of distillation, in such a proportion that it will produce intoxication when taken in such quantities as may practically be drunk." Sandoloski v. State (1912) 65 Tex. Crim. Rep. 33, 143 S. W. 151. See also Cannan v. State (1913) 71 Tex. Crim. Rep. 416, 159 S. W. 1186.

In People v. Strickler (1914) 25 Cal. App. 60, 142 Pac. 1121, disapproved in State v. Hemrich, ante, 962, it was held that a statute prohibiting the sale of "alcoholic liquors" does not include malt liquor containing less than 1 per cent of alcohol, where the statute provides that "the term 'alcoholic liquors,' as used in this act, shall include spirituous, vinous, and malt liquors, and any other liquor or mixture of liquors which contains 1 per cent by volume, or more, of alcohol, and which is not so mixed with other drugs as to prevent its use as a beverage."

It will be observed that the reversal in State v. Hemrich is upon the ground that the expression "malt liquor" imports a liquid containing alcohol.

The following miscellaneous cases are closely allied to the subject:

The words "imitation" and "substitute" are limited by the words, "containing as much as one half of 1 per centum of alcohol," in a statute prohibiting the sale, etc., of "any spirituous, vinous, fermented, or malt liquors, or any imitation thereof or substitute therefor; or to manufacture, sell, barter, give away, or otherwise furnish any liquor or compounds of any kind or description whatsoever, whether medicated or not, which contain as much as one half of 1 per centum of alcohol, measured by volume, and which is capable of being used as a beverage," etc. Ex parte Hunnicutt (1912) 7 Okla. Crim. Rep. 213, 123 Pac. 179, followed in Wortman v. State (1913) 9 Okla. Crim. Rep. 440, 132 Pac. 358.

In holding sufficient an affidavit charging that the defendant did unlawfully sell 1 pint of beer, he not being licensed under the laws of the state "to sell spirituous, vinous, and malt liquors," the court said: "If the beer sold by appellant was not intoxicating liquor within the meaning of the statute prohibiting the sale of such liquors as a beverage by an unlicensed dealer, he had the right to controvert that fact upon the trial." Turner v. State (1910) 175 Ind. 1, 93 N. E. 225. The court was perhaps referring to the following provision: "The words, 'intoxicating liquors,' shall apply to any spirituous, vinous, or malt liquor, or to any intoxicating liquor whatever which is used or may be used as a beverage, and which contains more than one half of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume."

In Louisiana the state may license and tax the sale of malt liquors containing less than 2 per cent of alcohol, even in districts where the local authorities permit no license for liquor containing any amount of alcohol, however small. Hammond Ice, Light & Bottling Co. v. Ballard (1914) 135 La. 201, 65 So. 108.

Under a statute prohibiting the sale of "any spirituous, malt, vinous, fermented, or other intoxicating liquors," an information is insufficient which charges the sale of "certain liquids, to wit, 'Temp-Brew,' the said 'Temp-Brew' being an imitation of beer, having the color of beer, foaming like beer, having a slight smell like beer, and, . . .

when drawn from said cask or barrel into a glass, resembled beer." Re McKenna (1916) 97 Kan. 153, 154 Pac. 226, where, however, the court refused a release on habeas corpus on other grounds. B. B. B.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

WESTERN CASUALTY & GUARANTY INSURANCE COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

BOARD OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF MUSKOGEE COUNTY et al.

(— Okla. —, 159 Pac. 655.)

Principal and surety — depository's bond — irregular appointment.

1. One who guarantees by bond the payment of public funds deposited by a county treasurer in a bank designated as a county depository, under the provision of § 1540, Rev. Laws, 1910, may not defeat liability on the bond by showing that the designation of such bank as a county depository was irregular or illegal.

For other cases, see Bonds, II. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Bonds — surplusage — effect.

2. Where a depository bond executed pursuant to the provisions of said § 1540 contains the exact conditions imposed by the statute and, in addition, other conditions which are not provided by the statute, tending to limit or evade liability, the bond will be upheld as to the conditions imposed by statute, and the other provisions will be treated as surplusage.

For other cases, see Bonds, II. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(August 8, 1916.)

ERROR to the District Court for Muskogee County to review a judgment in plaintiffs' favor in an action on a depository bond given to secure the payment of public funds deposited by the county treasurer. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioners' opinion.

Messrs. Zevely, Glvens, & Stoutz for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Fred. P. Branson, W. E. Disney, B. B. Blakeney, and J. H. Maxey, for defendants in error:

Headnotes by EDWARDS, C.

Note. — As to effect of insertion of unauthorized provisions in a bond required by statute, see annotation following UNITED STATES FIDELITY & G. Co. v. POETKEB, post, 990. L.R.A.1917B.

The deposits were lawful.

Hinton v. State, — Okla. —, 156 Pac. 161.

The recital in the bond that the county commissioners, duly acting in accordance with law, have designated the First State Bank of Wainwright, Oklahoma, as a depository, estopped the surety from now denying that it was not duly done.

State v. United States Fidelity & G. Co. 81 Kan. 660, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 865, 106 Pac. 1040; St. Louis County v. American Loan & T. Co. 75 Minn. 499, 78 N. W. 113; Henry County v. Salmon, 201 Mo. 136, 100 S. W. 20; Yellowstone County v. First Trust & Sav. Bank, 46 Mont. 439, 128 Pac. 596; Territory v. Mills, 16 N. M. 555, 120 Pac. 325; Powell v. Tunica County, 107 Miss. 410, 65 So. 499, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 1262; Buhrer v. Baldwin, 137 Mich. 263, 100 N. W. 468; People v. Bankers' Surety Co. 158 Mich. 30, 122 N. W. 353.

The county commissioners could not impose the duty to give notice upon officers created by law with duties defined by law.

Southwestern Surety Ins. Co. v. Davis, — Okla. —, 156 Pac. 213; Higdon v. Fields, 6 Ala. App. 281, 60 So. 594; United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. Union Trust & Sav. Co. 142 Ala. 532, 38 So. 177; American Surety Co. v. Pauly, 170 U. S. 133, 42 L. ed. 977, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 552; United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. Muir, 53 C. C. A. 56, 115 Fed. 264; St. Louis County v. Security Bank, 75 Minn. 174, 77 N. W. 815.

Notice of default was timely given.

Van Buren County v. American Surety Co. 137 Iowa, 400, 126 Am. St. Rep. 200, 115 N. W. 24; Peele v. Provident Fund Soc. 147 Ind. 543, 44 N. E. 661, 46 N. E. 990; Ætna Indemnity Co. v. J. R. Crowe Coal & Min. Co. 83 C. C. A. 431, 154 Fed. 545; Ward v. Maryland Casualty Co. 71 N. H. 262, 93 Am. St. Rep. 514, 51 Atl. 900; Booth v. Irving Nat. Exch. Bank, 116 Md. 668, 82 Atl. 652.

Edwards, C., filed the following opinion:

For convenience and brevity the board of county commissioners will be referred to as the board, the Western Casualty & Guaranty Insurance Company as the Western Company, and the First State Bank of Wainwright as the bank.

This is an action in which the board of county commissioners of Muskogee county brought suit against the First State Bank of Wainwright and the Western Casualty & Guaranty Insurance Company upon a depository bond, the petition alleging that on December 1, 1912, W. H. Wainwright was the duly elected, qualified, and acting county treasurer of Muskogee county, and continued to act as such until the 31st day of October, 1913; that on or about said 1st day of December, 1912, the said bank was a corporation under the banking laws of the state of Oklahoma, engaged in the banking business, at Wainwright, Muskogee county; that the defendant the Western Casualty & Guaranty Insurance Company was a corporation under the laws of Oklahoma, authorized and empowered to write indemnity and depository bonds; that on or about the 1st day of December, 1912, the board of county commissioners of Muskogee county designated the said bank as a county depository for the deposit of county and other funds in the hands of the treasurer of said county, and that said board at the time of designating said bank required that said bank should execute a bond with good and sufficient surety, in the sum of $10,000, to secure the deposit of the county funds and funds deposited with said bank by the said treasurer, and that on the 3d day of December, 1912, the bank tendered to the county treasurer a bond in said sum executed by it and the said Western Company as surety, the said bond containing conditions as follows: "Now, therefore, the condition of this obligation is such that if the said First State Bank of Wainwright, Oklahoma, shall safely keep the moneys constituting the county funds of Muskogee county, Oklahoma, and shall promptly pay all checks and drafts drawn by said treasurer against such county funds, including all interest to accrue thereon at the agreed upon rate per centum per annum on all monthly balances, then this obligation to be void; otherwise to remain in full force and virtue. Provided, however, and upon the following conditions: First. That in the event of any default on the part of the principal, written notice thereof, with a certified statement of the facts showing such default and the date thereof, shall, within thirty days after such default, be delivered to the surety at its office in the city of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma."

Then follow allegations of a conspiracy between the county treasurer and the president of said bank, and allegations of embezzlements and of the forging, altering, and mutilating the records of said bank. It is alleged further that the county treasurer was, in fact, the owner of the stock of said bank, and had secretly transferred the same to other parties, and made the bank's records show that other parties were the owners of the stock of said bank; that the records of the county treasurer were falsified to show that no money belonging to said county was on deposit in said bank. Then it is alleged that on the 16th day of October, 1913, the said bank closed its doors and refused the payments of money on deposit in said bank, refused to pay checks and drafts drawn by the said county treasurer, and that on the 19th day of December, 1913, this plaintiff discovered that an amount in excess of $10,000 of the funds of said county was actually on deposit in said bank, and had been continuously since the execution and approval of said bond; that plaintiff at once served written notice of said default upon the said Western Company at its office in Oklahoma City, and attached thereto a certified statement showing the facts so far as known by the plaintiff.

Plaintiff alleges that it did not discover that there was any money of said county on deposit in said bank prior to December 19, 1913, and sets out at length the concealment practised which prevented it from knowing of such deposit. Plaintiff alleges that it has done and performed all the conditions of the said bond, but that the said bank has refused to pay checks drawn by the treasurer on said deposit, and that there has accrued upon said deposit, at the agreed rate, interest in the sum of $600. Judgment is prayed against the said bank for the sum of $60,600, and against the Western Company for $10,000, with interest. Motions to strike out certain portions of the answer were filed by the defendant Western Company, and, after being overruled, a demurrer was filed, which was overruled, and the said defendant then answered, setting up four separate defenses, the first being a general denial, except as to the execution of the bond sued upon and the corporate existence of the parties; second, the defendant alleges, in substance, that at the time the said bank was designated as a county depository, W. H. Wainwright, the county treasurer, owned a large amount of the stock of said bank, and that the designation of said bank was therefore in violation of the provisions of § 1540 of the Revised Laws of Oklahoma, and the bond, being in furtherance of said unlawful purpose, was without validity and not binding; third, that the said bond sued upon provided that in the event of default on the part of the principal, written notice, with a certified statement of the facts showing such default, should, within thirty days after such default, be delivered to the surety at Oklahoma City; that the said bank, on the 16th day of October, closed its doors and refused all payments of money on deposit in said bank, and the plaintiff, not having within thirty days thereafter given notice as provided in said bond, is not entitled to recover; fourth, that the bond was procured by fraud, in that the county treasurer was the owner of a part of the capital stock of the said bank, and the designation thereof as a depository was illegal; that the defendant Western Company was not aware of the ownership of stock by the county treasurer, and, if such fact had been known, would not have executed said bond; that it was the duty of the county commissioners to know whether said county treasurer was interested in said bank, and whether said bank might be legally designated a depository; that by reason of the fraud as aforesaid the bond is null and void. The plaintiff filed a general denial by way of reply. Judgment was entered by default against the bank, express reservation being made of the cause of action upon the depository bond upon which the Western Company is here sued.

At the time of the rendering of the judgment against the bank, an amended petition was filed by the plaintiff, which amounts in effect to a severance of the causes of action against the bank and the defendant the Western Company. The cause as between the plaintiff and the Western Company was referred to and tried by a referee, who took the evidence and made findings of fact and conclusions of law, which were duly transcribed and filed in the superior court. Later, upon motion, the report was confirmed, and judgment entered for the plaintiff and against the defendants, the bank and the Western Company, jointly and severally, for the sum of $10,000, with interest thereon at 2½ per cent per annum, from the 17th day of October, 1913. Proper motions for new trial were filed and overruled and exceptions saved, and within due time the cause was appealed to this court. The record is voluminous, containing about 800 pages.

The contentions of plaintiff in error may be summarized as follows: First, that the company is not bound except for legal deposits; second, that the bond is not valid; third, that the county failed to give notice as the bond provides.

These contentions will be noticed in the order presented. Upon the first proposition, that the company is not bound except for legal deposits, the plaintiff in error contends that the bond in question is one to guarantee the payment of deposits only, and, as it appears that there was no legal authority for making the deposits by the county treasurer in the bank, that the bond is not liable, whether such lack of legal authority be based upon violation of law or lack of facts justifying the deposit; that the title to the funds never passed, and the relation of debtor and creditor never arose; that the funds illegally deposited can be followed as far as they can be traced, and if they are lost, the official bond of the treasurer is liable. The pertinent part of the law with reference to county depositories to be here considered is found in § 1540, Rev. Laws 1910, and is: "In all counties the county treasurer shall deposit daily all the funds and money of whatsoever kind that shall come into his possession by virtue of his office as such county treasurer in his name as such county treasurer, in one or more responsible banks located in the county and designated by the board of county commissioners as the county depositories: Provided, that there shall not be deposited of such funds in any one bank at any one time, a greater amount than the capital stock of said bank. Such bank shall receive all moneys, checks or drafts at par and pay interest on the average daily balances at the rate of 2½ per cent per annum, and shall credit the same monthly to the account of such treasurer. Before directing or authorizing the deposit of any such funds aforesaid the board of county commissioners shall take from each such bank a bond in a sum equal to the largest approximate amount that may be deposited in each respectively, at any one time; said bond may be that of some surety company empowered to do business in the state. . . . The condition of said bond shall be that such deposit shall be promptly paid on the check or draft of the treasurer of such county, and the bondsmen of said treasurer shall not be liable for such deposit. . . . Provided, that it shall be unlawful for the board of county commissioners of any county to deposit any funds of their county in any bank in which the county treasurer or any member of the board of county commissioners shall be the owner of any stock or otherwise pecuniarily interested."

Plaintiff in error cites the case of Watts v. Cleveland County, 21 Okla. 231, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 918, 95 Pac. 771, as authority for the proposition advanced; but that case is based upon the law as it existed prior to the passage of the present law authorizing the designation of depositories (§ 1540, supra), and the holding is virtually to the effect that it was unlawful for a county treasurer to make a general deposit of county funds, the court saying: "The deposit fund involved in this case was placed in the bank as a general deposit by Mr. Hughes as treasurer of Cleveland county. Under ordinary circumstances such a deposit would constitute a loan, and would create the relation of debtor and creditor between Cleveland county and the bank. We are convinced, though, that under the laws of the territory of Oklahoma, as they existed at the time of this transaction, such relation was not thereby created. 'A general deposit in a bank is a loan.' Bank of Blackwell v. Dean, 9 Okla. 626, 60 Pac. 226. Section 6062, Wilson's Revised & Annotated Statutes of Oklahoma of 1903, makes it a crime for a county treasurer to loan public funds. Section 1239, Wilson's Revised & Annotated Statutes of 1903, provides that 'the books, accounts, and vouchers of the county treasurer, and all moneys, warrants, or orders remaining in the treasury, shall at all times be subject to the inspection and examination of the board of county commissioners, and at the regular meetings of the board in January and July of each year, and at such other times as they may direct, he shall settle with them his accounts as treasurer, and for that purpose he shall exhibit to them all his books, accounts, and money, and all the vouchers relating to the same, to be audited and allowed, which vouchers shall be retained by them for evidence of his settlement; and if found correct the accounts shall be so certified; if not he shall be liable on his bond.' It would seem from this section and the section making it a crime to loan public funds that the statutes of Oklahoma, prior to the passage of the bill providing for the creation of public depositories did not permit county treasurers to make general deposits of public funds, but it was his duty to at all times have the funds of the county under his control so that, immediately upon being directed to do so by the board of county commissioners, he may exhibit such funds to said board."

Subsequently to that decision the present law was enacted, in 1905. Plaintiff in error also cites the case of Hinton v. State (No. 6125) — Okla. —, 156 Pac. 161, in which it is held: "The condition of said bond shall be that such deposit shall be promptly paid on the check or draft of the treasurer of such county, and the bondsmen of said treasurer shall not be liable for such deposit.' Held, that the sentence, 'the county commissioners shall take from each such bank (depository) a bond in a sum equal to the largest approximate amount that may be deposited in each respectively, at any one time,' was intended to, and does by implication, limit the amount that may be legally deposited in each bank, respectively, to the amount of the depository bond; and held, further, that if the county treasurer deposits the funds of the county in such depository, an amount L.R.A.1917B.

in excess of such bond, and the same is lost by the failure of the bank, the treasurer and his surety are liable for the amount so lost in excess of the depository bond."

We are unable to see how the holding in this case will avail plaintiff in error, for here the court simply holds that the bond of the county treasurer is not liable for the amount of a deposit covered by a depository bond, but is liable for a deposit in a designated bank in excess of the depository bond, —following the rule of limitations as expressed in Kay County v. Dunlop, 17 Okla. 53, 87 Pac. 590, where it is said: "When the depositories are designated, and their bonds approved, it becomes the duty of the county treasurer to use these bonds as depositories for the county money in his hands, but it is left to his discretion to fix the amount to be placed in any given bank, subject however, to the provisions that he shall not deposit an amount greater than the capital stock of such bank, nor greater than the bond given as security."

But the case at bar is not upon the treasurer's bond, but upon the depository bond, and it is not sought to hold the depository bond liable for any sum in excess of the amount expressed therein, but merely to the extent of such bond, while the Hinton Case, supra, holds that for deposits in excess of the depository bond, the treasurer's bond is liable. The referee, to whom this action was referred and whose findings have the force and effect of the verdict of a jury, has found that from the time of the execution of the bond in controversy until the closing of the bank by the bank commissioner, there was on deposit in said bank funds of Muskogee county in excess of the amount designated in the depository bond.

The mere fact that the treasurer had on deposit in the depository bank an amount in excess of the bond of such depository bank would not make the deposit unlawful. In Yellowstone County v. First Trust & Sav. Bank, 46 Mont. 439, 128 Pac. 596, the court had under consideration a statute making it a felony for a treasurer to deposit in a bank more money than he had received security for, and the court there held that neither the validity nor the sufficiency of the bond was impaired, and permitted the recovery to the extent of the penalty named in the bond, and permitted a trust to be imposed for the remainder of the deposit in excess of the bond. In the case at bar, neither an excessive deposit nor the fact that the books of the bank and of the county treasurer fail to show the true status of the account will affect the legality of the deposit.

Upon the second proposition argued, that the bond is not valid, it is urged that the designation of the bank as a depository is illegal; that it is against the plain letter of the law (§ 1540, supra); that the board of commissioners must know that a bank is a proper depository before designating it, and that in this case the designation was wholly illegal and a fraud, and the bond sued upon, having been procured and given in furtherance of said fraud, is wholly void, and the depositing of money in the bank by the county treasurer, while owning stock therein, is an embezzlement by the treasurer, for which the depository bond is not liable. If the board, in making the designation, had knowledge of the ownership of stock in the bank by the county treasurer, there might be some force in the contention; but it is nowhere intimated that the board had any such knowledge or information. If the surety company which signed the bond was deceived, so also was the board deceived. The mere designation of the bank as a depository by the board is not, in contemplation of law, the reason for depositing the county funds in such bank. Such designation is but one of the necessary steps preceding a deposit. The giving of a depository bond is another step, and if the board must know before making the designation that the bank is a proper one to be designated, it would seem to follow that the bonding company also should know that the bank is a proper one to bond, and yet the bond sued upon contains this recital: "Whereas, the board of county commissioners of Muskogee county, state of Oklahoma, duly acting in accordance with law, has designated the First State Bank of Wainwright, Oklahoma, as a depository of the county funds of Muskogee county, state of Oklahoma, and has designated the sum of $10,000 as the amount of the bond to be given by said bank, now, therefore," etc.

We are not at all sure that, had the board known at the time it designated said bank as a depository that stock was owned therein by the county treasurer, even this knowledge would have rendered the bond void. In the case of Henry County v. Salmon, 201 Mo. 136, 100 S. W. 20, the court, in discussing the case of Hennepin County v. State Bank, 64 Minn. 180, 66 N. W. 143, says: "In Hennepin County v. State Bank, supra, the board of county commissioners had designated the depository in the teeth of a statute requiring the board of auditors to make the designation. In a suit on the bond the sureties defended on the theory the designation was void. What was said in disposing of that contention is applicable in this case, viz.: 'In principle, this case falls within the rule that the sureties upon an official bond, by virtue of which the officer has been inducted into office, cannot, when called upon to answer for his official defaults, escape liability upon the ground that their principal was not duly elected or appointed, or did not legally qualify. Mechem, Pub. Off. § 341; 2 Brandt, Suretyship & Guaranty § 521; State v. Bates, 36 Vt. 387; People v. Evans, 29 Cal. 429; Byrne v. State, 50 Miss. 688; Taylor v. State, 51 Miss. 79.'"

The case of Buhrer v. Baldwin, 137 Mich. 263, 100 N. W. 468, is very much in point, in which case it is held: "One who guarantees the payment of county funds to be deposited in an unincorporated bank is liable to the county therefor, although the contract to deposit in such bank was prohibited by statute and void."

In the body of the opinion the court says:

"It is insisted that no action can be maintained on the writing signed by defendants, because it was executed in violation of law. The law in question is Act No. 393 of the Local Acts of 1879, § 1. This act made it 'the duty of the county treasurer of the county of Wayne to deposit daily his entire receipts from all sources, and all moneys, drafts, or checks on hand, to the credit of the county of Wayne, in such bank or banks incorporated under the laws of this state or the United States, as may be designated by the treasurer and the board of auditors of said county as the depository of the funds of the county.' The act makes it a felony for the county treasurer to violate its provisions. It is contended that as A. Ives & Sons was a partnership, the deposit in question in its bank was prohibited and made a felony by this statute, and that, as a consequence, the undertaking of the defendants was an illegal contract which cannot be enforced. If this suit is to be regarded as the personal suit of the county treasurer, who has violated the statute, there would be great force in this contention. It is earnestly insisted that the court should so regard it; and it is said that, if this action should fail, the county will lose nothing, since it is fully indemnified by the bond of the county treasurer. We cannot regard this suit as the personal suit of the county treasurer. The form of the declaration, the prosecution of the suit by the prosecuting attorney, the objection already discussed and disposed of, all indicate that it is a suit by the county to recover its money. The fact, if it be a fact, that the people of the county of Wayne have double security for this money is a circumstance of no legal importance. If they are so secured, the officials of that county, and not this court, have the right to determine to which security they will first resort. They have determined to resort to the obligation of defendants. Nor does this record enable us to say with certainty that the sureties on the treasurer's bond are now responsible. It cannot therefore be said that the county will not lose its money if defeated in the present action.

"Assuming this suit to be the suit of the county to recover the money illegally deposited with A. Ives & Sons, does the statute prevent the enforcement of the contract? Did the legislature, in enacting the statute of 1879, intend that those who agreed to make good a loss to the people, caused by a violation of that law, should be released from their contract? No such legislative intent is expressly declared in the statute. Shall it be inferred? The learned trial judge, in speaking of the statute, said: 'It simply means that this was a protection to the money of the people . . . against the county treasurer depositing it in a place that the lawmakers deemed insecure. . . . This statute was not enacted for the purpose of preventing the county getting back their money. . . . It seems to me it would be a very unreasonable interpretation of the statute' to hold, 'because a public officer violates the law, and does an act that he has no right to do, that therefore the people lose their money.' This reasoning, in our judgment, is sound, and is sustained by authority."

We believe that the surety on the bond cannot question the validity of the bond for this reason, and that the validity of the bond is not affected by any error on the part of the board in the designation of the bank as a depository.

Upon the third proposition argued, that the county failed to give notice as in the bond specified, it is urged by plaintiff in error that, as provided by § 1152, Rev. Laws 1910, a surety cannot be held beyond the express terms of his bond; that he has liberty of contract, and that a sensible construction of the contract (bond) must be that the surety is liable only on condition that notice of default be given within thirty days thereafter; that the default does not create the liability, but it is the default plus the compliance with the contract of suretyship, which creates the liability. In answer the board contends that the provision requiring notice is to indefinite, in that the bond does not designate by whom such notice should be given, and that if it is contemplated by the bond to impose additional duties on a county officer, whose duties are fixed by law, that such condition is for that reason void; that conditions and exceptions are to be strictly construed in favor of the insured, to avoid forfeiture and to afford indemnity (19 Cyc. 657); that the bond, being given for a public purpose and pursuant to the provisions of law, is to be construed as a statutory bond, and any conditions, exceptions, or limitations in excess of the requirements of law are unauthorized and inoperative and are to be treated as surplusage. The board further contends that the proviso requiring notice is in conflict with § 9, art. 23, of the Constitution, and for that reason is void, and, lastly, contends, that, as the record disclosed that notice was given within thirty days from the time the board discovered the character of the default, the notice is timely given.

Numerous authorities are cited by both parties in support of their respective contentions. We are impressed with the importance of the questions raised, and have sought to give careful consideration to the authorities cited and the arguments advanced. We believe, however, that there is a distinction to be observed between bonds given to private concerns, where both parties have full liberty of contract, and bonds given pursuant to a statute, as in this case, for the public benefit. We believe that a bonding company, giving a bond under the provisions of a law and for a public purpose, is bound to know the law and to know the limitations fixed by the law upon the authority of the agents for the public, with whom it contracts. Here the statute fixes the conditions of the depository bond. § 1540, supra. This law, with all its terms, no more and no less, becomes a part of the bonding contract. The board has no authority to waive any part of the statute nor add anything to it. The bond in controversy, as executed, contains all the conditions required by the statute, with the addition of a condition requiring notice, which tends to modify the statute and to limit the liability. This additional condition, we think, may not be imposed. In the recent case of Southwestern Surety Ins. Co. v. Davis, — Okla. —, 156 Pac. 213, this court, speaking through Mr. Justice Hardy, held: "The bond sued on being a statutory one, and given in an attempt to comply with the statute, in order to avoid such a result, the court will read into the bond the statutory conditions and construe the same to guarantee the fulfilment of contracts entered into within the year."

In the case of Henry County v. Salmon, supra, it is said (syllabus): "To ascertain the liability of the sureties on the bond given by a banker as depository of county funds, Laws 1901, p. 101 [Anno. Stat. 1906, pp. 3344, 3345], providing for the selection of county depositaries, must be read into the bond, and the liability of the sureties must be determined by its provisions."

The supreme court of New York, in the case of Bath v. McBride, 81 Misc. 618, 142 N. Y. Supp. 1014, holds (syllabus): "Where the form of an official bond differs from that prescribed in the statute, if founded upon a good consideration, the liability of the surety is measured by the provisions of the statute rather than the language of the obligation itself."

In the case of Higdon v. Fields, 6 Ala. App. 281, 60 So. 594, it is held that a bond intended by the obligors to be the official bond of a public officer is operative as such, though not conditioned as prescribed by the Code prescribing the condition of official bonds.

In the case of St. Louis County v. Security Bank, 75 Minn. 174, 77 N. W. 815, the surety had entered into an obligation conditioned that the bank "shall well and truly hold said funds, with accrued interest, subject to draft, and payable at all times on demand, and shall well and truly pay over on demand according to law all of said funds which shall be deposited in said bank pursuant to said designation."

The treasurer of the county had $13,000 of sinking funds which were held to meet county bonds maturing in the future. He found that he could deposit this money on time deposit and take a time certificate of deposit and receive 3 per cent interest when moneys deposited subject to check only drew 2 per cent interest. The bank failed, and the bond company claimed this money had not been deposited subject to check, and was not within the obligations of the bond. The court said, referring to that defense: "This would undoubtedly be so if the county treasurer has authority to make a deposit on such terms, or the board of county commissioners had the power to authorize him to do so; for the bond clearly refers to and covers only deposits subject to draft, payable on demand, and on which the bank was to pay interest on monthly balances at 2 per cent in accordance with its proposal to the county commissioners pursuant to Gen. Stat. 1894, § 731. The only authority of either the county treasurer or the board of county commissioners to lend county funds (for that is what it amounts to) is that given by Laws 1881, chap. 124, as amended (Gen. Stat. 1894, §§ 729-735, inclusive). They have no authority to deposit county funds in any other place or on any other terms than those prescribed by the statute. This applies to all county funds, whatever the purpose for which they were raised. It is apparent from various provisions of the statute that it neither contemplates nor authorizes time deposits, and § 729 expressly provides that all deposits are to be on condition that they 'shall be held subject to draft and payment at all times, on demand,' and everyone is bound to know the law. The Security Bank was bound to receive on deposit, up to the statutory limit, all county funds offered in accordance with the provisions of the statute, and on the terms of its proposal."

We think that this case squarely strikes down the provision of the bond requiring any notice to be given. As said by the court, the bonding company was bound to know the law, and to know that the bank obligated itself to pay upon demand, and therefore secured the performance of that duty. It could not restrict its obligation in any form because the county officers were without power to consent to such restriction. In the same case (St. Louis County v. Security Bank, supra) the court said, in discussing whether or not this bond should be measured as public bonds, as follows: "While the bank may not have been a 'public officer,' in the popular sense of that term, yet in the matter of the county money deposited with it, it was performing public duties, or duties to the public, and pro hac vice was a public officer. Its duty was to the public, and its bond to secure the performance of that duty was for the benefit and protection of the public. The case falls within all the reasons of the rule, founded on public policy, which makes certain distinctions between the rights and liabilities of sureties on private bonds and sureties on bonds given to secure the performance by public officers of their official duties to the public. The case must be determined by the rules applicable to the latter."

It is true, of course, that if a bond omitted the statutory obligations, it could not be held to be a statutory bond. In such case it would be a common-law bond, and would be measured, of course, by the terms of its obligations; but when the bond contains the exact language of the statute, and follows with other provisions which are not required by statute, it is generally held that such a bond is a statutory bond, and the other provisions will be treated as surplusage. Being then a statutory bond under the terms of the statute, the liabilities imposed by the statute become a part of the bond. In other words, the statute defines the duties of the public officer, to wit, the county depository, and a bond conditioned in the language of the statute will be held to protect the county against the nonperformance of these duties, and clauses attempting to limit and restrict that right will be ineffective and inoperative.

We are further of the opinion that if the provisions in regard to notice were sustained, that notice given within thirty days after the discovery that the county had money on deposit in the bank, with a certified statement of the facts, would be timely; that the condition of the bond requiring notice, if it were upheld, would not require the performance of impossible conditions, nor the performance of conditions which would render the insurance of the bond practically worthless, but calls only for a reasonable construction. Having held, however, that the board is without power to barter away the benefits of the statute, and that the conditions in excess of the statute sought to be imposed are inoperative, it is not necessary to pursue the latter proposition further.

The judgment is affirmed.

Per Curiam:

Adopted in whole.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

UNITED STATES FIDELITY & GUARANTY COMPANY, Impleaded, etc., et al., Appts.,

v.

FRED H. POETKER, Receiver of People's State Bank.

(180 Ind. 255, 102 N. E. 372.)

Bond — of cashier — extent of obligation.

1. A paid surety of a bank cashier upon a bond required by statute cannot avoid the statutory obligation that the cashier will honestly and faithfully discharge the duties of his office, by the insertion in the bond and application of conditions making the enforcement of the undertaking difficult. For other cases, see Bonds, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Appeal — setting aside defaults — abuse of discretion.

2. The appellate court will interfere with the exercise of discretion by the trial court in setting aside a default and reinstating a case only in case of abuse. For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII. i, 7, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — opening remarks of counsel.

3. A case will not be reversed because of remarks in the opening statement of counsel to the jury, if, so far as they were improper and harmful, the trial court instructed the jury to give them no consideration. For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII. m, 5, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(June 24, 1913.)

A PPEAL by the defendant surety company from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Pike County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for breach of the official bond of defendant Behrens, as cashier of the People's State Bank. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Charles Martindale, for appellant:

Where it is distinctly stipulated both in the bond and in the application therefor that answers to questions in the application for such bonds are to be taken as conditions precedent and as the basis of the bond applied for, and one of the questions is as to whether the employee is indebted to the insurer and answer is made thereto in the negative, which answer is untrue, no recovery can be had upon the bond even though it was not known to the applicant to be untrue and even though there is no bad faith on the part of such applicant.

Model Mill Co. v. Fidelity & D. Co. 1 Tenn. Ch. App. 365.

Where a fidelity guaranty bond indemnifying a proprietor against loss by reason of the fraud of the employee amounting to embezzlement or larceny provides that it is entered into on the condition that the statements in writing which the employer has delivered to the insurer relate to the duties and checks to be used on the employer, and the statements and answers therein constitute the basis of the bond, and one of the statements so made is to the effect that the employee's accounts are to be checked up and verified at stipulated times, the failure of the employer to comply with the stipulations precludes recovery on the bond.

Young v. Pacific Surety Co. 137 Cal. 596, 70 Pac. 660; Livingston v. Fidelity & D. Co. 76 Ohio St. 253, 81 N. E. 330; Knapp v. Bailey, 79 Me. 195, 1 Am. St. Rep. 295, 9 Atl. 122; Guarantee Co. of N. A. v. Mechanics' Sav. Bank & T. Co. 183 U. S. 402, 46 L. ed. 253, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 124; T. M. Sinclair & Co. v. National Surety Co. 132 Iowa, 549, 107 N. W. 184; Wieder v. Union Surety & G. Co. 42 Misc. 499, 86 N. Y. Supp. 105; Fohs v. Rain, 39 Misc. 316, 79 N. Y. Supp. 872.

Where, upon the expiration of the first bond, a renewal certificate was signed by an officer of the company certifying that the employee's books and accounts were examined and found to be correct in every respect and all moneys handled by him accounted for, and it is shown that such certificates were false, and that the employer did not, at any time during the employee's incumbency in office, check or compare the cash on hand with the figures of the cash book, or investigate the vouchers credited on the cash book to ascertain whether they had, in fact, been paid, there is a breach of warranty and the guarantee cannot recover.

Note.—As to effect of insertion of unauthorized provisions in a bond required by statute, see annotation following this case, post, 990.
L.R.A.1917B.

Indiana & O. Live Stock Ins. Co. v. Bender, 32 Ind. App. 287, 69 N. E. 691; Glidden v. United States Fidelity & G. Co. 108 Mass. 109, 84 N. E. 143; Warren Deposit Bank v. Fidelity & D. Co. 116 Ky. 38, 74 S. W. 1111; Carstairs v. American Bonding & T. Co. 54 C. C. A. 85, 116 Fed. 449; Issaquah Coal Co. v. United States Fidelity & G. Co. 61 C. C. A. 145, 126 Fed. 89; Carrollton Furniture Mfg. Co. v. American Credit Indemnity Co. 52 C. C. A. 671, 115 Fed. 77; Smith v. Bank of Scotland, 1 Dow, P. C. 272, 3 Eng. Reprint, 697; Railton v. Mathews, 10 Clark. & F. 934, 8 Eng. Reprint, 993; Lee v. Jones, 17 C. B. N. S. 482, 144 Eng. Reprint, 194, 34 L. J. C. P. N. S. 131, 11 Jur. N. S. 81, 12 L. T. N. S. 122, 13 Week. Rep. 318; Franklin Bank v. Cooper, 36 Me. 179, 39 Me. 542; Graves v. Lebanon Nat. Bank, 10 Bush, 23, 19 Am. Rep. 50; Model Mill Co. v. Fidelity & D. Co. 1 Tenn. Ch. App. 365; American Bonding & T. Co. v. Burke, 36 Colo. 40, 85 Pac. 602; Fidelity & C. Co. v. Bank of Timmonsville, 71 C. C. A. 299, 139 Fed. 101; Young v. Pacific Surety Co. 137 Cal. 596, 70 Pac. 660; Guarantee Co. of N. A. v. Mechanics' Sav. Bank & T. Co. 183 U. S. 402, 46 L. ed. 253, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 124; Missouri, K. & T. Trust Co. v. German Nat. Bank, 23 C. C. A. 65, 40 U. S. App. 710, 77 Fed. 120.

In the absence of fraud in making the loans, there is no ground for recovery under this bond.

Guarantee Co. of N. A. v. Mechanics' Sav. Bank & T. Co. 40 C. C. A. 542, 100 Fed. 559; Pryse v. Farmers Bank, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1056, 33 S. W. 532; First Nat. Bank v. Reese, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 778, 76 S. W. 384; Exchange Bank v. Gardner, 104 Iowa, 176, 73 N. W. 591; Knapp v. Edwards, 57 Wis. 196, 15 N. W. 140; Monongahela Coal Co. v. Fidelity & D. Co. 36 C. C. A. 444, 94 Fed. 732; Milwaukee Theater Co. v. Fidelity & C. Co. 92 Wis. 412, 66 N. W. 360; Reed v. Fidelity & C. Co. 189 Pa. 596, 42 Atl. 294.

Rediscounting and borrowing are the fiscal functions of a bank, and the cashier has power to discount paper.

Auten v. United States Nat. Bank, 174 U. S. 125, 43 L. ed. 920, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 628; Bank of State v. Wheeler, 21 Ind. 90; Allison v. Hubbell, 17 Ind. 559; Harris v. Randolph County Bank, 157 Ind. 120, 60 N. E. 1025.

Messrs. Leo H. Fisher, R. W. Armstrong, and E. A. Ely, for appellee:

The cashier of a bank may be liable on his bond for making improper loans, although the by-laws of the bank provide for the appointment of a committee to control the making of a loan.
L.R.A.1917B.

Wallace v. Exchange Bank, 126 Ind. 265, 26 N. E. 175.

A cashier sometimes may borrow money for the bank, but he cannot borrow simply for the purpose of increasing the available funds of the bank, so that in effect its disposable working capital shall be increased; neither in any case can he borrow money to be used for other than strictly banking purposes.

1 Morse, Banks & Bkg. §§ 160, 161; Consolidated Nat. Bank v. Pacific Coast S. S. Co. 95 Cal. 1; 29 Am. St. Rep. 96, 30 Pac. 90.

The cashier cannot pledge the assets of the bank for payment of an antecedent debt.

1 Morse, Banks & Bkg. § 169, p. 358.

The cashier cannot indorse the bank's name to his own paper.

1 Morse, Banks & Bkg. § 169, p. 359.

The opening statement of what counsel intends to prove is ground for reversal only when the trial court abuses its discretion. He will need to be satisfied that counsel's offer to prove was not made in good faith.

2 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 706, and footnote; Epps v. State, 102 Ind. 539, 1 N. E. 491, 5 Am. Crim. Rep. 517; Anderson v. State, 104 Ind. 467, 4 N. E. 63, 5 N. E. 711, 5 Am. Crim. Rep. 601; Zimmerman v. State, 4 Ind. App. 583, 31 N. E. 550.

The case must be rare in which counsel would be justified in interrupting the opening of his antagonist to raise a question of competency; the question ought to be disposed of summarily and without argument.

People v. Wilson, 55 Mich. 513, 21 N. W. 905; Porter v. Throop, 47 Mich. 313, 11 N. W. 174; People v. Van Zile, 73 Hun, 534, 26 N. Y. Supp. 390.

It should appear that misconduct in argument probably influenced the jury, before a new trial could be granted for that cause.

Consumers' Paper Co. v. Eyer, 160 Ind. 424, 66 N. E. 994; Humbarger v. Carey, 145 Ind. 324, 42 N. E. 749; Roose v. Roose, 145 Ind. 162, 44 N. E. 1; Buscher v. Scully, 107 Ind. 246, 5 N. E. 738, 8 N. E. 37.

The injured party must first make objection to the improper argument and move the court to instruct the jury not to consider the same, before moving the court to withdraw the submission and discharge the jury.

Cox v. Cohn, 29 Ind. App. 559, 64 N. E. 889; Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Fine, 163 Ind. 617, 72 N. E. 589, 17 Am. Neg. Rep. 221; Magnuson v. State, 13 Ind. App. 303, 41 N. E. 545; Mainard v. Reider, 2 Ind. App. 115, 28 N. E. 196.

In order to warrant the granting of a new trial on account of misconduct of counsel in argument to the jury, objections must be made to the argument and exceptions taken to the action of the court, and such action assigned as a cause for a new trial.

Evansville v. Thacker, 2 Ind. App. 370, 28 N. E. 559; Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Champion, 9 Ind. App. 510, 53 Am. St. Rep. 358, 36 N. E. 221, 37 N. E. 21; Fruchey v. Eagleson, 15 Ind. App. 88, 43 N. E. 146; Houk v. Branson, 17 Ind. App. 119, 45 N. E. 78.

Messrs. Roby & Watson, and Salsbury & Esarey also for appellee.

Cox, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellee, as receiver of the People's State Bank of Huntingburg, Indiana, sued Charles Behrens, as principal, and the United Fidelity & Guaranty Company of Baltimore, Maryland, as surety, to recover for a breach of the official bond of Behrens, as cashier of the bank. A trial by jury resulted in a verdict against both defendants for the full penalty of the bond, together with interest for delay in payment after demand, amounting in all to $28,500. From a judgment on this verdict the surety company appeals, and presents numerous specifications of alleged errors in support of its claim that the judgment as to it is erroneous.

The People's State Bank was a banking corporation organized under the laws of this state, and appellant was a foreign surety company which qualified and had been authorized to transact business in this state. It appears from the application for the bond that Behrens at that time was and had been cashier of the bank; that he had theretofore given a personal bond; that he had been ordered by the board of directors to procure a surety company bond; that his application was for a surety bond of $25,000 as cashier of the People's State Bank of Huntingburg, Indiana. The president of the bank was required in the application to answer numerous questions, which answers the application stated were to be the basis of the bond applied for and renewals thereof. The bond was issued for a premium of $62.50 from March 1, 1902, to March 1, 1903, and provided that the representations and promises relative to the duties and accounts of the employee and other matters contained in the application, and any subsequent representations or promises of the employer thereafter required or lodged with the company, should constitute part of the basis and consideration of the contract. It was then provided: "That for the consideration of the premises the company shall, during the term above mentioned or any substantial renewal of such term, and subject to the conditions and provisions herein contained, at the expiration of three months next after proofs satisfactory to the company, as hereinafter mentioned, make good and reimburse to the said employer such pecuniary loss as may be sustained by the employer by reason of the fraud or dishonesty of the said employee in connection with the duties of his office or position, amounting to embezzlement or larceny, and which shall have been committed during the continuance of said term or of any renewal thereof, and discovered during said continuance or of any renewal thereof, or within six months thereafter, or within six months from the death or dismissal or retirement of said employee from the service of the employer within the period of this bond, whichever of these events shall first happen; the company's total liability on account of said employee under this bond or any renewal thereof not to exceed the sum of $25,000." Following this, the prime condition of the bond, there follow many provisos tending to limit and guard the liability of the surety, requiring the employer to give notice to the surety "at the earliest practicable moment" of the "discovery of any act capable of giving rise to a claim hereunder;" requiring the claim for loss to be in writing; providing that any wilful misstatement or suppression of fact in any claim should render the bond void from the beginning; that it should have a right to ratable contribution with cosureties; that it should have a right to rescind under certain conditions and escape liability for subsequent acts of the cashier; that no suit should be brought on the bond for any loss after twelve months from the discovery of the loss; and numerous other provisions for the purpose of qualifying and avoiding liability. Following these there is a provision that none of the conditions or provisions of the bond shall be deemed waived unless such waiver is clearly expressed in writing, and a covenant on the part of the principal to save the surety harmless. The bond was signed by the principal and surety and accepted and approved in writing by the directors of the bank, and was subsequently filed in the office of the secretary of state as required by law. Behrens continued as cashier, and the bond was renewed annually for the years 1903, 1904, 1905, and 1906, and during this period of time there was lost to the bank, through the unfaithfulness of Behrens in the discharge of his duties as cashier, a sum far in excess of the penalty of the bond, and this resulted in its insolvency.

In the main the questions raised by appellant surety company are based upon the assumption that the bond which it executed for Behrens to secure to the bank the faithful discharge of his duties as its cashier is a common-law undertaking, and that a recovery on it can be sustained only according to the numerous and intricate provisions and conditions contained in it and the written application for it. In behalf of appellee it is claimed that the bond must be held to be a statutory official bond legally of a character and with such conditions only as the statute provides. It must fairly follow, therefore, that, if this underlying question is determined favorably to the contention of appellee, most of the questions presented by appellant become immaterial and require no consideration.

It has been held by this court that "the quasi public nature of the banking business, and the intimate relation which it bears to the fiscal affairs of the people and the revenues of the state, clearly bring it within the domain of the internal police power, and make it a proper subject for legislative control. Bankers invite general deposits primarily for their own profit and usually obtain a measure of public patronage, and the expediency of guarding the people against imposition, extortion, and fraud, of affording efficient means of detecting irregular practices, and of learning the true financial condition of the bank, and the necessity of preserving the confidence of patrons in its solvency and of protecting their interests in case of insolvency, justify inspection and control by the state." State v. Richcreek (1906) 167 Ind. 217, 222, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 874, 119 Am. St. Rep. 491, 77 N. E. 1085, 1086, 10 Ann. Cas. 1899.

In the exercise of this governmental power the general assembly has enacted the following provision affecting banks organized under the laws of the state: "The directors shall elect one of their number president, and shall also elect or appoint a cashier. The president and cashier shall each take an oath or affirmation that he will faithfully and honestly discharge his duties. And the board of directors shall require of the president and cashier to execute separate bonds, with sureties, in such sums as they may deem proper, conditioned that they will honestly and faithfully discharge their several duties as such officers (which said bond shall be filed in the office of secretary of state for the benefit of stockholders and creditors of such bank) during their continuance in office . . . ." Burns's Anno. Stat. 1908, § 3331; Rev. Stat. 1881, § 2686, Acts 1873, p. 21, § 3. It will be noted that, while this statute leaves the amount of the bond to be fixed at the discretion of the board of directors, it is mandatory upon them to exact a bond from each of the officers named, and by its terms states the simple condition upon which it must be given in clear and unmistakable words; namely, that the officer will honestly and faithfully discharge his duties as such officer during his continuance in office. Such a plain and simple obligation with the broad and comprehensive condition the statute requires, and one less direct and less burdensome for the surety does not satisfy it. A bond such as the one given in this instance, which is manifestly prepared with studied care to avoid all liability on the part of the surety, except such as might grow out of a loss that might occur to the one to whom the bond was given, even after he had exercised that close and relentless vigilance which makes stealing well-nigh impossible, certainly does not fulfil the requirements of the statute.

A bond of the character of the first named, appellant was authorized, by the provisions of our laws relating to surety companies, to execute in compliance with § 3331, supra, but not so one of the latter class. It is provided by § 1 of the Act of 1897 (Acts 1897, p. 192; Burns's Anno. Stat. 1908, § 5728): "That whenever any bond, undertaking, recognizance, or other obligation is by any law of the state of Indiana, or the charter, ordinances, rules or regulations of any municipality, city government, common council, board of county commissioners, any savings bank, state bank or private bank, . . . required or permitted to be made, given, tendered or filed with surety or sureties, . . . such bond, undertaking, obligation, recognizance or guaranty may be executed by a company qualified to act as such surety or guarantor; . . . and such execution by such company of such bond, undertaking, obligation, recognizance or guaranty shall be in all respects a full and complete compliance with every requirement of every law . . . that such bond, undertaking, obligation, recognizance or guaranty shall be executed by one surety, or by one or more sureties, or that such sureties shall be residents or householders, or freeholders, or either or both, or possess any other qualification."

The statute fixes upon surety companies the character of lawful sureties upon statutory bonds, but it gives them no authority to change the character or legal effect of the bonds which the statute exacts. Such a company could not enter into a recognizance bond and, by adding to the ordinary condition for the appearance of the defendant the proviso that it would not answer for the default of the principal, if the sheriff failed to keep him under constant surveillance, thereby escape liability by showing the defendant's failure to appear was due to the sheriff's neglect. When appellant was requested to furnish a bond to the bank for its cashier, it was bound to know the nature of the condition it would become liable upon if broken. It is, of course, to be conceded that a surety company may, in dealing with a private citizen, with a free hand unhampered by statutory restrictions, make such a contract of suretyship as it chooses, and guard and limit its liability by as many provisions as it pleases, and, if the one for whose benefit it is given accepts it in good faith, the surety is bound only according to the terms of the bond. But even in such a case the rule of strictissimi juris, which has been invoked for the benefit of private individual sureties who sign for accommodation, and not for compensation, and which requires a strict construction of the contract in their favor, and a resolution of all doubts in their favor, does not apply to the involved contract of a surety company which becomes surety for profit. In the latter case the rule is reversed and the contract, when there is room for construction, is to be construed most strongly against the surety and in favor of the indemnity which the obligee had reasonable ground to expect. Bank of Tarboro v. Fidelity & D. Co. (1901) 126 N. C. 320, 83 Am. St. Rep. 682, 35 S. E. 588; Geo. A. Hormel & Co. v. American Bonding Co. (1910) 112 Minn. 288, 128 N. W. 12, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 513, and many cases cited in note; Philadelphia v. Fidelity & D. Co. (1911) 231 Pa. 208, 80 Atl. 62, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1085, note; Brown v. Title Guaranty & S. Co. (1911) 232 Pa. 337, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 698, 51 Atl. 410; 32 Cyc. 306.

No other bond was taken in this case than the one in suit, and it is not denied that it was taken by the directors and given by Behrens and appellant in compliance with the statute, and pursuant to the statute it was filed in the office of the secretary of state. It has long been the rule in this state that, when a bond is given in obedience to a command of the statute, a construction shall be given it which binds the obligors to the performance of the conditions which the statute declares it shall contain, even though the bond does not specifically so provide. The rule has been applied to personal sureties who have obligated themselves for accommodation without pecuniary reward. The reason for its application to corporations or others who engage in the business of becoming sureties or guarantors for profit, and who offer themselves as common sureties or guarantors for hire, is greater.

That it is the settled policy of the state to fix the conditions of bonds required by statute, and to hold sureties thereon to the performance of the conditions named, clearly appears from statutory provisions. In the L.R.A.1917B.

statute relating to the bonds of public officers, it is provided that such bonds shall be obligatory for the faithful discharge of all duties required of the officer by law, and that no such bond shall be void because of defects in form or substance, but upon the suggestion of such defects such bond shall be obligatory as if properly executed. Burns's Anno. Stat. 1908, §§ 9111, 9113, Rev. Stat. 1881, §§ 5528, 5530. As we have seen, the law prescribes the conditions which the bonds of the president and cashier of banks incorporated under the laws of the state shall contain. And such is the policy in relation to many other bonds required by law which will easily suggest themselves. See also Burns's Anno. Stat. 1908, § 2024, Acts 1905, p. 584, § 153, relating to bonds in criminal actions.

Again it is provided in relation to other bonds required by law, generally, in addition to the above provision relating to the official bonds of public officers: "No official bond entered into by any officer, nor any bond, recognizance, or written undertaking taken by any officer in the discharge of the duties of his office, shall be void for want of form or substance or recital or condition, nor the principal or surety be discharged; but the principal and surety shall be bound by such bond, recognizance, or written undertaking to the full extent contemplated by the law requiring the same, and the sureties to the amount specified in the bond or recognizance. In all actions on a defective bond, recognizance, or written undertaking, the plaintiff or relator may suggest the defect in his complaint, and recover to the same extent as if such bond, recognizance, or written undertaking were perfect in all respects." Burns's Anno. Stat. 1908, § 1278, Rev. Stat. 1881, § 1221.

It has been frequently decided in this state that bonds taken pursuant to a requirement of a public statute are official bonds within the meaning of this section of the statute. Faurote v. State (1887) 110 Ind. 463, 467, 11 N. E. 472; Robling v. Pike County (1895) 141 Ind. 522, 40 N. E. 1079; State ex rel. Red Key Tile, Brick & Bldg. Co. v. Rowles (1912) 177 Ind. 682, 98 N. E. 722; State ex rel. Thornburg v. Fletcher (1891) 1 Ind. App. 681, 586, 28 N. E. 111; Herod v. State (1896) 15 Ind. App. 648, 43 N. E. 144, 44 N. E. 378; Holt-house v. State, 49 Ind. App. 178, 97 N. E. 130. See also Murfree, Official Bonds, §§ 36, 37.

It has also been held that the provisions of the statute requiring the bond enter into and become a part of the bond, whether written in it or not, and constitute the contract upon which both the rights and the liabilities of the surety are to be determined.

See the cases just cited and State ex rel. Jackson Twp. v. Berg (1875) 50 Ind. 496; Graham v. State (1879) 66 Ind. 386, 389; Opp v. Ten Eyck (1885) 99 Ind. 345. In State ex rel. Thornburg v. Fletcher, supra, it was said at page 586 of 1 Ind. App. "The wording of the bond neither adds to nor takes from the recognizer any liability created by statute. Where a bond contains more or less than is required by statute, it operates and has the force and effect of the statute authorizing it. If the bond contains less than required by statute, the bondsman will be held to what it should have contained; and if it contains more than required by statute, the measure of liability would be to the extent defined by statute." In Opp v. Ten Eyck, supra, it was said on page 348 of 99 Ind.: "The force and effect of this section is to cure defects and to supply omissions in the class of bonds named, whether the defects and omissions be of form or substance, and to hold the obligors, both principals and sureties, to the full extent of the law requiring the bond."

It has been held that, where the bond sued upon shows upon its face the defect or failure to meet the statutory requirements, the complaint need not further suggest it. Cook v. State (1859) 13 Ind. 154; Boden v. Dill (1877) 58 Ind. 273.

It is said in Childs on Suretyship & Guaranty, § 91, p. 122, that the general rule is that, where a contract of suretyship is entered into pursuant to a statute or to a by-law, the statute or by-law forms a part of the contract of the surety. If the law has made the instrument necessary, the parties are deemed to have had the law in contemplation when the contract was executed. See also Adams v. Williams, 97 Miss. 113, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 855, 52 So. 865, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1129; Growbarger v. United States Fidelity & G. Co. (1907) 126 Ky. 118, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 758, 128 Am. St. Rep. 274, 102 S. W. 873; Ihrig v. Scott (1893) 5 Wash. 584, 32 Pac. 406; Slocumb v. Robert (1840) 16 La. 173; Boaswell v. Lainhart (1880) 2 La. 397; United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. McLaughlin (1906) 78 Neb. 307, 107 N. W. 577, 109 N. W. 390; United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. Union Trust & Sav. Co. (1904) 142 Ala. 532, 38 So. 177.

In the case last cited the bond was almost identical in its terms with the one in suit. It was given pursuant to a statute as the bond of a register in chancery and he acted under it. It was said by the court: "It is therefore of no consequence that the condition of the bond is different from that which the statute prescribes for official bonds, nor of any consequence that the condition expressed in the bond may not have been broken by the officer. The condition which, though not written into this paper, is as essentially a part of it for all the purposes of this action as if it, and it alone, were written into it, is that the officer, William H. Parks, will faithfully discharge the duties of the office of register in chancery during the time he continues therein, or discharges any of the duties thereof (Code 1896, § 3070), and the obligors thereon are liable for any breach of this condition for the use and benefit of every person sustaining damages by such breach (Code 1896, § 3087). It would be immaterial whether such bond is in terms payable to the state. The law makes it so payable. It would be immaterial to the surety's liability whether Parks executed it. The surety is liable whether he did or not. And it is immaterial that the instrument, though signed by Parks, yet on its face imports no obligation on his part to the state. The law imports that obligation into the bond. On the other hand, no account is to be taken of, and no operation is to be given to, the several stipulations and conditions set down in this paper which tend to limit the liability which an official bond imports, or to clog or impeach the remedy for the enforcement of such liability. The right of recovery is the same in the abstract and as to amount as if the bond had expressed the statutory conditions, and those only; and action upon it is maintainable under the same conditions. It is altogether inapt and inaccurate to say that the city court in its ruling on the demurrer in line with the foregoing views made a bond for the parties, or even that the law has made a bond which the parties have not made. The law known of all men (and even of all corporations) said to these parties, 'If you put forward a paper writing as and for the official bond of this officer, and the officer acts under it, that paper writing imports and involves certain liability upon you in certain contingencies.' The parties make and exploit this writing for this purpose, knowing the legal consequences of their action, and they thereby take those consequences upon themselves. The law, as it was competent for the law to do, merely gave a certain character and attached certain liabilities to certain acts. The officer performed those acts, and it is not only no legal wrong, but not even a legal hardship, for the law, through its ministers, to enforce such liability."

It fairly follows from what has been said that the bond in suit must be held to be an official bond within the meaning of § 1278, supra, and that appellant's liability on it must be measured by the breach, which is plainly shown, of the simple condition that Behrens would honestly and faithfully discharge his duty as cashier of the bank during his continuance in office.

In addition to the many questions not necessary to decide by reason of the conclusion just stated, it is contended that the court below erred in setting aside a default of appellee and dismissal of his action, and reinstating it upon the application of appellee. The cause was set for trial on December 9, 1907. Appellee's counsel resided 30 miles from Petersburg, the county seat, and failed to reach there until 2:15 o'clock P. M. of that day. Prior to their arrival the cause was, about 11 o'clock A. M., dismissed on motion of appellant. Upon the arrival of appellee's counsel, they moved to set aside the default and reinstate the action, which motion the court subsequently granted. Affidavits were filed by the respective parties in support of and against this motion. The statute (Burns's Anno. Stat. 1908, § 405, Rev. Stat. 1881, § 396) expressly and properly vests in trial courts a discretion in the matter of relieving a party from a judgment taken against him by default, which this court will review only when that discretion has been abused. Moreover, the discretionary authority to relieve a party in default is inherent in all courts of record exercising a general jurisdiction, independent of the statute. Hoag v. Old People's Mut. Ben. Soc. (1891) 1 Ind. App. 28, 27 N. E. 438; Masten v. Indiana

Car & Foundry Co. (1900) 25 Ind. App. 175, 57 N. E. 148; 6 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 149.

Complaint is presented of the misconduct of counsel for appellee in making improper statements in the opening statement of the plaintiff to the jury prior to the introduction of testimony. So far as these statements were improper and harmful to appellant, the court sustained its objection and instructed the jury to give them no consideration. The character, as well as the extent of the statement of a case to the jury, is left much to the discretion of the trial court. Aylesworth v. Brown (1869) 31 Ind. 270; Elliott, Gen. Pr. § 559.

During the argument of the cause to the jury one of appellee's counsel discussed the difference between the terms and conditions of the bond as given and as the statute required it to be. In view of the conclusion reached as to the character of the bond, we find nothing in the statements of counsel to which objections were made that would amount to improper argument.

As it appears that a just result was reached in the trial court, the judgment is affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied October 15, 1913.

Dismissed October 26, 1914, by the Supreme Court of the United States, 235 U. S. 683, 59 L. ed. 423, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 201.

Annotation—Effect of insertion of unauthorized provisions in a bond required by statute.

I. Rejecting surplusage:

- a. Treasurers', collectors', cashiers', and paymasters' bonds, 991.*
- b. Administrators', executors', and guardians', bonds, 992.*
- c. Appeal bonds, 992.*
- d. Attachment bonds, 993.*
- e. Bail and recognizance, 994.*
- f. Bastardy bonds, 994.*
- g. Clerks' and recorders' bonds, 995.*
- h. Constables' and sheriffs' bonds, 995.*
- i. Distillers' bonds, 995.*
- j. Embargo bonds, 996.*
- k. Injunction bonds, 996.*
- l. Other bonds, 997.*

II. Curative statutes, 998.

III. Prohibitory statutes, 1000.

IV. Bonds extorted colore officii, 1000.

V. Beneficial bonds; estoppel, 1001.

VI. Indivisible, insufficient, and invalid bonds:

- a. Generally, 1002.*

VI.—continued.

- b. Administrators' bonds, 1002.*
- c. Appeal; supersedeas; certiorari, 1003.*
- d. Attachment, 1005.*
- e. Bail and recognizance, 1005.*
- f. Bastardy and nonsupport, 1007.*
- g. Collectors' and treasurers' bonds, 1008.*
- h. Constables' bonds, 1008.*
- i. Cost bonds, 1008.*
- j. Embargo bonds, 1009.*
- k. Liquor bonds, 1009.*
- l. Other bonds, 1009.*

VII. Substantial compliance with the statute:

- a. Generally, 1010.*
- b. Administrators' executors', and guardians' bonds, 1010.*
- c. Appeal and error, 1011.*
- d. Attachment and forthcoming bonds, 1012.*
- e. Auctioneers' bonds, 1013.*

VII.—continued.

- f. Bail and recognizance, 1013.*
- g. Bastardy bonds, 1013.*
- h. Collectors' treasurers', and cashiers' bonds, 1014.*
- i. Constables' and sheriffs' bonds, 1014.*
- j. Contractors' bonds, 1015.*
- k. Injunction bonds, 1016.*
- l. Liquor bonds, 1016.*
- m. Replevin bonds, 1016.*
- n. Other bonds, 1016.*

VIII. Common-law bonds, 1017.

I. Rejecting surplusage:

a. Treasurers', collectors', cashiers', and paymasters' bonds.

The general rule seems to be that, where the superadded condition can be separated from the statutory conditions, the bond will be held valid to the extent of the statutory conditions. This was held in WESTERN CASUALTY & G. INS. CO. v. MUSKOGEE COUNTY, ante, 984. The superadded condition will be treated as surplusage.

The same rule was applied in the following cases:

The bond of a state treasurer differing from that required by statute was held valid to the extent of the statutory conditions. Lee v. Waring (1809) 3 Desauss. Eq. (S. C.) 57.

A township treasurer's bond was conditioned that the treasurer pay over all money coming into his hands "on the order of the board of education," instead of, as the statute required, that he disburse all such money "according to law." This was held to be a good statutory bond. Creswell v. Nesbitt (1864) 16 Ohio St. 35. "On the order of the board of education" was rejected as surplusage.

And a county treasurer's bond that was more comprehensive than the law required was held binding to the extent of the statutory conditions, in State use of Guernsey County v. Findley (1840) 10 Ohio, 51. The court said: "That part which is legal is marked out in the statute book itself, and is therefore as completely severable from the rest as if the two parts were separated in the condition in the bond."

And a county treasurer's bond containing an additional condition, "or to the comptroller of the state when thereto required," was held valid, as the condition could be rejected as surplusage. This bond was not taken by a sheriff or other "officer" colore officii. Schoharie County v. Pindar (1870) 3 Lans. (N. Y.) 8. L.R.A.1917B.

In a suit on the bond of a collector of tolls, it was held that, so far as the act of assembly prescribed the form of the condition and specified the nature of the acts and duties, it would be considered directory. Although it designated acts or things to be done beyond those specified in the act, it would be held to be good for everything mentioned in the act, in the absence of a statute declaring it void if not taken as prescribed. Speck v. Com. (1842) 3 Watts & S. (Pa.) 324.

A collector of taxes gave a bond containing a condition for accounting and paying to the commissioners. It was held that this condition might be rejected as surplusage and the bond enforced, as it contained the statutory conditions. Collins v. Gwynne (1831) 7 Bing. 423, 131 Eng. Reprint, 163, 5 Moore & P. 276, 9 L. J. C. P. 130.

And where the bond of a collector contained a provision that he had truly and faithfully discharged the duties of his said office, and also the provision that he "shall continue truly and faithfully to discharge the duties of said office, and shall faithfully collect and pay," it was held that the retrospective provision, not being required by statute, could be rejected and the rest enforced. United States v. Brown (1830) Gilpin, 155, Fed. Cas. No. 14,663. This was on the ground that a bond at common law, partly valid, could be enforced as to valid provisions. And it was incumbent on the defendant to show that a different rule applied to statutory bonds.

A bond given by a collector of revenue provided that he "had" faithfully executed the duties of a collector, and "would" thereafter faithfully execute the same. It was held that the retrospective provision was not within the statute and was void. The other provision was valid. Armstrong v. United States (1811) Pet. C. C. 46, Fed. Cas. No. 549.

In Philadelphia v. Shallcross (1880) 14 Phila. (Pa.) 135, it was said that Armstrong v. United States (Fed.) supra, was overruled by United States v. Hodson (1870) 10 Wall (U. S.) 395, 19 L. ed. 937.

And a recital in a tax collector's bond superadded to the statutory condition was held to be surplusage. Walker v. Chapman (1853) 22 Ala. 116. The statute required an annual election, while the bond contained the words, "to collect the county and state tax for the years 1845 and 1846."

The bond of a cashier of a state bank was conditioned that he indemnify the Bank of Tennessee for all sums of money that might become due, and all losses or damages sustained by default, neglect, or fraud of the cashier. The statute did not authorize imposing any responsibility on the cashier to the Bank of Tennessee. The bond should have been in penalty of $100,000, conditioned for the faithful performance of duties. It was claimed that the bond was without any definite penalty and in violation of the statute. This bond also provided that there could be more than one recovery thereon, and that absence of the cashier from the bank would not affect the liability. It was held that the conditions superadded and not required by the statute could be rejected as surplusage. Polk v. Plummer (1841) 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 500, 37 Am. Dec. 575.

And the bond of a paymaster provided that he "shall account" "for all moneys received by him from time to time; as paymaster aforesaid, with such person as shall be duly authorized and qualified on the part of the United States for that purpose." Act April 24, 1816, chap. 69, provides that paymasters shall "give good and sufficient bonds to the United States fully to account for all moneys and public property which they may receive, in such sums as the Secretary of War shall direct." It was held that the breach assigned was part of the condition, "to account for public money," which was valid, and that, if there was any condition in excess of the statute, the bond would be void as to that condition; but this point was not decided. United States v. Bradley (1836) 10 Pet. (U. S.) 343, 9 L. ed. 448.

b. Administrators', executors', and guardians', bonds.

Where unauthorized provisions have been inserted in these bonds, and the conditions are severable, the improper conditions will be held to be surplusage.

The bond of an administrator containing stipulations in addition to the statutory provisions was held to be a good statutory bond. The provisions in excess of the statutory requirements were held surplusage. Woods v. State (1847) 10 Mo. 698.

A guardian's bond contained the additional stipulation, "also to keep harmless the said recorder, his and every one of his heirs, executors, and administrators, from all trouble and damage that shall or may arise about the said estate." This was held not to avoid the bond or affect the statutory conditions. Reed v. Hedges (1879) 16 W. Va. 167. L.R.A. 1917B.

New Jersey Rev. Laws 1795, 176, required the bond of an administrator to be conditioned that he exhibit an inventory "into the registry of the prerogative court in the secretary's office of this state." A bond with the condition "into the surrogate's office of the county" was held not void. The surplusage was rejected. Vroom v. Smith (1834) 14 N. J. L. 479.

An appeal bond by an administrator was conditioned that he "perform the judgment of the court." An administrator on appeal was held not required to give security for the debt. This bond was construed to mean "costs and damages" only, as the illegal condition would be rejected as surplusage. Banks v. McDowel (1860) 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 84.

And an appeal bond by an administrator conditioned for the payment of the debt was held not binding on the surety except for costs. Patterson v. Gordon (1875) 3 Tenn. Ch. 18.

And an unnecessary condition in an executor's bond was held not to render it invalid, where the good conditions could be separated from the illegal or surplus clauses. Probate Ct. v. Adams (1905) 27 E. L. 97, 60 Atl. 769, 8 Ann. Cas. 1028.

And under Tenn. Code, § 3163, providing that in certain cases the appeal bond shall be for damages and costs only, an appeal bond given by an executor de son tort was conditioned that the surety would "comply with and perform the judgment of the circuit court." It was held that the only judgment that could be rendered would be a judgment for costs and damages. Hutchinson v. Fulghum (1871) 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 550.

And where an executor's bond waived the privilege to discharge liability in any currency other than legal tender currency of the United States, it was held to be a valid bond as to the other and statutory conditions. Yost v. Ramsey (1904) 103 Va. 117, 48 S. E. 862.

A superadded condition in a guardian's bond was held to be void and the sureties to be liable only so far as the condition imposed by law had been violated. Bomar v. Wilson (1830) 1 Bail L. (S. C.) 461.

c. Appeal bonds.

Conditions inserted in appeal bonds beyond the requirement of the statutes will be held invalid, and the valid provisions enforced.

An appeal bond in forcible entry and detainer contained a clause for the payment of damages. This was not required by the statute. It was held that the bond, being taken as a condition of the right of appeal, could not go beyond the requirements of the statute, and any obligation beyond that was void, and damages could not be recovered. Tomlin v. Green (1866) 39 Ill. 225.

An appeal bond was slightly excessive and the condition varied from the statute. It was held that the error in the formal penalty might be corrected or disregarded when the recitals in the bond, in connection with the law, showed the proper penalty ascertainable by a mere calculation. Bentley v. Dorcas (1860) 11 Ohio St. 398.

And where an appeal bond contained conditions in addition to the statutory requirements, it was held that the bond was valid, and the surplusage was rejected. Aultman, M. & Co. v. Nelson (1898) 11 S. D. 338, 77 N. W. 584.

In an action for trespass the judgment was for $1,500, the appeal bond was for $3,000, and the condition was to prosecute the appeal or to pay and satisfy the judgment of this court. Tenn. Code, § 3163, provided that in such cases the bond should be for damages and costs. It was held that only the costs and damages incident to the appeal constituted the legal liability of the surety, and the bond did not cover the costs of the circuit court or the judgment of that court. Sharp v. Pickens (1867) 4 Coldw. (Tenn.) 268.

A bond in unlawful detainer, given on appeal to the circuit court, was conditioned to pay "rents." A bond given on appeal to the supreme court was to prosecute the appeal and to abide by and perform the judgment of the court. It was held that this referred only to such a judgment as the court could lawfully render, and it could not give a judgment for the rents. Ladd v. Riggle (1871) 6 Heisk. (Tenn.) 620.

And an appeal bond from a justice's court, having more onerous conditions than required by the statute, was held valid to the extent of statutory conditions. Landa v. Heerman (1892) 85 Tex. 1, 19 S. W. 885.

A bond on appeal to the county court was conditioned that appellant shall satisfy the judgment which may be rendered against him on such appeal "in the county court." These superadded words were held not to prejudice. Heidenheimer Bros. v. Bledsoe (1883) 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (White & W.) 134.

And the addition of the words in an appeal bond, "on the trial of this case in the county court aforesaid, if the decision of said court shall be against said Kerr," was held to be only surplusage, and not to affect its validity. Kerr v. Clegg (1881) 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (White & W.) 435.

So the addition in an appeal bond of the words, "in case they shall fail to obtain a reversal of the decision of the judge," was held not to render the bond invalid. Kasson v. Brocker (1879) 47 Wis. 79, 1 N. W. 418.

An undertaking containing provisions beyond what was required by the New York Code of Procedure for the perfecting of an appeal was held to be without a consideration to support it, and the liability on the bond was only the costs incurred by or arising upon the appeal to the court of appeals. Post v. Doremus (1875) 60 N. Y. 371, modifying (1874) 1 Hun, 520, distinguished in Goodwin v. Bunzl (1886) 102 N. Y. 224, 6 N. E. 399.

d. Attachment bonds.

Attachment bonds have been held good to the extent of the statutory requirement, and superadded words have been rejected as surplusage.

A bond in attachment reading, "shall, moreover, abide by and perform such orders and decrees as the court may make in the cause," while the statute provided for costs and "all such damages as he (the obligee) may sustain by the wrongfully suing out of the attachment," was held not obligatory beyond the requirement of the law in attachment. Ranning v. Reeves (1875) 2 Tenn. Ch. 263. The court said: "Where the statute provides the conditions of a bond in any given case, the surety will not be liable beyond the statutory requirements, although the conditions may be broader and express."

An attachment bond provided that defendants "shall produce said goods in satisfaction of (the) judgment in said action, or pay such judgment as may be rendered against them in said action." The statute provided for a bond conditioned "that such property or its estimated value shall be delivered to the sheriff to satisfy any judgment which may be obtained against the defendant in the suit, within twenty days after the rendition thereof." It was held that the words superadded might be rejected as surplusage and the bond still be good. Sheppard v. Collins (1861) 12 Iowa, 570.

And the addition of the word "costs" in an attachment bond was held mere surplusage. Leach v. Thomas (1819) 2 Nott & M'C. (S. C.) 110. Costs would follow as a matter of course the recovery of damages.

e. Bail and recognizance.

Bail bonds are held valid only to the extent of statutory conditions, and surplusage conditions are not enforced.

So, where conditions were added in a bail bond, and there was no attempt to enforce such conditions, it was held that the bond was valid only to the extent of the statutory conditions. Ainsworth v. Territory (1882) 3 Wash. Terr. 277, 14 Pac. 490.

And a prison bond was held valid only to the statutory extent and superadded conditions were held void. Anderson v. Foster (1831) 2 Bail. L. (S. C.) 500.

A poor debtor's bond contained a provision requiring the debtor to take the oath prescribed by statute. It was held that this provision was invalid, and that only the statutory provisions incorporated in the bond would be required of the debtor, and that, as he had followed those, he would be discharged. Bell v. Furbush (1868) 56 Me. 178.

A poor debtor's bond containing conditions unauthorized by statute was held a good common-law bond as to the valid conditions, and the debtor was subject to assessment of actual damages in chancery. Ware v. Jackson (1844) 24 Me. 166. The conditions were that the oath should be taken before two justices quorum unus, that the debtor should tender his property, the value to be appraised by two men designated by the justices, and that the debtor should give priority to this demand. These provisions were not authorized by statute.

A bond given by a debtor held in mesne process contained a condition that he "surrender himself to the jail keeper and go into close confinement as is required by law." It was held that this condition was surplusage, and could be rejected as not required by statute, without affecting the validity of the bond. Kavanagh v. Saunders (1832) 8 Me. 422.

And on a bail bond it was held that added conditions would be rejected as surplusage, that the sheriff had no power to take any other bond but that which he was authorized by law to take, that the surety could exonerate himself by surrendering the defendant notwithstanding the provisions of the bond. Slocomb v. Robert (1840) 16 La. 173.

And in State v. Cobb (1880) 71 Me. 198, a recognizance "to appear," "answer," and "abide the decision and order of said court," although Me. Stat. chap. 132, § 5, required only a recognizance to L.R.A.1917B.

"appear," was held valid. The surplusage was rejected.

In Durein v. State (1888) 38 Kan. 485, 17 Pac. 49, it was said: "We are referred to State v. Cobb (Me.) supra, as holding that superadded words of condition beyond what are authorized do not invalidate a bond, but may be treated as surplusage only. The decision in that case rests upon State v. Brown (1856) 41 Me. 535. In the latter case, three of the judges filed a vigorous dissent." The report of the latter case does not say so. Tenney, Ch. J., wrote the opinion, Appleton, J., concurred, and Rice, J., concurred in the result. In State v. Cobb (Me.) supra, the case of State v. Brown (Me.) supra, was not cited, but the case of State v. Hatch (1871) 59 Me. 410, was, and this is the case where the three judges dissented.

Alabama Act 1814, Aikin's Dig. 115, provides that a recognizance shall require the accused "to appear at the next term of the circuit court and answer the charge exhibited against them." In this case there was a superadded condition, "to abide by any order, judgment, or decree of the circuit court." It was held that this last condition was merely inoperative, and the legal effect was the same as if this clause had been omitted. Howie v. State (1840) 1 Ala. 113.

Alabama Act 1834 provides that, where questions are certified as novel and difficult, the defendant shall be recognized to "appear and abide the judgment." A recognizance provided in such a case that defendant "fully pay, satisfy, and abide" by it. This was held to be a void recognizance as to the surplusage, but not as to the legal condition. Whitted v. The Governor (1838) 6 Port. (Ala.) 335. The court said: "In thus adding to their undertaking a stipulation not enjoined by the statute, the circuit court went beyond its legitimate authority."

In Howie v. State (Ala.) supra, the case of Whitted v. The Governor (Ala.) supra, was distinguished on the ground that "the statutory condition was entirely inoperative from the circumstance that a mere money judgment was rendered, and if the principal had been produced in court at a subsequent term, no proceedings could then have been had against him. As no end could be attained by his appearance in court, it was held unnecessary to require his appearance."

f. Bastardy bonds.

The statute required a bastardy bond to require the appearance of the accused at the next county court. A bond was taken for accused to appear "from day to day and from term to term." State v. Castleberry (1853) 23 Ala. 85. The court said: "If the superadded condition creates any additional obligation, it is void, but the recognizance is valid as to the remaining obligation;" it was well taken for appearance "from term to term."

And the use of the words, "superior court of the county of Suffolk," in a bastardy bond, was held immaterial when the words, "county of Suffolk," were omitted from the act establishing the superior court. These words in the bond were held surplusage. Locke v. Johnson (1861) 3 Allen (Mass.) 153.

g. Clerks' and recorders' bonds.

Stipulations inserted in an official bond of a city clerk in excess of the statute were held to be surplusage. Lowe v. Guthrie (1896) 4 Okla. 287, 44 Pac. 198. Sureties were not liable for fees collected by the city clerk without authority.

The clerk of a municipal court gave bond conditioned "for the due performance of all the duties of the clerk," one of which duties was to pay over to the city treasurer all sums due to the city, as well as sums due to the county and to witnesses. The statutory condition was to pay to the city treasurer the sums last mentioned. The bond covered all the clerk's duties. It was held that the surplusage would be rejected and the bond sustained. Milwaukee v. United States Fidelity & G. Co. (1911) 144 Wis. 603, 129 N. W. 786.

And where the penalty in a recorder's bond was in excess of that required by statute, it was held valid to the statutory extent. M'Caraher v. Com. (1842) 5 Watts & S. (Pa.) 21, 39 Am. Dec. 106. In State v. Taylor (1897) 10 S. D. 182, 66 Am. St. Rep. 707, 72 N. W. 407, it was said referring to M'Caraher v. Com. (1842) (Pa.) supra: "The opinion of the court upon this point is brief, and the question does not seem to have very full consideration."

h. Constables' and sheriffs' bonds.

A constable's bond containing unnecessary recitals was held good. These were held surplusage. Skellinger v. Yendes (1834) 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 306.

Maine Rev. Stat. chap. 92, § 9, provides that a constable shall give bond "for the faithful performance of his duties and trust as to all processes by him served and executed." It was held that L.R.A.1917B.

a bond conditioned that the constable "shall faithfully discharge his duty [as collector of taxes and] as constable as aforesaid, and all agreeable to the true intent and meaning of the above obligation," was valid. The part in brackets could be rejected as surplusage. Quimby v. Adams (1834) 11 Me. 332.

In Mauleverer v. Hawxby (1669) 2 Wms' Saund. 78, 85 Eng. Reprint, 746, which was an action on a bond given to the sheriff, the bond provided, "Then the condition of this obligation to be void," when it should have been the "obligation" to be void. It was held that the words, "then the condition," were void for absurdity and repugnancy, and were surplusage, and that the balance of the bond was good. By 23 Hen. VI. chap. 9, it was provided that no sheriffs shall take any obligation of persons in their custody, but only to themselves, by the name of their office, and upon condition written, that the said prisoner shall appear, etc.; if they take any obligation "in other form, it shall be void." This statute was pleaded as a defense, and it was also pleaded in Maleverer v. Redshaw (1668) 1 Mod. 35, 86 Eng. Reprint, 712, which the note says was the same case. That was the case in which Twisden, J., said he had heard Lord Hobart say, referring to the last quotation supra: "The statute is like a tryant; where he comes he makes all void; but the common law is like a nursing father,—makes void only that part where the fault is, and preserves the rest."

And the words in a sheriff's bond, "for the year 1893," were held to be a surplusage, as without sanction of law and contrary to law. The statute was held to mean that the bond should cover any school money received by the sheriff during his term. State use of United States School-Furniture Co. v. McGuire (1899) 46 W. Va. 328, 76 Am. St. Rep. 822, 33 S. E. 313.

The penalty in a sheriff's bond was $12,000, while the S. C. Act of 1795 directed a bond to be taken for no more than $7,000. It was held that the bond was valid to the extent of the statutory penalty. The Treasurers v. Bates (1831) 2 Bail. L. (S. C.) 362.

i. Distillers' bonds.

Where a bond contained conditions some of which were legal and some illegal, and they were severable and separable, it was held that the latter could be disregarded and the former enforced. United States v. Hodson (1870) 10 Wall.

(U. S.) 395, 19 L. ed. 937. In this case the statute in regard to a distiller's bond provided that it should contain some five conditions, naming them. The bond provided that the distiller should "conform to all the provisions of an act entitled, 'An Act to Provide Internal Revenue, . . . approved June 30, 1864, . . . and such other acts as are now or may hereafter be in this behalf enacted.'"

A distiller's bond provided that he shall truly and faithfully conform to all the provisions of the Act of July 1, 1862 (being the act which authorizes the license to distill), and of such other act or acts as were then "or might thereafter be" in that behalf enacted. The statute did not provide for a bond to comply with future enactments. The words, "or might thereafter be," were held surplusage and did not affect the validity of the bond. The duty of making monthly statements was not in the statute, but was in the bond. This also was held not to vitiate the bond. The bond was not extorted under duress. United States v. Mynderse (1870) 11 Blatchf. 1, Fed. Cas. No. 15,851, affirmed in (1871) 154 U. S. 580, and 20 L. ed. 241, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1213.

j. Embargo bonds.

A statutory bond containing provisions not authorized by statute was held not void, but the excessive condition was treated as surplusage. Dixon v. United States (1811) 1 Brock. 177, Fed. Cas. No. 3,934. The bond was taken under the Embargo Act and the condition inserted in the bond was that the vessel "should not proceed to any foreign port or place." This condition was not required by the statute. Referring to this case, Marshall, Ch. J., in United States v. — (1811) 1 Brock. 195, Fed. Cas. No. 14,413, said: "The court supposed itself competent to say on a bond containing everything required by law, and something more, that the surplusage might be considered as an absolute nullity, and the bond construed as if such surplus and void matter were not contained in it."

In United States v. — (Fed.) supra, it was said that a condition superadded in a statutory bond, and not required by the statute, would be held to be surplusage. This bond was taken under the Embargo Act and was held void because not containing the exception, "danger of the seas excepted."

Act of Congress May 20, 1862, authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to refuse a clearance to a vessel where he had reasonable grounds to believe that the cargo was intended for places under the control of insurgents; § 2 provided that, in granting a clearance, a bond could be required that the cargo should be delivered at its destination, and should not be used by persons in insurrection; § 3 provided that the Secretary could prevent the transportation of goods to any place in possession of insurgents, and could require reasonable security to that effect, and also security that they should not be used to give aid or comfort to the insurgents. The first condition of the bond taken required that the goods should be consumed in Mexico. It was held that, if this condition was not sustainable, the latter condition, that no part of the cargo was to be used to give aid or comfort to parties in rebellion, would be valid. United States v. Mora (1878) 97 U. S. 413, 24 L. ed. 1013.

k. Injunction bonds.

An injunction bond containing stipulations not embraced by the statute was held not to avoid the statutory stipulations, which would be enforced. Holli-day v. Myers (1877) 11 W. Va. 276.

A stipulation in an injunction bond, "shall pay all damages that may be occasioned by said restraining order or injunction," was not found in Mo. Rev. Stat. § 2710, providing for injunction bonds. It was held that the stipulation in excess of the statutory requirement would not be enforced. Rubelman Hardware Co. v. Greve (1885) 18 Mo. App. 6.

And where a bond was given in a legal proceeding conditioned for more than the law provided, it was held that no recovery could be had beyond what could have been recovered if the bond conformed to the law. Menken v. Frank (1880) 57 Miss. 732. The bond was given in injunction under the wrong statute, and the condition to pay a debt secured by the deed of trust, sale under which was enjoined, was held beyond the requirement of the law.

Maine Rev. Stat. 1841, chap. 96, § 11, provided for an injunction bond "to respond to all damages and costs." A bond to pay "all such damages and costs (if any) as shall be sustained and awarded against" the applicant was held to be construed as if the words "and awarded" were omitted as surplusage. Union Wharf v. Mussey (1861) 48 Me. 307.

And the imposition of a condition in an injunction bond, to pay "damages," which was not in the statutory requirements, was held not to vitiate the bond.

Jameson v. Kelly (1809) 1 Bibb (Ky.) 479.

1. Other bonds.

Where the court or officer has authority or capacity to take a bond, and makes a mistake by omitting some condition prescribed, or by inserting a condition not authorized or legal, unless the statute by express words or necessary implication makes it wholly void, the bond will not be held void; the good is not vitiated by the bad, and the bond may be sued on so far as the conditions are good as a statutory bond.

Minnesota Laws 1907, chap. 448, requires an engineer for a ditch proceeding to give bond. A bond containing the statutory conditions also had added the clause, "and shall not be guilty of any negligence or malfeasance in acting as such engineer in making such survey and reporting thereon to said court." It was held surplusage, and the remainder of the bond held a statutory bond. Fairmont Cement Stone Mfg. Co. v. Davison (1913) 122 Minn. 504, 142 N. W. 899, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 945.

A bond given by contractor for convict's labor provided that the convict "should be entitled to a credit of 25 cents a day." This provision was held mere surplusage and not to affect the validity of the bond. Gonzales County v. Houston (1904) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 81 S. W. 117.

And the inclusion in a bond for the protection of materialmen, of conditions not authorized by the statute, was held not to vitiate the bond where the conditions were severable. Stephenson v. Monmouth Min. & Mfg. Co. (1897) 28 C. C. A. 292, 54 U. S. App. 499, 84 Fed. 114. This bond contained a condition for the fulfillment of the contract with the city by the contractor, in addition to the condition for the protection of materialmen.

A replevin bond provided that the action should be prosecuted with effect, and that the surety should further keep harmless the sheriff. The statute required the condition to be that the surety prosecute the suit with effect, and fully and without delay satisfy any judgment which shall be given. It was held that the bond was valid, as any surplus provision could be disregarded. Lambden v. Conoway (1848) 5 Harr. (Del.) 1.

An insurance company brought suit to determine who was entitled to a fund, and paid the money into court. In order to stay the judgment a bond was given under Kan. Code, § 591, providing that the bond shall be conditioned to pay the condemnation money and costs in case of affirmance. The bond given provided for interest on $1,500 from the date of judgment. It was held that the payment of interest could not be imposed as a condition in the bond where the judgment bore no interest. Derrington v. Conrad (1898) 7 Kan. App. 295, 53 Pac. 881.

An ordinance required a bond to be given by a telephone company that it would restore the street after laying a conduit. The bond given required also the maintenance of the street. It was held in an action by the bond company for the premiums on the bond, that liability on the bond did not extend beyond the requirements of the ordinance; i. e., the completion of the work. United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. Iowa Teleph. Co. (1916) — Iowa, —, 156 N. W. 727. Conditions beyond the statutory requirements will be treated as surplusage.

And where a license board of a city imposed a condition in the bond that liquor should not be sold on the premises, it was held that such a provision was not authorized by statute and would not be enforced. Crosby v. Snow (1839) 16 Me. 121.

And conditions in a merchant's bond other than those required by Mo. Rev. Stat. 1889, chap. 111, for the payment of taxes, were held to be surplusage and not to affect the validity of the bond. State ex rel. Fisher v. Rodecker (1898) 145 Mo. 450, 46 S. W. 1083.

In Board of Education v. Grant (1895) 107 Mich. 151, 64 N. W. 1050, it was said: "It has been frequently held that, in the absence of a prescribed statutory form, and of a declaration that bonds not in accordance therewith shall be void, if a bond be taken under a statute, with a condition in part prescribed by statute, and in part not so prescribed, yet, if it be clearly divisible, a recovery may be had upon it for a breach of the part prescribed by statute."

In State use of Hazzard v. Layton (1847) 4 Harr. (Del.) 512, it was said: "The correct rule is that, if the condition of the bond is for the performance of a matter contrary to the statute, the bond is void. But if part of the condition is for the performance of the things required by the statute, and another clause or part is for the performance of a thing contrary to the statute, the illegal part does not vitiate that which is legal, but may be rejected as surplusage, unless the statute expressly enacts that the bond shall be void if the condition does not conform to the statute, or contains matters contrary to it."

In United States v. Howell (1826) 4 Wash. C. C. 620, Fed. Cas. No. 15,405, it was said: "My opinion upon this point is that, where a statute requires an official bond to be taken, and prescribes substantially the terms of it, it must conform to the requisitions of the statute, and if it go beyond them it is void, so far at least as it exceeds those requisitions."

II. Curative statutes.

Where the statute cures all bonds defective in form or substance, it will be held that the superadded conditions do not invalidate a bond. This was held to be the rule in UNITED STATES FIDELITY & G. Co. v. POETKER, ante, 984.

Alabama Code, 3089, provides that a bond executed by an official as an official bond will be binding. A bond which was not in the penalty payable and conditioned as prescribed, given by a register in chancery, was held valid where he acted thereunder, and it was no consequence that the condition expressed was different from the statutory condition. United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. Union Trust & Sav. Co. (1904) 142 Ala. 532, 38 So. 177; Higdon v. Fields (1912) 6 Ala. App. 281, 60 So. 594.

And the addition of a provision, "and the said road finally not opened," in a bond for condemnation of a road, was held not to affect its validity. Santa Barbara County v. Yates (1910) 13 Cal. App. 44, 108 Pac. 727. California Pol. Code, § 2690, provides that "no informality in the proceedings of the board shall vitiate said suit." The court said: "The words neither add to nor detract from the liability of the bondsmen."

In Smith v. Taylor (1876) 56 Ga. 292, the only bond required of the ordinary was a bond in the sum of $1,000 for the faithful discharge of his duties as clerk of the ordinary. A bond was given conditioned that, if said Taylor "should well and truly discharge all and singular the duties required of him in virtue of his said office of ordinary, according to law and the trust reposed in him, then said obligation to be void." It was held that while this bond was not in strict conformity with the statute, it was valid under Ga. Code, § 167, providing that, whenever an officer required by law to give an official bond acts under a bond which is not conditioned as required by law, it stands in place of the official bond.

Indiana Rev. Stat. 1876, p. 154, provides that the county auditor shall give bond in the sum of $2,000. 2 Rev. Stat. 1876, p. 311, § 790, provides that no official bond shall be void for want of substance or condition, but the principal and surety shall be bound to the full extent contemplated by the law requiring the same. It was held that the bond taken for $5,000 was valid to the extent of $2,000. Graham v. State (1879) 66 Ind. 386.

And the bond of a guardian conditioned only "for the faithful discharge of his duties" was held valid although not conditioned for "the faithful payment, and accounting for, of all moneys arising from such sale according to law." Stevenson v. State (1880) 71 Ind. 52, 2 Ind. Rev. Stat. 1876, p. 588, provided that such guardian's bond shall not be void on account of any informality, illegality, or defect, but shall have the same effect as if such bond had been legally executed.

In State v. Taylor (1897) 10 S. D. 182, 66 Am. St. Rep. 707, 72 N. W. 407, it was said: "An examination of this case [Graham v. State (Ind.) supra] discloses the fact that the decision was based largely, if not entirely, upon the Indiana statutes" providing that such bonds shall not be invalid.

An appeal bond in an action for the recovery of real estate did not provide for rents. It was held that this omission was remedied by § 802 of the Indiana Code of 1852, 2 Rev. Stat. 1876, p. 314, providing that the laws and usages relative to pleading and practice, as far as they operate in aid hereof and to supply any omitted case, are hereby continued in force. This section was held to continue in force Rev. Stat. 1843, chap. 37, § 44, p. 633, providing that in an action for the recovery of land the appeal bond shall provide for all the damages. Opp v. Ten Eyck (1885) 99 Ind. 345.

And where a bond was taken from the contractors on a road by the county commissioners, it was held to be subject to Ind. Rev. Stat. 1881, § 1221, and it was proper to allege in the complaint defects in the bond and omissions of conditions to pay materialmen, and then a recovery could be had as if it had been a perfect statutory bond. Faurote v. State (1887) 110 Ind. 463, 11 N. E. 472.

In Hart v. State (1889) 120 Ind. 83, 21 N. E. 654, 24 N. E. 151, where the wrong party was made the payee of a bond and the payment of laborers was not provided for, it was said: "The bond was given pursuant to a public statute, and, under the provisions of § 1221, Rev. Stat. 1881, the parties in interest had a right to have mistakes corrected so as to give the bond the effect the law intended it should have."

In Herod v. State (1896) 15 Ind. App. 648, 43 N. E. 144, 44 N. E. 378, the cases of Faurote v. State and Hart v. State (Ind.) supra, were distinguished.

In Title Guaranty & S. Co. v. State (1915) — Ind. App. —, 109 N. E. 237, it was said: "It may be said also that Hart v. State (Ind.) supra, does not seem to be in entire accord with Faurote v. State (Ind.) supra, and Robling v. Pike County (1895) 141 Ind. 522, 40 N. E. 1079, in certain particulars." The road in those cases was built under the Act of March 3, 1877.

In State ex rel. Thornburg v. Fletcher (1891) 1 Ind. App. 581, 28 N. E. 111, it was said: "Where a bond contains more or less than is required by statute, it operates and has the force and effect of the statute authorizing it. If the bond contains less than required by statute, the bondsmen will be held to what it should have contained; and if it contains more than required by statute, the measure of liability would be to the extent defined by statute. Rev. Stat. 1881, § 1221."

And a contractor's bond given under Ind. Rev. Stat. 1894, § 6859, providing that the contractor on a free gravel road shall give reasonable security for the proper performance of his contract, was held subject to Rev. Stat. 1881, § 1221, providing that no bond taken by an officer in the discharge of his duty shall be void for want of form or substance. Herod v. State (Ind.) supra.

A poor debtor's bond which included dollarage in doubling the amount was held valid, if the officer could tax dollarage. If he could not, it would be held to be a misapprehension, and the bond would be protested under Me. Rev. Stat. chap. 148, § 43. Either way the bond was valid as a statutory bond. Lambard v. Rogers (1850) 31 Me. 350. Maine Rev. Stat. chap. 148, § 43, provided that if, by mistake or accident, the penalty of a bond taken by an officer under this chapter varies from the sum required by law, it shall still be valid, and the officer shall not be responsible to either party beyond the actual damage.

In Ross v. Berry (1862) 49 Me. 434, it was said that in Lambard v. Rogers (Me.) supra, a bond was held to be a statutory bond where "dollarage" had been charged. "That, however, was an oral opinion, and, according to the report, the court intimates a doubt whether dollarage might not be legally charged, and as that, if not, it might be considered a 'misapprehension.' This case is imperfectly reported, and, at best, rests upon the word which has been intentionally omitted in the revision."

And the addition in a recognizance, "to answer to such matters and things as may be objected against him," was held to be surplusage under Me. Rev. Stat. 1857, chap. 133, § 20, providing no action on a recognizance shall be defeated for any defect in form if it can be understood at what court the party was to appear, and from the description of the offense that the magistrate was authorized to require the same. State v. Hatch (1871) 59 Me. 410.

And a recognizance with a clause, "to further do and receive that which the said court shall then consider," was held valid and the clause mere surplusage. State v. Russ (1905) 100 Me. 76, 60 Atl. 704. Maine Rev. Stat. chap. 134, § 27, provides that no action on any recognizance shall be defeated for any defect in the form if it can be understood at what court appearance was required and that the magistrate was authorized to take the same.

And a surplusage condition in the bond of the treasurer of a levee board was held not to render the statutory conditions void. Adams v. Williams (1910) 97 Miss. 113, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 855, 52 So. 865, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1129. Mississippi Rev. Code 1880, § 403, provided the conditions of official bonds and added that a failure to observe the prescribed form, or an irregularity in any other respect, would not vitiate the same.

A penal bond of a state treasurer was $350,000 instead of $250,000, as required by the statute. South Dakota Comp. Laws, § 1382, provides: "No official bond shall be void for want of compliance with the statute, but it shall be valid in law for the matter contained therein." It was held that the bond was voluntarily executed and was valid to its full extent. State v. Taylor (1897) 10 S. D. 182, 66 Am. St. Rep. 707, 72 N. W. 407.

The statutory bond provided that the executor "shall perform the duties required by law as executor." A bond provided that the executors shall perform all the duties "required by the will and the law." Tennessee Code, § 2224, provides that the bond now in use, or any other bond executed not strictly in accord with the Code, because the condition is more extensive or less extensive, shall be valid to the extent of the conditions, as if the bond had been drawn in strict conformity to law. It was held that bond was valid. Walker v. Potilla (1881) 7 Lea (Tenn.) 449.

III. Prohibitory statutes.

Where a statute prescribing the conditions of a bond declares all bonds not taken pursuant to it void, the statute is generally strictly pursued, and added stipulations are held to render the bond void.

Under a statute requiring a bond that defendant "will render himself amenable to the process of the court thereupon," an additional stipulation inserted that he "will perform the judgment of the court in the action," was held to render the bond void. Shuttleworth v. Levi (1877) 13 Bush (Ky.) 195. Kentucky Stat. chap. 100, § 14, after prohibiting any obligations except such as are specifically directed by law, provides that every obligation taken by any such officer, by color of his office, in any other manner or form, shall be void.

And a bond given to the sheriff that defendant shall not leave the commonwealth "and shall well and truly abide by and perform such decree or order" was held void. Baskett v. Scott (1824) 5 Litt. (Ky.) 208. 2 Digest of Laws (Ky.) 1136, § 10, provides that a bond be taken for the appearance of a party in custody, and that every obligation taken in any other manner or form, by color of office, shall be void.

Kentucky Rev. Stat. p. 615, § 14, provides that no officer shall take any obligation of or from any person in his custody for or concerning any matter relating to his office otherwise than such as is specially directed by law; every obligation taken in any other manner or form shall be void. A bond to perform the judgment, taken under an order of arrest, was held void where no provision was made in law for such a condition. Lexington & D. R. Co. v. Barbee (1858) 1 Met. (Ky.) 384.

The additional condition "that the prisoner should at the request of the sheriff again surrender himself to the prison," inserted in a bond to be at large, was held to avoid the same. Sullivan v. Alexander (1821) 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 233. 1 N. R. L. 418, 423, sess. 36, chap. 67, § 13, renders void any obligation taken by a sheriff by color of his office in any other form than is prescribed by statute. L.R.A.1917B.

A bail bond conforming to a statute which had been repealed, and not conforming to the present statute relating to release from arrest, was held void, as taken colore officii. Barnard v. Viele (1839) 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 88, 34 Am. Dec. 218. 2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 286, § 59, provides that no officer shall take any bond by color of his office in any other manner than such as provided by law; if he does the bond shall be void.

And a bond taken by a sheriff in the assumed exercise of his official authority and duty, from a person under arrest, containing conditions not embraced in the statute, was held void. Cook v. Freudenthal (1880) 80 N. Y. 202. The court said: "The object of the statute prohibiting sheriffs and other officers from taking securities not authorized by law, and of the statutes prescribing the form of undertakings in particular cases, was to make the duty of the officer and the rights of parties certain and plain, and to prevent oppression or abuse of authority."

2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 286, § 59, provides that no sheriff or officer shall take any bond, by color of his office, in any other case or manner than such as provided by law. It was held that, if the undertaking in this case was to be regarded as taken by the sheriff in his official character and in exercise of his official authority, it would be void, as it was double the amount required by law. Toles v. Adees (1881) 84 N. Y. 222. Acceptance of the bond by the attorney for plaintiff made it good at common law.

In Shunk v. Miller (1847) 5 Pa. 250, it was said: "When a statute only directs the condition of the bond, and does not avoid it if it should not conform to the directions, and something more than the condition is added to it, the bond may be allowed to cover the authorized part of the condition. United States v. Brown (1830) Gilpin, 179, Fed. Cas. No. 14,663. But it is otherwise where a statute authorizes a bond to be taken in a prescribed manner or for certain expressed purposes, and declares, if it be not so taken, the bond shall be void."

IV. Bonds extorted colore officii.

It is generally held that bonds extorted colore officii, that are excessive or contain conditions not in the statute, are void.

So, where the statute provided that a bond in double the value of the vessel and cargo should be given, and the obligors were compelled to give a bond largely in excess of the statutory penalty, it was held that the bond was void. United States v. Gordon (1811) 1 Brock. 190, Fed. Cas. No. 15,232, writ of error dismissed in (1813) 7 Cranch (U. S.) 287, 3 L. ed. 347.

A bond taken from a purser was not in the terms prescribed by the Act of Congress 1812, chap. 47, and was not limited to his duties or disbursements as purser, but created a liability for all moneys received by him and for all public property committed to his care, whether officially or otherwise. It was held that a plea that this bond was required before he would be permitted to remain in the office as purser, and was extorted, was good, and that the bond was an illegal bond. United States v. Tingey (1831) 5 Pet. (U. S.) 115, 8 L. ed. 66.

Act of Congress June 30, 1834, provided that Indiana agents shall give bond in the penal sum of $2,000 for the faithful execution of the office. Two bonds were taken, one for $25,000, and one for $20,000, both conditioned that the agent "carefully discharge the duties" and "faithfully expend all public moneys and honestly account for the same, and for all public property which shall or may come into his hands, without fraud or delay." It was held that a plea that the bond was void and was extorted colore officii was a good plea. United States v. Humason (1879) 6 Sawy. 199, Fed. Cas. No. 15,421.

Bail was demanded by the sheriff in an amount exceeding that ordered by the court. The recognizance was held to be a nullity. Waugh v. People (1856) 17 Ill. 561.

The district court directed bail to be given in the penalty of $1,200. The sheriff required bail in the sum of $1,250. It was held that the bond was void. Roberts v. State (1885) 34 Kan. 151, 8 Pac. 246, 6 Am. Crim. Rep. 61. The court said that § 154, Kan. Crim. Code, providing that no action on a recognizance shall be defeated on account of any defect of form, omission of recital, condition of undertaking therein, or of any other irregularity, so that it appears that the defendant is discharged from legal custody by reason of the recognizance, did not apply, as the recognizance was not defective on account of form, omission of recital, condition of undertaking, or the neglect of any clerk or magistrate, or any other irregularity. "It is more than defective or irregular; it is utterly void."

Conditions inserted in a bond beyond the statutory requirements were held L.R.A.1917B.

nugatory where the bond was extorted under color of office. District of Columbia v. Wagman (1886) 4 Mackey (D. C.) 328. This was a bond given by a real estate agent in the District of Columbia. The court said: "So much of the condition of the bond as required the defendant to account and pay to any other person than the District 'all sums which may be due and owing by him by reason of said license and the business authorized thereby' was unauthorized by the statute."

In State ex rel. Griffith v. Purcell (1888) 31 W. Va. 44, 5 S. E. 301, it was said: "Where a superior officer exacts from his inferior a bond more onerous in its conditions than the law authorizes, the bond is void so far as it purports to exact illegal or extra official duties, or impose unlawful liabilities." But if the bond is voluntary, the sureties "are bound thereby to the full extent of the condition."

Act of Congress February 22, 1875, requires the clerk of the United States circuit court to give a bond to faithfully discharge the duties of his office. A bond provided for this and added, "and shall properly account for all moneys that may come into his possession, as required by law." It was held that this clause was only a specific statement of the duties in the statutory clause, and did not invalidate the bond. United States v. Ambrose (1880) 2 Fed. 552. The defense was that this bond was extorted under color of office, and was void.

A tax collector's bond exceeding in amount that required by a statute fixing the minimum amount at law was held valid. Matthews v. Lee (1853) 25 Miss. 417. The court said: "If the bond was not given voluntarily, the plea should have so averred."

Colore officii, see Barnard v. Viele (1839) 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 88, 34 Am. Dec. 218, note, III.

V. Beneficial bonds; estoppel.

In some cases where bonds were voluntarily given, it was held, after the parties have had the benefit of the same, that superadded conditions that secured the benefit did not invalidate the bond.

So, where the statute allowed a boat which had been libeled to be replevied by giving a bond conditioned only to pay such judgment as shall be rendered, and the stipulation in the bond provided an alternative condition, that is, the return of the boat upon the day appointed, it was held that the term in the condition, being beneficial, did not affect the character of the obligation. Rouse v. Jayne (1848) 14 Ala. 727.

And an indemnifying bond containing no condition for the indemnification of the officer, but containing one for the claimant as required by statute, was held good. Flint v. Young (1879) 70 Mo. 221. The obligor should not be permitted to complain if he was held liable after the bond had answered all his purposes.

The court of common pleas was abolished and the county court substituted, and a bond on appeal should have been to the county court under N. Y. Laws 1847, p. 329. It was held that a bond to the wrong court, which was acted upon, giving the parties the benefit of an appeal, was held valid, and rendered the defendant liable. Teall v. Van Wyck (1851) 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 376.

A bond to release a ship taken in summary proceedings was conditioned for the payment of "all such demands as shall be established to have been subsisting liens. 2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 404, prescribe the condition, "at the time of exhibiting the same respectively." The bond was held good. Ring v. Gibbs (1841) 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 502. The court said: "It was not a bond taken colore officii. . . . It was voluntarily executed by the obligors, and though broader in its terms than could have been required by the obligees, the latter had no right on that account to object to it; nor can the former, having had the full benefit of the proceeding, complain that they had bound themselves to do what could not have been required of them."

In Speake v. United States (1815) 9 Cranch (U. S.) 28, 3 L. ed. 645, it was held that a plea that an embargo bond was required in a sum more than double the value of the vessel and cargo was bad. There was no allegation that the bond was unduly obtained by the collector, colore officii, by fraud, oppression, or circumvention. The parties were estopped to deny that the value agreed upon was the true value.

VI. Indivisible, insufficient, and invalid bonds.

a. Generally.

The bonds which have been held invalid were generally those in which the good and bad conditions could not be separated, and in which the condition was to do something which the statute did not require, or those which contained a provision not authorized by statute or L.R.A.1917B.

in violation of a statute. So, where the condition was more onerous than the statutory bond, the bond was held invalid. Bonds given under a wrong statute; bonds to appear at the wrong court, and bonds in which the penalty was largely excessive, were held invalid. Some bonds were held insufficient where "and" was used for "or," and vice versa. Bonds in which the condition was absurd, and bonds not binding heirs, executors, and administrators, were held invalid.

b. Administrators' bonds.

A bond given by an administrator with the will annexed made no reference to the will, and was in the form of a bond given by an administrator; it was held that the bond was not a good statutory bond, and that the surety was not liable to a legatee. Walker v. Crosland (1850) 3 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 23.

A bond in the form required from an administrator was given by an administrator with the will annexed. It was held invalid as a statutory bond. Frazier v. Frazier (1831) 2 Leigh (Va.) 642. In Gibson v. Beekham (1862) 16 Gratt. (Va.) 321, it was said that the bond in the above case was not for the benefit of legatees, and that the court did not decide that it would have been invalid if suit had been by a creditor.

And a bond in the form for an administrator de bonis non, and not in the form for an administrator with the will annexed, was held void. Morrow v. Peyton (1837) 8 Leigh (Va.) 54.

c. Appeal; supersedeas; certiorari.

Wisconsin Laws 1889, chap. 184, provide for an appeal bond "for the faithful prosecution of such appeal and the payment of all costs that shall be adjudged against the appellant by the court." A bond recited an appeal to the circuit court of Eau Claire county and was conditioned for the payment of all costs that should be adjudged against appellant "by the court aforesaid." It was held void, as the surety would not be liable if a change of venue was had. (There was no change of venue.) Drinkwine v. Eau Claire (1892) 83 Wis. 428, 53 N. W. 673.

And an appeal bond reading, "will pay or satisfy the judgment against the that may be obligators on the bond," was held to have no meaning. Carter v. Grisby (1879) 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (White & W.) 148.

And a condition in an appeal bond requiring defendant to appear "before the next regular term of the county court"

"from day to day thereafter, and not depart from said county court," was held to be more onerous than the statutory condition, and a nullity; and the appeal was dismissed. Watson v. State (1886) 20 Tex. App. 382.

And where the bond on appeal was not double the amount of the judgment, and was otherwise defective in the conditions required by the statute, it was held that the appeal should be dismissed. Fletcher v. State (1880) 9 Tex. App. 674.

And a recognizance that appellant "shall continue from day to day, and term to term, until his appeal has been decided by said court of appeals," was held void. It should have been that he appear before the proper court at the proper time, and there remain, "to abide judgment of the court of appeals." The appeal was dismissed. Taylor v. State (1877) 1 Tex. App. 663.

And an appeal was dismissed where the bond executed under a prior law was conditioned to perform the decree of "the supreme court" instead of the "court of appeals." Lawrence v. State (1876) 1 Tex. App. 392.

A bond on appeal from a justice's court, conditioned defendant "make his personal appearance before the county court of said county at its next regular term, beginning on the third Monday in May, A. D. 1905, and there remain from day to day and term to term, and answer in said cause on trial in said court," was held to be fatally defective. It should have been that he "prosecute his appeal with effect and pay such fine and costs as shall be adjudged against him by the county court, as well as other costs that may have been adjudged against him in the court below. Tex. Code. Crim. Proc. 1895, art. 889." Bunton v. State (1908) 52 Tex. Crim. Rep. 618, 108 S. W. 373.

A recognizance on appeal to abide the judgment of the "court of appeals" instead of the "court of criminal appeals" was held fatally defective. McRay v. State (1898) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 44 S. W. 161; Starr v. State (1897) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 40 S. W. 790; Dun v. State (1897) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 40 S. W. 287; Nix v. State (1893) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 44 S. W. 161; Fincher v. State (1896) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 37 S. W. 732; Adams v. State (1903) 44 Tex. Crim. Rep. 534, 72 S. W. 588.

And a recognizance on appeal reading, "who has been convicted of said offense in this court, from day to day, and from term to term thereof, and not depart without leave of this court," was held L.R.A.1917B.

fatally defective. Henry v. State (1897) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 38 S. W. 609.

And an appeal bond conditioned that defendant will prosecute "this trial" to effect, and will pay off and satisfy the judgment which may be rendered on "said trial," instead of "this appeal" was held a nullity. S. A. Pace Grocery Co. v. Savage (1908) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 114 S. W. 866; Wood Grocery Co. v. S. A. Pace Grocery Co. (1906) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 99 S. W. 180.

A bond on appeal from a justice's court, conditioned to appear in the "county court," was held to be fatally defective as more onerous than the statute required. Scarborough v. State (1892) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 20 S. W. 584. Paschal's Dig. (Tex.) art. 1491, provides for an appeal bond to be double the debt or damages, and for defendant to perform the judgment. Art. 1493 provides for an appeal by giving security for costs and damages. This security does not operate as a supersedeas. A bond was given, conforming to art. 1491, but was insufficient in amount. It was held that it could not be treated as a bond under art. 1493, as it contained more than was necessary and could not be divided and no part could be rejected. The appeal was dismissed. Janes v. Langham (1867) 29 Tex. 413.

And a bond on appeal from a justice, conditioned to prosecute or "pay the debt," was held void. It should have been a recognizance in the nature of special bail and the justice had no authority to take any other. King v. Culbertson (1823) 10 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 325.

And a recognizance "to prosecute this appeal with effect," on appeal from a justice, was held void, as it did not comply with the Act of 1842, but the Act of 1810. It should have been conditioned that "no part of the defendant's property should be removed, secreted, assigned, or disposed of so as to baffle an execution." Donley v. Brownlee (1847) 7 Pa. 109.

And a recognizance exacted from the defendant in the sum of $50,000, to prosecute his appeal and to pay all costs and damages, was held void, as the orphans' court had no power to impose such terms. Com. v. Wister (1891) 142 Pa. 373, 21 Atl. 871, 872. In this case the money had been paid into court and the appellant by the appeal was denied the use of the money and suffered the same loss as the other distributees.

The failure to stipulate in an appeal bond "that the appellant will prosecute his appeal to effect and without unnecessary delay" was held sufficient to require a dismissal of the appeal. Job v. Harlan (1862) 13 Ohio St. 485. This additional stipulation was made a separate section by the Ohio Act March 14, 1853.

An undertaking on appeal in a creditor's suit to uncover property provided, "and satisfy said judgment and decree so far as affirmed by the appellate court." It was held that in this case the plaintiff was not entitled to have judgment for the debt, and the mandate was recalled and modified, Stubling v. Wilson (1907) 50 Or. 282, 92 Pac. 810. The court said: "The undertaking in this suit created a liability against the surety only for the costs of the lower court and of this court."

An appeal was held properly dismissed where the bond was not conditioned "to abide the judgment of said court," to which the appeal was taken, as required by Minn. Rev. Laws 1905, § 4018. State v. Mattson (1908) 105 Minn. 64, 117 N. W. 227; State v. Mattson (1908) 105 Minn. 164, 117 N. W. 503. This bond was conditioned to prosecute the appeal with effect at a named term of the district court, to answer said appeal, and in the meantime to keep the peace, and not to depart thence without leave.

And a condition in a recognizance on appeal, to pay also all intervening damages, was held to render the bond void. Massachusetts Gen. Stat. chap. 120, § 26, required a bond to prosecute the appeal with effect and pay all costs which should afterwards arise thereon. Newcomb v. Worster (1863) 7 Allen (Mass.) 198.

So a recognizance on appeal to pay "all intervening damages and costs," under Me. Stat. 1841, requiring a recognizance to pay the "costs" only, was held void. Jordan v. McKenney (1858) 45 Me. 306. The court said: "The magistrate had no right to require it."

A recognizance on appeal from a justice was required a condition to "personally appear" at the appellate court and pay "all intervening damages and costs." Maine Rev. Stat. chap. 116, § 10, required a condition "to prosecute his appeal with effect, and pay all costs arising after the appeal." It was held that the bond was invalid, and the appeal was not perfected. French v. Snell (1854) 37 Me. 100; Lane v. Crosby (1856) 42 Me. 327.

And a bond given for appeal formulated under the wrong section of the Code was held invalid and the appeal L.R.A.1917B.

was dismissed. Calhoun's Succession (1883) 35 La. Ann. 363. The bond should have been that prescribed by art. 579, C. P., and not that prescribed by C. P. 214, 276, 304.

Under Iowa Acts Jan. 28, 1857, 303, providing that in criminal cases the appellant shall give bond under condition that he will appear and will not depart without leave, and will abide the judgment, it was held that a condition in a bond that he would pay whatever amount should be legally adjudged was erroneously required, and should not have been demanded. State v. Beneke (1859) 9 Iowa, 203.

And a supersedeas bond was held insufficient where the conditions were not such as were required by the statute. Ranney-Alton Mercantile Co. v. Mineral Belt Constr. Co. (1899) 2 Ind. Terr. 134. Mansfield's Dig. (Ark.) § 1295, provided for a bond by appellant to satisfy the judgment in case it was affirmed, and any judgment the supreme court may render or order to be rendered by the inferior court. The bond given was for appellant to have its property forthcoming to satisfy the judgment.

An appeal bond omitted the statutory condition to prosecute the appeal with effect, and, instead of binding themselves to pay whatever judgment might be rendered by the court upon dismissal or trial of the appeal, the obligors limited their liability to the payment of the judgment to be rendered in Hancock county, from which county a change of venue was had. It was held that the sureties were not liable. Sharp v. Bedell (1848) 10 Ill. 88.

In Smith v. Whitaker (1849) 11 Ill. 417, the cases of Young v. Mason (1846) 8 Ill. 55, and Sharp v. Bedell (Ill.) supra, were distinguished.

On certiorari from conviction in a municipal court, the bond was "for the appearance of the defendant to abide the final judgment and sentence of the superior court of — in said case." This was held not to be a compliance with the bond required by statute to "appear and abide the final judgment, order, or sentence of said court, or of the superior court in said case." Scott v. Camilla (1910) 7 Ga. App. 689, 67 S. E. 846.

On certiorari from a judgment for violating a city ordinance, the bond was in the sum of $300, conditioned to pay the eventual condemnation money. Georgia Acts 1902, p. 105, require that the bond in such cases as this shall be made conditioned to abide the judgment of the superior or mayor's court. It was held that the certiorari should be dismissed for failure to give the proper bond. Simon v. Savannah (1908) 4 Ga. App. 171, 60 S. E. 1036.

And an appeal bond was held invalid where it provided that "in case said judgment be affirmed or modified, or the appeal be dismissed by said superior court, Barrett will pay the fine and render himself to said justice," and the Cal. Penal Code, § 1273, provided, first, that if the appeal was from a fine "he will pay the same," or such part as the appellate court may direct; second, that if judgment of imprisonment has been given "he will surrender himself in execution of the judgment" upon affirmation or modification, or on the appeal being dismissed. The provision of the bond was held more onerous than the statute prescribed. People v. Barrett (1907) 6 Cal. App. 578, 92 Pac. 647.

Alabama Code, § 3041, required the appellant to give security for the costs of the appeal. A bond was conditioned to pay the costs of the appeal in the supreme court only in case the judgment of the court below was affirmed. It was held that the appeal should be dismissed. Hinson v. Preslor (1855) 27 Ala. 643.

And a bond "for all costs and damages as may be sustained by the defendant by reason of the appeal" was held not equivalent to a bond "to pay such judgment as may be rendered," and would not authorize a summary judgment. Reynolds v. Cox (1895) 108 Ala. 276, 19 So. 395.

And when the appeal bond did not conform to the statute, it was held that the appeal should be dismissed. Reilly v. Crowley (1891) 3 Ariz. 286, 29 Pac. 14; Hill v. Herrick (1891) 3 Ariz. 313, 73 Pac. 399. There was no obligee named the bond was not in a sum at least double the probable costs in the appellate and lower courts, and was not conditioned that the appellant should prosecute the appeal.

d. Attachment.

Where a statutory bond to release property would become effective if the attachment should be "sustained," it was held that a bond to become effective if the attachment was "discharged" was inoperative, and no recovery could be had on it even as a common-law obligation. Edwards v. Pomeroy (1885) 8 Colo. 254, 6 Pac. 829.

An attachment bond provided that the plaintiff "would prove his demand on a trial at law." It was held that this was not such a bond as was required by the L.R.A.1917B.

statute, and the defendant, who had given bond to retain the property, could plead in abatement the want of a sufficient attachment bond. Delano v. Kennedy (1844) 5 Ark. 459.

A bond in attachment provided that "they" would perform the judgment, and was not conditioned as required by the statute, that the defendant in the attachment suit would perform the judgment of the court. It was held that the bond could not be enforced as a statutory bond. Lowenstein v. McCadden (1890) 54 Ark. 13, 14 S. W. 1095.

A bond by defendant in attachment, on appeal from a justice, provided that the surety would satisfy the judgment of the circuit court "to the extent of the value of said cotton." This was held not to be a statutory bond, requiring a condition "to perform the judgment appealed from in the event it was affirmed on appeal, or if, on a trial anew in the circuit court, judgment was given against appellant, that he would pay such judgment," and would not support a summary judgment against the surety. Martin v. Tennison (1892) 56 Ark. 291, 19 S. W. 922.

California Practice Act, § 553, requires an undertaking in attachment to pay all damages without any limitations as to amount. An attachment was held illegal where the bond limited the damages to "not exceeding $100." Hisler v. Carr (1868) 34 Cal. 641.

The condition required by statute in an attachment bond was, "If the court shall finally decide that the plaintiff was not entitled to an attachment, the plaintiff will pay all damages." It was held that a bond using a form under a prior statute, "If the court shall finally decide that the plaintiff was not entitled to an attachment, the plaintiff will pay . . . all damages he may sustain by the wrongful suing out of the attachment," was invalid. Pierse v. Miles (1885) 5 Mont. 549, 6 Pac. 347. The court said: "Under the amended section, the sureties are liable in any event, if it is finally held that the plaintiff was not entitled to an attachment; while under the original section they are not liable unless the plaintiff wrongfully procured the attachment to issue." The same was held in Langstaff v. Miles (1885) 5 Mont. 554, 6 Pac. 356.

e. Bail and recognizance.

A bail bond conditioned "to abide the final judgment of court," when it should have been conditioned that the defendant "will appear before the proper court or magistrate to answer the accusation against him," was held invalid, and the suit thereon was dismissed. Turner v. State (1883) 14 Tex. App. 168.

And a recognizance requiring the defendant to make his "personal" appearance, and stating "until discharged by due course of law," instead of "not depart without leave of the court," was held defective, and the appeal was dismissed. Robertson v. State (1904) 45 Tex. Crim. Rep. 516, 78 S. W. 517.

And a recognizance to appear before the trial court "from day to day and from time to time of the same, and not depart," was held invalid. Texas Code Crim. Proc. art. 887, requires the appearance "from term to term." Samamiego v. State (1904) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 80 S. W. 996; Fulton v. State (1904) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 78 S. W. 227.

And a recognizance "to appear at the next term," instead of "from day to day and from term to term," was held to be invalid, and the appeal was dismissed. Anderson v. State (1903) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 76 S. W. 470.

And a recognizance that "binds the principal only to stand trial in the county court of Eastland county" was held to be fatally defective, when it should have been "to abide the judgment of the court of criminal appeals." Satterwhite v. State (1899) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 49 S. W. 396.

And where the penalty in a bail bond was $1,000 instead of $500, as it should have been, it was held that the bond should be quashed. Barringer v. State (1864) 27 Tex. 553; Neblett v. State (1879) 6 Tex. App. 316.

Texas Crim. Code, art. 722, provides for a recognizance "to appear before the district court to abide the judgment of supreme court." A recognizance for appearance "at the honorable district court in obedience to law, to answer said indictment in case the judgment of the district court be reversed," was held void. Little v. State (1861) 26 Tex. 110.

And where the obligation of an insolvent bond was for the creditor "and all and singular the rest of the creditors," it was held void. It was held oppressive and compulsory. Beacom v. Holmes (1825) 13 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 190. The court said: "The bond is to be given only to the arresting creditor and to secure his debt, provided the debtor fails to apply for the benefit of the insolvent laws. No other creditor has any concern with it."

And where the statute in regard to an insolvent debtor required a bond with a L.R.A.1917B.

double aspect, "the procurement of a discharge or a surrender to jail in lieu of it," it was held that a bond not in the alternative was void. Hutton v. Helme (1836) 5 Watts (Pa.) 346.

A bond given by an insolvent debtor was held void where the statutory condition, "to surrender himself to the jail of the said county, if he fail to comply with all things required by law to entitle him to be discharged," was not in the bond. It was held not a voluntary bond, but a bond binding the debtor to harder conditions, and the plaintiff had no right to exact them. The failure to use this condition deprived the debtor of the benefit of a surrender. M'Kee v. Stannard (1826) 14 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 380. The debtor appeared and the case was adjourned, and he then did not give notice to his creditors nor appear.

And where the sureties on a recognizance contracted that the defendant would appear generally, for which there was no warrant in law, it was held that the bond was void. Malheur County v. Carter (1908) 52 Or. 616, 98 Pac. 489. It should have been conditioned to answer a stated charge.

And a statutory recognizance containing an unwarranted condition was held void. The statute required bail in the nature of special bail. The bail taken was absolute for payment of the debt that might be eventually recovered in the action. Bolton v. Robinson (1825) 13 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 193.

In Power v. Graydon (1866) 53 Pa. 198, the court, referring to an insolvent debtor's bond, said: "It must be admitted that, being a statutory bond having for its object the release of Barron from arrest and confinement, and being therefore compulsory, if it exacts more than the statute requires, it cannot be enforced."

A bond to a constable, conditioned to deliver a prisoner, was held void. There was nothing in the bond to indicate that the arrest was a "civil arrest." Churchill v. Perkins (1809) 5 Mass. 541.

A debtor's bond to obtain release from arrest on execution, which was not taken for the exact amount required by statute, was held not a statutory bond. A forfeiture was denied where the debtor had complied with the bond, although the proceedings before the justice did not conform to the statute. Merchants' Bank v. Lord (1861) 49 Me. 99. So where the bond included an illegal charge. Ross v. Berry (1862) 49 Me. 434.

A recognizance required in forcible entry and detainee, to prosecute with effect an appeal, to pay all costs after the appeal, and the intervening rent. These were not the conditions required by statute, and the recognizance was held void. Dennison v. Mason (1853) 36 Me. 431.

A recognizance was conditioned, "to prosecute with effect an appeal, made by him at the court of common pleas." Maine Stat. 1829, chap. 444, provided, "to prosecute his appeal, and to pay all such costs as may arise in such suit after such appeal." It was held that the recognizance was not according to the statute, and a declaration in sci. fa. set out no legal cause of action. Owen v. Daniels (1842) 21 Me. 180.

And where conditions not authorized by the statute were superadded to a recognizance, one of which prohibited the defendant for a term of two years from obtaining a liquor permit even if he complied with the statute, the recognizance was held to be invalid. Dur-ein v. State (1888) 38 Kan. 485, 17 Pac. 49.

A bail bond contained a stipulation, "Now if the said Goodman and Jerome, in case they are cast in their said suit, shall render their bodies to prison in execution of the law, in terms of the law, in such case made and provided, and upon failure thereof, the said securities will do it for them." This was held prejudicial, as not required by statute, and rendered the instrument void. Tucker v. Davis (1854) 15 Ga. 573. The court said: "If a bond contains a condition not required by the law, but which is beneficial to the security, it does not vitiate the bond; but if a condition is inserted, not warranted by the law, and which is onerous to the security, or omits one for his benefit, the instrument is void."

And where bail in the sum of $500 was required in one charge, and $200 bail was required in another charge, and the commissioner took bail in $700 in one bond, it was held that the bond taken was a substantial departure and was not binding on the sureties. United States v. Goldstein (1871) 1 Dill. 413, Fed. Cas. No. 15,226.

And a debtor's bond to appear at an adjourned hearing, and also at such other times and places as the hearings may from time to time be adjourned to, was held void under 2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 214, 2d ed. § 60, as the statute did not require this condition. People ex rel. Norton v. Locke (1850) 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) L.R.A.1917B.

443. The statute fixed a bond for an adjourned hearing, not "hearings."

f. Bastardy and nonsupport.

A bastardy bond imposing conditions on the obligor in addition to the statutory conditions was held void. People v. Meighan (1841) 1 Hill (N. Y.) 298, 2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 2d ed. 214, § 60, was held to destroy every bond taken by any officer by color of his office in any other case or manner than such as provided by law.

A filiation bond provided that defendant "shall well and truly observe all the conditions of said order of affiliation." It should have provided "that he will pay weekly or otherwise, as may have been ordered, the sum directed . . . for the support of the child, and of the mother during her confinement and recovery, or which may be ordered by the court of sessions of the county." This bond was held void. Lester v. Worden (1896) 8 App. Div. 216, 40 N. Y. Supp. 436.

South Carolina Act 1795 (2 Faust, 74) requires a bastardy recognizance "conditioned for the annual payment of £5 for the maintenance of the child." A bond was in a penalty of £60 payable by twelve annual instalments of £5 every year. The penalty was for "the citizens of the aforesaid district." The act required it to be for the "maintenance of the child." The bond was held to be void, and, as it was taken under color of legal authority, it was not good at common law. Laurens Dist. v. Gains (1814) 1 Treadway, Const. (S. C.) 459.

In Erlinger v. People (1865) 36 Ill. 458, it was said that the case of Laurens Dist. v. Gains, supra, was exceptional. "It is very brief, the court merely holding the bond before them invalid without reference to any authorities, or devoting more than a few lines to the consideration of the case." A directly contrary doctrine is held in the same state in a later and very maturely considered case. Anderson v. Foster (1831) 2 Bail. L. (S. C.) 501.

A bastardy bond of $75 per year for the support of three children was held invalid, as it provided, "until each of said children becomes twelve years of age," and if two were dead the obligation would be to pay $75 annually until the remaining one reached twelve years of age, while under the statute the liability would be only $25 a year for each. The bond was also made to the wrong payee. State ex rel. Bright v. Bright (1880) 14 S. C. 7.

1 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 645, requires a bastardy bond to contain either of the conditions in the alternative. It was held that a bond embracing conjointly the two conditions was a nullity. One condition was to be enforced by overseers and the other by the district attorney. Hoogland v. Hudson (1853) 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 343.

In Standring v. Moore (1896) 16 Misc. 106, 38 N. Y. Supp. 813, the court said: "If, therefore, the holding of the court in the case above referred to is correct, and I think it is, then the undertaking upon which this action is based is a nullity, by reason of its alternative provisions."

And a bastardy bond conditioned for appearance after the birth of the child, not naming any day, was held void. N. J. P. L. 1898, p. 961, § 51, authorizes an adjournment for six weeks. Bennett v. Briggs (1907) — N. J. L. —, 65 Atl. 717.

And a condition in a bastardy bond, "to abide by and perform the order of the county court," was held invalid, and the sci. fa. was quashed. Young v. Com. (1819) 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 63.

And a judgment order requiring that the condition in a bastardy bond for support should make the instalments payable to the county judge as formerly, and not to the clerk as now required by statute, was held error. Moore v. People (1883) 13 Ill. App. 248.

A bastardy bond required the accused to appear at the next probate court, on the second Monday in July next. The statute required the bond to be given for accused to appear before the next county court, and a later statute substituted "probate" for county. This bond should have read, to appear at the term of the probate court next after it was executed. As some terms had been held in the interim, it was held that the bond was void. Seale v. McClanahan (1852) 21 Ala. 345.

A bond for nonsupport of wife, that defendant shall be of good behavior towards the people for one year and that he pay $7 weekly for the support of his wife one year, was held void. Charities & C. Comrs. v. Hammill (1884) 33 Hun (N. Y.) 348, 2 Rev. Stat. 286, § 59, provides that obligations taken in any other case or manner than such as are provided by law are void. This bond was also in excess of the amount ordered. New York Code Crim. Proc. §§ 899-901, required a bond "that he will support his wife and children and will indemnify the county, city, village, or town against their becoming within one year chargeable upon the public."

g. Collectors' and treasurers' bonds.

A condition in the bond of a collector of militia fines, for fines and demands which might thereafter be assessed by the regiment, was held not to be included in the statutory provision, and the condition was inoperative. Com. v. Pearce (1828) 7 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 317.

The bond of a deputy treasurer provided, "and discovered during said continuance or within six months thereafter." It was held that such a provision in violation of the statute, placing a limitation on the right of action given by statute, was against public policy and void. United States Fidelity & T. Co. v. McLaughlin (1906) 76 Neb. 307, 107 N. W. 577, 109 N. W. 390.

h. Constables' bonds.

A constable's bond was held void where the good and bad conditions in the bond could not be separated. Nottingham v. Giles (1806) 2 N. J. L. 120.

And a constable's bond was held void where the condition was broader than the statute required. Middletown v. M'Cormick (1809) 3 N. J. L. 500. This bond contained a condition "that in all respects whatsoever he shall do and execute all services, acts, and duties appertaining to his office to the best of his judgment and ability." This was held absurd.

i. Cost bonds.

A bond given for costs was conditioned to be void if the "plaintiff should pay on demand" all costs. 2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 620, § 4, provided, "on demand of the obligors." It was held that the bond was invalid, as the defendant should not be compelled to travel out of the state to make a demand. Montague v. Bassett (1864) 18 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 13.

So a bond for costs "that plaintiff shall pay on demand" was held invalid where plaintiff was a nonresident. It should have required the "obligors" to pay on demand. Tallmadge v. Wallis (1845) 1 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 100.

And a security for the payment of costs on the affirmance, and not for the original judgment, which was affirmed at general term, was held insufficient. Morss v. Hasbrouck (1882) 10 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 407, reversed in (1882) 15 N. Y. Week. Dig. 308. New York Code Civ. Proc. § 1332, required the bond to be in the same form as if the judgment appealed from did itself render a judgment similar to the one it affirmed.

And a bond for costs not obligating "heirs, executors, and administrators" was held insufficient. Schenke v. Rowell (1876) 1 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 295.

The statute required a bond for costs in suits commenced by a nonresident, "for the payment of all costs that may accrue in consequence thereof, either to the opposite party or to the officers of the court." A bond to pay costs "provided judgment be given against said Hunt" was held insufficient and was properly rejected. Hunt v. Butcher (1840) 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 341.

Arkansas Rev. Stat. 211, provided that a nonresident shall give bond "to pay all costs which may accrue in such action." A bond was held invalid and the action was dismissed, where the bond provided that he "shall maintain his said action, or if judgment shall be given against him, he shall well and truly pay all costs of suit which he shall be liable to pay." There was a material difference between the bonds. Owings v. Finley (1840) 3 Ark. 136.

j. Embargo bonds.

An embargo bond was held void where the conditions were more than required by statute. United States v. Morgan (1811) 3 Wash. C. C. 10, Fed. Cas. No. 15,809. The court said: "If it be taken in a greater sum than the law directs; if the condition stipulate a relanding elsewhere than in the United States, if it stipulate a relanding absolutely, when the law requires it to be done on a certain condition; or if it bind the obligors to do more than the law requires, it is not the bond which the officer was authorized to take, and all is void."

In United States v. Brown (1830) Gilpin, 155, Fed. Cas. No. 14,663, in referring to this case, it was said: "The bond was declared to be void by the judge, (1) because the condition required the obligors to reland the cargo in the United States, although they might have been prevented by a peril of the sea; (2) because the condition requires the obligors to return the certificate of relanding to the collector at Philadelphia, within a limited time. . . . The condition of that bond was not, as ours is, in its nature or terms divisible."

In United States v. Morgan (Fed.) supra, where an embargo bond failed to include the exception, "dangers of the sea excepted," and contained a provision L.R.A.1917B.

that a certificate of the landing of the cargo should be delivered to the collector at Philadelphia, it was held to be void, as this last clause was not required by the statute, and omitting the other clause made a condition different from that required by the statute.

United States v. Brown (Fed.) supra. This ruling was qualified so as to apply, "at least so far as it exceeds the requisitions of the law."

k. Liquor bonds.

A liquor bond was made to the city of Lincoln and contained no condition for the payment of all damages, but only of fines, forfeitures, and penalties, and for compliance with the statutes and ordinances "so far as relates to the matters in the bond." It was held that there was no provision in the statute for such a bond, and it was nullity. The bond should be to the county and should provide against keeping a disorderly house. Saxon v. Kelley (1873) 3 Neb. 104. See also Ulrich v. Gilmore (1892) 35 Neb. 288, 53 N. W. 135.

l. Other bonds.

A bond given under a city ordinance was in violation of the statute. It was held that no recovery could be had thereon. Tuskaloosa v. Lacy (1842) 3 Ala. 618. The statute prohibited the use of scrip for money, and the ordinance required the city treasurer to give bond to account for the city script used as money.

And under La. Act 1894, No. 180, requiring a contractor's bond for the payment of all material and labor, it was held that a bond in which such amount was made divisible between the owner and the statutory beneficiaries did not meet the requirement of the law. Hughes v. Smith (1905) 114 La. 297, 38 So. 175.

And a bond in detinue, not naming the parties defendant nor stating the kind of suit, was held too indefinite and was void. Eason v. Clark (1829) 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 522.

Louisiana Code of Practice, art. 280, provides that the party giving bond should faithfully present the property after definite judgment. A bond taken by a sheriff in lieu of property sequestered provided that the obligors shall pay the amount of the judgment to be rendered. It was held that the casual insertion in a bond of an additional condition not contemplated by the legislature would not bind the surety. The failure to proceed against the property by execution before proceeding on the bond required a nonsuit. Welsh v. Barrow (1845) 9 Rob. (La.) 535.

And in Grantville v. Fidelity & D. Co. (1912) 139 Ga. 53, 76 S. E. 575, it was held that a bond to protect materialmen was neither literally nor in substance in accord with the provision of Ga. Act Aug. 12, 1910, p. 86.

In Johnson v. Erskine (1852) 9 Tex. 1, it was held that a ferry license bond conditioned "to perform and discharge all the duties required of them as ferryman" was void under the statute and also at common law. This bond would cover $10 damages for neglect in performing a duty required by the Ferry Law, and $10 penalty for exacting illegal toll. These are not covered by a statutory bond, which relates to keeping the banks in repair. The opinion says: "Believing that the bond sued on was neither void under the statute nor at common law, we adhere to the opinion that the judgment must be reversed and the cause dismissed." The word "void" must mean valid in this sentence.

In Farmers' Bank v. Boyer (1827) 16 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 48, it was said: "It is admitted that a bond whose terms are not in accordance with the provisions of a statute by which it is required is void; but this is to be restrained to cases where the condition is to do something which the statute does not require, or where it contains a provision which the statute does not authorize."

In Haines v. Levin (1865) 51 Pa. 412, it was said: "When a statutory condition is expressed, limiting the terms upon which a legal remedy is given, and harder terms are exacted than the statute requires, the recognizance or bond is void as a departure to the prejudice of the rights of the party entitled to his redress, and the surety is discharged. It is different where the statutory obligation is given to secure the performance of a duty; then, if the vicious portion of the condition is severable from the remainder, the bond is valid as to the part which is good."

In Com. v. Wistar (1891) 142 Pa. 373, 21 Atl. 872, it was said: "As a general rule, where a statute prescribes the condition of a bond or recognizance upon which a legal remedy is given, and terms harder than the statute requires are exacted, the obligation is void. . . . If, however, the stronger obligation is voluntarily assumed, it is otherwise."

In Winter v. Kinney (1848) 1 N. Y. 365, it was said: "An agreement made with a sheriff or other public officer, to obtain an indulgence not authorized by L.R.A.1917B.

law, . . . or the taking by such officer, from a party in custody, an obligation or security not sanctioned by statute, for the ease and favor of the prisoner, and as an indemnity for a breach of duty on the part of such officer, has uniformly been held void."

In Mittnacht v. Kellermann (1887) 105 N. Y. 461, 12 N. E. 28, it was said: "The general rule that bonds taken by public officers purporting to be taken under statutory authority, but which are not actually authorized by the statute, and do not conform in all material respects with its provisions, are void, is too well established by authority to be questioned or disputed."

VII. Substantial compliance with the statute.

a. Generally.

Bonds containing slight changes in the form of the statutory bond and the substitution of synonymous phrases, bonds slightly excessive of statutory requirements, and bonds enumerating in detail the duties covered, have been held valid. The rule seems to be that, if the statute does not render the bond void, or if the bond is not a fraud on the obligors by color of law, or any evasion of the statute, it will generally be held valid.

b. Administrators', executors', and guardians' bonds.

An administrator's bond was held to be good notwithstanding it specified in detail the obligations of the administrator in administering on partnership property. Carr v. Catlin (1874) 13 Kan. 393, Comp. Laws, 520, § 50, provided that the bond shall be conditioned that the administrator will faithfully execute the trust with no unnecessary waste or expense.

The statute fixing bond at $500 for contestants of wills was held to be directory only, and a bond for $1,000 was held valid. Parks v. Allen (1859) 2 Head (Tenn.) 523. The court said: "The courts may exercise proper discretion in view of the magnitude of the suit and the probate cost, in regulating the amount."

South Carolina P. L. 1789, 496, provide the condition of an administrator's bond, that the administrator shall "pay unto such persons, respectively, as are entitled to the same by law." A bond provided that he shall "pay unto such person or persons, respectively, as the said ordinary, by his decree or sentence, pursuant to the true intent and meaning of the statutes and acts of the intestate estates, shall limit and appoint." It was held to be a good bond. Kershaw Dist. v. Blanchard (1813) 3 Brev. (S. C.) 136.

Missouri Rev. Stat. §§ 235-252, provide the condition of an executor's bond, to faithfully administer said estate, and perform all other things touching said administration required by law "or the order or decree of any court having jurisdiction." A bond used the word "executorship" for "administration" and omitted the words quoted. It was held that the bond was valid. Newton v. Cox (1882) 76 Mo. 352.

Massachusetts Stat. 1783, chap. 36, provide that executors shall give bonds in the same manner as administrators. Administrators were required to administer according to law. It was held that an executor's bond, "to administer according to the will," was valid. Hall v. Cushing (1830) 9 Pick. (Mass.) 395. It was said that "the forms of their bonds may and ought to vary."

The statutory form was conditioned for the executors "administering the estate according to the law and the will." A bond contained the additional provision, "that the executor shall pay the debts and legacies of the estate." The bond was held valid, and it was the same as though two bonds had been executed. Gandolfo v. Walker (1864) 15 Ohio St. 251.

And a provision in the bond of a guardian that he should put out and secure the proceeds of sale on interest, was held not to affect the bond, although the statute did not require that condition. "The law did require it." McFadden v. Hewett (1885) 78 Mo. 24, 1 Atl. 893.

A condition added in a bond, "that the guardian shall keep harmless the justices from all trouble and damages that shall or may arise about the said estate," was held not to render the bond invalid. Pratt v. Wright (1855) 13 Gratt. (Va.) 175, 67 Am. Dec. 767.

And the fact that a bond contained more or less recitals than in the statute was held not to affect its validity. State ex rel. McKown v. Williams (1883) 77 Mo. 463. This was a guardian's bond, but the form used was that required by Tennessee, that before any nonresident guardian could remove the estate into another jurisdiction, his bond should be conditioned as required by the laws of the guardian's domicile, but also conditioned, "to account for and pay over to the minor, according to the law of his domicile, the money received in Tennessee."

L.R.A.1917B.

c. Appeal and error.

A bond to prosecute the appeal "with" effect, instead of "to" effect, was held not invalid. Laird v. Frieberg (1883) 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) 99; Horton v. McKeehan Bros. (1883) 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (White & W.) 216.

And a bond that appellant shall prosecute his appeal to effect "or" shall pay, instead of "and" shall pay was held valid. Sullivan v. McFarland (1881) 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (White & W.) 684; Robinson v. Brinson (1857) 20 Tex. 438; Mills v. Hackett (1882) 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (White & W.) 487.

A bond on appeal from a justice's court was conditioned that appellants "shall prosecute their appeal with effect and shall pay all the costs which have accrued in this court, together with that which may accrue in the county court, should they be cast in this suit." It was held to be sufficient. Moore v. Alston (1890) 4 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) 290, 15 S. W. 47. Texas Rev. Stat. art. 1639, provided "that the appellant shall prosecute his appeal to effect, and shall pay off and satisfy the judgment which may be rendered against him on such appeal." The only judgment that could be rendered in the county court on appeal from the dismissal of the action would be a judgment for costs, and the bond covers that. But under this statute a bond on appeal from a justice's court conditioned that appellant "shall prosecute his appeal with effect, and shall pay all the costs which may have accrued in the court below, or which may accrue in the appellate court," was held insufficient. Allison v. Gregory (1890) 4 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) 97, 15 S. W. 416.

In addition to the conditions of an appeal bond the words, "and will pay off and satisfy all costs that have accrued in the court below together with all costs in the county court," were held to neither add to nor take from the bond any obligation which would exist, had they not been inserted. Jordan v. Moore (1886) 65 Tex. 363.

And where the condition of an appeal bond substantially complied with the statute, although it did not follow the terms, it was held to be a good bond. Gardener v. Woodyear (1821) 1 Ohio, 170. This bond followed the terms required by the earlier statutes, and was construed to subject the obligors to the same liability.

And a substantial compliance with the statutory conditions in an appeal bond was held to be sufficient. Creighton v. Harden (1859) 10 Ohio St. 579.

An appeal bond read, "shall prosecute her appeal with due diligence to a final determination, and pay all costs adjudged against her in the district court." It was held that this bond substantially covered the provisions of the statute. Riley v. Mitchell (1887) 38 Minn. 9, 35 N. W. 472. The statute read "with effect," and "costs" was considered synonymous with "damages."

And an appeal bond conditioned, to prosecute the appeal with effect and abide the order of the court therein, was held to be a valid bond. Anderson v. Meeker County (1891) 46 Minn. 237, 48 N. W. 1022. Laws 1887, chap. 97, § 11, provide that appellant "will duly prosecute such appeal and pay all costs that may be adjudged against him in the district court." This bond evidently was given under Gen. Stat. 1878, chap. 65, § 114, which provided for appeal from a justice.

1 Kentucky Dig. Stat. Laws, 381, provided for an appeal bond "for the due prosecution of the appeal." A bond so provided, and also provided, "or on their failure to do so, shall pay to the said Moore the amount of the judgment aforesaid, and all damages and costs which may be adjudged against them in consequence of said appeal." This was held to be a valid bond. Moore v. Gorin (1822) 2 Litt. (Ky.) 186.

A defendant in the police court executed a recognizance on appeal containing conditions prescribed by the statute which were more onerous than could under the Constitution be required, and he was discharged; it was held error to dismiss the appeal on the application of the city, because of the added conditions. Kansas City v. Hescher (1896) 4 Kan. App. 782, 46 Pac. 1005.

The statutory recognizance provided was, We acknowledge ourselves bound to the state of Indiana in the sum of — dollars each, if the said A B—shall not appear at the first day of the next term of (here specify the court), to answer a charge of (here state the offense) at the county of — and state of Indiana, and abide the judgment of such court. A bond on appeal to prosecute with effect and pay the judgment that shall be rendered against him on appeal was held valid where the appeal was from a fine. Vierling v. State (1870) 33 Ind. 218.

An appeal bond was for "all costs that have or shall accrue in said suit." The use of "or" instead of "and" was held not L.R.A.1917B.

to invalidate the bond. McCall v. Trevor (1837) 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 496.

An appeal bond conditioned for "the eventual condemnation money in said case," instead of "such further costs as may accrue by the reason of such appeal," was held not void. Maloy v. Maloy (1908) 131 Ga. 579, 62 S. E. 991.

An appeal bond was conditioned "that the said appeal shall be prosecuted with effect and that any judgment which shall be rendered against the said defendant or his executors or administrators upon said judgment shall be satisfied." The bond was held valid although it should have read, "and that any judgment rendered against the said David Miller, his executors or administrators, upon said appeal, shall be satisfied." Miller v. Holding (1877) 5 Houst. (Del.) 494.

And where a writ of error bond contained conditions not in the statute, but giving the details of the conditions to be performed more minutely, it was held that the conditions were substantially to the effect of those required by statute. Sanders v. Rives (1830) 3 Stew. (Ala.) 109. The court said that if conditions were imposed not binding, "in such a case, it would seem, that the bond would be valid, so far as the conditions correspond with the law, and that those which are superadded should be treated as surplusage."

Appeal, see Banks v. McDowel (1860) 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 84, note, I. b; Patterson v. Gordon (1875) 3 Tenn. Ch. 18, note, I. b; Hutchinson v. Fulghum (1871) 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 550, note I. b.

d. Attachment and forthcoming bonds.

An attachment bond contained a provision not required by statute, "should prosecute said attachment with effect at the court" to which it is returnable. This was held to be in effect a bond in conformity with statute. Kahn v. Herman (1847) 3 Ga. 266.

Hill's Anno. Laws (Or.) 1892), § 160, provides for a discharge of an attachment on the execution of a bond "to pay to the plaintiff the amount of the judgment that may be recovered against the defendant." A bond provided that the defendant would, on demand, pay the judgment, if one was recovered in the action. This was held to be substantially in accord with the statute. Ebner v. Heid (1903) 60 C. C. A. 370, 125 Fed. 680.

A forthcoming bond in attachment was conditioned, "shall produce said goods in satisfaction of the judgment or pay such judgment." Iowa Code, § 1896, provided for a bond conditioned that such property or its value shall be delivered to the sheriff to satisfy any judgment which may be obtained. It was held that the condition inserted was no substantial departure from that of the statutory bond. Sheppard v. Collins (1861) 12 Iowa, 570.

A bond required by the statute was "to pay such judgment as shall be rendered." A bond was given to pay the judgment or to "have forthcoming, and well and truly deliver, said steamboat to answer such decree, sentence, and judgment as may be rendered against her." It was held that the bond was valid. Murphy v. Roberts (1857) 30 Ala. 232.

A forthcoming bond in attachment provided, in addition to the statutory form, that the obligors may substantiate their claim to the property. This was held valid. Purcell v. Steele (1850) 12 Ill. 93. The court said: "But the insertion of the clause does not vitiate the bond, or change its legal effect."

And where the condition of a bond given to a sheriff for the forthcoming of property levied on was to pay the amount of the execution, instead of the value of the property, it was held that the obligors were bound. Slutter v. Kirkendall (1882) 100 Pa. 367. The court said: "The obligors appear to have voluntarily assumed a stronger obligation, and they are bound thereby."

e. Auctioneers' bonds.

Louisiana Act, Feb. 16, 1825, p. 130, §§ 1, 4, provides for an auctioneer's bond conditioned for the faithful performance of his duty as auctioneer, towards all persons who shall employ him as such, and also for the payment of duties on articles sold. A bond "that he shall well and truly observe and discharge the duties of his office according to law" was held to differ from the statutory conditions, and if it were to rest solely on the statutory provisions would be considered void. It was not taken by a judge. But it was held that the bond was good and valid in law, as the act did not prohibit taking a bond different from the one required by its provisions. Claiborne v. Debon (1814) 3 Mart. (La.) 565.

And where the bond uses words of the legal import as the statute, it will be held binding. Tripp v. Barton (1880) 13 B. L. 130. The bond read, "well and faithfully perform all the duties of said office." The statutory provision was, "faithfully to execute the duties of his office according to law, to pay all moneys received by him for goods sold at auction to the owners thereof."

f. Bail and recognizance.

A recognizance was held binding where the condition was to abide the judgment of "the appellate court" instead of the court of appeals, there being no court known as the appellate court. Allen v. State (1876) 1 Tex. App. 514. This court is called the appellate court in Tex. Const. art. 5, § 11, and the words were held to mean the same.

And a recognizance used the word "or" instead of "and" (or perform the judgment). Such use was held not to invalidate the bond. Robinson v. Brinson (1857) 20 Tex. 438.

And a recognizance omitting the word "next" (term) was held valid. Persons entering into such obligations were presumed to do so with knowledge of the statute relating to courts and the commencement of terms. Proseck v. State (1883) 38 Ohio St. 606.

New Jersey Rev. Laws 1799, 426, provided that a prisoner in a civil action shall give bond "that he will keep within the said bounds." A bond "and not walk out or depart the same until he be discharged by due course of law" was held good. Smith v. Allen (1830) 1 N. J. Eq. 43, 21 Am. Dec. 33.

And the failure to specify the date in a recognizance for examination of a poor debtor was held not to avoid the same. Gilmore v. Edmunds (1863) 7 Allen (Mass.) 360. The court said: "It is not necessary that the time fixed for the debtor's examination should be stated in the recognizance. That is a fact within his own knowledge."

g. Bastardy bonds.

A bastardy bond having a condition to "educate" the child was held valid, and more onerous than required. Hellings v. Bucks County (1850) 15 Pa. 409.

A bastardy bond provided, "shall personally be and appear before the said circuit court, held as aforesaid, on the first day thereof, and from day to day thereafter until discharged by order of said circuit court, then and there to answer to the people of the state of Illinois on said charge of bastardy aforesaid, and abide the order and judgment of said circuit court." The statute provided, "to appear at the next circuit court, to be holden for said county, to answer to such charge." It was held that the bond was valid. Erlinger v. People (1865) 36 Ill. 458.

New Jersey Rev. p. 72, § 12, requires a bastardy bond to indemnify townships against costs and expenses for support of the child. The provision in a bond for costs of education was held to be included in "expenses" and "support." State v. Such (1891) 53 N. J. L. 351, 21 Atl. 852.

A bastardy bond was held not void because of a superadded condition, and shall "indemnify the city of New York, and every other town, county, or city which may have incurred any expense, or may be put to any expense, for the support" "during her confinement and recovery therefrom." The bond followed the statute, although the child had been born some years prior to the bond. People v. Mitchell (1851) 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 466.

h. Collectors', treasurers', and cashiers' bonds.

The insertion in a treasurer's bond made May 12, of the words, "from and after the 11th day of May, 1885," in the condition, was held not to affect the liability of the sureties, and the obligation was held to be the same as though such words had been omitted. They would be liable for all money received by the treasurer after May 11th. Kempner v. Galveston County (1889) 73 Tex. 216, 11 S. W. 188.

And where the condition of a county treasurer's bond limited the accountability of the officer to moneys receivable by him before a particular day, it was held that a variance between a statutory bond and the statute would be fatal only when the condition imposed a greater burden than the law allowed. Com. v. Laub (1841) 1 Watts & S. (Pa.) 261.

Philadelphia v. Shallcross (1880) 14 Phila. (Pa.) 135. The statute required a bond of a tax receiver in $10,000, and did not provide for any liability beyond the term. A bond provided for any subsequent term. It was held that the obligation could be enforced to the full extent of its terms, where the intention to assume was plain.

2 New York Rev. Laws, 139, § 5, required a bond, "that he shall well and faithfully execute the office of treasurer of such county, and pay all moneys which shall come to his hands as treasurer according to law, and render a just and true account thereof to the said supervisors, or to the comptroller of the state, when required." A bond to "well, truly, and faithfully execute and perform the duties of said county treasurer according to law," was held good. Allegany County v. Van Campen (1829) 3 Wend. L.R.A.1917B.

(N. Y.) 48. This act was not like the sheriff's act, prohibiting a bond in any other form.

The statute required a bond from the state treasurer in the sum of $100,000. He voluntarily gave bond for $102,500. It was held that the bond was valid. State v. Rhoades (1870) 6 Nev. 352.

In Clay County v. Simonsen (1877) 1 Dak. 403, 46 N. W. 592, the statute authorized the board to require the probate judge to give bond in the sum of $4,000. The judge was ex officio county treasurer. It was held that when a bond of $8,000 was taken, it was valid under the statute authorizing the board to require an additional bond from the county treasurer.

And where a county treasurer was required to give a bond in the sum of $60,000, and gave a bond in the sum of $65,000 it was held to be a good bond and a sufficient compliance with the order. Re Read (1879) 34 Ark. 239.

A collector's bond contained a provision in addition to that of the statute, "that the obligors shall not be liable, if each and every deputy appointed by the collector shall truly and faithfully execute and discharge all the duties of such deputy collector according to law." It was held that such provision was justified, considering the duties of the collector, and the provision did not vitiate the bond. Chadwick v. United States (1880) 3 Fed. 750.

Maine Rev. Stat. chap. 77, § 24, provides that cashiers, before they enter upon the duties of their office, shall give bond conditioned for the faithful performance of the duties of the office. It was held that a bond covering past receipts as well as future property was binding because voluntarily given. Franklin Bank v. Cooper (1853) 36 Me. 179.

i. Constables' and sheriffs' bonds.

A constable's bond was conditioned: "of all the duties enjoined upon him as constable, agreeable to law." N. J. act constituting courts for the trial of small causes, § 52, required the bond to be for the true and faithful performance of all the duties enjoined upon him by that act. It was held to be a voluntary bond and valid. Woolwich v. Forrest (1806) 2 N. J. L. 115.

A sheriff's bond was given for $10,000, when the statute require a bond for $5,000. The Stevens v. Treasurers (1822) 2 M'Cord L. (S. C.) 107. The court said: "When we reflect that the bond and security, the approval, the certificate and recording, are all proved and done by the sheriff after his election, and before he shall enter upon his office; that these are all acts required strictly of him in order to insure his fidelity, we cannot but foresee the great danger of permitting him or his security deriving advantage from any error or omission, either in the bond or in the manner of giving or recording it."

In Young v. State (1834) 7 Gill. & J. (Md.) 253, it was said: "The commencement of the condition of the bond provides 'that if the above bounden Thomas Bruce, as sheriff of Prince George's county, do and shall well and faithfully execute the same office in all things appertaining thereto.' Under this provision, we think the sheriff is bound to the discharge of every duty which the omitted words, if inserted in the condition of the bond, would have imposed upon him."

J. Contractors' bonds.

A city authorized to contract for public work was held to have the power to require from the contractor a bond to protect materialmen and laborers.

And a city authorized to contract for improvement of streets was held to have the implied power to require a bond conditioned to pay for labor and material. St. Louis use of Glencoe Lime & Cement Co. v. Von Phul (1896) 133 Mo. 561, 54 Am. St. Rep. 695, 34 S. W. 843. This case overrules Kansas City Sewer Pipe Co. v. Thompson (1894) 120 Mo. 221, 25 S. W. 522.

And a bond given a railroad to protect materialmen under Kan. Laws 1872, chap. 136, containing a stipulation to save the company harmless from all damages, which condition was not in the statute, was held valid. Atchison T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Cuthbert (1875) 14 Kan. 212. The court said: "There is nothing in this inconsistent or in conflict with the other conditions; nothing limiting, restricting or in anywise modifying or affecting the obligations assumed by those conditions, so far, at least, as those dealing with the contractors are concerned."

A contractor building a schoolhouse gave a bond to pay all materialmen. The statute required a bond to be given, but did not prescribe the conditions. It was held to be valid. Baker v. Bryan (1884) 64 Iowa, 561, 21 N. W. 83. It was said: "It therefore cannot be doubted that the law . . . intended that covenants to pay the claims of subcontractors, which would protect the interest of the district, could be incorporated therein."

And a provision in a contractor's bond to secure materialmen was held not to invalidate the bond, although this condition was not imposed by statute. Williams v. Markland (1896) 15 Ind. App. 669, 44 N. E. 562. The court said: "The taking of such an obligation, under the circumstances under which this was given, is within the scope of the ordinary administrative duties of the trustee, although he may not be by law absolutely required so to do."

Burns's Anno. Stat. (Ind.) 1908, § 7723, provided that a road contractor shall submit his bond, conditioned for the faithful performance of the work. It was held that a bond conditioned, "shall promptly pay all debts incurred by them in the prosecution of said work, including labor, material, and board," was valid, although this condition was not in the statute. Title Guaranty & S. Co. v. State (1915) — Ind. App. —, 109 N. E. 237 (Rehearing denied in (1916) — Ind. App. —, 111 N. E. 19). This was on the ground that county boards had the power to insert such a provision.

In Philadelphia use of Webster v. Harry C. Nichols Co. (1906) 214 Pa. 265, 63 Atl. 886, which was an action on a bond to enforce a lien for labor and material, it was said: "The bond having been voluntarily given, it may be enforced according to its terms, although it exceeds the requirements of the ordinance."

In an action on a contractor's bond to secure debts incurred in a public improvement, it was held that the fact that the bonds in connection with the contracts were farther reaching than the strict statutory conditions of such bonds did not render them void. Puget Sound State Bank v. Gallucci (1914) 82 Wash. 445, 144 Pac. 698, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 767. The court said: "The law seems to be well settled that bonds of this nature may be required by, and given to, a public corporation in excess of or without any statutory authority, and the beneficiaries thereunder be none the less entitled to recover thereon."

In Hines v. Consolidated Coal & Lime Co. (1902) 29 Ind. App. 563, 64 N. E. 886, it was said: "With or without special statutory authority, the city could thus effectively make provision for the security of those who, by their labor done or materials furnished by them, aided the contractors, and through them, the city, in the making of an improvement beneficial to the public."

k. Injunction bonds.

An injunction bond to pay all damages, "if said injunction is finally dissolved," was held binding, although not in statutory form. Barrett v. Bowers (1895) 87 Me. 185, 32 Atl. 871, Me. Rev. Stat. chap. 77, § 32, provides for a bond "to pay all damages and costs caused thereby, if he is finally not entitled to such injunction, unless a single justice, on motion to dissolve the same, and hearing on the merits thereof, refuses to dissolve it."

Kentucky Act 1796 (1 Stat. Law, 809), providing for injunctions to stay a suit at law, required a bond "for paying all money and tobacco and costs due or to become due" in the action at law. A bond with a condition to pay the sum of $110, with costs and interest or damages, and to abide by and perform the decree, was held valid. Johnson v. Vaughan (1848) 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 217. The court said: "That the insertion of damages in the condition, even if it had been 'and damages' instead of 'or damages' is wholly inoperative to impose any obligation, because there can be no damages, and the declaration lays no foundation for claiming them."

l. Liquor bonds.

A liquor bond provided, "shall pay all damages, fines, costs, and penalties." The act provided, "shall pay all fines and forfeitures." It was held to be a good bond under this act, but did not relate to judgments for penalties under the Act of 1855, as the Act of 1872, under which it was given, limits proceedings on the bond to violations of the Act of 1872 and its supplements. Crawley v. Com. (1889) 123 Pa. 275, 16 Atl. 416.

A liquor license required one bond for $2,000 and one bond for $500. It was held that a single bond for $2,500 would be enforced. Greene County use of Sims v. Wilhite (1888) 29 Mo. App. 459. It was said: "It has been the tendency of the decisions in this state to uphold bonds as statutory bonds even when they departed from the terms of the statute, provided no substantial rights of the obligors were violated, and no burden imposed upon them in excess of the obligation required by law."

And a liquor bond providing, "shall not violate any of the provisions of said laws," was held valid under a statute requiring a bond conditioned that the obligor "will not violate any of the provisions of this act." Providence v. Bligh (1872) 10 B. L. 208. The condition was L.R.A.1917B.

construed with reference to the laws under which the board of aldermen were acting, "those laws relating to the subject."

m. Replevin bonds.

A replevin bond reading, "shall prosecute his said replevin to final judgment, and recover the said goods on final judgment, then this obligation to be null and void," was held binding. The statute provided, "that the plaintiff in replevin prosecute, and also make return and pay the damages, if judgment be against him." Morse v. Hodsdon (1809) 5 Mass. 314. In this case the court said: "True it is that the condition in this case is variant from the form there directed; but that statute does not prohibit the taking a bond of any other form, or declare a bond of any other form void."

A replevin bond was conditioned for an appearance at the next county court (describing the court of common pleas). It was held that the words "county court" were intended to mean the "court of common pleas." Arnold v. Allen (1811) 8 Mass. 147.

Kirby's Dig. (Ark.) § 6863, prescribed a bond containing the following condition: "shall perform the judgment of the court." A bond in replevin provided, "shall abide the order and judgment of the court." It was held to contain all the conditions sufficient to meet the requirements of the statutory bond. O'Brien v. Alford (1914) 114 Ark. 257, 169 S. W. 774.

n. Other bonds.

By an act granting a lottery, a bond for the drawing and application of proceeds was required. The bond given contained a further provision that prizes would be paid. It was held that the bond was intended only for the security of the state, to insure the drawing and application of proceeds as intended. Boswell v. Lainhart (1831) 2 La. 397.

A bond, the penalty of which was more than double the amount of the judgment, was held valid. Smith v. Whitaker (1849) 11 Ill. 417. The statute provides, in the form for such a bond, "here insert double the amount of the judgment and costs."

A bond more favorable to the defendant than the statute required was held enforceable. Smith v. Norval (1849) 2 N. Y. Code Rep. 14. This was a bond as security for costs.

Courts of sessions were held to be the same as courts of general sessions of the peace. People v. Hawkins (1850) 3 N. Y. Code Rep. 42.

VIII. Common-law bonds.

In some cases where the bond is not sufficient to enforce statutory remedies, by reason of the conditions in the bond differing from those set out in the statute, it is held that the bond will be sustained as a common-law obligation unless the statute is so prohibitory as to render the bond void.

A guardian's bond was given in joint form instead of a separate form for each minor, and it was an obligation in a crude, awkward, and inefficient mode, particularizing the duties to be performed. It was held that the deviation from the statute did not impose any additional duty, and the bond was valid. Ordinary v. Heishon (1880) 42 N. J. L. 15. The court said: "The strong leaning of the courts has been to hold such instruments valid, to the full extent of their terms, so far as they embody the statutory policy, as voluntary obligations."

And where the statute required a bond on supersedeas "conditioned to pay and satisfy to the said plaintiff or plaintiffs, the sum . . . in case the supersedeas shall be set aside or annulled," and the bond was conditioned, "shall well and truly pay and satisfy such judgment as shall be rendered by the county court," it was held to be a good common-law obligation, as the defendants have been delayed. Hester v. Keith (1840) 1 Ala. 316.

An appeal bond in a suit for possession of land did not comply with statutory requirements because the judge did not impose conditions. It was held to be a good common-law obligation, and founded on a valuable consideration, and rendered the obligors liable for rent. Miller v. Vaughan (1884) 78 Ala. 323. The bond provided for "whatever damages" should be caused by the appeal.

New York Code Civ. Proc. § 1326, provided that the appeal bond should obligate appellant to "pay all costs and damages against him on the appeal, not exceeding $500." A bond provided that appellant will pay all damages, and, if the case is affirmed or dismissed, will pay the sum directed by the judgment of special term that he pay the notes held by the defendant, which were declared by special term to be cash notes, not exceeding $3,500. It was held to be a good common-law bond. Gein v. Little (1904) 43 Misc. 421, 89 N. Y. Supp. 488, L.R.A.1917B.

affirmed in (1905) 102 App. Div. 614, 92 N. Y. Supp. 1125.

And a bond reading, "should well and faithfully perform all the duties as such assignee, and pay such damages as may accrue from his failure to do so," was held to be a good common-law bond. Andrews v. Ford (1894) 106 Ala. 173, 17 So. 446. The statute required a bond "for the faithful administration of the trust." This bond was made in advance of an order of court, and was payable to the corporation instead of to the register.

A bond given by an executrix contained conditions not required by statute. It was held that the statute authorizing an action by a judge of probate on bonds given to his predecessor applied only to bonds with statutory provisions. Cleaves v. Dockray (1877) 67 Me. 118. The court said: "It imposes burdens upon the executrix more onerous than the statute provides, and if the additional matter is rejected as surplusage, there is not enough left to meet the requirements of the statute. The bond, therefore, cannot be enforced as a statute bond;" it might be enforced as a common-law bond.

In State v. Bartlett (1855) 30 Miss. 624, it was said: "That if there was any statutory provision, requiring such bond to be given as a condition precedent to entering upon the discharge of the duties of the office, and in the execution of the bond there had been some departure from the statute, or failure to comply with its provisions, the bond might be sustained as a valid common-law obligation, because the giving of it was a condition precedent to taking possession of the office."

A sheriff's bond in a penalty in excess of that required by law was held binding as a common-law bond. But one judgment thereon was held to extinguish the same. Branch v. Elliot (1831) 14 N. C. (3 Dev. L.) 86.

And a sheriff was held to be liable on his bond, though not by a summary remedy, where the bond was in a penalty greater than that required by law. State Bank v. Twitty (1822) 9 N. C. (2 Hawks) 5; The Governor v. Matlock (1823) 9 N. C. (2 Hawks) 366; The Governor v. Witherspoon (1824) 10 N. C. (3 Hawks) 42.

And where an officer's bond was voluntarily executed by a guaranty company, and contained conditions not in the statute, it was held to be a good common-law bond, and the surety would be liable according to his undertaking.

United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. Rainey (1908) 120 Tenn. 357, 113 S. W. 397. The court said: "The bond executed by Rainey was voluntarily executed upon sufficient consideration, and is clearly enforceable as a common-law bond, to the full amount of the penalty prescribed."

Conceding that a county clerk's bond was not good as a statutory bond, it was held to be voluntary and good as a common-law bond, and the parties bound by all its conditions. State ex rel. Lafayette County v. O'Gorman (1882) 75 Mo. 370.

Alabama Code 1886, § 3341, provides that when personal property attached is replevied, the bond shall read, "must be delivered to the constable within ten days after judgment against the defendant unless an appeal should be prosecuted." A bond was given to return the attached property to the constable within twenty days after judgment in the attachment suit. It was held that this was a material variance, and the bond was not a good statutory bond, but was a good common-law bond. Cobb v. Thompson (1888) 87 Ala. 381, 6 So. 373.

A forthcoming attachment bond provided, "shall be produced and delivered subject to the judgment of said court, when and where the court shall direct." Mo. Act Feb. 6, 1837, provided, "shall be forthcoming, in good order and condition, when and where the court shall direct, and shall abide the judgment of the court." It was held to be a good bond at common law. Grant v. Brotherton (1842) 7 Mo. 458.

And a replevin bond given by a defendant in attachment, containing conditions more onerous than the statutory bond, was held to be a good common-law bond. It was held invalid as a statutory bond, as it required payment of the value of the goods in money, $1,045, if the property was not forthcoming, when the judgment was for only $606.74. Colorado City Nat. Bank v. Lester (1889) 73 Tex. 542, 11 S. W. 626.

A bond was taken from the sheriff in a penalty exceeding that required by statute. Without deciding whether the bond was good as a statutory bond or not, it was held that an action at common law could be maintained upon it. Johnson v. Gwathney (1810) 2 Bibb. (Ky.) 186, 4 Am. Dec. 694.

A forthcoming bond fixing the day of sale at a wrong date was held not to be a good statutory bond, but it was held valid as a common-law bond. Adler v. Green (1881) 18 W. Va. 201. L.R.A.1917B.

And a substantial variance in form was held not to render void as a statutory obligation a bond to deliver goods for execution. It was held to be good at common law. Claassen v. Shaw (1836) 5 Watts. (Pa.) 468, 30 Am. Dec. 338.

And where the statute required a nine-months bond, and one was given for six months, it was held not to be a statute bond, but to be good at common law. Hathaway v. Crosby (1840) 17 Me. 448.

A bond to obtain discharge from arrest contained a condition to "pay any judgment that might be recovered." This was not in the statute. The bond was held to be a good common-law obligation. It was further held that a surrender to the sheriff would be no exoneration. Paddock v. Hume (1876) 6 Or. 82.

A bond to enjoin a judgment provided that it should be void on the judgment being set aside, or be valid and have full effect in case "the court should award the judgment for the whole amount or more, and confirm the former judgment." By the statute the obligors should covenant that, on the dissolution of the injunction, they will pay the sum complained of and all costs. It was held that a summary judgment could not be rendered against the sureties, but a judgment could be rendered against the principal. Janes v. Reynolds (1847) 2 Tex. 250.

An undertaking given on appeal was in the form to stay an execution on a money judgment. It was treated by both sides as a valid bond. It was held to be on a good consideration and valid as a common-law obligation. Goodwin v. Bunzl (1886) 102 N. Y. 224, 6 N. E. 399.

And an undertaking given under the wrong section of the statute, whereby a stay of proceedings was had pending an appeal, was held to be binding as a common-law obligation. Ryan v. Webb (1886) 39 Hun (N. Y.) 435.

In Bank of Northern Liberties v. Cresson (1825) 12 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 306, it was said: "The inclination of my mind is, that where a statute gives a particular form, makes it the duty of officers to take a bond in that form, and there is another form which is to produce the same effect, this changes not the obligation required, though it differ in circumstances, in sum, in the number of sureties, and the nature of the security, and there is no provision in the act declaring it to be void unless the prescribed form is pursued. It is a valid obligation at the common law." Common law, see: United States v. Brown (1830) Gilpin, 155, Fed. Cas. No. 14,663, 1. a; Ware v. Jackson (1844) 24 Me. 166, 1. e; Edwards v. Pomeroy (1885) 8 Colo. 254, 6 Pac. 829, VI.

See Kuhl v. Chamberlain, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 766, note, "May a bond of a public official, intended as a statutory bond, but not binding as such, be enforced as a common-law bond."

See Denver v. Hindry, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1028, note, "Implied power to incorporate in contract for public work, or in contractor's bond, a requirement that the contractor shall pay laborers and materialmen."

See Smith v. Bowman, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 889, note, "Liability of sureties on contractor's bonds to laborers or materialmen not entitled to a lien, when bond conditioned against liens or claims."

Bonds to wrong payee, bonds for less than statutory requirement, are not intended to be included in this note.

I. T.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, SIXTH CIRCUIT.

TOWN OF NEWBERN et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

NATIONAL BANK OF BARNESVILLE,
OHIO.

(234 Fed. 209.)

Courts — state decision — effect in Federal court.

1. Upon the question whether or not municipal bonds are invalid in the hands of bona fide holders because of a mistake as to the proper official to hold the election authorizing them, the Federal courts are

Note. — The questions of state law as to which the decisions of the highest state court must be followed in actions originating in, or removed to, the Federal courts, are treated generally in the note to Snare & T. Co. v. Friedman, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) 380; and see generally pages 407 et seq., as to questions relating to municipal or county bonds.

The question as to the estoppel of a public corporation to deny the validity of bonds is discussed in the note appended to Aurora v. Gates, L.R.A.1915A, 916; and the question as to the ratification by a public corporation of an invalid contract, in the note appended to Weil v. Newbern, L.R.A.1915A, 1023; and in a note in the same volume, page 990, appended to First Nat. Bank v. Emmetsburg, the question is dealt with as to the estoppel of a public corporation to deny the validity of a contract. Upon the general question as to the rights and remedies where contracts, bonds, or other instruments of a public corporation are invalid, see note in the same volume, page 904, appended to Hagerman v. Hagerman.

In the note appended to Aurora v. Gates, it is stated that "in order that the general rule of estoppel of public corporations by recital shall apply, not only must the holder of the bonds be a purchaser without actual or constructive notice of the untruthfulness of the recitals, but the recitals must relate to facts with reference to which the officers making them are expressly or impliedly authorized to pass upon. There L.R.A.1917B.

not bound by a decision of the state court rendered after the bonds passed into the hands of such holders.

For other cases, see Courts, V. f, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Bonds — municipal — duty of purchaser to consult ordinances.

2. Purchasers of municipal bonds signed by the mayor and clerk under the corporate seal, which recite that they are issued in accordance with a certain ordinance from which the mayor and clerk derived their authority to sign them, whereas the statute authorizes their issuance by the mayor and aldermen, are not bound to consult the ordinance to ascertain the authority of the mayor and clerk so as to be charged with must be authority vested in the officers issuing the bonds to determine each fact necessary to the existence of the power, whether enumerated or not, and to guarantee to those dealing with them the truth and conclusiveness of their admission." p. 938.

While this doctrine is sustained in Weil v. Newbern, it is not departed from in NEWBERN v. NATIONAL BANK. The point of cleavage between these two cases, one of which holds the municipality estopped, and the other that it is not estopped, to assert the invalidity of the bonds, is as to the effect of an ordinance delegating power to the mayor to sign the bonds as notice of the fact therein disclosed that the election authorizing the bonds had not been held according to law. The state court held on this point that since the authority of the mayor to issue the bonds depended upon an ordinance, a purchaser was obliged to have recourse to this ordinance, and hence he was chargeable with knowledge of the fact therein disclosed that the election had not been held in the manner required by law. The Federal court, on the other hand, held that a bona fide purchaser without actual notice of this defect in the bond was not chargeable with knowledge of the facts disclosed by the ordinance, and that the municipality was estopped by the recitals contained in the bonds to the effect that the election was properly held.

A. G. S.

a recital therein showing that the election by which their issuance was authorized was held by an unauthorized official.

For other cases, see Bonds, III. b, 5, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — change of prescribed form — effect.

3. The addition to the form fixed by ordinance for municipal bonds, of a statement of the bank at which they will be paid, and of a recital that they do not exceed the debt limit of the municipality and that provision has been made for the levying of a tax to pay them, is not such a material change as to destroy their validity.

For other cases, see Bonds, III. b, 4, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — want of delivery — effect.

4. Lack of authority for the delivery of the bonds of a municipal corporation to persons who subsequently place them on the market is no defense to their enforcement under the provisions of the negotiable instrument act that in the hands of a bona fide holder valid delivery by all prior parties is conclusively presumed.

For other cases, see Bonds, III. b, 8, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Estoppel — to deny validity of bond.

5. A municipal corporation is estopped to deny the recitals of its bonds issued under its seal and signed by its mayor and clerk.

For other cases, see Bonds, III. b, 6, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(June 30, 1916.)

ERROR to the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Tennessee, McCall, District Judge, to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover interest alleged to have accrued on certain bonds of the defendant town. Affirmed.

Statement by Warrington, Circuit Judge:

The suit below was to recover judgment for interest alleged to have accrued on certain bonds of the town of Newbern, a municipal corporation located in Dyer county, Tennessee. The town was empowered in 1907 to issue $50,000 of coupon bonds for municipal improvements, as follows, $25,000 par value to erect and furnish school buildings, $10,000 to improve and extend water and light system, and $15,000 to improve streets. The bonds are all outstanding, and the town received the money arising from the sale of the water and light and street bonds, though it has received no money for the school bonds. The town pays the interest as it accrues on the water, light, and street bonds, but it declines to pay anything on account of school bonds. The interest now sought to be recovered is L.R.A.1917B.

represented by 131 past-due coupons, for $30 each, which have been cut from certain of the school bonds. The declaration sets out the statute investing the town with power to issue the bonds, alleges the steps taken, including the adoption of certain ordinances by the town, and also the vote of a majority of the qualified voters of the town, authorizing the issue and sale of the bonds, plaintiff's possession as bona fide owner and holder for value of the coupons sued on, which are specifically described by this numbers and by the numbers of the bonds from which they were detached, and prays judgment upon such coupons with interest from their respective dates of maturity. To this declaration the defendants interpose three pleas: (1) That they did not "promise, undertake, or agree in the manner and form as the plaintiff in its declaration has complained;" (2) that they do not "owe the said sums of money demanded, or any part thereof, in manner and form as the plaintiff in its declaration has complained;" (3) that the coupons and writings obligatory mentioned in the declaration are not defendants' "act or deed, . . . and were not executed for or in their behalf by any person authorized to bind them or either of them in the premises," and that they demand a jury to try the issues joined. Upon these pleas plaintiff joined issue. At the close of all the evidence the parties each moved for a peremptory instruction in its favor. The court treated such joint submission as a withdrawal of the case from the jury, and, upon consideration, found all the issues in favor of the plaintiff, distinctly finding that plaintiff is the owner of the coupons "for value in due course," and judgment was accordingly entered for plaintiff. Defendants prosecute error upon twelve assignments, and these assignments are considered in the opinion as far as necessary.

Argued before Warrington and Denison, Circuit Judges, and Cochran, District Judge.

Messrs. John M. Drane and Gates & Martin, for plaintiffs in error:

No general authority or power existed in the mayor and aldermen of Newbern, or in the mayor and the clerk, to execute, issue, and deliver negotiable bonds.

Weil v. Newbern, 126 Tenn. 223, L.R.A. 1915A, 1009, 148 S. W. 680, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 25; Simkins, Fed. Eq. Suit, 229; Swift v. Tyson, 16 Pet. 1, 10 L. ed. 865; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 37 L. ed. 772, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 914; Brooklyn City & N. R. Co. v. National Bank, 102 U. S. 14, 29, 26 L. ed. 61, 67; Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U. S. 425, 30

L. ed. 178, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1121; Harrison v. Remington Paper Co. 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 954, 72 C. C. A. 406, 140 Fed. 385, 5 Ann. Cas. 314; Maiorano v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 213 U. S. 268, 53 L. ed. 792, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 424; Lewis v. Herrera, 208 U. S. 309, 52 L. ed. 506, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 412; Gatewood v. North Carolina, 203 U. S. 531, 51 L. ed. 305, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 167; Armour Packing Co. v. Lacy, 200 U. S. 226, 50 L. ed. 451, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 232; Smiley v. Kansas, 196 U. S. 447, 49 L. ed. 546, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 280; Zeiger v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 86 C. C. A. 69, 158 Fed. 809; Cheatham v. Evans, 87 C. C. A. 576, 160 Fed. 802; Brown v. Grand Rapids Parlor Furniture Co. 22 L.R.A. 817, 7 C. C. A. 225, 16 U. S. App. 221, 58 Fed. 286.

Plaintiff and those who purchased the bonds, even though purchasers thereof in good faith and for value, nevertheless took with notice of the fact that there had been no valid election, which was a condition precedent to the right of the mayor and aldermen to proceed under the statute to issue bonds or of the mayor and clerk to sign same, and, therefore, that the supposed bonds are not valid obligations of the town of Newbern.

Weil v. Newbern, 126 Tenn. 223, L.R.A. 1915A, 1009, 148 S. W. 680, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 25; Rondot v. Rogers Twp. 30 C. C. A. 462, 99 Fed. 202; Andes v. Ely, 158 U. S. 312, 39 L. ed. 996, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 954; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 926; McQuillin, Mun. Corp. § 2288; Coler v. Cleburne, 131 U. S. 162, 33 L. ed. 146, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 720; Anthony v. Jasper County, 101 U. S. 693, 25 L. ed. 1005; Floyd Acceptances (Pierce v. United States) 7 Wall. 666, 19 L. ed. 169; Dixon County v. Field, 111 U. S. 83, 28 L. ed. 360, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 315; Northern Nat. Bank v. Porter Twp. 110 U. S. 608, 28 L. ed. 258, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 254; Bernard Twp. v. Morrison, 133 U. S. 523, 527, 528, 33 L. ed. 726, 729, 730, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 338; Montclair Twp. v. Ramsdell, 107 U. S. 147, 158, 27 L. ed. 431, 434, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 391; Wade, Notice, §§ 308, 309, 313; Guion v. Knapp, 6 Paige, 35, 29 Am. Dec. 741; Stidham v. Matthews, 29 Ark. 650; Baker v. Mather, 25 Mich. 51; Burrus v. Roullhae, 2 Bush, 39; Payne v. Abercrombie, 10 Heisk. 161; Willis v. Gay, 48 Tex. 463, 26 Am. Rep. 328; Blaisdell v. Stevens, 16 Vt. 179; White v. Foster, 102 Mass. 375; Johnson v. Thweatt, 18 Ala. 741; Boggs v. Varner, 6 Watts & S. 469; French v. Loyal Co. 5 Leigh, 627; Sergeant v. Ingersoll, 15 Pa. 343; Corbitt v. Clenny, 52 Ala. 480; Honore v. Blakewell, 6 B. Mon. 67, 43 Am. Dec. 147; Thornton v. Knox, 6 B. Mon. 74; Deason v. Taylor, 53 Miss. 697; Gress v. L.R.A.1917B.

Evans, 1 Dak. 387, 46 N. W. 1132; Wood v. Krebs, 30 Gratt. 708.

Municipal bonds, signed and sealed by proper authority, but issued and delivered without the authority of the municipality, are void even in the hands of a bona fide holder.

2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 933; Merchants' Exch. Nat. Bank v. Bergen County, 115 U. S. 390, 29 L. ed. 431, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 88; Portsmouth Sav. Bank v. Ashley, 91 Mich. 670, 30 Am. St. Rep. 511, 52 N. W. 74.

The acts of any of the aldermen individually, though such individuals may constitute a majority of the board, are not the act and deed of the corporation.

Bernard v. Lea, 127 C. C. A. 219, 210 Fed. 583; Cook, Corp. 6th ed. 2254; Tradesmen Pub. Co. v. Knoxville Car Wheel Co. 95 Tenn. 634, 31 L.R.A. 593, 49 Am. St. Rep. 934, 32 S. W. 1097.

In the bond as executed by Harris and Swindler there were material departures from the conditions prescribed in the ordinance of April 19, 1907, which will prevent recovery.

Holmes v. Bank of Ft. Gaines, 120 Ala. 493, 24 So. 959; Fahlman v. Taylor, 75 Ill. 629; Adair v. Egland, 58 Iowa, 314, 12 N. W. 277; Horton v. Horton, 71 Iowa, 448, 32 N. W. 452; Charlton v. Reed, 61 Iowa, 166, 47 Am. Rep. 808, 16 N. W. 64; Diamond Distilleries Co. v. Gott, 137 Ky. 585, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 643, 126 S. W. 181; Woodworth v. Bank of America, 19 Johns. 391, 10 Am. Dec. 239, reversing 18 Johns. 315; Nazro v. Fuller, 24 Wend. 374; Sturges v. Williams, 9 Ohio St. 444, 75 Am. Dec. 473; Simpson v. Stackhouse, 9 Pa. 186, 49 Am. Dec. 554; Southwark Bank v. Gross, 35 Pa. 80; Mitchell v. Reed, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 683, 106 S. W. 833; Melton v. Pensacola Bank & T. Co. 111 C. C. A. 166, 190 Fed. 126.

Ratification of the issuance of the supposed school bonds cannot be implied or inferred from the payment by the town of Newbern of interest on the water and light bonds and street bonds.

Weil v. Newbern, 126 Tenn. 223, L.R.A. 1915A, 1009, 148 S. W. 680, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 25; State v. Knoxville, 115 Tenn. 175, 90 S. W. 289; Louisiana v. Wood, 102 U. S. 294, 26 L. ed. 153; Chapman v. Douglas County, 107 U. S. 348, 27 L. ed. 378, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 62; Morville v. American Tract Soc. 123 Mass. 129, 25 Am. Rep. 40; Marsh v. Fulton County, 10 Wall. 676, 683, 19 L. ed. 1040, 1042; Bloomfield v. Charter Oak Nat. Bank, 121 U. S. 121, 30 L. ed. 923, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 865; Daviess County v. Dickinson, 117 U. S. 657, 29 L. ed. 1026, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 897; Norton v.

Shelby County, 118 U. S. 425, 30 L. ed. 178, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1121.

Mr. William R. Collins for defendant in error.

Warrington, Circuit Judge delivered the opinion of the court:

We are called upon to determine which of two innocent parties shall suffer a material loss, and their rights must depend upon the application of principles which in effect may engender more serious losses than are presently involved; the performance of such a duty is, to say the least, perplexing; and this is emphasized by the fact that our conclusion is not in harmony with that reached by the supreme court of Tennessee concerning interest coupons similar to those in issue here. Weil v. Newbern, 126 Tenn. 223, L.R.A.1915A, 1009, 148 S. W. 680, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 25.

What considerations must enter into the question whether the coupons in suit are binding obligations of the town of Newbern? It is manifest that the binding effect of the bonds to which the coupons in dispute belong must be considered, although the bonds themselves are not in suit. Concededly, the statutes incorporating the town in question under the name of "Mayor and Aldermen of Newbern," and enabling the corporation to issue these bonds, are constitutionally valid enactments; and, apart from a question made upon the election at which the electors of Newbern voted upon the issuing of such bonds, the ordinances relating to the issue and sale of the bonds are admittedly valid. The facts that the bonds comprised in the entire authorized issue ($50,000 par value) are outstanding, that the interest accruing on one half of such issue (though not including the school bonds) is regularly paid by the town, that all the bonds (thirteen in number) with the coupons in suit attached thereto were acquired by the plaintiff bank and others through loans and purchases made before maturity of any of such coupons, in good faith and for value, without notice of any defect in respect either of issue or delivery thereof, and that plaintiff subsequently obtained the rights of these former holders in such of these coupons as it had not previously acquired, are not under the evidence open to substantial denial. The school bonds mentioned each bears date September 1, 1907, and contains a promise "to pay to bearer the sum of 1,000 . . . on the first day of September, A. D. 1927, together with interest on said sum from the date hereof, until paid, at the rate of 6 per centum per annum, payable semiannually on the first days of March and September in each year, upon L.R.A.1917B.

presentation and surrender of the interest coupons hereto attached, as they severally become due. Both principal and interest are payable at the Hanover National Bank, in the city of New York, . . . and for the prompt payment of this bond . . . the full faith, credit, and revenues of said town are hereby irrevocably pledged."

And each bond also contains recitals which state that it "is one of a series of twenty-five bonds, of like date and tenor, aggregating $25,000 issued by the mayor and aldermen of Newbern for the purpose of erecting and furnishing a school building in and for the town of Newbern, pursuant to and in full compliance with the provisions of an act of the general assembly of the state of Tennessee," giving its title and date, "and as ordered by a vote of a majority of all the qualified voters of the town of Newbern, at an election duly and legally held by order of the board of mayor and aldermen of said town," on a date named, "and under and in accordance with an ordinance duly passed" by that board "at a meeting thereof, duly and regularly called and held" on a named date.

It is also certified and recited: "That all acts, conditions, and things required to be done precedent to and in the issue of this bond have been properly done, happened, and been performed in regular and due form as required by law."

Each bond is signed by the mayor, countersigned by the clerk, and attested by the seal of the town of Newbern, and such execution purports to have been directed by the board of mayor and aldermen.

It is practically admitted that if the bonds had been signed by the mayor and aldermen, the recitals mentioned would have estopped the town of Newbern from denying the validity of either the bonds or coupons. It is insisted, however, that since only the mayor and the clerk signed the bonds, while the mayor and aldermen were the officers authorized to issue them, every purchaser was bound at his peril to examine into the authority of the mayor and clerk to execute the bonds; and that this would have led to the discovery of an infirmity which justifies the pleas of non assumpsit, nil debet, and non est factum, relied on. The mayor and clerk appear to have been empowered by two different ordinances to execute the bonds. The first one was passed April 19, 1907, "to provide for the issuance of $50,000 in coupon bonds." The third paragraph of the ordinance provides that "the bonds so to be issued shall be signed by the mayor and clerk of said board of mayor and aldermen." The second ordinance was passed August 17, 1907, to fix "the form and date of the $25,000 school bonds, $15,000 street bonds, and $10,000 water and light bonds." The form of the school bonds and that of the school coupons are set out, and the testament clause of the former is as follows: "In testimony whereof, the said mayor and aldermen of Newbern have caused this bond to be signed by the mayor and countersigned by the clerk of said board of mayor and aldermen, with the corporate seal attached, this third day of September, A. D. 1907."

And the name and official title of the mayor, and similarly of the clerk as countersigning, are printed immediately under the testament clause and also at the end of the form of the coupon. The first of these ordinances, however, is the one containing the provision which it is claimed would inform an intending purchaser, not alone of the authority of the mayor and clerk to execute the bonds, but also of the facts relied on to invalidate the bonds. It is stated in the preamble of that ordinance: "The election heretofore ordered by the mayor and aldermen of Newbern to be held to ascertain the will of the qualified voters of the town of Newbern . . . as to whether or not the mayor and aldermen should issue the fifty thousand dollar (s) in coupon bonds as provided for in the acts of the general assembly . . . passed March 13, 1907 . . . was held on the 16th day of April, and resulted in showing that a majority of all qualified voters in said town favored the issuance of bonds as provided for in said acts of the general assembly, the result of said election having been duly and regularly certified by the sheriff of Dyer county . . . under whose supervision the said election was held. . . ."

It is claimed that the sheriff was not the authorized official to supervise and certify to the result of this election, and that the presence of the names of the mayor and clerk on the bonds put intending purchasers upon inquiry as to the validity alike of the election and the bonds. This view is sustained in Weil v. Newbern, supra, 126 Tenn., at pages 257, 265, and indeed it was there held that the statement contained in the ordinance that the election was held by the sheriff "gave plenary information that it was a void election, and that the board of mayor and aldermen of Newbern had no power to issue the bonds. There could therefore be no innocent purchaser or holder of such bonds." This was the result of the court's construction of certain statutes of Tennessee which appear in the record. One was passed February 10, 1897 (Tenn. Acts 1897, p. 131), and its purpose is indicated by its title:

"An Act to Secure Pure Elections by L.R.A.1917B.

Creating Boards of Commissioners of Election in Counties Having a Population of Less Than 50,000 Inhabitants, Computed by the Federal Census of 1890, and any Subsequent Federal Census, and Defining the Duties and Powers Thereof."

While the operation of this statute was limited to a particular class of counties, it is clear that it was applicable to all counties of the state, regardless of the number, falling within the class specified, and so was in that sense a general rather than a special law. Commissioners were to be appointed by the governor for every county, and were to comprise in each county "a board of three persons to be known as the commissioners of election." The commissioners of each county were required "within sixty days prior to every election to be held in their county, and in due time therefor, to appoint three judges for each and every voting place in their county, to superintend the election at the precinct or voting place for which said judges shall be appointed," and also within such time to appoint two clerks of election for each of such voting places. The commissioners were further authorized to appoint "the officer or officers of election at each voting place to the exclusion of the sheriff" theretofore "possessing said power of appointment." Further, "the county courts, mayor, boards of mayor and aldermen, and sheriffs of and in the said counties within the provisions of this act" were "devested of the authority to appoint judges or inspectors and clerks of elections," and all statutes vesting such officials with such power of appointment, which were inconsistent with this provision, were repealed. The officer holding an election was required to deliver the returns to the commissioners, who were to compile the returns at the courthouse, and certify the result and also "to deliver to each person elected a certificate of his election." It is agreed that the census population of Dyer county was at the time now in question less than 50,000.

Now, conceding that this statute, considered alone, would in terms embrace an election, not merely for the selection of local officers, but also for ascertaining the will of the electors concerning any question arising in a political subdivision of any county of the class erected by this statute, still (in view of the Newbern charter subsequently enacted), the concession is not determinative of the question whether the statute was exclusively applicable, or even applicable at all, to the election here in dispute. It was more than four years after that statute was enacted that the town of Newbern was incorporated.

The charter was granted on April 11, 1901, and was entitled, "A bill to Incorporate the Town of Newbern, in Dyer County, and to Define its Powers and Provide for the Election of Officers." (Tenn. Acts 1901, p. 1076), the corporate name being, as we have seen, the "Mayor and Aldermen of Newbern." The act describes the boundaries of the corporation, provides for succession, and invests the corporate body with the usual attributes and powers of a municipality. Section 6 of the act is in material part as follows (id. p. 1081): "Sec. 6, Be it further enacted, that the sheriff of Dyer county, after giving ten days' notice, shall by himself or one of his deputies hold an election in the town of Newbern on the third Tuesday of November, 1901, and said election shall be held for the purpose of electing mayor, aldermen, recorder, marshal, and the mayor, aldermen, recorder, and marshal elected at said time shall serve for two years. And thereafter, on the third Tuesday of November, there shall be an election held for the purpose of electing a mayor, aldermen, recorder, and marshal for said town to serve for the ensuing two years, it being the intention of this act to provide for the election of a mayor, aldermen, recorder, and marshal of said town one in every two years. The polls shall be open at 10 o'clock A. M., and closed at 4 o'clock P. M., of that day. The board of mayor and aldermen may, by ordinance, make any additional provisions that may be found necessary to prepare for and conduct said election, if the sheriff fail to hold said election at the time herein mentioned. It shall be his duty to hold it as soon thereafter as possible, giving the required notice. If there be no sheriff, or if no notice has been posted by him on the tenth day before the regular election, or if notices have been posted by him but he is not present himself or deputy on the day of said election, then, in either of said events, the coroner, or some person who may be appointed by the board of mayor and aldermen, shall perform all the duties in and about said election required of the sheriff, . . . and the officers holding said election shall make out and deliver, within three days, to each a certificate of their election; and the judges and clerks, after being sworn as provided by the election laws of this state, shall perform similar duties of judges and clerks in state and county elections. And after the votes are counted and the results ascertained, the officers holding said election shall file poll lists and other papers showing the results of said election, properly certified, with the recorder, who shall preserve them."

Claim was made in Weil v. Newbern, L.R.A.1917B.

supra, that this section conferred upon the sheriff of Dyer county the power to conduct all corporate elections; but it was held (126 Tenn. 250, L.R.A.1915A, 1009, 148 S. W. 680, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 25) that while the section does purport to confer such power, it does so "only in a special and limited way; that is, for the purpose of electing a 'mayor, alderman, recorder, and marshal.'" It would seem that the result of this is to place all elections in which the town of Newbern is alone interested under the control of the sheriff, except such as call for an expression of the town electors upon questions involving their own indebtedness and ultimate taxation, like the issue of municipal bonds, to defray the cost of purely local improvements.

It is insisted both that this construction, and that the conclusion drawn from it that the bonds are void in the hands of bona fide purchasers, are binding upon the Federal courts. It is to be observed that the infirmity thus claimed to inhere in the bonds as a result of such a construction of the statute does not show that the electors did not in truth vote, and favorably, upon the question of issuing the bonds; nor does it show that the election in fact held was not officially supervised and reported under apparent color of law; indeed, the contention is reducible to a claim of mistake made in officials, that is, in having the sheriff instead of the commissioners of election, to supervise the election and report its result. We say the claim is simply one of mistake, because there is not a suggestion of fraud or even unfairness in so obtaining the expression, and the "order," of the voters respecting the issue and use of the bonds. Tenn. Acts 1907, p. 343, § 3.

How far then are the Federal courts bound by the decision in Weil v. Newbern? It is observable that the decision in that case was not rendered until after the presently contested bonds with their coupons had passed into the hands of bona fide holders for value, without notice of the defect in the election now asserted; and this court has held with reference to an analogous situation, that "the courts of the United States exercise an independent judgment." Rondot v. Rogers Twp. 39 C. C. A. 462, 470, 99 Fed. 202, 210, 211. This was an apparent recognition of one of the settled exceptions to the general rule that the Federal courts accept the interpretation of a state statute by the highest court of the state as settling the validity and meaning of the statute. It is manifest that the exception in that instance proceeded upon the principle that where a contract has been entered into in virtue of a state statute, a Federal court obtaining jurisdiction of a question concerning the validity, effect, or obligation of the contract, will exercise an independent judgment, although "leaning to an agreement with the state court," where it appears that the decision of the state court was rendered after the rights involved in the controversy originated. Louisville Trust Co. v. Cincinnati, 22 C. C. A. 334, 47 U. S. App. 36, 76 Fed. 296, 301 (C. C. A. 6th C.). The present case need not, however, be rested alone upon those decisions or the class they represent, for a question of general commercial law arises here which of itself calls for the independent judgment of the Federal courts. It is, of course, thoroughly settled and understood that upon questions of general law the decisions of the state courts are not controlling. Swift v. Tyson, 16 Pet. 1, 17, 10 L. ed. 865, 871; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 370, 37 L. ed. 772, 773, et seq., 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 914; Burgess v. Seligman, 107 U. S. 20, 33, 34, 27 L. ed. 359, 365, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 10. As Mr. Justice Harlan said in Presidio County v. Noel-Young Bond & Stock Co. 212 U. S. 58 at page 73, 53 L. ed. 402, 408, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 242: "In respect of the doctrines of commercial law and general jurisprudence the courts of the United States will exercise their own independent judgment, and in respect to such doctrines will not be controlled by decisions based upon local statutes or local usage, although, if the question is balanced with doubt, the courts of the United States, for the sake of harmony, 'will lean to an agreement of views with the state courts.'"

It might therefore be conceded for present purposes that the Federal courts must, regardless of their own opinions, yield to the ruling of the learned supreme court of Tennessee in Weil v. Newbern that the commissioners of election, and not the sheriff of the county, were the proper officials to conduct and report upon the election in question; but this concession would not require us to adopt the conclusion drawn from the ruling that the bonds are void in the hands of bona fide holders. Such a question as this was directly involved and decided in Pana v. Bowler, 107 U. S. 529, 27 L. ed. 424, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 704. It was there claimed that the township bonds in dispute had been sanctioned at an election conducted by a moderator chosen by the electors present, when it should have been presided over and the returns made by the supervisor, assessor, and collector of the township (107 U. S. 539); and it appears that the supreme court of Illinois had held that this defect in the proceeding rendered the bonds absolutely void. In the course of the opinion in the Pana Case it was said L.R.A.1917B.

(107 U. S. 540): "It is insisted that this court is bound to follow this decision of the supreme court of Illinois and hold the bonds in question void. We do not so understand our duty. Where the construction of a state Constitution or law has become settled by the decision of the state courts, the courts of the United States will, as a general rule, accept it as evidence of what the local law is. Thus, we may be required to yield against our own judgment to the proposition that, under the charter of the railway company, the election in this case, which was held under the supervision of a moderator chosen by the electors present was irregular and therefore void. But we are not bound to accept the inference drawn by the supreme court of Illinois, that in consequence of such irregularity in the election the bonds issued in pursuance of it by the officers of the township, which recite on their face that the election was held in accordance with the statute, are void in the hands of bona fide holders. This latter proposition is one which falls among the general principles and doctrines of commercial jurisprudence, upon which it is our duty to form an independent judgment, and in respect of which we are under no obligation to follow implicitly the conclusions of any other court, however learned or able it may be."

See also Marshall County v. Schenck, 5 Wall. 772, 774, 784, 18 L. ed. 556, 559; Oregon v. Jennings, 119 U. S. 74, 94, 30 L. ed. 323, 330, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 124.

It results that the Federal courts must exercise an independent judgment upon the question whether the town of Newbern is estopped to deny, as against the plaintiff, that these bonds were issued conformably, in all respects, with the recitals therein contained. It is admitted, and is to be borne in mind, that the town of Newbern was clothed with power to issue just such bonds as these upon the approval of a majority of its electors; that the town, through steps in fact taken by its board of mayor and aldermen and its electors, sought to exercise the power and to issue the bonds; and that the plaintiff is an innocent holder of the securities sued on, for value and without actual notice of any defect in the proceedings in virtue of which the bonds were put into circulation. We are therefore not concerned with a question that might arise in a case such as has in substance been suggested for illustrative purposes, where, either in the presence or in the absence of power to issue bonds, no steps are in fact taken by the appropriate municipal agencies to exercise such a power, the executive officers fraudulently, though formally, execute bonds and dispose of them in the name and under the pretended promise and recitals of the municipality. In the present case it is admitted, as we have seen, that estoppel could not be escaped if the bonds had been signed by the mayor and aldermen of Newbern; this admission was rightly made. Presidio County v. Noel-Young Bond & Stock Co. supra, 212 U. S. at pages 64, 65, 67, 53 L. ed. 404-406, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 237. The efforts made here to avoid estoppel are bottomed upon the fact that the authority of the mayor and clerk to execute the bonds does not appear in the statutes, but only in the ordinances, and consequently, that intending purchasers were bound at their peril to examine these ordinances. This does not question the genuineness of the signature of either of these officials; nor does it question the genuineness of the corporate seal which appears on the face of the bonds; indeed, it is not claimed that the bonds were not in truth signed and sealed by these officials; and, further, the record contains an admission "that the lithograph signatures on the coupons are lithographic facsimiles of the signatures" of the mayor and clerk. The natural inference arising from the presence of these virtually admitted official signatures and seal is that the officers acted with due authority; this is moreover the prima facie effect in an evidential sense; and in such cases the uniform course of decision in the Supreme Court of the United States has been to treat the signatures of the executive officers and the seal of a municipal corporation as importing authority so to execute the bonds, and this, too, where the authority of the signatory officers has not appeared in the statutes. Thus in Van Hostrup v. Madison, 1 Wall. 291, 297, 17 L. ed. 538, 539, Mr. Justice Nelson said: "Another objection taken is that the proviso requiring a petition of two thirds of the citizens who were freeholders of the city was not complied with. As we have seen, the bonds signed by the mayor and clerk of the city recite on the face of them that they were issued by virtue of an ordinance of the common council of the city, passed September 2, 1852. This concludes the city as to any irregularities that may have existed in carrying into execution the power granted to subscribe the stock and issue the bonds, as has been repeatedly held by this court."

In Hackett v. Ottawa, 99 U. S. 86, 95, 25 L. ed. 363, 365, it appears that the bonds in question contained recitals of their issue in virtue of the charter and certain specified ordinances of the city, but that the bonds had been executed by the mayor and the clerk and authenticated by the corporate seal; and in the course of the opinion Mr. L.R.A.1917B.

Justice Harlan said: "Such a representation by the constituted authorities of the city, under its corporate seal, would naturally avert suspicion of bad faith upon their part, and induce the purchaser to omit an examination of the ordinances themselves. It was, substantially, a declaration by the city, with the consent of a majority of its legal voters, that purchasers need not examine the ordinances, since their title indicated a loan for municipal purposes. The city is therefore estopped, by its own representations, to say, as against a bona fide holder of the bonds, that they were not issued or used for municipal or corporate purposes. It cannot now be heard, as against him, to dispute their validity. . . . It would be the grossest injustice, and in conflict with all the past utterances of this court, to permit the city, having power under some circumstances to issue negotiable securities, to escape liability upon the ground of the falsity of its own representations, made through official agents and under its corporate seal, as to the purposes with which these bonds were issued."

The ruling in that decision was followed, in respect of bonds similarly signed in Evansville v. Dennett, 161 U. S. 434, 435, 444, 40 L. ed. 760, 761, 764, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 613, and this is likewise true of the ruling made in Waite v. Santa Cruz, 184 U. S. 302, 304, 315 to 319, 46 L. ed. 552, 559, 563, 564, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 327. See also Meyer v. Muscatine, 1 Wall. 384, 388, 17 L. ed. 564; Lexington v. Butler, 14 Wall. 282, 295, 20 L. ed. 809, 812; Grand Chute v. Winegar, 15 Wall. 355, 358, 373, 21 L. ed. 170, 174; Johnson County v. Thayer, 94 U. S. 631, 632, 642, 24 L. ed. 133, 135, et seq.

Furthermore, Fairfield v. Royal Independent School Dist. 54 C. C. A. 342, 116 Fed. 838 (C. C. A. 8th C.), reviews and reverses the decision below, which is reported in (C. C.) 11 Fed. 453, 455, and where it appears that the president and secretary of the board of directors of the school district were authorized by resolution of the board to issue and deliver the bonds in dispute, and we do not discover that such authority otherwise existed. Judge Sanborn, in announcing the opinion of the circuit court of appeals, stated the question thus (54 C. C. A. 344, 116 Fed. 840): "Is a bona fide purchaser of municipal bonds which recite that they were issued in pursuance of a statute authorizing the municipality to issue them for a lawful purpose, and in conformity with an ordinance or a resolution of a specified date, which discloses the fact that they were issued for an unlawful purpose, charged with notice of the terms and contents of the ordinance or resolution?"

After stating that the question was not new, and commenting upon decisions there cited, the learned judge said (54 C. C. A. 347): "These decisions and opinions of the Supreme Court conclusively answer the question presented in this case, and render any independent discussion of it unnecessary and useless. They demonstrate the fact that, so far at least as the Federal courts are concerned, it is now the settled law of this country that a bona fide purchaser of municipal bonds which recite that they were issued in pursuance of a statute which authorize the municipality to send them forth for a lawful purpose, and which, also recite that they were issued in conformity with an ordinance or resolution whose date or title is specified in the recital, which, if read, would disclose the fact that they were issued for an unlawful purpose, is not charged with notice of the terms or contents of the ordinance or resolution, and the municipality cannot avail itself of the facts there disclosed to defeat its bonds."

It must be said that these decisions do not distinctly discuss the question whether the presence of the official signatures of corporate executive officers, accompanied by the corporate seal, puts purchasers on inquiry as to the authority of those officers; but if the decisions mean what they say, it is certain that an intending purchaser of the bonds now in dispute might safely have relied upon the bonds themselves both as to the verity of their recitals and the authority of the executing officers. To be specific, the intending purchaser was not required to look into the ordinance which is referred to in the recitals of the bonds in order to gain protection under a good faith purchase, without actual notice of the infirmity claimed in respect of the election. This, it may be remarked, would undoubtedly be true as to purchases of bonds of a private corporation, bearing the guaranty of a railway company whose president and secretary, under its seal, had executed the guaranty (Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Louisville Trust Co. 174 U. S. 552, 574, 575, 43 L. ed. 1081, 1001, 1002, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 817); though it is to be noted that while considering the rule applicable to private corporations and the decision in Royal British Bank v. Turquand (1856) 6 El. & Bl. 327, 110 Eng. Reprint, 886, 25 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 317, Mr. Justice Gray said: "And the justices of this court, while differing among themselves in the application of the principle to municipal bonds, have always treated Royal British Bank v. Turquand as well decided upon its facts"—citing among others the familiar case of Knox County v. Aspinwall, 21 How. 539, 545, 16 L. ed. 208, 210.

It is true that this would indicate that the learned justices had not always been in harmony as respects the application of the principle to municipal bonds; yet we do not find anything to modify the Supreme Court decisions before cited in that behalf.

We are not unmindful of what was said by this court in Rondot v. Rogers Twp. supra, 39 C. C. A. 462, 99 Fed. 212, to the effect that a purchaser accepting a township bond signed by the supervisor and treasurer of the township "ran the risk of the actual existence" of authority in such officers to execute the bonds; but it does not seem to have been claimed by the defendant in that case that an intending purchaser was required to examine any of the proceedings of the board for the purpose of ascertaining the existence or not of authority in the signing officers; on the contrary, evidence was offered on the question of whether a resolution vesting such authority was ever adopted. The precise question then with which we are now concerned does not seem to have arisen in that case; indeed, in view of the decisions of the Supreme Court above cited, we cannot think that it was intended in the Rondot Case to decide that if a resolution vesting authority had existed, it was necessary that it should have been examined prior to the purchase of a bond. It cannot be forgotten that one of the peculiar features of the instant case is that the defendant in effect admits the existence of authority in the mayor and clerk to execute the bonds, since it insists that if a purchaser had examined the ordinance he would have discovered this authority, as well as the fact that the vote was supervised by an officer subsequently held to have been without authority. Surely the Federal rule of decision pointed out shows that such a defense as this is not sufficient to discredit the present bonds.

It is claimed that the bonds are invalid because of certain changes that were made in their form, as fixed by ordinance. The form so fixed made the bonds payable in New York city, and before the bonds were executed the place of payment was made definite by the insertion of the name of the Hanover National Bank of that city. The other alteration complained of is an addition that was made at the end of the recitals before execution of the bonds, to the effect that the total debt of the town including the bonds in question did not exceed any limit of indebtedness prescribed by the laws of the state, and that provision for the levy of an annual tax sufficient to pay the principal and interest upon the bonds as they fall due had been made and would be duly levied upon all the taxable property in the town. We are not impressed with the contention that these changes amount to material alterations; neither could affect the identity of the contract or otherwise operate to the prejudice of the town. The first operated to the benefit and convenience of the maker of the bonds; and the other in no way changed the nature or the amount of the maker's obligation, and, moreover, the bond in its original form otherwise distinctly pledges "the full faith, credit, and revenues" of the town. These matters seem to us too plain to require citation of decisions, though we call attention to the following: As to the first insertion, Major v. Hansen, 2 Biss. 195, Fed. Cas. No. 8,982 by Judge Drummond; Shuler v. Gillette, 12 Hun, 278, 281; as to the second, Com. v. Emigrant Industrial Sav. Bank, 98 Mass. 16, 17, 93 Am. Dec. 126; Crawford v. Dexter, 5 Sawy. 201, 204, Fed. Cas. No. 3,368.

It is contended that the board of mayor and aldermen never authorized the mayor and clerk, or any one else, to deliver the bonds. It is fairly to be deduced from the evidence concerning the disposition made of the entire issue of bonds ($50,000), that they were sold and delivered through proper representatives of the town to Hays & Sons of Cleveland, Ohio; that Hays & Sons paid for eleven of the street, light, and water bonds, and returned to the town the remaining fourteen bonds of that issue, which were then sold to others, but that the school bonds were neither paid for nor returned. It is plain enough that the representatives of the town dealt with Hays & Sons on the theory that they were solvent; this was the mistake and the misfortune alike. So far as the record discloses, there is no suggestion of fraud in the transactions save only through charges made against Hays & Sons after discovery of the fact of their insolvency. The decisive point, however, is that the validity of the plaintiff's title to the securities here involved does not depend upon the transactions with Hays & Sons. We think the finding made by Judge McCall, to the effect that the plaintiff became the owner of the coupons in suit for value and in due course, is sustained by the evidence; every coupon sued on passed from the hands of Hays & Sons to bona fide holders, before maturity and for value, in transactions conducted in due course and without notice on the part of such holders of any of the defects now claimed and relied on respecting the issue and sale of the bonds. This alone brings the case well within the rule laid down in Cromwell v. Sac County, 96 U. S. 51, 52, 57, 59, 24 L. ed. 681, 686, 687, and it is to be observed that the bonds there in controversy were issued for the erection of a courthouse and were delivered to the contractor, but that "a courthouse was never constructed by L.R.A.1917B.

the contractor or any other person pursuant to the contract." Further, the uniform Negotiable Instruments Act existed as a law of Tennessee when these bonds were authorized and issued (Tenn. Acts 1899, p. 140), and § 16, p. 144, provides that where a negotiable instrument "is in the hands of a holder in due course, a valid delivery thereof by all parties prior to him, so as to make them liable to him, is conclusively presumed." Buzzell v. Tobin, 201 Mass. 1, 2, 86 N. E. 923; Massachusetts Nat. Bank v. Snow, 187 Mass. 159, 163, 164, 72 N. E. 959; Madden v. Gaston, 137 App. Div. 294, 296, 121 N. Y. Supp. 951; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. 6th ed. § 838.

We do not understand, in view of the motions made respectively by plaintiff and defendants for a directed verdict, that the action of the trial judge in treating the case as withdrawn from the jury and submitted to the court on both the facts and law is questioned; but if any of the assignments of error were so intended, they have not been argued and so must be regarded as waived.

Upon all these considerations, and with great deference to the learned Supreme Court of Tennessee, we hold that the defendant is estopped to deny the recitals contained in the bonds from which the coupons in issue were detached. An order will therefore be entered affirming the judgment, with costs.

Petition for writ of certiorari denied by the Supreme Court of the United States, October 23, 1916, 242 U. S. 634, 61 L. ed. —, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 18.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

MABEL WINTER PERKINS

v.

GEORGE EDWARD PERKINS.

(— Mass. —, 113 N. E. 841.)

Domicil — of deserted wife.

1. The domicil of an innocent wife does not follow her husband, who deserts her and removes to another state. For other cases, see Domicil, in Dig. 1-52 N. 8.

Divorce — jurisdiction — matrimonial domicil.

2. The marriage status for jurisdictional purposes in divorce proceedings remains in the state of its origin, where the husband deserts a wife innocent of matrimonial wrong in that state and goes into another state, where he establishes a domicile.

Note. — As to extraterritorial effect of decree of divorce rendered upon constructive service, see annotation following this case, post, 1032.

For other cases, see Divorce and Separation, II. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Judgment — full faith and credit — absence of jurisdiction.

3. A decree of divorce entered by the courts of a state other than that of the matrimonial domicile, in which plaintiff had established a domicile for himself without notice to the defendant, is not within the operation of the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution.

For other cases see, Judgment, IV. b, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Divorce — foreign — comity.

4. The courts of the matrimonial domicile, which is retained by a wife innocent of matrimonial wrong, who was deserted by her husband, will not recognize on the ground of comity a divorce secured by him in another state without notice to her.

For other cases see, Judgment, IV. b, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — statutory requirement.

5. A statute asserting jurisdiction to adjudicate upon the marriage status of those domiciled within the state for a specified time, even as to causes occurring outside its limits and against absent defendants, unless it appears that libellant came into the state for the purpose of securing a divorce, does not imply, as matter of comity, due recognition of a foreign decree against an innocent wife, which, without opportunity for her to be heard, destroyed her marriage status, although she continued to reside in the state which is the only matrimonial domicile of both parties.

For other cases see, Judgment, IV. b, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(October 17, 1916.)

EXCEPTIONS by libellee to rulings of the Superior Court for Middlesex County made during the trial of a libel filed for a divorce for desertion. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Elbridge R. Anderson, for libellee:

A divorce proceeding is an action in rem. Clark v. Clark, 191 Mass. 128, 77 N. E. 702; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 735, 24 L. ed. 573; Atherton v. Atherton, 181 U. S. 160, 45 L. ed. 797, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 544.

The domicile of the wife follows that of the husband, and his removal to the state of Georgia was a removal of the libellant to that state, and she was within its jurisdiction at the time of the institution of his proceedings in that court to obtain the divorce and at the time of the granting of the decree.

Clark v. Clark, 191 Mass. 128, 77 N. E. 702; Hood v. Hood, 11 Allen, 196, 87 Am. Dec. 709; Burtis v. Burtis, 161 Mass. 508, L.R.A.1917B.

37 N. E. 740; Greene v. Greene, 11 Pick. 409; Loker v. Gerald, 157 Mass. 43, 16 L.R.A. 497, 34 Am. St. Rep. 252, 31 N. E. 709.

The living apart, even with that intention, for less than three years, does not make a cause for divorce. So the fact whether libellee left intending not to return, or whether there was any reason on account of his act in leaving which made it obligatory upon libellant to live separate and apart from him, does not give her a domicile of her own in this commonwealth, he having removed to Georgia.

Hood v. Hood, 11 Allen, 196, 87 Am. Dec. 709; Kendrick v. Kendrick, 188 Mass. 560, 74 N. E. 598; Harteau v. Harteau, 14 Pick. 181, 25 Am. Dec. 372.

There was no delictum or cause of divorce as against libellee until after he was divorced from the libellant by the Georgia decree, and there was existing between them no marriage relation at the time of her attempted proceeding for a divorce in this commonwealth.

Clark v. Clark, 191 Mass. 128, 77 N. E. 702; Franklin v. Franklin, 154 Mass. 516, 13 L.R.A. 843, 26 Am. St. Rep. 266, 28 N. E. 681.

Where one has complied with all the laws in the state where his proceeding is brought, and has given the notice required by the court and exercised the best care that he can in the giving of the notice, such divorce decree is binding.

Joyner v. Joyner, 131 Ga. 217, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 647, 127 Am. St. Rep. 220, 62 S. E. 182; Loker v. Gerald, 157 Mass. 43, 16 L.R.A. 497, 34 Am. St. Rep. 252, 31 N. E. 709; Burtis v. Shannon, 115 Mass. 438.

Messrs. Fletcher Ranney and D. P. Ranney, for libellant:

The policy of Massachusetts as to divorces granted in other states is fixed by statute.

Atherton v. Atherton, 181 U. S. 155, 167, 45 L. ed. 794, 801, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 544; Haddock v. Haddock, 201 U. S. 562, 588, 50 L. ed. 867, 877, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 525, 5 Ann. Cas. 1.

Where the husband abandons or deserts the wife, leaves the matrimonial domicile, and goes to some other state, the wife acquires a separate domicile.

Haddock v. Haddock, 201 U. S. 562, 565, 570, 571, 50 L. ed. 867, 868, 870, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 525, 5 Ann. Cas. 1; Barber v. Barber, 21 How. 582, 595, 16 L. ed. 226, 230; Cheever v. Wilson, 9 Wall. 108, 123, 19 L. ed. 604, 608.

The desertion of the libellant by the libelles and his leaving this commonwealth constitute a delictum entitling the libellant to obtain a separate domicile in Massachusetts; and therefore the state of Georgia never obtained jurisdiction over her.

Cumington v. Belchertown, 149 Mass. 223, 4 L.R.A. 131, 21 N. E. 435; Kendrick v. Kendrick, 188 Mass. 550, 74 N. E. 598; Clark v. Clark, 191 Mass. 128, 77 N. E. 702; Haddock v. Haddock, 201 U. S. 562, 572, 50 L. ed. 867, 870, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 525, 5 Ann. Cas. 1.

Ruggs, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a libel filed in November, 1915, praying for divorce on the ground of desertion continued for three consecutive next preceding years. The libellee set up in answer a decree for divorce obtained by him in Georgia on October 5, 1914. The pertinent facts as found by the judge are that the libellant and libellee were married and lived in this commonwealth as their domicile until the summer of 1912, when he deserted the libellant without letting her know his place of abode, and she remained in ignorance on that point until his return to this state late in 1914. He left this commonwealth in good faith, and not for the purpose of obtaining a divorce, and became a citizen of Georgia. In that state, in conformity with its laws, he obtained a divorce on the ground of cruel and abusive treatment alleged to have been committed by the libellant. Although he complied with the Georgia laws in giving notice to his wife, she never received notice of the proceedings. He returned from Georgia to Massachusetts in October, 1914, and it may be assumed that personal service of the present libel was made upon him here. The judge found that the charge of desertion was proved, and ruled that the libellant was entitled to a divorce. The question presented is whether the Georgia divorce is a bar to the present libel.

The case is not within the terms of Rev. Laws, chap. 152, § 35.<sup>1</sup> The jurisdiction of any foreign court over the cause and the parties is open to investigation and decision by the court of the forum. Andrews v. Andrews, 176 Mass. 92, 94, 57 N. E. 333, s. c. 188 U. S. 14, 47 L. ed. 366, 23 Sup.

Ct. Rep. 237. The Georgia court did not have "jurisdiction of . . . both the parties." The wife was innocent of any marital wrong in 1912, when the husband deserted her without justifiable cause. Therefore her domicile did not follow that of the husband when he went to Georgia, but she legally was enabled to retain as her own, by reason of her continued residence here, the matrimonial domicile in this commonwealth. His desertion was a wrong against her marital rights and enabled her to keep the old domicile regardless of the fiction that the domicile of the wife commonly follows that of the husband. Shaw v. Shaw, 98 Mass. 158; Burtis v. Burtis, 161 Mass. 508, 37 N. E. 740; Bradford v. Worcester, 184 Mass. 557, 69 N. E. 310.

It has been held, also, that the Georgia court did not have jurisdiction of the cause. The marriage status was not "within the sweep of the judicial power of that court." Where the parties are married in one state and there establish a matrimonial domicile, a domicile which is retained by one spouse, who is innocent of any marital wrong, and which is abandoned by the other, who is guilty of marital wrong, then the courts of the state of the matrimonial domicile have "jurisdiction over the marriage relation, and the proper courts of that state" can "proceed to adjudicate respecting it upon grounds recognized by the laws of that state, although" the other spouse has left that jurisdiction, and can "not be reached by formal process." This proposition is declared in Thompson v. Thompson, 226 U. S. 551, 562, 57 L. ed. 347, 351, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 131, to be "clear . . . under the decision in the Atherton Case, 181 U. S. 155, 45 L. ed. 794, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 544, and the principles upon which it rests." Thus courts of the state of the matrimonial domicile, at the petition of one spouse retaining that domicile, and innocent of any marital wrong, stand upon firmer ground than the courts of any other state in respect of jurisdiction over the marriage status. See also Hood v. Hood, 11 Allen, 196, 87 Am. Dec. 709, and Burlen v. Shannon, 115 Mass. 438.

As the libellee did not go to Georgia for the purpose of obtaining a divorce, and as cruel and abusive treatment on which the divorce was granted is recognized as a cause by Rev. Laws, chap. 152, § 1, the Georgia divorce is not pronounced by said § 35 as of no force or effect in this commonwealth.

Since the case at bar is not within the terms of our statute requiring recognition or declaring the invalidity of foreign divorces, it must be decided on general principles.

The decree of the Georgia court is not entitled to recognition here under the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution. Haddock v. Haddock, 201 U. S. 562, 50 L. ed. 867, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 525, 5 Ann. Cas. 1. Whether recognition and effect shall be given to it by courts of this commonwealth depends upon principles of interstate comity. Such comity has been defined by Mr. Justice Gray in Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S. 113, 163, 164, 40 L. ed. 95, 108, 109, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 143, as "neither a matter of absolute obligation, on the one hand, nor of mere courtesy and good will, upon the other. But it is the recognition which one nation allows within its territory to the legislative, executive, or judicial acts of another nation, having due regard both to international duty and convenience, and to the rights of its own citizens or of other persons who are under the protection of its laws."

<sup>1</sup> "A divorce decreed in another state or country according to the laws thereof by a court having jurisdiction of the cause and of both parties, shall be valid and effectual in this commonwealth; but if an inhabitant of this commonwealth goes into another state or country to obtain a divorce for a cause which occurred here while the parties resided here, or for a cause which would not authorize a divorce by the laws of this commonwealth, a divorce so obtained shall be of no force or effect in this commonwealth." L.R.A.1917B.

The principle upon which judgments of foreign courts are accorded their full effect is that, where parties have once litigated fairly a dispute in the courts of any civilized country, the same question ought not to be tried anew by the courts of another jurisdiction. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 203 Mass. 159, 213, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) 314, 89 N. E. 193. That principle applies with diminishing force where the essential elements of valid litigation are not all present, and reaches almost a vanishing point where the hearing is ex parte and the subject matter of the litigation is not in an international sense within the jurisdiction of the foreign court. On the other hand, it is highly desirable that, as to a subject of such vital and far-reaching importance as the dissolution of the marriage relation, there should be uniformity of practice between the several states of the Union in the recognition of judgments of sister states. Assertions of jurisdiction by one state should so far as possible be the correlative of recognition of jurisdiction in other states.

The Federal Supreme Court, although without jurisdiction over the subject of divorce, is vested with power to declare with reference to it the principles by which interstate rights and obligations exist and will be enforced. If the principles so declared as to divorce are made a common basis for the exercise of interstate comity, there may be a closer approach to unity of decision among the several states. Two rules have been established. First: A decree of divorce by a court not having actual jurisdiction of both parties and of the subject does not come within the full faith and credit clause of the Constitution of the United States. Haddock v. Haddock, supra. Second: The state having jurisdiction of the matrimonial domicile and of one spouse, innocent according to the decision of the courts of that state of matrimonial wrong, has jurisdiction of the matrimonial status, and is clothed with power, after reasonable ex re notice, to enter judgments concerning it, which must be recognized by courts of the jurisdiction of the domicile of the other spouse. Atherton v. Atherton, supra; Thompson v. Thompson, 226 U. S. 551, 562, 57 L. ed. 347, 351, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 129. It follows from these Federal decisions that the courts of this commonwealth under the circumstances of this case have jurisdiction of the matrimonial status and of the parties. The libellant has remained domiciled in this commonwealth. She has been found, by the granting of the prayer of the libel, guilty of marital wrong. The libellee committed a wrong against her when he deserted her here. The act of desertion was the initiation of a course of conduct which ripened into a cause for divorce under our law after the lapse of three years. Rev. Laws chap. 152, § 1. Although the husband might have broken that course of conduct at any time by return to the full performance of his marriage obligation, he did not do so, but pursued it to the end. He gave to the libellant no actual notice of the pendency of the proceedings instituted by him in Georgia. She was ignorant of them and had in fact no opportunity to defend against them. If effect should be given to the Georgia divorce, the result would be that a marriage status established and maintained by wedding and cohabitation wholly in this commonwealth will be severed at the instance of a husband faithless to his marriage vows, he having removed from our jurisdiction and sought the interposition of the courts of another state without actual notice to or knowledge by his wife, and she, innocent of any wrong on her own part, having continued to be domiciled in this commonwealth. The libellant would find her marriage status destroyed and be without remedy for the wrongs committed against her. It would be an unseemly result if, under the conditions here disclosed, the husband could return to Massachusetts and establish here a new and lawful marriage relation directly in the face of a faithful wife whom he had deserted. Yet that result well might follow a recognition of the Georgia divorce. Due regard to the rights of our own citizens forbids the giving of such effect to a judgment of a court of a sister state, which, as we understand the decision of Thompson v. Thompson, 226 U. S. 551, 57 L. ed. 347, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 129, did not have jurisdiction of the marriage status, and which certainly acquired no jurisdiction over this libellant. In this connection the circumstance that the decree of divorce in the Georgia courts was granted before the present libel was filed is of no consequence.

This commonwealth, by the act of its legislative department, in Rev. Laws chap. 152, § 5, has asserted jurisdiction to adjudicate upon the marriage status of those domiciled here for five years, or for three years if both the parties were inhabitants here at the time of the marriage, even as to causes occurring outside this commonwealth and as against absent defendants, unless it appears that the libellant has removed here for the purpose of obtaining a divorce. This statute implied, as matter of comity, due recognition of similar assertion and exercise of jurisdiction by other states in the ordinary case, as far as they affect our citizens. But that does not extend to a case like the present, where, without actual chance for her to be heard, the foreign divorce destroys the marriage status of an innocent spouse faithful to her marriage obligations and continuously resident in this commonwealth, which is the only matrimonial domicile of both parties. In Joyner v. Joyner, 131 Ga. 217, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 647, 127 Am. St. Rep. 220, 62 S. E. 182; Gildersleeve v. Gildersleeve, 88 Conn.

689, 92 Atl. 684, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 920, and Felt v. Felt, 59 N. J. Eq. 606, 47 L.R.A. 546, 83 Am. St. Rep. 612, 45 Atl. 105, 49 Atl. 1071, which went far in giving effect as against their own citizens to divorces of other states on grounds of comity, it appeared that there was actual, as distinguished from constructive, notice to such residents of the pendency of the foreign divorce proceedings. That point is not now before us. So far as Toncray v. Toncray, 123 Tenn. 476, 483, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1106, 131 S. W. 977, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 284, and Howard v. Strode, 242 Mo. 210, 225, 146 S. W. 792, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1057, are inconsistent with the result here reached, they do not state the law of this commonwealth. The decision of Miller v. Miller, 89 Kan. 151, 130 Pac. 681, depended upon the express terms of a statute.

The conclusion here reached is in harmony with the greater number of cases in this country as reviewed and interpreted at length in Haddock v. Haddock, 201 U. S. 562, 50 L. ed. 867, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 525, 5 Ann. Cas. 1. See also Parker v. Parker, 137 C. C. 628, 222 Fed. 186. It follows that the libellee's requests for rulings all were denied rightly, and that the rulings made were correct.

Exceptions overruled.

Annotation—Extraterritorial effect of decree of divorce rendered upon constructive service.

This question is treated in the notes to Benton's Succession, 59 L.R.A. 162 et seq., and Joyner v. Joyner, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 647, to which the present note is merely supplementary.

The question under annotation presupposes that the statutory requirements as to constructive service were complied with, and that the service was sufficient if jurisdiction to grant a divorce entitled to recognition in other states can rest upon such character of service.

The question also presupposes that the plaintiff in the divorce suit had a bona fide domicile at the divorce forum. Lack of such a domicile is of itself, apart from the question of estoppel, fatal to the recognition of the decree in other states regardless of the mode of service (see notes in 59 L.R.A. 135, and 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1254).

The note is, moreover, confined to the extraterritorial effect of the divorce upon the marital status of the parties, and does not assume to deal distinctively with the practical consequences involved in the recognition or refusal to recognize the foreign decree. If the court L.R.A.1917B.

assumes that the particular ultimate question involved in the case necessarily depends upon the marital status of the parties as affected by the divorce decree, the point under discussion will be practically decisive of the case; but it is to be observed that an ultimate question which some courts will regard as necessarily dependent upon the marital status of the parties, other courts may regard as not necessarily dependent upon that status (see, for example, the notes in 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1106, and L.R.A.1915E, 421, on the effect of a divorce in one state upon an independent suit for alimony in another; and notes in 59 L.R.A. 181, and 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 219, on the effect of a foreign divorce upon dower). Nor is the present note concerned with the validity or effect of a judgment for alimony on constructive service (on that point, see note in 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 593).

Full faith and credit—in general.

The intolerable conditions which, as pointed out in the previous notes and in many other discussions of the subject, are necessarily inherent in any theory or doctrine which, without any difference of findings as to jurisdictional facts, concedes that a decree of divorce upon constructive service of process may be valid to dissolve the marital relation of the parties in the state where it was rendered and yet not come within the operation of the full faith and credit provision of the Federal Constitution, but will be dependent for its recognition, as affecting the status of the parties in other states, upon principles of comity, are recognized and vigorously reprobated in a concurring opinion by Laughlin, J., in Ransom v. Ransom (1908) 125 App. Div. 915, 109 N. Y. Supp. 1143, which affirmed a decree of divorce granted in New York, apparently not the matrimonial domicile of the parties, upon constructive service of process against a nonresident. He said: "It is high time that a movement was initiated in the legislatures or by the trial courts by which divorces shall not be granted excepting in those cases where the court can obtain such jurisdiction over the defendant that it must be recognized by every other state and territory in the land."

It would seem that there could be no doubt as to the propriety of this suggestion, although, as pointed out in the earlier notes, there does not appear to be any insuperable difficulty to the adoption by the United States Supreme Court, without the aid of a constitutional amendment, of a position that would remedy the condition which the learned justice deplures, and give to a decree of divorce rendered upon constructive service, upon a given state of facts, the same validity and effect as regards the status of the parties in all states that it has in the state in which it is rendered. This position, of course, would not interfere with the doctrine adopted by that court in Atherton v. Atherton (1901) 181 U. S. 155, 45 L. ed. 794, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 544, and Haddock v. Haddock (1906) 201 U. S. 562, 50 L. ed. 867, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 525, 5 Ann. Cas. 1, under which a decree of divorce rendered upon constructive service of process at the matrimonial domicile is entitled to recognition in other states under the full faith and credit provision, while decrees rendered in such circumstances in a state other than the matrimonial domicile, although the domicile of the plaintiff in the divorce suit, are not entitled to recognition under that constitutional provision. The adoption of this position would, however, involve the consequence that a divorce rendered upon constructive service of process under a state of facts which do not entitle it to recognition in other states under the "full faith and credit" provision would be invalid, even as affecting the status of the parties in the state where rendered; and, conversely, if rendered in such circumstances as validly to dissolve the marital relation in the state where rendered, it would, under the full faith and credit provision, have the same effect upon that relation in all other states. Apparently the only thing necessary to bring about such a result is for the United States Supreme Court to apply the same ultimate test of jurisdiction, viz., due process of law, whether the effect of the decree upon the status in the state where rendered or in another state is concerned, and whether the case comes before that court from the state in which the decree was granted or from another state in which it has been refused recognition.

Judge Laughlin's position is strongly approved in the opinion in Barber v. Barber (1915) 89 Misc. 519, 151 N. Y. Supp. 1064, also a domestic suit for divorce upon constructive service of process against a nonresident defendant. The court said in effect that, even upon the assumption that the plaintiff was domiciled in New York, the decree, if rendered, would be the same sort of a decree which the courts of New York have steadily and consistently refused to recognize in that state when granted in a foreign jurisdiction; and, in illustration of the unfortunate consequence inherent in such a decree, the court observed: "Should the plaintiff marry again in the state of New York, relying upon such a decree, she would be the wife of one man here; but once across the state line into Pennsylvania she would become the wife of another man. The children, if any, born of such second marriage, would be legitimate in New York, but they would become bastards as soon as they went out of the state and into Pennsylvania. She might still have children by her Pennsylvania husband, who would be legitimate everywhere except in the state of New York, but who would become bastards here. The wretched consequences of such a decree are infinite."

Upon the other hand, the Utah supreme court in State ex rel. Aldrich v. Morse (1906) 31 Utah, 213, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1127, 87 Pac. 705, having apparently disposed of the question of jurisdiction of a local court on constructive service of process in a divorce suit, upon the tacit assumption that it must be determined upon the principles laid down in the Haddock Case as to the conditions essential to entitle such a decree to recognition in other states under the full faith and credit provision,—has, in the recent case of Schafer v. District Ct. (1916) — Utah, —, 162 Pac. 618, apparently taken the position that the local court may take jurisdiction on constructive service regardless of the question whether the decree would be within that provision or not; and in this case it upheld the jurisdiction of the court of Utah to grant a divorce in favor of the husband, who had acquired a bona fide domicile in that state, upon service by publication and personal service out of the state upon the wife, who did not appear, although the parties were not married in Utah and apparently never lived together in that state.

That the conception that a divorce may be valid and effective to dissolve the marital relation in the state where granted, and still, because of the mode of service, have no effect upon that status in other states, is not, either from a practical or a theoretical point of view, abhorrent to all judicial minds, is also indicated by obiter dicta in the opinion of the vice chancellor in Lister v. Lister (1916) — N. J. Eq. —, 97 Atl. 170, where, after observing that the confusion of thought and consequent error on the subject had arisen from a failure to recognize the fact that each state absolutely controls the status of its domiciled citizens, he said: "There is nothing strange in the notion that a man may be a married man in one state and an unmarried man in another state. A woman in New Jersey may be recognized by all the governmental agents of that state as married to a man in Illinois, while the man in Illinois may be recognized by all the governmental agents of that state as not married to the woman in New Jersey, but as unmarried or as married to some other woman. Each state enforces its own view within its own territory with regard to the status of its residents who are permanently subject to its power."

This is a frank recognition and apparent justification of the existing condition in which the law on this subject has been left by the decisions of the United States Supreme Court. It is to be hoped, however, that that court will eventually, by the adoption of a uniform test of jurisdiction upon any given state of jurisdictional facts, remove this reproach from the law, and extend to decrees of divorce upon constructive service of process the same principles by which a judgment for money or a judgment directly affecting property rights, so far as it depends upon the sufficiency or insufficiency of constructive service of process, is either held valid in all states or invalid in all states, including the state in which it is rendered. The idea that a money judgment rendered upon a form of service that is not sufficient to bring it within the protection of the full faith and credit provision may yet be valid in the state where it is rendered has been again repudiated by the United States Supreme Court in Riverside & D. River Cotton Mills v. Menfee (1915) 237 U. S. 189, 59 L. ed. 910, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 579. It seems at least as important that one's marital status shall not change as one crosses state lines as that a judgment for money or a judgment affecting the title to a horse shall enjoy a uniform operation, or lack of operation, as the case may be, in all states.

There may be a practical as well as a theoretical justification for distinguishing between a decree of divorce upon constructive service rendered in the state of the matrimonial domicile and one rendered upon such service in a state other than the matrimonial domicile; but there is no practical justification in either case for holding that the same decree dissolves the marital relation in one state and not in another, and that, too, without any difference of finding as to jurisdictional facts.

Some theoretical justification for such a result may perhaps be found in the conception that the matrimonial status of the parties within the limits of a particular state, and within those limits only, may be a proper subject of jurisdiction; but this conception, doubtful even from a narrow theoretical point of view, is utterly impracticable and essentially immoral in view of the close relation between the states and the constant crossing and recrossing of state lines. There is no other decree which calls so loudly for uniform operation and effect, or lack of operation and effect, in all states, as does a decree of divorce, which, with the possible exception of a few other decrees affecting status, is the only one now beyond the operation of the principle that constructive service of process, if sufficient to sustain the validity of a decree in the state where rendered, is also sufficient to entitle it to recognition under the full faith and credit provision, and, conversely, if insufficient to bring a decree within the protection of that provision, is insufficient, under the due process of law provision, to sustain the validity of the decree even in the state where rendered.

The cases, however, must be considered from the point of view that has been actually adopted by the Federal supreme court, especially in the Atherton and Haddock Cases.

There are four distinct situations presented by the cases dealing with the recognition, under the full faith and credit provision, of a decree of divorce rendered in another state upon constructive service of process against one who was in fact a nonresident of the divorce forum:

(1) Where the decree was rendered in favor of the husband in the state where the parties were last living together in the marital relation;

(2) Where the decree was rendered in favor of the wife in the state where the parties were last living together in the marital relation;

(3) Where the decree was rendered in favor of the husband in a state to which he removed after the separation;

(4) Where the decree was rendered in favor of the wife in a state to which she removed after the separation.

In the first situation it is settled by the decision in the Atherton Case, and confirmed by the argument of the opinion in the Haddock Case, that the decree is entitled to recognition under the full faith and credit provision as affecting the status of the parties in other states, at least if it was rendered for a cause which negated the right of the wife to acquire a separate domicile. Indeed, upon this hypothesis, unless the fiction that a wife takes and retains the husband's domicile is to be disregarded where the parties have assumed an antagonistic attitude, as in a divorce suit, it may be questioned whether this result may not be reached upon principles applicable to suits strictly in personam, and without invoking the principles applicable to decrees in rem or quasi in rem, since, ex hypothesi, the wife not being justified in separating from the husband, the fiction applies, and, as pointed out in the note to Raher v. Raher, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 292, there is considerable authority, if not the weight of authority, for the view that a judgment strictly in personam, a money judgment even, may rest upon constructive service of process upon a defendant who is domiciled in, and legally a resident of, the state, notwithstanding the absence of such party from the state. But whatever may be the case where the cause of the divorce, or other circumstances negated the right of the wife to acquire a separate domicile, it is apparent that the principles applicable to decrees in personam will not suffice to sustain the jurisdiction if the wife was originally justified in separating from the husband so that she was entitled to acquire a separate domicile elsewhere and the divorce was rendered for her subsequent misconduct. Upon this hypothesis it seems necessary to invoke the principles applicable to decrees in rem or quasi in rem and also to adopt the broader of the two interpretations of the Atherton Case referred to in the note in 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 647, by which the "matrimonial domicile" may be regarded as remaining in the state where the parties were last living together in the marital relation and in which the plaintiff still retains a domicile, regardless of whether or not the defendant has procured a separate domicile elsewhere.

In the second situation, also, in order to bring the decree within the protection of the full faith and credit provision, it seems necessary to adopt the broader view of the Atherton Case just referred to, whether the wife was originally justified in separating from the husband or not, since there is no fiction by which the husband takes or retains the personal domicile of the wife even if the circumstances are such as to justify her in retaining a separating domicile.

In the third situation, it is clear under the doctrine of Haddock Case, that the decree is not within the full faith and credit provision if the separation was due to the husband's fault; but upon the assumption that the separation was due to the fault of the wife, there may be a question whether a court of the state in which the husband acquired a bona fide domicile after the separation may not, upon principles applicable to actions in personam, obtain jurisdiction to grant a divorce on constructive service of process against the absent wife, which will be entitled to recognition under the full faith and credit provision, since, ex hypothesi, by virtue of the fiction, the wife's domicile follows the husband's; and even if the jurisdiction cannot be sustained on principles applicable to judgments in personam, there may be a question whether, on this hypothesis the husband, not being at fault, may not carry the "matrimonial domicile" with him into the new state so as to confer jurisdiction upon a court of that state upon principles applicable to decrees in rem or quasi in rem. This view, however, extends the doctrine of the Atherton Case considerably beyond the actual facts in that case.

In the fourth situation, it is obvious that the wife is under a disadvantage compared with the husband in the third situation, if the jurisdiction is viewed from the point of view of the principles applicable to judgments in personam; but in the broadest view of the doctrine of the Atherton Case, the decree in favor of the wife may perhaps even in this situation, be entitled to recognition in other states under the full faith and credit provision, if she was not at fault respecting the separation, upon the theory that the spouse not at fault, whether husband or wife, may carry into the new state the matrimonial domicile, enabling a court of that state to take jurisdiction on constructive service by virtue of the principles applicable to proceedings in rem or quasi in rem. This view, however, as suggested in connection with the discussion of the third situation, extends the doctrine of the Atherton Case beyond the facts of that case. And some of the New York cases have refused to recognize the decree in favor of the wife, upon this hypothesis (see Ransom v. Ransom (1907) 54 Misc. 410, 104 N. Y. Supp. 198, affirmed in (1908) 125 App. Div. 915, 109 N. Y. Supp. 1143, set out in the note in 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) at page 652; and see also Berney v. Adriance (1913) 157 App. Div. 628, 142 N. Y. Supp. 748, infra). In some of the other cases the wife was at fault respecting the separation, so that, under the doctrine of the Haddock Case, it was clear that the decree in her favor was not entitled to recognition under the full faith and credit provision.

—divorce granted to husband in the state where parties were last living together in the marital relation.

Cases dealing with this situation, in addition to those cited herein, will be found in the earlier notes referred to at the beginning of this annotation.

The courts of the state which is the domicile of the husband and the only matrimonial domicile have jurisdiction to render a decree of divorce in his favor entitled, under the full faith and credit clause, to full faith and credit in the courts of the District of Columbia, although the wife has left the jurisdiction. L.R.A.1917B.

tion and can be served only by publication. Thompson v. Thompson (1913) 226 U. S. 551, 57 L. ed. 347, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 129. In this case a judgment of divorce on the ground of abandonment was granted to the husband in Virginia, which was the matrimonial domicile and the actual domicile of the husband. The wife had left Virginia and was served by publication only. The decision is upon the general ground that Virginia was the matrimonial domicile, and as such her courts had jurisdiction to grant the divorce in a proceeding in rem or quasi in rem. It does not appear whether or not the wife had actual knowledge of the pendency of the action, but that was obviously immaterial, as the decision that the court of the District of Columbia was bound to recognize and give effect to the judgment did not rest upon comity, but upon the full faith and credit provision.

In Benham v. Benham (1910) 69 Misc. 442, 125 N. Y. Supp. 923, a divorce granted to the husband in Vermont upon constructive service upon the wife, who abandoned him in that state and came to New York, where she was temporarily sojourning, was recognized as valid and binding on the parties, and as a bar to a subsequent action by the wife in New York for an absolute divorce after the husband had married again.

In Callahan v. Callahan (1909) 65 Misc. 172, 121 N. Y. Supp. 39, the court held that a divorce rendered in Ohio in favor of a husband upon constructive service upon the wife, who did not appear, was entitled to recognition in New York, it appearing that at the time of the separation the parties were domiciled in Ohio. The court interprets the Atherton Case to hold that the court of the matrimonial domicile, i. e., the state where the parties were last living together as husband and wife, has jurisdiction upon constructive service to grant a divorce that will be entitled to recognition in other states under the full faith and credit, even if the defendant has rightfully acquired a domicile in another state. There is no discussion in the Callahan Case as to whether or not the wife was justified in leaving the husband; and it would seem, in view of the position taken by the courts, that that matter was immaterial.

In Post v. Post (1911) 149 App. Div. 452, 133 N. Y. Supp. 1057, affirming (1911) 71 Misc. 44, 129 N. Y. Supp. 754, the court, while apparently interpreting the Atherton Case to make the power of a court of the state where the parties were domiciled at the time the wife left her husband, to grant a divorce to the husband upon constructive service, dependent, theoretically at least, upon whether or not she has acquired a separate domicile, declares that the determination by that court that the wife was not justified in leaving the husband is binding under the "full faith and credit" clause, and therefore negatives a separate domicile of the wife. Upon this theory it was held in this case that a divorce upon the ground of abandonment, obtained by the husband in Texas upon personal service upon the wife in Louisiana, who did not appear, was valid and binding in New York. The parties were married in Louisiana and after living in that state for some time moved to Texas and continued to live together there as husband and wife until the wife—"for a sufficient cause" according to a statement of facts at the beginning of the opinion—left the husband and returned to Louisiana. The court said in effect that it made no difference whether she intended to return to Texas or not; and continued: "It logically follows, therefore, that where a husband and wife have separated, and he sues for divorce in the state where he resides without personal service and without her appearing in the action, then the question whether the court obtains jurisdiction or not depends upon whether she has acquired a separate domicile, that is, whether she was or was not justified in separating from him. That in turn presents the further question whether without personal service upon her voluntary appearance the courts, of the state of his domicile can make a determination that she was not justified in leaving him, which will be binding upon her and entitled to recognition in all other states under the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution. . . . That question was settled by the Supreme Court of the United States (Atherton v. Atherton (1901) 181 U. S. 155, 45 L. ed. 794, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 544) when it held that where the husband remained in the state of the matrimonial domicile, the courts of that state had the power to determine under reasonable requirements as to notice, whether or not her absence was justifiable, and that such a determination is entitled to full faith and credit in other states." The action in the Post Case was to annul a marriage contracted in New York by the wife after the Texas divorce.

In Solomon v. Solomon (1913) 140 Ga. 379, 78 S. E. 1079, it is declared generally that a judgment of divorce based on L.R.A.1917B.

constructive service is not within the provisions of the Federal Constitution, and the statutes passed thereunder, requiring that full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other state; that such judgment based entirely on constructive notice, without actual notice or provision for the same to the nonresident defendant, may be collaterally attacked for fraud, citing Matthews v. Matthews (1912) 139 Ga. 123, 76 S. E. 855. This case is reported by syllabus only, and the facts do not appear. It is obvious that this statement is too broad, at least as applied to a case where the divorce is granted to the husband at the matrimonial domicile.

—divorce granted to wife in the state where parties were last living together in the marital relation.

See also cases cited in notes in 59 L.R.A. 162, and 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 647.

In Hall v. Hall (1910) 139 App. Div. 120, 123 N. Y. Supp. 1056, reversing (1910) 67 Misc. 267, 122 N. Y. Supp. 401, it was held to be the duty of the courts of New York, under the full faith and credit provision, to give effect to a decree of divorce on the ground of desertion, obtained by the wife in Colorado the only matrimonial domicile of the parties, upon constructive service of process upon the husband, who had become a nonresident. This decision clearly rests upon the broader view of the doctrine of the Atherton Case, and bases the right of the Colorado court to proceed in rem, and upon constructive service, and not upon any fiction that the defendant's domicile was in Colorado, but upon the principle that the matrimonial domicile in the sense of the last domicile of the parties while living together in the marital relation, was in Colorado.

In Parker v. Parker (1915) 137 C. C. A. 626, 222 Fed. 186, the court declares that it is well settled by Federal authorities that, when the wife is deserted by the husband without justification, the matrimonial domicile stays with her, the innocent party, and that she may in consequence acquire a new domicile, which may become, indeed, the matrimonial domicile. The divorce here, however, was obtained by the husband, who had deserted the wife, and not by the wife, who had been deserted. The case, therefore, did not present the question whether a wife who has been wrongfully abandoned and deserted by the husband may, either in the state of the last common matrimonial domicile or in another state where she may subsequently remove and acquire a domicile, obtain a divorce upon constructive service of process against the husband, which will be entitled to recognition in other states under the full faith and credit provision.

—divorce granted to husband in a state to which he removed after the separation.

See also cases cited in notes in 59 L.R.A. 162, and 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 647.

In Parker v. Parker (Fed.) supra, an action originating in a Federal court sitting in Texas, it was held that a decree of divorce on the ground of desertion, in favor of a husband in Missouri, where he had acquired a domicile, upon constructive service of process upon the wife, whom he had abandoned in California, the matrimonial domicile, was not within the full faith and credit clause, and would not be recognized in Texas as affecting the status of the wife. It appears in this case that the wife did not know of the pendency of the Missouri action until some time after the decree was rendered, although this is not commented upon in the opinion.

And the court in PERKINS v. PERKINS ante, 1028, refused to recognize a divorce in similar circumstances.

So, the New York rule refusing to recognize, either under the full faith and credit provision or upon principles of comity, a divorce rendered upon constructive service of process against a nonresident who did not appear, has been applied by refusing to recognize a decree rendered in favor of the husband in a state to which he went after abandoning the wife in New York, the last common matrimonial domicile. Gouch v. Gouch (1910) 69 Misc. 436, 127 N. Y. Supp. 476 (divorce granted upon the ground of desertion; wife had no knowledge of divorce; New York court granted a decree of divorce to the wife because of the husband's relation to a woman with whom he went through a marriage ceremony after the foreign divorce); Halter v. Van Camp (1909) 64 Misc. 366, 118 N. Y. Supp. 545 (divorce granted on the ground of adultery after husband had abandoned wife; held by the New York court that the wife and daughter of the second marriage of the husband had no interest in the real estate left by him in New York upon his death, and that the first wife had dower rights as his widow therein); Sterry v. Sterry (1913) 79 Misc. 355, 140 N. Y. Supp. 716 (ground of divorce and circumstances of separation do not appear; wife had no knowledge of the pendency of the divorce suit; the New York suit was by the wife for a separation from a man whom she subsequently married in New York; relief denied upon the ground that, the Illinois decree being void for want of jurisdiction, there was no legal marriage of the parties to the present action); Re Akin (1915) 89 Misc. 690, 152 N. Y. Supp. 310 (husband abandoned wife in New York; ground of divorce does not appear).

In Harry v. Dodge (1910) 66 Misc. 302, 123 N. Y. Supp. 37, Andrews, J., declared that in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the domicile of the wife will be presumed to be the domicile of the husband, so as to entitle a decree of divorce upon service, obtained by the husband in a state in which he was domiciled, but in which the parties had never lived together as husband and wife, to recognition. In this case, however, the court was of the opinion that evidence that the parties separated in New York implied the right of the wife to retain her domicile in New York, and therefore the divorce upon constructive service upon her was of no effect in New York.

And in Licht v. Licht (1914) 88 Misc. 107, 150 N. Y. Supp. 643, also, there having been a separation agreement before the removal of the husband to Nevada, where he procured the divorce, the court said that, by virtue of this agreement, the wife had a right to establish a domicile separate and apart from the husband; and that in such circumstances there can be no matrimonial domicile established by the husband alone.

The decision in Ackerman v. Ackerman (1908) 123 App. Div. 750, 108 N. Y. Supp. 534, cited in the note in 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 650, was affirmed by the court of appeals in (1910) 200 N. Y. 72, 93 N. E. 192, which observed that the conclusion that the Florida divorce was void as to the plaintiff in the New York suit was uncontested by defendant and was indubitable.

In People v. Shaw (1913) 259 Ill. 544, L.R.A.1915E, 87, 102 N. E. 1031, the Illinois court gave effect to the New York rule which refuses to recognize a divorce upon the ground of desertion, granted upon constructive service of process against a nonresident, by holding that a ceremonial marriage in New York of a woman against whom, while residing in New York, a divorce had been previously granted in California upon service by publication, without appearance, was invalid and would not support a prosecution in Illinois for bigamy against a party to the ceremony, who afterwards married another woman. The last common domicile of the parties to the divorce suit seems to have been in Illinois. The matrimonial domicile was never established in California where the divorce was granted.

In Bruguiere v. Bruguiere (1916) 172 Cal. 199, 155 Pac. 988, it was held that a divorce obtained by a husband in Nevada upon constructive service of process upon the wife who received no actual notice of the proceedings, was not binding upon the courts of California where the parties were domiciled up to the time that the husband went to Nevada, even assuming that he obtained a bona fide residence in Nevada. As a matter of fact the court was of the opinion that his residence in Nevada was not bona fide. In this case, however, it was held that the wife had estopped herself to deny the validity of the Nevada divorce as affecting her status in California by reason of her acquiescence therein and her remarriage to another man in reliance thereon, notwithstanding that she subsequently procured a decree in New York declaring that marriage annulled on the ground that she had not been legally divorced from the first husband.

In Walker v. Walker (1915) 125 Md. 649, 94 Atl. 346, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 934, a decree of divorce in favor of the husband, rendered in Nevada, was refused recognition because the husband had not obtained a bona fide domicile in Nevada, the court expressly declaring that the conclusion was reached without reference to the service of the summons issued by the Nevada court.

In Gooch v. Gooch (1913) 38 Okla. 300, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 480, 133 Pac. 242, where a husband abandoned his wife in Oklahoma, and maintained a residence in Missouri for the statutory time required for divorce, and procured a decree on constructive service upon the wife, who did not appear and had no knowledge of the action, the court held that, whatever effect the decree might have on the marital relation, the court which rendered it was without jurisdiction to affect the right that the wife and the children had acquired as members of the family in a homestead in Oklahoma.

The question in Toneray v. Toneray (1910) 123 Tenn. 476, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1106, 131 S. W. 977, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 284, was whether a divorce in favor of the husband in Virginia, where he had a bona fide domicile, rendered upon publication without service upon the wife or any actual notice to her, the matrimonial domicil of the parties being in Tennessee, had the effect to deprive her of her right to sue for alimony in Tennessee; and the court expressly said that the validity of the Virginia decree, so far as it served to dissolve the bonds of matrimony existing between the parties, must be assumed for the purposes of the appeal, since neither party appealed from that part of the decree of the Tennessee chancellor which upheld the Virginia judgment to that extent. (The note appended to this case in 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1106, deals with the effect of a valid divorce granted in one state upon an independent suit for alimony in another, and that note is supplemented by the note to Bodie v. Bates, L.R.A.1915E, 421.)

— divorce granted to wife in a state to which she removed after separation.

See also cases cited in note 59 L.R.A. 162, and 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 647.

In Matthews v. Matthews (1912) 139 Ga. 123, 76 S. E. 855, the court refused to recognize either under the full faith and credit clause or on principles of comity a decree of divorce rendered by a court of Alabama in favor of a wife upon constructive service of the husband, who apparently had no actual notice of the pendency of the suit. The court also said in this case that the judge was authorized to find that the wife had no actual domicile in Alabama, and that she commenced her suit there on arrival and returned to Georgia within fifty or sixty days and before the grant of the divorce decree.

In Baylis v. Baylis (1913) 207 N. Y. 446, 101 N. E. 176, affirming (1911) 146 App. Div. 517, 131 N. Y. Supp. 671, refusing under the doctrine of the Haddock Case, to recognize a divorce granted to the wife in Connecticut without personal service upon her husband in that state, the matrimonial domicile having been in New York, neither the ground of the divorce nor the circumstances of the separation appear. The New York action involved the custody and legitimacy of a child of a subsequent marriage contracted by the wife.

In Tysen v. Tysen (1910) 140 App. Div. 370, 125 N. Y. Supp. 479, refusing to recognize a divorce granted in Michigan on the ground of cruelty, in favor of the wife upon constructive service upon the husband, the last common matrimonial domicile was apparently in New York, but the husband seems to have been domiciled in California at the time of the decree. The New York suit was by a man with whom the wife, after the Michigan divorce, entered into a ceremonial marriage in Connecticut, to annul the same.

In Berney v. Adriance (1913) 159 App. Div. 628, 142 N. Y. Supp. 748, the New York doctrine was applied by refusing to recognize a divorce obtained by the wife in South Dakota upon constructive service of process after she had been abandoned by the husband in New York, which was the last common matrimonial domicile. The husband in this case was personally served in New York, but did not appear. The case is rather an extraordinary one, as the New York action was for criminal conversation brought by the husband against a man with whom, after the South Dakota divorce, the wife entered into a ceremonial marriage in New Jersey, where she was then residing, and was based on their relations after the divorce and before and after the New Jersey marriage. The New York court expressly held that the New Jersey marriage was no defense to the action, even though the courts of that state might have recognized the South Dakota decree as binding upon a citizen of that state.

In People ex rel. Catlin v. Catlin (1910) 69 Misc. 191, 126 N. Y. Supp. 350, the court refused to recognize a Nevada divorce, even upon the assumption that the wife, who obtained it, had acquired a domicile in Nevada, the husband having been served constructively only. The court said that the divorce was of no effect in New York whether or not the separation was due to the fault of the defendant (the husband). The decision was upon the assumption that the matrimonial domicile was in New York, notwithstanding that the parties last lived together in New Jersey, it appearing that both parties moved to New York and while there amicably discussed the subject of setting up housekeeping together. There is an implication that if the matrimonial domicile had remained in New Jersey, the court might have recognized the Nevada divorce, even as affecting the status of the parties in New York. This implied concession however, apparently rests upon principles of comity, and not on the full faith and credit provision.

In Re Higgins (1909) 65 Misc. 415, 121 N. Y. Supp. 907, the court refusing to recognize a divorce obtained by the wife in Ohio upon constructive service of process, discussed chiefly an alleged appearance. The facts as to the matrimonial domicile did not appear except that the court stated that there was nothing in the pretense that the decree was obtained in the state of the matrimonial domicile.

In Gibson v. Gibson (1913) 81 Misc. 508, 143 N. Y. Supp. 37, however, a wife who, after obtaining a decree of separation in New York, procured a divorce in Ohio upon constructive service of process on the husband, was held estopped to deny the validity of that decree, on a motion by the husband to modify the New York decree so as to relieve him from the payment of alimony.

In Blondin v. Brooks (1910) 83 Vt. 476, 76 Atl. 184, where an attack on the divorce was made by a stranger in a suit involving title to real property, the court held that a decree of divorce in favor of the wife in New Mexico, upon personal service upon the husband in Vermont, where the parties had been living together prior to the separation, would not be recognized as affecting the status of the parties in Vermont, even assuming that it was valid in New Mexico. From the discussion and citation of cases it would seem that the result would have been the same even upon the assumption that the wife had acquired a bona fide domicile in New Mexico; but as a matter of fact, the decision rested in part at least upon the idea that she had not acquired a bona fide domicile and had practised a fraud on the court in New Mexico. Upon that assumption, of course, the divorce would not be entitled to recognition, at least when attacked by a stranger, although apart from the objection arising from the constructive service of process.

In Cass v. Cass (1910) 102 L. T. N. S. (Eng.) 397, 54 Sol. Jo. 328, 26 Times L. R. 305, where a wife who had been living with her husband in Massachusetts took up her abode in Dakota and procured a divorce upon service by publication upon the husband who did not appear, the court held that such divorce was not entitled to recognition in a suit for nullity of a marriage subsequently contracted by her in New York, it being found on the evidence that the divorce in the circumstances would not have been recognized either in Massachusetts, the domicile of the first husband, or in New York, where the marriage ceremony took place. It is not clear whether or not the decision was rendered upon the assumption that the wife procured a bona fide domicile in Dakota.

In Montmorency v. Montmorency (1911) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 139 S. W. 1168, the court upheld the jurisdiction of a court of Texas to grant a divorce in favor of the wife upon constructive service of process upon the husband where, after being abandoned by the husband she removed to Texas and acquired a domicile there. Although, as stated, the question in this case was as to the jurisdiction of a local court, and therefore not strictly in point, the opinion takes the position that where a husband abandons his wife the marital domicile remains with her until a new domicile be acquired by her elsewhere, and that a court of the marital domicile has jurisdiction to grant a divorce upon constructive service which will be entitled to recognition in other states under the full faith and credit provision. This decision was apparently rendered upon the assumption that the parties had never lived together as husband and wife in Texas.

—effect of appearance by defendant.

See also cases cited in notes in 59 L.R.A. 162, and 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 647.

A general appearance, or what amounts to such an appearance, by a defendant in any one of the four situations above referred to, removes any objection to the jurisdiction as affected by the mode of service, and, in the absence of other objections, entitles the decree to recognition under the full faith and credit provisions as affecting the status of the parties in other states, whatever might be the case in the absence of such an appearance. The effect of an appearance to waive the objection that neither of the parties was bona fide domiciled in the state where the divorce was granted presents another question which is not within the scope of this note.

Because of the appearance by the defendant in the divorce suit, a decree rendered in another state upon constructive service or personal service out of the state was recognized and given effect in Rupp v. Rupp (1913) 156 App. Div. 389, 141 N. Y. Supp. 484; French v. French (1911) 74 Misc. 628, 131 N. Y. Supp. 1053; Richards v. Richards (1914) 87 Misc. 134, 149 N. Y. Supp. 1028.

And in Com. v. Parker (1915) 59 Pa. Super. Ct. 74, the appearance of the wife who was served through the mail in a Nevada suit for divorce, was held to entitle the decree in favor of the husband to recognition under the full faith and credit provision, although Pennsylvania was the only common domicile the parties had ever had; and the court assumed that but for her appearance the Nevada decree could not have had the L.R.A.1917B.

extraterritorial effect of impairing or destroying her status in Pennsylvania, since no service on her in that state could import her into the jurisdiction of Nevada. The appearance in this case was by an answer which not only traversed the averments of the libel, but craved the protection afforded to the wife under the laws of Nevada.

In Weaver v. Weaver (1916) 160 N. Y. Supp. 642, however, it was held that a motion in the foreign jurisdiction by a nonresident who had been served constructively only to vacate the decree for irregularities and defects and want of jurisdiction, which motion was finally denied, did not give the decree the effect of one rendered on personal service or appearance before judgment, nor extend its territorial effect; and the court therefore held that the decree was not available in New York state as a ground for vacating an order for alimony in a separation suit in that state.

And in Re Higgins (1909) 65 Misc. 415, 121 N. Y. Supp. 907, where an attempt was made to take an Ohio decree out of the New York rule on the ground that there was an appearance by virtue of an instrument signed by the husband acknowledging service and waiving proof of the official character of the officer before whom certain depositions were to be taken, it was held that this instrument could not be regarded as an appearance in view of the recital in the decree that there had been no appearance. The proceeding in this case, however, having been subsequently reopened, and it then appearing that the decree in the other state had been amended nunc pro tunc by striking therefrom the recital that the defendant (husband) had not appeared, and substituting a recital that he had appeared, the decree was recognized and given effect by holding that the plaintiff (wife) in that decree was entitled to letters of administration upon the estate of a man whom she subsequently married. Re Higgins (1910) 68 Misc. 259, 124 N. Y. Supp. 1005.

In Gillig v. Gillig, L. R. [1906] P. (Eng.) 135, 75 L. J. Prob. N. S. 42, 94 L. T. N. S. 614, 22 Times L. R. 306, a divorce rendered in South Dakota in favor of a wife, upon service in England upon the husband, who, however, was domiciled in New York, he having appeared in the Dakota suit and entered an action by cross claim, was recognized in England, the court having found on the evidence that it would have been recognized by the courts of New York, the domicile of the husband, because of his appearance in the suit. There seems to be an implication in the opinion that, had the husband been domiciled in England, the court would not have recognized the Dakota divorce notwithstanding the appearance.

Comity.

See also cases cited in notes in 59 L.R.A. 162, and 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 647.

As shown in the earlier notes, the unfortunate consequences involved in the apparent implication of the majority opinion in the Haddock Case, and express declarations in other cases, that a decree of divorce rendered in a state other than the matrimonial domicile, upon constructive service of process against a nonresident who does not appear, may be valid in the state where rendered, in connection with the holding that it is not entitled to recognition under the full faith and credit provision in other states, are in a measure mitigated by the disposition of some courts to recognize divorces granted in such circumstances, upon principles of comity, though not constrained to do so by the full faith and credit provision.

Indeed, as pointed out in the earlier note, the courts which prior to the decision in the Haddock Case were accustomed to recognize and give effect to decrees of divorce rendered in other states on constructive service of process, upon the assumption that such decrees were within the full faith and credit provision, continue to recognize them on principles of comity, even though rendered under conditions which according to the doctrine of that case do not entitle them to the protection of that provision as affecting the status of the parties in other states.

In Gildersleeve v. Gildersleeve (1914) 88 Conn. 689, 92 Atl. 684, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 920, the court conceded that it was not bound under the full faith and credit clause to recognize or give effect to a judgment procured by a husband in South Dakota upon constructive service upon the wife, a nonresident of South Dakota and a resident of Connecticut; but held that the divorce was entitled to recognition upon principles of comity, although the wife was only served in Connecticut and did not appear in the South Dakota suit, it having been found by the court, although it was claimed otherwise, that the husband had acquired a bona fide domicile in South Dakota. In this case the matrimonial domicile prior to the husband's going to South Dakota was apparently in Connecticut and the wife had never been a resident of South Dakota. The South Dakota decree was rendered upon the ground of desertion and the court held that, considered from the point of view of comity, neither the fact that the period of desertion required by the South Dakota statute was less than that required by Connecticut, nor the fact that the service was constructive only, prevented the recognition of the decree by the Connecticut court.

In reply to the argument that the practice of going to remote jurisdictions to secure a divorce not obtainable at home by reason of stricter requirements ought to be discouraged, the court said: "Unfortunately for this appeal, the reverse side of the picture presenting the consequences of the course advocated is very far from an attractive one. It is no light matter as affecting individual, social, or civic interests, and good morals, that, through the attitude of the courts in refusing recognition to the judicial action of sister states, a condition should be created where legitimacy becomes dependent upon state lines, where wives in one state become concubines when they pass into another, where husband or wife living in lawful wedlock in one jurisdiction is converted into a bigamist by change of location, where persons capable of inheritance in one part of our country are incapable in another, where certainty of status may readily give place to uncertainty and property rights be thrown into confusion."

In Kaufman v. Kaufman (1916) 160 N. Y. Supp. 19, a decree of divorce rendered in Nevada in favor of the wife, upon constructive service of process upon the husband, who did not appear, but who was not a resident of New York, was recognized and given effect so as to defeat a suit for annulment brought in New York by a man whom the wife subsequently married. The opinion declares that, while the courts of New York had uniformly protected its citizens against the decrees obtained by a constructive process in foreign jurisdictions, they had not gone so far as to protect a nonresident and declare void a decree granted in a foreign jurisdiction against a nonresident of the state (citing Percival v. Percival (1905) 106 App. Div. 111, 94 N. Y. Supp. 909, which is set out in the note in 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) at page 652). The court also expressed the opinion in this case, that, it appearing that the husband had deserted the wife in New York, the matrimonial domicile there was broken, and she was then free to select any other domicile which she desired, and, after establishing her own matrimonial domicile, was entitled to institute an action for divorce in that forum.

Following the decision in the Haddock Case, the legislature of Kansas placed decrees of divorce on constructive service of process upon the same basis as judgments of the courts of Kansas, and by virtue of its statute any judgment or decree in one of the United States in conformity to the laws thereof has the same force, and must be given the same faith and credit, as if rendered by a court of Kansas. Miller v. Miller (1913) 89 Kan. 151, 130 Pac. 681. It was also held in this case that the finding of the court of the other state as to the jurisdictional requisite of residence was binding and conclusive upon the Kansas court in a collateral attack upon the decree. That question, however, is not within the scope of this note.

So, the decision of the United States Supreme Court that the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution cannot be invoked to compel a state to recognize as valid a divorce granted by a sister state upon constructive service by publication, where the defendant in the suit has never had a matrimonial domicile in the state granting the divorce, does not prevent the recognition of such decree by the courts of Missouri upon the principles of comity. Howard v. Strode (1912) 242 Mo. 210, 146 S. W. 792, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1057.

And such decrees have been recognized on principles of comity in other cases which are cited in the note in 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 647. As there pointed out, however, the courts, when they consider the question from the point of view of comity, are inclined to take into consideration factors, especially the fact whether or not defendant had actual notice of the divorce suit imparted by publication or personal service out of the state, which would not be important if the question were controlled by the full faith and credit provision.

In Douglas v. Teller (1909) 53 Wash. 695, 102 Pac. 761, the court, while recognizing that it would not be bound under the full faith and credit provision to recognize a divorce on the ground of abandonment in favor of the husband, granted in Illinois upon constructive service of process upon the wife, the last matrimonial domicile having apparently been in Michigan, and the wife not having appeared in the Illinois suit, nevertheless held that that decree would be recognized as a matter of comity in a suit by the wife in Washington for the removal of one appointed administrator of the estate of the husband, who came to Washington after the divorce. The court observed that the divorce was granted more than forty years before the action in question was begun, and while the divorced wife testified that she did not know of the divorce until long after the death of the husband, and only a few months prior to the bringing of the action, the statement was contradicted by the daughter, and that under the circumstances the decree at this late date ought to import verity, especially in view of the fact that it is a valid decree where rendered.

So, in Hicks v. Hicks (1912) 69 Wash. 627, 125 Pac. 945, a decree of divorce rendered in Alaska in favor of the husband upon constructive service of process upon the wife, the parties apparently living together in California at the time of the separation, was recognized in a subsequent suit in Washington by the wife against the husband for a divorce; it being further held that an attack in such suit upon the Alaska decree upon the ground of fraud was a collateral attack and therefore could not be heard. G. H. P.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

FIDELITY & DEPOSIT COMPANY OF MARYLAND, Appt.,

v.

CARRIE SARBACH, Admr., etc., of Albert Sarbach, Deceased.

(99 Kan. 29, 160 Pac. 990.)

Partnership — accounting — creditor of partner.

1. Where the individual estate of a decedent is insolvent, having no assets except what may accrue to it from the decedent's share of a partnership estate after the partnership debts are paid, a creditor of the individual estate has such interest in the accounting and settlement of the partnership estate as will entitle him to appear in the probate court and resist the allowance of questionable claims against the partnership estate, and to appeal from the decision of the probate court thereon.

Note. — As to right of creditor of individual partner or of his estate to appear in proceedings for the settlement of affairs of partnership, see annotation following this case, post, 1047.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, III. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Executor and administrator — accounting — credit.

2. In an accounting and settlement in the probate court, an administratrix is not absolutely entitled to credit for a judgment rendered against her as administratrix which she has paid; and the court may inquire whether the lawsuit on which the judgment was founded was diligently defended, whether it was prudently compromised, or whether she subjected herself to the judgment by negligence, fraud, or collusion.

For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, IV. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Appeal — review of facts.

3. Rule followed on appeal that the trial court's findings of fact based upon tangible and sufficient evidence cannot be disturbed.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII. l, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(November 11, 1916.)

A PPEAL by a creditor of the individual estate of decedent from a judgment of the District Court for Jackson County affirming a judgment of the Probate Court allowing a claim against the partnership estate in a proceeding for the settlement of decedent's estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. T. F. Garver and R. D. Garver, for appellant:

A creditor has the right to proceed against an executor or administrator for relief because of unfaithful administration or failure to act.

18 Cyc. 1209.

The claim was not a legal claim against the estate.

Hinnen v. Newman, 35 Kan. 709, 12 Pac. 144; Hawley v. Kansas & T. Coal Co. 48 Kan. 593, 30 Pac. 14; Sheldon v. Pruessner, 52 Kan. 579, 22 L.R.A. 709, 35 Pac. 201; Alexander v. Barker, 64 Kan. 396, 67 Pac. 829; Patterson v. Imperial Window Glass Co. 91 Kan. 201, 137 Pac. 955; United States v. The Amistad, 15 Pet. 518, 10 L. ed. 926.

The administrator will not be given credit for moneys paid on claims which are not shown to be legal and valid claims against the estate.

Carr v. Catlin, 13 Kan. 393; Re Corrington, 124 Ill. 363, 16 N. E. 252; Marshall v. Coleman, 187 Ill. 556, 58 N. E. 628; Turner v. Turner, 21 Ill. App. 427; Phillips v. Frye, 14 Allen, 36; Re Van Buren, 19 Misc. 373, 44 N. Y. Supp. 357; Re Millenovich, 5 Nev. 161; Jones v. Ward, 10 Yerg. 160; Ryan v. Williams, 92 Minn. 506, 100 L.R.A.1917B.

N. W. 380; Dawson v. Hemelrick, 33 W. Va. 675, 11 S. E. 31; Gafford v. Dickinson, 37 Kan. 287, 15 Pac. 175; Re Yetter, 44 App. Div. 404, 61 N. Y. Supp. 175, affirmed in 162 N. Y. 615, 57 N. E. 1129; Garr v. Harding, 37 Mo. App. 24; Dullard v. Hardy, 47 Mo. 403; Gwynn v. Hamilton, 29 Ala. 233; Steele v. Steele, 64 Ala. 438, 38 Am. Rep. 15; Tucker v. Tucker, 29 N. J. Eq. 286; Hurlbut v. Hutton, 44 N. J. Eq. 302, 15 Atl. 417.

Messrs. Charles Hayden, I. T. Price, A. E. Crane, E. D. Woodburn, and F. T. Woodburn, for appellee:

The Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland had no appealable interest, or right to appeal from the order and judgment of the probate court made upon the accounting of the administratrix and trustee of the estate of L. Sarbach's Sons.

Re Crooks, 125 Cal. 459, 58 Pac. 89; Craft v. Bent, 8 Kan. 323; Gille v. Emmons, 58 Kan. 118, 62 Am. St. Rep. 609, 48 Pac. 569; Wolfley v. McPherson, 61 Kan. 492, 59 Pac. 1054; Commercial State Bank v. Ross, 90 Kan. 425, 133 Pac. 538; Cooper v. Rhea, 82 Kan. 109, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 930, 136 Am. St. Rep. 100, 107 Pac. 799, 20 Ann. Cas. 42; Kothman v. Markson, 34 Kan. 542, 9 Pac. 218; Phillips v. Faherty, 9 Kan. App. 383, 58 Pac. 801.

Appellant's pleading presented no issue of fraud or illegality.

Re Johnson, 92 Kan. 59, 139 Pac. 1161; Ladd v. Nystol, 63 Kan. 23, 64 Pac. 985; Gleason v. Wilson, 48 Kan. 500, 29 Pac. 698; Kingman, P. & W. R. Co. v. Quinn, 45 Kan. 477, 25 Pac. 1068; Gille v. Emmons, 58 Kan. 118, 62 Am. St. Rep. 609, 48 Pac. 569; Brookover v. Esterly, 12 Kan. 152; 9 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 684, 685; Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Botsford, 56 Kan. 532, 44 Pac. 3; Topeka Capital Co. v. March, 10 Kan. App. 40, 61 Pac. 876.

The judgment of the district court was conclusive.

Freeman v. Thompson, 53 Mo. 183; Lenox v. Clarke, 52 Mo. 116; Mason v. Messenger, 17 Iowa, 261; Krekeler v. Ritter, 62 N. Y. 372; Morris v. Sadler, 74 Kan. 892, 88 Pac. 60; De Graw v. De Graw, 7 Mo. App. 121; Hansford v. Hansford, 34 Mo. App. 271; Lathrop v. American Emigrant Co. 41 Iowa, 547; Johns v. Pattee, 55 Iowa, 665, 8 N. W. 663; Hardin v. Lee, 51 Mo. 241; Phillips v. Faherty, 9 Kan. App. 383, 58 Pac. 801; Simpson v. Kimberlin, 12 Kan. 579.

Dawson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is one of a long series of lawsuits which have reached this court arising out of the financial troubles of Albert Sarbach, of Holton, deceased, and also of the partnership L. Sarbach's Sons, of which he was a member. On his death in 1909 Carrie Sarbach was appointed administratrix of Albert's personal estate, and also of his partnership's estate. Some time later an action was commenced by the Linscott State Bank against the surviving partner of L. Sarbach's Sons, and against Carrie both as administratrix of Albert's estate and of the partnership estate, founded on certain more or less meritorious claims amounting to $7,596.75, for which the bank prayed judgment. A separate answer was filed by Carrie as administratrix of both estates. Judgment by compromise was rendered for $5,000 against her as administratrix of the partnership estate. She paid this judgment, and over the objection of the Fidelity & Deposit Company, a creditor of Albert's personal estate, the probate court allowed this item. This objecting creditor appealed to the district court, and the controversy there ranged about two main propositions, the right of this creditor of the personal estate to appeal from an allowance of the $5,000 item against the partnership estate, and whether the original judgment for $5,000 was rendered in good faith or through collusion between the Linscott State Bank and certain attorneys for the administratrix.

The trial court made certain findings of fact and conclusions of law:

"VIII. . . . Under the circumstances of the case, and with the knowledge which could be produced by said bank proving liability of L. Sarbach's Sons for the payment of each of said two notes for $3,000, and the fact that the trial court, in overruling defendants' motion to exclude evidence, had, after full argument of the question, decided that the amended petition in the case stated a cause of action against the defendants, the said attorneys acted for what they believed to be for the best interests of the estate of L. Sarbach's Sons in advising the compromise that was then made. They were not attorneys for said bank, and did not act for or in the interest of said bank in advising said compromise, nor were they or either of them guilty of any fraud, collusion, negligence, or other misconduct whatsoever.

"XII. The estate of Albert Sarbach is insolvent, and probably little more will be paid creditors of the fifth class. There is a small balance in the partnership estate, after paying all partnership liabilities.

"XIII. The appellant, the Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland, is not a creditor of the estate of L. Sarbach's Sons, but is a creditor of the estate of Albert Sarbach, deceased. . . .

"Second. Each and all of the payments L.R.A.1917B.

made by said Carrie Sarbach as administratrix and trustee of the estate of L. Sarbach's Sons pursuant to the said compromises mentioned in the foregoing findings of fact, and including the payment of five thousand dollars ($5,000) made by her in satisfaction of the judgment recovered by the Linscott State Bank, were lawfully made by her, and she should be allowed credit therefor.

"Third. The Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland, not being a creditor of L. Sarbach's Sons, had no appealable interest or right to appeal from the order and judgment of the probate court made upon the accounting of said Carrie Sarbach, as administratrix and trustee of the estate of L. Sarbach's Sons."

Error is assigned (a) on the decision that the $5,000 paid to the bank in accordance with the judgment was a legal claim against the partnership estate; and (b) on the ruling that the appellant, not being a creditor of the partnership estate, had no appealable interest in the probate court's allowance of this judgment item.

Considering the latter question first, we have no doubt that the appellant had an interest in the proceedings in the probate court and an appealable interest from an adverse decision. Its interest in the probate court's action was simple and easily understood. It was a creditor of Albert's personal estate. That estate was insolvent. Whatever was left of the partnership estate after its lawful debts were paid would inure to the partners individually, and Albert's estate would get his proper share as partner. When that share was distributed, the personal creditors could reach it. If personal creditors are compelled to stand aside without right to be heard while partnership assets are frittered away on trumped-up claims, there is a discrepancy in the law which is highly discreditable to the administration of justice, and one which we would be reluctant to admit.

Authorities on this subject are not numerous, but the statute is plain. Section 3522 of the General Statutes of 1909 provides: "The probate court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine all demands against any estate; and a concise entry of the order of allowance shall be made on the record of the court, which shall have the force and effect of a judgment."

How is the court to hear and determine such demands? By hearing only those who advocate the demands? Shall the court limit the hearing of objections to those who have direct claims against the estate? Or in fairness and justice should not the court hear also the protest of those who are vitally interested, although indirectly, in the disposition of the assets? More broadly expressed, should not the court make the sifting of the truth, the merit of the claim, its principal concern, and hear all who may be able to throw light on the subject regardless of their interest?

Section 3587 of the General Statutes of 1909 provides that, when an administrator desires to make final settlement of an estate, he shall give four weeks' notice "to all creditors and all others interested in the estate." See also Gen. Stat. 1909, § 3490. Who can possibly be meant by the words "all others interested in the estate" if not those having claims on the residue after direct creditors are satisfied? 11 R. C. L. 185. Such claimants may not inaptly be designated and considered as interveners by an analogy to the practice in equity. Certainly the statute is not using empty and futile words when it speaks of "all others interested in the estate." One highly pertinent reason why creditors of the personal estate should be heard in the determination of claims against the partnership estate rests on the proposition that the probate court's decision thereon will go for review to the district court charged with a presumption in favor of its regularity. 18 Cyc. 1213. It will be noted also that the statute relating to appeals from the probate court (Gen. Stat. 1909, §§ 3624 et seq.) is very liberal, and it does not define who may be appellants. The same liberality as to appellants should be inferred as on the subject matter of such appeals. In 18 Cyc. 1209, it is said: "The general rule that any party aggrieved by a judgment or decree may appeal therefrom, and that in a legal sense a party is aggrieved by a judgment or decree whenever it operates on his rights of property or bears directly upon his interest, is applicable in proceedings for the settlement of administration accounts; and it follows as the converse of this general rule that it is not the privilege of a party to appeal from a judgment or order rendered in such a proceeding unless he is, either as an individual or in a representative capacity, aggrieved thereby, and that no one is in a legal sense aggrieved by such a judgment or order unless it prejudicially affects his rights of property or pecuniary interests, or those of others for whom he is, with relation to such proceeding, the duly constituted representative. Legatees, distributees, or creditors of the decedent, when aggrieved by such a judgment or decree, may appeal therefrom."

It seems clear, therefore, that a creditor of the personal estate who is dependent upon the personal estate's share of the residue of a partnership estate for the satisfaction of his claim has such interest in the partnership estate as will entitle him to resist the allowance of a questionable claim in the settlement of the partnership estate in the probate court, and to appeal from the decision of that court. Davenport v. Hervey, 30 Tex. 309.

Turning next to what appears to be the controlling feature of this lawsuit, the appellant's objections to the item in controversy and many others were heard by the probate court. That court rendered its judgment. Appeal was taken, and while the district court erroneously held that the appellant creditor had no appealable interest from the allowance of claims against the partnership estate, yet appellant's grievance at its allowance was heard and determined. The district court heard the evidence touching the compromise judgment entered in the bank's case against the partnership estate, heard the evidence as to the alleged collusion between the bank and certain of the attorneys for the administratrix, and made findings of fact, quoted in part above, fully exonerating counsel from any unprofessional or collusive conduct. These findings based on sufficient oral testimony conclude that phase of the case on appeal. We would not say that the judgment in the bank case was conclusive before the probate court nor in the district court on appeal from the decision of the probate court. Pearson v. Darrington, 32 Ala. 227 (syl. ¶ 14); Re Yetter, 44 App. Div. 404, 61 N. Y. Supp. 176. Doubtless, this judgment was not subject to collateral attack by the parties to that judgment. But the probate court might have disallowed the item therefor in the account of the administratrix if it considered that the judgment was brought about by the fraud, collusion, or negligence of the administratrix and her attorneys. A prudent course would have prompted the administratrix to have secured the approval of the probate court before consenting to a compromise judgment. We realize, however, that situations sometimes develop rapidly in a lawsuit, and it is necessary for litigants and their counsel to act quickly, and to trust that their course will later meet the approval of those entitled to review their conduct. We are constrained to hold, however, that the judgment made a prima facie claim for allowance in the probate court. Gen. Stat. 1909, §§ 3518, 3519. Here, then, was an item founded on a judgment presented to the probate court freighted with the presumption of its regularity and validity, further strengthened by its approval and allowance by the probate court, and still later its merits investigated and approved by the district court.

In such a situation the judgment must be affirmed.

Annotation—Right of creditor of individual partner or of his estate to appear in proceedings for the settlement of affairs of partnership.

A careful search discloses but few cases which have involved the question stated in the title to this annotation. However, the question is one which in each instance depends largely upon the construction to be placed upon the particular statutes under consideration, so that precedents are of little value unless similar statutes are involved. As a consequence of this we may have conclusions which are diametrically opposed, but which at the same time do not conflict. This is illustrated by the following decisions:

Under the Kansas statutes it has recently been held (FIDELITY & D. Co. v. SARBACH, ante, 1043, wherein the pertinent provisions of the statute are quoted) that a creditor of the estate of a deceased individual partner, who is dependent upon the individual estate's share of the residue of the partnership assets for the satisfaction of his claim, has such an interest in the accounting and settlement of the partnership estate as entitles him to appear in the probate court and resist the allowance of questionable claims against the partnership estate, and to appeal from the decision of that court thereon.

But a contrary conclusion has been reached by the supreme court of California in Isaacs v. Jones (1898) 121 Cal. 257, 53 Pac. 793, it having been held under a statute allowing any person to intervene in an action "who has an interest in the matter in litigation, in the success of either of the parties, or an interest against both," that a creditor of an individual partner had no such interest as would entitle him to intervene in an action to wind up the affairs of the partnership, although he had attached the interest of the individual partner in the partnership assets; and that his right to intervene was not enlarged by the action of the court in appointing a receiver for the partnership or by the conduct of the receiver after his appointment. In so holding the court reasoned as follows: "There have been many decisions upon the right of intervention which is given by this section, but in none of them has there been any attempt to define the right in any clearer terms than those of the section itself. Whether any particular case is within the terms of the premises is best determined by a consideration of the facts of that case; and the consideration of the effect of any particular construction to be given to a statute is of advantage in determining the construction to be given to it, and is frequently decisive of the question. To avail himself of the right given by this section, the applicant must have either an interest in the matter in litigation, or in the success of one of the parties to the action, or an interest against both of them. The interest here referred to must be direct, and not consequential, and it must be an interest which is proper to be determined in the action in which the intervention is sought. . . . The second sentence of the section above quoted itself defines the circumstances under which an intervention may be had, and is to that extent a limitation upon the terms used in the first sentence. The third person must have an interest in claiming what is sought by the complaint, or in resisting the claim of the plaintiff, or must demand something which is involved in the litigation adversely to both of the parties. The object of the present action is a distribution under the direction of the court of the assets of the partnership, including the determination of the amount thereof to which each partner will be entitled after the payment of all the partnership claims. Although the individual partners are entitled to the surplus according to their interests as the same shall be ascertained by the court, a litigation in the action of disputed claims against the individual partners is not appropriate. If every claim against each of the partners could be made the subject of a distinct issue and determination in such an action, it is easily seen that the litigation might be indefinitely prolonged. When the partnership affairs have been adjusted, the court should enter its judgment in accordance with such adjustment. Its authority to appoint a receiver rests upon its right to retain in its possession the property of the partnership until the rights of the several claimants thereto have been satisfied, and when this has been accomplished the receiver is to be discharged. The court is not authorized to retain in its possession thereafter the property adjudged to belong to the individual partners, for distribution among their respective creditors, any more than it would have been authorized to appoint a receiver for that purpose in the first instance. So far as the rights of these creditors are legal rights, they are to be enforced in the ordinary mode for enforcing legal obligations. In the present case, the appellant alleges that it has secured its claim against Bernhard Isaacs by the lien of an attachment, and it appears from the record that the court refused the motion of the plaintiff to dissolve the attachment. This lien of the appellant is upon the entire share of his debtor in the surplus assets of the partnership, and such lien will be available to him when he shall have obtained a judgment in the action in Yolo county.

He has not yet established any claim against this surplus, and, as it is possible that he may not obtain a judgment in that action until long after the partnership affairs shall have been adjusted in the present action, it would be unjust to permit an intervention here, the only effect of which would be to tie up the property until the determination of the suit in Yolo county. If he shall obtain judgment in that action prior to the entry of judgment herein, a sale under that judgment of the interest of Bernhard Isaacs in the real estate upon which his attachment has been levied, as well as in the partnership property, will make the purchaser its owner and entitled to receive from the court whatever may be found to belong to Bernhard." But Beatty, Ch. J., dissented from this decision, saying that the matter in litigation was the amount of the surplus assets of the firm, that the creditor had a lien upon an individual partner's share, that the lien was a valuable interest, that the property and its value which the lien attached not only could be, but must be, determined in the action, and that a plain case for intervention was established.

And in connection with the decision in Isaacs v. Jones (1898) 121 Cal. 257, 53 Pac. 793, see New Orleans v. Gauthreaux (1880) 32 La. Ann. 1126, wherein it was said that a creditor of an individual partner was not, by reason of an attachment of partnership assets, a necessary party to a suit to liquidate the partnership, as only partners and partnership creditors have a direct interest in such a proceeding. G. J. C.

MISSISSIPPI SUPREME COURT. (Division A.)

L. D. HUGHES et al., Appts.,
v.
MRS. LELIA M. McEWEN.

(— Miss. —, 72 So. 848.)

Bills and notes — when payable.

1. A note payable one year after date, but containing a clause that it is to be paid whenever certain land is sold and paid for, secured by a mortgage reciting that the note is not to be paid until the land is sold, is payable not in a year, but when the land is sold.

For other cases, see Bills and Notes, VI. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — reasonable time.

2. A note payable when certain land is sold is payable at the expiration of a reasonable time for effecting the sale.

For other cases, see Bills and Notes, VI. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(November 6, 1916.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Chancery Court for Pike County in complainant's favor in a suit to enjoin

Note.—As to time of payment of obligation purporting to be payable on specified event, the happening of which is wholly or partially within the control of the promisor, see annotation following this case, post, 1050. L.R.A.1917B.

the sale of certain land to satisfy a note. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. F. D. Hewitt for appellants.

Messrs. Price & Price for appellee.

Sykes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant L. D. Hughes, one of the defendants in the court below, on January 29, 1911, sold to Mrs. Lelia M. McEwen, the appellee in this court, a certain tract of land for a certain consideration, a part of which was paid in cash, the assumption of a deed of trust due the Union Bank, and a balance of $150, for which a note was given by Mrs. McEwen, secured by a deed of trust on certain of the lands. The note reads as follows:

$150. Summit, Miss., Jan. 29th, 1911.

One year after date I, we, or either of us, promise to pay to L. D. Hughes or bearer one hundred fifty dollars, for value received, with interest at the rate of 10 per cent per annum after date until paid. And in the event default is made in the payment of this note at maturity, and it is placed in the hands of an attorney for collection, an additional amount of 10 per cent shall be added to the same as attorneys' fees. The drawers and indorsers severally waive presentation for payment, protest, and notice of protest for nonpayment of this note.

Negotiable and payable at Union Bank of Pike, Summit, Miss. It is understood and agreed that this note is to be paid whenever 80 acres of land described in deed of trust to secure this paper is sold and paid for.

Mrs. L. M. McEwen.

It will be noted that the note in its beginning says that it is due one year after date, but that the last sentence in said note reads as follows: "It is understood and agreed that this note is to be paid whenever 80 acres of land described in the deed of trust to secure this paper is sold and paid for."

The deed of trust contains this statement: "This is a second mortgage to one held by Union Bank of Pike, and payment of note is not to be made until Mrs. McEwen has sold and collected for 80 acres or more of the land."

This note of $150 had not been satisfied on the 2d day of February, 1915, at which time Fred J. Martin, the trustee in the deed of trust, advertised the land for sale to satisfy this indebtedness. Mrs. McEwen filed a bill in the chancery court of Pike county seeking to enjoin the sale of the land to satisfy the note. In her bill she contends that the note is not due and will not become due until she has sold and collected the purchase money for 80 acres of this land. The chancellor issued a temporary injunction, and on the final hearing made the same perpetual, from which judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

It is the contention of the appellant that the note is due one year after date, and that the last clause in the note simply means that if the land is sold and paid for before the expiration of one year, then the note will fall due at that time; that the certain date of payment, viz., one year after date, should control any ambiguous or uncertain clause either in the note or in the deed of trust as to the payment. The note and the deed of trust were executed at the same time, and should be considered together. While a consideration of the clause in the note alone might lead to the conclusion of the appellant, yet, when considered in connection with the clause in the deed of trust above quoted, it is quite plain that it was the intention of both parties to make the note payable after 80 acres of land had been sold and the purchase price of same paid.

The question then before the court is simply this: Construing the note and deed of trust together, there is a debt of $150 owing by the appellee to the appellant, but the payment of which is postponed to a future time and depends upon the happening of a future event, resting entirely within the discretion of the appellee, and which event the appellee may never cause to happen. In other words, taken literally, the appellee can defeat the payment of the debt due by her to the appellant by never selling the land. The debt is an absolute one, and is admitted by the appellee.

While there are some authorities to the contrary, the great weight of authority and the best-reasoned cases hold that in cases of this kind the debt becomes due absolutely within a reasonable time. In the case of De Wolfe v. French, 51 Me. 420, it was held that where a debt is due absolutely, and the happening of a future event is fixed upon as a convenient time for payment merely, and the future event does not happen as contemplated, the law implies a promise to pay within a reasonable time.

In Sears v. Wright, 24 Me. 278, where a note was payable "from the avails of the logs bought of M. M., when there is a sale made," it was held "not payable upon a contingency, but absolutely, and when a reasonable time had elapsed to make sale of the logs," and that it was the duty of the maker to sell them. But whether it be logs to be sold or a farm can make no difference. The maker of the note is to make sale within a reasonable time to enable him to discharge his indebtedness.

The case of Crooker v. Holmes, 65 Me. 195, 20 Am. Rep. 687, is a case where there was a promise to pay $200 when a farm was sold. In that case the court held that the debt was due absolutely within a reasonable time. In the case at bar it will be noted that there was no provision to pay the $150 out of any particular fund, but it was a promise to pay absolutely when the land was sold and the proceeds of sale collected. The case of Noland v. Bull, 24 Or. 479, 33 Pac. 983, is one where the plaintiff sold and conveyed to the defendant certain real property known as the Stephens ranch for an agreed price of $2,000, of which $1,500 was paid in cash, and the balance of $500 was to be paid when the defendant sold the said ranch. After waiting seven years the plaintiff brought suit, and that court held that the agreement was in effect to pay the $500 within a reasonable time, and that the seven years which had elapsed prior to the commencement of the suit constituted a reasonable time. The court in part says: "The $500 was an existing indebtedness at the time the agreement was executed by the defendant and accepted by the plaintiff, the effect of which agreement was to postpone or defer the time of payment of an already due and existing debt to an uncertain date dependent upon the accomplishment of a specified transaction, viz., the sale of the Stephens ranch at the price mentioned. Where there is a present debt then due, constituting the basis of an agreement, which merely postpones the time of its payment to an uncertain future date, when a certain specified transaction shall be accomplished, the agreement is to pay within a reasonable time, whether such transaction is accomplished or not."

In the case of Nunez v. Dautel, 19 Wall. 562, 22 L. ed. 161, there was an agreement "to pay as soon as the crop can be sold or the money raised from any other source." It was there held payable within a reasonable time. The court says in its opinion: "It could not have been the intention of the parties that if the crop were destroyed, or from any other cause could never be sold, and the defendants could not procure the money from any other source, the debt should never be paid. Such a result would be a mockery of justice."

In the case of Randall v. Johnson, 59 Miss. 317, 42 Am. Rep. 365, the note provided for its payment ninety days after the first return trip of the schooner Mary Bloom. The schooner was lost at sea. The court held that the money became payable ninety days after the expiration of the period of time usually required for a return trip of the schooner. In conclusion this opinion says: "It would be 'a mockery of justice' to hold that, because the schooner was lost at sea, and therefore had not made her first return trip, the appellee lost his debt."

It would be inequitable and unjust to hold that the appellee has it within her power to defeat the payment of this note by failing to make a sale of the land. It was her duty to have sold the same within a reasonable time.

The only question which remains is whether or not she had had a reasonable time to make this sale before the trustee advertised the land under the deed of trust. This note is dated the 29th day of January, 1911. The trustee advertised the same for sale on the 2d day of February, 1915. A period of four years had elapsed between the date of the note and the date of the advertisement.

The testimony in the case shows that the appellee had made some effort to sell the land. There is no showing, however, that there were any exceptional circumstances which prevented her from making the sale during the above period of time. We are therefore of the opinion that the appellee has had a reasonable time within which to sell this land, and that the note was due at the time of the date of the advertisement of sale by the trustee.

It therefore follows that the judgment of the lower court is reversed, the injunction dissolved, and the bill dismissed.

Annotation—Time of payment of obligation purporting to be payable on specified event, the happening of which is wholly or partially within the control of the promisor.

On effect of promise to pay as soon as promisor can, see note to Benton v. Benton, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 300.

As to the admissibility of parol evidence that written instrument for the payment of money was executed in reliance upon a parol promise that payment was subject to a condition not incorporated therein, see note to Gandy v. Weckerly, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 434. The question there covered differs from the one that may arise in the present note, since here, the condition being incorporated in the instrument, parol evidence, if admitted, must be for the purpose of aiding the interpretation of the condition.

In HUGHES v. McEWEN, ante, 1048, the position that the note was payable at the date mentioned therein at all events, and sooner if the land should be sold before that time, was held to be untenable. Had the court supported this proposition, of course the question made the subject of this annotation could not have arisen.<sup>1</sup>

As indicated in the title, this note is concerned for the most part with cases in which the happening of the event upon <sup>1</sup> This preliminary question is not within the scope of this note, and is not here annotated exhaustively. The wording of the particular note was such that it seems quite obvious that the position taken by the court was the correct one. A comparison of its wording with that of a few cases in which the opposing position was taken makes the soundness of the court's position in the HUGHES CASE more obvious.

It has been held that a note is payable on or before the date named therein, that L.R.A.1917B.

is, payable in any event at that date, and before, if the contingency happens before, —where the wording was:

$284.

Denver, Colorado, January 12, 1882.

On or before March 12, 1882, after date, I promise to pay to the order of J. O. Allen two hundred and eighty-four dollars, at the City National Bank, with interest 10 per cent per annum. Value received. This note becomes due and payable when (if before March 12, 1882) Allen, Burke, & Company shall dispose of which the debt is payable is wholly or partially within the control of the promisor. For the reason, however, that some courts have not distinguished this class of cases clearly from the cases in which the promisor has no control over the happening of the event,<sup>2</sup> some cases of the latter class have been cited for the purpose of distinction; but the note does not purport to be exhaustive of that class of cases.

When an instrument purports to be a part or all their interest in the New York Hotel, or when the interest of M. C. Burke may be sold or disposed of.

(Signed) M. C. Burke.

And indorsed, William Kiskadden.

Kiskadden v. Allen (1883) 7 Colo. 207, 3 Pac. 221;

—where the note read as follows:

Aurora, August 26th, 1858.

Four months after date, or as soon as I shall be able to collect a certain note against Abram Davis, of Chicago, for value received, I promise to pay G. Marlett or bear one hundred and twenty-five dollars, with use.

(Signed) S. McCarty.

McCarty v. Howell (1860) 24 Ill. 341;

—where the note read as follows: $120. May 2, 1871.

On the 1st day of September, 1871 (or before, if made out of the sale of J. B. Drake's horse hayfork and hay carrier), I promise to pay James B. Drake or order one hundred and twenty dollars, for value received, with use.

John W. Cisne.

Witness: George W. Schroyer.

Cisne v. Chidester (1877) 85 Ill. 524;

—where the note read as follows:

$500. May 8th, 1872.

Six months after date, or before, if made out of the sale of Drake's horse hayfork and hay carrier, I promise to pay to James B. Drake or order five hundred dollars, payable at the Citizens National Bank of Indianapolis, value received, with use, without any relief from valuation or appraisal laws. If suit be instituted to enforce the payment thereof, I agree to pay a reasonable attorney's fee. The drawers and indorsers severally waive presentment for payment, protest, and notice of protest and nonpayment of this note.

(Signed) James P. Walker.

Walker v. Woollen (1876) 54 Ind. 165, 23 Am. Rep. 639;

—where the note read as follows:

$400. February 5th, 1872.

Six months after date (or before, if made out of the sale of J. B. Drake's horse hayfork and hay carrier, we promise to pay James B. Drake or order four hundred dollars, payable at the First National Bank at Indianapolis, value received, with use, without any relief from valuation or appraisal laws. If suit shall be instituted to enforce the payment hereof, we agree to pay a reasonable attorney's fee. Woollen v. Ulrich (1878) 64 Ind. 120;

—where the note read:

October 18, 1880.

Twelve months after date (or before, if made out of the sale of Drake's horse hayfork and hay carrier), I promise to L.R.A.1917B.

pay to James B. Drake or bearer sixty dollars, negotiable and payable at the First National Bank, Sioux City, Iowa, with 10 per cent interest after date until paid. If interest is not paid when due the same shall bear interest at 10 per cent; and if expenses and costs are incurred by the holder in consequence of a failure to pay at maturity, the undersigned agrees to pay a collection fee of 10 per cent on the amount due.

D. M. Reed.

Charlton v. Reed (1883) 61 Iowa, 166, 47 Am. St. Rep. 808, 16 N. W. 64;

—where the note read as follows:

Wyandotte, Kansas, May 4, 1870.

In consideration of a purchase from Jacob Palmer of a right patented May 18th, 1869, by Theodore De Kamp, of Kirkwood, Missouri, for making and vending wooden spring seats for wagons, I hereby promise to pay him two hundred and fifty dollars in six months, or as soon as I can with due diligence make the money out of said patent right.

M. Hummer.

Palmer v. Hummer (1872) 10 Kan. 464, 15 Am. Rep. 353;

—where the note read:

New Ashford, March 13th, 1840.

For value received, I promise to pay John Pero or bearer five hundred and seventy dollars and fifty cents, it being for property I purchased of him in value at this date, as being payable as soon as can be realized of the above amount for the said property I have this day purchased of said Pero, which is to be paid in the course of the season now coming.

Bushrod Buck.

Cota v. Buck (1844) 7 Met. (Mass.) 588, 41 Am. Dec. 464;

—where the note read as follows:

Gardner's Dec. 9th, 1861.

Nine months after date, or as J. W. Barger's horse earns the money in the cavalry of the C. S. A. Army, we, or either of us, promise to pay Jno. A. Gardner or bearer ninety dollars, for a horse this day sold by him to said Barger for cavalry service.

J. W. Barger.

H. C. McCutchen.

Gardner v. Barger (1871) 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 668.

<sup>2</sup> For example, the court in HUGHES v. McEWEN, ante, 1048, cites De Wolfe v. French (1864) 51 Me. 420, to the proposition that, "where a debt is due absolutely, and the happening of a future event is fixed upon as a convenient time for payment merely, and the future event does not happen as contemplated, the law implies a promise to pay within a reasonable time." In the payable upon the happening of a certain event, the question which must precede any inquiry as to the time of payment, assuming that the event has not happened, is whether the instrument imports an absolute liability. If the event is one that is certain to happen, the mere promise to pay may import such an absolute liability. But if the event is one wholly or partially within the promisor's control, and therefore not certain to happen, the absolute character of the liability cannot be inferred,<sup>3</sup> as it may in the case of a note, from the mere

Maine case the debt was payable when a certain vessel returned to a certain port. Not only was the event not within the control of the promisor, but it was proved that the event could never happen,—the vessel had been sunk before its return. The holding was that, "where the debt is absolute, the law will require the payment to be made within a reasonable time after it is ascertained that the event will never happen." The holding assumed that the debt was absolute and that the event could not possibly happen. It would be very much more reasonable to assume that the debt is absolute in a case like this—where both parties evidently regarded the event as certain and made no provision for a chance failure—than it would be to assume that it is absolute in a case where the promisor can control the happening of the event. The happening of the event, at the time suit was commenced, was an impossibility, while in the HUGHES CASE the happening of the event was still possible. These facts show that the Maine case is not authority to control cases that come within the scope of the present note.

In Randall v. Johnson (1881) 59 Miss. 317, 42 Am. Rep. 365, cited by the court in HUGHES v. McEWEN, the note read as follows:

$240. Moss Point, July 8, 1879.

Ninety days after the first return trip of the schooner Mary Bloom, I promise to pay to Nals Johnson or order the sum of two hundred and forty dollars as final payment on rigging, etc., furnished for said schooner, with interest at 6 per cent per annum from the date of return trip.

James Glass.

Surety, L. Randall.

The ship had been lost at sea, making it impossible that the event should ever happen. It was held that the note was due in ninety days after the time when the ship would in all probability have returned had no accident happened. So this citation was also not authoritative for the HUGHES CASE.

<sup>3</sup> On certainty of time of payment as affecting negotiability of commercial paper, see note to Joseph v. Catron, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1120.

Nunez v. Dautel (1873) 19 Wall. (U. S.) 560, 22 L. ed. 161; Brooks v. Hargreaves (1870) 21 Mich. 254; Sackett v. Palmer (1857) 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 179; Wiggins v. Vaught (1840) Cheves, L. (S. C.) 91; Carlos v. Fancourt (1794) 5 T. R. 482, 101 Eng. Reprint, 272.

In Brooks v. Hargreaves (1870) 21 Mich. 254, the note read as follows:

$583. Detroit, Mich., Dec. 24, 1867.

One year after date, for value received, L.R.A.1917B.

we promise to pay to Joseph Smith or bearer five hundred and eighty-three dollars, with interest,—this to be paid when any dividends shall be declared on such shares as Joseph Smith has been holding heretofore in the Agricultural & Broom Handle Manufacturing Company of Trenton, Mich.

(Signed) Geo. Hargraves & Bro.

The court stated the facts as follows: "The defendants pleaded the general issue. On the trial, the plaintiff having put the instrument in evidence, the defendants introduced evidence showing that said instrument was given by them to Joseph Smith for certain shares or certificates of stock in the Agricultural & Broom Handle Manufacturing Company of Trenton, which he transferred to them, and that for the same consideration, and as part of the same transaction, they also gave him another note or obligation in every respect like the one in suit, except that in place of the words 'one year' were written the words 'two years.' It was admitted that no dividends had been declared on said stock since said instruments were made. No other or further evidence was offered or introduced on either side." While not deciding absolutely what the meaning of the note was, the court said: "It is somewhat difficult to determine the precise meaning of this instrument. When read in the light of the circumstances referred to, it would appear as if it was intended to give credit for one and two years, and to require no payment at all until, by yielding some dividend, the stock sold should be found to have some real value. And such I think is the natural meaning of the language used." It was held that the instrument was not a promissory note, which imports a consideration.

In Sackett v. Palmer (1857) 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 179, the note read as follows: $550.

Ninety days after the dissolution of the copartnership between Nelson Chapin, of the party of the first part in said copartnership, and J. F. Palmer, of the party of the second part in said copartnership, and the settling of the books of the said firm, I, in behalf of the party of the second part, promise to pay to the said Nelson Chapin, of the party of the first part, five hundred and fifty dollars; the interest to be paid annually by the aforesaid J. F. Palmer, of the party of the second part in the aforesaid copartnership.

(Signed)

Nelson Palmer.

And the court held that this was not a promissory note for the reason that the promise, but must be sought in the other terms of the instrument or in extrinsic circumstances.<sup>4</sup> It is therefore a mistake to argue that an instrument made payable on the happening of an event that may or may not happen takes the standing of a note, which necessarily imports an absolute obligation, and then deduce the conclusion that it is payable in a reasonable time even though the event has not happened. That would be begging the question, for, while it is logical to conclude that if the debt is absolute the parties intended to fix a certain time—or a time that may be made certain—for its payment, the hypothesis would not be proved by assuming the certainty of the time of payment, as is the case with a note.

This, of course, does not mean that the instrument could not be so worded that it would be in itself very strong evidence that the debt was or was not an absolute one,<sup>5</sup> but it does mean that the circumstances should be considered together with the wording of the instru-settling of the books was an event that might never happen.

In Stamps v. Graves (1825) 11 N. C. (4 Hawks) 102, it was held that an instrument which read as follows:

I promise to pay John Stamps for John W. Graves the sum of two hundred and eighty-six dollars and 32/100, out of a bond, when it shall be collected, on James Daniel for the sum of four hundred and fifty-two dollars, due the 1st of March, 1820, eighteen hundred and twenty. 30th Dec. 1819.

(Signed) A. Graves, —was not a promissory note.

In Wiggins v. Vaught (1840) Cheves, L. (S. C.) 91, the promise was to pay "as soon as I am in possession of funds to do so, from the estate of B.," and the instrument was held to be not a promissory note. The court said: "In such a case the consideration must be stated and the agreement consequent thereupon; and the condition precedent to the liability must be averred to have happened. All these matters must be proved as laid. In the declaration before us, the note is stated as the promise, and the happening of the contingency or performance of the condition is averred. But nothing is said in the declaration, nor was there any proof given on the trial, about the consideration. The plaintiff was therefore neither on his allegation nor proof entitled to recover."

An instrument payable on a contingency, as one made payable out of an estate "when sold," cannot be declared on as a promissory note, within the statute 3 & 4 Anno. chap. 9. Carlos v. Fancourt (1794) 5 T. R. 482, 101 Eng. Reprint, 272.

<sup>4</sup> Nunez v. Dautel (1873) 19 Wall. (U. S.) 560, 22 L. ed. 161; Blake v. Coleman (1868) 22 Wis. 415, 99 Am. Dec. 53. It will be observed that most of the other cases cited herein assume that this proposition is correct. In practically all the cases the courts, in determining whether or not the debt is absolute, consider the extrinsic circumstances in connection with the wording of the particular instrument. In the Nunez Case the court held directly that the instrument, because made payable upon the happening of an event that was not sure to happen, was not a note, which imports a consideration, but was a mere agreement. It found, however, from the L.R.A.1917B.

wording and from circumstances, that the obligation was an absolute one.

<sup>5</sup> Nunez v. Dautel (U. S.) supra; Wolf v. Marsh (1880) 54 Cal. 228, 3 Mor. Min. Rep. 204; Swift Coal & Timber Co. v. Lewis (1916) 170 Ky. 588, 186 S. W. 479; Ubsdell v. Cunningham (1885) 22 Mo. 124; Allen v. Maxwell (1904) 56 W. Va. 227, 49 S. E. 242. See abstract of holding in these and other cases, as cited under footnote 6, infra.

The holding in Jones v. Eisler (1865) 3 Kan. 134, strongly supports this construction. The note read as follows: $237.37. Ottawa Creek, April 20th, 1860.

For value received (in cutting stone) by Gouliep Anders, I promise to pay, when I receive it from government, for losses sustained in August, 1856, or as soon as otherwise convenient, the sum of two hundred and thirty-seven dollars and thirty-seven cents.

John T. Jones.

The court said: "The first question presented by the record is, When did the note sued on become due? The note is not a conditional one. The maker owed the payee, who had performed labor for him. He declares in the paper that he has received the consideration, which all must admit was a valuable one. The existence of the debt was not made to depend upon a condition or contingency. Everything necessary to constitute a promissory note, except the time of payment, is clearly expressed. As to the time the language is peculiar. It could not have been contemplated that if Jones never got his money from the government, or never should be in a situation when he could conveniently pay, that the money never was to be payable. Jones evidently expected, within a reasonable time, to get money from the government, or failing in that, within a like time, it would otherwise be convenient to pay. After having performed work to the full amount of the note, it could not have been intended that Andres should never get his money unless Jones got his from the government, or should find it otherwise convenient to pay. The intention of the parties doubtless was that it should in any event be payable in a reasonable time, and such is the legal effect of the instrument."

ment, just as any other contract would be interpreted, in order to get the intention of the parties on the question of whether or not the debt was an absolute one.<sup>6</sup> The mere fact that the maker promised to pay a certain amount "when

<sup>6</sup> In Noland v. Bull (1893) 24 Or. 479, 33 Pac. 983, cited in HUGHES v. McEWEN, ante, 1048, the instrument read as follows:

This is to certify that I, the undersigned, do agree to pay the sum of five hundred dollars unto Delia Noland when the sale of the property known as the Stephens ranch shall be accomplished; the said place to be sold for not less than two thousand five hundred dollars.

(Signed)

Benjamin Bull.

The court, after hearing all the evidence surrounding the transaction of giving the note, found as a fact that there was a present indebtedness, and that it was the intention of the parties that the amount was to be paid in any event, and that the effect of the instrument was merely to postpone the time of payment. It therefore held that seven years was a reasonable time in which payment could be made.

In Allen v. Maxwell (1904) 56 W. Va. 227, 49 S. E. 242, the note read as follows: $805.

Due W. H. Lipscomb eight hundred and five dollars, borrowed money, to be repaid when collected off of Stone, Bowman, & Company out of drafts which I have had to pay for them. This March 9th, 1888.

Witness my hand and seal.

W. B. Maxwell (seal).

It was held that the promise in this note or his assigns could collect from the promisor only so much of the amount expressed in this instrument as the maker of the note actually succeeded in collecting from Stone, Bowman, & Company. It will be observed that in form this instrument would indicate that the debt was absolute, it being for "borrowed money." But it was proved that Lipscomb, the promisee, was a member of the firm of Stone, Bowman, & Company, for whom the promisor had indorsed; that on such indorsement he had been compelled to pay some $2,000. The note itself shows that the money was borrowed to help pay the indebtedness of that firm.

In Nunez v. Dantel (1873) 19 Wall. (U. S.) 560, 22 L. ed. 161, the note read as follows:

Columbus, Ga., Sept. 1, 1865.

Due Joseph Dantel or order, $1,619.66, being balance of principal and interest for four years and six months' services. This we will pay as soon as the crop can be sold or the money raised from any source; payable with interest. The court said: "The paper was clearly not a promissory note, because it was not payable at a time certain, and it was not such a duebill as the law regards as in effect a promissory note, for the same reason. Story, Promissory Notes, § 27; Salinas v. Wright (1854) 11 Tex. 575; Ex parte Tootell (1798) 4 Ves. Jr. 372, 31 Eng. Reprint, 189. It was made up of the following particulars: It acknowledged the amount specified, consisting of principal and interest, to be due to the plaintiff for four years and six months' services, and promised to pay him that sum, with interest, as soon as the crop could be sold, or the money could be raised from any other source. No time having been specified within which the crop should be sold or the money raised otherwise, the law annexed as an incident that one or the other should be done within reasonable time, and that the sum admitted to be due should be paid accordingly. Payment was not conditional to the extent of depending wholly and finally upon the alternatives mentioned. The stipulations secured to the defendants a reasonable amount of time within which to procure in one mode or the other the means necessary to meet the liability. Upon the occurrence of either of the events named or the lapse of such time, the debt became due. It could not have been the intention of the parties that if the crop were destroyed, or from any other cause could never be sold, and the defendants could not procure the money from any other source, the debt should never be paid. Such a result would be a mockery of justice."

The decision in Swift Coal & Timber Co. v. Lewis (1916) 170 Ky. 588, 186 S. W. 479, illustrates this point very nicely. The note read as follows:

Whitesburg, Ky., Feb. 5, 1913.

We bind ourselves to pay Martha Lewis $200, two hundred dollars, when the suit now pending in the Letcher court of Martha Lewis v. John E. Golden is settled in favor of Martha Lewis in full.

Swift Coal & Timber Co.,

by S. H. Fields.

The court, in holding that the note was not due while an appeal was pending from a judgment in defendant's favor in the suit referred to in the note, said: "The note provided that it was to become due when that suit had been 'settled in favor of Martha Lewis in full,' and, as the note was given in payment for land, the title to which was involved in the suit of Lewis v. Golden, it would seem reasonable that the provision in the note that it was not to become due until said suit was settled in full in favor of Martha Lewis could mean only that the note would be due and the money payable when said title litigated in that suit had been settled finally in her favor. This, in our judgment, is the only reasonable construction to put upon the words 'in full,' and must have been what was intended by the parties when the note was delivered and accepted. It therefore results that the note was not due when the suit was filed and a judgment entered thereon."

In Ubsdell v. Cunningham (1855) 22 Mo. 124, the court said: "The only question that can be made here is whether the obli-

I sell the piece of land" is not at all conclusive of the fact that it was given to secure an absolute debt.<sup>7</sup> Therefore no absolute rule can be established for the interpretation of these instruments in this respect. The same language used gation incurred by these notes is suspended upon the condition that the accounts referred to should be collected, or whether the words in one note, 'to be paid as soon as collected from my accounts at Pokeepsie,' and in the other, 'to be paid as soon as collected at Pokeepsie, now in the hands of H. B. P. of that place,' ought to 'be understood merely as prescribing the time of payment, by indicating the fund out of which the debtor expected to pay, and thereby securing to him the delay necessary to render it available. Both notes contain direct acknowledgments of indebtedness, the language being 'due Messrs. U. & P. — Dollars,' although only one of them discloses the cause of it (goods sold); and we think the subsequent words, 'to be paid,' etc., were not intended to show that the debts were conditional, depending for their existence as valid demands against the makers, upon the fact that the sums to be paid could be collected out of the accounts referred to, but only to prescribe the time of payment by reference not to days and years, but to a reasonable time for the collection of the accounts. This construction is warranted by the language used, and we have no doubt will execute the real intention of the parties. It being admitted that all had been collected upon these claims that could be collected, the term prescribed for the payment of the notes had expired, and they became due, according to our construction of them."

In Allen v. Davis (1848) 11 Mo. 479, the note read as follows:

I promise to pay to Thomas Isbell thirty dollars, without defalcation or discount, so soon as that amount can be made from a suit now pending in the Charlton circuit court, in which I am plaintiff, and the heirs and representatives of James H. Usher, late deceased, are defendants, as witness my hand, this 9th July, 1844.

Th. H. Allen, and it was held that the note was not due until the money was paid out of the suit then pending, to which the instrument referred. There were two suits pending in which the maker of the note was plaintiff, and the only real question before the court was as to which suit the instrument referred to.

In Wilson v. Morrison (1859) 29 Ga. 269, a note read as follows:

On or by the 25th December, 1855, I promise to pay B. J. Wilson or bearer one hundred and seventy-seven dollars, with interest from date. This 10th December, 1853, for value received; said note to be paid out of a certain note I have this day traded to said Morrison, on L. B. Perryman, when collected, due at the same time as the above.

(Signed) J. J. Morrison.

The court said: "Did the court err in L.R.A.1917B.

granting the nonsuit? We think not. The instrument declared on is so absurd as it stands that we may assume it to contain a mistake. It is probable that it was Wilson who drafted the instrument, and that he, by inadvertence, forgetting that he was writing for Morrison, used the words, 'a certain note I have this day traded to said Morrison,' instead of the words, a certain note the said B. J. Wilson has traded to me. Assuming this supposition to be true, did the court err in granting the nonsuit? What, on this supposition, does the instrument mean? This, we think: That Morrison promised to pay Wilson $177 by the 25th day of December, 1855, out of a note on Perryman, 'traded' by Wilson to Morrison, provided the note should, by that time, be collected, but if it should not be, then to pay him the $177 when the note should be collected, and not before. The promise was a promise to pay out of the proceeds of the note, and out of them only. This, we think, the most natural and obvious meaning of the instrument. Therefore, in the absence of aliunde evidence of a different meaning, we must say that this is the meaning. Taking this as the meaning, it is obvious that the nonsuit was right, for there was no proof that the Perryman note had been collected, or that it might, by the use of ordinary diligence, have been collected. We think, then, that the nonsuit was right."

<sup>7</sup> In Blake v. Coleman (1868) 22 Wis. 415, 99 Am. Dec. 53, the instrument was in the regular form of a promissory note, but upon the instrument were indorsed the words, "The conditions of the within note are as follows: L. S. Blake or bearer is not to ask or expect payment of said note until his, Coleman's, old mill is sold for a fair price," and it was held that this indorsement, if upon the note when delivery was made, reduced it to the plane of a mere conditional agreement, and that the debt could not be collected until the condition had been fulfilled. The court said: "The court below erred in holding that the instrument on which the action was brought was not affected by the indorsement on the back, but was admissible as a mere promissory note. It may be shown by parol that the indorsement was on the note at the time it was signed. And that being so, it became part of it, and turned it into a mere agreement. Chitty, Bills, 8th ed. pp. 160, 161; Leeds v. Lancashire (1809) 2 Campb. (Eng.) 205; Hartley v. Wilkinson (1815) 4 Campb. (Eng.) 127; Cook v. Kelsey (1859) 19 N. Y. 415. As this condition qualified the note, the action could not be sustained without showing that it had been fulfilled. We are inclined to think the legal effect of the indorsement is that the owner of the old fanning mill was to sell it, and that parol evidence would be incompetent to show that it was under different circumstances means different things.

The real significance of the provision that the instrument is payable upon the happening of an event that is wholly or partially within the control of the promisor is seen after it has been determined that the debt is or is not an absolute one. If the instrument, read in the light of the surrounding circumstances, shows that the debt is an absolute one, it is reasonable to suppose that the parties intended that a reasonable effort should be made to cause the event to happen within a reasonable time.<sup>3</sup> But in deciding what is reasonable it may appear that the happening of the event was not wholly within the control of the promisor,<sup>4</sup> for the reason that he may be compelled to deal with third parties, as in agreed that the plaintiff should sell it. But for the reason above stated, the judgment must be reversed and cause remanded for a new trial." See also other cases of sales cited throughout the note, especially those cited under footnote, 6, supra.

<sup>3</sup> See Nunez v. Dautel; Ubsdell v. Cunningham; and Noland v. Bull, as cited under footnote 6, supra; and Williston v. Perkins, as cited under footnote 10, infra.

Hicks v. Shouse (1856) 17 B. Mon. (Ky.) 483, was tried upon this theory. The instrument in question read as follows:

I have this day purchased a negro named John, belonging to Mrs. James McKinney, under two decrees of the Fayette circuit against her, in the names of Shouse & Smith and James H. Shouse & Co., for which negro I promise to pay James H. Shouse, who is the owner of said decrees, the sum of five hundred dollars; and I promise to pay said money so soon as I sell a house and lot in the city of Lexington, bought of C. J. Sanders and wife; and until said sale is made, I promise to pay 8 per cent interest per annum on said sum. November 29, 1848.

Beverly A. Hicks.

The court said: "A reasonable construction should be given to the covenant; the intention of the parties should be effectuated, if practicable, and their understanding carried out,—such a construction as, we think, results in the conclusion that the house and lot were to be sold in a reasonable time or the money be paid without a sale. The argument of defendant's counsel would, as it seems to us, lead to an absurdity, and would do violence to all reasonable calculation as to the intention of the parties. It leads to the conclusion that the defendant, by paying 8 per cent interest annually, might postpone the payment of the debt to an indefinite period. As we understand the covenant, construing it according to its reason and spirit, the plaintiff was willing, and intended, that the defendant, by paying an annual interest of 8 per cent, might have a reasonable time to make sale of his house and lot, not that he might sell when he pleased and pay when he pleased. A reasonable time has elapsed for the sale, and it has not been made; and it is not stated by the defendant that he could not sell, but only that he could not sell at what he esteemed a reasonable and fair value for the property. It could have been sold at its market value at any time, and the contrary is not even intimated. If the defendant thought proper not to sell for the market value, he ought, after the lapse of a reasonable time for a sale at his own price, and his failure to sell, to pay the money."

L.R.A.1917B.

In Scull v. Roane (1831) Hempst. 103, Fed. Cas. No. 12,570c, the note read as follows:

Due Samuel C. Roane $160.05, value received. N. B. This note to be paid when Mrs. Sarah Embree shall settle her account with H. Scull. March 7, 1828.

(Signed) H. Scull.
It was held that it was the duty of the promisor to force a settlement of his account with the third party named in the instrument, within a reasonable time after signing the instrument, and if he neglected to do so, the debt represented by the instrument could be collected. It will be observed that the control of the event was wholly within the control of the promisor, since she could force a settlement of her account with the third party by court procedure.

<sup>4</sup> In Stout v. Hill (1867) 45 Ill. 326, the note read as follows:

Due Daniel Condon or order $464, with interest at 10 per cent, to be paid as soon as I have time to foreclose a mortgage given by William Cantlin and Michael Roach to said Condon, dated September 6, 1856, for $480, and by him this day assigned to me, and to sell said land by a judicial sale; or as soon as I shall otherwise dispose or settle said mortgage.

Warren Hill.

May 4, 1858.

The court said: "The record shows the land mortgaged was covered by a homestead right, and that right set up in the proceedings to foreclose, and properly recognized and allowed by the court. It is very evident, we think, that, by the express terms of the instrument, the money specified in it is not yet due. It was not to be paid until the mortgage could be foreclosed and the land sold. The homestead claim has prevented this, as this court has repeatedly decided, consequently the time of payment has not yet arrived, and the suit was premature. Should the homestead right expire by its own limitation as provided in the statute, or be abandoned, then the note will be due and payable, and not before."

In Wilder v. Sprague (1863) 50 Me. 354, where defendant had accepted an order drawn upon him for a definite amount, "when you sell the wharf logs I have hauled for you this winter," and three years the case of a sale of land. While, as some courts have well said, it would be a mockery of justice to permit him to defeat the object of the obligation altogether by refusing or neglecting to sell, yet it would be no less a mockery of justice to compel him to sacrifice a valuable property in order to bring about the happening of the event within an arbitrarily set time. So it would seem that the good faith of his efforts to sell at a reasonable price should be considered in fixing upon the time that is considered reasonable,<sup>10</sup> even though the debt has been held to be absolute.

If he has put it out of his power to cause the event to happen, of course, the case is analogous to one in which he never had the power, and in which it is certain that the event will never happen.<sup>11</sup> Such a case would not be author-thereafter suit was brought to charge defendant on the acceptance, it was held that defendant must be permitted to show that he had used reasonable diligence in trying to sell the logs, but had been unable to do so, and the question was then left to the jury. The court pointed out that in the earlier case of Sears v. Wright (1844) 24 Me. 278, the defendant had put it out of his power to sell the logs.

<sup>10</sup> In Williston v. Perkins (1876) 51 Cal. 554, the instrument read as follows:

Vallejo, Cal., July 11, 1874.

This certifies that Chas. Booth is entitled to receive fifteen dollars and 75/100 in payment for three and a half days' work in the employ of the Vallejo Co-operative Ship Building Association, when the three-masted schooner now in course of construction by said association is sold. This certificate, when properly indorsed, is payable to bearer.

Joseph Perkins, President.

Orin C. Junkins, Secretary.

The court found "that the defendants did not use reasonable diligence in the construction of the vessel, and did not make an honest effort to sell it at its market price, and render judgment for the plaintiff."

In Worden v. Dodge (1847) 4 Denio (N. Y.) 159, 47 Am. Dec. 247, where the amount was made payable "out of the net proceeds after paying the costs and expenses of ore to be raised and sold from the bed on the lot this day conveyed by Edward Madden to Edwin Dodge, which bed is to be opened and the ore disposed of as soon as conveniently may be," it was held that a nonsuit was properly entered as the plaintiff had not proved that enough had been received out of the proceeds of the ore to pay the sum named in the agreement, nor that defendants had failed to realize such sum from any fault or neglect on their part.

<sup>11</sup> See footnote 1, supra.

The decision in Sears v. Wright (1844) 24 Me. 278, cited in HUGHES v. MCEWEN, ante, 1048, is based upon this theory. The note read as follows:

For value received, we promise to pay Silas Sears two hundred and thirty-three dollars and ninety-six cents, from the avails of logs bought of Martin Mower, when there is a sale made.

$233.96.

Winslow Wright & Co.

The defendant at the time of the suit had put it out of his power to cause the event to happen. He had caused the logs to be manufactured into boards, and he claimed that he had lost heavily on the deal, and this was his only defense. The court held that the obligation was absolute, and that the defendant had a reasonable time in which to sell the logs and pay it. It excluded all evidence of his losses.

The same court in a later case (Wilder v. Sprague (1863) 50 Me. 354) took this view and made the distinction. It there said: "The case of Sears v. Wright (Me.) supra, varies in very material respect from the one now before us. There the logs had been manufactured into boards and the boards had been sold before the suit was commenced. Parol evidence was offered to vary the meaning of the written contract entered into by the defendant, and was excluded. The exclusion was adjudged proper. As the defendant in that case had long before manufactured the logs into boards, it was impossible to show the logs could not have been sold, if they had not been manufactured. The similarity between the cases is apparent rather than real."

In Crooker v. Holmes (1875) 65 Me. 195, 20 Am. Rep. 687, cited by the court in HUGHES v. MCEWEN, the note was made "payable when I sell my place where I now live, in Oxford, Me.," and was given to secure a debt that had nothing whatever to do with the place in Oxford, Maine. The note was also secured by a mortgage which did not recite the condition. At the time of the suit the property in question had been sold upon an execution, and it was therefore impossible for the event to happen, if it had not already happened. The court said: "If a party puts it out of his power to perform his contract, his liability at once accrues. It matters not whether by his neglect this be so, or whether it be intentional. The maker of a note, by his indebtedness and suffering judgment and execution to issue against him and a levy to be made, is not to be thereby permitted to defeat a debt justly due. It was the fault or neglect of the complainant's mortgagor that he was unable to sell his farm. Had he paid his debts, the sale of the equity would not have happened. But the complainant is not to suffer on that account."

Where an instrument is made in the form of a promissory note and the condition is added that "this note is made with the express understanding that if the coal mines in the Marsh ranch yields no profits to me, then this note is not to be paid, and the obligation herein expressed shall be null.

ity for cases in which the promisor claimed to be still doing his best to sell.

and void," no cause of action arises upon the instrument until the maker of the note receives some profits from the mine, or puts it out of his power to receive profits by the sale of the mine, and the Statute of Limitations does not begin to run until a cause of action arises, even though the note is given as part payment of a prior obligation which is then due. But when the maker disposes of all his interest in the mine by a sale thereof to a stranger, a cause of action at once arises upon the note, and it is not barred until the expiration of the full statutory period of limitation, counting from that date. Wolf v. Marsh (1880) 54 Cal. 228, 3 Mor. Min. Rep. 204.

J. W. M.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

WILLIAM J. PERRY, SR., Admr., etc., of William J. Perry, Jr., Deceased, Appt.,
v.

ROCHESTER LIME COMPANY, Respt.

(219 N. Y. 60, 113 N. E. 529.)

Proximate cause — explosion — leaving explosives unguarded.

Wrongfully leaving explosives stored in a public place is not the proximate cause of the injury where boys take an unmarked box of explosives from the unlocked chest where it was stored, and, after concealing it over night, attempt to make some use of it the next day, when an explosion occurs, to the injury of a playmate who is with them.

For other cases, see Proximate Cause, II. d., in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(July 25, 1916.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Fourth Department, affirming a judgment of a Trial Term for Monroe County, overruling his exceptions, and denying a motion for a new trial, in an action brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate, alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. C. D. Kiehel and Claude S. Smith, for appellant:

It was a question of fact for the jury to determine from the evidence whether the defendant maintained a nuisance on the banks of the canal, and if it found that the defendant maintained such a nuisance, the plaintiff's right to damages must follow as a corollary.

People v. Sands, 1 Johns. 78, 3 Am. Dec. 296, Myers v. Malcolm, 6 Hill, 292, 41 Am. Dec. 744; Heeg v. Licht, 80 N. Y. 579, 36 Am. Rep. 654, 11 Mor. Min. Rep. 74; Cohen v. New York, 113 N. Y. 532, 4 L.R.A. 406, 10 Am. St. Rep. 506, 21 N. E. 700; Wells v. Brooklyn, 9 App. Div. 61, 41 N. Y. Supp. 143; Prussak v. Hutton, 30 App. Div. 66, 51 N. Y. Supp. 761; Wittleder v. Citizens' Electric Illuminating Co. 47 App. Div. 410, 62 N. Y. Supp. 297; Travell v. Bannerman, 174 N. Y. 47, 66 N. E. 583; Frank v. Warsaw, 198 N. Y. 403, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 676, 92 N. E. 17, 1 N. C. C. A. 917; MacPherson v. Buick Motor Co. 217 N. Y. 382, L.R.A.1916F, 696, 111 N. E. 1050, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 440; Thomas v. Winchester, 6 N. Y. 397, 57 Am. Dec. 455; Torgesen v. Schultz, 192 N. Y. 156, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 726, 127 Am. St. Rep. 894, 84 N. E. 956; Statler v. Geo. A. Ray Mfg. Co. 195 N. Y. 478, 83 N. E. 1063; Kinney v. Koopman, 116 Ala. 310, 37 L.R.A. 497, 67 Am. St. Rep. 119, 22 So. 593; Akin v. Bradley Engineering & Machinery Co. 48 Wash. 97, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 586, 92 Pac. 903; Wells v. Gallagher, 144 Ala. 363, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 759, 113 Am. St. Rep. 50, 39 So. 747; Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 24 L. ed. 256.

Any intervening or contributing cause or causes of the intestate's death do not preclude a recovery against the defendant, but the liability may be attributed to all of them.

Ring v. Cohoes, 77 N. Y. 83, 33 Am. Rep. 574; Lilly v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 107 N. Y. 566, 14 N. E. 503; Kremer v. New York Edison Co. 102 App. Div. 433, 92 N. Y. Supp. 883, affirmed 186 N. Y. 557, 79 N. E. 1109; Murphy v. Hudson River Teleph. Co. 127 App. Div. 450, 112 N. Y. Supp. 149, affirmed in 196 N. Y. 505, 89 N. E. 1106; Rossiter v. Cooper's Glue Factory, 15 App. Div. 413, 140 N. Y. Supp. 296.

Note. — As to liability for injury to children from explosives left accessible to them, including the question of proximate cause, see annotation to Folsom-Morris Coal Min. Co. v. De Vork, L.R.A.1917A, 1295, and earlier notes there referred to.

Generally as to intervening act of third person as affecting proximate cause in case of injury by explosives, see note to Clark v. Du Pont de Nemours Powder Co. L.R.A. 1915E, 479.

Generally as to violation of statute or ordinance relating to explosives as ground for private action, see note to Molin v. Wisconsin Land & Lumber Co. 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 876. L.R.A.1917B.

Messrs. Wile & Oviatt, for respondent:

In order to render the defendant liable, whether it be said that the defendant was guilty of maintaining a nuisance, or was guilty of negligence, the wrongful act of the defendant must be the proximate cause of the injury.

Ehrgott v. New York, 96 N. Y. 264, 48 Am. Rep. 622; 38 Cyc. 442; Laidlaw v. Sage, 158 N. Y. 73, 44 L.R.A. 216, 52 N. E. 679.

No act or omission on the part of the defendant can possibly be said to have been the proximate cause of death.

Martin v. Althaus, 139 App. Div. 622, 124 N. Y. Supp. 83; Miller v. Bahmmuller, 124 App. Div. 558, 108 N. Y. Supp. 924; Demarest v. 42d Street, M. & St. N. Ave. R. Co. 104 App. Div. 503, 93 N. Y. Supp. 663; Rider v. Syracuse Rapid Transit R. Co. 171 N. Y. 139, 58 L.R.A. 125, 63 N. E. 836; Trapp v. McClellan, 68 App. Div. 362, 74 N. Y. Supp. 130; Independent Ice Cream Co. v. United Ice Cream Co. 69 Misc. 623, 125 N. Y. Supp. 1106; Beetz v. Brooklyn 10 App. Div. 382, 41 N. Y. Supp. 1009; Tucker v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 124 N. Y. 308, 21 Am. St. Rep. 670, 26 N. E. 916; McDonald v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 80 App. Div. 233, 80 N. Y. Supp. 577; Fortune v. Hall, 122 App. Div. 250, 106 N. Y. Supp. 787; Loftus v. Dehail, 133 Cal. 214, 66 Pac. 379; O'Connor v. Brucker, 117 Ga. 451, 43 S. E. 731, 13 Am. Neg. Rep. 500; Tutein v. Hurley, 98 Mass. 211, 93 Am. Dec. 154; Marsh v. Giles, 211 Pa. 17, 60 Atl. 315; Stephenson v. Corder, 71 Kan. 475, 69 L.R.A. 246, 114 Am. St. Rep. 500, 80 Pac. 938, 18 Am. Neg. Rep. 97; Stark v. Muskegon Traction & Lighting Co. 141 Mich. 575, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 822, 104 N. W. 1100; McGhee v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. 147 N. C. 142, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 119, 60 S. E. 912; Scheffer v. Washington City V. M. & G. S. R. Co. 105 U. S. 249, 26 L. ed. 1070; Holmes v. Delaware & H. Co. 128 App. Div. 24, 112 N. Y. Supp. 421; Lowery v. Western U. Tele. Co. 60 N. Y. 198, 19 Am. Rep. 154; Saverio-Cella v. Brooklyn Union Elev. R. Co. 55 App. Div. 98, 66 N. Y. Supp. 1021; Davy v. Lyons, 71 Misc. 139, 127 N. Y. Supp. 1083; Horn v. Breakstone, 75 Misc. 343, 133 N. Y. Supp. 285; Afflick v. Bates, 21 R. I. 281, 79 Am. St. Rep. 801, 43 Atl. 539; Hall v. New York Teleph. Co. 214 N. Y. 49, L.R.A.1915E, 191, 108 N. E. 182.

Cardozo, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant stored explosives in a chest on the bank of the Erie Canal in the city of Rochester. It stored them in a public place and in violation of law. Two L.R.A.1917B.

boys carried away some of the boxes, secreted them in a barn, and, handling the contents the next day, brought about an explosion. A little boy of eight years, who was near them, was killed. The question is whether the defendant may be held to answer for his death.

A narrow strip of land separates the defendant's warehouse from the Erie canal. This land is public property. Boys were accustomed to go there to play and to fish. On this public space the defendant kept a chest of nitroglycerin caps, used to explode dynamite. The caps were packed in tin boxes, which were marked "Blasting Caps, Handle with Care," and the tin boxes were packed in a wooden box. The wooden boxes were without marks; they had sliding covers, which were closed; and they were about 1 foot long and 9 inches high. Each wooden box contained at least 33 tin boxes.

On Sunday, November 12, 1911, this chest of explosives was left open. It was seen in that condition during the afternoon and evening by the operator of a nearby bridge. The practice had been to keep it closed and locked. So far as the record shows, it had never been left open before. Between 5 and 6 o'clock, John McGuire, a boy of thirteen years, and Archie Clark, a boy of twelve, went by the warehouse on an errand. There is evidence that on their way back they stopped at the chest and carried off one of the wooden boxes. They took supper that evening at the house of a friend. Before supper, they hid the boxes in the back yard. During the evening they showed the caps to their playmates. They had some of the tin boxes in their hands and other caps in their pockets. Before they left for home, they went to the yard, emptied the contents of most of the tin boxes into the wooden box, and carried the spoils away. Arriving home, they hid the box in a neighboring barn. Their home was with the Perry family, and about half a mile from the defendant's warehouse.

After school hours the next day, Mrs. Perry saw McGuire in the barn, and heard him call to Clark to join him. They came out of the barn with a wooden box. She did not know at the time what was in it. They walked off, carrying the box, and the Perry boy, eight years of age, ran after them. The mother sent her little girl to call the boy back, but he was out of sight. A few minutes later, there was the sound of an explosion. McGuire and Clark and the Perry boy were killed. This action involves the defendant's liability for the death of Perry only.

The defendant stored the explosives without a permit and in violation of an ordinance. It stored them, moreover, in a public place. It thus became a wrongdoer, and answerable as such for the proximate consequences of the wrong. It became answerable, in other words, for those consequences that ought to have been foreseen by a reasonably prudent man. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Calhoun, 213 U. S. 1, 7, 53 L. ed. 671, 674, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 321; McDowell v. Great Western R. Co. [1903] 2 K. B. 331, 337, 72 L. J. K. B. N. S. 652, 88 L. T. N. S. 825, 19 Times L. R. 562; Hall v. New York Teleph. Co. 214 N. Y. 49, L.R.A.1915E, 191, 108 N. E. 182.

But we cannot say that what was done with these explosives was something that ought to have been foreseen. The chest, it is true, was open; but the caps were not exposed. A large wooden box hid them. The boys did not play with caps scattered about loosely. They did not play at all. They carried away a large wooden box containing 33 smaller boxes, and appropriated the contents. They stole the caps in quantities that must have carried notice even to boys of their age that the act was wrongful. Indeed, there is good reason to believe that they stole, not for play, but for profit, intending to sell the spoils as junk. The defendant had done nothing to invite or provoke this theft. It had not scattered the caps about, or even exposed them to view, so that children might feel tempted, and perhaps licensed, to handle and play with them. It had packed the caps in tins, and then hidden the tins from sight by packing them in wooden boxes. The theft of one of the boxes was no more to be looked for than the theft of the whole chest. It was possible, of course, that the contents would be stolen by boys, or even by adults. But nothing in the situation made that outcome probable. In short, a series of new and unexpected causes intervened, and had to intervene, before these explosives could bring death to Perry. Not one of them was within the range of reasonable expectation. Boys discovered the hidden caps, stole a box, carried it to their home a half a mile away, and killed a playmate. His death was not the proximate result of the open chest in the highway.

We are not without apt precedents for this conclusion. Horan v. Watertown, 217 Mass. 185, 104 N. E. 464; Jacobs v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 212 Mass. 97, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 41, 98 N. E. 688; Afflick v. Bates, 21 R. I. 281, 79 Am. St. Rep. 801, 43 Atl. 539; Hall v. New York Teleph. Co. supra. Indeed, the cases in other jurisdictions go farther than we need to go here, and farther, perhaps, than we should be willing to go. Very similar in its facts is Horan v. Watertown, 217 Mass. 185, 104 L.R.A.1917B.

N. E. 464. Employees of the defendant's sewer department left a tool chest in a highway, unlocked and unwatched. The chest contained dynamite. Some boys took sticks of dynamite out of the chest, and threw them on a bonfire which they built in an adjoining field. The plaintiff, who was standing with other boys about the fire, was badly burned from the explosion. The court held that the wrongful storage of the dynamite was not the proximate cause of the injury. Yet the case at bar is even a clearer one for the defendant. There the dynamite was exposed to view; here it was concealed. There the explosion followed close upon the trespass; proximity in time and place gave unity to the transaction. Here the period of a day and the space of a half a mile intervened, and separated the theft from the explosion. The motives and impulses which provoked the theft had cooled, and a wrongful asportation had placed the thing of danger in new and strange surroundings. Jacobs v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 212 Mass. 97, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 41, 98 N. E. 688.

Nothing in our ruling is in conflict with the recognition of a duty to protect the young and heedless from themselves, and guard them against perils that may reasonably be foreseen. To define the orbit of that duty is unnecessary now. Travell v. Bannerman, 71 App. Div. 439, 75 N. Y. Supp. 866, Id., 174 N. Y. 47, 66 N. E. 583; Union P. R. Co. v. McDonald, 152 U. S. 262, 38 L. ed. 434, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 619; Walsh v. Fitchburg R. Co. 145 N. Y. 301, 27 L.R.A. 724, 45 Am. St. Rep. 615, 39 N. E. 1068; Daniels v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 154 Mass. 349, 13 L.R.A. 248, 26 Am. St. Rep. 253, 28 N. E. 283; Lynch v. Nurdin, 1 Q. B. 29, 113 Eng. Reprint, 104, 4 Perry & D. 672, 10 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 73, 5 Jur. 797; Clark v. Chambers, L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 327, 331, 47 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 427, 38 L. T. N. S. 454, 26 Week. Rep. 613, 19 Eng. Rul. Cas. 28; Harrold v. Watney [1898] 2 Q. B. 320, 322, 67 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 771, 78 L. T. N. S. 788, 14 Times L. R. 486, 46 Week. Rep. 642. It is enough to assume that there are times and circumstances that will call the duty into play. The remoteness of the relation controls our judgment, and distinguishes the case at hand from others where liability has been enforced. Thus, in Travell v. Bannerman, 71 App. Div. 439, 75 N. Y. Supp. 866; id., 174 N. Y. 47, 66 N. E. 583, the explosives were thrown into a vacant lot, they were apparently mere refuse, and the defendant ought to have foreseen that a child would think itself at liberty to handle them. The situation was much the same in Wells v. Gallagher, 144 Ala. 363, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 759, 113 Am. St.

Rep. 50, 39 So. 747. In other cases, the defendant intentionally put the dangerous implement in the hands of one incompetent to use it, and was chargeable with knowledge of the consequences. That was so in Carter v. Towne, 98 Mass. 567, 96 Am. Dec. 632, where gunpowder was sold to a child, and in Dixon v. Bell, 5 Maule & S. 198, 105 Eng. Reprint, 1023, 1 Starkie, 287, 17 Revised Rep. 308, 19 Eng. Rul. Cas. 26, where a loaded gun was given to an inexperienced maidservant, and in Anderson v. Settergren, 100 Minn. 294, 111 N. W. 279, where, in violation of a statute, there was a sale of firearms to a minor. Sullivan v. Creed [1904] 2 Ir. R. 317, 2 B. R. C. 139, is a case where a loaded gun was left beside a highway. That a traveler would innocently pick it up and injure a bystander was held to be a consequence that might reasonably be foreseen. Lynch v. Nurdin, 1 Q. B. 29, 113 Eng. Reprint, 1041, 4 Perry & D. 672, 10 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 73, 5 Jur. 797, is a case where a horse was left unattended in the street. The chance that someone would set it in motion was within the range of prudent foresight. Other cases, more or less similar in some features, are to be distinguished on like grounds. Illidge v. Goodwin, 5 Car. & P. 192; Clark v. Chambers, L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 327, 331, 47 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 427, 38 L. T. N. S. 454, 26 Week. Rep. 613, 19 Eng. Rul. Cas. 28; Williams v. Eady, 10 Times L. R. 41; Powers v. Harlow, 58 Mich. 507, 51 Am. Rep. 154, 19 N. W. 257; Mattson v. Minnesota & N. W. R. Co. 95 Minn. 477, 70 L.R.A. 503, 111 Am. St. Rep. 483, 104 N. W. 443, 5 Ann. Cas. 498, 18 Am. Neg. Rep. 511. In none was there so tenuous a bond as here between the ensuing mischief and the wrong.

The judgment should be affirmed with costs.

Willard Bartlett, Ch. J., and Hiscock, Chase, Collin, and Seabury, JJ., concur. Hogan, J., concurs in result.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

S. P. RENDER, Plff. in Err.,
v.

ROSS N. LILLARD.

(— Okla. —, 160 Pac. 705.)

Pleading — Statute of Frauds.

1. A general denial raises the question of the Statute of Frauds.

For other cases, see Pleading, III. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Appeal — question not raised.

2. The question of the Statute of Frauds was not presented nor urged in the trial court, neither was it mentioned therein in any manner, nor was it relied upon in said court by the defendant for a defense. This court, therefore, will not consider this question when presented and urged by the defendant upon this court for the first time on appeal.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII. j, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(July 25, 1916.)

ERROR to the District Court for Oklahoma County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to enforce a verbal contract of employment alleged to have been made by defendant

Headnotes by DAVIS, C.

Note.—As to the question whether the Statute of Frauds may be raised for first time on appeal, where, under the pleadings, it might have been raised below, see annotation following this case, post, 1071. L.R.A.1917B.

with the plaintiff as attorney, to prosecute a certain action. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. Ames, Chambers, Lowe, & Richardson for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Sam Hooker and E. L. Fulton, for defendant in error:

Defendant, by not presenting the question of the Statute of Frauds in the trial court, waived it and cannot raise it for the first time on appeal.

Altoona Portland Cement Co. v. Burbank, 44 Okla. 76, 143 Pac. 845; Prior v. Sanborn County, 12 S. D. 80, 80 N. W. 169; 2 Cyc. 665; Highley v. Metzger, 187 Ill. 237, 58 N. E. 407; Holt v. Brown, 63 Iowa, 319, 19 N. W. 235; Lydig v. Braman, 177 Mass. 212, 58 N. E. 696; Walker v. Cooper, 97 Mo. App. 441, 71 S. W. 370; International Harvester Co. v. Campbell, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 421, 96 S. W. 93; Sartwell v. Sowles, 72 Vt. 270, 82 Am. St. Rep. 943, 48 Atl. 11; Throop Grain Cleaner Co. v. Smith, 110 N. Y. 83, 17 N. E. 671; Healy v. Loofbourrow, 2 Okla. 458, 37 Pac. 823; McDonald v. Carpenter, 11 Okla. 115, 65 Pac. 942; Baker v. Marcum, 22 Okla. 21, 97 Pac. 572; Tirey v. Darneal, 37 Okla. 611, 132 Pac. 1087; Bouton v. Carson, — Okla. —, 152 Pac. 131; Duffey v. Scientific American Compiling Dept. 30 Okla. 742, 120 Pac. 1088; Harris v. First Nat. Bank, 21 Okla. 189, 95 Pac. 781; Smith v. Colson, 31 Okla. 703, 123 Pac. 149; Hamilton v. Brown, 31 Okla. 213, 120 Pac. 950; Herbert v. Wagg, 27 Okla. 674, 117 Pac. 209; St. Louis &

S. F. R. Co. v. Key, 28 Okla. 769, 115 Pac. 875; Myers v. First Presby. Church, 11 Okla. 544, 69 Pac. 874; Shuler v. Collins, 40 Okla. 126, 136 Pac. 752; Turley v. Feebeck, 38 Okla. 257, 132 Pac. 889; Rhame Mill. Co. v. Farmers' & M. Nat. Bank, 40 Okla. 131, 136 Pac. 1095; Horne v. Oklahoma State Bank, 42 Okla. 37, 139 Pac. 992; Coombs v. Cook, 35 Okla. 326, 129 Pac. 698; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. McBee, 45 Okla. 192, 145 Pac. 331; Watson v. Taylor, 35 Okla. 768, 131 Pac. 922; Wallace v. Killian, 40 Okla. 631, 140 Pac. 162.

The contract sued on was not within the statute.

Lindley v. Kelly, — Okla. —, 147 Pac. 1015; Greenough v. Eichholtz, 1 Monaghan (Pa.) 433, 15 Atl. 712; Cooper & P. Structural Iron Works v. Rosing, 85 Misc. 409, 147 N. Y. Supp. 241; A. Schwoerer & Sons v. Stone, 200 N. Y. 560, 93 N. E. 1116; Roy & Titcomb v. Flin, 10 Ariz. 80, 85 Pac. 725; Trulock v. Blair, 8 Okla. 347, 58 Pac. 1097.

Davis, C., filed the following opinion:

The parties will be spoken of throughout this opinion as in the court below. The plaintiff, Ross N. Lillard, sued the defendant, S. P. Render, in the district court of Oklahoma county, Oklahoma, on a verbal contract of employment alleged to have been made by the defendant with the plaintiff as an attorney and counselor at law to prosecute an action for $50,000 damages on behalf of the plaintiff, one Minnie Bond, in what is known as the case of Bond v. Gore, in the district court of Oklahoma county, Oklahoma. Plaintiff averred in his petition that his services were well worth the sum of $1,500, proved said averment by competent testimony, which was not controverted on the part of defendant, admitted a credit on same of $175, and recovered by verdict of a jury the balance of $1,325 on February 11, 1915, for which sum, together with 6 per cent interest per annum from February 11, 1915, until paid, and for costs, judgment was by the trial court duly rendered on May 7, 1915, the court having previously heard, duly considered, and overruled the defendant's motion for a new trial. The petition of the plaintiff, omitting caption and formal parts, reads as follows: "The plaintiff, Ross N. Lillard, for his cause of action herein, says that he is a regular licensed practising attorney at law of the state of Oklahoma and county of Oklahoma, and has been for the last past three years, with his office in the city of Oklahoma City; that on or about the 1st day of October, 1913, he was employed by one Minnie Bond and Julian R. Bond to institute suit in the district court of Oklahoma county, state of Oklahoma, in the sum of $50,000 against one T. P. Gore for assault, and that on or about December 1, 1913, this plaintiff notified the said Minnie Bond and Julian R. Bond that he would not remain in said case any longer, unless arrangements were made for a fee for his services in said cause, and that he then and there notified said parties that he would withdraw from the case unless the same was done, and thereupon, on or about the 1st day of December, 1913, the defendant, S. P. Render, came to this plaintiff and said to him that if this plaintiff would continue his services in said cause, and not withdraw therefrom, he, the said S. P. Render, would pay a fee for plaintiff's services in said cause, and requested this plaintiff not to withdraw from said cause, but to continue his services therein, and, acting upon the defendant's representations that he would pay plaintiff's fee in said cause, this plaintiff did continue in said case and did not withdraw therefrom; that from the 1st of December, 1913, up and to and including the trial of said cause, which was in February, 1914, this plaintiff devoted all of his time and attention to the preparation of said case, and spent much time from his office in taking depositions and consulting with witnesses and other parties necessary for a trial of said cause, and upon the trial thereof, participated therein; that the services rendered by this plaintiff in said cause, for which the defendant agreed and promised to pay, were reasonably worth the sum of $1,500, and that no part thereof has been paid to this plaintiff, save and except the sum of $175; that said defendant frequently, from December 1st up to the time of the trial and during the trial, stated to this plaintiff that he would pay him for his services in said cause, and this plaintiff rendered and performed the same relying upon the defendant's promise and agreement to pay him therefor. Wherefore, premises considered, the plaintiff prays judgment against the defendant, S. P. Render, for the sum of $1,325, with interest from this date, for costs and all proper relief."

The defendant to this petition filed the following verified answer: "Comes now S. P. Render, defendant above named, and, for answer to the petition of said plaintiff denies each and every allegation therein contained."

The defendant in the court below defended against this action on the theory, and the sole and only theory, that he did not make the promise or enter into the contract as alleged and set forth in plaintiff's petition, and as proven by plaintiff. The sole question presented to the court below upon the trial of this case, and submitted by the trial court to the jury, was whether or not the defendant made and entered into the contract with the plaintiff as alleged and proven by him. The defendant requested no instructions and saved no exceptions to any of the instructions given by the court to the jury in his charge—none. For the first time in this lawsuit and in his printed brief the defendant raises and urges upon this court the sole and single proposition that this was a verbal contract, made by the defendant with the plaintiff in the nature of a special promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another, and that it does not fall under the article of our statutes on guaranty, and that hence, under § 941, Rev. Laws of Oklahoma 1910, the same is expressly inhibited and invalid, the plaintiff having first been employed by one Minnie Bond and Julian R. Bond to institute and prosecute the $50,000 damage suit against T. P. Gore for assault, and upon their failure to arrange for or pay the plaintiff his fee for said services, conceding that the defendant contracted to pay same as alleged and proven by plaintiff in this action in the trial court, still the said contract clearly falls under the Statute of Frauds of our state.

Conceding but not deciding that this contract falls within the Statute of Frauds, has defendant waived this point by his failure to raise and urge it, obtain a ruling thereon, and when decided adversely to him, save the proper exception in the trial court? We think so. A verbal promise to answer for the debt of another is not illegal, unlawful, or immoral. It is not, strictly speaking, void, but merely voidable. The statute is solely for the benefit of a person sought to be bound by such promise. He may avail himself of the statute, or not, as seems best to him. It is a question in which he, and no one else, is interested. If he fails to take advantage of the statute, the contract, under all the authorities, is valid and enforceable. While there may be a conflict in the authorities as to what will constitute a waiver of the statute, yet we know of no authority which holds that the statute cannot be waived. This court in the case of Altoona Portland Cement Co. v. Burbank, 44 Okla. 76, 143 Pac. 845, in passing on this question, held as follows: "Such contracts are not positively illegal in any particular, but are negatively invalid, although only as against one who has not subscribed a note or memorandum thereof in writing, and only to the limited extent that no enforceable demand against him can be predicated thereon in the absence of at least his tacit consent, as by waiver of that point, in the action, or of an equitable estoppel to deny liability." (Italics ours.)

Defendant did not demur to the petition of plaintiff on the ground that the contract was within the statute, or on any other ground. He did not plead the Statute of Frauds in his answer. He did not object to the introduction of evidence under the petition of the plaintiff on the ground that no cause of action was stated, or on the ground that the contract was within the Statute of Frauds. He did not object to the testimony of plaintiff when testifying regarding the verbal contract, nor move to strike the same out on any ground or for any reason. After the evidence was all in and established, as now claimed, by defendant, that the contract was within the statute, he did not demur thereto or move the court for a directed verdict. He requested no instructions on any ground, and took no exceptions to the instructions given by the court, which presented to the jury but the one question, and that was whether or not the plaintiff entered into the contract alleged. And he did not even raise the question in his motion for a new trial. That all this constituted a plain waiver of the statute and the rights, if any, he had thereunder, we think, is plain. The supreme court of South Dakota passed on this question in the case of Prior v. Sanborn County, 12 S. D. 86, 80 N. W. 169, wherein it held: "Failure to urge an objection that a contract is within the Statute of Frauds, in the trial court, is a waiver thereof."

Defendant, as the record affirmatively shows, at no time and in no manner even attempted to raise the question of the Statute of Frauds in the trial court, and he therefore brought himself squarely within the rule laid down by this court in the Altoona Portland Cement Co. Case, supra. Not having raised this question in the trial court, he cannot raise it for the first time in this court. That a party cannot, for the first time on appeal, raise the question that the contract sued on is within the Statute of Frauds, we think is settled by all the authorities. The general rule in this regard is laid down in 2 Cyc. 665, as follows: "An objection to the validity of a contract or instrument in suit must be made in the court below, and cannot be urged for the first time in the appellate court. . . . Thus, it cannot be first objected on appeal that a contract is void under the Sunday laws; that a contract or deed is tainted with fraud or usury; that it is champertous; that it is void under the Statute of Frauds."

The supreme court of the state of Illinois passed on this question in the case of Highley v. Metzger, 187 Ill. 237, 58 N. E. 407, as follows: "The objection that defendant was sued on an oral promise to answer for the debt of another, which has not been raised by the pleadings, nor by objections to evidence, nor by exceptions to the instructions, cannot be taken advantage of for the first time on appeal."

The supreme court of South Dakota upheld the same rule in the case of Prior v. Sanborn County, 12 S. D. 86, 80 N. W. 169, as follows: "Whether the foregoing record is sufficient to take the agreement out of the statute need not be determined, because the failure to raise the point in the trial court constitutes a waiver, and it is now too late to urge the objection for the first time."

The supreme court of Iowa also followed this rule in the case of Holt v. Brown, 63 Iowa, 319, 19 N. W. 235, from which case we quote as follows: "Where the Statute of Frauds is not pleaded, nor objection made to evidence on the trial, because the contract is within the statute, but the objection is first made in the argument of counsel on appeal, it comes too late."

In the case of Lydig v. Braman, 177 Mass. 212, 58 N. E. 606, the supreme court of Massachusetts held as follows: "A defense of the Statute of Frauds on a contract sued on is not available on appeal, where it is not raised on the trial."

The court of appeals of Missouri passed on this question in the case of Walker v. Cooper, 97 Mo. App. 441, 71 S. W. 370, as follows: "The Statute of Frauds cannot be invoked as a defense to an action on a contract for the first time on appeal."

In the case of International Harvester Co. v. Campbell, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 421, 96 S. W. 93, the court held: "The Statute of Frauds cannot be, for the first time, invoked on appeal."

The supreme court of Vermont, in the case of Sartwell v. Sowles, 72 Vt. 270, 82 Am. St. Rep. 943, 48 Atl. 11, upheld this same rule as follows: "A defense that a contract was within the Statute of Frauds could not be set up on appeal where appellants had allowed the same to be established on the trial by parol evidence without objection."

The court of appeals of New York passed on this question in the case of Throop Grain Cleaner Co. v. Smith, 110 N. Y. 83, 17 N. E. 671, wherein it was held: "The question whether an assignment of a debt is valid under the Statute of Frauds cannot be raised on appeal when exception is not taken below."

Other courts have held:

The defense of the Statute of Frauds is waived, if not pleaded. Hogan v. Easter-L.R.A.1917B.

day, 58 Ill. App. 45; Van Duyne v. Vreeland, 12 N. J. Eq. 142.

Failure to plead the Statute of Frauds in an action on a verbal contract is a waiver of that defense. Carpenter v. Davis, 72 Ill. 14.

By placing a defense on other grounds, and failure to plead the Statute, a party waives the defense that the contract sued on is within the Statute of Frauds. Finucan v. Kendig, 109 Ill. 198.

Where, in an action by the vendor for the price, the purchaser did not seek to avoid the sale as being in parol, but sought to have the lands purchased secured by a good deed, and it was proper to consider the case as if the contract of sale had been in writing. Richardson v. Milner, 5 Ky. Law Rep. 118.

"Where the defendant, in his answer, admits substantially the contract set out in his petition, but alleges that the plaintiff has violated its provisions, and there is no plea of the Statute of Frauds, the statute will be considered as waived." Connor v. Hingtgen, 19 Neb. 472, 27 N. W. 443.

Where the defendant admits the contract declared upon, and does not plead the Statute of Frauds, or insist on it in his answer, he will be deemed to have renounced the benefit of it. Duffy v. O'Donovan, 46 N. Y. 223.

An objection that a contract was void under the statute, not taken in the complaint, and raised for the first time in the requests for finding, comes too late. Porter v. Wormser, 94 N. Y. 431.

A defendant can waive the immunity granted him by the Statute of Frauds, and unless he sets up the defense, or in some way calls it to the attention of the court, the court is not required to interpose it. League v. Davis, 53 Tex. 9.

"The Statute of Frauds is waived, unless pleaded." Howe v. Chesley, 56 Vt. 727.

Century Digest, topic, "Frauds, Statute of," § 365.

"The privilege is personal, and cannot be made available by a third person, a stranger to the contract, and it may be waived, and is regarded as waived, unless the party avails himself of it either by his pleadings, or under the general issue, where advantage may be taken of it without a special plea. . . . The courts, of course, take judicial notice of the statute, but they will not take judicial notice that a given contract is void because not in writing. The party must allege and prove such ground of defense." Wood, Stat. of Fr. § 277.

In McCoy v. Williams, 6 Ill. 584, the court held that the plea of the Statute of Frauds is a personal privilege, which the party may waive; another cannot plead it for him, or compel him to plead it.

In Vermont, if a plea avers that the promise sued on was a promise to pay the debt of another, to wit, B, a replication that the promise was not a promise to pay the debt of said B is good, and the defense of the statute may be shown under the general issue, or pleaded specially. Hotchkiss v. Ladd, 36 Vt. 593, 86 Am. Dec. 670.

In Illinois the statute must be pleaded, if it is to be relied upon by the defendant. He cannot set it up, for the first time, in an instruction. Warren v. Dickson, 27 Ill. 115.

So, in Alabama, the defense arising under the statute must be pleaded; and, if waived, and the contract is admitted or established by proof, it will be enforced. Patterson v. Ware, 10 Ala. 444.

In New Jersey the statute must be relied on; that is, the party must either plead it specially or urge it as a ground of defense. Thus, a defendant may insist upon the benefit of the Statute of Frauds, although he admits the parol agreement; but if he does not insist upon the statute, he is not entitled to its benefit. Ashmore v. Evans, 11 N. J. Eq. 151.

We are of the opinion that the correct rule as to properly raising the question of the Statute of Frauds by the defendant in this jurisdiction is that when the defendant denies in his answer the making of the contract upon which the action is brought, he may then avail himself of the defense that the agreement was invalid under the Statute of Frauds; but where the defendant admits the making of the contract sued on in the petition, in his answer, he must then specially and specifically set up and plead the Statute of Frauds in his answer, or he will be held thereby to have waived it. Under a general denial the defendant raises the issue that he did not make the contract sued upon as set forth by the plaintiff in his petition, and the issue that the same, if made, is invalid under the Statute of Frauds.

Generally anything going to show that the cause of action sued upon never existed, or which merely disproves what plaintiff alleges, may be given in evidence under a general denial. The defendant may give evidence controverting any facts necessary to be established by plaintiff, but not to disprove a defense founded on new matter. Evidence to disprove wholly or in part any fact which plaintiff must establish to show a cause of action may be given in evidence under a general denial. "Under our system of practice, and under every rational, logical system of pleading, the defendant must, under a general denial, be permitted to controvert by evidence everything which the plaintiff is bound, in the first instance, to prove to make out his cause of action." Griffin v. Long Island R. Co. 101 N. Y. 348, 4 N. E. 740; Evans v. Williams, 60 Barb. 346; Greenfield v. Massachusetts Mut. L. Ins. Co. 47 N. Y. 430; Andrews v. Bond, 16 Barb. 633; Weaver v. Barden, 49 N. Y. 286; O'Brien v. McCann, 58 N. Y. 373.

The defendant quotes from and cites the following authorities in his reply brief filed herein July 7, 1916: Altoona Portland Cement Co. v. Burbank, 44 Okla. 76, 143 Pac. 845; Feeney v. Howard, 79 Cal. 525, 4 L.R.A. 826, 12 Am. St. Rep. 162, 21 Pac. 984; Hotchkiss v. Ladd, 36 Vt. 593, 86 Am. Dec. 679; Wynn v. Garland, 19 Ark. 23, 68 Am. Dec. 191; Talbot v. Bowen, 1 A. K. Marsh. 436, 10 Am. Dec. 747; Williams-Haywood Shoe Co. v. Brooks, 9 Wyo. 424, 64 Pac. 343; Fontaine v. Bush, 40 Minn. 141, 12 Am. St. Rep. 722, 41 N. W. 465; Luton v. Badham, 127 N. C. 96, 53 L.R.A. 337, 80 Am. St. Rep. 783, 37 S. E. 143; Wiswell v. Tefft, 5 Kan. 263,—to show that the Statute of Frauds may be raised under a general denial. To this proposition we have acceded and do now accede. "But one thing lackest thou yet." The defendant, having thus raised said issue by his general denial, which at the same time raises the other issue denying the making of the contract sued upon, must, in some manner, someway, somehow, and by some means, go further and challenge the attention of the trial court to the issue of the Statute of Frauds, and insist and rely upon it as a defense in the trial court. He will not be permitted by some legerdmain to keep this issue, so raised by him, snugly snuggled away somewhere in the mental catacombs of silence and obscurity, jealously keeping and guarding it from the sight and attention of the trial court from the inception of the cause to its uttermost close, and then for the first time spring it on this court, Minerva-like, and press it for the first time, and as the sole, single, and only issue in his brief here.

We have carefully examined each of the cases cited by defendant in his reply brief, as set out herein, supra, and find that in each and all, save and except, perhaps, Wiswell v. Tefft, supra, it is plainly to be seen, that under the general denial, the defendant in some manner brought the attention of the trial court specifically to the issue raised of the Statute of Frauds. In Wiswell v. Tefft, supra, equal comfort can be found that it was or that it was not drawn to the attention of the trial court. In the case of Altoona Portland Cement Co. v. Burbank, supra, Thacker, C., speaking for this court, said: "The defendant, as seller, is not bound by a merely oral acceptance of plaintiffs' order for 500 barrels of cement at $1.17 per barrel, nor liable for damages for failure to deliver the same, as such a contract is invalid under § 847, Okla. Stat. 1890 (§ 941, Rev. Laws 1910). . . . The plaintiffs' bill of particulars, demanding $199.50 as, in effect, 'the excess . . . of the value of the property to the buyer over the amount which would have been due to the seller under the contract if it had been fulfilled' (quoting § 2627, Okla. Stat. 1890; § 2860, Rev. Laws 1910), and disclosing that defendant had not directly nor by agent subscribed any note or memorandum of the contract in writing, as required by § 847 (§ 941), cited supra, stated no cause of action. See cases cited supra. Although our statute renders such contracts invalid only in the qualified sense stated in Schechinger v. Gault, 35 Okla. 416, 130 Pac. 305, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 468, we think they are so far invalid, as held in Jones v. Pettigrew, 25 S. D. 432, 127 N. W. 538, under a statute in the same form and derived from the same source (the territory of Dakota), that it is unnecessary for defendant to specially plead the statute. Such contracts are not positively illegal in any particular, but are negatively invalid, although only as against one who has not subscribed a note or memorandum thereof in writing, and only to the limited extent that no enforceable demand against him can be predicated thereon in the absence of at least his tacit consent, as by waiver of that point, in the action, or of an equitable estoppel to deny liability. And, where there is at least a general denial, as here, the court should, upon a motion therefor, as was made in this case, direct a verdict for the defendant. Such a bill of particulars was subject to demurrer; but, even if there was a failure to demur, this would not constitute a waiver of the invalidating effect of the Statute of Frauds, as the contract itself is invalid in respect to plaintiffs' demand; and nothing less than the tacit consent of the defendant that it be treated as valid, or its estoppel to deny its validity, as by failing both to demur and to deny its alleged valid effect, or by some other act or omission implying such consent or showing such estoppel, could be regarded as precluding it from asserting its invalidity at any time prior to the final submission of the case to the jury. See Jones v. Pettigrew, supra. There is a contrariety of views, however, upon the question of proper defensive pleadings in such cases, as will be seen from an examination of 20 Cyc. 312-314; Owen v. Riddle, 81 N. J. L. 546, 79 Atl. 886, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 45, with the extensive notes thereto. Further, it will be presumed that defendant's pleadings, being oral, were sufficient to present the question of the validity of the contract under the Statute of Frauds as a partial and legally necessary explanation of the action of the trial court in submitting to the jury the question as to whether the contract was valid notwithstanding the Statute of Frauds, upon the ground that the amount involved was under $50 (which was contrary to all the evidence), or upon the ground that some note or memorandum of the contract in writing had been signed by the defendant or its agent (of which there was no evidence), although this does not explain why this question was so submitted, in the absence of any issue of fact made by the evidence in this regard."

L.R.A.1917B.

We have also gone to the trouble of obtaining from the clerk's office the original case made or record in this case, and the same lies before us. We find from it: That the plaintiffs originated this action by filing the following bill of particulars in the justice court, before M. D. Asher, Justice of the Peace in and for the city of Enid township: "Comes now C. J. Burbank and C. F. Holmes, plaintiffs in the above entitled cause, and for cause of action against the defendant allege: That on or about the 30th day of October, 1909, the plaintiffs and the defendant entered into an agreement, upon a statement or memoranda in writing, signed by plaintiff, whereby the defendant sold and agreed to deliver to the plaintiffs 500 barrels of cement at the agreed price of $1.17 per barrel. Said cement to be delivered to the plaintiffs, at any time, upon ten days' notice. Plaintiffs state that on or about the 25th day of October, 1909, they gave notice to the defendants that said cement would be needed, and delivery, at Enid, was demanded on 8th day of November, 1909, as provided for in said agreement. Plaintiffs further state that they repeatedly and at various times made inquiry about said cement, and that said cement was not delivered within the ten days, after notice given, as aforesaid, and that said cement has never been delivered, according to the agreement, by the defendant to the plaintiffs, at Enid, Oklahoma, to the damage, to the plaintiffs, in the sum of $199.50. Wherefore plaintiffs pray judgment against the defendant, in the sum of $199.50, together with the costs of this action."

That this bill of particulars was afterwards, and on the 17th day of February, 1910, filed in the office of the clerk of the county court of Garfield county, Oklahoma. That afterwards said cause came on regularly for trial in said county court, whereupon the following journal entry was entered of record:

On this 3d day of September, 1910, the same being one of the days of the regular August, 1910, term of this court, the above-entitled action came on to be heard upon the pleadings and the evidence, and, a jury being waived, was submitted to the court, Swigert & Wedgewood appearing for the plaintiffs, and Kruse & Hills for the defendant. After the plaintiff C. J. Burbank had been sworn and some testimony elicited from him on part of the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs made application for a continuance, in order to enable them to serve notice upon the defendant to produce in court, that the same might be used in evidence, the order or memoranda in writing, claimed by the plaintiffs to have been delivered to the defendant, for the cement mentioned in plaintiffs' bill of particulars, the defendant having objected to the production thereof without notice, as required by law, upon request of the plaintiffs, and objected to the introduction of parol evidence to show the contents thereof; and the court, after carefully considering said application, finds that the same ought to be granted, upon condition that the plaintiffs pay all court costs to this date; and, the plaintiffs having agreed to said terms, it is ordered by the court that this action be, and the same hereby is, continued to the next regular term of this court, and it is further ordered that the plaintiffs pay all court costs herein to and including this term of court. To all of which the defendant excepts, and exception is hereby given it.

By the court:

[Signed] James B. Cullison, Judge.

O. K. Swigert & Wedgewood, Attys. for Plaintiffs. Kruse & Hills, for Deft.

That thereafter, and on January 10, 1911, plaintiffs served upon the defendant notice to produce certain papers, as follows:

"The defendant is hereby notified to produce and have the same present that they may be used in evidence upon trial of the above-entitled action, in the county court of Garfield county, Oklahoma, wherein said action is now pending, on the hearing and trial thereof, an order or memoranda, in writing, claimed by the plaintiffs to have been furnished and delivered to the defendant, through Park Cole, its agent at Enid, Oklahoma, for the cement, which is mentioned in the plaintiffs' bill of particulars, and also an order for cement, which was offered and used in evidence on part of the defendant, in the trial of this said action, in justice court of Garfield county, Oklahoma.

"Dated January 10, 1911. Swigert & Wedgewood, Attys. for plaintiffs.

"We hereby acknowledge service and the receipt of a copy of the above and foregoing L.R.A.1917B.

notice, this 10th day of January, 1911. Carl Kruse, Atty. for defendant."

That afterwards and upon the trial of said cause in said county court on the 28th day of February, 1911, before the court and a jury of six men, the plaintiff, C. J. Burbank, was called to the stand, and testified in behalf of the plaintiffs. Over objections and exceptions, multifarious and multitudinous, he testified that he had given to one Park D. Cole, as agent for defendant company, an order for the cement in question, and that a memorandum in writing was made of said order, and signed by said Cole on behalf of said defendant company, and the same was delivered to said Cole by plaintiff. The price of said cement so purchased exceeded $50. The plaintiffs rested their case with the testimony of this single witness. Whereupon the defendant company interposed the following demurrer to the evidence of plaintiffs:

"At this time the defendant demurs to the evidence introduced by the plaintiff, and asks the court to direct the jury to return a verdict in favor of the defendant and dismiss the plaintiff's cause of action, for the following reasons, to wit:

"First. Because the testimony does not show any cause of action in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant.

"Second. Because the plaintiff has wholly neglected to establish any contract with the defendant.

"Third. For the reason that in the bill of particulars filed in this case the allegation is that the plaintiff entered into a verbal contract with the defendant, and that the testimony shows that no such contract was entered into between the plaintiff and defendant.

"Fourth. For the further reason that plaintiff has wholly failed to show that Park D. Cole, who took the order, was the agent of the defendant, or had any authority from the defendant to represent the defendant as such agent.

"By the court: For that reason the demurrer will be overruled, and the request for a peremptory instruction will be overruled, and exception noted."

Thereupon the defendant company introduced J. J. Helfer, who y-clept himself as a "usually recognized salesman" of said defendant company; said he knew one Park D. Cole; said he had a contract with the company for the output of this mill, and that he employed all the salesmen, and that he checked all sales and all shipments, and that everything pertaining to the sales department came through his hands; that at the time this memorandum was signed by the said Park D. Cole, he, the said Cole, was no agent of said company; denied the agency of Cole, and denied that the company was bound by said memorandum of agreement. The defendant rested its case on the testimony alone of this witness, J. J. Helfer. The court then charged the jury in instruction No. 1, as follows: "Gentlemen of the jury, you are instructed that this is a case wherein C. J. Burbank and C. F. Holmes, partners, plaintiffs, sued the Altoona Portland Cement Company, defendants, upon the following cause of action: That on or about the 30th day of October, 1909, the plaintiffs and the defendant entered into an agreement upon a statement or memoranda in writing signed by plaintiff, whereby the defendant sold and agreed to deliver to the plaintiff 500 barrels of cement at the agreed price of $1.17 per barrel, said cement to be delivered to the plaintiff at any time upon ten days' notice. That plaintiffs further allege that on or about the 25th day of October, 1909, they gave notice to the defendant that said cement would be needed on the 8th day of November, 1909, as provided for in said agreement. Plaintiffs further allege that they repeatedly and at various times made inquiry about said cement from the said defendant, and that said cement was not delivered to the plaintiff within the ten days after notice was given, as aforesaid, and that said cement has never been delivered according to the agreement by the defendant to the plaintiffs at Enid, Oklahoma, and that by reason of said defendant failing to deliver said cement the said plaintiffs have been damaged in the sum of $199.50. To all of which the defendant herein has filed herein its general denial, denying that the said defendant ever entered into any contract of any kind whatever, either directly or indirectly with the plaintiff. Which puts into issue every material allegation in the plaintiff's petition, filed herein, and in order for the plaintiff to recover, the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff, and they must prove every material allegation in their petition by a preponderance of the evidence, and unless the plaintiffs so prove the material allegations in their petition by a preponderance of the evidence, your verdict should be for the defendant."

And in instruction No. 3, as follows: "The jury are instructed that under the law of the state of Oklahoma a contract is invalid unless the same or some note or memorandum thereof be in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged, that is, the defendant, or by his agent, where the same is for an agreement for the sale of goods, chattels, or things in action such as is involved in this case at a price not less than $50, and in this connection you are instructed that, if you find from a fair preponderance of the evidence in this case that the amount attempted to be charged against the defendant is more than $50, and that the defendant or its agent did not subscribe a memorandum in writing, your verdict should be for the defendant."

This instruction, the court's instruction No. 3, supra, was clearly prepared and asked by the defendant for the following reasons: The court gave 16 instructions, 1 to 16, inclusive, marked by numerals at the bottom of each. Instruction No. 1 has no number or other notation at the top, and was clearly prepared and given strictly by the court. Instruction numbered 2 at bottom is designated at top with style of court, style of cause, "Instruction No. 4, requested by Plffs.," and begins with, "Gentlemen of the jury." It is marked at bottom, "Given, objected to by Deft., objection overruled, exception noted. Winfield Scott, Co. Judge." The same is true as to instruction 10 as numbered by the court, except it is marked at top, "Instruction No. 3, requested by the plaintiffs." The same is true as to instruction No. 11, as numbered by the court, except it is marked at top, "Instruction No. 2, requested by plaintiff." The same is true as to instruction numbered 12 by the court, except it is marked at top, "Instruction No. 1, requested by the plaintiff." Instruction numbered 3 by the court, and marked at bottom, "Given, Winfield Scott, Co. Judge," —is marked at top, "Instruction No. 8." This is true of court's No. 4, except marked at top, "Instruction No. 2." The same is true of court's No. 5, except marked at top, "Instruction No. 7." The same is true of court's No. 6, except marked at top, "Instruction No. 6." The same is true as to court's No. 7, except marked at top, "Instruction No. 5." The same is true as to court's No. 8, except marked at top, "Instruction No. 4." The record then shows the exception on the part of the defendant to the court's refusal to give instructions Nos. 1, 9, and 10, asked for by the defendant. Thus it becomes manifest that the plaintiffs asked for four instructions, each of which were given by the court and objected to and excepted to by the defendant, and that the defendant asked for 10 instructions, instructions as numbered by defendant, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8, being given by the court, with no objections made nor exceptions saved by the plaintiffs, and instructions as numbered by the defendants 1, 9, and 10, refused by the court and excepted to by the defendant. The record does not disclose any exceptions on the part of plaintiffs to the refusal of the court to give any instructions asked for by them. In the instructions asked for by both sides and given by the court the question as to agency and the proof of same, etc., are fully set forth to the jury. The remaining instructions given by the court are general. It, therefore, needs no comment from us. It doth now most gloriously appear from the face of the record that, under his general denial in the trial court, the defendant not only raised the two issues of not having made the contract and of the question of the Statutes of Frauds, but that it most strenuously, and with a dogged and stubborn persistence born of despair to win its lawsuit, pounded said question, so raised, upon the attention of the court and jury from alpha to the omega of the cause in the court below.

The case of Feeney v. Howard, 79 Cal. 525, 4 L.R.A. 826, 12 Am. St. Rep. 162, 21 Pac. 984, is quoted from by counsel for defendant most extensively, heavily underscored very frequently, and largely relied upon for the sustention of the proposition that the defendant can raise the issue of the Statute of Frauds under a general denial. This case lies before us. We will call upon Hayne, C., to repeat for us his words uttered by him in the statement of this opinion in speaking for the supreme court of California, July 1, 1889: "Michael Feeney, in his lifetime, commenced the present suit in his own name (not as administrator) to have it declared that he was entitled to said balance. On the trial, he introduced in evidence the deeds above mentioned, and then offered parol evidence to prove that they were without consideration, and that the property was conveyed to Howard upon certain trusts, and was to be re-conveyed on request. Howard objected on the ground of the Statute of Frauds. The parol evidence was admitted against such objection, to which Howard excepted, and judgment was given for the plaintiff, from which, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, the appeal is taken. . . . Unless the case can be brought within some one of the exceptions hereinafter noticed, we think that it is clear that the Statute of Frauds is a defense to the action, and that the parol evidence was improperly admitted. If a trust could be raised in such a way, what operation could the Statute of Frauds ever have? The authorities are overwhelming to this effect."

We will next call to the stand Dickinson, J., who spoke for the supreme court of Minnesota, in the case of Fontaine v. Bush, 40 Minn. 141, 12 Am. St. Rep. 722, 41 N. W. 465: "This action is for the recovery of the price (more than $50) of a large quantity of potatoes, alleged to have been sold by the plaintiffs to the defendants at an agreed price. The answer denied the sale. The court, trying the cause without a jury, found in favor of the defendants, upon the ground that the case was within the Statute of Frauds. The mere oral agreement was void, under the statute, and the denial of the sale in the answer was sufficient to enable the defendants to avail themselves of that defense. Tatge v. Tatge, 34 Minn. 272, 25 N. W. 596, 26 N. W. 121. The case justified the finding of the court that there had been no acceptance on the part of the defendants satisfying the requirement of the statute."

We will now call upon Poland, Ch. J., to tell us again what he said on this question in speaking for the supreme court of Vermont in the case of Hotchkiss v. Ladd, 36 Vt. 593, 86 Am. Dec. 679: "To the plaintiff's declaration the defendant pleaded the Statute of Limitations and the Statute of Frauds, to both which pleads the plaintiff replied, and to these replications Ladd demurred. The defendant Ladd claims, not only that the plaintiff's replications are insufficient, but that the plaintiff's declaration is also defective, so as to be reached by the demurrer. Two objections are made to the declaration: First, that it states no sufficient consideration to support the promise declared on; second, that the promise is within the Statute of Frauds. Whether either of these objections is well founded or not depends mainly upon the construction to be given to the declaration. It is exceedingly difficult from the declaration to determine the real character of the transaction between the parties, and its allegations are nearly repugnant to each other."

And lastly, we will again hear from Chief Justice Potter, when speaking for the supreme court of Wyoming in the case of Williams-Haywood Shoe Co. v. Brooks, 9 Wyo. 424, 64 Pac. 343: "As disclosed by the testimony, plaintiff, a corporation, is engaged in the wholesale boot and shoe business at Omaha, Nebraska. On or about November 1, 1897, a traveling salesman of the plaintiff visited Sheridan, where the defendant firm conducted a mercantile business, and solicited their order. The salesman testified that Mr. J. H. Ivey went with him to the hotel, examined his samples, and gave him an order for goods, which he, the salesman, put down upon a written statement or memorandum, describing the various items, with the price opposite each item. When the statement or order was offered in evidence, the defendants made the following objection: 'Defendants object to the admission of Exhibit "A," for the reason that the contract is within the Statute of Frauds; that the same is a verbal statement, not signed by the defendants, or either of them, and in no way can bind them, and is void; and for the further reason that it is incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial.' The total amount of the order was $789.20, and the statement thereof so offered in evidence was not signed by either of the defendants. No other writing or memorandum in writing showing the order or contract for the sale was produced. In the following April the plaintiff shipped the goods by rail to the defendants, but the latter refused to receive or accept them, and, in fact, did not take the goods from the depot, and never did accept them. Indeed, upon the trial it was admitted 'that the goods are at the depot, and that the firm of J. H. Ivey & Company refused to receive them from the depot, and never have received the goods from the station at Sheridan, and have never accepted them, and have paid no part of the purchase price.' The court found that neither Lyman H. Brooks nor Ida Ivey were members of the firm of J. H. Ivey & Company, but that said Brooks had so held himself out as such a member as to be liable to creditors. The court further found, among other things, that the defendants had not received or accepted the goods, nor paid any part of the purchase price thereof; that no written contract of sale or purchase, or note or memorandum thereof, had been made or executed by the defendants, or either of them. Thereupon the law was found to be with the defendants, and judgment was rendered accordingly, and against the plaintiff for costs. A motion for new trial having been filed, it came on for argument, at which time, at the request of defendants, they were permitted 'to amend their answer by adding thereto the defense of the Statute of Frauds in accordance with the facts proved,' which was thereupon done, and the motion for new trial overruled. An exception was duly preserved to the ruling, permitting the answer to be amended, and to the overruling of the motion for new trial."

This sufficeth to show that this question was directly brought to the attention of the trial court in these cases.

This court has laid down the same principle a number of times, and that is, that this court will not pass upon questions not raised or presented in the trial court. One of the earliest decisions on this point is the case of Healy v. Loofbourrow, 2 Okla. 458, 37 Pac. 823, wherein it was held as follows: "As a general rule, the supreme court of this territory will not consider for the first time on appeal questions not presented in the cause in the court below."

Later, in the case of McDonald v. Carpenter, 11 Okla. 115, 65 Pac. 942, the territorial supreme court held: "The points now contended for in the brief were not raised upon motion for a new trial, nor presented to the [trial] court for review at all. And the defendant in error was entitled upon these grounds, to have the cause dismissed." L.R.A.1917B.

In the case of Baker v. Marcum, 22 Okla. 21, 97 Pac. 572, this court held: "This court will not consider questions that do not go to the jurisdiction of the trial court that are raised for the first time in this court."

One of the latest expressions of this court on this question is found in the case of Tirey v. Darneal, 37 Okla. 611, 132 Pac. 1087, wherein the court held: "In order to properly present a question to the supreme court for review, the record must affirmatively show that the alleged error complained of was presented to the trial court, and either ignored or decided adversely to the complaining party; and, unless it is thus presented to the trial court, and an opportunity there given to pass upon it, the same will not be considered by this court on appeal."

This court has repeatedly held that where a defendant relies upon a certain defense in the trial court, he will not be permitted on appeal to shift his position and present a defense that was not presented in the trial court. The latest expression of this court on this question that we have found is contained in the case of Bouton v. Carson, — Okla. —, 152 Pac. 131, wherein this court held: "A party cannot try his case in the trial court on one theory and then ask a reversal of the judgment in this court on a theory not presented to the trial court or raised by the pleadings."

In the case of Wattenbarger v. Hall, 26 Okla. 815, 110 Pac. 911, this court said: "The right of the plaintiff in error to recover was properly submitted on his theory, to the jury; and, the jury having found against him thereon, he will not be permitted to change front in this court, amend his hold, and claim his right to recover on some other theory."

A similar expression is found in the case of Duffey v. Scientific American Compiling Dept. 30 Okla. 742, 120 Pac. 1088, as follows: "Where a defendant relies upon a certain defense in the trial court, he will not be permitted to shift his ground of defense on appeal, so as to present another defense, not presented nor relied upon in the trial court."

In the following cases the court upheld this same rule: Harris v. First State Bank, 21 Okla. 189, 95 Pac. 781; Smith v. Colson, 31 Okla. 703, 123 Pac. 149; Hamilton v. Brown, 31 Okla. 213, 120 Pac. 950; Herbert v. Wagg, 27 Okla. 674, 117 Pac. 209; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Key, 28 Okla. 769, 115 Pac. 875; Myers v. First Presby. Church, 11 Okla. 544, 69 Pac. 874; Shuler v. Collins, 40 Okla. 126, 136 Pac. 752; Turley v. Feebeck, 38 Okla. 257, 132 Pac. 889; Rhome Mill. Co. v. Farmers' & M. Nat.

Bank, 40 Okla. 131, 136 Pac. 1095; Horne v. Oklahoma State Bank, 42 Okla. 37, 139 Pac. 992; Coombs v. Cook, 35 Okla. 326, 129 Pac. 698; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. McBee, 45 Okla. 192, 145 Pac. 331; Watson v. Taylor, 35 Okla. 768, 131 Pac. 922; Wallace v. Killian, 40 Okla. 631, 140 Pac. 102.

For the reasons herein stated, it becomes and is manifest to us that the judgment of the lower court should be, in all things, affirmed. Judgment affirmed.

Per Curiam:

Adopted in whole.

Petition for rehearing denied October 3, 1916. Leave to file second petition denied October 31, 1916.

Annotation—May Statute of Frauds be raised for first time on appeal where, under the pleadings, it might have been raised below.

As suggested by the title, the question now under annotation presupposes that the pleadings were such that the objection based on the Statute of Frauds might have been interposed in the court below; and the note is therefore not concerned with the question whether the statute must be specially pleaded, or is available under a general denial.

Generally as to necessity of pleading the Statute of Frauds, see annotation to Henry v. Hilliard, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1.

The conclusion in RENDER v. LILLARD, ante, 1061, that the Statute of Frauds could not be raised on appeal where it was not interposed in the lower court, although it might have been under the general denial, is in harmony with the other decisions on the question. While, as already implied, it is assumed in the cases cited in this note that the objection based on the statute might have been raised under the pleadings, the reports do not ordinarily show whether the statute was specially pleaded, or, as in the RENDER CASE, was available under a general denial.

The rule is of almost universal application that questions not raised in the trial court will not be noticed on appeal (2 Cyc. 661); and this conclusion is well founded, as to hold otherwise would be unfair toward the opposite party and the lower court, and also burdensome to the appellant court.

This rule was applied in the following cases, in which it appears that the Statute of Frauds might, under the pleadings, by proper objections, have been, but was not, interposed as a defense in the lower court, and in which, under such circumstances, it was held that this defense could not for the first time be raised in the appellate court: Johnson v. Latimer (1883) 71 Ga. 470; Berkowsky v. Viall (1896) 66 Ill. App. 349; Niedner v. Friedrich (1897) 69 Ill. App. 622; Lanser v. Fidler (1910) 158 Ill. App. 94; Highley v. Metzger (1900) 187 Ill. 237, 58 N. E. 407; Rozenski v. F. J. L.R.A.1917B.

Brewery Co. (1901) 93 Ill. App. 370; Crossen v. White (1865) 19 Iowa, 109, 87 Am. Dec. 420; Trayer v. Reeder (1876) 45 Iowa, 272; Marr v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. (1903) 121 Iowa, 117, 96 N. W. 716; Holt v. Brown (1884) 63 Iowa, 319, 19 N. W. 235; Penninger v. Reilley (1891) 44 Mo. App. 255; Yeoman v. Mueller (1889) 33 Mo. App. 343; Hobart v. Murray (1893) 54 Mo. App. 249; Walker v. Cooper (1902) 97 Mo. App. 441, 71 S. W. 370; Scharff v. Klein (1887) 29 Mo. App. 549; Clement v. Gill (1894) 59 Mo. App. 482; Lammers v. McGeehan (1891) 43 Mo. App. 664; LaFayette Mut. Bldg. Asso. v. Kleinhoffer (1890) 40 Mo. App. 388; Hackworth v. Zeiting (1892) 48 Mo. App. 32; Grampp v. De Peyster (1894) 80 Hun, 134, 29 N. Y. Supp. 1039; Boomer v. American Spiral Spring Butt Hinge Mfg. Co. (1880) 81 N. Y. 468; King v. Murray (1911) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 135 S. W. 255; Miller v. Drought (1907) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 102 S. W. 145; Sartwell v. Sowles (1900) 72 Vt. 270, 82 Am. St. Rep. 943, 48 Atl. 11.

In Wiswell v. Tefft (1870) 5 Kan. 262, the appellate court decided that the defense based on the statute was available under the general denial, and considered the question whether the contract before them was invalid by reason of the statute; but it does not appear whether or not the objection was raised in the lower court.

And the same result as that reached by the cases cited to the general proposition above was arrived at in the following cases, where it does not clearly appear that the Statute of Frauds could, under the pleadings or otherwise, have been interposed as a defense in the lower court, but in which there is an inference that it might have been: Muir v. Pratt (1903) 18 Colo. App. 363, 71 Pac. 896; Shierling Bros. v. Richland Grocery Co. (1911) 9 Ga. App. 271, 70 S. E. 1126; Sandford v. Davis (1899) 181 Ill. 570, 54 N. E. 977;

Mellish-Hayward Co. v. R. Haas Electric & Mfg. Co. (1913) 181 Ill. App. 664; Deniston v. Hoagland (1873) 67 Ill. 265; Levitan Lumber Co. v. Yegendorf (1915) 191 Ill. App. 454; Hoagland v. Easterday (1894) 58 Ill. App. 450; Boss v. Dulin (1896) — Iowa, —, 68 N. W. 707; Lydig v. Braman (1900) 177 Mass. 212, 58 N. E. 696; Obenauer v. Solomon (1908) 151 Mich. 570, 115 N. W. 696; Beld v. Darst (1906) 146 Mich. 143, 109 N. W. 275; Arther v. Zeh (1843) 5 Hill (N. Y.) 199; Throop Grain Cleaner Co. v. Smith (1888) 110 N. Y. 83, 17 N. E. 671; Eiseman v. Heine (1896) 2 App. Div. 319, 37 N. Y. Supp. 861; Isaacs v. New York Plaster Works (1876) 8 Jones & S. (N. Y.) 277, reversed on other ground in (1876) 67 N. Y. 124; Johns v. Gustin (1874) 2 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 662; Goldman v. Cohen (1915) 167 App. Div. 666, 153 N. Y. Supp. 41; Schuyler v. Wheelon (1908) 17 N. D. 161, 115 N. W. 259; Groff v. Cook (1916) — N. D. —, 157 N. W. 973; Rhode v. Tuten (1891) 34 S. C. 496, 13 S. E. 676; Prior v. Sanborn County (1899) 12 S. D. 86, 80 N. W. 169; Meldrum v. Kenefick (1902) 15 S. D. 370; 89 N. W. 863; Schramm v. Owens Lumber Co. (1914) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 163 S. W. 1016; Larabee v. Porter (1914) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 166 S. W. 395; League v. Davis (1880) 53 Tex. 9; Day v. Dalziel (1895) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 32 S. W. 377; Erhard v. Callaghan (1870) 33 Tex. 171; First Nat. Bank v. Geske & Co. (1915) 85 Wash. 477, 148 Pac. 593.

The defense of the Statute of Frauds in the lower court may be raised in several ways; for example, it may be asserted by objections to evidence, by motions to strike out evidence, or by requests to give or objections to instructions. But, in whatever manner it is sought to take advantage of the statute in the lower court, it must, in order for the defense to be considered on appeal, have been brought to the attention of the lower court in such a manner as to show that it was relied upon.

In the following cases the defense of the Statute of Frauds was held not to have been sufficiently called to the attention of the trial court to entitle the party relying upon it to have it considered on appeal:

—where a peremptory instruction was asked which did not disclose for what reason or on what principle it was requested, International Harvester Co. v. Campbell (1906) 43 Tex. Civ. App. 421, 96 S. W. 93;

—where such defense was not suggested, except in a motion for an instructed verdict, and the record did not show that the motion was ever called to the trial court's attention, Savage v. Mowery (1914) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 166 S. W. 905;

—where the defense was not raised by the answer or by objections to evidence, but was attempted to be raised for the first time in a motion for a directed verdict, Erickson v. Wiper (1916) 33 N. D. 193, 157 N. W. 592;

—where the statute was pleaded in the answer, but was not referred to in the original brief, Bowling v. Stough (1911) 101 Ark. 398, 142 S. W. 512;

—where a demurrer to the evidence was filed, Clement v. Gill (1894) 59 Mo. App. 482; Scharff v. Klein (1887) 29 Mo. App. 549;

—where the defense was not raised by demurrer, and facts in the answer from which it might be inferred were simply reiterations of the averments of the bill, and were part of the plea of the statute of limitations, Lewis v. Teal (1886) 82 Ala. 288, 2 So. 903.

And in Hawley v. Dawson (1888) 16 Or. 344, 18 Pac. 592, the court stated that to make the objection that the facts involved were within the Statute of Frauds available on appeal, it must be presented by an exception to the ruling of the court below, either to the admission or exclusion of evidence, or to the giving or refusing of instructions, or by demurrer in a proper case; that, so far as appeared from the record in the case before them, no such objection had been made in the lower court, and that, for this reason, the defense could not be submitted on appeal.

In an action originating before a justice of the peace, the defendant is not bound to raise the defense of the Statute of Frauds by a written plea, but he is bound in some manner to call the attention of the trial court distinctly to the fact that he relies upon the statute as a defense, before he can be heard in the appellate court to say that the trial court has ignored such defense, and where he makes no objection to theoretical evidence introduced to establish the contract, and his witnesses testify to the details of the contract, and the point is not distinctly raised by any of his instructions, nor called to the attention of the court by his motion for a new trial, except by inference, such defense will not be considered by the appellate court. Scharff v. Klein (1888) 29 Mo. App. 549.

In the following cases it was held that the defense of the Statute of Frauds was sufficiently asserted in the lower court to justify its consideration on appeal:

—where evidence in regard to the parol contract was admitted without objection, but, at the close of the trial, the defendant's counsel requested the court to find as a fact that the contract was by parol, and, as a conclusion of law, that it was void under the statute, Popp v. Swanke (1887) 68 Wis. 364, 31 N. W. 916;

—where the statute was pleaded and objection made to testimony tending to take the case out of its operation, Storthz v. Watts (1915) 117 Ark. 500, 175 S. W. 406;

—where the sufficiency of the description of land attempted to be conveyed was raised in the lower court after the admission of the agreement in evidence had been objected to, and before the trial closed, although the statute was not pleaded in the answer, Barnes v. Rea (1908) 219 Pa. 287, 68 Atl. 839; —where an objection was made to oral evidence offered to prove a contract required to be in writing, Lammers v. McGeehan (1891) 43 Mo. App. 664.

And in the following cases in which the defense of the Statute of Frauds was clearly asserted in the lower court, either by the pleadings or by objections to evidence, the defense of the statute was considered on appeal without discussion of the sufficiency of the assertion in the lower court: Feeney v. Howard (1889) 79 Cal. 525, 4 L.R.A. 826, 12 Am. St. Rep. 162, 21 Pac. 984; Fontaine v. Bush (1889) 40 Minn. 141, 12 Am. St. Rep. 722, 41 N. W. 465; Altoona Portland Cement Co. v. Burbank (1914) 44 Okla. 75, 143 Pac. 845; Hotchkiss v. Ladd (1863) 36 Vt. 593, 86 Am. Dec. 679. J. T. W.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

A. P. BUCY et al., Pliffs. in Err.,
v.

ARDMORE BRICK & TILE COMPANY.

(— Okla. —, 160 Pac. 1126.)

New trial — casualty preventing perfecting appeal.

Judgment was rendered against plaintiffs in error, and from the judgment rendered an appeal was attempted to be prosecuted to the supreme court; case-made being duly signed, sealed, and filed in the trial court within the time provided. Two firms of lawyers, living at different points, represented plaintiffs in error, and one of said firms, after said case-made was settled and signed, mailed the same to the other firm of attorneys, with request that such attorneys prepare the petition in error and file the case-made in the supreme court. The said case-made was miscarried by the mail and never reached the attorneys to whom it was sent, and the said case-made and petition were not filed in the supreme court within the time provided by law for taking an appeal. Thereafter, in accordance with the statute, the plaintiffs in error filed petition in the trial court in which said judgment was rendered, praying that the judgment rendered be vacated and a new trial granted, predicated upon "an unavoidable casualty and misfortune preventing the parties from prosecuting or defending," and setting up as such unavoidable casualty and misfortune, the loss of said case-made in the mail. Held, that the loss of said case-made in the mail and the subsequent failure to file the same in the supreme court within the time provided by law was not such "unavoidable casualty or misfortune as entitled the plaintiffs in error" to a new trial of the cause in which said judgment was rendered. For other cases, see New Trial, I. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(October 10, 1916.)

ERROR to the Carter County Court to review a judgment in defendant's favor in an action brought to vacate a judgment rendered against plaintiffs. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. Eddleman & Graham and Cruce & Potter, for plaintiffs in error:

Defendants have a complete defense to plaintiff's cause of action.

Hutchinson v. Krueger, 34 Okla. 23, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 315, 124 Pac. 591, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 98.

Defendants have, by unavoidable casualty or misfortune, been prevented from prosecuting their defense to said action, and are therefore entitled to relief.

Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Reese, 26 Okla. 613, 110 Pac. 1071; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Eastham, 26 Okla. 605, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 740, 110 Pac. 887; Williams v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 110 N. C. 466, 15 S. E. 97; McLaughlin v. Nettleton, 25 Okla. 319, 105 Pac. 662; Schnitzler v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 1 Kan. App. 674, 42 Pac. 496; Ennis v. Fourth Street Bldg.

Headnote by COLLIER, C.

Note. — The disposition of an appeal or motion for new trial, where, without fault of appellant, the record is lost or incomplete, is discussed in the notes to Bailey v. United States, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 860, and Sanders v. Wise, L.R.A.1915B, 353. L.R.A.1917B.

Asso. 102 Iowa, 520, 71 N. W. 426; Searles v. Christensen, 5 S. D. 650, 60 N. W. 29; Bexter v. Chute, 50 Minn. 164, 36 Am. St. Rep. 633, 52 N. W. 379; Sherman v. Southern P. Co. 31 Nev. 285, 102 Pac. 257.

Messrs. Johnson & McGill, for defendant in error:

The case-made, the loss of which is alleged to have prevented plaintiffs in error from appealing from the original judgment, was a nullity, because not served within three days after judgment was rendered; and by their failure to make said service plaintiffs lost their right to have said judgment reviewed on appeal.

Garfield County v. Porter, 19 Okla. 173, 92 Pac. 152; Lee v. Summers, 36 Okla. 784, 130 Pac. 268; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Nelson, 40 Okla. 143, 136 Pac. 590; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Shawnee, 39 Okla. 728, 136 Pac. 591; Edwards v. Bynum, 43 Okla. 148, 141 Pac. 678; Noble v. Harter, 6 Kan. App. 823, 49 Pac. 794; Powell v. Johnson-Larimer Dry Goods Co. 35 Okla. 644, 130 Pac. 945.

The casualty and misfortune complained of did not authorize the lower court to vacate its judgment.

Marshall v. Marshall, 7 Okla. 240, 54 Pac. 461; Dumbarton Realty Co. v. Erickson, 143 Iowa, 677, 136 Am. St. Rep. 778, 120 N. W. 1025, 21 Ann. Cas. 258; McDaid v. Territory, 1 Okla. 92, 30 Pac. 438, 150 U. S. 209, 37 L. ed. 1055, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 59.

Collier, C., filed the following opinion:

This is an action brought by the plaintiffs in error against the defendant in error to vacate a judgment entered in favor of defendant in error and against plaintiffs in error on the 21st day of October, 1911, for the sum of $316, with interest thereon from the 15th day of October, 1909, and for costs of suit. The parties hereto will hereinafter be designated as they were in the trial court. Within due time defendants filed a motion for new trial, which was overruled, and time fixed within which to prepare and present a case-made.

The unquestioned evidence is that the defendants presented a case-made, and the same was duly settled, signed, and filed in the trial court within the time prescribed in said order; that two firms of attorneys, Cruce & Potter, composed of W. I. Cruce and W. D. Potter, residents of the city of Ardmore in said county of Carter, and Eddleman & Graham, composed of A. Eddleman and J. C. Graham, residents of Marietta, Love county, Oklahoma, were and are the attorneys for defendants; that after said case-made had been duly settled, signed, and filed as aforesaid, W. I. Cruce, on L.R.A.1917B.

the 10th day of February, 1912, mailed the same to Eddleman & Graham, at Marietta, Oklahoma; that said case-made was inclosed in an envelop properly addressed, postage thereon being fully prepaid, and said case-made deposited in the postoffice at Ardmore, Oklahoma, with a letter addressed to said Eddleman & Graham, requesting that they prepare a petition assigning errors to the supreme court of the state of Oklahoma, and forward the case-made to and file the same with the clerk of the supreme court of Oklahoma; that said Eddleman & Graham, nor either of them, never received said letter or said case-made, but that the same was lost or miscarried in the mail; that if said Eddleman & Graham had received said case-made they would have prepared a proper petition in error, and would have transmitted and filed said case-made with the clerk of the supreme court of the state of Oklahoma within the time, and would have perfected the appeal of these petitioners; that said Cruce & Potter, relying upon Eddleman & Graham to prepare petition in error and file the same in the supreme court, believed, and had a right to believe, that said appeal had been perfected, and did not know that said case-made had been miscarried and lost until the statutory time had expired for filing same in the supreme court; that said Eddleman & Graham not having received said case-made nor said letter, believed that said Cruce & Potter had perfected said appeal and filed said case-made in the supreme court, and did not know that the same had not been filed until after the statutory time for filing same in the supreme court had expired.

There was evidence also tending to show that the defendants had a defense to the action in which said judgment, which it was sought to set aside, was rendered. The case was tried to the court, and a judgment rendered denying the vacation of the judgment rendered, and refusing the defendants a new trial.

Within the statutory period, motion was made for a new trial of the action of the court in refusing to vacate the judgment rendered and grant a new trial, which was overruled and duly excepted to. To reverse the judgment denying the vacation of the judgment rendered, and refusal of the court to grant defendants a new trial, this appeal is prosecuted.

This action is a statutory one, and the right to a new trial in the cause is predicated "upon unavoidable casualty, or misfortune preventing the parties from prosecuting or defending." The question of the validity of defense to the action in which the judgment was rendered we think unnecessary to consider, as the ground upon which a new trial of the cause is urged is not sustained by the evidence.

We do not think that the failure of the attorneys to file within the proper time the appeal in the supreme court, due to the failure of one set of attorneys to receive the case-made, by reason of failure of the mail to deliver the same, is such "an unavoidable casualty" as is provided by the statute upon which to predicate a new trial, especially in view of the fact that such unavoidable casualty, in order to be available, must have occurred in the trial in which judgment was rendered.

In Farmers' & M. Bank v. Welborn, 32 Okla. 1, 121 Pac. 620, it is held: "The fact that the stenographer, who took the testimony at a trial, loses his notebook and is unable to make a transcript thereof for the losing party, is not sufficient ground for a new trial." Marshall v. Marshall, 7 Okla. 240, 54 Pac. 461.

In Butts v. Anderson, 19 Okla. 367, 91 Pac. 906, it is held: The district court is only authorized to grant a new trial for the causes and in the manner set forth in the statute; and it is manifest and material error to grant a new trial when the complaining party is unable to procure anyone who can transcribe a deceased stenographer's notes of the trial.

We are of the opinion that the court did not commit error in its refusal to set aside the judgment rendered and to grant a new trial, and that this cause should be affirmed.

Per Curiam:

Adopted in whole.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, Collier, C., on November 28, 1916, handed down the following additional opinion:

The petition for rehearing in this case is predicated upon the averment that subsec. 9 of § 5033, Revised Laws of Oklahoma 1910, was not called, by brief of plaintiffs in error, to the attention of the court, and was overlooked by the court.

Subsection 9 of said § 5033 reads: "When without fault of complaining party, it becomes impossible to make case-made."

It is true that subsec. 9 of § 5033 was not called to the attention of the court, but in fact was not overlooked by the court. The facts of the petition under review show conclusively that subsec. 9 has no field of operation in the instant petition, as said subsection relates alone to making a case-made. In the instant case, the case-made was not only made, but duly certified by the trial judge and attested by the clerk under seal of the court, and lost in the mail while in transit from one to another of the plaintiffs' attorneys.

The misfortune of being denied a review of this cause upon its merits, that comes to the plaintiffs in error, is not "due to the impossibility of making the case-made," but failure to file the case-made together with petition in error in this court within the statutory time, due to the fact that plaintiffs in error had two sets of lawyers, residing in different towns, each of whom relied upon the other to file said case-made and petition in error in this case. We are not informed, and have not been directed to any law, that, under the facts of said petition, that subsec. 9 of § 5033 could be invoked as entitling the plaintiffs in error to a new trial in this case. Failure to secure a review of this case upon its merits may work a hardship, but with this we have nothing to do. We are to construe, but not make, laws.

Finding no grounds upon which a rehearing in this case should be granted, petition for rehearing is hereby denied.

Per Curiam:

Adopted in whole.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS
EX REL. SAMUEL P. THRASHER

v.

DAVE SMITH et al., Appts.

(275 Ill. 256, 114 N. E. 31.)

Constitutional law — suppression of bawdyhouse — class legislation.

1. A statute for the suppression of bawdyhouses is not void as class legislation because the only private persons authorized

Note. — As to validity of statutes or ordinances against bawdyhouses, see annotation following this case, post, 1078.
L.R.A.1917B.

to institute the proceedings must be citizens of the county.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, II, a, 7, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — closing and disposition of property — due process of law.

2. The owner of property used as a bawdyhouse is not deprived of his property without due process of law if he is accorded notice and hearing, by selling the personal property at auction and paying him the proceeds after deduction of costs, and closing the building for a year unless security is given for the immediate abatement of the nuisance.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, II, b, 2 and 5, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(October 24, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendants from a decree of the Circuit Court for Cook County overruling their demurrer to a bill filed to enjoin the maintenance of a public nuisance. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Rudolph Frankenstein and Maurice J. Slater for appellants.

Messrs. Sims, Welch, & Godman and Daniel J. Ward, for appellees:

The right to bring an action to abate a public nuisance may be conferred, by the legislature, upon a private individual.

State ex rel. English v. Fanning, 96 Neb. 123, 147 N. W. 215; State ex rel. Estes v. Persica, 130 Tenn. 48, 168 S. W. 1056; Carleton v. Rugg, 149 Mass. 550, 5 L.R.A. 193, 14 Am. St. Rep. 446, 22 N. E. 55; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; Ex parte Morgan, 57 Tex. Crim. Rep. 551, 136 Am. St. Rep. 996, 124 S. W. 99; Ex parte Lane, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 124 S. W. 100; Lane v. Bell, 53 Tex. Civ. App. 213, 115 S. W. 918; Littleton v. Fritz, 65 Iowa, 488, 54 Am. Rep. 19, 22 N. W. 641; Clopton v. State, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 105 S. W. 994; Ex parte Allison, 99 Tex. 455, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1111, 125 Am. St. Rep. 653, 90 S. W. 870.

The citizen acts as the agent for the state in beginning the action, and it is within the power of the legislature to so authorize.

State ex rel. Estes v. Persica, 130 Tenn. 48, 168 S. W. 1056; Ex parte Allison, 99 Tex. 455, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1111, 125 Am. St. Rep. 653, 90 S. W. 870; Littleton v. Fritz, 65 Iowa, 488, 54 Am. Rep. 19, 22 N. W. 641; Carleton v. Rugg, 149 Mass. 550, 5 L.R.A. 193, 14 Am. St. Rep. 446, 22 N. E. 55; State ex rel. Vance v. Crawford, 28 Kan. 726, 42 Am. Rep. 182.

It is proper to close the building for all purposes for the period of a year, unless the statutory bond is furnished.

State ex rel. English v. Fanning, 96 Neb. 123, 147 N. W. 215; State ex rel. Kern v. Jerome, 80 Wash. 261, 141 Pac. 753; State ex rel. Kern v. Schropfer, 81 Wash. 699, 142 Pac. 1190; State v. Adams, 81 Iowa, 593, 47 N. W. 770; Craig v. Werthmueller, 78 Iowa, 598, 43 N. W. 606; State ex rel. Robertson v. Wheeler, 131 Minn. 308, 155 N. W. 90.

Independently of statute, the jurisdiction of equity extended to abatement of nuisances long prior to the adoption of the statute.

State ex rel. Wilcox v. Gilbert, 126 Minn. 95, 147 N. W. 953; Hutchinson Twp. v. Filk, 44 Minn. 536, 47 N. W. 255; Roloson v. Barnett, 243 Ill. 130, 90 N. E. 228; State ex rel. Dow v. Nichols, 83 Wash. 676, 145 Pac. 986; Littleton v. Fritz, 65 Iowa, 488, 54 Am. Rep. 19, 22 N. W. 641; Ex L.R.A.1917B.

parte Allison, 99 Tex. 455, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1111, 122 Am. St. Rep. 653, 90 S. W. 870.

The act is civil as distinguished from penal, inasmuch as the criminal aspect of the maintenance of bawdyhouses was fully covered prior to its enactment.

State ex rel. Wilcox v. Gilbert, 126 Minn. 95, 147 N. W. 953; Littleton v. Fritz, 65 Iowa, 488, 54 Am. Rep. 19, 22 N. W. 641; Ex parte Allison, 99 Tex. 455, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1111, 122 Am. St. Rep. 653, 90 S. W. 870; Clopton v. State, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 105 S. W. 994; Carleton v. Rugg, 149 Mass. 550, 5 L.R.A. 193, 14 Am. St. Rep. 446, 22 N. E. 55; State v. Murphy, 71 Vt. 127, 41 Atl. 1037; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; State ex rel. Rhodes v. Saunders, 66 N. H. 39, 18 L.R.A. 646, 25 Atl. 588; State v. Marshall, 100 Miss. 626, 56 So. 792, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 434; State ex rel. Robertson v. Wheeler, 131 Minn. 308, 155 N. W. 90.

The act in its remedial details, as well as its general purpose, is a proper exercise of the police power, under the test that a police measure must fairly tend to accomplish the purpose of its enactment, and must not go beyond the reasonable demands of the occasion.

State ex rel. Wilcox v. Gilbert, 126 Minn. 95, 147 N. W. 953; State ex rel. Beek v. Wagener, 77 Minn. 483, 46 L.R.A. 442, 77 Am. St. Rep. 681, 80 N. W. 633, 778, 1134; State ex rel. Estes v. Persica, 130 Tenn. 48, 168 S. W. 1056; State ex rel. Robertson v. Wheeler, 131 Minn. 308, 155 N. W. 90; Ex parte Allison, 99 Tex. 455, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1111, 122 Am. St. Rep. 653, 90 S. W. 870; North Chicago City R. Co. v. Lake View, 105 Ill. 207, 44 Am. Rep. 788.

It is within the power of the legislature to determine what shall be regarded as public nuisances.

State ex rel. English v. Fanning, 97 Neb. 224, 149 N. W. 413.

The act does not unlawfully deprive a citizen of his property without trial by jury, and does not invade his property rights without due process of law, and does not deny to all the equal protection of the law.

State ex rel. English v. Fanning, 96 Neb. 123, 147 N. W. 215; State ex rel. Robertson v. New England Furniture & Carpet Co. (State ex rel. Robertson v. Lane) 126 Minn. 78, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 932, 147 N. W. 951, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 549; State ex rel. Estes v. Persica, 130 Tenn. 48, 168 S. W. 1056; Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. 855; State ex rel. Robertson v. Wheeler, 131 Minn. 308, 155 N. W. 90; Littleton v. Fritz, 65 Iowa, 488, 54 Am. Rep. 19, 22 N. W. 641; Ex parte Allison, 99 Tex. 455, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1111, 122 Am. St. Rep. 653, 90 S. W. 870;

Waterloo v. Waterloo, C. F. & N. R. Co. 149 Iowa, 129, 125 N. W. 819; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 665, 31 L. ed. 205, 211, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; State ex rel. Wilcox v. Gilbert, 126 Minn. 95, 147 N. W. 953; State ex rel. Dow v. Nichols, 83 Wash. 676, 145 Pac. 986; Ingersoll v. Rousseau, 35 Wash. 92, 76 Pac. 513, 1 Ann. Cas. 35; State v. Jordan, 72 Iowa, 377, 34 N. W. 285.

In the enactment of statutory law the legislature is presumed to have intended to keep within constitutional bounds, and unless a statute is unconstitutional beyond a reasonable doubt it must be sustained.

State ex rel. Wilcox v. Gilbert, 126 Minn. 95, 147 N. W. 953; Ex parte Allison, 99 Tex. 455, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1111, 122 Am. St. Rep. 653, 90 S. W. 870.

Dunn, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal by the defendants from a decree of the circuit court of Cook county overruling their demurrer to a bill in equity filed under the provisions of the act approved June 22, 1915, entitled: "An Act Regarding Places Used for Purposes of Lewdness, Assignment, or Prostitution, to Declare the Same to be Public Nuisances, and to Provide for the More Effectual Suppression Thereof." Laws 1915, p. 371.

It is unnecessary to set forth the allegations of the bill, for no claim is made that they are not sufficient to comply with the terms of the act, but the appellants' contentions are that the statute is unconstitutional and void as class legislation; that it deprives the appellants of their property without due process of law; that it attempts to confer upon a private citizen the duties of the state's attorney and the attorney general; and that the act attempts to prevent the commission of a criminal offense by injunction.

The bill was not filed by the state's attorney or the attorney general, but upon the relation of a private citizen of Cook county, under the authority of § 2 of the act. Section 1 declares all buildings, apartments, and places, and the fixtures and movable contents thereof, used for purposes of lewdness, assignment, or prostitution, to be public nuisances; and § 2 authorizes the state's attorney, or any citizen of the county in which such a nuisance exists, to "maintain a bill in equity, in the name of the people of the state of Illinois, perpetually to enjoin all persons from maintaining or permitting such nuisance, and to abate the same, and to enjoin the use of such building or apartment, or such place for any purpose, for a period of one year: . . . Provided, that no such injunction shall issue, except on behalf of an owner or agent, unless it be made to appear to the satisfaction of the court that the owner or agent of such building or apartment or of such place, knew or had been personally served with a notice signed by the petitioner."

The appellants contend that, in extending the right to maintain the bill to citizens of the county only, many residents of the county who are not citizens, and many property owners who are neither residents nor citizens of the county, are deprived of the benefit of the bill. The jurisdiction of a court of equity to enjoin the maintenance of a public nuisance at the suit of the attorney general or state's attorney, even though such maintenance may be punishable by indictment, cannot be doubted, and is recognized in Stead v. Fortner, 255 Ill. 468, 99 N. E. 680, and People ex rel. Dyer v. Clark, 268 Ill. 156, 108 N. E. 994, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 785. The action is one affecting the public welfare, and it is within the constitutional power of the legislature to designate the agency to set the law in motion on behalf of the public. Carleton v. Rugg, 149 Mass. 550, 5 L.R.A. 193, 14 Am. St. Rep. 446, 22 N. E. 55; Littleton v. Fritz, 65 Iowa, 488, 54 Am. Rep. 19, 22 N. W. 641; Ex parte Allison, 48 Tex. Crim. Rep. 634, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 622, 90 S. W. 492, 13 Ann. Cas. 684.

The decree restrained the appellants from maintaining, using, or permitting the use of the premises for the purpose of lewdness, assignment, or prostitution, and from using the building, apartments, and premises for any purpose for one year from the date of the decree, and ordered that the building, apartments, and premises should remain in the custody of the court while the decree remained in effect. It was further ordered that the sheriff should remove all fixtures and movable property used in conducting the nuisance and sell them at public sale, as provided by law, and that he should close the premises and keep them closed for the period of one year. These latter provisions of the decree were authorized by the terms of § 5 of the statute, and it is insisted that the appellants were thereby deprived of their property without due process of law.

The act was an exercise of the police power of the state, passed in the interest of the public welfare, for the preservation of good order and public morals. The keeping of a bawdyhouse was a nuisance at common law. The legislature did not exceed its powers in declaring, as it did in the 1st section, all places, and the property therein, used for the purposes mentioned, to be public nuisances. The contention of the appellants is that the nuisance is not in the property itself, but in the manner in which it is used, and that the unlawful use may be prevented without the confiscation or destruction of the property itself. The statute does not undertake to confiscate or destroy property. The personal property is required to be sold and the proceeds, after the payment of costs, paid to the owner. The deprivation of the use of the property for one year as security against the continuance or renewal of the nuisance is not an unreasonable means to that end, in view of the fact that such deprivation is not absolute. The owner may be at once restored to the possession if he will give security, in a reasonable amount, to abate the nuisance immediately and prevent its being established or maintained within a year. No injunction can issue and no order to close the place can be enforced against an owner who has in good faith endeavored to prevent the nuisance.

Under the police power the state may interfere whenever the public interest demands it, and a large discretion is vested in the legislature to determine not only what the interests of the public require, but what measures are necessary for the protection of such interests, the only restriction being that the interest of the public, in general, requires such interference, and that the means are reasonably necessary to the accomplishment of the purpose, and not unduly oppressive upon individuals. Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 38 L. ed. 385, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499; Durand v. Dyson, 271 Ill. 382, 111 N. E. 143. Since the use of a building and the furniture in it, for the purpose mentioned in the statute, may properly be declared a nuisance, the legislature has authority to abate such nuisance and to adopt any means reasonably adapted to prevent its recurrence in the future which are not unduly oppressive. Deprivation of the possession and use of the property is certainly adapted to the purpose. It is not unduly oppressive under the circumstances. There is no summary proceeding. Provision is made for notice and hearing, and only in case of a wilful violation of the law can the injunction be granted and the possession be taken from the owner in order to make the injunction effectual. An effort in good faith to abate the nuisance will prevent a decree to close the place, and even after decree reasonable security to immediately abate the nuisance and prevent its establishment or maintenance within a period of one year will cause a vacation of the decree. These results may all be easily avoided by not keeping a house of prostitution or permitting one to be kept, and it cannot be regarded as unduly oppressive upon one who has wilfully kept or permitted such a house, to require him, after a judicial determination of that fact, to give security for the discontinuance of the nuisance long enough to assure the permanence of its abatement before he shall be permitted to again occupy and use the property within a year. Such a requirement does not deprive him of his property without due process of law.

Decree affirmed.

Annotation—Validity of statutes or ordinances against bawdyhouses.

I. Statutes, 1078.

II. Ordinances:

1. Constitutionality, 1083.

2. Validity under charter provisions, 1084.

I. Statutes.

Statutes such as those involved in PEOPLE EX REL. THRASHER V. SMITH, ante, 1075, have been enacted in a number of states to more effectually suppress the evil with which the statutes deal. It is recognized that the criminal statutes are not as effective as is necessary in dealing with the evil.<sup>1</sup> Hence power is vested in equity. In view of the ineffectiveness of the criminal laws it cannot be claimed that the legislature, in enacting such a statute, intended to enact another penal statute.<sup>2</sup>

Bawdyhouses were public nuisances at common law,<sup>3</sup> and equity had jurisdiction of actions to abate them or to enjoin their maintenance.<sup>4</sup> The legislature therefore, in conferring on equity power to suppress bawdyhouses, is conferring

<sup>1</sup> It is stated in State ex rel. Wilcox v. Ryder (1914) 128 Minn. 95, 147 N. W. 953, that the general justification of such an act as a matter of legislative discretion under the police power cannot fairly be questioned, for it is a matter of common knowledge that prosecutions under the criminal statutes do not result in efficient repression or suppression of the evil aimed at.

<sup>2</sup> State ex rel. Wilcox v. Ryder (Minn.) supra.

<sup>3</sup> 1 Wood, Nuisances, 3d ed. § 29; Joyce, L.R.A.1917B.

Nuisances, § 391; PEOPLE EX REL. THRASHER V. SMITH, ante, 1075.

<sup>4</sup> Wood, Nuisances, § 777; State ex rel. Wilcox v. Ryder (Minn.) supra; State ex rel. English v. Fanning (1914) 96 Neb. 123, 147 N. W. 215.

That equity has jurisdiction to enjoin the maintenance of a public nuisance, even though such maintenance may be punishable by indictment, see PEOPLE EX REL. THRASHER V. SMITH.

no new power except as it may enlarge the jurisdiction. That it may so enlarge the jurisdiction of equity, subject to constitutional limitations, is the theory of the cases dealing with such statutes.<sup>5</sup> The right to abate a public nuisance may be conferred upon an individual by statute.<sup>6</sup> But in order to maintain an action in equity to enjoin a bawdyhouse under a statute extending the right of individuals to maintain an action to abate such a nuisance, the complainant must bring himself within the term of the statute.<sup>7</sup>

The purpose of statutes such as the one involved in PEOPLE EX REL. THRASHER v. SMITH is to suppress and prevent the maintenance of bawdyhouses. Injunction will not issue if there has been an abandonment of the business. In discussing this question it was stated<sup>8</sup> that, "if the proof establishes conclusively that the defendants have in good faith permanently abandoned the business, and do not intend to re-engage in it at the place in question, or in any other place, then an injunction should not issue; but if there is a doubt as to whether the business has been permanently abandoned in good faith, it presents a proper case for granting a permanent injunction. In order to show an abandonment in good faith within this rule, it is not sufficient to show that, after the prosecution was instituted, there was a swift change in existing conditions, coupled with a professed declaration not to re-engage in the business." The evidence was then reviewed and the court concluded that the showing in favor of the defendant was not sufficient to justify the appellate court in reversing the trial court, and thereby holding that the evidence conclusively established a permanent abandonment in good faith. Accordingly the judgment of the trial court granting a permanent injunction was affirmed and the tax of $300 prescribed by statute imposed upon the premises.

These statutes in general declare bawdyhouses to be nuisances and provide for the maintenance of a bill in equity to enjoin or abate the same. It is usually provided that the building may be closed for all purposes unless a bond is filed, and that the personal property found therein may be sold; and some of the statutes provide for the imposition of a tax or penalty upon the house. Such a statute is a valid exercise of the police power.<sup>9</sup>

Such statutes cannot be held unconstitutional because a jury trial is not provided.<sup>10</sup> The guaranty of a trial by jury is held to have no application to equitable remedies existing at the time of the adoption of the guaranty;<sup>11</sup> there being jurisdiction in equity at common law to abate nuisances and deprive per-

<sup>5</sup> State ex rel. Wilcox v. Ryder (Minn.) supra.

<sup>6</sup> State ex rel. English v. Fanning (1914) 96 Neb. 123, 147 N. W. 215, approved on rehearing (1914) 97 Neb. 224, 149 N. W. 413; PEOPLE EX REL. THRASHER v. SMITH.

As to the rights of owner or occupant of neighboring property to enjoin the maintenance of a house of prostitution, see note to Tedescki v. Berger, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1060, and the subsequent case of Seifert v. Dillon, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1018.

<sup>7</sup> Spence v. Fenchler (1912) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 151 S. W. 1094. Accordingly, the complainant was held not entitled to maintain the action in a city which was excepted from the operation of the statute. The statute involved in this case was not such a statute as was involved in PEOPLE EX REL. THRASHER v. SMITH, but merely provided that any person might abate a nuisance arising from the maintenance of a bawdyhouse.

<sup>8</sup> State ex rel. Kern v. Jerome (1914) 80 Wash. 261, 141 Pac. 753; State ex rel. Kern v. Schropfer (1914) 81 Wash. 699, 142 Pac. 1199.

<sup>9</sup> State ex rel. Robertson v. New England Furniture & Carpet Co. (State ex rel. Robertson v. Lane) (1914) 126 Minn. 78, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 932, 147 N. W. 951, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 549; State ex rel. Wilcox v. Ryder L.R.A.1917B.

(1914) 126 Minn. 95, 147 N. W. 953. The decisions in the foregoing cases are approved generally in State ex rel. English v. Fanning (1914) 97 Neb. 224, 149 N. W. 413.

See PEOPLE EX REL. THRASHER v. SMITH, ante, 1075.

It is held in State ex rel. Robertson v. New England Furniture & Carpet Co. (Minn.) supra, that a statute authorizing seizure and forfeiture of personal property used with the knowledge of the owner in connection with the maintenance of a bawdyhouse is not invalid as constituting an unreasonable exercise of the police power with respect to such property.

<sup>10</sup> State ex rel. Wilcox v. Ryder (Minn.) supra, the provisions as to closing the house, forfeiture and sale of personalty, and the imposition of a penalty, were all involved.

State ex rel. English v. Fanning (1914) 96 Neb. 123, 147 N. W. 215 (objection was made by owner to closing property).

<sup>11</sup> State ex rel. Wilcox v. Ryder (Minn.) and State ex rel. English v. Fanning (Neb.) supra. In such cases due process of law is observed by using the equitable remedies existing concurrently with the strictly legal one of trial by jury, or those provided by statute law which afford notice and an opportunity to defend.

sons of property used in the perpetration thereof, a statute which prescribes the remedy by equity for the abatement of the nuisance cannot be held unconstitutional as depriving one of property without trial by jury. One court<sup>12</sup> concludes that, "since, therefore, a review of the act as a whole leads irresistibly to the conclusion that its purpose is repression of the evil, to be worked out by equitable attack upon the property of those engaged in or abetting it, and not punishment of the offenders by infliction of personal penalties, except as for contempt of court, the contention that, because the thing itself—the lewd place—declared a nuisance by the act would in its maintenance have constituted a criminal offense at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, a jury trial is indispensable, has no foundation, and is thus answered by the authorities." The court then reviews the authorities, and concludes that the fallacy of this argument lies in disregarding the distinction between a proceeding to abate a nuisance, which relates simply to the property which in its use constitutes the nuisance, and the prosecution of one for the crime of maintaining it.

Particular attack has been directed against the provision in these statutes for a penalty, on the ground that no jury trial is provided, it being argued that penalties are regarded as punishments for infractions of law and statutes imposing them as penal; consequently there must be a jury trial. This is answered in one case<sup>13</sup> by stating that, while the act designates the exaction as a "penalty," the same section clearly indicates that it is to be imposed, treated, and collected as a tax. It is stated that the fact that a tax is imposed for the double purpose of regulation and revenue is no reason for declaring it invalid. And the court concludes that "we hold it not penal, which disposes of the defendant's main contention regarding right to trial by jury." This exaction is not, however, a tax within the meaning of a constitutional provision requiring that bills for the raising of revenue shall originate in the house.<sup>13</sup>

It has also been held that, the imposition of the tax not being penal, there can be no objection based upon the constitutional provisions relating to excessive fines and unusual punishment, the right to be confronted by witnesses, testifying against one's self, bills of attainder, and ex post facto laws.<sup>14</sup>

Proceedings under such a statute not being criminal, it is not necessary to consider whether there is a violation of the constitutional provision that no conviction shall work forfeiture of estate, since it is settled that by due process of law specific forfeitures may be imposed for specific acts, including even total destruction of property per se innocent, when such fairly tends, and is reasonably necessary, to accomplish a legitimate purpose under the police power.<sup>14</sup>

Such a statute is not open to the objection that it deprives one of property without due process of law, where notice and an opportunity to defend are afforded,<sup>15</sup> especially where the statute does not authorize relief against anyone not proved to be a participant either active or by consent or acquiescence. The provision making lack of reasonable care or diligence equivalent to notice of the uses to which the property is being put does not negative this conclusion, for ignorance due to negligence is the equivalent of notice; furthermore the owner of property is presumed to know the business conducted thereon.<sup>16</sup>

Such a statute has also been sustained as against the objection that it is a denial of the equal protection of the law.<sup>17</sup>

We have heretofore noticed questions as to the validity of such statutes which have arisen upon general objections thereto and those which have arisen from the vesting of jurisdiction in equity. We come now to notice the validity of the particular provisions of such

<sup>12</sup> State ex rel. Wilcox v. Ryder (Minn.) supra.

<sup>13</sup> State ex rel. Robertson v. Wheeler (1915) 131 Minn. 308, 155 N. W. 90. The statute cannot therefore be held invalid because it originated in the senate.

<sup>14</sup> State ex rel. Wilcox v. Ryder (Minn.) supra.

<sup>15</sup> State ex rel. Wilcox v. Ryder (Minn.) supra; State ex rel. English v. Fanning (1914) 96 Neb. 123, 147 N. W. 215, approved on rehearing (1914) 97 Neb. 224, 149 N. W. 413.

See State ex rel. Robertson v. New England Furniture & Carpet Co. (State ex L.R.A.1917B.

rel. Robertson v. Lane) (1914) 126 Minn. 78, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 932, 147 N. W. 951, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 549, infra, note 30; and State ex rel. Kern v. Jerome (1914) 80 Wash. 281, 141 Pac. 763, and State ex rel. Kern v. Schropfer (1914) 81 Wash. 699, 142 Pac. 1199, infra, note 26.

PEOPLE EX REL. THRASHER v. SMITH, ante, 1075.

<sup>16</sup> State ex rel. Wilcox v. Ryder (Minn.) supra.

<sup>17</sup> State ex rel. English v. Fanning (1914) 96 Neb. 123, 147 N. W. 215, approved on rehearing (1914) 97 Neb. 224, 149 N. W. 413.

statutes, as to the closing of the building and the forfeiture and sale of the personal property and the imposition of a fine.

That a building may constitutionally be closed for all purposes unless a bond is given is held by the cases that have passed on this question.<sup>18</sup> These acts manifest an intention that the owner of the premises shall not be subject to the penalty of having the premises closed unless he had notice of the nuisance.<sup>19</sup> The owner is bound, however, by the knowledge of his agent, and also by such knowledge as the agent should have obtained by reasonable diligence.<sup>20</sup> It has been held that a building may be closed for all purposes unless a bond is given, although the owner had no knowledge that the building was being so used prior to the granting of the temporary injunction.<sup>21</sup> Even where the owner has knowledge, the place cannot be closed against him if he has in good faith endeavored to prevent the nuisance.<sup>22</sup>

The procedure prescribed by the Minnesota statute under which the owner of the premises may obtain its release by payment of all the costs of the proceedings, and giving bond with certain prescribed conditions looking to abatement of the nuisance, is not fully set out in the report of the cases passing upon that statute. It is held, however, that the provisions of the statute are not in conflict with the constitutional provision that any person "ought to obtain justice freely and without purchase."<sup>23</sup>

In a case involving a hotel it is stated that it is impossible to separate the building into parts and segregate one portion as that in which the nuisance existed. The only method to abate the same is to declare the entire premises a public nuisance, and to abate the same by the decree.<sup>24</sup> But upon rehearing<sup>25</sup> it was stated that "the object of the statute is to provide an efficient and prompt means for suppressing the so-called 'red-light district' in communities that are unwilling to tolerate such a nuisance. The statute is not intended as a means of regulating the morals of private individuals, nor to prevent immorality in hotels mainly devoted to the accommodation of families and moral, well-behaved people. Of course, if a hotel becomes 'a house of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution,' it will not escape the ban of the statute because some innocent people are deceived and patronize the house in good faith as a hotel. It is not necessary to prove that the owner of the property knew that it was being used for the prohibited purposes; if the proprietor, that is, the person in control and management of the house, has such knowledge, it is sufficient."

Some statutes in addition to providing for the closing of the building unless a bond is filed impose a fine or tax. The owner cannot by filing the bond evade the payment of this tax, where the statute expressly provides that "the release of the property under the provisions of this (section) shall not release it from

<sup>18</sup> Ibid.

This is implied also from the decision in State ex rel. Wilcox v. Ryder (1914) 126 Minn. 95, 147 N. W. 953, supra, note 10, where this provision was before the court with others.

State ex rel. Kern v. Jerome (1914) 80 Wash. 261, 141 Pac. 713, and State ex rel. Kern v. Schropfer (1914) 81 Wash. 699, 142 Pac. 1199; PEOPLE EX REL. THRASHER v. SMITH.

<sup>19</sup> The court in State ex rel. Robertson v. Wheeler (Minn.) supra, does not decide whether a statute might constitutionally provide for the closing of the property and the levying of a fine or penalty thereon without notice to the owner of the nuisance, but states that the Minnesota statute does not provide for such action without notice.

<sup>20</sup> State ex rel. Robertson v. Wheeler (Minn.) supra; State ex rel. English v. Fanning (1914) 97 Neb. 224, 149 N. W. 413.

<sup>21</sup> State ex rel. English v. Fanning (1914) 96 Neb. 123, 147 N. W. 215. It is stated that the granting of a temporary injunction L.R.A.1917B.

was notice to the owner that illegal practices were charged to be carried on in his building; that he should then have taken steps to abate the nuisance, or at least determine by legal proceedings whether the terms of his lease were being violated. Failing this, he accepted as an alternative the contingency of having the building declared a nuisance and being compelled to give the statutory bond for its release.

<sup>22</sup> PEOPLE EX REL. THRASHER v. SMITH, ante, 1075.

See State ex rel. Kern v. Jerome and State ex rel. Kern v. Schropfer (Wash.) supra, note 8.

<sup>23</sup> State ex rel. Robertson v. Wheeler (Minn.) supra.

The statement in State ex rel. Wilcox v. Ryder (Minn.) supra, that the provisions of the statute in this regard are unnecessarily drastic and probably invalid, is disapproved.

<sup>24</sup> State ex rel. English v. Fanning (Neb.) supra.

<sup>25</sup> State ex rel. English v. Fanning (1914) 97 Neb. 224, 149 N. W. 413. The decree closing the house was reversed.

any judgment, lien, penalty, or liability to which it may be subject by law."<sup>26</sup>

The imposition of such a tax does not offend against the constitutional provision for uniformity and equality of taxation.<sup>27</sup> Nor does it offend against the due process of law clause, where the owners were parties to the action and process was served upon them and they appeared in contesting the validity of the tax.<sup>27</sup>

Many of the statutes dealing with this question provide for a sale of the personal property found in the house. It is held that, in providing for the abatement of a nuisance, the legislature may confer upon the courts power to order the personal property used in connection with such a house sold and the proceeds applied in payment of the costs, the balance to be paid to the defendants as their interests may appear.<sup>27</sup> The actual owner of such property is entitled to a day in court before the property can be seized and sold.<sup>28</sup> No person, however, has any vested right to have property used in such a place. Thus, it has been held that the vendor of the personal property in such a house, under a conditional sale contract entered into prior to the passage of the statute, has no vested right which will be impaired by the application of the act, as no vested or constitutional right exists to use or allow the use of property for purposes injurious to either public health or morals, and an owner with knowledge or notice in the premises cannot complain if losses ensue when the law deals with the property in any way reasonably necessary for the suppression of the evil in connection with which it is used.<sup>29</sup>

Provisions in such statutes as to evidence have been sustained. Thus, it has been held that neither a provision in such a statute making the general reputation of a place as being a bawdyhouse prima facie evidence of the existence of a nuisance, nor another provision of such statute creating a presumption of knowledge on the part of all persons having property interests in the property in or about such house, constitutes interference with the property rights of a vendor of the personal property under conditional sale contracts without due process of law, since they relate merely to a matter of procedure.<sup>30</sup>

Statutes directed against the keepers of houses of ill fame have also been attacked as to the character of evidence which authorizes a conviction. A statute imposing a fine or imprisonment on any person who shall keep a house which is, or which is reputed to be, a house of ill fame, is not unconstitutional because it permits a conviction for the offense of keeping a house which is in fact a house of prostitution on proof that it is reputed to be such a house.<sup>31</sup>

A statute making it an offense to keep or be concerned in keeping a bawdy or disorderly house, and prescribing a penalty therefor, cannot be held invalid on <sup>26</sup> State ex rel. Kern v. Jerome (1914) 80 Wash. 261, 141 Pac. 753, and State ex rel. Kern v. Schropfer (1914) 81 Wash. 699, 142 Pac. 1199. The court was accordingly held justified in refusing to accept the bond containing a stipulation that the tax should not be imposed.

<sup>27</sup> State ex rel. Kern v. Jerome and State ex rel. Kern v. Schropfer (Wash.) supra.

The forfeiture of rights or interests of innocent persons in property used in violation of law is discussed in the note to Skinner v. Thomas, L.R.A.1916E, 343.

Whether a gambling device is property within constitutional protection is discussed in note in Mullen v. Mosely, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 394.

<sup>28</sup> State ex rel. English v. Fanning (1914) 96 Neb. 123, 147 N. W. 215. The property was owned by a corporation. The secretary of the corporation, a stockholder therein, was made a party to the proceedings to sell the furniture, but not the corporation. It was accordingly held that the judgment ordering the property to be removed and sold was erroneous. The decision in this case was modified upon rehearing (1914) 97 Neb. 224, 149 N. W. 413, but it does not appear that it was modified on L.R.A.1917B.

the point now under discussion. The building involved in this case was a hotel, and it is further stated that the principle which allows the seizure and destruction or sale of property used for an unlawful purpose cannot be applied in such a case as this, where the property which may have been used for such purposes was not identified, and where, if so used, it in all probability constituted an exceedingly small proportion of the total loss.

<sup>29</sup> State ex rel. Robertson v. New England Furniture & Carpet Co. (State ex rel. Robertson v. Lane) (1914) 126 Minn. 78, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 932, 147 N. W. 951, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 549.

<sup>30</sup> Ibid. Nor is the provision of § 5 (Gen. Stat. 1913, § 8721), that claimants of personalty used in maintaining the house must prove innocence "to the satisfaction of the court," subject to the objection that it calls for more than a preponderance of the evidence.

<sup>31</sup> State v. Anderson (1910) 83 Conn. 55, 75 Atl. 81. It is stated, however, that it did not appear upon the record on appeal but that the defendant was properly convicted upon direct evidence only.

the ground that it is in conflict with another statute making it an offense to invite or solicit a female to visit and be at any house, room, or place for the purpose of meeting and having unlawful sexual intercourse with any male, and fixing a punishment for a violation thereof, the two statutes relating to different and distinct, though somewhat allied, offenses.<sup>32</sup>

A statutory provision for the enjoining of a bawdyhouse cannot be held invalid on the ground of an insufficient title, where the title simply embraces more territory than the act itself and the constitutional provision relating to the matter declares that no bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be expressed in its title, but if any subject shall be embraced in the act which shall not be expressed in the title, such act shall be void only as to so much thereof as shall not be so expressed.<sup>33</sup>

II. Ordinances.

1. Constitutionality.

The validity of a municipal ordinance must be tested in two ways: First. Whether it is within the charter power of the municipality; Second. Whether it violates any general constitutional provision. The latter question is similar in principle to that arising upon a challenge to the validity of an act of the legislature on the ground that it conflicts with some constitutional guaranty, although in the case of municipalities the question arises under different circumstances.

The right of a municipality to regulate the subject under discussion has been objected to especially where the mayor is empowered to punish for violation of the ordinance. Where there was no question but that the municipality was fully authorized by the laws of the state to pass the ordinance in question and provide punishment for its violation, it has been held that an ordinance providing "that no person shall, within the corporate limits of this city, keep any house of ill fame, bawdyhouse, or house of assignation," and empowering the mayor to punish violations thereof, is not in conflict with the United States constitutional Amendment that "no person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury," on the theory that this provision of the Federal Constitution is applicable only to the exercise of power by the United States, and is not a restriction upon the legislative authority of the state.<sup>34</sup>

On the contrary it has been held where the keeping of a house of ill fame or prostitution is a criminal offense both by statute and common law, that an ordinance prescribing a punishment for the keeping of a house of ill fame or prostitution, and providing for trial and conviction of violators in the mayor's court where the proceedings were by complaint, without presentment or indictment by a grand jury, is unconstitutional as violating the guaranty that "no person shall be held to answer for any criminal offense unless on the presentment or indictment of a grand jury."<sup>35</sup>

In some cases the objection is not that there was a failure to obtain a presentment or indictment by a grand jury, but that there was a failure to provide a trial by jury. It is the theory of some cases that the enforcement of a penalty for violating a city ordinance is not a criminal prosecution within the meaning of the constitutional provision guarantying a trial by jury; that it is in no sense a trial for a crime against the state, but a proceeding to enforce a municipal regulation adopted to prevent licentiousness and to protect the community of the city;<sup>36</sup> hence it does not require a jury trial.

Some municipal regulations are similar to the statutes discussed in subd. I. supra. One ordinance stopped short of closing the house, but required the removal therefrom of the occupants. The fact that an occupant is the owner of the house cannot avail to protect her in its occupancy when perverted to a prohibit-

<sup>32</sup> Wilson v. State (1909) 55 Tex. Crim. Rep. 176, 115 S. W. 837.

<sup>33</sup> Spence v. Fenchler (1912) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 151 S. W. 1094.

See Index to L.R.A. Notes, Statutes, §§ 13, 14, upon the general question of entitling.

<sup>34</sup> State v. Wells (1877) 46 Iowa, 662.

<sup>35</sup> Slaughter v. People (1846) 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 334, note, followed in Welch v. Stowell (1846) 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 332.

<sup>36</sup> Wong v. Astoria (1886) 13 Or. 538, 11 Pac. 295. The state Constitution author- L.R.A.1917B.

ized the creation of municipal courts for the purpose of administering the regulations of the city. It is stated that it is not a deprivation of the right of a jury trial proper because a party is not able to obtain it in an inferior court; that if it can be secured upon appeal by reasonably simple procedure, the conditions of the guaranty are met. It is then stated that the provisions of the city charter may have authorized an appeal in such case, but whether it did so or not, no constitutional guaranty was violated.

ed use.<sup>37</sup> Where such removal is required after hearing and on proof, there is no violation of the constitutional guaranty of "due process of law." Such an ordinance is a valid exercise of the police power.<sup>38</sup>

2. Validity under charter provisions.

We now come to a discussion of the validity of municipal ordinances, as tested by the municipal charter. It is a well-settled rule of law that a municipality is a creature of statute, and possesses and can exercise only such powers as are conferred expressly or by necessary implication, or such as are essential to the accomplishment of the declared objects and purposes of the corporation.<sup>39</sup> It is essential, therefore, to the validity of an ordinance relating to bawdyhouses, that some authority be conferred upon the municipality to deal with this subject.<sup>40</sup>

Bawdyhouses being public nuisances, it is held in some cases that the municipality is empowered to legislate in regard thereto under a charter authorizing it to make by-laws relative to nuisances.<sup>41</sup> Under this power it may impose a fine upon the person owning the house and having knowledge of the keeping for such illegal purpose.<sup>41</sup> It was claimed that the municipality did not possess power to enact the ordinance, for the reason that it subjected the owner to the penalty merely because he had knowledge of the uses to which his property was put when he had no power to prevent it so being used. The court states that this is not the fair meaning of the word "owner" as used in the by-law; that "when it speaks of an owner having knowledge of this improper use of his property, it means at least a knowledge of a use which he has power to prevent, and therefore permits." The court then states that, in the case of a landlord who has leased his property in good faith with no knowledge that it was intended to convert it into a house of this description, and of a tenant who had, contrary to the intention and wish of the landlord, made this improper and unlawful use of it, it could not be claimed that as soon as the improper use became known to him, he would be liable to the penalty of the by-law; and the court states further that if, in such a case, he should go to the proper prosecuting officers and inform them of the unlawful use to which his property was being subjected, and should request them to take measures to abate the nuisance, he would not be liable to the penalty. But it is stated that no such question arises in the case at bar, since the defendant, so far as anything to the contrary can be known from the declaration, may have been himself the keeper of the house, and the lease, if there was one, to any nominal keeper, may itself have been merely colorable.

<sup>37</sup> State v. Mack (1889) 41 La. Ann. 1079, 6 So. 808. It is stated, however, "that the ordinance under consideration does not deprive defendant of her property; it simply prevents its use by her for purposes inconsistent with public order and morals."

The ordinance in question provided that "wherever a house of prostitution or of assignation may become dangerous to public morals, . . . the mayor may on such facts coming to his knowledge order the occupants of such house . . . to remove therefrom within a delay of five days, by service of notice on such occupants in person or by posting the notice on the door of such house; . . . and upon such occupants failing so to do, each shall be fined in the sum of $25, and in case of failure or refusal to pay said fine, each occupant shall be imprisoned for a time not exceeding thirty days."

<sup>38</sup> State v. Mack (La.) supra.

<sup>39</sup> Dill. Mun. Corp. 5th ed. § 237.

<sup>40</sup> It is stated, however, in Childress v. Nashville (1855) 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 347, that without the aid of express power by legislative grant the validity of such an ordinance might be maintained. "A bawdy-house is a common nuisance, because it not only tends to corrupt the public morals by an open profession of prostitution, but it likewise endangers the public peace and good order by drawing together profligate and disorderly persons. It is therefore an indictable offense at common law to keep such a house. And not only may the keeper of the house be indicted for the nuisance, but the owner of the property, letting it with knowledge that it is to be used for the purposes of prostitution. . . . In this view, the general power of a corporation to adopt such police regulations as are not incompatible with the Constitution and general laws of the state would suffice to give validity to the ordinance in question."

<sup>41</sup> McAlister v. Clark (1865) 33 Conn. 91, holding valid an ordinance declaring houses of ill fame or assignation houses, houses reputed to be houses of ill fame or assignation houses, to be common nuisances, and subjecting the persons owning them and having knowledge of their keeping, occupation, use, and reputation to a fine of $50, on the ground of their being deemed guilty of causing, committing, or maintaining a nuisance. The fine of $50 was held not excessive.

Generally, as to the power of municipality over nuisance, see Indexes to L.R.A. Notes, under the title, "Municipal Corporations," subtitle, "As to nuisances."

But statutory authority to "abate or prevent nuisances," or to pass "such ordinances, by-laws, rules, and regulations for the better government of the city" as are deemed necessary, has been held not to empower a municipality to enact a law declaring that not only suffering or allowing prostitution, but permitting single acts of illicit sexual intercourse in a house or room, should constitute the owner or occupant of the room or house the keeper of a house of ill fame.<sup>42</sup> Nor is the municipality empowered under the general power above stated to enact a rule of evidence providing what shall be sufficient to establish the character of the house; this is held to be true whether the rule is repugnant to or in consonance with the established rule of evidence.<sup>43</sup> Nor can the municipality impose a fine upon the owner or occupant who, after it is "so adjudged" (under the preceding provisions of the ordinance inflicting a penalty and the other provisions changing the rules of evidence) that his home, building, or room is a house of ill fame or a bawdyhouse, shall continue for two days longer to allow "disorderly persons, or persons of notorious bad character," to frequent such house or room.<sup>44</sup> Speaking more particularly of the owner of such a building, the court states that

"the power to prevent nuisances does not, directly or by implication, carry with it the authority to hold the owner of a building, who may never himself visit it, responsible for the nuisance of keeping a house of prostitution, bawdyhouse, or house of ill fame, committed by his tenant without his knowledge or consent, and subject him to a fine, to say nothing of the disjunctive liability to be deemed the keeper of a house of ill fame, and to have the inference drawn against him on account of the bad character rather than the conduct of those who occupy his houses as lessees or frequent them."<sup>45</sup>

It has been held that statutory authority "to define and prevent disorderly conduct; to prevent all disorderly assemblages, . . . and to punish . . . disorderly persons as defined by law," empowers the municipality to define disorderly conduct as including the keeping of a house of ill fame, prostitution, or assignation, or contributing to the support thereof or voluntarily residing therein.<sup>46</sup>

Under authority to prohibit and suppress bawdyhouses, the municipality may impose a fine upon the keeper of such a house, or upon an owner who permits such a house to be kept in a building owned by him.<sup>47</sup> This is es-

<sup>42</sup> State v. Webber (1890) 107 N. C. 962, 22 Am. St. Rep. 920, 12 S. E. 598. The ordinance provided "that the occupant or owner of any house or room or part of the same within the city of Asheville, who shall suffer or allow prostitution therein, or males and females to cohabit therein without then and there being lawfully married, shall be deemed the keeper of a house of ill fame and be fined on conviction the sum of $50." The court argues that, in order to prove the charge of keeping a bawdyhouse or house of ill fame, it must be shown that it was a common resort of people of both sexes for the purpose of prostitution, and that it was not sufficient to prove acts of illicit intercourse on the part of the occupants without showing also that it was kept for the convenience of people who visited it to indulge in lewdness. It is then stated that to lay the foundation for suppressing such houses, the ordinance in question first declares that to be a bawdyhouse which the law declares is not one.

<sup>43</sup> State v. Webber (N. C.) supra. It is stated that competent testimony would be admissible on the trial of a properly constituted case under the general law of evidence, not by reason of the passage of a by-law without authority. The ordinance in question provided that "circumstances from which it may reasonably be inferred that any house is inhabited or frequented by disorderly persons, or persons of notorious bad character, shall be sufficient to establish that such house is a disorderly or house of ill fame." It is stated that the fact that a house is "either inhabited or frequented by disorderly persons, or persons of notoriously bad character," is not, without further testimony tending to show actual disorder or prostitution, sufficient to go to the jury to establish a charge of keeping either a disorderly house or a bawdyhouse.

<sup>44</sup> State v. Webber (N. C.) supra.

<sup>45</sup> People v. Miller (1885) 38 Hun (N. Y.) 82. It was urged in this case that, as the act imputed to the accused was a crime by the general law of the state, the provisions of the chapter quoted did not confer upon the common council the power of declaring that the keeping of a house of ill fame was disorderly conduct. The court, however, held that the council had such power, and with reference to the fact that keeping such a house was an offense under the state law, states that "if this respondent kept a bawdyhouse as charged, she was liable to arrest and to be dealt with as a disorderly person, or she could have been indicted and punished as a criminal for keeping a house of that character. The offenses are separate and distinct and are made so by the statute."

<sup>46</sup> Childress v. Nashville (1855) 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 347.

pecially true where, in addition to the statutory authority "to prohibit and suppress . . . disorderly houses and bawdyhouses," there is authority to impose fines, forfeitures, and penalties and terms of imprisonment for the violation of ordinances and by-laws.<sup>47</sup> The authority of the municipality under such charter authority is so clear that it has been stated that "no question can be raised, therefore, as to the validity of the ordinance, the power being given in express terms by the statute. And the grant of the power to 'prohibit and suppress all disorderly houses and bawdyhouses' carries with it, by necessary implication, the right and the power to adopt all such lawful means or methods as may be found necessary to effect the end in view. The method adopted in the case before us, by forbidding the owners of houses within the corporation, under a penalty, to let a house to be used or kept for the purposes of prostitution, was unquestionably a proper exercise of the power granted."<sup>48</sup>

An ordinance prohibiting persons from entering a disorderly house has been held authorized under statutory authority to "suppress and restrain disorderly houses."<sup>49</sup>

A municipality has power to punish by fine or imprisonment any person resorting to or frequenting or found in a disorderly house or place or house of ill fame, or place resorted to for the purpose of prostitution, assignation, fornication, under a charter provision authorizing the municipality "to suppress disorderly houses and houses of ill fame, and to provide for the arrest and punishment of the keepers thereof," and power to "prevent and restrain obscenity, lewdness, or indecency within said city, whether committed in a public or a private place therein, and to provide for the arrest and punishment of all persons who shall be guilty of the same."<sup>50</sup> Such an ordinance making it an offense to be found in a disorderly house will not be construed to include a person lawfully there.<sup>51</sup>

An ordinance making it an offense to

The court in Wong v. Astoria (1886) 13 Or. 538, 11 Pac. 295, pertinently states that "the power to suppress and prohibit practices that are demoralizing and pernicious would be of little avail if it could not be vindicated. The offense directly affects the welfare of the city, and how could the latter suppress and prohibit it unless it had the right to adopt a by-law against it and affix a penalty for its violation?"

The contrary holding in Chariton v. Barber (1880) 54 Iowa, 360, 37 Am. Rep. 209, 6 N. W. 528, that any provision such as that cited in the text above does not authorize the enactment of an ordinance providing that anyone who shall within the city "keep any bawdyhouse or house of ill fame or house of assignation, or shall lease or let any house for such purpose, or permit any house under his control to be so used, . . . 'shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined'" in a sum named and costs of prosecution, and stand committed, is unsupported by reason or authority. The court relies upon an earlier decision in the jurisdiction holding that the authority conferred upon a city to suppress gambling did not authorize the punishment of keeping devices for gambling. Grave doubt is expressed, however, as to the validity of the earlier decision, but it is stated that it had been accepted without question or challenge for more than nineteen years and ought not to be disturbed. The theory of this case is that authority to suppress must be exercised in such a way that the suppression will be the direct, not the incidental, result of the application of the ordinance.

<sup>47</sup> Owensboro v. Simms (1896) 99 Ky. 49, L.R.A.1917B.

34 S. W. 1085. The ordinance involved provided "that any person or persons who shall in the city of Owensboro establish or carry on, or permit to be carried on, upon his or her property, any house of ill fame, shall upon conviction for each offense be fined not less than $25 nor more than $100; that each twenty-four hours same is carried on or permitted to be carried on shall constitute a separate offense under this section." That the municipality had power under the statutory provision quoted in the text is assumed rather than decided.

<sup>48</sup> Childress v. Nashville (Tenn.) supra.

<sup>49</sup> State v. Botkin (1887) 71 Iowa, 87, 60 Am. Rep. 780, 32 N. W. 185. The disorderly house involved in this case was apparently not a bawdyhouse, but was one coming under the provisions of a definition of an ordinance that if the keeper of any store, grocery, saloon, etc., or other place, permits games of cards or other games of chance to be played therein, he shall be deemed the keeper of a disorderly house, and shall be subject to fine.

<sup>50</sup> State ex rel. Salter v. McDonald (1913) 121 Minn. 207, 141 N. W. 110; State ex rel. Kent McDonald (1913) 121 Minn. 525, 141 N. W. 112.

<sup>51</sup> State v. Botkin (Iowa) supra, holding that a city ordinance providing that "any person who shall be found in or frequenting a disorderly house shall be subject to a fine" is not void because it does not use the word "unlawfully."

State ex rel. Salter v. McDonald (Minn.) supra. It was urged that an ordinance making it an offense to be found in a disorderly and ill-governed house was unreasonable and void. In answer to this the court, after defining the term "disorderly resort to a house of ill fame for lewdness is invalid under charter authority to restrain and punish prostitutes, or under an act amendatory thereof giving it power to suppress or restrain bawdy or other disorderly houses and punish the keepers thereof.<sup>52</sup>

A municipality has no power to order the destruction of a house used as a house of ill fame, under a charter conferring upon the common council of the city "full power and authority to make all such by-laws and ordinances as may by the said common council be deemed expedient for effectually preventing and suppressing all disorderly houses and houses of ill fame within the limits of said city," especially where, by the common and statute law of the state, fine and imprisonment are considered adequate for the suppression of such houses.<sup>53</sup> The fact that such a house is a nuisance which the municipality is undoubtedly authorized to abate does not authorize the destruction of the house, since it is a nuisance in consequence of it being the resort of persons of ill fame, and that which constitutes or causes the nuisance may be removed.<sup>54</sup>

Authority "to exclude" bawdyhouses from certain limits and "to close the same" empowers the municipality to enact an ordinance authorizing the mayor to cause the removal of the occupants of any such house that has become dangerous to public morals.<sup>54</sup>

A statutory provision empowering cities to make ordinances "to improve the morals and order" of their inhabitants has been held not to authorize the enactment of an ordinance making it a misdemeanor to keep a bawdyhouse, house of ill fame, or house of assignation.<sup>55</sup> On the contrary it is assumed, at least, that power is conferred upon a municipality to punish by fine anyone who carries on, or permits to be carried on, upon his premises, a house of ill fame, by a statutory provision authorizing cities to provide for the "general health, comfort, and convenience" of their inhabitants, and also for "the morals and the safety of the public."<sup>56</sup>

It is settled in some jurisdictions that a municipality cannot punish an offense made penal by the criminal laws of the state. Hence an ordinance attempting to make it an offense to allow to be occupied a house or portion of a house as a house of ill fame is invalid where such acts are criminal under the state laws.<sup>57</sup> On the contrary the theory pre-house," states that "we apprehend that one casually there on an errand of mercy or business need not fear a prosecution." The ordinance was accordingly held not void for unreasonableness. This case was followed in State ex rel. Kent v. McDonald (Minn.) supra.

<sup>52</sup> Ogden City v. McLaughlin (1888) 5 Utah, 387, 16 Pac. 721.

<sup>53</sup> Welch v. Stowell (1846) 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 332.

<sup>54</sup> State v. Mack (1889) 41 La. Ann. 1079, 6 So. 808. See supra, note 37, for ordinance.

There is stated to be full charter authority for such an ordinance in Shreveport v. Ross (1883) 35 La. Ann. 1010, but such authority is not set out, except that it is stated generally that power to suppress such houses is conferred.

<sup>55</sup> Chariton v. Barber (1880) 54 Iowa, 360, 37 Am. Rep. 209, 6 N. W. 528. See supra, note 46, for substance of ordinance enacted.

<sup>56</sup> Owensboro v. Simms (1896) 99 Ky. 49, 34 S. W. 1085. See supra, note 47, for text of ordinance.

<sup>57</sup> Cotton v. Atlanta (1912) 10 Ga. App. 397, 73 S. W. 683; Dannie v. Atlanta (1912) 10 Ga. App. 471, 73 S. E. 684, holding that a city ordinance, in so far as it makes it punishable for any person to allow a house or a portion of a house to be occupied as a house of ill fame, creates no different offense from that created by the state statute (Penal Code 1910, § 382) providing that, "if any person shall maintain L.R.A.1917B.

and keep a lewd house, or place for the practice of fornication or adultery, either by himself or others, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor."

That the municipality may legislate in regard to bawdyhouses although the state has also legislated in that regard is clearly recognized in State v. Charles (1871) 16 Minn. 474, Gil. 426, but perhaps the extent to which the holding in that case goes is that the state had not conferred upon the municipality exclusive jurisdiction in this regard, as was urged by the defendant in a prosecution under the state law. That the state had not conferred exclusive jurisdiction upon the municipality in this particular instance is also held in State v. Oleson (1880) 26 Minn. 507, 5 N. W. 959.

It is the opinion of Berry, Judge, in State v. Oleson (Minn.) supra, that the municipality cannot make the keeping a house of ill fame, resorted to for the purpose of prostitution, a misdemeanor punishable by a fine and by imprisonment in a city prison not more than thirty days, where such keeping is made a felony by state law punishable by imprisonment in state prison from six months to a year, or by a fine from $1 to $300, and where the municipal charter prescribes that the power to enact ordinances is subject to the proviso "that they be not repugnant to the Constitution and laws of the United States or of this state." The judge states that the city ordinances for the arrest and vails in other states that municipalities may enact ordinances covering the same subject as the criminal laws of the state. Accordingly, an ordinance prohibiting houses of ill fame, assignation, or resort of common prostitutes, and imposing a penalty for a violation, cannot be held invalid because covering the same subject as the criminal laws of the state.<sup>58</sup> The rule that a municipality will not be held to have power to legislate in regard to a matter covered by the criminal laws of the state, unless a clear intention is apparent to delegate such power to it, has been held applicable only where the power delegated is general; where a special authority over a particular subject is granted, such as the power to suppress and prohibit bawdy-houses, and the corporation is invested with authority to adopt ordinances and punish for their violation, there is such a clear delegation of power as to relieve the matter of all doubt.<sup>59</sup> So, where the municipality is vested with the more extensive power to prohibit, prevent, and suppress the keeping and leasing of houses of ill fame or assignation, or for the resort of common prostitutes, and to restrain, suppress, and punish keepers of such houses and the owners and lessors of the premises, an ordinance prohibiting bawdyhouses is valid, although this matter is covered by state law.<sup>60</sup> Nor is such an ordinance repealed by a subsequent state statute making the offense of keeping such a house a felony and punishable as such.<sup>61</sup> That the municipality may legislate in regard to a matter covered by state law within certain limitations is expressly recognized in some Constitutions. For example, a limitation is provided in the Kentucky Constitution that "no municipal ordinance shall fix a penalty for a violation thereof at less than that imposed by statute for the same offense." Such a constitutional provision is held to be a restriction upon municipal legislation in respect to offenses to which a statutory penalty has been affixed. Consequently, although the keeping of a bawdyhouse or house of ill fame is a common-law offense, if no statutory penalty has been provided, the municipal council is not limited by the constitutional provision in question.<sup>62</sup>

Other cases which sustain ordinances relating to bawdyhouses where the state laws also deal with this subject do so punishment of keepers of houses of ill fame must therefore be directed to something else than the simple keeping of such houses, resorted to for the purpose of prostitution, as, for instance, to something relating to the manner of keeping them, or perhaps to the place in which they are kept.

The power of a municipality to punish what is also an offense under state law is discussed in the note to Seattle v. MacDonald, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 49.

And see note to Thrower v. Atlanta, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 382, as to right of a municipality to enact ordinances on a subject covered by state law.

<sup>58</sup> Wong v. Astoria (1886) 13 Or. 538, 11 Pac. 295. And see note in 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 49, for general discussion of this question.

<sup>59</sup> Wong v. Astoria (Or.) supra.

Cornell, Judge, expressed the opinion in State v. Oleson (Minn.) supra, that a municipality is empowered to enact an ordinance making the keeping of a house of ill fame, resorted to for the purpose of prostitution, a misdemeanor punishable by a fine of from $5 to $100 and by imprisonment in the city prison not more than thirty days, although the keeping of a house of ill fame for the purpose of prostitution is a felony by a state law and punishable as such, where the municipality is expressly given the power in its charter "to suppress houses of ill fame" within the city, and "to provide for the arrest and punishment of the keepers thereof" by "a fine not exceeding $100 and imprisonment in the city prison or county jail not exceeding thirty days, or both." It is stated that a grant of authority thus specifically enumerated does not violate the proviso of the charter that the municipal ordinances shall not be repugnant to the state Constitution or laws. In this opinion, as to the power of the municipality to enact the statute, Gilfillan, Ch. J., concurs with Cornell, J.

<sup>60</sup> People v. Hanrahan (1889) 75 Mich. 611, 4 L.R.A. 751, 42 N. W. 1124. A constitutional provision authorizing the legislature to confer upon incorporated cities and villages such powers of a local, legislative, and administrative character as they may deem proper was held to authorize the legislature to confer upon the common council of a municipality this power.

<sup>61</sup> People v. Hanrahan (Mich.) supra.

<sup>62</sup> Owensboro v. Simms (1896) 99 Ky. 49, 34 S. W. 1085. The section of the Constitution containing the provision quoted above in the text contained the further provision that "a conviction or acquittal under either shall constitute a bar to another prosecution for the same offense." A question was suggested in the case whether, in the absence of a statutory penalty, a conviction or acquittal of anyone charged with a violation of the ordinance would be a bar to a subsequent indictment and prosecution for the same offense at common law; but the court states that this question is not before it on the record, and it is not passed upon.

on the theory that the offense created by the ordinance is not the same as that defined by statute.<sup>63</sup>

Under the last-mentioned view the trial and conviction under either the state law or the ordinance are no bar to a prosecution under the other.<sup>64</sup> On the contrary it has been held that, where a properly constituted court, acting under the authority of an ordinance of a municipal corporation, punishes a person for violation of the ordinance, he cannot be again punished for the same offense under the general laws of the state.<sup>65</sup>

The extent to which a municipality may recognize bawdyhouses where the state law prohibits them is not uniformly answered by the courts. Any power to recognize what is prohibited by state law must be found in some charter authority which in effect repeals, or at least suspends, the operation of the general state law. It has been held that the municipality may license bawdyhouses under charter power "to suppress bawdyhouses or license the same."<sup>66</sup> But this power is denied under similar charter powers where there is a constitutional provision that "no power of suspending laws . . . shall be exercised except by the legislature."<sup>67</sup>

It has been held that a city may license bawdyhouses under an act empowering a city, by ordinance not inconsistent with any law of the state, to "regulate or suppress" bawdyhouses, notwithstanding such houses are totally prohibited and declared nuisances by the general law of the state.<sup>68</sup> On the contrary, power to restrain, regulate, and inspect such establishments has been held not to include power to license them.<sup>69</sup> This diversity in holding is due <sup>63</sup> For an example of this situation, see People v. Miller (1885) 38 Hun (N. Y.) 62, supra, note 45. And see note in 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 49, upon the general question of the power of municipality to punish what is also an offense under state law, particularly at p. 54, where the theory of two distinct offenses is discussed.

<sup>64</sup> People v. Miller (N. Y.) supra.
The court in State v. Charles (1871) 16 Minn. 474, Gil. 426, expressly refrains from deciding this question.

That a conviction under one is not a bar to a prosecution under the other, is the theory of Cornell, Judge, in State v. Oleson (1880) 20 Minn. 507, 6 N. W. 959, where it is stated that the conviction and punishment of one violating the municipal ordinance were "for an offense against the city which it was legally authorized to punish," and that an indictment for an offense committed against the state by violation of its laws is for a distinct offense from that for which the defendant was previously convicted and punished, and he is liable to punishment for both. On the contrary, in this case, Berry, Judge, was of the opinion that if the municipal ordinance was valid, a conviction under it was a bar to a prosecution under the state statute, but Berry, Judge, held the ordinance invalid and therefore a prosecution and conviction under it no bar to a prosecution under the state statute. In this opinion of Berry, J., that a conviction under the city ordinance is a bar to the indictment, if the conviction under the city ordinance was a valid conviction, Gillilan, Ch. J., concurs; but as to the validity of the ordinance he differs from Berry, J., holding the ordinance valid, and therefore a conviction under it a bar to a conviction under the state statute.

As to whether a conviction under a municipal ordinance is a bar to a prosecution under a state statute, and vice versa, see note to Seattle v. MacDonald, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 49, at page 69.
L.R.A.1917B.

<sup>65</sup> State v. Thornton (1866) 37 Mo. 360. Neither the ordinance nor the statute is set out in the report, so it is impossible to determine the exact form of the same. See opinions of the judges in State v. Oleson (Minn.) supra, note 64.

<sup>66</sup> Davis v. State (1877) 2 Tex. App. 425. It is further held in this case that the repeal of the ordinance providing for the licensing of such houses after the defendant had taken out a license did not affect the validity of the license, unless the license was revoked, and repayment made, after deducting the amount due on the time expired, as the municipality had a right to do under another ordinance.

<sup>67</sup> Burton v. Dupree (1898) 19 Tex. Civ. App. 275, 46 S. W. 272. The court points out that the Constitution under which the Davis Case arose provided that "no power of suspending the laws of the state shall be exercised except by the legislature or its authority." The omission of the words, "or its authority," restricted the power to suspend laws to the legislature, and expressly prohibited the exercise of such power by any other body, and the legislature now cannot delegate to a municipal corporation or to anyone else authority to suspend the statute law of the state. The licensing ordinance in this case was practically a segregation ordinance, as the licenses were granted only within the limited districts.

<sup>68</sup> State v. Clarke (1873) 54 Mo. 17, 14 Am. Rep. 471; State v. De Bar (1874) 58 Mo. 395. Accordingly, a license is a defense to a prosecution under the state law.

<sup>69</sup> Ex parte Garza (1890) 28 Tex. App. 381, 19 Am. St. Rep. 845, 13 S. W. 779. The provision in the act of incorporation relied upon as conferring the authority to license such houses gave to the municipality power "to suppress and restrain disorderly houses, . . . bawdyhouses, houses of prostitution or assignation," and also power "to enact all necessary ordinances to restrain and punish . . . prostitutes," to the circumstances under which the charters were given and the context of the particular provisions relied upon. In the case in which there was held to be power to license such houses,<sup>70</sup> the charter provision in question had been enacted subsequently to other charter provisions in which the city was given simply power to "suppress" these houses. The change by the insertion of the power to "regulate" is stated to be a specific grant of power, especially where with reference to other matters the municipality is given power simply to "suppress." The court states: "It is clear that the legislature understood the difference between regulation and suppression, and whilst they only conceded to the city the power to suppress prize fighting, gambling houses, etc., they allowed the city to either suppress or regulate bawdyhouses." In the case<sup>71</sup> denying the power to license, it is stated that it is shown very clearly that it was not the legislative intent to confer this power by the fact that the power to license other occupations is expressly conferred upon the city.

A municipality is held not entitled to segregate such houses under charter authority "to prohibit and punish keepers and inmates of bawdyhouses, . . . to prevent and suppress assignation houses and houses of ill fame, and to regulate, colonize, and segregate the same," where bawdyhouses are prohibited by state law, and where the charter also contains a provision that "no ordinance shall be enacted inconsistent . . . with the laws 'of the state,'" and there is a constitutional provision that "no power of suspending laws . . . shall be exercised except by the legislature."<sup>72</sup> After holding the ordinance in question in conflict with the state statutes relating to the subject,<sup>73</sup> the court states that it must be determined which is to be maintained. The constitutional provision that no power of suspending laws shall be exercised except by the legislature is discussed, and it is stated that the present Constitution omits at the end of this section the words, "or by its authority," which were in that section in former Constitutions. The court adds: "Under the former Constitutions it might have been, and probably should have been, held that the provision in the charter authorizing the city 'to regulate and segregate,' etc., such houses, gave authority to such city to suspend the state law on the same subject, and that the enactment of such an ordinance would have that effect," but under the present Constitution it must be held that the legislature cannot now delegate to a municipal corporation or to anyone else authority to suspend a statute law of the state. That a municipality has no power to segregate such and also power to "prevent and punish the keeping of houses of prostitution within the city or within such limits therein as may be defined by ordinance, and to adopt summary measures for the removal or suppression or regulation and inspection of all such establishments." It is accordingly held in this case that one who has conducted a bawdyhouse without obtaining a license cannot be prosecuted under the ordinance.

So, in San Antonio v. Schneider (1896) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 37 S. W. 767, a city was held to have no power to license such houses under charter authority "to prevent and punish the keeping of houses of prostitution, . . . and to adopt summary measures for the removal or suppression, or license, taxation, regulation, and inspection of all such establishments," the court stating: "We cannot believe that the legislature of this state ever intended to authorize the city council to license and tax what its statutes denounce as a crime against society, for to license, tax, or even regulate crime is something unknown to civilization." One who had paid the license was accordingly allowed to recover the same, except so far as recovery was barred by the Statute of Limitation.

<sup>70</sup> State v. Clarke (Mo.) supra, followed in State v. De Bar (Mo.) supra.
L.R.A.1917B.

<sup>71</sup> Ex parte Garza and San Antonio v. Schneider (Tex.) supra.

<sup>72</sup> Brown Cracker & Candy Co. v. Dallas (1911) 104 Tex. 290, 137 S. W. 342, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 504. Property owners surrounding the segregated districts were held entitled to an injunction restraining the creation thereof.

<sup>73</sup> Brown Cracker & Candy Co. v. Dallas (Tex.) supra. The lower court in this case (Hatcher v. Dallas (1911) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 133 S. W. 914) was of the opinion that the ordinance involved, segregating such houses, did not attempt to give keepers of such houses license to carry on their business; therefore it was not in conflict with the state law. The supreme court states that "an argument to demonstrate that the ordinance permits such houses to exist in that district would be inexcusable; the language is too plain to require explanation or application."

That an ordinance making it unlawful to conduct a house of prostitution outside certain limits, and making it unlawful for any person to rent any house outside the prescribed limits to any lewd woman, legalizes by implication such houses within the prescribed limits, is the view of the court in McDonald v. Denton (1910) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 132 S. W. 823.

houses under charter authority "to prohibit and punish keepers and inmates of bawdyhouses and variety shows, and to segregate and regulate the same, and to determine such inmates and keepers to be vagrants and provide the punishment of such persons," where the Constitution provides that "no power of suspending laws . . . shall be exercised except by the legislature," has been held, although, so far as appears from the report at least, there was no charter provision such as that contained in the preceding case, that "no ordinance shall be enacted inconsistent with the laws of the state," the court approving the statement in a previous case that the legislature never intended to authorize a city council to recognize what is declared by the state law to be a crime.<sup>74</sup>

The validity of a segregation ordinance has arisen independently of the question of conflict with state law. The supreme court of Louisiana has sustained the right of a municipality to segregate houses of prostitution by an ordinance which neither sanctions nor undertakes to punish the vice. The limits of the segregated district are held to be a question for the municipal council, and not for the court, at least where there is nothing in the record to authorize the conclusion that the judgment of the council on this question was erroneous. Nor is the power of the municipal council in this regard exhausted by once fixing the limits of such districts; such limits may be changed.<sup>75</sup> The objection in this case was made by property owners who claimed to be damaged by the establishment of the segregated district. On the theory that such an ordinance is an exercise of the police power which does not invade the rights of property owners in or adjacent to the prescribed limits in violation of the Federal Constitution, although the pecuniary value of their property may be depreciated in consequence thereof, this decision of the supreme court of Louisiana is affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States.<sup>76</sup>

An ordinance entitled, "An Ordinance Defining and Prescribing Punishment for Certain Offenses," is not open to the objection that it does not comply with that section of the Code which provides that "no ordinance shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title," although there were a large number of offenses defined and the punishment therefor prescribed.<sup>77</sup> It is stated: "The subject of the ordinance is offenses against the city. The one subject is composed of many parts."

<sup>74</sup> McDonald v. Denton (Tex.) supra.

<sup>75</sup> L'Hote v. New Orleans (1899) 51 La. Ann. 93, 44 L.R.A. 90, 24 So. 608.

The right of owner or occupant of neighboring property to enjoin the maintenance of a house of prostitution is discussed in the notes to Tedeschi v. Berger, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1060, and Weidner v. Friedman, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1041.

<sup>76</sup> (1900) 177 U. S. 587, 44 L. ed. 899, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 788. The supreme court of Louisiana was also of the opinion that there was no unconstitutional invasion of property rights by the ordinance in question.

<sup>77</sup> State v. Wells (1877) 46 Iowa, 662.

W. A. E.
J. D. C.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT. (In Banc.)

LORENZO B. POINTER, Appt.,
v.

MOUNTAIN RAILWAY CONSTRUCTION COMPANY, Resp't.

(— Mo. —, 189 S. W. 805.)

Pleading — specific acts of negligence
— res ipsa loquitur.

1. One pleading specific acts of negli-

Note. — The effect of pleading a particular cause of action as waiver of right to rely on res ipsa loquitur is considered in the notes to Walters v. Seattle, R. & S. Co. 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 788, and Biddle v. Riley, L.R.A.1915F, 992.

The general subject of the applicability of res ipsa loquitur in actions against carriage is treated at length in the notes to Barnowski v. Helson, 15 L.R.A. 33; McGinn v. New Orleans R. & Light Co. 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 601; Brown v. Union P. R. Co. 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 808; and Lee Line Steamers v. Robinson, L.R.A.1916C, 364.

Other specific aspects of the rule res ipsa loquitur are treated in notes referred to in Evidence — res ipsa loquitur — injury on scenic railway.

2. The doctrine res ipsa loquitur is not applicable to support a recovery by one injured while riding on a scenic railway by getting his foot outside the car, who merely shows that the speed of the car varied by

riers is treated at length in the notes to Barnowski v. Helson, 15 L.R.A. 33; McGinn v. New Orleans R. & Light Co. 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 601; Brown v. Union P. R. Co. 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 808; and Lee Line Steamers v. Robinson, L.R.A.1916C, 364.

Other specific aspects of the rule res ipsa loquitur are treated in notes referred to in slackening and speeding up, and that the car shook from side to side, which is not shown to be unusual for cars so employed. For other cases, see Evidence, II. h, I, f, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Bond, Walker, and Blair, JJ., dissent.)

(November 11, 1916.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court of St. Louis in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. James J. O'Donohoe, for appellant:

Defendant was bound to exercise the highest degree of care, and the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies.

Tennessee State Fair Asso. v. Hartman, 134 Tenn. 159, 183 S. W. 735; Hartman v. Tennessee State Fair Asso. 134 Tenn. 149, 183 S. W. 733; Hollis v. Kansas City Retail Merchants' Asso. 205 Mo. 508, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 284, 103 S. W. 32; Best Park & Amusement Co. v. Rollins, 192 Ala. 534, 68 So. 417; Chesapeake Beach R. Co. v. Brez, 39 App. D. C. 58; Lee Line Steamers v. Robinson, L.R.A.1916C, 358, 134 C. C. A. 287, 218 Fed. 563; Hughes v. Atlantic City & S. R. Co. L.R.A.1916A, 927, note; Seiter v. Bischoff, 63 Mo. App. 157; Gallagher v. Edison Illuminating Co. v. 72 Mo. App. 576; Sackewitz v. American Biscuit Mfg. Co. 78 Mo. App. 144; Shuler v. Omaha, K. C. & E. R. Co. 87 Mo. App. 618; Tateman v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 96 Mo. App. 448, 70 S. W. 514; Johnson v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 104 Mo. App. 592, 78 S. W. 276; Cleary v. St. Louis Transit Co. 108 Mo. App. 433, 83 S. W. 1029; ~~Scharff v.~~ Southern Illinois Constr. Co. 115 Mo. App. 167, 92 S. W. 126; Freeman v. Foreman, 141 Mo. App. 359, 125 S. W. 524; McFadden v. Lott, 161 Mo. App. 652; Gannon v. Laclede Gaslight Co. 145 Mo. 502, 43 L.R.A. 505, 46 S. W. 968, 47 S. W. 907.

The petition pleads general negligence, and the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies.

Stauffer v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 243 Mo. 305, 147 S. W. 1032; Briscoe v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 222 Mo. 104, 120 S. W. 1162; Price v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 220 Mo. 435, 132 Am. St. Rep. 588, 119 S. W. 932; MacDonald v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 219 Mo. 466, 118 S. W. 78, 16 Ann. Cas. 810; Chlanda v. St. Louis Transit Co. 213 Mo. 844, 112 S. W. 249; Malloy v. St. Louis & Suburban R. Co. 173 Mo. 75, 73 S. W. 150; Patterson v. Springfield Traction Co. 178 Mo. App. 250, 163 S. W. 955; Nagel v. United R. Co. 168 Mo. App. 284, 142 S. W. 621; Moore v. Missouri P. R. Co. 164 Mo. App. 84, 147 S. W. 488; Estes v. Missouri P. R. Co. 110 Mo. App. 725, 35 S. W. 627.

Furthermore, a plaintiff who proves the happening of an accident, and is otherwise entitled to presumptions arising therefrom, does not lose the benefit of such presumptions because he has alleged what he conceives to be the specific cause of the accident.

Gallagher v. Edison Illuminating Co. 72 Mo. App. 576; Walters v. Seattle, R. & S. R. Co. 48 Wash. 233, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 788, 93 Pac. 419; Louisville & S. I. Traction Co. v. Worrell, 44 Ind. App. 480, 66 N. E. 78; Lebb v. Seattle, R. & S. R. Co. 49 Wash. 228, 93 Pac. 420; Kluska v. Yeomans, 54 Wash. 465, 132 Am. St. Rep. 1121, 103 Pac. 819; McNeill v. Dunham & C. R. Co. 130 N. C. 256, 41 S. E. 383; Dearden v. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co. 33 Utah, 147, 93 Pac. 271; Wood v. Roxborough; G. H. & N. P. R. Co. 12 Montg. Co. L. Rep. 155; North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Cotton, 140 Ill. 486, 29 N. E. 899; Chicago City R. Co. v. Carroll, 206 Ill. 318, 68 N. E. 1087; Sullivan v. Rowe, 194 Mass. 500, 80 N. E. 469; Pierce v. Great Falls & C. R. Co. 22 Mont. 445, 56 Pac. 867, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 109; McNamara v. Boston & M. R. Co. 202 Mass. 491, 89 N. E. 131; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Sheeks, 155 Ind. 74, 56 N. E. 434; Palmer Brick Co. v. Chenall, 119 Ga. 842, 47 S. E. 329.

The doctrine of assumption of risk, if applicable, is of no value to defendant, for the reason that the plaintiff's injuries are the result of defendant's sundry acts of negligence. These the plaintiff did not assume. Neither are unknown dangers assumed.

Jewell v. Kansas City Bolt & Nut Co. 231 Mo. 176, 140 Am. St. Rep. 515, 132 S. W. 793; George v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 225 Mo. 364, 125 S. W. 196; Crader v. St.

the Indexes to L.R.A. Notes, under the title "Evidence," subdivision, "Care; negligence; res ipsa loquitur."

Generally as to liability of one maintaining place of amusement for safety of patrons, see notes to Williams v. Mineral City Park Asso. 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 427; Higgins v. Franklin County Agri. Soc. 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1132; Blakeley v. White Star Line, L.R.A.1917B.

19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 772; Greene v. Seattle Athletic Club, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 713; Wodnik v. Luna Park Amusement Co. 42 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1071; and Johnson v. Hot Springs Land & Improv. Co. L.R.A.1916F, 690. These notes include some cases involving the specific question as to liability for personal injuries received on scenic railway.

Louis & S. F. R. Co. 181 Mo. App. 526, 164 S. W. 678.

If a jar or sudden jerk of the train was an ordinary occurrence, it constituted a sufficient basis of inference of defective construction of the car, and such imperfections implied negligence on the part of defendant in providing cars and tracks of such a character as to inflict injury upon passengers in their normal operation.

Van Horn v. St. Louis Transit Co. 198 Mo. 481, 95 S. W. 326; Parks v. St. Louis & Suburban R. Co. 178 Mo. 108, 101 Am. St. Rep. 425, 77 S. W. 70.

Messrs. Charles E. Morrow and Schnurmacher & Rassieur, for respondent:

A person taking a ride on an amusement device submits himself to the inconvenience and dangers necessarily attending its operation, and negligence cannot be inferred from the mere fact that injury resulted from the jarring, unless such jarring was unusual or extraordinary.

Hedrick v. Missouri P. R. Co. 195 Mo. 104, 93 S. W. 268, 6 Ann. Cas. 793; Bartley v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 148 Mo. 124, 49 S. W. 840, 5 Am. Neg. Rep. 635; Wait v. Omaha, K. C. & E. R. Co. 165 Mo. 612, 65 S. W. 1028; Erwin v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 94 Mo. App. 289, 68 S. W. 88; Tickell v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 149 Mo. App. 648, 129 S. W. 727; Ray v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 147 Mo. App. 332, 126 S. W. 543; Woos v. St. Louis Transit Co. 198 Mo. 674, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 231, 96 S. W. 1017, 8 Ann. Cas. 584; Benedick v. Potts, 89 Md. 52, 41 L.R.A. 478, 40 Atl. 1067, 4 Am. Neg. Rep. 484; Fenner v. Atlantic Amusement Co. 84 N. J. L. 691, 87 Atl. 344; Lumsden v. L. A. Thompson Scenic R. Co. 130 App. Div. 209, 114 N. Y. Supp. 421.

The res ipsa loquitur doctrine can never be invoked where specific negligence is pleaded.

Roscoe v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 202 Mo. 576, 101 S. W. 32; Evans v. Wabash R. Co. 222 Mo. 435, 121 S. W. 36.

Graves, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Action for personal injuries. The sum first claimed was $50,000, but about the conclusion of the trial nisi a gracious amendment of the petition reduced the sum to $25,000. Plaintiff was a metal polisher in the city of St. Louis, earning, when at work, $4 per day, the amount to which the union of which he was a member limited the earnings of their members. Country bred, he had not, at the date of the accident, been fully initiated in all the amusements of a great city, although he had lived there for a considerable time. His chum, Arthur L.R.A.1917B.

Boardman, was of city origin, but not fully acquainted with some of the devices for entertaining a metropolitan public. At least they both disclaimed knowledge of the operation of a certain scenic railway called "The Racer Dips," and in the petition alleged to have been operated at Forest Park Highlands by the Park Circuit & Realty Company and the Mountain Railway Construction Company.

So close was the relationship of the two that we find the following from Boardman in the course of his testimony:

Q. What interest have you in this case that you continually, when I ask you one question, put in something at the tail end that nobody asks you for?

A. Well, this is a friend of mine, and we had it made up to stick together, and I am going to stick to the finish.

On a Sunday evening early in May, 1910, these two friends, after partaking of a couple of bottles of beer each (according to Boardman), which beer was obtained from a negro bootlegger in the vicinity of plaintiff's home, repaired to plaintiff's home, where they had supper. After supper they visited Delmar Garden for a short time, and then wended their way to Forest Park Highlands, and whilst there were attracted to the scenic railway, or "Racer Dips." The cars and tracks of this miniature railway were in plain view, and could have been seen had they looked. The evidence shows, though not from these two parties, that the cars and most of the tracks were in open view for a person standing at the platform from which the trains started. The evidence shows that "The Racer Dips" was a device for public entertainment, consisting of two miniature railway tracks upon which separate trains of small cars were run, and so arranged that there was the appearance of a racing between the two trains. The tracks had a common starting point and a common ending point. By mechanical force the trains of cars were pulled up grade to a considerable height and then turned loose to make the trip by gravity. This was accomplished by steep declines and elevations in the tracks so that the momentum gathered by going down a decline would carry the train up the next elevation. Of necessity these declines and elevations were marked and sharp and had to follow each other in rapid succession. Variety was added to the trip by acute and sharp curves in the tracks, as well as by a tunnel constructed thereover. Gravity being the sole power operating the train, the speed down the incline would be great, and this speed would slacken gradually until the succeeding elevation was passed and the next decline reached. When the car turned the next decline it of necessity picked up speed rapidly. The evidence discloses that these trains were made up of three cars having three seats each, and which seats would accommodate two pleasure seekers; in other words, eighteen persons constituted a trainload. While plaintiff was not always clear in his testimony, yet, taken as a whole, the evidence shows that plaintiff and his friend took passage on this pleasure device in the middle seat of the middle car of one of these trains. It is made quite clear that they were not in the front seat of the car. When the train was nearing the end of the journey plaintiff's foot got out of the car and struck an object to the side of the car, and a severe fracture of the right leg resulted, together with some other injuries.

It appeared from the evidence that the Park Circuit & Railway Company was the holding company for the defendant, Mountain Railway Construction Company, and was not itself engaged in the actual operation of the pleasure device known as the "Racer Dips." But, while it held and owned the stock of the operating company, it was not, in fact, operating the device. Upon this showing plaintiff voluntarily dismissed as to such corporation.

The plaintiff's case largely turns upon the testimony of himself and his friend, although he introduced some other evidence which will be noted in the course of the opinion.

Going to the pleadings, it will be seen that the negligence of the defendant is thus stated in the petition: "That said racer dip, the cars and track thereon were so faulty and so defectively constructed and defendant so negligently and carelessly maintained and operated the same that by reason thereof the car in which plaintiff was a passenger as aforesaid vibrated and shook so that the plaintiff was thrown with much force against the back of the conveyance or car in which he had passage, and plaintiff's right foot and leg were suddenly and violently thrown upwards and out of said conveyance or car, thereby causing his said right foot and leg to be caught in and thrown upon and against railings, posts, and uprights along and outside of said conveyance or car, through which plaintiff was greatly and permanently injured, as follows."

The answer filed by defendant thus reads:

"Comes now the defendant in the above-entitled cause, and for answer to the plaintiff's amended petition denies each and every allegation and said amended petition contained and set forth.

L.R.A.1917B.

"Further answering, defendant says that what, if any, injuries were received by the plaintiff on the occasion in question and by and on account of the things mentioned in his amended petition were caused by the ordinary and usual movements of the racer dip mentioned in the plaintiff's petition, which was an amusement device, the real attractiveness of which depended solely upon the sensations that rapid changes of speed give the person using it, and that the plaintiff assumed all such dangers and risks and on account thereof cannot recover.

"Further answering, defendant says that what, if any, injuries plaintiff received on the occasion in question and by and on account of the things mentioned in his amended petition were caused by his own negligence in this: That the plaintiff negligently and carelessly failed to remain in his seat in the car, and negligently and carelessly threw his feet up and outside of the car, and negligently and carelessly failed to hold to the car in which he was riding, and negligently and carelessly failed to keep a lookout for his own safety, and that by reason thereof threw his right leg up, above, and outside of the car in which he was riding, whereby he received what, if any, injuries complained of in his amended petition, and that the same were caused by his own negligence contributing thereto.

"Wherefore, having fully answered, defendant prays to go hence and recover of plaintiff its costs herein."

The reply was a general denial.

Upon a trial the court gave to the jury a peremptory instruction to find for the defendant, and plaintiff chose to submit his case to the jury rather than take an involuntary nonsuit. Verdict and judgment were for defendant, and plaintiff has appealed. The evidence in greater detail will be considered in the course of the opinion in connection with the points made therein.

I. In his petition plaintiff avers that he was a passenger for hire, and to break the force of the want of proof invokes the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. There is absolutely no proof in the record that the train of cars upon which plaintiff was injured was run otherwise than in the usual and ordinary manner for the operation of trains upon this pleasure device or other similar pleasure devices. Both plaintiff and his chum disclaim any knowledge of how such trains should be, or were in fact, run. Plaintiff tried to make no proof that the train at the time of the accident was run otherwise than in the customary and usual manner. He put on as a witness a man connected with the defendant company, and this man testified that he examined both the cars and the track immediately after the accident, and they were in good and proper condition. There is no showing that the cars and tracks were not constructed just as cars and tracks are usually constructed for such purposes. Both plaintiff and his friend testify that the train was pulled to a given height and then loosed for gravity action thereafter.

The manner of the accident had best be given in their own language. Plaintiff says:

Q. Now, will you tell the jury if you had any accident there and how it happened?

A. I was sitting in one of these cars, and sitting on the right side, and it started out on the run and got very near all the way around, and the car slackened speed and threw me forward, and started up all of a sudden and threw me backward, and shot up that way (indicating) and threw me to one side, and threw my right foot out and caught my leg.

Q. When your foot was thrown out, what happened to it?

which naturally turned him back, and his right foot fell between the car and the railing, the outside railing.

Q. Between what track?

A. The railing.

Q. Did it catch on anything on the outside?

A. When the car kind of wiggled, it naturally caught his foot.

Q. What do you mean by wiggled?

A. Well (indicating) kind of shaken from one side to the other.

Plaintiff's exhibit C shows the construction of the cars and the seats thereof, although it is conclusively shown by the evidence that there are three seats to the car. Plaintiff being in the middle seat, his position can be seen at a glance at this exhibit, which we here insert.

It is practically conceded that there is no case for the jury unless the doctrine res ipsa loquitur bridges over the chasm and puts the case to the jury. Under the facts,

PLAINTIFF'S EXHIBIT C.

A. It was caught against posts or uprights or rails and alongside the track where the car was.

Arthur Boardman, his friend, says:

Q. Was Pointer injured on that occasion?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you state just how he was injured?

A. Yes, sir. We was on the last curve coming in, and the car was running at a high speed, and the car slacked up kind of, and he was thrown up forward, and the car started up at a pretty high speed again, L.R.A.1917B.

can such doctrine be invoked? Of the several phases of this question later.

II. The doctrine res ipsa loquitur is not in this case, and without the invocation of that rule it is conceded that plaintiff's case failed nisi. The petition filed by plaintiff excludes the application of the res ipsa loquitur doctrine. This plaintiff has pleaded specific negligence, and in such case he cannot rely upon presumptive negligence under the rule res ipsa loquitur to make out his case. One who pleads specific acts of negligence must prove such negligence or enough of such acts to justify a recovery, and a failure so to do bars him from a recovery. And this is true although he might have pleaded negligence generally, and by an invocation of the doctrine res ipsa loquitur had a recovery upon making proper proof. We have gone over this question thoroughly in several recent cases. McGrath v. St. Louis Transit Co. 197 Mo. 105, 94 S. W. 872; Orcutt v. Century Bldg. Co. 201 Mo. 424, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 920, 99 S. W. 1062; Roscoe v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 202 Mo. 576, 101 S. W. 32; Price v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 220 Mo. loc. cit. 453, 132 Am. St. Rep. 588 et seq. 119 S. W. 932. Now, in the petition before us in this case the plaintiff avers: (1) The faulty and defective construction of the cars used on the "Racer Dips;" (2) the faulty and defective construction of the tracks of the "Racer Dips;" and (3) a negligent maintenance and operation of the cars over such tracks. This charge of negligence cannot be tortured into a general charge of negligence. It specifically charges: (1) A negligent construction of the car upon which plaintiff was riding; and (2) a negligent construction of the tracks upon which such car was operated. This places the case beyond the reach of the doctrine of presumptive negligence nurtured by the rule of res ipsa loquitur.

In the McGrath Case, supra, we said: "But even if it were a case to which, under proper pleadings, the doctrine would apply, yet in this case specific acts of negligence are charged, and not general negligence. In such cases, where the plaintiff chooses in the petition to allege specific acts of negligence, the rule of law places the burden of proving such specific negligence upon the plaintiff, and a recovery, if had at all, must be upon the specific negligence pleaded. Hamilton v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 114 Mo. App. loc. cit. 509, 89 S. W. 893; Ely v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 77 Mo. 34; Leslie v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 88 Mo. 50, 4 Am. Neg. Cas. 669; Yarnell v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 113 Mo. 576, 18 L.R.A. 599, 21 S. W. 1, 4 Am. Neg. Cas. 714; Buynan v. Citizens' R. Co. 127 Mo. loc. cit. 19, 29 S. W. 842; Hite v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 130 Mo. loc. cit. 136, 51 Am. St. Rep. 555, 31 S. W. 262, 32 S. W. 33; McNanamee v. Missouri P. R. Co. 135 Mo. loc. cit. 447, 37 S. W. 119; Bartley v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 148 Mo. loc. cit. 139, 49 S. W. 840, 5 Am. Neg. Rep. 635; Gayle v. Missouri Car & Foundry Co. 177 Mo. loc. cit. 450, 76 S. W. 987; Breedén v. Bfg Circle Min. Co. 103 Mo. App. 179, 76 S. W. 731."

In the Roscoe Case, 202 Mo. loc. cit. 587, 101 S. W. 34, we said: "The petition L.R.A.1917B.

charges specific negligence, and not general negligence, as plaintiff would have had the right to charge in this class of cases. A general allegation of negligence is all that is required in cases of accident where the relation of passenger and carrier exists. This general allegation of negligence is permitted upon the theory that the instrumentalities are in the hands of the defendant and he knows the condition thereof, whereas plaintiff does not or may not know them. Not only does the established rule permit a general allegation of negligence, but, in making the proof, it is sufficient to show an accident and the resultant injury, whereupon there is a presumption of negligence, and a prima facie case for plaintiff is made. What we have said above applies to cases where there is a general allegation of negligence, but the rule is different where there are specific allegations of negligence. The rule as to proof is different, and the rule as to the presumption is different. General allegations of negligence are permitted because plaintiff, not being familiar with the instrumentalities used, has no knowledge of the specific negligent act or acts occasioning the injury, and for a like reason the rule of presumptive negligence is indulged. But, if plaintiff, by his petition, is shown to be sufficiently advised of the exact negligent acts causing or contributing to his injury as to plead them specifically as in this case, then the reason for the doctrine of presumptive negligence has vanished. If he knows the negligent act, and he admits that he does so know it by his petition, then he must prove it, and if he recovers, it must be upon the negligent acts pleaded, and not otherwise. In other words, the burden of proof is upon plaintiff, as it would be in any other kind of a case. The rule of presumptive negligence and the rule allowing the pleading of negligence generally are rules which grew up out of necessity in cases of this character, and are exceptions to the general rules of pleading and proof. Where plaintiff by his petition admits that there is no necessity, the reason for the rule ex necessitate fails, and with it the rule itself."

But in the case at bar the plaintiff says his injuries were due to a negligently constructed car and a negligently constructed track. He points out the negligence of defendant which caused his injury. One cannot plead specific acts of negligence and rely upon presumptive negligence to bridge the chasm in making out a case for the jury. The trial court evidently so viewed this case, and, as there was absolutely no evidence upon which a verdict could stand upon the specific negligence alleged, he rightfully directed a verdict for defendant. Plaintiff, realizing that he had proved all that he could prove, chose to submit his case and take a verdict rather than to take an involuntary nonsuit. It matters not whether his specific negligence was as well pleaded as it might or should have been. It is only necessary to determine that his plea was one of specific negligence. The defendant had the right to move for more specific pleading if he thought the specific negligence was not as well pleaded as it should have been, or it had the right to accept it as sufficiently pleaded. The negligent construction of a track is specific negligence, and we have so held. Price v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 220 Mo. loc. cit. 454, 132 Am. St. Rep. 588, 119 S. W. 932. So, likewise, is the negligent construction of a car specific negligence, and this is in effect held in the Price Case, supra. Because the plaintiff chose to simply charge that the track was negligently constructed, without naming the particular fault of construction, simply gave him a roving commission to prove any and all defects; and if defendant chose not to challenge the pleading, it had a right so to do, but that does not make the charge any the less specific rather than general negligence. A fair sample of a plea of general negligence appears in the Price Case, supra.

Under the pleadings in this case the plaintiff cannot invoke the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, and his case failed nisi, and the judgment should be affirmed.

In 5 R. C. L. loc. cit. p. 84, the general rule is thus tersely expressed: "In any event, where the cause of the accident by which a passenger was injured is known as well to the passenger as to the carrier, the presumption of negligence which arises from the fact of the injury of a passenger while on the carrier's vehicle has no application, but the passenger must affirmatively show negligence."

In this case the plaintiff avers that his injury was occasioned by a defective car and a defective track. He thus says that he knows the cause or causes of his injury, and the rule just quoted applies. There is no question as to what the rule is in Missouri. Vide list of cases collated in McGrath v. St. Louis Transit Co. supra. In 5 R. C. L. loc. cit. pp. 84 et seq., it is said: "When the plaintiff chooses to allege the specific acts of negligence of which he complains, the authorities are not in harmony as to the effect of such allegation upon the operation of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. According to some authorities, the plaintiff, by thus alleging the specific acts of negligence, assumes the burden of proving them; and, as in other cases, must recover, if at all, upon the negligence pleaded, and the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur does not apply. Other decisions, however, are to the effect that the plaintiff does not lose the right to rely upon the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur by attempting to show particularly the cause of the accident, at least where, at the close of the testimony, the cause does not clearly appear, or if there is a dispute as to what such cause was."

As to the first-named rule in this quotation the Missouri cases and some others are referred to, and as to the latter rule, cases from Washington, Massachusetts, and Virginia are cited. All the text-writers recognize the Missouri rule and state it as we have stated it. Our cases proceed upon the very reasonable theory that, if the plaintiff alleges in his petition the things which caused the injury, such allegations evince his knowledge of the causes of his injury, and he is bound thereby, and his case falls within the first rule quoted from 5 R. C. L. supra.

In an extensive note in 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) loc. cit. 792, it is said: "This question has arisen more frequently in Missouri than in any other jurisdiction, and the cases for the most part are harmonious in holding that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies only where the petition charges negligence in general terms, and does not apply where it specifically pleads the negligent acts which caused the injury."

Some 20-odd Missouri cases from this court and the courts of appeal are collated, and all of them support the text. In accord with the Missouri rule the following cases are cited: Norton v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 108 S. W. 1044; Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Leonard, 126 Ill. App. 189; West Chicago Street R. Co. v. Martin, 154 Ill. 523, 39 N. E. 140, 11 Am. Neg. Cas. 364; Highland Ave. & B. B. Co. v. South, 112 Ala. 642, 20 So. 1003; Lone Star Brewing Co. v. Willie, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 560, 114 S. W. 186.

III. Granting, for the sake of argument only, that this case is governed by the rule in cases of carrier and passengers, the facts do not make a case for the invocation of the doctrine res ipsa loquitur. It is not every case where an injury is suffered and where that relation exists that the facts shown bespeak negligence. Each case must be determined upon its own facts. In Whitaker's Smith on Negligence, § 419, p. 533 (Enlarged ed. with Notes by Webb), it is said: "It has already been stated that in actions of negligence (as indeed in all actions) the plaintiff must give some proof of his case beyond a mere scintilla of evidence, and if he does not, it is the duty of the judge to direct a nonsuit. The question of what is sufficient evidence to go to the jury is one for the judge in the particular case before him; but there are a class of cases in which there has been no direct evidence of any particular act of negligence, beyond the mere fact that something unusual has happened which has caused the injury; and upon the maxim, or rather phrase, 'res ipsa loquitur,' it has been held that there is evidence of negligence. As the phrase imports, there must be something in the facts which speaks for itself, and therefore each case will depend upon its own facts, and it will be difficult to lay down any guiding principles."

The mere fact that the plaintiff was injured is not of itself evidence of defendant's negligence. Nor will the mere fact of injury, without other facts, authorize the application of the rule of presumptive negligence, as such rule is recognized by the doctrine res ipsa loquitur. Before the rule res ipsa loquitur can be invoked, there must be shown facts other than of the mere fact of injury to plaintiff from which the negligence of defendant can be reasonably inferred. These other facts, in case of carrier and passenger, must show that something out of the ordinary in the course of carriage has happened as to the means or methods of transportation, and that this extraordinary happening was the cause of the injury to plaintiff. If there is no evidence tending to show that something unusual and out of the ordinary has happened, as to the means of transportation (which includes the appliances used in the transportation) or in the method of transportation (which includes the acts of agents, etc.), then the rule res ipsa loquitur cannot be invoked, although the facts may disclose injury to plaintiff. Benedict v. Potts, 88 Md. loc. cit. 55, 41 L.R.A. 478 et seq. 40 Atl. 1068, 4 Am. Neg. Rep. 484.

The reasoning of the Maryland Case is so well stated that we quote: "In no instance can the bare fact that an injury has happened, of itself, and divorced from all the surrounding circumstances, justify the inference that the injury was caused by negligence. It is true that direct proof of negligence is not necessary. Like any other fact, negligence may be established by the proof of circumstances from which its existence may be inferred. But this inference must, after all, be a legitimate inference, and not a mere speculation or conjecture. There must be a logical relation and connection between the circumstances proved and the conclusion sought to be adduced from them. This principle is never departed from, and in the very nature of things it never can be disregarded. There are instances in which the circumstances surrounding an occurrence and giving a L.R.A.1917B.

character to it are held, if unexplained, to indicate the antecedent or coincident existence of negligence as the efficient cause of an injury complained of. These are the instances where the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is applied. This phrase, which, literally translated, means that 'the thing speaks for itself,' is merely a short way of saying that the circumstances attendant upon an accident are themselves of such a character as to justify a jury in inferring negligence as the cause of that accident; and the doctrine which it embodies, though correct enough in itself, may be said to be applicable to two classes of cases only, viz.: First, 'when the relation of carrier and passenger exists and the accident arises from some abnormal condition in the department of actual transportation; second, where the injury arises from some condition or event that is in its very nature so obviously destructive of the safety of person or property and is so tortious in its quality as, in the first instance, at least, to permit no inference save that of negligence on the part of the person in the control of the injurious agency.' Thomas, Neg. 574. But it is obvious that, in both instances, more than the mere isolated, single segregated fact that an injury has happened must be known. The injury, without more, does not necessarily speak or indicate the cause of that injury; it is colorless; but the act that produced the injury being made apparent may, in the instances indicated, furnish the ground for a presumption that negligence set that act in motion. The maxim does not go to the extent of implying that you may, from the mere fact of an injury, infer what physical act produced that injury; but it means that when the physical act has been shown or is apparent, and it is not explained by the defendant, the conclusion that negligence superinduced it may be drawn as a legitimate deduction of fact. It permits an inference that the known act which produced the injury was a negligent act, but it does not permit an inference as to what act did produce the injury. Negligence manifestly cannot be predicated of any act until you know what the act is. Until you know what did occasion an injury, you cannot say that the defendant was guilty of some negligence that produced that injury. There is therefore a difference between inferring as a conclusion of fact what it was that did the injury and inferring from a known or proven act occasioning the injury that there was negligence in the act that did produce the injury. To the first category the maxim res ipsa loquitur has no application: it is confined, when applicable at all, solely to the second. In no case where the thing which occasioned the injury is unknown has it ever been held that the maxim applies, because, when the thing which produced the injury is unknown, it cannot be said to speak or to indicate the existence of causative negligence. In all the cases, whether the relation of carrier and passenger existed or not, the injury alone furnished no evidence of negligence; something more was required to be shown."

With this general outline of the law, let us get the facts of the case. In justice to defendant they should be fully stated. It is undisputed that nothing occurred until the train was turned over to the immutable law of gravity,—a law of nature unbending and ever-faithful when it has a duty imposed. Gravity is the same at all times under same and similar circumstances. Its work is done without a variance, and only a variance in the means of its application will show variant results. Plaintiff proved by his own witness there was nothing wrong with the car upon which he rode or the track upon which said car traveled. Both he and his friend testified that they did not know that plaintiff had been injured until the journey was over, and the friend jokingly cursed the plaintiff and told him to get up out of the car. Whilst they do say the car "slackened up kind of," and then "the car started up at a pretty high speed again," yet they do not testify that this was an unusual occurrence in the operation of "Racer Dips." There is not even a scintilla of evidence that cars moving up and down inclines and declines by the force of gravity would not actually do this very thing. On the contrary, our knowledge of the laws of physics leads us to know that such would be the natural movement. Going down the decline the speed would be rapid, but in going up the incline the momentum gathered would gradually decrease until the speed would slacken at or near the crest of the next hill, and then rapidly increase as the car took the next decline. This condition is all that is described by either of these two witnesses. They do not claim that the car stopped or that it suddenly lurched. It devolved upon plaintiff to show that the movement of the car upon which he was riding was an unusual one for cars in the mode of transportation he was then using. He made no attempt to do this, and no negligence can be inferred from this very natural movement of the car. The only other movement of the car is thus described by the friend of plaintiff in telling how plaintiff's foot was caught. He says, "The car kind of wiggled," and, being asked what he meant by that, he said, "Well (indicating) kind of shaken from one side to the other," and that this shaking was more on the last curve than on any other portion of the dip. This is the sum total of the evidence upon the question of the movement of this car. There is no evidence in the record or tendered in the record to the effect that the movements described by the witnesses were anything unusual for the cars in this particular mode of transportation. It was shown that this pleasure device was made up of tracks going down declines, ascending inclines, and going around acute or sharp curves. There is not a syllable in the testimony that these "wiggles" or movements from side to side of the car were not usual movements of cars used in this mode of transportation. We shall discuss the mode of transportation more thoroughly in other paragraphs.

Before the rule res ipsa loquitur can be invoked, something more than the usual happenings (exclusive of the mere fact of injury) must be shown by the testimony. In this case two other passengers were in the same car with plaintiff and his friend, and they arrived at their destination in safety. Other cars (two more) were in the train, and nothing occurred to their passengers. The car returned without injury or accident, and the tracks were found intact.

Something is said about the absence of a handhold for passengers. For that reason we have copied into our statement the drawings of the cars as such drawings were introduced in evidence by plaintiff. It is conclusively shown by the evidence that there are three seats in each car, and plaintiff says he was in the seat next to the rear seat of the car, and that the rear seat was occupied by two other passengers. Abstract of Record, p. 24. The drawings of this car show that plaintiff could have held onto (1) the side of the seat, (2) the back of the seat, and (3) the back of the seat in front of him; yet he says that at the time of the accident he had his arm around his friend's shoulders. He first said partly around the shoulders and partly upon the back of the seat, but, being driven down to facts, finally said his arm was only around his friend's shoulders, and the other hand was in his lap. He was on the right-hand side of the car, and thus it appears he rode with his left hand around the shoulders of his friend and his right hand (the one next to the outside of the car, and which should have been hold of the side of his seat for safety) was in his lap. Take one view of the drawing in the statement and the contributory negligence of plaintiff is apparent. It took four minutes to make the trip. It was one continuous ascent and descent and rounding of curves. Even if plaintiff had no knowledge of the danger in the first instance, he had gone far enough to see that common prudence would dictate the use of his hands for safety. Barren as this case is of facts tending to show negligence, the trial court could have done but one thing, and that is just what it did do.

We are cited to the following as being authority for holding that the facts of this case bring it within the rule res ipsa loquitur: "4 Wigmore, Ev. § 2509, and cases cited in note; 5 R. C. L. § 712, p. 74; 20 Cyc. p. 591, and cases cited; Sweeney v. Erving, 228 U. S. 232, 57 L. ed. 815, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 416, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 905; Brown v. Louisiana & M. River R. Co. 256 Mo. 522, 145 S. W. 1060; Dougherty v. Missouri R. Co. 81 Mo. 325, 51 Am. Rep. 239; Gallagher v. Edison Illuminating Co. 72 Mo. App. 579; O'Callaghan v. Dellwood Park Co. 242 Ill. 396, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1054, 134 Am. St. Rep. 331, 89 N. E. 1006, 17 Ann. Cas. 407, s. c. 149 Ill. App. 34; Redmond v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 185 Mo. loc. cit. 10, 105 Am. St. Rep. 558, 84 S. W. 26; Price v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 220 Mo. loc. cit. 457, 132 Am. St. Rep. 588, 119 S. W. 932; Logan v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 183 Mo. loc. cit. 606, 82 S. W. 126; Whittaker's Smith, Neg. § 419, p. 552; Turner v. Haar, 114 Mo. loc. cit. 346, 347, 21 S. W. 737; Hughes v. Atlantic City & S. R. Co. L.R.A. 1916A, 927, and notes pages 930 et seq. (85 N. J. L. 212, 89 Atl. 769, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 102)."

Of the Missouri cases first: In Brown v. Louisiana & M. River R. Co. 256 Mo. loc. cit. 535, 165 S. W. 1062, it is said: "The evidence is undisputed that the train was thrown from the track by the fracture of one of the steel rails while passing over it and transporting plaintiff, who was a passenger."

This case is all right and in accord with what we now urge, but it must be noted that an unusual thing was shown; i. e., the derailment of a car.

In Dougherty v. Missouri R. Co. 81 Mo. 325, 51 Am. Rep. 239, a very unusual jerk of a car was shown.

In Gallagher v. Edison Illuminating Co. 72 Mo. App. 576, an arc light was shown to have fallen from its position on plaintiff's head as he passed thereunder.

In Redmond v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 185 Mo. loc. cit. 10, 105 Am. St. Rep. 558, 84 S. W. 26, a train of two street cars came to a very sudden stop, thereby producing a very violent jerk, which injured plaintiff,—very different from the case at bar, where the evidence is the car "slacked up, kind of" and then "the car started up at a pretty high speed again."

In Logan v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 183 Mo. loc. cit. 606, 82 S. W. 126, the street car left the track.

The case of Turner v. Haar, 114 Mo. loc. L.R.A.1917B.

cit. 346, 347, 21 S. W. 737, is cited. That case does not involve the question at all. An employee was suing for an injury occasioned by the falling of a building in which the employer placed him to work. He charged an unsafe working place. The building blew down in a storm. Without going further, it will be seen the facts do not fit here, nor does the law.

Price v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 220 Mo. 457, 132 Am. St. Rep. 588, 119 S. W. 932, is given as authority here. In that case there was a collision between two cars on a street railway. We shall not stop to argue that such a fact is not in the case at bar. There was clearly an unusual occurrence in the Price case.

Suffice it to say that the text-books and the cases from the Federal and other state courts cited on this proposition are no nearer in point than the Missouri cases which we have analyzed. These cases and these texts are discussing unusual and extraordinary occurrences in the course of operation. The facts in the case at bar do not measure up to that standard. We concede that an unusual or extraordinary occurrence (excluding the mere fact of injury) may raise a presumption of negligence on the part of the carrier. If, in the case at bar, the train had been brought to a sudden stop in rounding this curve and going down the incline, a different case would be presented. It would have been an unusual occurrence. But here we only have the slackening of speed, which was natural as the train went up hill, and increase of speed, which was natural for a gravity train going down steep inclines, and a "wiggling" of the car, which was natural upon acute and sharp curves; nothing unusual, under the facts shown, save mere injury to the plaintiff, and this, of itself, will not invoke the doctrine res ipsa loquitur.

Other suggestions are made as to the absence of an operator on the car, as to the absence of a handhold, and as to the sides of the car not being sufficiently high. We need not discuss these matters, because they were all known acts of negligence, and, if relied upon, should have been pleaded. However, the evidence in the record does not show or tend to show that these things or either of them contributed to plaintiff's injury. The evidence shows that he could have held himself in the car by using the side of his seat or the back of the seat in front of him, and, further, the drawing introduced in evidence shows the very handhold of which he complains. But we will not discuss these matters, because, in our judgment, they are not pertinent.

IV. Still proceeding upon the theory that the relation of plaintiff to defendant is that of carrier and passenger, yet we must not blind ourselves to the kind of carriage plaintiff was contracting for, and the relative duties of the parties under the facts. Plaintiff knew he was contracting for carriage upon a pleasure device, which device with its tracks of dips and curves was before him, as a circular swing stands before one contracting to ride upon it. He knew he was making no contract for a Pullman car upon the level tracks of a steam railroad. When he contracted for this peculiar carriage, it was written in such contract, by the law, that he must subject himself to the inconveniences, jerks, and even dangers usually incident to that mode of conveyance. This is clearly shown by our cases involving injuries to passengers upon freight trains. Thus in Wait v. Omaha, K. C. & E. R. Co. 165 Mo. loc. cit. 621, 65 S. W. 1030, Brace, J., said: "It seems, now to be well-settled law here, as elsewhere, that where a railroad company carries passengers for hire on its freight trains, 'it must exercise the same degree of care as is required in the operation of its regular passenger trains, the difference only being that the passenger submits himself to the inconveniences and danger necessarily attending that mode of conveyance.' Whitehead v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 99 Mo. 263, 6 L.R.A. 400, 11 S. W. 751; McGee v. Missouri P. R. Co. 92 Mo. 208, 1 Am. Sh. Rep. 796, 4 S. W. 739; Wagner v. Missouri P. R. Co. 97 Mo. 512, 3 L.R.A. 156, 10 S. W. 486; Hays v. Wabash R. Co. 51 Mo. App. 438, 4 Am. Neg. Cas. 485; Gulley v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 53 Mo. App. 492; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Dickerson, 50 Ind. 317; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Arnol, 144 Ill. 261, 19 L.R.A. 313, 33 N. E. 204, 2 Am. Neg. Cas. 694; Olds v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 172 Mass. 73, 51 N. E. 450, 5 Am. Neg. Rep. 38. The rule upon this subject is very clearly expressed in the two cases last cited. In the last one, decided by the supreme court of Massachusetts in 1898, Knewlton, J., speaking for the court, said: 'The law is clearly expressed in Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Arnol, 144 Ill. 261, 270; 19 L.R.A. 313, 33 N. E. 204, 2 Am. Neg. Cas. 694, as follows: "Persons taking passage upon freight trains, or in a caboose or car attached to a freight train, cannot expect or require the conveniences or all of the safeguards against danger that they may demand upon trains devoted to passenger service, and are accordingly held to have accepted the accommodation provided by the company, subject to all the ordinary inconveniences, delays, and hazards incident to such trains, when made up and equipped in the ordinary manner of making up and equipping such trains, and managed with proper care and skill. . . . But if a railway company company consents to carry passengers for hire by such trains, the general rule of responsibility for their safe carriage is not otherwise relaxed. From the composition of such a train and the appliances necessarily used in its efficient operation there cannot, in the nature of things, be the same immunity from peril in traveling by freight train as there is by passenger trains, but the same degree of care can be exercised in the operation of each. The result in respect of the safety of the passenger may be wholly different, because of the inherent hazards incident to the operation of one train, and not to the other, and it is this hazard the passenger assumes in taking a freight train, and not hazard or peril arising from negligence or want of proper care of those in charge of it." . . . The plaintiff in the present case well understood the kind of business in which the defendant was engaged, and the manner in which the business was conducted. So far as there were dangers naturally incident to the running of freight cars and a passenger car in the same train, the parties must be presumed to have contracted in reference to them, and the plaintiff to have assumed them."

In this Wait Case the plaintiff thus testified as to the things which caused his injury: "I got on at the water tank, and the train started out. A man, by the name of Rickett got on with me, and there was one other man on the train, both strangers to me. The train started out; and just as the caboose had got a little past the depot, I supposed the train had pulled out for good; and I raised up in my seat to take off my overcoat, and I stepped out of the seat kind of sideways, and I had my left arm thrown out like that, when all at once the train stopped suddenly and it throwed me. There was a seat directly in front of me that had no back on it, it was broke off; and the next seat was turned the other way and the other one this way and throwed two backs together; and I struck my back and side . . . across those two seats; and I went on there with force enough that I broke them right down, and it kind of stunned me at first, and it knocked the breath out of me, and I lay there for a half minute, and got up and sat down in the seat. I could hardly speak and could hardly catch my breath. . . . I went on to Green Castle and got off there. I could hardly get up town. When I went up street I vomited blood, and went and saw a doctor. That night I took the passenger train for my home at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and got there next day."

Upon these facts Judge Brace said: "There is no conflict in the evidence. There is no evidence tending to show any defect in defendant's track, train, or any of its appliances. No evidence tending to show any want of skill or care on the part of its employees in the management of the train from the time plaintiff got on it until the accident happened, or that the train was stopped at an improper place, or in an improper manner, or that the shock which caused his fall was not a natural and ordinary incident of the stopping of such a train in a proper manner, by the proper application of the proper means for that purpose. In other words, there were no facts proved from which an inference of negligence on the part of defendant could be legitimately drawn."

In the Wait Case, supra, the trial court sustained a demurrer to the evidence, and this court sustained that rule.

In Hedrick v. Missouri P. R. Co. 195 Mo. loc. cit. 111, 93 S. W. 269, 6 Ann. Cas. 793, Gantt, J., thus sets out the facts: "Plaintiff's account of what took place at La Monte was that after the train got to La Monte it was in a manner stopped. Two of the trainmen had already left the caboose, and the plaintiff got up and started to the rear end of the car, and there was a jump, he did not know what happened, but thought the train had collided, and for a moment or two he did not know what had happened, and when he came to himself he felt that he was injured, and sat down on a seat,—went to a seat and sat down, and at that time the train was perfectly still. The caboose, after the train stopped, was in the neighborhood of 100 or 150 yards from the depot at La Monte. He testified that when he came to himself he was on his feet, and could not state whether he had been thrown down or not. He testified that he had traveled a number of times in cabooses attached to freight trains and on freight trains, and he was then asked the effect that the stopping of the train had, and he answered: 'The reaction on the car was so severe that it upset the water tank in the caboose and spilled water all over the floor.' 'That jar was severe—the severest I ever experienced on a freight train.' 'The extent was so hard it upset the water tank in the car.' 'It jerked me senseless and injured my neck.' On cross-examination he testified that when he started to go to the rear end of the caboose 'the train was barely moving; it was not running one mile an hour, not near as fast as a man could run or walk; it was not going as fast as a man could walk; the rate of speed was so that a child could walk and get off it if it had not been jarred.' He was asked whether he was thrown down, and answered: 'Well, I do not know whether I was or not; right there is L.R.A.1917B.

where I never will be clear. I do not think I went to the floor. I was stunned for a minute or two.' Asked whether or not he struck his head, neck, or arm against anything in the caboose at that time, he answered, 'I think I kind of caught myself on the—against the door casing or against the door as it swung; the jar was so violent and severe.'

After quoting and approving what we have quoted from the Wait Case, supra, and after a thorough review of other Missouri authorities Judge Gantt proceeds thus: "It is well settled that negligence cannot be presumed when nothing is done out of the usual course of business, unless the course is improper. There is nothing in this record to indicate that there was any act of omission or commission not usually incident to the constant moving of heavy freight trains under the control and management of skilful and careful employees. We are not unmindful of the contention of the plaintiff that the defendant jerked or knocked or bumped the train with unusual, unnecessary, and extraordinary force against the caboose, but we are clearly of the opinion that, in the light of the uniform expression of this court and of the several appellate courts, the evidence in this case was wholly insufficient to establish any such unusual and extraordinary jarring and jerking. In our opinion, the basic fact upon which a recovery must rest in this case, to wit, the negligence of the defendant, was not established either by the positive testimony of the witnesses or by any presumption of negligence arising out of the facts developed; and it results that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, and the judgment of the circuit court must be and is reversed, and judgment rendered here for the defendant."

The case law is so thoroughly reviewed in the Hedrick Case that a reading thereof will suffice as to the Missouri rule.

Now, reverting to the case at bar: Plaintiff knew that he was going to ride upon "Racer Dips" in an open car. He saw the car. Long before he got to the place of accident he knew that his course was up and down steep inclines and declines and around sharp curves. He had contracted for a pleasure ride upon a device which was open to his view, or so open to his view in the greater part. No negligent act of the defendant is shown. No attempt is made to show that the movements of the car at the time of the injury were unusual or extraordinary movements for that particular mode of transportation. If the jerk described by Wait and by Hedrick were not sufficient in those cases to show an unusual happening in that mode of transportation, how can it be said that the faint slackening of the car and the increase of speed of the car, and the "wiggles" of the car, described in this case, can be held to be evidence of an unusual occurrence in this mode of transportation? So we say that upon that theory of passenger and carrier the demurrer to this evidence was properly sustained, and the judgment of the court nisi should be affirmed.

V. Personally, I do not believe the case is one of passenger and carrier. We, as a court, are not more ignorant than the general public. What is generally known we must know. We know that there are a great number of pleasure devices, the objects and purposes of which are to furnish sensational experiences for pleasure seekers,—the scenic railways with all their variations; the circular swings with all their variations; toboggan slides, etc. They are not common carriers of passengers in any sense of the word. Nor do we believe the doctrine res ipsa loquitur, as applied to common carriers, has application here, but, as said in the Maryland Case, supra, in the quotation we have made, the doctrine may be said to apply to at least two classes of cases, which are described therein, and the latter class described in the Maryland Case may cover those devices, and the doctrine res ipsa loquitur be invoked upon a proper state of facts; but those facts are not in this record.

The cases holding that the parties in cases of this kind bear the relation of carrier and passenger are O'Callaghan v. Delwood Park Co. 242 Ill. 336, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1054, 134 Am. St. Rep. 331, 89 N. E. 1005, 17 Ann. Cas. 407, and cases citing and following that case. This question, however, goes only to the measure of care, and there are several cases which take a different view as to the relationship of the parties. In the view we have taken of the facts in this case, under the assumption that the relationship did exist, this question is largely a moot one now.

The judgment nisi should be affirmed.
It is so ordered.

Woodson, Ch. J., and Revell, J., concur. Faris, J., concurs in result and all of opinion except paragraph V.

Bond, J., dissenting:

I. The following opinion written by me in Division, with a few additions, is now filed as my dissent from the opinion adopted by the majority of this court.

Plaintiff sued the defendant for $25,000 for injuries sustained while riding on a scenic railway called the "Racer Dip," operated by defendant for the transportation of persons for hire over and around double metal tracks supported by trestles and proceeding over very steep high and low grades so as to return on a circuitous course, after a trip of about three quarters of a mile, to the starting station. These tracks are situated in Forest Park Highlands, an amusement resort in St. Louis. The cause of action stated by plaintiff is, to wit: "Plaintiff further states that on or about the 8th day of May, 1910, for a valuable consideration paid defendant, they received the plaintiff into one of their conveyances or cars aforesaid, for the purpose of conveying him therein as a passenger on and around the racer dip aforesaid; that said racer dip, the cars and track thereon, were so faulty and so defectively constructed, and defendants so negligently and carelessly maintained and operated the same that, by reason thereof, the car in which plaintiff was a passenger as aforesaid vibrated and shook so that the plaintiff was thrown with much force against the back of the conveyance or car in which he had passage, and plaintiff's right foot and leg were suddenly and violently thrown upwards and out of said conveyance or car, thereby causing his said right foot and leg to be caught in and thrown upon and against railings, posts, and uprights along and outside of said conveyance or car, through which plaintiff was greatly and permanently injured," etc.

This pleading was either a statement of general negligence in the construction and operation of the "car and track" in their entirety, as would seem clearly to be the case under the examples and definitions of general negligence contained in the following cases: Stauffer v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 243 Mo. loc. cit. 325, 326, 147 S. W. 1032; MacDonald v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 219 Mo. loc. cit. 487, 118 S. W. 78, 16 Ann. Cas. 810; Briscoe v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 222 Mo. loc. cit. 113, 120 S. W. 1162, and cases cited,—or it constituted an allegation of specific negligence, as is suggested in the majority opinion. If it be construed as a mere joinder of general allegations of negligence in the construction and operation of defendant's railway, then it stands admitted, and such is the universal law, that the case made by the plaintiff entitled him to go to the jury. On the other hand, if the theory of the learned majority opinion is correct, that the foregoing allegations constituted only averments of particular and specific negligence (which I do not concede), then the case should have gone to the jury upon the phase of the evidence presented by the testimony of plaintiff and his companion. This case presents these two alternatives; for there can be no doubt, either upon reason or authority, that the defendant owning and operating the scenic railroad for the transportation of the general public for hire was engaged in a calling essentially the same as that of a common carrier of persons. Van Hoeffen v. Columbia Taxicab Co. 179 Mo. App. 600, 162 S. W. 694; O'Callaghan v. Dellwood Park Co. 242 Ill. loc. cit. 343, 345, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1054, 134 Am. St. Rep. 331, 89 N. E. 1005, 17 Ann. Cas. 407; Hartman v. Tennessee State Fair Asso. 134 Tenn. 159, 183 S. W. 735; Best Park & Amusement Co. v. Rollins, 192 Ala. 534, 68 So. 417; Chesapeake Beach R. Co. v. Brez, 39 App. D. C. 58. Hence the only question is whether any phase of the evidence adduced by plaintiff tended to make a case to which the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur would be applicable under the theory that the allegations of negligence in the petition were general, or tended to show a state of facts giving rise to a reasonable inference of negligence on the part of the defendant in the construction and operation of its cars and track, upon the theory that the petition charged specific negligence in that respect.

L.R.A.1917B.

The testimony of the plaintiff as to the occurrence of the injury is, to wit:

Q. What sort of a track is there on the racer dips?

A. There is two tracks.

Q. Is it a level track?

A. Part of the way it is level and part it is inclines and steep hills and short turns.

Q. Louder, please.

A. Inclines and steep hills and short curves and semicircles.

Q. Well, you say you had passage on one of these trains on the 8th of May, 1910?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, will you tell the jury if you had any accident there and how it happened?

A. I was sitting in one of these cars and sitting on the right side, and it started out on the run and got very near all way around, and the car slackened speed and threw me forward, and started up all of a sudden and threw me backward, and shot up that way (indicating) and threw me to one side, and threw my right foot out and caught my leg.

Q. When your foot was thrown out, what happened to it.

A. It was caught against posts or up-rights or rails and alongside the track where the car was.

Q. Now, then did it injure your foot or leg?

A. It broke my right leg about an inch and a half above the ankle and threw the leg out of place, and tore all the flesh off L.R.A.1917B.

my leg and broke it off right up about here (indicating) and twisted the knee.

Q. Did the accident render you unconscious or not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long were you unconscious?

A. Why, right after the accident I became unconscious, and I didn't know anything until Monday evening—until the following evening.

Plaintiff also testified that he sat in the second seat in the second car; that there was no rail or bar to which he could hold, adding further, "Only this little dashboard or something there in front that you could hold to, but there wasn't anything that you could reach your hands out to that we could hold onto;" that the train was sent out with no attendant, and carried four passengers on that trip; that he had never ridden on one before, and that he received no information from the defendant or its employees of the condition of the track or its sharp curves or steep grades, or that it was unprotected on the sides, nor of the jerking of the train, nor the danger of a ride thereon; that he paid a fare of 10 cents for his passage; that at the place of the accident the car was slanting a little over to the side where the plaintiff sat.

Plaintiff's companion on the trip testified, to wit:

Q. Will you state just how he was injured?

A. Yes, sir. We was on the last curve coming in, and the car was running at a high speed, and the car slackened up kind of, and he was throwed up forward, and the car started up at a pretty high speed again, which naturally turned him back, and his right foot fell between the car and the railing, the outside railing.

Q. Between what track?

A. The railing.

Q. Did it catch on anything on the outside?

A. When the car kind of wiggled, it caught his foot.

Q. What do you mean wiggled?

A. Well (indicating), kind of shaken from one side to the other.

Q. Was that shaking more violent than at any other point in the ride around the dip?

A. The shaking was more in the last curve than at any place on the dip.

Q. What effect, if anything, did this decreasing of the speed and then starting of the car, as you state, have on you?

A. Why it threw me back, but I was just lucky enough to catch my hold there or it would have threw me; I was lucky enough to catch my hold to keep from getting thrown out of the car; then I grabbed Mr. Pointer's arm and tried to prevent him from getting hurt, but it was too late.

Q. What curve were you approaching on it at the time of the accident?

A. It was on the last curve—going in on the last curve.

Q. Sir?

A. It was on the last curve—going in on the last run.

Q. Have you since that time ridden on the racer dip?

A. Yes, sir; I have.

Q. Did it decrease and increase the speed in the manner in which you state it did so on the occasion when Pointer was injured.

A. Yes, sir; and it looks like they had the speed more under control afterwards.

Q. What would you say caused Pointer to be thrown, his foot to be thrown out of the car?

A. Why, the rate of high speed, and then the sudden stop. The sudden slow-down in the speed and the start-up right quick, which naturally threw him back and threw his foot out of the car.

The elevation of the track and its propulsive powers were these: The trains were started on their journey by being hauled up an angle of 75 degrees by means of an electric power cable. When they reached this summit the physical force was released, and the trains were carried thence by gravity and the momentum acquired by the sharp descent from the point where the electric force had been released. After the trains left the highest point to which they were carried by electric power, they started over a course of rapid descents and ascents and around sharp curves. The angles of the succeeding grades ranged from 45 to 60 degrees, and the trains are run "at a very high rate of speed."

The defendant's secretary testified that he could not tell what speed it was, although it took about four minutes from the time the train started to get to the returning point. He also testified that the scenic railway was opened on the 23d of April, and that its operation was delayed a few days on account of the snow, and that the accident occurred on the 8th of May. This was the substance of his testimony.

It is apparent, if the version of the occurrence given for the plaintiff is to be accepted as true, that he had become a passenger upon a train without any warning whatever of the care and the prudence necessary to be observed to render the trip safe, and was seated in a car which was not furnished with any handholds which he might seize in order to withstand the shock of a sharp descent or a whirl around a curve, and which ran so near the uprights or posts supporting a structure of the side that, when the train reached its last ascent and began to descend from it on a sharp curve at a high rate of speed, he was thrown first forward and then backward by a sudden jerk so powerful as to throw his foot outside the car and cause his leg to be struck by the upright or post which supported the horizontal guard on which the side wheels of the train ran. As to the force and suddenness of the jerk, the testimony of the companion is that it was so great as to cause the injury as described in plaintiff's testimony, and to prevent him from catching hold of plaintiff in time to save him from injury.

There can be only two ways of looking at such a jar or sudden jerk of the train, which are: First, that it was an ordinary occurrence; or, second, an extraordinary and unusual happening. If it were the former, then it constituted a sufficient basis for a rational inference of defective construction of the car, in that it was not provided with a handhold nor sufficiently elevated at its sides, or that it ran too close to the outside posts, and that such imperfections implied negligence on the part of defendant in providing cars and tracks of such a character as to inflict injury upon passengers in their normal operation. Hence, upon the theory that the petition alleged specific negligence as to the construction and operation of its railway, the plaintiff did make a case from which the jury were entitled to infer the very specific negligence averred.

If, however, we take the other view that the jerk or jar was an extraordinary event of such force and suddenness as to cause the injury to plaintiff, then proof of that fact would necessarily call into play the rule of res ipsa loquitur, which is that, where the thing causing the injury is under the exclusive control of one who owes a duty to another, and it is shown that the injury would not have occurred in the ordinary course of things if the agency inflicting it had been managed or operated with due care, then evidence of the happening of the injury, without the fault of the person injured, affords prima facie evidence of negligence, and will take the case to the jury and permit it to infer negligence, and then find from all the evidence whether this inference has been rebutted or overcome and the plaintiff has sustained the burden of proof imposed on him by law. This rule has been applied to injuries caused by railroads, elevators, electric wires, and divers other appliances involving the use of powerful forces or machinery. 4 Wigmore, Ev. § 2509, and cases cited in note; 5 R. C. L. § 713, p. 74; 29 Cyc. 591, and cases cited; Sweeney v. Erving, 228 U. S. 233, 57 L. ed. 815, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 416, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 905; Brown v. Louisiana & M. River R. Co. 256 Mo. 522, 165 S. W. 1060; Dougherty v. Missouri R. Co. 81 Mo. 325, 51 Am. Rep. 239; Gallagher v. Edison Illuminating Co. 72 Mo. App. 579; O'Callaghan v. Dellwood Park Co. 242 Ill. 336, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1054, 134 Am. St. Rep. 331, 89 N. E. 1005, 17 Ann. Cas. 407; s. c. 149 Ill. App. 34; Redmon v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 185 Mo. loc. cit. 10, 105 Am. St. Rep. 558, 84 S. W. 26; Price v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 220 Mo. loc. cit. 457, 132 Am. St. Rep. 588, 119 S. W. 932; Whittaker, Smith, Neg. § 419, p. 552; Turner v. Haar, 114 Mo. loc. cit. 346, 347, 21 S. W. 737; Hughes v. Atlantic City & S. R. Co. L.R.A. 1916A, 927, and notes pp. 930 et seq. (85 N. J. L. 212, 89 Atl. 769, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 102).

It follows that, whether the allegations of the petition be construed as a charge of general or specific negligence, in either event, under the undisputed testimony, the plaintiff made a case entitling him to go to the jury; for the phase of the evidence above quoted tended to prove, as has been seen, the charge of defective construction and operation (which the majority opinion holds was a specific one), or it tends to show a state of facts invoking the rule of res ipsa loquitur if, as I think, the charges of negligence in the petition were general.

In these circumstances it was the duty of the defendant to rebut the prima facie case made by the evidence given for the plaintiff on one or the other theories of negligence alleged in his petition. Defendant took no steps to rebut the weight of the evidence against it at the conclusion of plaintiff's case, but interposed a general demurrer thereto which should have been overruled, and the case sent to the jury.

Walker and Blair, JJ., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied December 4, 1916.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

J. A. FORD

v.

FARMERS' EXCHANGE, Appt.

(— Tenn. —, 189 S. W. 368.)

Damages — breach of warranty of seed.

The damages for breach of warranty that seed sold to produce a crop for market is true to name is, in case the purchaser acts in ignorance of the breach, the value of a crop, had the seed been as warranted, such as would ordinarily have been produced that year less the value of the one actually produced.

For other cases, see Damages, III. a, 4, c, in Dig. 1-53 N. S.

(November 18, 1916.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals reversing a judgment of the Law Court of Johnson City in his favor in an action brought to recover damages for breach of an alleged

Note.—The measure of damages for breach of warranty as to seeds is discussed in the notes to Leonard Seed Co. v. Crary Canning Co. 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 79, 85, and Buckbee v. P. Hohenadel, Jr. Co. L.R.A. 1916C, 1011, 1013, covering the general subject of the liability of a vendor of seeds.

The analogous subject as to sale of trees, shrubs, plants, or vines, including the measure of damages, is treated in the note to Kelly v. Lum, 49 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1151. L.R.A. 1917B.

warranty by him in the sale of certain seed. Modified and affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Thad A. Cox, Harr & Burrow, and Ben H. Taylor for appellant.

Messrs. Vines & Price and Divine & Guinn for appellee.

Williams, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was begun by Ford to recover damages for the breach of an alleged warranty made by defendant in the sale of watermelon seed.

It appears that plaintiff has for many years been engaged in raising melons for market on a large scale. There was testimony tending to show that defendant had sold plaintiff his melon seed for several years, the seed being known as "Klekley Sweets," and, knowing of the use intended to be made of them, guaranteed that the seed sold on the particular occasion, which were to come from a new and untried producer, were of that variety. The melons produced from such seed were the best for the soil and climate.

Plaintiff made expenditures in renting land, preparing the soil, and planting the seed; but on the crop coming to or nearing maturity it was discovered that the seeds were not as warranted, but of an inferior variety. An examination of the seeds would not disclose whether they were "Klekley Sweets" or not.

The vines produced small melons, which were not readily sold on the market. In fact, plaintiff testified that he was able to obtain only about $100 for the crop, selling some of the melons at 50 cents a hundred.

There was also proof tending to show that had the seed been true to kind the crop would have been of a considerably greater value.

The defendant tendered $2 and the costs accrued in the case, and filed a plea of tender. The tender sum of $2 represented the difference between the market value of the amount of seed delivered to plaintiff by defendant and the same amount of "Klekley Sweet's." The defense was that the measure of damages was at most that sum.

The trial judge held with this insistence and gave peremptory instruction to the jury to find for defendant.

The court of civil appeals, on appeal, held that this ruling was erroneous and remanded the cause to the lower court for trial.

We hold that this was a proper disposition of the case on the part of the appellate court, though we reach the result on a different theory of the law.

There have been developed two rules in respect to damages growing out of the warranting of seed that proved not true to name. The first class of cases, dealing with seed, improperly delivered under the contract, that are of such quality that no crop is produced, announce the restrictive rule that there is no proper basis for the allowance of expected profits as damages. The rule in such case appears to be that the items of damages recoverable are those of actual outlay, such as the price paid for the seed, the expense of preparing the soil to receive the seed (less general benefit to the land therefrom), the expense of planting, and the loss sustained from having the land lie idle for such period of time as the use of it was lost. Shaw v. Smith, 45 Kan. 334, 11 L.R.A. 881, 25 Pac. 886; Butler v. Moore, 68 Ga. 780, 45 Am. Rep. 508; Reiger v. Worth, 127 N. C. 230, 52 L.R.A. 362, 80 Am. St. Rep. 798, 37 S. E. 217; Vaughan's Seed Store v. Stringfellow, 56 Fla. 708, 721, 48 So. 410; Sedgw. Damages 9th ed. §§ 191, 768.

The other and more liberal rule is applied in cases where the defective seed germinate and produce a crop that is inferior in quality and value to the one that would have been produced in the same circumstances had the seed been as warranted. In such case, by an almost unbroken line of authorities in England and America, there is held to be a reasonable basis on which to estimate the profit that would have been made had the seed been of contract quality. It is held that this basis is found in the certainly ascertainable value of the crop actually produced, the court having only to estimate the difference in value between that crop and the value of the crop that would ordinarily have been produced under the same circumstances if seed true to name had been supplied by the seller. The loss is held not to be conjectural and the damages not to be speculative, or beyond the contemplation of the contracting parties.

In Wolcott v. Mount, 36 N. J. L. 262, 13 Am. Rep. 438, this basis for the allowance of expected profits is thus recognized: "The loss of the value of a crop for which the seed had not been sown, the yield from which, if planted, would depend upon the contingencies of weather and season, would be excluded as incapable of estimation with that degree of certainty which the law exacts in the proof of damages. But . . . if a crop has been sowed on the ground prepared for cultivation, and the plaintiff's complaint is that because of the inferior quality of the seed a crop of less value is produced, by these circumstances the means would be furnished to enable the jury to make a proper estimation of the injury resulting from the loss of profits of this character. . . . The uncertainty of the quantity of the crop, dependent upon the condition of weather and season, was removed by the yield of the ground under the precise circumstances to which the seed ordered would have been exposed."

See also White v. Miller, 71 N. Y. 118, 27 Am. Rep. 13; Vaughan's Seed Store v. Stringfellow, supra.

In the case of Hurley v. Buchi, 10 Lea, 346, it appeared that Buchi, a market gardener, applied to Hurley to buy "Early Rose" potatoes, informing the latter that they were desired to plant for the early market; that that variety matured about the middle of June, and was worth on the market $3.50 per bushel. A different kind, actually furnished and planted, did not mature until August. The court disallowed the claim of the plaintiff that he was entitled to recover as damages the increased value of the potatoes he would have raised and sold if the seed potatoes delivered had been of the "Early Rose" variety; and this on the ground that the claim was based on the assumption that if the variety ordered had been delivered, they would have been planted, cultivated, and matured at a given time (in June), and that therefore speculative profits would be involved. The speculative element, we conceive, was that the anticipated crop would have matured on a date that substantially differed from the date when the seed potatoes that were actually furnished would and did mature.

In its particular ruling on the point of speculative damages, the case of Hurley v.

Bucki may, and we think should, be treated as not out of harmony with the widely accepted general rule, but as announcing an exception to it, based on the fact above referred to. The uncertainty in the quantity of the crop, dependent on weather and season, under the facts of that case, was not removed by any adding reference to the actual yield under precise, or fairly similar, circumstances. The weather at or near the date of the maturing of "Early Rose" seed potatoes might have been such as to materially affect the quantity and quality of the production, while not having identical effect upon the later maturing variety.

Broadly stated, the rule is that for the breach of an expressed warranty that seed is true to name, where the seller knows the use for which the same is brought and the purchaser sows in ignorance of the true character of the seed, the measure of recoverable damages is the value of a crop, had the seed been as warranted, such as would ordinarily have been produced that year, less the value of the crop actually raised. Wolcott v. Mount, 38 N. J. L. 498, 20 Am. Rep. 425; Van Wyck v. Allen, 69 N. Y. 61, 25 Am. Rep. 136; Fuhrman v. Interior Warehouse Co. 64 Wash. 159, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 60, 116 Pac. 606; Edgar v. Joseph Breck & Sons Corp. 172 Mass. 581, 52 N. E. 1088; 2 Sedgw. Damages, 9th ed. 768.

The judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals is modified and affirmed. Remand for a trial of the cause in the circuit court.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

ST. LOUIS SOUTHWESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY OF TEXAS, Plff. in Err.,

v.
THOMAS A. GRIFFIN.

(106 Tex. 477, 171 S. W. 703.)

Constitutional law — requiring statement of cause of discharge — impairing rights.

1. Requiring an employer to give a discharged employee a true statement of the cause of discharge would unconstitutionally impair the employer's right to contract, and deny him the equal protection of the laws. For other cases, see Constitutional Law, II. a, 5, c; II. b, 4, b, (2), in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Master and servant — cause for discharge — liability.

2. An employer cannot be held liable in damages for giving inefficiency as a cause for discharging an employee, although the evidence tends to show that he was efficient. For other cases, see Master and Servant, I. e, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — reasons for discharge — duty to give.

3. Under a constitutional provision that every person shall be at liberty to speak, write, or publish his opinions on every subject, an employer cannot be compelled to give reasons for the discharge of an employee. For other cases, see Constitutional Law, II. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Constitutional law — liberty — right to refuse employment.

4. The legislature cannot, in view of the constitutional guaranty of liberty, forbid an employer to refuse to employ one who has participated in a strike.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, II. b, 4, b, (2), in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — right to compel disclosures.

5. The legislature cannot, in view of the constitutional guaranties of liberty and against searches, compel an employer to disclose to employees communications made by or to him with respect to the qualifications of a discharged employee or one seeking employment.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, II. b, 4, b, (2); Search and Seizure, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — reasons for discharge of employee — police power.

6. The police power does not extend to compelling an employee to give reasons for the discharge of an employee.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, II. c, 4, c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(December 16, 1914.)

ERROR to the Court of Civil Appeals to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the District Court for Dallas County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for alleged failure and refusal of defendant to issue a true statement of the reasons why plaintiff was discharged by it. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. E. B. Perkins, J. E. Gilbert, D. Upthegrove, for plaintiff in error:

Defendant has the absolute right to determine the qualifications of its section foreman, and having discharged plaintiff for inability to surface and line track and properly distribute his work, and this being the statement made in the service letter requested by him, it is a violation of the state and Federal Constitutions for the court to permit plaintiff to have the truth or falsity of such statement submitted to the jury.

Note.—Upon the constitutionality of statutes requiring the employer to furnish a discharged employee with a statement of the cause of his discharge, see annotation following this case, post, 1115.
L.R.A.1917B.

St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Hixon, 104 Tex. 267, 137 S. W. 343; St. Louis, S. F. & T. R. Co. v. Inman, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 137 S. W. 1153; Ex parte Harrison, 212 Mo. 88, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 950, 126 Am. St. Rep. 567, 110 S. W. 708, 15 Ann. Cas. 1; Wallace v. Georgia, O. & N. R. Co. 94 Ga. 732, 22 S. E. 379; Pavesich v. New England L. Ins. Co. 122 Ga. 190, 69 L.R.A. 101, 106 Am. St. Rep. 184, 60 S. E. 68, 2 Ann. Cas. 561; Ex parte Neil, 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 275, 40 Am. St. Rep. 776, 22 S. W. 923; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Brown, 80 Kan. 312, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 247, 183 Am. St. Rep. 213, 102 Pat. 489, 18 Ann. Cas. 546; Ex parte Brown, 38 Tex. Crim. Rep. 295, 70 Am. St. Rep. 743, 42 S. W. 554; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 661, 31 L. ed. 270, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; State v. Gilman, 33 W. Va. 146, 6 L.R.A. 847, 16 S. E. 283; Coffeyville Vitriified Brick & Tile Co. v. Perry, 69 Kan. 297, 66 L.R.A. 185, 76 Pac. 948, 1 Ann. Cas. 936; State v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 68 Minn. 391, 38 L.R.A. 672, 71 N. W. 400; Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, 49 L. ed. 937, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539, 3 Ann. Cas. 1133; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. 209 U. S. 118, 52 L. ed. 712, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 493; Adair v. United States, 208 U. S. 172, 52 L. ed. 441, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277, 13 Ann. Cas. 764; Cotting v. Kansas City Stock Yards Co. (Cotting v. Goddard), 188 U. S. 79, 46 L. ed. 92, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 39; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 668, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389, 4 Am. St. Rep. 465, 17 N. E. 343; State v. Loomis, 115 Mo. 307, 21 L.R.A. 799, 22 S. W. 350; Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 38 L. ed. 385, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499; Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U. S. 537, 41 L. ed. 256, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1138; Wisconsin, M. & F. R. Co. v. Jacobson, 179 U. S. 287, 45 L. ed. 194, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 115; Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 616, 29 L. ed. 746, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 524; Dupree v. State, 102 Tex. 455, 119 S. W. 301, 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 69.

No express malice being shown, the contents of the service letter was privileged, and could not be made the basis of the cause of action against defendant.

Missouri P. R. Co. v. Richmond, 73 Tex. 575, 4 L.R.A. 280, 15 Am. St. Rep. 794, 11 S. W. 555; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Floore, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 62 S. W. 611; Davis v. Wells, 25 Tex. Civ. App. 155, 60 S. W. 506; Hebner v. Great Northern R. Co. 78 Minn. 289, 79 Am. St. Rep. 387, 80 N. W. 1128; Schulze v. Jelenick, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 296, 44 S. W. 581; Brown v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 100 Va. 419, 60 L.R.A. 474, 42 S. E. 664; Campbell v. Bostick, — Tex. L.R.A. 1917B.

Civ. App. —, 22 S. W. 828; Wabash R. Co. v. Young, 162 Ind. 102, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1104, 69 N. E. 1003; Lilley v. Roney, 61 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 727; White v. Nicholls, 3 How. 266, 11 L. ed. 591.

The court erred in submitting to the jury the question as to whether or not the statement made in the service letter was true or untrue.

St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Hixon, 104 Tex. 267, 137 S. W. 343; St. Louis, S. F. & T. R. Co. v. Inman, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 137 S. W. 1153.

Mr. William H. Clark, for defendant in error:

The contention that the verdict and judgment herein are not due process of law and that the Blacklisting Statute is repugnant to the Constitution is simply an abuse of the English language in the light of the statutes of Texas regulating and controlling public service corporations, and the decisions of the courts holding that such state regulation of these public service corporations is within the power of the state.

Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Chawing, 86 Tex. 654, 24 L.R.A. 504, 28 S. W. 482; Fidelity & O. Co. v. Allibone, 90 Tex. 660, 40 S. W. 399, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 178, 20 S. W. 632; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Oslopp, 25 Tex. Civ. App. 284, 61 S. W. 336; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Walden, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 26 S. W. 1012; Clark v. Finley, 93 Tex. 171, 34 S. W. 343; Brown v. State, 54 Tex. Crim. Rep. 121, 112 S. W. 80; Northern Texas Traction Co. v. Danforth, 53 Tex. Civ. App. 419, 116 S. W. 147; Fidelity Mut. Life Assn. v. Mettler, 165 U. S. 588, 46 L. ed. 922, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 662; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 174 U. S. 96, 43 L. ed. 900, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 668, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255; John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Warren, 181 U. S. 73, 46 L. ed. 755, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 535; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 177 U. S. 28, 44 L. ed. 657, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 518; Tullis v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. 175 U. S. 348, 44 L. ed. 192, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 136; Blake v. McClung, 172 U. S. 239, 43 L. ed. 432, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 105; Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 154 U. S. 362, 413, 38 L. ed. 1014, 1028, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 560, 575, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1047, 1060; Orient Ins. Co. v. Daggs, 172 U. S. 557, 43 L. ed. 552, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77; Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 10 L. ed. 357; Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 519, 10 L. ed. 274; Merchants' Life Assn. v. Yacum, 39 C. C. A. 56, 98 Fed. 251.

Mr. William T. Strange also for defendant in error.

Brown, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

We copy from the opinion of Justice Moursund the following statement of the facts found by the court of civil appeals of the fourth district (— Tex. Civ. App. —, 154 S. W. 583):

"Thomas A. Griffin, appellee, sued the St. Louis Southwestern Railway Company of Texas, appellant, to recover damages for its alleged failure and refusal to issue to him a true statement of the reasons why he was discharged by appellant, he having made demand for such statement under chapter 89, p. 160, General Laws of Texas of 1909, commonly known as the 'Black-listing Law.' On May 9, 1910, appellee was employed as a section foreman by appellant, and on July 18, 1910, was discharged, whereupon he made his demand for a statement in writing as to the cause of his discharge. Appellant issued a service letter, as follows: 'This is to certify that Thomas A. Griffin has been employed in the capacity of section foreman at Renner on the St. Louis Southwestern Railway Company of Texas from May 9, 1910, to July 18, 1910. Discharged for not distributing work properly and inability to surface and line track. Previous record. March 25, 1910, to April 1, 1910, assistant extra gang foreman. Resigned. Service satisfactory.'

"Appellee alleged that this statement was false and malicious; that he had had several years' experience on section work and as section foreman, performing and directing said work, was capable, experienced, and skilled therein; that he could and did distribute his work properly, and could and did surface and line track; that the real cause of his discharge was on account of a personal difference which he had on July 10, 1910, with appellant's general roadmaster, J. J. Hughes.

"Appellant attacked the constitutionality of the Blacklisting Law, both by demurrer and plea, and alleged that it in good faith attempted to comply with said statute, and that the reasons stated in said service letter were the true reasons for appellee's discharge; that its assistant roadmaster, in making the report on which said letter was based, acted in good faith in an effort to perform his duty to appellant, and it would not be liable for a mistake in judgment made by its roadmaster. Appellant further alleged that it did not make such letter public, but furnished it to appellee in compliance with said statute, at his request, and without any malice, ill will, or evil intent towards appellee; that it had the right to exercise and act upon its own judgment as to the competency of those employed as section foremen, and if a mistake should be made in the discharge of such employee it would not be liable to him; that it was required by law to keep its track in proper condition for the operation of its trains; that it was necessary to employ careful and competent section foreman to keep the track in proper repair; that other railroad companies had a like interest in keeping their tracks and roadbed in repair; and that such communication was privileged, and, there being no malice, ill will, or evil intent shown, plaintiff could not recover.

"Defendant's exceptions were overruled, and upon trial the jury found that the statement furnished as stated above, and awarded plaintiff $500 damages. Judgment was entered for said amount, from which defendants appealed."

There is no conflict in the evidence to the fact of the employment and discharge of Griffin. The question presented to this court is the validity of a statute enacted by the legislature as stated above, from which we copy the following provisions: "Art. 594. Discrimination.—Either or any of the following acts shall constitute discrimination against persons seeking employment:

... (3) Where any corporation, or receiver of the same, doing business in this state, or any agent or employee of such corporation or receiver, shall have discharged an employee, and such employee demands a statement in writing of the cause of his discharge, and such corporation, receiver, agent, or employee thereof fails to furnish a true statement of the same to such discharged employee, within ten days after such demand, or where any corporation or receiver of the same, or any officer or agent of such corporation or receiver, shall fail, within ten days after written demand for the same, to furnish to any employee voluntarily leaving the service of such corporation or receiver, a statement in writing that such employee did leave such service voluntarily, or where any corporation or receiver of the same, doing business within this state, shall fail to show in any statement under the provision of this title the number of years and months during which such employee was in the service of the said corporation or receiver in each and every separate capacity or position in which he was employed, and whether his services were satisfactory in each such capacity or not, or where any such corporation or receiver shall fail within ten days after written demand for the same to furnish to any such employee a true copy of the statement originally given to such employee for his use in case he shall have lost or is otherwise deprived of the use of the said original statement." 1 Rev. Stat. 1911, art. 594, § 3.

The act gives no right of action to the employee for failure to furnish the "true statement," but provides that the state may sue for and recover a penalty of $1,000 for each failure to comply with the law.

For the purpose of testing the correctness of the judgment of the court of civil appeals in holding the act of the legislature valid, we must assume that the evidence was sufficient to sustain the claim that the statement of discharge furnished did not state a cause which was true in fact; but this does not concede that the statement of discharge furnished did not state truly the cause which operated upon the mind of the officer who discharged Griffin. We will first consider the validity of the statute relied upon by defendant in error, and if, by reasonably fair construction, it appears that the legislature was empowered to enact the law, this court will recognize it as valid; that is, a serious doubt of the power must be resolved in favor of the validity of the law. Lewis's Sutherland Stat. Constr. § 82, states the rule thus: "Every presumption is in favor of the validity of an act of the legislature, and all doubts are resolved in support of the act. 'In determining the constitutionality of an act of the legislature, courts always presume in the first place that the act is constitutional. They also presume that the legislature acted with integrity, and with an honest purpose to keep within the restrictions and limitations laid down by the Constitution. The legislature is a co-ordinate department of the government, invested with high and responsible duties, and it must be presumed that it has considered and discussed the constitutionality of all measures passed by it.' The unconstitutionality must be clear or the act will be sustained."

It is true that all legislative power is by the Constitution vested in the legislature, and the judicial department cannot frame laws, nor change nor mold them by construction. It is likewise true that the judicial power of the state is vested in the courts which are charged with the duty of enforcing the laws and with the duty to annul any law enacted by the legislature which is clearly in violation of the constitutional rights of any person, natural or corporate, and with the same purpose with which the courts refrain from trespassing upon the privileges of the legislative power, they will, when necessary, exercise their power to prevent the destruction or impairment of rights vested in citizens or corporate bodies, by the unauthorized action of the legislature.

The citizen has the liberty of contract as a natural right which is beyond the power of the government to take from him. The L.R.A.1917B.

liberty to make contracts includes the corresponding right to refuse to accept a contract or to assume such liability as may be proposed. When Griffin entered the service of the railroad company for an indefinite time, the law reserved to him the right to quit the service at any time without cause or notice to the employer. The railroad company had the corresponding right to discharge him at any time without cause or notice. The rights of the parties were mutual. East Line & R. River R. Co. v. Scott, 72 Tex. 75, 13 Am. St. Rep. 758, 10 S. W. 102. In the case cited, the court said: "It is very generally if not uniformly held, when the term of service is left to the discretion of either party, or the term left indefinite or determinable by either party, that either may put an end to it at will, and so without cause. Harper v. Hassard, 113 Mass. 187; Coffin v. Landis, 46 Pa. 431; Wood, Mast. & S. §§ 133, 136, and citations."

If the servant could quit without notice and the master could discharge him at will without notice, the effect of the statute in question would be to preserve the servant's unqualified right to leave the service without cause or notice, but to deny to the corporation the corresponding right to discharge without cause or notice.

The requirement that the corporation give to the discharged employee, on his demand, a statement of the "true cause" for his discharge, necessarily implies that there must have been a cause to justify the dismissal, else, how could the "true cause" be given? The value of the contract to each party consisted largely in the mutual right to dissolve the relation of master and servant at will. The destruction of that right in the corporation was a violation of its liberty of contract and a denial of the equal protection of the law, in violation of this provision of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States: "Nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty or property, without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

But the statute did not stop at the destruction of the corporation's right to discharge the employee without cause, but provided that in case the statement of cause should be refused, or if the cause stated was not the "true cause," the state might recover from the corporation a penalty of $1,000.

But the legislature did not stop with that provision, for under the construction placed on the law by the court of civil appeals the discharged employee could recover damages by proving that the cause stated was not true. The proof in this case was that the person who discharged Griffin acted upon the report of another who had oversight of Griffin's work, and there was no controversy that he acted upon that report, but Griffin was permitted to prove that he was capable and did good work, which denied to the employer the right to determine the efficiency of the servant.

In St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Hixon, 104 Tex. 267, 137 S. W. 343, this court held that the law required a true statement of the fact which operated upon the mind of the officer or agent who discharged the employee, but did not require that the fact stated must have been true. Under this most favorable construction, the law is no less in violation of the constitutional right of equal protection of the law as secured by the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The eighth section of art. 1 of the Constitution of this state is in this comprehensive and clear language: "Every person shall be at liberty to speak, write or publish his opinions on any subject, being responsible for the abuse of that privilege; and no law shall ever be passed curtailing the liberty of speech or of the press. In prosecutions for the publication of papers investigating the conduct of officers or men in public capacity, or when the matter published is proper for public information, the truth thereof may be given in evidence. And in all indictments for libels the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the facts, under the direction of the court, as in other cases."

The liberty to write or speak includes the corresponding right to be silent, and also the liberty to decline to write. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Brown, 80 Kan. 312, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 247, 138 Am. St. Rep. 213, 102 Pac. 459, 18 Ann. Cas. 346; Wallace v. Georgia, C. & N. R. Co. 94 Ga. 738, 23 S. E. 579. To say that one can be compelled at the instance of another party to do what he has the constitutional liberty to do or not is a contradiction that is not susceptible of reconciliation. In Wallace v. Georgia, C. & N. R. Co. cited above, the Georgia court tersely and clearly covers the entire ground thus: "A statute which undertakes to make it the duty of incorporated railroad, express, and telegraph companies to engage in correspondence of this sort with their discharged agents and employees, and which subjects them in each case to a heavy forfeiture, under the name of damages, for failing or refusing to do so, is violative of the general private right of silence enjoyed in this state by all persons, natural or artificial, from time immemorial, and is utterly void and of no effect. Liberty of speech and of writing is secured by the L.R.A. 1917B.

Constitution, and incident thereto is the correlative liberty of silence, not less important nor less sacred."

We find no authority to the contrary, and argument could not add force to the reasoning of those courts. The cases cited are sufficient to require this court to declare the law in question void, but we believe that we should point out other grounds which demand the judgment of this court in support of our conclusion.

The act of the legislature under consideration violates that provision of the Constitution by many harsh requirements. We will point out some of them. This statute declares the corporation to be guilty of discrimination against the employee in the following instances; but we do not exhaust the harsh features of the law:

First. It confers upon the employee a right to recover damages if the corporation, upon his demand, should fail to give to him a statement of the "true cause" of his discharge, "or why his relationship to such company ceased." The corporation has the constitutional right to discharge without cause, and the legislature cannot destroy this right of contract.

Second. Where the employing corporation by any means, directly or indirectly, shall communicate to any other person or corporation any information in regard to the said employee who may seek employment of such person or corporation, and, upon demand of such employee, shall fail within ten days thereafter to deliver to him a complete copy of such communication, if any written, and if not a true statement of it, whether it was done by sign or other means, if not in writing, and shall also give the names and addresses of all persons or corporations to whom such communication shall have been made. This is not a part of any proceeding at law, not even the act of an officer.

Third. When any such corporation shall have discharged an employee and such employee demands a statement in writing of the cause of his discharge, the corporation or its officers are required within ten days after the demand, to give a true statement of the cause for so discharging the employee. If the employee voluntarily leaves the service of the corporation, he may demand in writing from such corporation a statement that he did voluntarily leave such employment. The corporation is required in making a statement of the departure of his employee, whether voluntary or otherwise, to give the number of years and months during which the employee was in the service of the corporation, and state every capacity or position in which he was employed and whether his services were satisfactory in each capacity or not. And if the employee should lose or destroy his statement, then he has the right to demand of the corporation to make a true copy of the original statement and furnish it to him. We have found no precedent for this palpable disregard of the rights of corporations under the Constitution of the state.

Fourth. If any corporation or receiver doing business in this state, etc., shall have received any request, notice, or communication, in writing or otherwise, from any person, etc., preventing or calculated to prevent the employment of such person seeking employment, and if such corporation or agent shall fail to furnish such person seeking employment a true statement of such request, notice, or communication, etc., if otherwise than in writing make a true statement thereof, and a true interpretation of its meaning, the names and addresses of all such persons or corporations making such inquiry.

Fifth. When any corporation doing business in this state shall have discharged any employee and has failed to give such employee a true statement of the causes of his discharge, within ten days after demand is made therefor, and shall thereafter furnish any other person or corporation, etc., unless it be at the request of the latter, the corporation is charged with discrimination.

Sixth. Wherein a corporation, etc., doing business in this state, shall discriminate against any person seeking employment on account of his having participated in a strike.

The effect of the foregoing section of the statute is to deny to a corporation the right to refuse employment to a man who had participated in a strike on a railroad. This is a clear invasion of the constitutional right of an individual or corporation to determine for himself, or itself, the matter of employing or discharging any person already employed, and the legislature has no power to prescribe terms by which such employer shall be governed, either in employing or discharging a servant.

The soundness or justice of the reason which prompts refusal or discharge of an employee does not affect the question of the constitutional right to exercise that authority. It may be that the party is acting upon what is a mere "whim;" i. e., without any foundation in fact or right; but nevertheless his constitutional right to deny or terminate employment exists, and the legislature cannot, for any reason, make such action a crime on the part of the person or corporation exercising that constitutional power. Gillespie v. People, 188 Ill. 176, 52 L.R.A. 283, 80 Am. St. Rep. 176, 58 N. E. L.R.A. 1917B.

1007; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Rogers, 52 W. Va. 460, 62 L.R.A. 178, 44 S. E. 300.

Seventh. Where any corporation or receiver doing business in this state shall give any information or communication in regard to any person who is making application for employment to the effect that such person had participated in a strike.

A failure to comply with any one of the demands above is characterized as a discrimination and is by law made a criminal offense; for which the state may recover $1,000, and under the decision of the court of civil appeals the employee may also recover damages limited only by the capacity of the jury to calculate the amount.

The second, third, fourth, and fifth grounds of liability under the statute, each is in violation of the natural right to speak or be silent, or the liberty of contract secured by the Constitution of this state and of the United States. Of the great number of cases which have settled these questions adversely to the provisions of the act of the Texas legislature, we have cited sufficiently, because there is no conflict on the question.

The second and fourth grounds, as above stated, are most remarkable, for they invest the discharged employee with inquisitorial authority such as has not been intrusted to any officer, and would not be enforced if granted to any officer, except it be in a legal proceeding.

There being no suit pending in court, a private person in his own interest is empowered to demand of a corporation which has discharged him, to disclose to him that corporation's private correspondence, even the conversation which may have occurred between its agents or officers and other people. Originality in devising these provisions surely must be accorded to the legislature of Texas. We have found nothing like them elsewhere. In the conflict between labor and capital, the legislature has the limitation of its authority in the Constitution of the United States and the state, and the courts have no authority, save to keep both parties within the limits of their constitutional rights.

Beyond controversy, the act of the legislature is void, unless it can be sustained as an exercise of the police power. To test the validity of the law as an exercise of that power, we will first ascertain the scope of the power as exercised by state legislatures. We find no more thorough treatment than is embodied in Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Dallas, 98 Tex. 396, 70 L.R.A. 850, 84 S. W. 648. In that case the city of Dallas sought to compel the railroad company to reconstruct its crossings upon streets so as to conform to the ordinances of the city. In support of a judgment in accordance with the claim of the city, the police power was invoked, and Judge Williams, for the court, in his usual logical and forcible style, said:

"The power of the legislature to regulate the use of property and the carrying on of business so as to protect the health, safety, and comfort of citizens is recognized by all of the authorities, and its use is not to be defeated by the mere fact that loss or expense may be imposed upon the owners of the property or business. Northwestern Fertilizing Co. v. Hyde Park, 97 U. S. 659, 24 L. ed. 1036. The numerous cases on the subject of nuisances in this court and elsewhere are but instances of the use of this power. So the decisive question, as we have said before, is whether or not the action of the city is sustained by the existence of facts affecting the public welfare sufficient to justify such an application of the police power, and the answer to this question determines the one made by respondent as to whether or not the action of the city constitutes due process of law.

"The power is not an arbitrary one, but has its limitations. It is commensurate with, but does not exceed, the duty to provide for the real needs of the people in their health, safety, comfort, and convenience, as consistently as may be with private property rights. As those needs are extensive, various, and indefinite, the power to deal with them is likewise broad, indefinite, and impracticable of precise definition or limitation. But, as the citizen cannot be deprived of his property without due process of law, and as a privation by force of the police power fulfils this requirement only when the power is exercised for the purpose of accomplishing and in a manner appropriate to the accomplishment of the purpose for which it exists, it may often become necessary for courts, having proper regard to the constitutional safeguard referred to in favor of the citizen, to inquire as to the existence of the facts upon which a given exercise of a power rests, and into the manner of its exercise; and if there has been an invasion of property rights, under the guise of this power, without justifying occasion, or in any unreasonable, arbitrary, and oppressive way, to give to the injured party that protection which the Constitution secures.

"It is therefore not true, as urged by plaintiff, that the judgment of the legislative body concludes all inquiry as to the existence of facts essential to support the assertion of such a power as that now in question. If this were true, it would always be within legislative power to disregard the constitutional provisions giving protection to the individual. The authorities are practically in accord upon the subject. A few quotations will indicate the scope of the inquiry as far as it can be abstractly defined. In Dobbins v. Los Angeles, 195 U. S. 223, 49 L. ed. 169, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 20, the law is thus stated by the Supreme Court of the United States: 'It may be admitted that every intendment is to be made in favor of the lawfulness of the exercise of municipal power, making regulations to promote the public health and safety, and that it is not the province of courts, except in clear cases, to interfere with the exercise of the power reposed by law in municipal corporations for the protection of local rights and the health and welfare of the people in the community. But notwithstanding this general rule of the law, it is now thoroughly well settled by decisions of this court that municipal by-laws and ordinances, and even legislative enactments undertaking to regulate useful business enterprises, are subject to investigation in the courts with a view to determining whether the law or ordinance is a lawful exercise of the police power, or whether, under the guise of enforcing police regulations, there has been an unwarranted and arbitrary interference with the constitutional rights to carry on a lawful business, to make contracts, or to use and enjoy property.'

"In Lawton v. Steele, 162 U. S. 133-137, 38 L. ed. 385-388, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499, Mr. Justice Brown, speaking for the court, said upon this subject: 'To justify the state in thus interposing its authority in behalf of the public, it must appear, first, that the interests of the public generally, as distinguished from those of a particular class, require such interference; and, second, that the means are reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of the purpose, and not unduly oppressive upon individuals. The legislature may not, under the guise of protecting the public interests, arbitrarily interfere with private business or impose unusual and unnecessary restrictions upon lawful occupations. In other words, its determination as to what is a proper exercise of its police powers is not final or conclusive, but is subject to the supervision of the court.'"

We have quoted thus freely, because by so doing the question is fully presented by Judge Williams in his usual forcible manner, and by the Supreme Court of the United States. There can be no pretense that the act under examination deals with "the real needs of the people in their health, safety, comfort, or convenience."

To add cases as authority would be useless, for this is a fundamental principle of free government and gains no force by the repetition of it by different courts. The subject of legislation in this statute and its various provisions, as stated above, are purely personal as between the employee and the corporation, and do not directly affect the public, in health, safety, comfort, convenience, or otherwise.

The act is in violation of the Constitution of this state and of the United States, and is void.

It is ordered that the judgments of the District Court and of the Court of Civil Appeals be, and the same are, reversed; and it is ordered that judgment be entered for the plaintiff in error.

Hawkins, J.:

From such careful study and consideration as I have been able to give to the constitutional questions which are here involved, I am not now prepared to express an opinion in this case, but, later on, will prepare and file same.

Annotation—Constitutionality of statutes requiring the employer to furnish a discharged employee with a statement of the cause of his discharge.

Upon the constitutionality of statutes restricting the right of an employer to discharge an employee, see annotation following Re Opinion of Justices, post, 1119.

That a statute which requires a statement to a discharged employee, of the cause of his discharge, is unconstitutional as a violation of the employer's right of free speech, is a proposition established by the courts in Georgia, Kansas, and Texas. Other courts have not passed upon the question.

There are strong dissenting opinions in the Texas cases; and, as shown in the note to Re Opinion of Justices, post 1119, there are also strong dissenting opinions in the cases there cited and relied upon as authority upon the question there under annotation.

The general question as to duty of employer to give recommend or clearance card to discharged employee was considered in note to Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Jenkins, 62 L.R.A. 922.

And on the question of employer's liability growing out of the giving or refusing information affecting the character or reputation of servant, see note to Wabash R. Co. v. Young, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1091. See page 1096 for wording of statutes dealing with the subject generally.

In Wallace v. Georgia, C. & N. R. Co. (1894) 94 Ga. 732, 22 S. E. 579, it was held that a statute entitled, "An Act to Require Certain Corporations to Give to Their Discharged Employees or Agents the Causes of Their Removal or Discharge, When Discharged or Removed," is unconstitutional. The court said: "The public, whether as many or one, whether as a multitude or a sovereignty, has no interest to be protected or promoted by a correspondence between discharged agents or employees and their late employers, designed, not for public but for private information as to the reasons for discharges and as to the import and authorship of all complaints or communications which produced or suggested them. A statute which undertakes to make it the duty of incorporated railroad, express, and telegraph companies to engage in correspondence of this sort with their discharged agents and employees, and which subjects them in each case to a heavy forfeiture, under the name of damages, for failing or refusing to do so, is violative of the general private right of silence enjoyed in this state by all persons, natural or artificial, from time immemorial, and is utterly void and of no effect. Liberty of speech and of writing is secured by the Constitution, and incident thereto is the correlative liberty of silence, not less important nor less sacred. Statements or communications, oral or written, wanted for private information, cannot be coerced by mere legislative mandate at the will of one of the parties and against the will of the other. Compulsory private discovery, even from corporations, enforced, not by suit or action, but by statutory terror, is not allowable where rights are under the guardianship of due process of law."

And in Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Brown (1909) 80 Kan. 312, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 247, 133 Am. St. Rep. 213, 102 Pac. 459, 18 Ann. Cas. 346, it was held that a similar statute was violative of the state's Bill of Rights, which provides that "all persons may freely speak, write, or publish their sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of such right." The court said: "It would seem that liberty to remain silent is correlative to the freedom to speak. If one must speak, he cannot be said to speak freely." The court appears also to have upheld the contention that the statute was in conflict with the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, which refers to due process of law, etc., and that the statute was not within the police power of the state.

And see Re Opinion of Justices, post, 1119, where the court immediately touches upon the question here under consideration.

In Crall v. Toledo & O. C. R. Co. (1893) 7 Ohio C. C. 182, 3 Ohio C. D. 696, the court construed a statute somewhat similar to those here under consideration, but its constitutionality was not passed upon by the court.

The decision in St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. GRIFFIN, ante, 1108, has been followed in Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. King (1915) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 174 S. W. 335, and in Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. State (1914) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 175 S. W. 1096. In the latter case Jenkins, J., dissented, notwithstanding the binding force of the higher court decision, and stated his arguments with such great clearness and force that it has been deemed advisable to set forth his entire opinion here: "On a former day of the present term of this court, this case was reversed and rendered upon the authority of St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. GRIFFIN, wherein the supreme court of this state held the act commonly known as the 'Blacklisting' Statute to be unconstitutional, and a motion for rehearing herein has been overruled by the majority of this court solely upon the authority of that case. Under ordinary circumstances, I would feel bound by a decision of our supreme court, whatever might be my views in reference thereto; but in the instant case I feel justified in declining to follow that honorable tribunal for the reasons hereinafter set forth. 1. The statute under consideration was held to be constitutional by the fifth court of appeals in St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Hixon (1910) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 126 S. W. 338, and again by the fourth court of civil appeals in the GRIFFIN CASE (1913), — Tex. Civ. App. —, 154 S. W. 583. The constitutionality of the statute was challenged in the petition for writ of error in the Hixon Case, but was not passed on by the supreme court. The decision in the GRIFFIN CASE, was by a divided court. It thus appears that this statute has been held to be constitutional by three district judges, six judges of courts of civil appeals, and one supreme judge, and has been declared to be unconstitutional by only two members of the supreme court. For these reasons, not being able to concur in the views of the majority of the supreme court, I believe that the issue should be again submitted to the consideration of that honorable tribunal. 2. I regard the issue as to the constitutionality of this statute important, not only because it is always a serious matter to declare a statute unconstitutional, but because this statute affects in a vital manner the welfare of the 60,000 railway employees in Texas, the railway companies, and the entire citizenship of this state. This statute is based upon a condition which, perhaps, we should judicially recognize; viz., that railway companies refuse to employ those who have previously worked for other companies, who cannot bring a statement from their former employer as to why they quit its service. The railway companies are clearly within their rights in so doing. If this law is complied with, it will protect railway companies from incompetent employees, the public from the dire consequences that often result from the employment of incompetent or negligent persons, and faithful and competent employees from the oppression of railway corporations, and from the spite and prejudice of their vice principals. As was said by the supreme court of Kentucky in Hundley v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (1898) 105 Ky. 162, 63 L.R.A. 292, 88 Am. St. Rep. 298, 48 S. W. 429: One who follows 'a certain trade or calling for years may be almost unfitted for any other business. To deprive him of his trade or calling is to condemn not only him, but perchance a wife and children, to penury and want. Public interest, humanity, and individual rights, alike, demand the redress' for wrongs which are followed 'by such lamentable consequences.' I believe that it is within the police power to prevent the infliction of such wrongs. The power to deny an employee who voluntarily quits the service of a railroad company, or is discharged therefrom, a statement as to why he quit or was discharged, is, under existing conditions, the power to deny him the opportunity to labor in his vocation. This is a power that no just railroad manager ought to desire, and that no unjust manager should be permitted to exercise. 3. In the GRIFFIN CASE, the court said that an employer has the right to discharge an employee without cause and without notice. This is no argument against the statute under consideration. It does not attempt to deny or abridge such right. Griffin's cause of action was not based upon his being discharged, with or without cause, but upon the railway company's giving him a false statement as to the cause of such discharge. 4. The court further says: 'The citizen has the liberty of contract as a natural right which is beyond the power of the government to take from him.' I do not so understand the law. The courts will not only refuse to enforce some contracts, but, in certain instances, will declare a contract to be a crime, as witness our antitrust statutes and statutes against the employment of persons to commit crimes. The citizen has the right of contract only so far as such right is not abridged by law or public policy, and the law may rightfully abridge the right of contract when the public welfare so demands. 5. In the GRIFFIN CASE, the court held that the Blacklisting Statute violates § 8 of art. 1 of our state Constitution in reference to free speech. Quoting from the supreme court of Georgia in Wallace v. Georgia, C. & N. R. Co. (1894) 94 Ga. 732, 22 S. E. 579, it says: 'The right to speak includes the corresponding right to remain silent.' The answer to this is that a limited right of free speech is expressly guaranteed by the Constitution, while the right of silence is not mentioned in that instrument, except in reference to compelling one to give evidence against himself. If such right exists, it must be found elsewhere than in the section of the Constitution referred to. Continuing the quotation from the Georgia case, the court says that this statute is 'violative of the general private right of silence enjoyed in this state by all persons, natural or artificial, from time immemorial.' No such absolute right was ever enjoyed by any person in this or any other state or in any civilized country. Men are daily required to speak in courts and before grand juries, when they would prefer to remain silent. The article of the Constitution in reference to free speech declares that every person shall be responsible for the abuse of speech, and we have from the beginning had laws upon our statute books punishing such abuse, both civilly and criminally. Why should not the legislature have the power to punish the abuse of the right of silence? Silence under some circumstances is as positive a wrong as slanderous speech. Silence has frequently been held to amount to fraud or to an estoppel, whereby men have lost their property. 6. But the right of silence was not involved in the GRIFFIN CASE. L.R.A.1917B.

The railway company did not remain silent. It spoke, and, having voluntarily chosen to speak, good morals require that it should speak the truth. I cannot believe that a law enforcing such moral obligation is unconstitutional. 7. The court holds in the GRIFFIN CASE, that the statute under consideration is 'in violation of the constitutional right of equal protection of the law as secured by the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.' In what respect is not stated. Paraphrasing the invocation of Madam Roland to the statue of liberty erected on the site of the Bastille, we may well exclaim: 'Oh, Equal Protection of the Law! How often has lawless oppression sought shelter under thy wings!' As I see it, the 'Blacklisting' Statute does not interfere with railway companies in the existence of any right to which they ought to be entitled. It requires nothing but justice at their hands. As was said of a similar statute by the supreme court of Minnesota (State ex rel. Scheffer v. Justus (1902) 85 Minn. 279, 56 L.R.A. 757, 89 Am. St. Rep. 550, 88 N. W. 759): 'It is the purpose of this law to protect employees in the enjoyment of those natural rights and privileges guaranteed them by the Constitution; viz., the right to sell their labor and acquire property.' Their labor is their property. Constitutions are made to protect rights, not to shield wrongs. With all due respect for our supreme court, for the reasons above stated, and for additional reasons to be found in the able opinion of Mr. Justice Moursund in St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Griffin (1913) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 154 S. W. 583, I decline to follow the opinion in St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Griffin, ante, 1108, and dissent from the action of my associates in overruling the motion for a rehearing herein."

In the Hixon Case, to which the dissenting judge refers as having been overruled by St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Griffin, the court said: "Appellant, in support of its contention, cites the cases of Wallace v. Georgia, C. & N. R. Co. (1894) 94 Ga. 732, 22 S. E. 579, and Acheson, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Brown (1909) 80 Kan. 312, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 247, 133 Am. St. Rep. 213, 102 Pac. 459, 18 Ann. Cas. 346. These cases seem to hold a statute in many respects similar to the statute under consideration unconstitutional, in that it violates that clause of the Constitution securing to a citizen liberty of speech. It is said that liberty of silence is not less important than liberty of speech, and that the company cannot be forced by legislative enactment against its will to disclose its private information. The decision in the Wallace Case was rendered by the supreme court of Georgia in 1894, and the statute under consideration was entitled, 'An Act to Require Certain Corporations to Give Their Discharged Employees and Agents the Causes of Their Removal or Discharge, When Discharged or Removed.' Acts 1890-91, p. 188. It authorized a recovery for $5,000 as a penalty for their failure to comply with the statute. No injury seems to have been alleged by the plaintiff, but the suit was brought to recover the penalty arbitrarily fixed by the statute. The decision in the case of Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Brown is by the supreme court of Kansas, and is based on the ruling in the Georgia case. It may be that the conditions existing in Texas at the time of the passage of the statute under consideration did not exist in Georgia at the time of the passage of the statute construed in the Wallace decision. The statute here under discussion was passed to meet and remedy an evil that had grown up in this state among railway and other corporations to control their employees. It seems that a custom had grown up among railway companies not to employ an applicant for a position until he gave the name of his last employer, and then write to such company for the cause of the applicant's discharge, if he was discharged, or his cause for leaving such former employer. If the information was not satisfactory to the proposed employer, he would refuse to employ the applicant. They could thus prevent the applicant, by failing to give a true reason for his discharge or blacklisting him, from procuring employment in either instance. Even if the statute construed in the cases cited were in all respects similar to the statute before us, we would not be inclined to follow those decisions. It was to compel the former employer to state the true cause of its employee leaving its service, and to prevent blacklisting, that brought about the passage of this statute. We have statutes in this state more exacting and drastic than the statute under discussion, which are being enforced daily, and no decision of the appellate courts is cited holding them unconstitutional. . . . As stated in our opinion, no part of the Federal or state Constitution is violated by this act. It is not ex post facto; does not impair the obligation of contracts; does not authorize searches or seizures of persons or houses; provides for trial in open court, and thereby guarantees due process of law. It gives security of persons and property; does not take away the right of free speech or right to make, print, or publish one's own opinion. It does require, under certain conditions, that an employer shall speak the truth in regard to the ex-employee."

The Hixon Case was reversed in (1911) 104 Tex. 267, 137 S. W. 343, and the court in ST. LOUIS SOUTHWESTERN R. CO. v. GRIFFIN, ante, 1108, states the ground of reversal to be that the statute "required a true statement of the fact which operated upon the mind of the officer or agent who discharged the employee, but did not require that the fact stated must have been true." It would appear that the highest court for some reason did not take into consideration actual conditions existing in the state and the evils at which the statute was aimed. The statute assumes that the mere whim of the employer may be the "true cause" of the discharge, and it imposes no liability for the discharge even for a mere whim. But its object is to protect the employee from being driven, not out of the service of a particular employer, but entirely out of his chosen occupation by the mere whim of his employer. So, when the court says, "the requirement that the corporation give to the discharged employee, on his demand, a statement of the 'true cause' for his discharge, necessarily implies that there must have been a cause to justify the dismissal, else how could the 'true cause' be given?" and makes that inference the basis for the holding that the statute destroys the corporation's right to discharge the employee without cause, and in that respect violates the contract clause of the Constitution, it must have disregarded the aim and effect of the statute; otherwise its argument would be merely begging the question. It approved its former holding that under the statute the "true cause" meant that which is true in the judgment of the official who discharged the employee.

So, if it be conceded that a statute which destroys the employer's right to discharge the employee for a mere whim (see Re Opinion of Justices, post, 1119, on this point) is unconstitutional because in violation of the contract clause, it does not follow that a statute requiring a statement of the true cause of the discharge for the purpose of destroying the presumption, known to be indulged in by other employers, that every discharge is based upon undesirable characteristics found to exist in the employee or his work, is also unconstitutional, especially one under which the employer's judgment cannot be questioned. As to the constitutional right to remain silent when the welfare of others demands a statement, the dissenting judges have spoken. It will be observed that this particular statute merely aimed to prevent the nefarious practice of "blacklisting" and to change conditions under which the silence of the employer has the full force of blacklisting the discharged employee. The subject of blacklisting employees was considered in note to Hundley v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 63 L.R.A. 289, and on the question of legislation on blacklisting, see note in 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1123. The constitutionality of blacklisting statutes is, of course, not within the scope of the present note.

J. W. M.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

RE OPINION OF JUSTICES.

(— Mass. —, 108 N. E. 807.)

Master and servant — forbidding discharge of employee without hearing — constitutionality.

1. Forbidding a railroad company to discharge an employee upon information touching his conduct without an opportunity to be heard in the presence of the one furnishing the information deprives it of its constitutional right to liberty and to acquire property.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, II, b, 4, b, (2), in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Constitutional law — special privilege — requiring hearing for railroad employees before discharge.

2. Railroad companies are deprived of the equal protection of the laws and special privileges are conferred upon their employees by forbidding the discharge of a railroad employee upon information furnished by any person without giving him an opportunity to be heard in the presence of the informer.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, II, a, 5, c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(May 3, 1915.)

SUBMISSION to the Justices of the Supreme Judicial Court of questions as to the validity of a bill pending in the Senate, prohibiting railroad companies from discharging employees without a hearing. Negative answers returned.

The senate order of April 23, 1915, requesting the opinion of the justices, is as follows:

"Whereas, there is pending in the senate a bill, printed as senate document No. 537, a copy of which is hereto annexed wherein it is provided that no employee of a railroad corporation shall be disciplined or discharged in consequence of information affecting the employee's conduct until such employee shall have been given an opportunity to make a statement in the presence of the person or persons furnishing the information; now, therefore be it

"Ordered, that the opinion of the justices of the supreme judicial court be required by the senate upon the following important questions of law:

"First. Is it within the constitutional power of the general court to enact legislation limiting the right of railroad corporations to discharge their employees for cause by annexing conditions thereto of the nature above set forth?

"Second. Is it within the constitutional power of the general court to enact legislation of the nature above set forth relative to the employees of railroad corporations, giving them as a class privileges not enjoyed by the rest of the community?

"Third. Are the provisions of senate bill No. 537 constitutional?"

To the Honorable Senate of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts:

We, the justices of the supreme judicial court, having considered the questions propounded by the order of April 23, 1915, copy of which is hereto annexed, respectfully answer them as follows:

The substance of the proposed statute to which the questions relate is to prohibit, under a heavy penalty, a railroad corporation from discharging an employee by reason of information touching his conduct, until after he has been given an opportunity to make a statement in the presence, of the person or persons furnishing the information. As a corporation can have no first-hand observation and can acquire information as to incompetency, inefficiency, or wrongful conduct of its employees only through some person, the proposed statute means that such a corporation never can discipline or discharge any of its employees for misconduct, no matter how flagrant, except on his own confession, without giving him a hearing in the presence of the person affording the information, regardless of the fact whether that person be an employee or an entire stranger. Although the title of the bill refers to the "use of detectives," there is no such limitation in the body of the bill. It applies broadly to all persons who may furnish information, whether pure volunteers or others, even though it be wholly beyond the power of the railroad to produce the person furnishing the information, and even though that person may be a stranger to the railroad and decline for any reason, or be unable to confront the employee. The questions have been considered, however, upon the broad principles involved in the proposed bill, and not upon its details.

Note. — As to constitutionality of statutes restricting right of employer to discharge employee, see note following this case, post, 1122.
L.R.A.1917B.

The 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution prohibits the several states from depriving "any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law." The Supreme Court of the United States is the final authority upon the scope and meaning of these words. That court has said that "the general right to make a contract in relation to his business is part of the liberty of the individual protected by the 14th Amendment of the Federal Constitution. Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 41 L. ed. 832, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427.

The right to purchase or to sell labor is part of the liberty protected by this Amendment, unless there are circumstances which exclude the right." Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, 53, 49 L. ed. 937, 940, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539, 3 Ann. Cas. 1133.

In the opinion in Adair v. United States, 208 U. S. 161, at pages 174, 175, 52 L. ed. 436, 442, 443, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277, 280, 13 Ann. Cas. 764, is found this interpretation: "While . . . the rights of liberty and property guaranteed by the Constitution against deprivation without due process of law are subject to such reasonable restraints as the common good or the general welfare may require, it is not within the functions of government—at least, in the absence of contract between the parties—to compel any person in the course of his business and against his will to accept or retain the personal services of another, or to compel any person, against his will, to perform personal services for another. The right of a person to sell his labor upon such terms as he deems proper is, in its essence, the same as the right of the purchaser . . . to prescribe the conditions upon which he will accept such labor from the person offering to sell it. So the right of the employee to quit the service of the employer, for whatever reason, is the same as the right of the employer, for whatever reason, L.R.A.1917B.

to dispense with the services of such employee."

It was said in Coppage v. Kansas, 236 U. S. 1, at page 14, 59 L. ed. 441, 446, L.R.A.1915C, 906, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 243: "Included in the right of personal liberty and the right of private property—partaking of the nature of each—is the right to make contracts for the acquisition of property. Chief among such contracts is that of personal employment, by which labor and other services are exchanged for money or other forms of property. If this right be struck down or arbitrarily interfered with, there is a substantial impairment of liberty in the long-established constitutional sense."

In the application of these principles it has been held that the right to liberty and property secured by the 14th Amendment was impaired by a statute which prohibited the discharge of any employee because he was a member of a labor union. Adair v. United States, 208 U. S. 161, 52 L. ed. 436, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277, 13 Ann. Cas. 764. That decision recently has been reaffirmed in its application to a statute which made unlawful any requirement not to join or remain a member of a labor union as a condition of securing or continuing in employment. Coppage v. Kansas, 236 U. S. 1, 59 L. ed. 441, L.R.A.1915C, 906, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240. The ground upon which these decisions rest is that the freedom of contract guaranteed by the 14th Amendment prohibits the imposition of such restraints upon the right of the employer to decline to employ at all, or to continue to employ, a person whom he does not desire. It there was said that "the employer must be left at liberty to decide for himself whether such membership by his employee is consistent with the satisfactory performance of the duties of the employment."

It seems to us impossible to say that the right of an employer to discharge an employee because of information affecting his conduct in respect of efficiency, honesty, capacity, or in any other particular touching his general usefulness, without first providing a hearing, stands on a different footing or is less under the shield of the Constitution than the right held to be secured in the Adair and Coppage Cases. Our own Constitution contains in several clauses similar guaranties of the right to acquire, possess, and protect property, which doubtless have substantially the same meaning in this respect as has the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution. It has been held that the right to acquire, possess, and protect property secured by our Constitution "includes the right to make reasonable contracts, which shall be under the protection of the law." Com. v. Perry, 155 Mass. 117, 121, 14 L.R.A. 325, 31 Am. St. Rep. 533, 28 N. E. 1126. In the absence of a contract, conspiracy, or other unlawful act, the right of the individual employee to leave the service of a railroad without cause, or for any cause, is absolute. The railroad has the correlative right under like circumstances to discharge an employee for any cause or without cause. It is an unreasonable interference with this liberty of contract to require a statement by the employer of the motive for his action in desiring to discharge an employee, as this statute in substance does, and to require him also, as a prerequisite to the exercise of his right, to enable the employee to make a statement in the presence of someone else,—a thing which may be beyond the power of the employer. His freedom of contract would be impaired to an unwarrantable degree by the enactment of the proposed statute. The power of the legislature to require a hearing in connection with the discharge of one employed under the civil service law rests on the authority of the commonwealth to direct the conduct of its government and that of its political subdivisions. Opinion of Justices, 208 Mass. 619, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 771, 94 N. E. 1044.

Legislation similar to that of the proposed bill has been held unconstitutional in other jurisdictions. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Brown, 80 Kan. 312, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 247, 133 Am. St. Rep. 213, 102 Pac. 459, 18 Ann. Cas. 346. Wallace v. Georgia, C. & N. R. Co. 94 Ga. 732, 22 S. E. 579. These reasons make it imperative to answer the first question in the negative.

Absolute equality before the law and the equal protection of the laws are principles established by the Constitutions of the United States and of this Commonwealth. Opinion of Justices, 211 Mass. 618, 98 N. E. 337. While reasonable classifications may be made by the legislature in the interests of the public health, public safety, and public morals, yet there must be some rational relation between the object to be attained and the classification, in order that it may not violate the constitutional guaranty that all persons, including corporations, shall be equal in the protection afforded by the laws. Many such classifications have been upheld as not contrary to this principle. See for example Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Melton, 218 U. S. 36, 54 L. ed. 921, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 84, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 676; Keokee Consol. Coke Co. v. Taylor, 234 U. S. 224, 58 L. ed. 1288, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 856. But the proposed bill L.R.A.1917B.

has no reference to the safety of the traveling public. It applies only to one kind of common carrier, and not to others. It imposes a burden upon railroads from which all other common carriers and employers of labor are free. It singles out employees of railroads and confers upon them immunities and advantages enjoyed by no others who work for individuals and corporations, in a particular which has no relation to the kind of employment engaged in by them. In both respects it tends to destroy equality. It creates of railroad employees a specially privileged class, and subjects railroads, as to a matter having no special relation to their business as distinguished from other kinds of business, to obstacles and burdens from which other employers are free. There is strong ground for the conclusion that the selection of railroads as the sole object of severely criminal legislation as to a matter having no particular relation to the management of railroads would be arbitrary, and hence unwarrantable under the Constitution. Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 560, 46 L. ed. 679, 690, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255; Opinion of Justices (Re House Bill No. 1230) 163 Mass. 589, 28 L.R.A. 344, 40 N. E. 713. We are of opinion that the second question must be answered in the negative.

It is not necessary to consider whether the proposed bill offends against other provisions of the Constitution. For the reasons already stated, the third question must be answered, No.

May 3, 1915.

Arthur P. Rugg.
Henry K. Braley.
Charles A. De Courcy.
Edward P. Pierce.
James B. Carroll.

We subscribe to the answer given above to the second question. The legislation which is the subject of the first question is confined to employees of railroad corporations, is open to the objections set forth in the answer to the second question, and is disposed of by them. We do not intend to throw doubt upon the answer to the first question. Upon that matter we express no opinion. But we prefer not to express an opinion on a matter which it is not necessary to consider in answering fully the questions asked.

We subscribe to the answer to the third question.

William Caleb Loring.
John C. Crosby.

Annotation—Constitutionality of statutes restricting right of employer to discharge employee.

Most of the cases passing upon the constitutionality of statutes restricting the right of the employer to discharge the employee involve statutes designed to prevent discrimination against labor unions, and the court, in RE OPINION OF JUSTICES, ante, 1119, makes that class of cases the main basis of the decision. That question is fully covered in the note to Coppage v. Kansas, L.R.A.1915C, 960, and the earlier note to which reference is there made. The other class of cases upon which the court relies, i. e., those involving the constitutionality of statutes requiring the employer to give statement of reason for discharge, have been collected in the note to St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Griffin, ante, 1108. Reference to cases cited in these notes will show that the courts have always regarded labor as a commodity to be bought and sold precisely the same as other commodities, so that the right to discharge an employee is protected by the contract clause of the Constitution of the United States as well as by similar clauses found in the various state Constitutions, and the power to abridge that right is not within the police power of the state. Several strong dissenting opinions, however, give some indication of a disposition to give the state greater power in the matter (see note in 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 361, and notes to which reference is there made), and to recognize that such legislation may, under some circumstances, fall within the police power of the state. (See dissenting opinions of Mr. Justice Day and Mr. Justice Holmes, in Coppage v. Kansas, L.R.A.1915C, 970; also see dissenting opinions in note to St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Griffin, ante, 1108. Mr. Justice McKenna also filed an able dissenting opinion in Adair v. United States (1908) 208 U. S. 161, 52 L. ed. 436, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277, 13 Ann. Cas. 764; likewise Mr. Justice Holmes. As the Coppage and the Adair Cases form the basis of the decision in RE OPINION OF JUSTICES, these dissenting opinions throw much light upon the question.) However it may be in the future, the past reveals a practically unbroken line of decisions holding that all statutes that in any way restrict the right of the employer to discharge the employee without any cause or without a hearing are unconstitutional as violations of the contract clause of the Constitution. L.R.A.1917B.

Courts have apparently taken the view that the employee is as much benefited by this unyielding principle as the employer is. In State ex rel. Zillmer v. Kreutzberg (1902) 114 Wis. 530, 58 L.R.A. 748, 91 Am. St. Rep. 934, 90 S. W. 1098, the court said: "Free will in making private contracts, and even in greater degree in refusing to make them, is one of the most important and sacred of the individual rights intended to be protected. . . . We must not forget that our government is founded on the idea of equality of all individuals before the law. Such restraints as may be placed on one may be placed on another. If the liberty of the employer to contract or refuse to contract may be denied, so may that of the employee. In answering the question now before us, we may not forget the possibility of being called on to answer whether the legislature may make a criminal of the employee who quits, for example, because his employer joins a blacklisting association; because nonunion men or members of some other union are employed, or nonunion or forbidden machines or materials are used; because of an obnoxious foreman; because excessive hours of work are required; because compelled to trade at employer's store or board at his boarding house; or because of any other fact or conduct now considered entirely adequate reason for refusing or leaving a particular service. It must not be forgotten if, as counsel for the state argues, the laborer is too weak to meet the employer on equal terms in the field of contract, that he will be far more subject to the latter's control and oppression in the field of politics, and that laws of the above character will surely come, if within the proper province of the legislature, unless, as we have faith to believe, the character and the individuality of the wage earners of the country are sufficient to maintain their independence—both contractual and political—in a field of equal rights under the law, and of full liberty to each to sell and buy labor to and from whom he will."

In State v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. (1910) 124 Tenn. 1, 135 S. W. 773, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 805, the defendant, a corporation, was indicted for having threatened to discharge a certain one of its employees for trading or dealing, as a customer, with a certain merchant, under a statute that made it a criminal offense for any corporation, joint stock company, or association to discharge any employee or threaten to do so for voting or not voting at any election, or for or against any candidate or measure, or for trading or not trading with any particular person or class of persons. The statute was held to be unconstitutional on the ground that it was class legislation and discriminated between corporations and individuals engaged in the same business. Other constitutional objections were raised, but not passed upon by the court. The case thus supports only the second point made in RE OPINION OF JUSTICES, ante, 1119. J. W. M.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

ROBERT A. CHRESTE, Appt.,

v.

LOUISVILLE RAILWAY COMPANY.

(167 Ky. 75, 180 S. W. 49.)

Attorney and client — contract procured by solicitation — validity.

1. The mere fact that a contract employing an attorney to perform legal services was procured through solicitation does not render it void as against public policy.

For other cases, see Contracts, III. c, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — lien — compromise of judgment — effect.

2. Where, by statute, an attorney has a lien on the judgment for his fees, a judgment debtor who compromises the claim for less than the face of the judgment, in the absence of the attorney whose contract entitled him to a percentage of the recovery, is answerable to the attorney for the prescribed percentage of the judgment rather than of the amount paid under the compromise.

For other cases, see Attorneys, II. c, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(November 30, 1915.)

APPEAL by intervening petitioner from a judgment of the Common Pleas Branch, First Division of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County, denying a motion for a new trial and for judgment non obstante veredicto, in a proceeding to enforce a statutory lien for an attorney's fee under a contract with his client. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. Edwards, Ogden, & Peak, for appellant:

Appellee cannot defeat the appellant in the collection of his contract fee with his

Note.—As to the right of an attorney at law to solicit business, see annotation following this case, post, 1128.

Generally as to compensation of attorney, including liens and questions arising out of compromise of the action by the client, see Indexes to L.R.A. Notes, under the title, "Attorneys," section heading, "Compensation; lien." L.R.A. 1917B.

client Drake, although his contract with Drake may have been tainted with champerty.

Stephens v. Farrar Bros. 4 Bush, 13; Robertson v. Shutt, 9 Bush, 659; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Proctor, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 447, 51 S. W. 591; Proctor Coal Co. v. Tye, 123 Ky. 381, 96 S. W. 512; Hubble v. Dunlap, 101 Ky. 419, 41 S. W. 432; 4 Cyc. 990; 6 Cyc. 882; Davis v. Webber, 66 Ark. 190, 45 L.R.A. 196, 74 Am. St. Rep. 81, 49 S. W. 822; Rust v. Larue, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 412, 14 Am. Dec. 172; Caldwell v. Shepherd, 6 T. B. Mon. 389; Bowser v. Patrick, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1579, 65 S. W. 824; Torrence v. Shedd, 112 Ill. 477; Small v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 55 Iowa, 582, 8 N. W. 437; Allison v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 42 Iowa, 274, 3 Am. Neg. Cas. 330; Courtright v. Burnes, 2 McCrary, 60, 13 Fed. 317; Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Week, 163 Ky. 37, 173 S. W. 317.

Messrs. Frank P. Straus and Howard B. Lee, for appellee:

A contract of an attorney, secured through "solicitation," is unenforceable either against the client or a third person sought to be charged with it.

Ingersoll v. Coal Creek Coal Co. 117 Tenn. 263, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 283, 119 Am. St. Rep. 1003, 98 S. W. 178, 10 Ann. Cas. 829; Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Maxberry, 134 Ky. 647, 121 S. W. 447; Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Week, 163 Ky. 37, 173 S. W. 317; Wehmhoff v. Rutherford, 98 Ky. 91, 32 S. W. 288; Rust v. Larue, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 411, 14 Am. Dec. 172; Roberts v. Yancey, 94 Ky. 244, 42 Am. St. Rep. 357, 21 S. W. 1047; Norris v. Evans, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 77, 22 S. W. 328; Newport Rolling Mill Co. v. Hall, 147 Ky. 598, 144 S. W. 760; Louisville R. Co. v. Burke, 149 Ky. 438, 149 S. W. 865.

A person sought to be charged with a contract is not a "stranger" to the contract.

Rust v. Larue, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 411, 14 Am. Dec. 172; Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Maxberry, 134 Ky. 647, 121 S. W. 447; Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Week, 163 Ky. 37, 173 S. W. 317; Wehmhoff v. Rutherford, 98 Ky. 91, 32 S. W. 288; 6 Cyc. § 882.

The fee of the attorney is regulated by the amount received by the client, not by the amount of the judgment.

Leslie v. York, 112 Ky. 712, 66 S. W. 751; Schmitz v. South Covington & C. Street R. Co. 131 Ky. 207, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 766, 114 S. W. 1197, 18 Ann. Cas. 1114; Newport Rolling Mill Co. v. Hall, 147 Ky. 598, 144 S. W. 760; Louisville R. Co. v. Burke, 149 Ky. 437, 149 S. W. 865.

Clay, C., filed the following opinion:

Henry B. Drake, while a passenger on the line of the Louisville Railway Company, was injured. Through his attorney, Robert A. Chreste, he brought suit to recover damages. The trial resulted in a verdict and judgment in his favor for $1,000. Chreste had a written contract with Drake by which the latter agreed to pay Chreste a fee equal to 50 per cent of the amount recovered on his claim. After the motion for a new trial was overruled, the railway company employed L. C. Sherrick to settle with Drake, the company agreeing to pay Sherrick $175 if he would secure a settlement with Drake for $300. Sherrick agreed to pay Drake $125 of the amount received by him. Thereupon the settlement was made, Drake receiving $300 from the company and $125 of the $175 paid by the company to Sherrick. At the same time Drake signed a contract releasing the company from all liability, and the company indorsed on the release an agreement to pay Chreste his fee. Thereafter Chreste, by intervening petition, sought to enforce against the railway company the statutory lien for his fee under his contract with Drake.

The company answered in two paragraphs. By paragraph 1 it pleaded that it had settled with Drake in full for the sum of $300. This paragraph was stricken out by the trial court on the ground that, if Chreste was entitled to recover at all, he was entitled to recover an amount equal to 50 per cent of the judgment, or $500. By paragraph 2 the railway company pleaded that Chreste's contract with Drake was procured solely through the persuasion and solicitation of an agent employed by Chreste, and that the contract was champertous, against public morals and public policy, and null and void. A demurrer to this paragraph was overruled. Thereupon Chreste filed a reply, denying the facts therein alleged.

The only issue submitted to the jury was whether or not the contract was obtained by solicitation. On this issue defendant's evidence was to the effect that the contract of employment was obtained three or four days after the accident, at the suggestion and through the solicitation of one Sherrick, a representative of plaintiff. On the other hand, plaintiff's evidence tends to show that Drake intended all along to employ plaintiff, and that the contract was not entered into as the result of any suggestion or solicitation on the part of Sherrick. The jury found that the contract was obtained by solicitation. Thereupon the trial court entered judgment in favor of the railway company. Chreste's motion for a new trial and for a judgment non obstante veredicto being overruled, he appeals.

Other questions are presented, but we proceed to the main question, and that is: Is a contract between a lawyer and his client, obtained by solicitation on the part of the lawyer, valid, or is it contrary to public policy and therefore void?

The distinction between solicitors or attorneys and counsel or barristers, under the English law, as to the right of compensation for services, does not prevail generally in the United States, and the employment of counsel is held not to differ in its incidents, or in the rules governing it, from the employment of an agent in any capacity or business. Mellon v. Fulton, 22 Okla. 636, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 960, 98 Pac. 911, 2 R. C. L. p. 1032, § 114. Before an attorney undertakes the business of a client, he may contract with reference to compensation for his services, as no confidential relation then exists, and the parties deal with each other at arm's length.

A contract made under such circumstances is as valid and unobjectionable as if made between other parties not occupying fiduciary relations, and who are in all respects competent to contract with each other. Such a contract will be enforced, unless champertous, or contrary to public policy, or unless induced by fraud or misrepresentation, or unless, in view of the nature of the claim, the compensation is so excessive as to evince a purpose on the part of the attorney to obtain an improper or undue advantage over the client; and the attorney, as a condition of enforcing the contract, is not bound to show that it was just, fair, and reasonable, as is often held to be his duty in case of contracts made after the inception of the relation of attorney and client. Elmore v. Johnson, 143 Ill. 513, 21 L.R.A. 366, 36 Am. St. Rep. 401, 32 N. E. 413; Dickinson v. Bradford, 59 Ala. 581, 31 Am. Rep. 23; Shirk v. Neible, 156 Ind. 66, 83 Am. St. Rep. 150, 59 N. E. 281; Rust v. Larue, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 412, 14 Am. Dec. 172; Morehouse v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. 185 N. Y. 520, 78 N. E. 179, 7 Ann. Cas. 377; Pindall v. Waterman, 84 Ark. 575, 120 Am. St. Rep. 87, 106 S. W. 964; 2 R. C. L. p. 1036, § 120.

Furthermore, there is no law prohibiting an attorney from contracting with his client respecting his fees, and such contracts, when fairly made, will be enforced; but in determining the validity and conclusiveness of contracts for compensation thus entered into after the commencement of the relation of attorney and client, the general rule applies that all transactions between an attorney and his client will, by reason of the confidential nature of the relation, be closely scrutinized by the courts, and are often declared to be voidable when they would be deemed unobjectionable between parties not sustaining the relation of attorney and client. Dickinson v. Bradford, 59 Ala. 581, 31 Am. Rep. 23; Ware v. Russell, 70 Ala. 174, 45 Am. Rep. 82; 2 R. C. L. p. 1037, § 120.

There are numerous classes of contracts between an attorney and client which are held to be in contravention of public policy, and therefore invalid and unenforceable,—such as contracts for lobby services (Houlton v. Nichol, 93 Wis. 393, 33 L.R.A. 166, 57 Am. St. Rep. 928, 67 N. W. 715; Weed v. Black, 2 MacArth. 268, 29 Am. Rep. 618; McBratley v. Chandler, 22 Kan. 692, 31 Am. Rep. 213; and Stroemer v. Van Orsdel, 74 Neb. 132, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 212, 121 Am. St. Rep. 713, 103 N. W. 1058, 107 N. W. 125); or for services to obstruct or prevent the administration of justice (Weber v. Shay, 56 Ohio St. 116, 37 L.R.A. 230, 60 Am. St. Rep. 743, 46 N. E. 377, and Ormerod v. Dearman, 100 Pa. 561, 45 Am. Rep. 391); or for services in procuring liberation or pardon of convicts (Hatzfield v. Gulden, 7 Watts, 152, 31 Am. Dec. 750, and 2 R. C. L. p. 1043, § 124); or for services affecting marital relations, such as an agreement to obtain a divorce in consideration of a certain portion of the alimony awarded. (McConnell v. McConnell, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1094, and note 98 Ark. 193, 136 S. W. 931 and 2 R. C. L. p. 1044, § 125); or contracts in restraint of settlement or compromise by client (Burho v. Camichiel, 117 Minn. 211, 135 N. W. 386, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 305, and 2 R. C. L. p. 1044, § 126).

In addition to the foregoing, it is generally held that a contract between an attorney at law and a layman, by which the latter agreed to solicit business for the former in consideration of a share of the fees, is void as against public policy. Alpers v. Hunt, 86 Cal. 78, 9 L.R.A. 483, 21 Am. St. Rep. 17, 24 Pac. 846; Langdon v. Conlin, 67 Neb. 243, 60 L.R.A. 429, 108 Am. St. Rep. 643, 93 N. W. 389, 2 Ann. Cas. 834; Re Clark, 184 N. Y. 222, 77 N. E. 1, affirming 108 App. Div. 150, 95 N. Y. Supp. 388. These decisions are based either on statutes providing for disbarment of attorneys who lend their names to be used in legal proceedings by persons who are not attorneys, or forbidding the promise or gift of a valuable consideration to any person as an inducement to placing a claim for prosecution in the hands of an attorney, or upon statutes clearly showing a legislative intent to provide that no persons other than licensed attorneys shall receive fees for legal services. In none of these cases was the question of solicitation involved, and in one of them at least (Re Clark, supra) the court apparently admits "that the law permits attorneys to solicit business."

We have been able to find only one case tending to sustain the doctrine that contracts obtained through solicitation are contrary to public policy and void, and that is the case of Ingersoll v. Coal Creek Coal Co. 117 Tenn. 263, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 282, 119 Am. St. Rep. 1003, 98 S. W. 178, 10 Ann. Cas. 829. In that case the facts were these: Several persons were injured or killed in an explosion which occurred at the Fraterville mine. A representative of the law firm of Ingersoll & Peyton went to the scene of the disaster and actively solicited parties having rights of action against the company growing out of the explosion to intrust their cases to the firm of Ingersoll & Peyton. He saw a number of widows and others whose husbands and next of kin had been killed in the explosion, and sought, as other lawyers were doing, to obtain contracts authorizing his firm to bring suits. He made several trips to the scene of disaster for that purpose, and secured about forty cases for his firm. About one hundred and fifty other cases were secured by other lawyers who were there for the same purpose. The representative obtained written contracts from the parties, and these contracts stipulated that the firm was to receive a certain specified per cent of the recovery obtained in each case. After the suits were filed on the contracts, the defendant settled with plaintiffs by paying about $320 in each case. Messrs. Ingersoll & Peyton then brought suit to recover their fees of the defendant. The chancery court found in favor of plaintiffs. On appeal to the court of chancery appeals the decree was affirmed. On appeal to the supreme court the judgment was reversed. In discussing the question the court said: "We cannot agree to several propositions advanced by complainants. We cannot agree that in these latter years a spirit of commercialism has lowered the standard of the legal profession. We cannot agree that the practice of law has become a 'business' instead of a 'profession,' and that it is now allowable to resort to the practices and devices of business men to bring in business by personal solicitations, under the facts shown in this case.

"As to how far an attorney may go in soliciting business, or whether he may solicit at all, we are not called upon to decide; but when such a case is presented, as is disclosed in this record, of attorneys rushing to the scene of disaster in hot haste, and competing with each other in soliciting the bereaved ones to allow them to sue for their losses, we feel that we are called upon to say in no uncertain terms that such conduct is an act of impropriety and inconsistent with the character of the profession. We cannot—we dare not—lower the standard of the legal profession to that of a mere business, in which fleetness of foot or the celerity of the automobile determines who shall be employed.

"The miserable victims of the disaster are dazed by the terrible bereavement. They are in no condition to consider their rights to damages. In their extremity they fly to anyone promising relief, when if left to time and more mature consideration, they would be enabled to make, perhaps, a better choice. In addition, it is unbecoming a member of the profession, and a public scandal, and when he bases his right to recover fees upon such improper conduct, and lowering the character of the profession and the court, it is no excuse that other attorneys do the same; but this is rather a reason why this court should act promptly and decidedly, in order that an end may be put to the practice.

"It is no excuse that corporations which have caused such disasters have been alert to send their agents and representatives to the scene, with a view of forestalling suits and making favorable compromises. This court has never failed to condemn this practice in the strongest terms; and whenever a case has come before it which in any way smacked of fraud or undue advantage arising out of such conduct, this court has not been slow to disregard or set aside improper or hard settlements. But such agents of corporations are not, as a rule, officers of the court, nor do they occupy that high status which the law places the attorney upon; and we think that we can safely say that if any attorney should make such settlement under such circumstances, this court would not hesitate to disbar him.

"It is said that there is no precedent for refusing fees because of such conduct. If this be so, we are admonished by the record in this case that it is high time that such a precedent be set, and in such terms as may not be mistaken or misunderstood. The argument made in this case, that such practice is not looked upon with disfavor L.R.A.1917B.

by many members of the profession, that it is freely indulged in by prominent attorneys, that it is necessary to successful practice, and that the court of appeals, while depreciating the practice, does not condemn it,—these and other arguments call for a full and emphatic expression from this court in this case."

It will be observed that the court declined to pass on the question whether or not an attorney could solicit business, but based its conclusion solely on the particular facts of the case, which the court held showed acts of impropriety inconsistent with the character of the profession and incompatible with the faithful discharge of its duties; in other words, the case is not authority for the position that contracts obtained by solicitation alone are contrary to public policy, but is authority for the position that contracts obtained by solicitation from persons who, because of their great bereavement, are in no condition to consider their rights, are contrary to public policy. Of course, where the circumstances tend to show that a contract of employment was obtained by fraud, or misrepresentation, undue influence, or imposition of any kind, an entirely new element is introduced into the case, which, regardless of the question of solicitation, would of itself be sufficient to avoid the contract as between the parties. In the case under consideration, there is no claim that the contract of employment was obtained by such means. Therefore we have to deal only with the question of solicitation. As before stated, we have been unable, in rather an extensive research, to find a single case holding that solicitation alone renders a contract of employment invalid. On the contrary, we find some authorities holding adversely to such contention. Thus, in Dunne v. Herrick, 37 Ill. App. 180, it was held that a contract to pay an attorney one half of the amount recovered for personal injury was valid and binding on the injured party, and she could not recover from the attorney more than one half of the amount collected by him, although it appeared that his clerk solicited the injured party to put the claim in the attorney's hands. In Bunn v. Guy, 4 East, 190, 102 Eng. Reprint, 803, 1 Smith, 1, 7 Revised Rep. 560, a practising attorney by the name of Carpenter agreed, for a valuable consideration, to relinquish and turn over his business and recommend his clients to two other attorneys by the names of Bunn and Guy. The question arose in chancery concerning the marshaling of assets, and a case stating the above contract was sent by the Lord Chancellor to the court of King's bench for its opinion. That court held the contract valid. This ruling was followed in Candler v. Candler, Jacob, 225, 37 Eng. Reprint, 834, 6 Madd. Ch. 141, 56 Eng. Reprint, 1045, in an opinion by Lord Eldon. He, while expressing his pleasure over the fact that the court of King's bench had so decided, adds that he never could entirely reconcile himself to the doctrine.

Public policy is a variable quantity. It varies with the habits, capacities, and opportunities of the public. It often changes as the laws change, and therefore new applications of old principles are required. A contract is not void as against public policy unless it is injurious to the public, or contravenes some established interest of society. The public policy of a state is determined by its Constitution and statutes, and where these are silent, by the decisions of its courts. Davies v. Davies, L. R. 36 Ch. Div. 359, 56 L. J. Ch. N. S. 481, 56 L. T. N. S. 401, 35 Week. Rep. 697; Brooks v. Cooper, 50 N. J. Eq. 761, 21 L.R.A. 617, 35 Am. St. Rep. 793, 26 Atl. 978; Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Spinks, 119 Ky. 261, 69 L.R.A. 264, 83 S. W. 615, 84 S. W. 1160, 7 Ann. Cas. 913. The varying views of the courts on the question of public policy led Mr. Justice Burrough, in Richardson v. Melish, 2 Bing. 229, 252, 139 Eng. Reprint, 294, to remark that public policy "is a very unruly horse, and when once you get astride it you never know where it will carry you." For this reason it is the general rule that courts should hold themselves bound to the observance of extreme caution when called upon to declare a transaction void on the ground of public policy and prejudice to the public interest. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Beazley, 54 Fla. 311, 45 So. 761; Warren v. Bouvier, 68 Misc. 150, 124 N. Y. Supp. 641. We find no provision of the Constitution or of our statutes that directly or indirectly forbids an attorney from soliciting business. We find no decision of this court holding that such a contract is contrary to public policy. For the first time we are called on to deal with the question. In deciding every case, courts should project themselves into the future and anticipate, if possible, the probable consequence that will follow their decisions.

There are many forms of solicitation. Some lawyers seek business by advertising in the newspapers; others by sending out announcement cards; other by asking their friends to send them business; others by applying directly, or through the medium of friends, for employment by firms and corporations; others buy stock in corporations, with the understanding that they are to be employed as counsel; still others invite to their homes and frequently entertain those who are likely to require the services of an attorney. Doubtless many solicit business in L.R.A.1917B.

person, or through young lawyers or agents employed for that purpose. Manifestly, if every kind of solicitation, regardless of the form it may take, is to be condemned, then only in rare instances would there be such a thing as a valid contract of employment between a lawyer and his client. If some forms are to be permitted, while others are to be condemned, where shall the line be drawn? We recall one case where some parties visited an old lawyer and asked him what they should do. He replied that they ought to employ a lawyer. Thinking that the case was too small for him to take, they asked him to recommend a lawyer. He replied: "I will be glad to attend to the matter for you." On which side of the dividing line would such solicitation fall? If it be lawful for an attorney to send out announcement cards, or insert an advertisement in the newspaper, or buy stock in a corporation, with the understanding that he is to be employed as counsel, or ask his friends to recommend him for employment by firms or corporations, how can it be said that, if he solicits business in person, or by an agent, that the public interest will be so endangered that any contract obtained under such circumstances will be contrary to public policy? In saying this we are not unmindful of the fact that what is usually termed "ambulance chasing" does not comport with the highest ideals of the profession. We do not wish to be understood as sanctioning such conduct. On the contrary, we take advantage of this occasion to express our unqualified disapproval of this method of obtaining law business. But it must be remembered that there is a wide difference between what is undignified or unbecoming conduct on the part of an attorney and what is clearly contrary to public policy. Such conduct may be disapproved of by the courts and by those representatives of the profession who are concerned in seeing that its standards are never lowered, and yet it may fall far short of being so injurious to the interest of the public, as to invalidate a contract of employment thus obtained. While such conduct may sometimes result in the employment of the unworthy, the consequences that would follow the rule that mere solicitation is contrary to public policy would frequently be antagonistic to the public interest, in that it would prompt solvent firms or corporations to make unfair settlements in the absence of counsel, in the hope that the fee of the attorney might be defeated by a plea that the contract of employment was obtained by solicitation.

Considering the difficulty of fixing the dividing line between what is proper and improper solicitation, the uncertainty that the doctrine would introduce into all contracts between attorneys and their clients, the fact that solicitation is not condemned at common law or denounced by our Constitution or statutes, and the further fact that it is difficult to perceive upon what theory it can be said to be clearly injurious to the public good, we conclude that mere solicitation on the part of an attorney, unaccompanied by fraud, misrepresentation, undue influence, or imposition of some kind, or other circumstances sufficient to invalidate the contract, is not of itself sufficient to render a contract between an attorney and client void on the ground that it is contrary to public policy. It follows that the second paragraph of defendant's answer presented no defense, and that the demurrer thereto was improperly overruled.

The next question is: How much is plaintiff entitled to recover of the railway company?

Section 107 of the Kentucky Statutes is as follows: "Attorneys at law shall have a lien upon all claims or demands, including all claims for unliquidated damages put into their hands for suit or collection, or upon which suit has been instituted, for the amount of any fee which may have been agreed upon by the parties, or, in the absence of such agreement, for a reasonable fee for the services of such attorneys; and if the action is prosecuted to a recovery, shall have a lien upon the judgment for money or property which may be recovered—legal costs excepted—for such fee; and if the records show the name of the attorney, the defendant in the action shall have notice of the lien; but if the parties before judgment, in good faith, compromise or settle their differences without the payment of money or other thing of value, the attorneys shall have no claim against the defendant for any part of his fee."

This is not a case where settlement was made with the client prior to judgment; nor is it a case where the judgment debtor is insolvent. It is a case where there was a judgment for $1,000, and a solvent judgment debtor settled with the plaintiff for $300. In such a case the amount of the judgment, and not the amount of the compromise, controls; in other words, if the judgment debtor settles with the judgment creditor, in the absence of the creditor's attorney, for less than the amount of the judgment, he does so at his peril, and cannot thereby deprive the attorney of any portion of the fee to which he is entitled under and by virtue of his contract of employment. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Proctor, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 447, 51 S. W. 591; Gray v. Graziani, 165 Ky. 771, 178 S. W. 1070. As Chreste's contract between him and Drake called for a fee equal to 50 per cent of the amount of recovery, and as Drake recovered a judgment for $1,000, it follows that Chreste is entitled to recover of the railroad company one half of the amount of the judgment, or the sum of $500.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Petition for rehearing denied.

Annotation—Right of attorney at law to solicit business.

The above question is considered in the note to Ingersoll v. Coal Creek Coal Co. 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 282, to which this annotation is supplementary.

As to champertous contracts of laymen, see annotation to Rohan v. Johnson, L.R.A. 1916E, 64.

In general.

As a matter which may affect the conclusion, both in actions to enforce contracts and in disbarment proceedings, attention is called to a distinction which has been recognized by some courts between solicitation of business by attorneys personally and solicitation by them through persons whom they have employed to procure business for them, the right of attorneys to solicit personally being considered in a more favorable light than the practice of solicitation through runners.

This distinction was strongly emphasized in Chreste v. Com. (1916) 171 L.R.A.1917B.

Ky. 77, 186 S. W. 919, in which the court regarded CHRESTE v. LOUISVILLE R. Co. ante, 1123, as a case where the right of an attorney personally to solicit business was involved, and said: "But there is a very wide difference between the unprofessional and undignified practice of personal solicitation of business and the indefensible and vicious practice of employing agents and runners who are not lawyers to go about the country soliciting business and stirring up strife and litigation for a stipulated consideration or a contingent fee. Such agents and runners as these are not restrained in their activities by any professional or ethical sense of propriety. Their sole object is to secure clients for their employers, and they use in this effort such arts and schemes as will get results, without giving any thought or attention to the disturbing and objectionable nature of the business in which they are engaged. The friends, acquaintances, and associates of an attorney have, of course, the unquestionable right to sound his praises and divert to him such clients as they can persuade in a legitimate way to engage his services. But there is a manifest difference between securing business through the influence and efforts of friends, acquaintances, and associates, and securing it through the methods employed by the strictly commercial enterprise of hired agents. And it would seem at first impression to strike any fair-minded man, whether lawyer or not, as being highly improper for an attorney to have agents or runners to go about and make their living by securing for him employment in cases he would not otherwise get. It is entirely outside of the legitimate functions of an attorney to incite litigation, although it should be said that there are few who indulge in this unprofessional conduct, and obviously it is much more reprehensible for an attorney to hire another, and often irresponsible, person to do this for him. It would also be idle to say that solicitors such as Sherrick and Saunders confined their efforts merely to persuading prospective clients, who had already made up their minds to litigate, to engage the services of the attorney they represented, without in any way endeavoring to induce them to bring a suit or present a claim or demand. When men accept employment to render such service as these men were expected to render, and their pay depends on the volume of business they can get for their employer, everybody knows that many of them will use every means possible to obtain the business without any regard to the method that may be used to secure it. And it is too plain for argument that, under a just and enlightened administration of the law, practices like this which it is charged Chreste engaged in should not be tolerated by officers of the court."

As affecting contract.

See also cases in note in 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 282.

The personal soliciting of business by an attorney has been held not to render the contract of employment obtained thereby unenforceable.

Thus it will be noticed that in CHRESTE v. LOUISVILLE R. Co. it was decided that the fact that a contract by which an attorney was employed to perform legal services was secured through solicitation did not render it void as against public policy, and that the contract L.R.A.1917B.

might be enforced by the attorney. There was evidence in this case that the soliciting was done by a representative of the attorney, but in Chreste v. Com. (Ky.) supra, the court refers to the case as one of personal solicitation.

And in Johnston v. Great Northern R. Co. (Minn.) post, 1140, it was also held not against public policy as champerty or maintenance for an attorney to solicit business, or to advance money to a poor client for his living expenses during litigation, or to advise a client against the settlement of his case, and the right of the attorney to recover on a contract entered into in this manner was sustained. It appears in this case that the attorney employed solicitors, but it is not clear whether the soliciting in question was done by the attorney personally, or through his employees. The propriety of advancing money to a client as a distinct point is not within the scope of the note.

But recovery for services has been denied an attorney where it appeared that his employment was obtained through solicitation by one not an attorney with whom the attorney had entered into an agreement to procure business for him.

Thus in Gammons v. Johnson (1899) 76 Minn. 76, 78 N. W. 1035, an action by an attorney to recover for services performed and money expended for a client, it was held error to exclude evidence that the plaintiff and a layman were strangers to parties having claims against a railroad, and had no object in intermeddling therewith except a speculative one; that they entered into a systematic scheme to hunt up claims against the railroad company which the original holders would probably never have asserted, and induced certain claimants, among others the defendant, to bring actions; that the contract with such claimants authorized the layman to employ an attorney and prosecute the suits at his own expense and charge the claim owners nothing for services unless their claims were collected. The court said: "According to the facts alleged and offered to be proved, it consisted of an unlawful and barratrous systematic scheme to work up and instigate wholesale vexatious litigation in the names of parties and concerning subjects to whom and which they were entire strangers, and in which they had no interest, except a speculative one in the pecuniary profit which they might derive from the litigation which they had instigated, and which in all probability never would have been instituted except for their officious intermeddling. The illegality of the conduct of the parties enters into the very inception of the scheme by which the litigation itself was instigated and but for which it would never have existed. Even if the special written contracts regarding compensation be set aside or ignored, this original vice, in the very inception of the scheme, would still exist in full force. To hold that a party can thus illegally stir up and instigate litigation, and yet obtain the benefits of it by ignoring the special contracts and bringing suit upon a quantum meruit for services performed in prosecuting the litigation which he has unlawfully instigated, would be a travesty on justice, and to permit a party to do indirectly what he cannot do directly. It is unnecessary to consider whether the course of conduct alleged and offered to be proved would be a ground for the disbarment of an attorney. It is, however, so clearly against public policy, that the courts ought not to enforce such a contract, or aid a party in recovering the fruits of such a speculative and vicious scheme. If defendant can prove what he alleges in his answer, and what he offered to prove, it would constitute a complete defense to each and all of the causes of action set up in the complaint. It was therefore error for the court to exclude the evidence."

This case was followed in Gammons v. Gulbranson (1899) 78 Minn. 21, 80 N. W. 779, where it was held that the attorney connected with the illegal scheme mentioned for soliciting claims could not recover for services rendered in connection with them.

The attorney in this case, after the decision in Gammons v. Johnson (Minn.) supra, obtained new contracts from the claimants, running to himself instead of the layman, which were almost identical with the former contracts. It appeared that the layman was a party to the substitution, and that the same person who had acted as agent to procure the original contracts for the layman was employed as agent to procure the new contracts running to the attorney; and the facts were held sufficient to show conclusively that the attorney was cognizant of, and a party to, the illegal scheme.

And in some cases it has been held that no recovery could be had against the attorney for services rendered under a contract to solicit business for him.

Thus it has been held that a contract by which an attorney undertakes, in consideration of another's procuring him to L.R.A.1917B.

be appointed special counsel in certain litigated cases against the United States, and assisting in the preparation of such cases, to pay one half of his fees received from such cases, is contrary to public policy and void and cannot be enforced against the attorney. Meguire v. Corwine (1879) 101 U. S. 108, 25 L. ed. 899.

Likewise, a contract between a layman and a lawyer, by which the former undertakes and agrees, in consideration of a division of the fees received by the latter, to hunt up and bring to the attorney persons having causes of action against railroad companies for personal injuries, is contrary to public policy and void; and the parties being in pari delicto, no recovery can be had on it by the layman to recover a portion of moneys received by the attorney on account of business brought to him by the layman. Holland v. Sheehan (1909) 108 Minn. 362, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 510, 122 N. W. 1, 17 Ann. Cas. 687.

And a contract between an attorney and one not an attorney, by which it is agreed that in consideration of one third of the amount the attorney receives by reason of the employment the other shall procure the attorney's employment, by persons interested in an estate, to prosecute certain suits, is void as against public policy, although the persons employing the attorney have knowledge of the contract for procuring the attorney's employment, and although one of the persons interested in the suit is a relative of the person undertaking to secure the attorney's employment, and no recovery can be had against the attorney on such contract. Ford v. Munroe (1912) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 144 S. W. 349.

In Irwin v. Currie (1902) 171 N. Y. 409, 58 L.R.A. 830, 64 N. E. 161, it was recognized that there was a violation of a statute forbidding an attorney at law to promise or give to any person a valuable consideration as an inducement to placing, or in consideration of having placed, in his hands a demand for the purpose of having an action brought thereon, where a layman agreed with an attorney to procure his employment in prosecuting certain claims for a certain percentage; but it was held that the layman might recover the agreed compensation, as the parties were not in pari delicto.

In Hirshbach v. Ketchum (1896) 5 App. Div. 324, 39 N. Y. Supp. 291, there was held to be a violation of the statute involved in the preceding case where an attorney entered into a contract by which the other party undertook to procure the attorney's employment by a firm for the purpose of recovering certain claims in consideration of a certain percentage of the amount recovered, and by which the attorney agreed to pay the person procuring his employment one half of the amount to which the attorney became entitled; but it was held in this case that no recovery on the contract could be had against the attorney.

The judgment in Hirshbach v. Ketchum (N. Y.) supra, was held res judicata in Hirshbach v. Ketchum (1903) 84 App. Div. 258, 82 N. Y. Supp. 739, where the right to recover was based upon the same contract as that involved in the former case, although recovery was sought for other and different moneys. It will be noticed, however, that the decision in the case in 5 App. Div. 324, was overruled in Irwin v. Currie (N. Y.) supra, where a recovery was allowed by the person with whom the attorney had contracted, on the ground that the parties were not in pari delicto.

As ground of disbarment.

For advertising as ground of disbarment, see annotation to Re Schnitzer, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 941.

There is obviously a distinction between solicitation by an attorney personally, in a fair manner, and solicitation accompanied by fraud, deception, and unfairness. The latter is clearly unprofessional and unlawful, and has been so considered in disbarment proceedings.

Thus, where an attorney obtained admission to hospitals in which there were patients who had been injured in a railway accident, by making false and misleading statements, and induced such patients to sign contracts when they were not in a condition to understand what they were doing, and advised them to simulate more serious injuries than they had actually sustained for the purpose of enhancing damages, and in disbarment proceedings assumed a contemptuous attitude towards the referee and court, his conduct was held to constitute ground for disbarment, when taken in connection with the fact that he had previously been before the court charged with unprofessional conduct. Re Welch (1913) 156 App. Div. 470, 141 N. Y. Supp. 381.

And where an attorney knows of testimony material to a case on trial, and approaches the counsel engaged in the case and states that he knows of such testimony, but will not disclose it unless he is employed in the case and receives a contingent fee, he is guilty of unprofessional conduct warranting punishment. Chreste v. Com. (1916) 171 Ky. 77, 186 S. W. 919.

And a lawyer is guilty of unprofessional conduct justifying his suspension or disbarment where, in an endeavor to secure employment in the prosecution of a claim, he visited the home of a minor who had been injured, and, upon the refusal of the minor's parents to employ him, and after being told that the case was in process of settlement, procured the minor to go with him, and falsely stated to him that it would be necessary for him to have a guardian appointed, and that he could not have either his mother or father appointed, but must have a court official, although the minor desired the appointment of his father or mother. Lenihan v. Com. (Ky.) post, 1132.

Apart from statute, it has been held that the employment by an attorney of a layman to solicit the attorney's employment by persons who have been injured, in consideration of the payment to the layman of a stated sum per week and the allowance of an unlimited expense account, constitutes unprofessional conduct warranting the disbarment of the attorney. Chreste v. Com. (Ky.) supra.

In New York a statute forbids attorneys giving laymen a consideration for soliciting business.

Thus in Re Welch (N. Y.) supra, a disbarment proceeding, there was held to be a violation of a statute prohibiting attorneys from promising or giving laymen a valuable consideration for procuring business, where an attorney approached the wife of a person injured in a railway accident, who was in a hospital, and asked her if she would go among the other patients who were injured in the accident and recommend him as an attorney to them, and stated that he would make it worth her while if she would induce such persons to intrust their cases to him.

And in Re Shay (1909) 133 App. Div. 547, 118 N. Y. Supp. 146, affirmed in (1909) 196 N. Y. 530, 89 N. E. 1112, § 74, also a disbarment proceeding, the statute involved in the preceding cases was held to be violated where an attorney entered into a contract with persons who were not attorneys at law by which he agreed to pay them, for procuring contracts by which he was retained to prosecute actions at law, a percentage of his fees received for prosecuting the actions.

It was contended in this case that the fact that the lawyer had employed the solicitors to do other work for him in connection with his office, for which he paid them a salary, in some way affected the case; but the court refused to concur in this contention, stating that the only exception in the statute related to agreements between two attorneys to divide the compensation to be received in a case.

It was urged in this case in extenuation of the offense that it was a practice common among members of the profession engaged in the prosecution of negligence cases to employ solicitors, and that it was unfair to visit upon the offender who had first been brought before a court upon a charge of this character the extreme punishment of disbarment, and the majority of the court were of the opinion that this fact should be considered, and held that, instead of disbarment, the respondent should be suspended from practice for one year.

The warning sounded in this case was referred to in Re Newell (1916) 174 App. Div. 94, 160 N. Y. Supp. 275, where an attorney who employed a layman to solicit retainers in negligence cases was held guilty of unprofessional conduct justifying his disbarment, irrespective of any statute.

It was also held in this case that an attorney who entered into an agreement with a railroad employee, whereby the latter undertook to disclose telegraphic communications to the railroad containing the particulars of accidents which had occurred, to the end that the attorney might have his ambulance chaser at the place of the accident as soon as possible to obtain cases against the railroad, was guilty of vicious and unprofessional conduct.

In Re Newman (1916) 172 App. Div. 173, 158 N. Y. Supp. 375, a disbarment proceeding, there was held to be a violation of the statute involved in the preceding cases, where it appeared that an attorney, at the suggestion of the head of a collection agency, entered into an agreement with it by which the attorney was to receive a certain percentage on claims which the collection agency turned over to him and which he collected, and was to allow the agency a stated percentage. It was argued for the attorney in this case that he was employed solely as the attorney of the collection agency, which agreed to allow him for his services one half of the fees which the agency charged its customer; that the arrangement was brought about at the instigation of the manager of the collection agency; and that the attorney had no personal relations with the customers of the agency, his only client being the agency itself. The court stated that the difficulty was that in the court proceedings which he had instituted he did appear as the attorney of record of the individuals who owned the claims and prosecuted the claims of the individuals, and that he was the attorney of the plaintiffs in the actions.

With reference to the arrangement whereby the attorney retained 20 per cent for services in collecting a claim and agreed to pay 10 per cent to the collection agency, the court stated that whether it was looked at as a payment by the attorney of a proportion of his fees to the agency procuring the claims, or whether the 10 per cent which he retained was regarded as compensation paid by the collection agency, there was a splitting of fees between an attorney and a person not an attorney and not competent to practise law, for legal services rendered to a third person whose attorney of record he was and toward whom the relation of attorney and client legally existed. J. T. W.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

JOSEPH LENIHAN, Appt.,
v.

COMMONWEALTH OF KENTUCKY.

(165 Ky. 93, 176 S. W. 948.)

Attorney — disbarment — fraud to secure business.

1. An attorney may be suspended for securing business by calling upon an injured infant, and, upon refusal of its parents to bring action for the injury, asking permission to take it to have the wound examined, and while having it in his possession securing the appointment of a stranger as guardian after informing it that neither of its parents could act as such.

For other cases, see Attorneys, I. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — who may institute proceedings.

2. The judge of any branch of a court of general jurisdiction in which an attorney

Note. — As to right of attorney at law to solicit business, see annotation following Chreste v. Louisville R. Co. ante, 1123.

Generally as to admissibility of evidence L.R.A.1917B.

as to character and reputation, see Indexes to L.R.A. Notes under the title "Evidence," subtitles "Relevancy and Materiality," "Character and Reputation."

has been admitted to practise law may file an information, on affidavits presented to him, to disbar an attorney for unprofessional conduct.

For other cases, see Attorneys, I. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Evidence — affidavit — disbarment proceeding.

3. The affidavits upon which an information to disbar an attorney are founded are not admissible in evidence before the jury impaneled to try the facts in the disbarment proceeding.

For other cases, see Evidence, IV. g, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — character of accused.

4. Evidence of the previous good reputation of an attorney, for honesty, probity, and good moral character is admissible in evidence in a proceeding to disbar him for an alleged attempt to secure business by getting possession of an injured infant through false representations, and having a guardian appointed for him without the parents' knowledge or consent.

For other cases, see Evidence, XI. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(May 27, 1915.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Common Pleas Branch First Division of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County in favor of the Commonwealth in a proceeding for the disbarment of defendant for an alleged attempt to secure business by fraud. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. William A. Perry and A. J. Bizot for appellant.

Messrs. A. Scott Bullitt, Elmer C. Underwood, and Hugh B. Fleece for the Commonwealth.

Carroll, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a disbarment proceeding instituted by Judge William H. Field, one of the judges of the Jefferson circuit court, against the appellant, Joseph Lenihan, an attorney at law. Upon a trial of the case Lenihan was found guilty, and it was adjudged: "That the right, license, and authority of the defendant, Joseph Lenihan, to practise as attorney or counselor at law in any of the courts of the commonwealth of Kentucky be and the same is hereby revoked, and said defendant is now hereby forever disbarred as an attorney or counselor at law in the commonwealth of Kentucky."

On this appeal by Lenihan from the judgment of disbarment a reversal is asked upon several grounds that will be later noticed; but, before taking them up, the information, accompanying affidavits, and the effect of the evidence heard on the trial, will be set forth, so that the nature of the accusation and the errors assigned for reversal may be well understood.

The information recited that:

The commonwealth of Kentucky, upon information contained in the affidavits of Herbert Semar, Chris Semar, and Mrs. Semar, charges: That Joseph Lenihan is, and was at the times herein mentioned, an attorney at law, practising at the bar of the Jefferson circuit court; that Herbert Semar, an infant seventeen years of age, sustained certain injuries on Monday, September 21, 1914, through the falling of some glass from a front window of the establishment of Alex. Hirschberg, at 619 West Market street; that on Tuesday, September 22, 1914, defendant, Joseph Lenihan, visited the home of Herbert Semar and endeavored to secure either for himself or others employment to make a claim or bring suit for Herbert Semar; that the mother of Herbert, Mrs. Semar, declined to employ him, and declined to take any action without the knowledge and consent of her husband; that defendant, Lenihan, asked that Herbert Semar be allowed to guide him to the place of employment of the husband, Chris Semar, which Mrs. Semar allowed; that Herbert entered the automobile of defendant and guided him to his father's place of employment, the Peaslee-Gaulbert Warehouse, Fifteenth and Lytle streets; that defendant, Lenihan, asked Chris Semar to allow him to take his son, Herbert, before Honorable Samuel Greene, judge of the Jefferson county court, that his injured hand might be examined, to which Chris Semar consented; that Herbert Semar was thereupon taken by defendant, Lenihan, to an office in the Inter-Southern Building, where he was told that it would be necessary to have a guardian appointed for him; when asked whom he desired appointed, he answered that he wanted either his father or his mother named, whereupon he was told by defendant, Lenihan, and a Mr. Greene, who was present, that such an appointment could not be made and that his guardian must be a court official; that he was then instructed that when taken before Judge Greene and asked by him as to whom he desired appointed he should name Mr. Page; that he was taken before Judge Greene, followed the aforesaid instructions, and Robert L. Page was appointed his guardian; that said appointment was secured by defendant, Lenihan, without the knowledge and consent of the parents, or either of them, of Herbert Semar, and against the wishes of Herbert Semar himself, and against the wishes of his parents; that defendant, Lenihan, knew that none of the parties desired to prosecute a claim against Alex. Hirshberg, having been told that the matter was in process of amicable adjustment, and having also been told that, if any attorney were needed, the parents of Herbert Semar would place the matter in the hands of a certain one whom they knew; that all of the aforesaid acts of defendant, Lenihan, were contrary to his oath and obligations as an attorney of the Jefferson circuit court, and against the peace and dignity of the commonwealth of Kentucky.

The affidavits of Herbert Semar, Chris Semar, and Mrs. Semar are filed herewith as part hereof.

[Signed] Wm. H. Field, Judge.

The affidavit of Herbert Semar was as follows:

"The affiant, Herbert Semar, states that he is seventeen years of age, and lives with his parents at 2208 Lytle street, Louisville, Kentucky; that on September 21, 1914, he left home to look for work; that at about 10:30 o'clock in the morning he was passing No. 615 W. Market street, the establishment of Alex. Hirshberg, when some glass fell from the front of the building, striking him upon the right hand and injuring him; that on Tuesday, September 22, 1914, at about 9 o'clock in the morning, Joseph Lenihan came to his home and endeavored to persuade his mother to allow him to enter suit; that his mother declined to do anything without the knowledge and consent of her husband, Chris Semar; that, with the understanding that affiant was to show said Lenihan where his father was employed, he entered the automobile of said Lenihan and accompanied him to the Peaslee-Gaulbert Warehouse, at Fifteenth and Lytle streets; that he heard said Lenihan ask his father if he could take affiant up to let Judge Greene see his hand and talk the matter over with him; that his father consented to this, and he accompanied Lenihan to an office on the fourteenth floor of the Inter-Southern Building; that affiant was told that a guardian would have to be appointed for him, and was asked whom he desired, whereupon he said he desired that his father or mother be named; that both Mr. Lenihan and Mr. Greene told him neither could be appointed, and that his guardian would have to be a court official; that he was then instructed that when taken before Judge Greene and asked by him whom he wanted as guardian he should say that he desired Mr. Page; that he was then taken before Judge Greene by Mr. Greene, and that he followed instructions, and he is advised that Mr. Page was appointed; that affiant did not want any one appointed guardian, but, if any one was appointed, he preferred his father or mother."

The affidavit of Chris Semar was as follows:

"Affiant says that J. L. Lenihan, an attorney, called to see this affiant on the 22d day of September, 1914, at the Peaslee-Gaulbert Company's place of business, and that the said Lenihan told affiant he wanted to take his boy to see Judge Samuel Greene to have a talk with him, and that he had seen the piece of glass fall on the boy's hand,—had witnesses to this fact; that Lenihan also told this affiant that his partner, L. D. Greene, was a brother of Judge Greene, the county judge. Affiant says that Lenihan did not tell or say anything about having a guardian appointed. Affiant says that he told Lenihan it would be all right for him to take the boy to see Judge Greene."

And the affidavit of Mrs. Semar was in the following words:

"Affiant, Susie Semar, says she is the wife of Chris Semar and the mother of Herbert Semar. Affiant says that on the 22d day of September, 1914, J. L. Lenihan, an attorney, called at this affiant's home, 2208 Lytle street, and asked her to let him take up the claim against Alex. Hirshberg for her son, Herbert Semar; that he had several witnesses to the accident, and wanted her to let the boy go with him to see Mr. Semar. Affiant told Lenihan that Mr. Houston Quin was her attorney if she needed an attorney. Affiant says that she consented for Herbert to go with Lenihan to show him (Lenihan) the place where Mr. Semar was employed. Affiant says that Lenihan did not tell or say anything about having a guardian appointed for the boy."

Lenihan, for response to the rule, after a general denial, said that, while passing in an automobile the place where the accident happened, he learned the boy's name and where he lived; and on the following day, having occasion to go in the neighborhood of the boy's home for the purpose of looking at some property in which he was interested, he paid a visit to the boy, whom he found there in company with his mother; that during the conversation which ensued with the mother and the boy he found that, although they were not satisfied with the way in which Hirshberg was acting, they seemed unwilling to take any action against him without consulting the father; that, after talking further, Herbert and the respondent visited the father at the place where he was working, and in the course of a talk with him he expressed the fear that the boy might be badly injured, and that something ought to be done, and then respondent offered to take the boy to the office of L. D. Greene for the purpose of taking such steps as might be necessary to protect the rights of the boy; that he told the father, if any action was taken or settlement made, it would be necessary to have a guardian appointed, and that, as the boy was over fourteen, he had the right to select his own guardian; that the father expressed himself as being entirely satisfied that the matter should be left in the hands of Mr. Greene, and made no objection to the appointment of a guardian; that thereupon respondent accompanied the boy to the office of Mr. Greene, and stated to Greene that the boy had been injured and desired to consult him about his case; that he may have suggested that R. L. Page, the public guardian, be appointed as guardian, but that he did not recollect distinctly about this, and soon after he left the boy in the office with Mr. Greene. He further said that "at no time did he try to deceive either the father, the mother, or the boy as to their rights in the matter, nor did he conceal anything from them, but frankly and fully informed them as to the boy's legal rights, and would have been satisfied if the boy had selected either parent to act for him, but that neither expressed such a wish in his presence; that the appointment of said guardian was made voluntarily on the boy's own motion, and this defendant was not present in the county court room at said time, nor did he have anything to do with the selection of said guardian, and did not know whom the boy had selected until several days later; that Herbert did not ask that he be allowed to name either of his parents as guardian, nor was he told by anyone that he could not have his parents act, or that a court official had to be appointed."

He further said that "he had made no contract of employment with said guardian; that he brought no suit, nor did he do anything that was contrary to the statute or in violation of the ethics of the legal profession."

On the trial of the case Judge Field impaneled a jury to hear and determine the issues of fact, and upon the trial the evidence for the commonwealth was, in substance, a recital of the facts set forth in the affidavits of the Semars, except that it did not appear from this evidence that Lenihan made any suggestion or request that Herbert be taken before Judge Greene so that his "injured hand might be treated;" while the evidence for Lenihan supported the statements contained in his response.

It will be observed that the substance of L.R.A.1917B.

the charge contained in the information is that Lenihan was guilty of grossly unprofessional conduct: (a) In endeavoring to instigate the bringing of a suit for damages after he learned that the matter was in process of settlement; (b) in taking the boy to his office for the purpose of having a guardian appointed so that a suit might be brought in which he would be employed, without getting the consent of the boy's parents or informing them that he contemplated having a guardian appointed; (c) in falsely representing to the boy that neither of his parents could act as guardian for him, and that it would be necessary to have some court official appointed, although the boy wanted one of his parents to act as guardian if a guardian was appointed.

On this appeal it is urged that the information did not state facts sufficient to constitute an offense for which the respondent could be disbarred, and therefore the demurrer to the information filed in the lower court should have been sustained.

In considering this question it may be well to here state that we have no statute regulating the subject of the disbarment of attorneys or the practice in such proceedings, except that § 97 of the Kentucky Statutes provides that "no person convicted of treason or felony shall be permitted to practise in any court as counsel or attorney at law," and § 104, providing that, if an attorney collects the money of his client, and on demand fails or refuses to pay over the same, he may be suspended from practice for twelve months, or until the money shall be paid. But the absence of a statute describing the causes for which an attorney may be disbarred does not prevent disbarment proceedings from being instituted or attorneys from being disbarred when they have been guilty of any personal or professional misconduct that shows them to be lacking in honesty, probity, and good demeanor, or unworthy to continue as officers of the court, charged with the duty of aiding in the correct administration of the law.

In Baker v. Com. 10 Bush, 592, this court said: "If the evidence of such a moral character must be produced in order to obtain the license, it is equally as essential that this character should be retained; and when an attorney commits an act, whether in the discharge of his duties as attorney or not, showing such a want of personal or professional honesty as renders him unworthy of public confidence, it is not only the province, but the duty, of the court, upon a proper and legitimate presentation of the case, to strike his name from the roll of attorneys. Nor is it necessary, as contended by appellant's counsel, that the offense should be of such a nature as would subject him to an indictment. He has by his own misconduct divested himself of qualifications that were indispensable to the practice of his profession; and, while he may regard the judgment depriving him of that right as a punishment for the offense, the action of the court is based alone upon the ground of public policy and for the public good."

Again, in Nelson v. Com. 128 Ky. 779, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 272, 109 S. W. 337, we said: "To be admitted to the bar a person must not only be learned in the law, but possess a character of honesty, probity, and good demeanor. A certificate of such character, furnished by the county court of his residence, is a prerequisite to the granting of the license. It is the possession of the character described that entitled him to admission to the bar, allowing that he is able to pass the requisite examination touching his learning. The continued possession of character is as essential to maintain his relation as an attorney at law as it is to have it in the first instance to be admitted. The office is one peculiarly of confidence. Not only do his clients repose trust in his integrity, but, as an officer of the court in the matter of administering justice, his privileges and duties are such as to constantly call for the exercise of fidelity, both to his client and to the state. A lawyer without good character is not only a reproach to his profession, but he brings into public distrust, and is a very menace to, the administration of justice itself. All courts have, as an incident to the power to admit attorneys to their bar, the power to disbar them for such conduct as shows they are not longer worthy of confidence. It is not necessary that the misconduct should be such as would render him liable to criminal prosecution. If it shows that he is unfit to discharge the duties of his office, is unworthy of confidence, even though the conduct is outside of his professional dealings, it is sufficient. If he is not honest, if he is not moral, if he is not of good demeanor, he may be disbarred, and should be."

Also in Com. v. Roe, 129 Ky. 650, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 413, 112 S. W. 683, this may be found: "Section 97 of the Kentucky Statutes of 1903 provides that 'no person convicted of treason or felony shall be permitted to practise in any court as counsel or attorney at law.' But this does not mean that only those who have been convicted of felony or treason may be disbarred. It would be doing a serious injustice to the intelligence of the lawmaking department of the state to hold that such was their intention, or to conclude that, by the enactment of this statute, they meant to declare that, however flagrant the misconduct of an attorney, if it was less than a felony, the courts were powerless to protect themselves, the profession, and the public. The statute points out two of the causes that peremptorily warrant disbarment proceedings, but it does not, and was not designed to, limit the right to the causes mentioned. An attorney may be guilty of many offenses, evidencing a want of honesty, probity, and good moral character, that would authorize the court to disbar him independent of the statute."

Therefore the question raised by the demurrer resolves itself into the inquiry whether the charges contained in the information, if true, amounted to such misconduct on the part of the respondent as showed him to be wanting in honesty, probity, and good demeanor in his professional capacity. He did the things charged in his capacity as an attorney, and not as an individual, and so what he did is to be measured by the standards of honesty, probity, and good demeanor prevailing in a profession that endeavors to maintain among its members high standards of respectability and honor.

The demurrer, of course, admitted the truth of the charges, and therefore, in disposing of this question, we must assume that the respondent was guilty of the acts set forth in the information.

Assuming, then, the truth of the information, we think it cannot be seriously questioned that an attorney who, for the purpose of securing employment in or compensation out of a contemplated lawsuit, resorts to false statements and fraudulent practices, is guilty of professional misconduct of such a nature as to merit and deserve either suspension for a period or permanent disbarment, depending on the facts and circumstances surrounding the transaction. If this method of securing business should be tolerated or be allowed to go unpunished, there is scarcely any corrupt or dishonest thing that an attorney in the pursuit of employment might not do.

It is generally known that there are lawyers who solicit employment in cases in which they would not otherwise be engaged, and this conduct on the part of a few has subjected the profession as a body to no little reproach and the lawyers engaged in this practice to much deserved censure. But the unprofessional effort to obtain business by mere volunteer solicitation is of small consequence as compared with the effort to secure employment or obtain business by false representations and deceitful methods. If a person who has a cause of action or grounds upon which a suit might be maintained wishes to settle the matter amicably, an attorney cannot with propriety endeavor to prevent this peaceful adjustment, and, of course, an attorney should not be allowed to escape punishment if, for the purpose of inciting litigation and to accomplish this end, he resorts to false statements or deceitful practices. And, if the respondent committed the acts charged in the information, he was clearly guilty of such unprofessional conduct as would justify at least his suspension for such a period of time as might be sufficient to teach him the lesson that an attorney must not indulge in practices that will bring discredit on the profession.

Another ground of reversal earnestly pressed on our attention is that the information should have been dismissed on motion, because Judge Field did not have authority to institute the proceeding. The information, as we have seen, was issued by Judge Field upon the credit and strength of the affidavits heretofore noticed, and we think that Judge Field had ample jurisdiction and power to issue the information.

The respondent, Lenihan, having been admitted to practise law in the Jefferson circuit court, a branch of which was presided over by Judge Field, he was an officer of the Jefferson circuit court, and consequently of all the branches of that court. In other words, the situation was precisely the same as if there had been only one circuit court in Jefferson county, and that court had been presided over by Judge Field.

The practice regulating disbarment proceedings is not, as we have noted, regulated by statute, but all courts of general jurisdiction have at all times in the history of the law possessed the inherent power to suspend and disbar attorneys for professional misconduct of such a character as showed them to be unworthy to hold the place of officers of the court; and the books are full of cases in which the court, on its own motion, has instituted proceedings like this. Indeed, we think that it is not only the right, but the duty, of a judge of a circuit court to institute, upon his own motion, proper proceedings for the suspension or disbarment of an attorney, when from information laid before him, or from his personal knowledge, it appears to his satisfaction that the attorney is so demeaning himself as to be unworthy to continue as an officer of the court.

The circuit judges in this state are, excepting the judges of the court of appeals, the highest judicial officers in the state; and the circuit court is a court of general, common-law, criminal, and chancery jurisdiction, second in importance in its powers and function only to the court of appeals of the state. Clothed with large authority, and possessing, as they do and should, the confidence and respect of the people, the judges of these courts, for the protection of the general public and to promote the purity of the administration of the law, may and should take appropriate action against any attorney who so conducts himself as to show that he is wanting in the proper measure of respect for the court of which he is an officer, or is lacking in the good character essential to continuance as an attorney. This action may be taken by the court on its own motion, or it may be taken by the court on motion of the county or commonwealth's attorney, or upon the motion of a committee of attorneys, or a bar association, or upon the motion of some person who has been aggrieved by the conduct of the attorney. The proceeding may be initiated in any of these ways. But, however it may be initiated, the question whether any action shall be taken lies with the judge of the court, because he must determine from the facts before him whether or not the proceedings shall be instituted. So that the information against an attorney to show cause why he should not be suspended or disbarred is, in its final aspect, the action of the judge of the court in which the proceeding is instituted or before whom the motion is made.

In Rice v. Com. 18 B. Mon. 472, which was a disbarment proceeding, this court, in answering an objection that the judge of the circuit court did not have authority to institute, on his own motion, the proceeding, said: "This objection is founded on a misconception as well of the power as of the duty of the court. The defendant in the rule was an attorney at law and an officer of the court. All courts have the power to control and regulate, to a certain extent, the conduct of their officers, and to inflict on them for their official misconduct such punishment as the law prescribes. If a court have knowledge of the existence of such official misconduct on the part of any of its officers, it not only has the power, but it is its duty, to institute an appropriate proceeding against the offender, and to bring him, if guilty, to condign punishment. And it is much to be regretted that this duty, which the law devolves upon the courts of the country, is so little regarded, and that the obligations which it imposes are so frequently overlooked or neglected."

In Walker v. Com. 8 Bush, 86, it was again said: "It is a well-established rule of the common law that courts may inquire into the conduct of their officers, such as attorneys and counselors who practice in their courts, and punish for offenses."

And so in Com. v. Roe, 129 Ky. 650, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 413, 112 S. W. 683, we said: "Courts, independent of statutes, have at all times possessed the inherent right to control and regulate the official conduct of their officers, and to inflict upon them punishment for official misconduct. Attorneys at law are officers of the court, and it has always been the rule in this state that, when the attention of the court in which they practice was called to acts of professional misconduct, it had the right to disbar them if the facts of the case justified the infliction of this punishment."

In Ex parte Wall, 107 U. S. 265, 27 L. ed. 552, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 569, the Supreme Court, quoting with approval from an opinion by Chief Justice Sharswood, said: "We entertain no doubt that a court has jurisdiction without any formal complaint or petition, upon its own motion, to strike the name of any attorney from the roll in a proper case, provided he has had reasonable notice, and been afforded an opportunity to be heard in his defense."

On the trial of the case the court permitted the counsel representing the commonwealth, who stated the case to the jury, to read to the jury the affidavits of the Semars upon which the information was based. This, we think, was error, and, in view of what will be later stated, prejudicial error. It was, of course, proper that the attorney for the commonwealth should read to the jury the information, so that they might be advised of the nature of the accusation; but it was improper to permit him to read the ex parte affidavits upon which the information was based. The jury, of course, should determine the issues only upon the evidence heard by them in the course of the trial, from witnesses introduced by the parties and open to cross-examination; but the affidavits of the Semars, as will later appear, contained facts prejudicial to the respondent that were not developed in the evidence, and that the jury would not have known except for the fact that these affidavits were read in their presence and hearing.

It appears that when the evidence was in the court submitted to the jury five questions. The first one read:

"Did the defendant, Lenihan, when he obtained the consent of the father of Herbert Semar to take said Herbert Semar uptown, represent to said father that he was taking the said boy uptown for the purpose of taking him before Honorable Sam Greene, judge of the Jefferson county court, that the boy's injured hand might be examined?"

The second one submitted the question whether Lenihan informed Chris Semar L.R.A.1917B.

that he was taking the boy to his office for the purpose of having a guardian appointed; the third one, the question whether Semar consented to whatever course Lenihan or L. D. Greene might see proper to follow: the fourth one, the question whether the boy indicated to Lenihan or Greene a desire to have his mother or father act as guardian; and the fifth one, whether Greene or Lenihan told the boy that his parents could not be appointed as guardian, and that he must have a court official. The jury answered in the affirmative questions 1, 4, and 5, and in the negative questions 2 and 3.

It will be observed that the first question directed the attention of the jury to representations made by Lenihan that he wanted to take the boy before the judge of the county court so that "his injured hand might be examined." The objection to this question is that there was no evidence upon which to rest it, except statements contained in the ex parte affidavits before mentioned. Interrogatories such as these should be directed and confined to evidence heard on the trial of the case, and, as there was no evidence of this character, it is apparent that the jury were enabled to answer this question in the affirmative from the statements made in the affidavits read to them, and which they doubtless concluded they had the right to consider in making up their minds.

Another and more serious question is presented in the refusal of the trial judge to permit the respondent to introduce evidence of his good character. The disposition of this question has given us no little trouble; but, after giving to it careful consideration, we have reached the conclusion that in disbarment proceedings for causes such as those here appearing the respondent should be permitted to show his previous good reputation for honesty, probity, and good moral character, not to justify or excuse the offense, but to support his evidence that he did not do or say the things charged, and to mitigate the gravity and consequences of the offense.

It is true that the authorities are usually agreed that disbarment proceedings are of a civil, and not criminal, nature. Re McDonald, 157 Ky. 92, 162 S. W. 566; Com. v. Richie, 114 Ky. 366, 70 S. W. 1054. It is also a general rule that in civil cases neither of the parties can introduce evidence in support of his good character until his character has been attacked by his adversary. But there are exceptions to this rule and classes of civil cases in which evidence of good character may be offered. As said in Greenleaf on Evidence, vol. 1, § 54: "In civil cases such evidence is not admitted unless the nature of the action involves the general character of the party or goes directly to affect it."

And so, when the nature of the litigation is such as to put directly in issue the character of one of the parties, it is generally ruled that the party whose character is thus put in issue by the nature of the action may introduce evidence in support of it, although his adversary has not sought to impeach it. Evans v. Evans, 93 Ky. 510, 20 S. W. 605; Smith v. Lovelace, 1 Duv. 215; Johnson v. Featherstone, 141 Ky. 793, 133 S. W. 753; 1 Wigmore, Ev. §§ 64-70.

It being, therefore, according to the weight of authority, admissible for a party to give evidence of his good character before it has been assailed, when the nature of the suit puts the character of the party offering this evidence directly in issue, it seems particularly appropriate that evidence of good character should be admissible in disbarment proceedings. The Kentucky Statutes provide in § 104, that no person can obtain a license to practise law in this commonwealth until he shall first have a certificate from the county judge of the county of his residence "that he is a person of honesty, probity, and good moral character." And we have often held that, if an attorney desires to remain a member of the profession, he must continue to retain the good character he possessed when he secured the privilege. When he loses this good character by personal or professional misconduct, he forfeits his right to the privilege he obtained by admission to the bar, and his name, as we have held, in proper proceedings, should be stricken from the roll of attorneys.

So that in every disbarment proceeding where the nature of the accusation puts in issue the honesty, probity, and good moral character of the accused, and it is sought to strip him of his license because he is wanting in these qualities, he should have the right to show by those qualified to speak that his character in these respects is good. Disbarment proceedings, although classed as civil, are nevertheless of a quasi criminal nature, and necessarily and directly involve the character of the person proceeded against. Re Darrow, — Ind. App. —, 83 N. E. 1026. The very thing the procedure seeks to establish is that the attorney proceeded against is not a person of honesty, probity, and good moral character, and on account of this delinquency there should be taken from him a valuable privilege and an honorable title. And so we think the respondent should have been permitted to show in his defense that he was a person of honesty, probity, and good moral character. Re Lash, 150 App. Div. L.R.A.1917B.

467, 135 N. Y. Supp. 370; Re Stephens, 84 Cal. 77, 24 Pac. 46; Smith's Appeal, 179 Pa. 14, 36 Atl. 134.

It is also pressed on our attention that the sentence imposed by the judge was entirely disproportionate to the offense, and that the judgment should be reversed for this reason. The judge, properly we think, submitted to a jury the issues of fact involved in this proceeding, and, when the jury by its verdict found that the respondent had committed the substantial acts charged in the information, the judge could not well have done otherwise than accept as true these findings of fact. Accepting them as true, it then became his duty to either suspend for a definite period the right of the respondent to practise law, or to strike his name from the roll of attorneys and permanently disbar him.

It is said by many authorities that the purpose of disbarment is not to punish the attorney, but to protect the court and the administration of justice from contamination by an officer who has proved himself unworthy. Punishment may not be the prime object to be accomplished in disbarment proceedings, but it cannot be questioned that disbarment is punishment. It would be idle to say that it was not punishment to take from a man his means of livelihood, and at the same time discredit and disgrace him. This, however, is the effect of disbarment an attorney, and this measure of punishment the judge, in the exercise of a sound discretion, may impose. But disbarment is the extreme penalty. Suspension from practice for a period of time is a lesser one. Which shall be imposed is generally agreed to be a matter in the sound discretion of the trial judge. As said in Thornton on Attorneys at Law, vol. 2, § 894: "The solution of this question frequently involves so many considerations of public policy and concrete justice, dependent upon the gravity and consequences of the misconduct, the age, character, and reputation of the attorney, the probability of his reformation, the circumstances attending the commission of the offense, and the like, that no fixed or arbitrary rules have been, or properly can be, adopted by the courts. . . . It is a generally accepted principle, however, that since the primary purpose of a disbarment proceeding is not punishment, but the protection of the courts and the public, disbarment should never be decreed, if any discipline less severe would accomplish the desired result, as when there are prospects that the attorney's conduct and character may undergo reformation."

In Bradley v. Fisher, 13 Wall. 335, 20 L. ed. 646, the Supreme Court said: "A removal from the bar should therefore never be decreed where any punishment less severe—such as reprimand, temporary suspension, or fine—would accomplish the end desired." Re Sherin, 27 S. D. 232, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) 801, 130 N. W. 761, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 446.

In view, however, of the fact that there must be a retrial of this proceeding, when new facts may be developed and new light thrown on the transaction, it is not proper that we should indicate the judgment that should be entered. It may, however, not be amiss to say that, in our opinion, the judgment appealed from, considering all the facts and circumstances in this case, might well have been suspension for a period, and not disbarment.

The judgment is reversed for proceedings in conformity with this opinion.

Petition for rehearing denied.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

CHRIST JOHNSTON
v.

GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.

JOHN I. DAVIS et al., Intervener, Respt.

(128 Minn. 365, 151 N. W. 125.)

Attorney — soliciting business — policy.

1. It is not against public policy as champerty or maintenance, for an attorney to solicit business, or to advance money to a poor client for his living expenses during litigation, or to advise a client against the settlement of his case.

For other cases, see Champerty and Maintenance, II. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — advancing money to client.

2. An agreement between attorney and client, by which the former is to advance money for expenses and is permitted to deduct the amount thereof from the amount recovered, is not against public policy, where it does not appear that it was agreed that the client should not be liable for the expenses in case there was no recovery.

For other cases, see Contracts, III. c, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — settlement of case — liability for attorney's fee.

3. Defendant settled a personal injury case with the injured person, agreeing to pay him $4,500 and to reimburse him for any sum he should be compelled to pay his attorneys. Under a contract between the injured person and his attorneys, he was to receive two thirds and they one third of any amount received in settlement. It is held that this amount was $4,500 plus the sum the attorneys would be entitled to under their contract, and that the attorneys were entitled to recover of defendant at least $2,000.

For other cases, see Attorneys, II. c, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 5, 1915.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Lyon County in favor of petitioners, attorneys for plaintiff, in a proceeding to recover attorneys' fees for services rendered in an action by plaintiff against defendant to recover damages for personal injuries. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. M. L. COUNTRYMAN and A. L. JAMES, for appellant:

Petitioners could recover from their client for their services but $1,500 and if they have a lien in this case they should not be permitted to recover more from this defendant than they could recover from their client.

Schmitz v. South Covington & C. Street R. Co. 131 Ky. 207, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 776, 114 S. W. 1197, 18 Ann. Cas. 1114; Pilking-ton v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. 49 App. Div. 22, 63 N. Y. Supp. 211; Fenwick v. Mitchell, 34 Misc. 617, 70 N. Y. Supp. 667, 64 App. Div. 621, 72 N. Y. Supp. 1102; Smith v. Acker Process Co. 102 App. Div. 170, 92 N. Y. Supp. 351; Whitcotton v. St. Louis & H. R. Co. 250 Mo. 624, 157 S. W. 776; Powell v. Galveston H. & S. A. R. Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 78 S. W. 975; Morehouse v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. 185 N. Y. 520, 78 N. E. 179, 7 Ann. Cas. 377, 102 App. Div. 627, 92 N. Y. Supp. 1134; Young v. Howell, 64 App. Div. 246, 72 N. Y. Supp. 5; Re Winkler, 154 App. Div. 532, 139 N. Y. Supp. 755; Wolf v. United R. Co. 155 Mo. App. 125, 133 S. W. 1172; Cheshire v. Des Moines City R. Co. 153 Iowa, 88, 133 N. W. 324; Parsons v. Hawley, 92 Iowa, 175, 60 N. W. 520; Bogert v. Adams, 8 Colo. App. 185, 45 Pac. 235; Fischer-Hansen v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. 173 N. Y. 493, 66 N. E. 395, 13 Am. Neg. Rep. 396.

The solicitation by these petitioners of the Johnston Case under the circumstances

Headnotes by BUNN, J.

Note. — As to right of attorney at law to solicit business, see annotation following Chreste v. Louisville R. Co. ante, 1123.

The basis for computing share of an attorney entitled to certain proportion of recovery, where the suit is compromised for a certain sum and attorney's fee, is discussed in the note to Schmitz v. South Covington & C. Street R. Co. 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 776. L.R.A.1917B.

herein attempted to be disclosed should bar a recovery in this case.

Holland v. Sheehan, 168 Minn. 362, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 510, 122 N. W. 1, 17 Ann. Cas. 687; Gammons v. Johnson, 76 Minn. 76, 78 N. W. 1035; Huber v. Johnson, 68 Minn. 74, 64 Am. St. Rep. 456, 70 N. W. 806; Gammons v. Johnson, 69 Minn. 488, 72 N. W. 563; Gammons v. Gulbranson, 78 Minn. 21, 80 N. W. 779.

An agreement by an attorney to pay the expenses of litigation and reimburse himself from the proceeds of the action is void.

Dockery v. McLellan, 93 Wis. 381, 67 N. W. 733; Hyatt v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 68 Iowa, 662, 27 N. W. 815; Low v. Hutchinson, 37 Me. 196; Lancy v. Havender, 146 Mass. 615, 16 N. E. 464; Taylor v. Hinton, 66 Ga. 743; Stearns v. Felker, 28 Wis. 594; Kelly v. Kelly, 86 Wis. 170, 67 N. W. 637; Gilbert-Arnold Land Co. v. O'Hara, 93 Wis. 194, 67 N. W. 38; Granat v. Kruse, 213 Ill. 328, 72 N. E. 744; Geer v. Frank, 179 Ill. 570, 45 L.R.A. 110, 53 N. E. 965; Moreland v. Devenney, 72 Kan. 471, 83 Pac. 1097; Comstock v. Flower, 109 Mo. App. 275, 84 S. W. 207; Moses v. Bagley, 55 Ga. 283.

Messrs. John I. Davis, Tom Davis, and Ernest A. Michel, for respondents:

Petitioners were entitled to judgment for the sum of $2,000.

Curtis v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 125 Mo. App. 369, 102 S. W. 62; Boyd v. G. W. Chase & Son Mercantile Co. 135 Mo. App. 115, 115 S. W. 1052.

Bunn, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

John I. Davis and Davis & Michel were the attorneys for Christ Johnston in an action brought by him against defendant to recover for personal injuries. Before the case came to trial, defendant settled with Johnston without the knowledge or consent of his attorneys. The terms of the settlement were these: Defendant agreed to pay Johnston $4,500 in cash, to reimburse him for any sum he should be compelled to pay his attorneys, to pay all hospital and doctors' bill, and to furnish him free of charge with an artificial leg when he was in condition to use one. The $4,500 was paid to Johnston, and the suit and cause of action compromised and settled.

The attorneys were employed by Johnston under a contingent-fee contract, by the terms of which they were to receive for their services 33½ per cent. of any amount recovered by settlement or suit. The contract provided that any moneys advanced by the attorneys for expenses were to be deducted from the gross amount received by settlement or suit. It also provided that no settlement was to be made without the consent of Johnston.

This proceeding was by a complaint or petition filed by the attorneys, and was entitled in the main action. The petition set forth in detail the contract between Johnston and the petitioners, the commencement of the personal-injury action, the settlement thereof, and its terms. Fraud was also alleged. Judgment against defendant for $2,000 and interest was demanded. Defendant filed an answer to the petition which, after admitting the commencement of the action and the settlement, proceeded to charge that petitioners were, and had been for a long time, engaged in "the business and conspiracy of unlawfully stirring up strife and contention and vexatious and speculative litigation between this defendant and persons having personal-injury claims against this defendant, and in discouraging and preventing the amicable compromise of said claims without litigation;" that petitioners, in soliciting and obtaining claims against defendant, traveled from place to place employed for such purpose a large number of laymen as agents and solicitors; that, for the purpose of obtaining cases against defendant, they have unlawfully paid to claimants large sums of money for the support and maintenance of claimants during the litigation; that they pay all costs and disbursements connected with litigation on the understanding with claimants that the latter, in case there is no recovery, shall not be liable therefor, and that petitioners will reimburse themselves, for the money so advanced, out of the proceeds of the litigation. The answer further charged petitioners with preventing the amicable settlement of claims by advising all claimants that they are entitled to sums of money greatly in excess of the actual damages suffered, thus unlawfully fomenting litigation against defendant. Thus far the charges made were general in their nature, and had no reference to this particular case. The answer then proceeded to allege that petitioners solicited the claim of Johnston, wrongfully persuaded him not to make an amicable settlement, by promising to obtain a recovery largely in excess of compensation, to advance large sums for his living expenses, and to pay all costs and expenses of the litigation, and to reimburse themselves solely out of the amount recovered from defendant. It was alleged that, had it not been for these representations and promises, the claim would have been amicably settled without suit for substantially the amount actually paid; that the unlawful conduct of petitioners in this case, and the whole course of unlawful conduct of the petitioners in soliciting and obtaining personal-injury cases against this defendant and other corporations, has resulted in constant, needless strife and contention between this defendant and its employees and other claimants, and has resulted in unnecessary vexatious, and speculative litigation, much to the detriment of this defendant and greatly to the prejudice of justice." In conclusion, the answer alleged that, by reason of the unlawful and champertous conduct of petitioners, they have no lien upon the cause of action settled by defendant, and further that their contract with Johnston was null and void, for champerty and maintenance and as against public policy. The reply was a general denial.

The court, on petitioners' motion, made an order vacating the settlement for the purpose of hearing and determining what fees should be paid by defendant to the attorneys for plaintiff. This matter was heard by the trial court without a jury. After petitioners established their contract with Johnston, the fact of the settlement, and that they had received no compensation, defendant called each of the petitioners for cross-examination, and attempted to prove by him the allegations of its answer. The court sustained objections to practically all questions asked and to numerous offers to prove the facts alleged, and the case was submitted for decision with no evidence in support of the defense. The court subsequently filed its decision finding the facts in favor of petitioners, and that the "other allegations" of the pleadings were untrue, and ordering judgment in favor of the petitioners and against defendant for $2,000 and interest.

The questions involved are these: (1) Did the court err in excluding the evidence offered by defendant in support of the allegations of its answer? (2) Did it err as to the amount petitioners are entitled to recover?

1. As to the ruling in sustaining objections to questions and offers relating to the conduct of petitioners in general, and in other cases, it is clear that these matters were wholly irrelevant to the issue,—petitioners' right to a lien in this particular case.

The facts offered to be proved that related to petitioners' conduct in the Johnston case were substantially these: (1) That they solicited Johnston's case; (2) that they paid money to Johnston for his support during the pendency of the litigation; (3) that they advised him not to settle the case.

Is conduct of this kind so against public policy that the courts will deny to attorneys guilty of it their statutory lien L.R.A.1917B.

on the client's cause of action? We freely concede that champerty or maintenance in a case may be ground for refusing the aid of the court in compelling compensation to the guilty attorneys. But is it champerty or maintenance or against public policy for an attorney to solicit business, to pay money to a poor client for his living expenses during the litigation, or to advise him against a settlement of his case? We may have our individual opinions on these propositions as questions of good taste or legal ethics. But in the absence of some statute, we are unable to hold that it is illegal or against public policy for an attorney to solicit a case. See concurring opinion of Justice Cauty in Gammons v. Johnson, 76 Minn. 76, 78 N. W. 1035. The practice of advancing money to the injured client with which to pay living expenses or hospital bills during the pendency of the case and while he is unable to earn anything may, in a sense, tend to foment litigation by preventing a settlement from necessity; but we are aware of no authority holding that it is against public policy, or of any sound reason why it should be so considered.

It is generally held that a person, whether an attorney or a layman, who furnishes assistance, by money or otherwise, to a poor man to enable him to carry on an action, is not guilty of maintenance. 6 Cyc. 865, and cases cited; Northwestern S. S. Co. v. Cochran, 111 C. C. A. 626, 191 Fed. 146. It is not against public policy for an attorney to loan his client money to enable him to carry on the suit. This is the utmost extent to which the offer of evidence went, and it was not error to sustain the objection.

As to the offer to prove that the petitioners advised Johnston against settling the case, representing that he was entitled to heavy damages, we know of no reason why this should be held contrary to public policy. Johnston did not agree not to make a settlement without the consent of his attorneys; indeed, the contract expressly provides that the attorneys shall not settle without his consent. The law favors the amicable settlement of controversies, and it is wrong for a lawyer to discourage settlements out of personal motives. But there was no offer to prove any such conduct in this case; indeed, the evidence shows pretty clearly that the petitioners advised and attempted to procure settlement.

2. Defendants argue that an agreement by an attorney to pay the expenses of litigation and reimburse himself from the proceeds of the action is void. But the contract in this case only provided that the attorneys might retain out of the amount recovered any moneys advanced for expenses. There was no offer to show an oral agreement that the attorneys were to support the litigation at their own expense or to indemnify the client against costs. The argument therefore fails, and the cases cited have no application. As before stated, an agreement to loan the client funds with which to carry on the suit or to maintain himself during its pendency is not regarded as per se opposed to public policy. It is only when the attorneys are to ultimately stand the costs, or when the client is indemnified from liability for them in case of no recovery, that the law declares the arrangement void. Huber v. Johnson, 68 Minn. 74, 64 Am. St. Rep. 456, 70 N. W. 806; 6 Cyc. 858, 865, and cases cited.

After a careful reading of the record, we find nothing in the evidence excluded that was material,—nothing that would have justified the trial court in refusing relief to petitioners. Nothing can be added to what has been said in prior decisions of this court on the subject of champerty and maintenance. Huber v. Johnson, supra; Gammons v. Johnson, 69 Minn. 488, 72 N. W. 563; id., 76 Minn. 76, 78 N. W. 1035; Gammons v. Gulbraunson, 78 Minn. 21, 80 N. W. 779; Holland v. Sheehan, 108 Minn. 362, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 510, 122 N. W. 1, 17 Ann. Cas. 687. These cases in no way touch the case at bar. There was no illegality in the written contract between Johnston and the petitioners, and no offer to prove any facts that would have made the contract illegal as against public policy.

3. Defendant insists that amount of the recovery if petitioners were entitled to anything, should have been $1,500 instead of $2,000. This is on the theory that the recovery by Johnson was $4,500, and that under the contract he would have been liable to his attorneys for but one third of this sum. But the contract of settlement was that defendant was to pay Johnston $4,500, and in addition to reimburse him for any sum he should be compelled to pay his attorneys. We do not add the hospital bills or the wooden leg. Under the contract between the attorneys and their client, he was to receive two thirds and they one third of the amount received or recovered of defendant. The $4,500 paid to Johnston was his two thirds of the total settlement. The one third of the attorneys would be $2,250. The court allowed $2,000, which was the sum demanded, and we think that defendant has no ground for complaint. The case of Schmitz v. South Covington & C. Street R. Co. 131 Ky. 207, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 777, 114 S. W. 1197, 18 Ann. Cas. 1114, does not seem logically sound and is criticized in the note thereto in 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 777. The question is somewhat perplexing, but we think it is fairly clear that the total amount of the settlement was not alone the $4,500 paid to Johnston, but that sum plus the amount he had agreed to pay his attorneys.

Order affirmed.

FLORIDA SUPREME COURT.

ARMANDO FLORES, Plff. in Err.,
v.
STATE OF FLORIDA.

(— Fla. —, 73 So. 234.)

Appeal — evidence — objection.

1. General objections to evidence are without weight in an appellate court, if the evidence is admissible for any purpose. For other cases, see Appeal and Error, V. a, 2, a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Evidence — bastardy — child.

2. In a bastardy proceeding, the exhibition of an infant three months old to the jury for the purpose of having the jury compare it with the defendant to detect resemblances between the infant and reputed father is error.

For other cases, see Evidence, V. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Trial — bastardy — damages.

3. In a bastardy proceeding, the amount which the statute requires the defendant to pay when the issue is found against him, for the necessary incidental expenses attending the birth, may be ascertained by the court without the intervention of the jury. For other cases, see Jury, I. b, 1, a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(November 21, 1916.)

Headnotes by ELLIS, J.

Note. — As to exhibition of child for purposes of determining paternity in bastardy proceedings, see annotation following this case, post, 1147.
L.R.A.1917B.

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Hillsborough County to review a judgment in favor of the state, in a bastardy proceeding. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Macfarlane & Chancey, for plaintiff in error:

In bastardy proceedings it is error to allow the infant to be introduced in the evidence and be viewed by the jury so as to enable them to judge, from the comparison of its appearance with that of the putative father, as to its paternity.

Clark v. Bradstreet, 80 Me. 454, 6 Am. St. Rep. 221, 15 Atl. 56; Copeland v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 40 S. W. 589; State v. Danforth, 48 Iowa, 43, 30 Am. Rep. 387; State v. Brathovde, 81 Minn. 501, 84 N. W. 340; Reitz v. State, 33 Ind. 187; Riak v. State, 19 Ind. 152; Robnett v. People, 16 Ill. App. 299; Hanawalt v. State, 64 Wis. 84, 54 Am. Rep. 588, 24 N. W. 489, 6 Am. Crim. Rep. 65; Overlock v. Hall, 81 Me. 348, 17 Atl. 169; Hilton v. State, 41 Tex. Crim. Rep. 190, 53 S. W. 113; State v. Harvey, 112 Iowa, 416, 52 L.R.A. 500, 84 Am. St. Rep. 350, 84 N. W. 535; State v. Smith, 54 Iowa, 104, 37 Am. Rep. 192, 6 N. W. 153; Kenniston v. Rowe, 16 Me. 38; Shorten v. Judd, 56 Kan. 43, 64 Am. St. Rep. 587, 42 Pac. 337; People ex rel. Fuller v. Carney, 29 Hun, 47; State v. Neel, 23 Utah, 541, 65 Pac. 494; United States v. Collins, 1 Cranch, C. C. 592, Fed. Cas. No. 14,835.

Where damages are indeterminate, the amount of such damages suffered by the plaintiff as expenses incidental to the birth of her bastard child is a question of fact, and a fact about which there is likely to be decided dispute, hence a fact for the jury.

Davis v. Pitman, Hempst. 44, Fed. Cas. No. 3,647a; Bayly v. London & L. Ins. Co. Fed. Cas. No. 1,145; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Davis, 99 Ala. 593, 12 So. 786; Mammoth Springs Roller-Mill Co. v. Ellston, — Ark. —, 22 S. W. 344; King v. Southern P. Co. 109 Cal. 96, 29 L.R.A. 755, 41 Pac. 786; Wall v. Livezey, 6 Colo. 465; Culver v. Webb, 12 Conn. 441; District of Columbia v. Johnson, 1 Mackey, 51; Parkhurst v. Stone, 36 Fla. 463, 18 So. 596; Sunman v. Clerk, 120 Ind. 142, 22 N. E. 113; Wiley v. Arnold, 1 G. Greene (Iowa) 365; D. M. Osborne & Co. v. Stassen, 25 Kan. 736; Wichita & W. R. Co. v. Feckheimer, 36 Kan. 42, 12 Pac. 362; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Bates, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 617; Shumway v. Walworth & N. Mfg. Co. 98 Mich. 411, 57 N. W. 251, 15 Am. Neg. Cas. 10; Hitchcock v. Supreme Tent, K. M. 100 Mich. 40, 43 Am. St. Rep. 423, 58 N. W. 640; Fell v. Newberry, 106 Mich. 542, 64 N. W. 474; Barrett v. Grand Rapids Veneer Works, 110 Mich. 6, 67 N. W. 976; Steinberg v. Gebhardt, 41 Mo. 519; Mooney v. Third Ave. R. Co. 2 N. Y. City Ct. Rep. 366; Reading City Pass R. Co. v. Eckert, 2 Sadler (Pa.) L.R.A.1917B.

431, 4 Atl. 530; Hart v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. 33 S. C. 427, 10 L.R.A. 794, 12 S. E. 9; Galveston Wharf Co. v. McYoung, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) 560, 643; Norman v. Heist, 5 Watts & S. 171, 40 Am. Dec. 493; Taylor v. Porter, 4 Hill, 145, 40 Am. Dec. 274; Hoke v. Henderson, 15 N. C. (4 Dev. L.) 15, 25 Am. Dec. 677; Story, Const. 661; Jones v. Perry, 10 Yerg. 59, 30 Am. Dec. 430; 2 Co. Inst. 45-50; Wilkinson v. Leland, 2 Pet. 657, 7 L. ed. 553.

The amount of damages, not being capable of measurement by any precise rule, is left to the discretion of the jury on the circumstances of each particular case, subject to the power of the court to set aside the verdict when it appears that the jury has been misled or influenced by passion or prejudice.

Southard v. Rexford, 6 Cow. 254; Wilbur v. Johnson, 58 Mo. 600; Holloway v. Griffith, 32 Iowa, 409, 7 Am. Rep. 208; Lawrence v. Cooke, 56 Me. 187, 96 Am. Dec. 443; Goodall v. Thurman, 1 Head, 209; Denslow v. Van Horn, 16 Iowa, 476; Richmond v. Roberts, 98 Ill. 472; Schreckengast v. Ealy, 16 Neb. 510, 20 N. W. 853; Musselman v. Barker, 26 Neb. 737, 42 N. W. 759; Kelley v. Highfield, 15 Or. 277, 14 Pac. 744; Daggett v. Wallace, 75 Tex. 352, 16 Am. St. Rep. 908, 13 S. W. 49; Giese v. Schultz, 69 Wis. 521, 34 N. W. 913; Olson v. Solverson, 71 Wis. 663, 38 N. W. 329; Mahiat v. Codde, 106 Mich. 387, 64 N. W. 194; Liese v. Meyer, 143 Mo. 547, 45 S. W. 282; Brown v. Odill, 104 Tenn. 250, 52 L.R.A. 660, 78 Am. St. Rep. 914, 56 S. W. 840; Hooker v. Phillippe, 26 Ind. App. 501, 60 N. E. 167; Lohner v. Coldwell, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 444, 39 S. W. 591; Wilbur v. Johnson, 58 Mo. 600; Collins v. Mack, 31 Ark. 684; Douglas v. Gausman, 68 Ill. 170; Wolters v. Schultz, 1 Misc. 196, 21 N. Y. Supp. 768.

Messrs. T. F. West, Attorney General, and C. O. Andrews, Assistant Attorney General, for the State:

A child may be exhibited to the jury as evidence of alleged paternity.

3 R. C. L. p. 764; Kelly v. State, 133 Ala. 195, 91 Am. St. Rep. 25, 32 So. 56; Land v. State, 84 Ark. 199, 120 Am. St. Rep. 25, 105 S. W. 90; Shailer v. Bullock, 78 Conn. 65, 112 Am. St. Rep. 87, 61 Atl. 65; State v. Saidell, 70 N. H. 174, 35 Am. St. Rep. 627, 46 Atl. 1083; State ex rel. Stubblefield v. Woodruff, 67 N. C. 89; Scott v. Donovan, 153 Mass. 378, 26 N. E. 871; Gaunt v. State, 50 N. J. L. 490, 14 Atl. 600, 8 Am. Crim. Rep. 297; Anderson v. Aupperle, 51 Or. 556, 95 Pac. 330; Adams v. State, 93 Ark. 260, 137 Am. St. Rep. 87, 124 S. W. 766; Gilmanton v. Ham, 38 N. H. 108; Crow v. Jordan, 49 Ohio St. 655, 32 N. E. 750.

The trial court had authority to fix the amount of the incidental expenses attending the birth of the child.

Andrew G. v. Catherine A. 16 Fla. 830; John D. C. v. State, 16 Fla. 554; C. T. v. State, 21 Fla. 171.

Ellis, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a bastardy proceeding in which the plaintiff in error, who was the defendant below, was adjudged to pay to J. G., the mother of the bastard child, the sum of $50 yearly for a period of ten years for the support, maintenance, and education of the child, and the incidental expenses attending the birth of the child, which amounted to $67. There was evidence to show that the expenses attending the birth of the child amounted to that sum. The jury, however, did not assess any damages. The verdict simply found the defendant below, Armando Flores, to be the father of the bastard child of J. G.

To that judgment a writ of error was taken and four errors assigned. Two points of law are presented by the record and argued by counsel.

At the trial the mother of the child, over the defendant's objection, was permitted to exhibit the infant to the jury for the purpose of having the jury compare it with the defendant and consider its resemblance to the alleged father, if any, in determining its paternity.

At the time of the trial the child was within a few days of being three months old. It was insisted by the defendant's counsel that the exhibition of the child to the jury for the purpose above stated was "illegal and contrary to law;" that the evidence was "immaterial and irrelevant," and would tend to prejudice the jury against the defendant. These objections were most general in character, and, according to the rule frequently announced by the court, are entitled to little consideration, if the evidence was admissible for any purpose whatsoever. Lewis v. State, 55 Fla. 54, 45 So. 998; Putnal v. State, 56 Fla. 86, 47 So. 864; Danson v. State, 62 Fla. 29, 56 So. 677.

The evidence, as shown by the bill of exceptions, consisted of the testimony of the mother of the child, who said that she was twenty-eight years of age, was born in Spain, and that the defendant was the father of her child; that the child was born in February, 1916, and that the illicit intercourse between the mother and the defendant began in May, 1915, while the mother was employed as a maid in a lodging house where the defendant and ten or twelve other men had rooms; the testimony of a witness by the name of Balma Ceida, who said that the expenses attending the birth of the child amounted to $57; the testimony of the defendant, who denied that he ever had sexual intercourse with the child's mother, and the exhibition of the child before the jury. The introduction of the infant in evidence that the jury might compare it with the defendant and consider its resemblance to the putative father, if there was any resemblance, in determining the paternity of the child, might have had a strong influence upon the minds of the jury in arriving at the verdict which they rendered.

What comparisons were made by the jury between the child and the putative father we have no means of knowing; the record does not disclose, nor indeed could it disclose, what resemblances, actual or fancied, the jury perceived between the child and the defendant. There may have been resemblances between the defendant and the child in the color of the eyes and hair, the shape of the ears, nose, mouth, and hands, and other features; on the other hand such resemblances may have been imaginary, purely notional, and, if opportunity for so doing had been given the defendant, any fancied or imaginary resemblance might have been easily dispelled by close and careful comparison. The defendant, however, could not know what comparison each juror made when the child was exhibited. What to the defendant might have appeared as a dissimilarity to one or more jurors might have appeared as a striking resemblance, while other jurors, ignoring this one point of resemblance, might have discovered others which they fancied existed, and so the verdict may have rested, in a large measure, upon the variant opinions of the jurors based on facts not established by evidence, but which existed in the minds of the jurors as they severally fancied this or that resemblance between the child and the putative father to appear. As Mr. Justice Ladd, of the supreme court of Iowa, in State v. Harvey, 112 Iowa, 416, 52 L.R.A. 500, 84 Am. St. Rep. 350, 84 N. W. 535, said: "How could a new trial be ordered because of the insufficiency of evidence in such a case?"

In the case at bar the child was exhibited to the jury, not for the purpose of showing any peculiarity of color or features, but merely to show a resemblance between it and its putative father, which was a matter of opinion, and that resting not upon any specific fact, but a vague, uncertain, and perhaps fancied resemblance of the immature features of the child to those of the defendant.

An examination of the decisions of the courts of last resort in other jurisdictions reveals nothing more than that the courts are in irreconcilable conflict upon the question of the admissibility of such evidence. On the one hand, it is maintained that while it may be a well-known physiological fact that peculiarities of form, feature, and personal traits are oftentimes transmitted from parent to child, it is equally true as a matter of common knowledge that during the first few months of a child's existence it has that peculiar immaturity of feature which characterizes it as an infant, and that it changes often and very much in looks and appearance during that period. On the other hand, it is maintained that the weight to be given to such evidence is for the jury, and its weakness or uncertainty affords no reason for excluding it. This summing up of the decisions in this country upon the question is contained in 3 R. C. L. p. 764, from the text of which the above language is taken. Our examination of the authorities referred to in the footnotes to the above citation, and those referred to in the briefs of counsel and found by our research, convince us of the conflict of opinion on the question of the admissibility of such evidence where the child exhibited is only three months old when no question of the race or color of the bastard child's father is involved, but even in such case the child is exhibited to the jury to show some peculiarity of features or color, and not for the purpose of general comparison to discover resemblance between it and the defendant.

Mr. Wigmore in his work on evidence says that the sound rule is to admit the fact of similarity of specific traits, however presented, provided the child is, in the opinion of the trial court, old enough to possess settled features or other corporal indications. 1 Wigmore, Ev. p. 222. We think that this rule is supported by the better reason, and is the one that should be followed in the absence of any statute permitting the exhibition to the jury of a child of whatever age in bastardy or other proceedings involving the paternity of the child, to the end that the jury may make its own comparisons and form its own conclusions as to particular or general resemblances.

If the rule as suggested by Mr. Wigmore is followed, the objection to the evidence on account of its inherent weakness and unreliability would be largely, if not entirely, removed. In the first place the trial court would have passed upon the question as to whether the child possessed features or other corporal indications of sufficient development to permit a comparison between them and those of the defendant; in the second place, the particular features or other corporal traits claimed to be possessed by the child would be by the adoption of the rule brought specifically to the jurors' attention, and the comparison made with reference only to such features or corporal traits. It seems to us that to permit an issue of such grave consequences to be determined against a defendant in a bastardy proceeding upon the imaginary, fancied, or notional general resemblance between a child of a week old, or even a few months old, and the defendant in such proceedings would be to place the defendant at a disadvantage which he could not possibly overcome. His counsel could only guess at the point of similarity which the jury might perceive and on which it might determine the issue, and he would be deprived utterly of the right to a review of the evidence by an appellate court.

In the case of Adams v. State, 93 Ark. 260, 137 Am. St. Rep. 87, 124 S. W. 766, the court quotes approvingly the rule as laid down by Wigmore and quoted above, but in its conclusion departs from the rule upon the authority of the dictum of the supreme court of Alabama in the case of Paulk v. State, 52 Ala. 427, 1 Am. Crim. Rep. 67. In the case of Kelly v. State, 133 Ala. 195, 91 Am. St. Rep. 25, 32 So. 56, the court expressly announced that it followed the dicta in the Paulk Case and Linton v. State, 88 Ala. 216, 7 So. 261, but in the latter case the question was one of race, and not of resemblances. The case of Wright v. Hicks, 15 Ga. 160, 60 Am. Dec. 687, the other case relied upon in the case of Adams v. State, supra, does not support the rule announced in the latter case. In the case of Rex v. Hughes, 22 Ont. L. Rep. 344, 19 Ann. Cas. 534, the court said: "It has long been the practice of the courts of this province to permit the production of the child at the trial and the pointing out to the jury of the likeness of the child to the defendant," and "it ought to be within the power of the court to prevent an abuse of the practice, though I think it would be better and more regular if the likeness were testified to by some witnesses in all cases; otherwise a court of appeal is at a great disadvantage if called upon to deal in any way with such evidence, as well as for other reasons."

In the case of State ex rel. Stubblefield v. Woodruff, 67 N. C. 89, the child was exhibited to the jury with the full approbation of the defendant, and in the case of State v. Britt, 78 N. C. 439, the defendant offered to show by the midwife that the child bore a resemblance to a man other than the defendant. This was held admissible, the court citing the case of State v. Woodruff, supra, as a precedent for the admissibility of such evidence. In the case of Anderson v. Aupperle, 51 Or. 556, 95 Pac. 330, the case was an action for seduction. The child, being a little under three months of age, was offered and received in evidence for the inspection of the jury over the defendant's objection. The court held the evidence admissible upon the authority of State v. Danforth, 73 N. H. 215, 111 Am. St. Rep. 600, 60 Atl. 839, 6 Ann. Cas. 557. In that case the state was permitted to exhibit the child to the jury, and to argue from peculiarities of features claimed to be common to the child and the defendant and from a general resemblance between them. After verdict the defendant moved to set the same aside and for a new trial on the ground of alleged misconduct of the state's counsel. The court, after discussing the practice at some length, quoted approvingly the rule as laid down by Wigmore referred to above, but said: "Whether it should be here followed is a question which the present case does not raise for decision."

In the case at bar, however, the question is presented, and we think the rule should have been followed. 1 Wigmore, Ev. supra; State v. Smith, 54 Iowa, 104, 37 Am. Rep. 192, 6 N. W. 153; State v. Danforth, 48 Iowa, 43, 30 Am. Rep. 387; State v. Harvey, 112 Iowa, 416, 52 L.R.A. 500, 84 Am. St. Rep. 350, 84 N. W. 535; Robnett v. People, 16 Ill. App. 299; Hanawalt v. State, 64 Wis. 84, 54 Am. Rep. 588, 24 N. W. 480, 6 Am. Crim. Rep. 65; State v. Neel, 23 Utah, 541, 65 Pac. 494; Clark v. Bradstreet, 80 Me. 454, 6 Am. St. Rep. 221, 15 Atl. 56; Reitz v. State, 33 Ind. 187; Overlock v. Hall, 81 Me. 348, 17 Atl. 169. The exhibition of the child to the jury for the purpose of having the jury compare it with the defendant and consider its resemblance, if any, in determining its paternity, was prejudicial error, and for that reason the judgment should be reversed.

It is contended by plaintiff in error that the court erred in entering judgment against the defendant below in the sum of $57 on the verdict of the jury. The verdict of the jury was as follows: "We, the jury, find the defendant, Armando Flores, is the father of the bastard child of Juana Gonzales, so say we all"—and was signed by L.R.A.1917B.

the foreman. The jury did not determine the amount of the necessary incidental expenses attending the birth of the child, although there was evidence that such expense amounted to $57.

The plaintiff in error contends that the jury should have assessed the amount of the damages, and that if the statute contemplates the ascertainment of the amount to be paid by the defendant on account of such expense and the inclusion of it in the judgment, it is unconstitutional because it deprives the defendant of his right to a trial by jury as to the amount of such expenses.

A bastardy proceeding is a civil action in the circuit court. The statute was not designed to punish the accused for crime, but to make him contribute to the support of the child. William H. T. v. State, 18 Fla. 883; Ex parte Hays, 25 Fla. 279, 6 So. 64; Bond v. State, 34 Fla. 45, 15 So. 591. But it is a civil procedure to enforce a police regulation designed to secure immunity of the public from the child's support. See State v. Wynne, 116 N. C. 981, 21 S. E. 35; Myers v. Baughman, 61 Neb. 818, 86 N. W. 507; Davis v. Carpenter, 172 Mass. 167, 51 N. E. 530; 7 C. J. p. 967, and authorities cited.

The amount which the defendant is condemned to pay, when the issue is found against him, towards the support, maintenance, and education of the child, is limited by the statute within a certain maximum, and is in the nature of a penalty, and is not affected by the actual pecuniary damage which the mother of the child may suffer or incur; it is fixed by law within certain limits; but the necessary incidental expenses attending the birth of the child is a question of fact (Andrew G. v. Catherine A. 16 Fla. 830), which the court may ascertain after the verdict against the defendant upon the issue which the statute requires to be submitted. Hamilton v. State, 117 Ind. 348, 20 N. E. 252; Scott v. State, 102 Ind. 277, 1 N. E. 691. In the last case cited the court said that the trial proper ends with the finding that the defendant is the father of the child, and if there was error as to the amount of the judgment, it would not result in a reversal of the entire judgment, but simply in a remanding of the case, with instructions to hear the evidence and render the proper judgment. The matter of ascertaining the necessary expenses attending the birth of the child, which expense the statute imposes as a consequence following the verdict against the defendant, is in the nature of ascertaining the costs of the proceeding, which the court, however, should not arbitrarily fix, but should ascertain upon evidence. There was evidence taken during the trial as to such expenses, and we can see no reason why the court should not have utilized that evidence in arriving at the amount of the expense. There was no error in the judgment on that account.

For the error pointed out, the judgment is reversed.

Taylor, Ch. J., and Shackelford, Cockrell, and Whitfield, JJ., concur.

Annotation—Exhibition of child for purposes of determining paternity in bastardy proceedings.

Generally as to resemblance as evidence of relationship, see note to State ex rel. Scott v. Harvey, 52 L.R.A. 500, wherein at page 502 will be found the earlier cases upon the present question, the following annotation including only those cases decided subsequent to the compilation of that note.

As to use of photographs as evidence, see note in 35 L.R.A. 805, and supplementary annotation in 51 L.R.A. (N.S.) 850. Cases involving the admission of such evidence to show likeness of parent and child will be found at page 806 of the earlier note.

As is stated in the earlier note, there is a decided conflict of authority upon the question of the propriety of allowing an alleged bastard child to be exhibited to the jury for the purpose of determining paternity, with, perhaps, the weight of authority in favor of allowing such exhibition. Some courts, however, have refused to permit profert where the child is too young to possess settled features or other corporal indications which afford a reasonable basis for comparison with the alleged father, the conclusions in such cases being based upon the inherent weakness of such evidence.

Thus it has been held in a number of recent cases that in bastardy proceedings profert may be made of the child for the purpose of showing a resemblance of features between it and the alleged father. Kelly v. State (1901) 133 Ala. 195, 91 Am. St. Rep. 25, 32 So. 56 (child less than one year old); Brantley v. State (1914) 11 Ala. App. 144, 65 So. 678 (child born after prosecution was commenced, but before trial); Land v. State (1907) 84 Ark. 199, 120 Am. St. Rep. 25, 105 S. W. 90; Shailer v. Bullock (1905) 78 Conn. 65, 112 Am. St. Rep. 87, 61 Atl. 65 (child ten months old); Higley v. Bostick (1906) 79 Conn. 97, 63 Atl. 786 (child nearly one year old); Sims v. State (1915) 16 Ga. App. 211, 84 S. E. 976, holding that the weight of authority is in favor of the rule allowing exhibition of the child and that L.R.A.1917B.

no ground for declaring a mistrial was established by the fact that "the babies" were shown to the jury at the request of one of the jurors after the case had been given to the jury, and no objection was made to such proceeding until after the jury had retired to make up its verdict; Smith v. Hawkins (1908) 93 Miss. 588, 47 So. 429 (age of child not shown). And see Com. v. Pearl (1907) 33 Pa. Super. Ct. 97, wherein it was held that prejudicial error was not committed either by the district attorney in taking the child, then sixteen months old, in his arms and commenting upon its resemblance to the defendant, or by the court in directing the jury that, while the child was not offered as an exhibit, it was in the case, and that if there was any resemblance between the child and the defendant which was apparent to the jury it was at liberty to take it into consideration; and State ex rel. Berg v. Patterson (1904) 18 S. D. 251, 100 N. W. 162, wherein it was held that it was not error for the prosecutrix' attorney to call the attention of the jury to the alleged bastard, which was in court without objection, where the defendant's attorney had introduced a photograph of it and discussed it to the jury. However, the courts which adhere to this rule admit that much may be said of the uncertainty of such evidence, but maintain that it should not be rejected merely on the ground that its bearing is not of a given degree of certainty, but rather that, even though it may in point of fact often throw little or no light upon the point in issue, it should be submitted for the jury's consideration as affording in most cases the basis for reasonable deductions on their part. See Kelly v. State (1901) 133 Ala. 195, 91 Am. St. Rep. 25, 32 So. 56, and Shailer v. Bullock (1905) 78 Conn. 65, 112 Am. St. Rep. 87, 61 Atl. 65, holding that upon "good grounds" such evidence is of probative value.

But, as above stated, some courts maintain that the true rule is that the similarity of specific traits or peculiarities of features may be shown, but that the child should not be exhibited for purposes of general comparison where it is not old enough to possess settled features or other corporal indications. It was expressly so held in FLORES v. STATE, ante, 1143, where the exhibition of an infant three months old to the jury for the purpose of having the jury compare it with the alleged father to detect resemblances was declared to be prejudicial error. And in State ex rel. Rison v. Browning (1915) 96 Kan. 540, 152 Pac. 672, in discussing the rule that a child may be exhibited where it has some permanency of features, but otherwise where the exhibition could be of no value, the court said that "there are instances in which physical characteristics of a father are stamped upon his child so definitely that they distinctly appear at birth, or even before birth. In some instances resemblances may not appear until late in the course of the child's independent development, and in still other instances resemblances may never appear with recognizable certainty. Sometimes a child may strongly resemble one not its father, and not related to it. The result is that the evidence of paternity furnished by the features of the child may be strong or weak or inconclusive or worthless,"—and held that where the trial court in its discretion had permitted a child about five months old to be exhibited to the jury, it did not feel warranted in reversing the judgment, the presumption on appeal being that the jury gave it no more weight than it was entitled to receive. So in State v. Brathovde (1900) 81 Minn. 501, 84 N. W. 340, it was held improper for the prosecuting attorney to call the attention of the jury to any supposed resemblances of the child, which was only about three months old, to the defendant, but that a new trial would not be ordered, as the counsel for defendant had immediately objected and the trial court had directed the jury to wholly disregard such improper remarks. The court said that, to say the least, such conduct was inexcusable, and that the legal representatives should depend upon substantial credible evidence, and not seek to influence the jury by calling attention to the mobile features of a babe in arms. And see State ex rel. Mundt v. Meier (1908) 140 Iowa, 540, 118 N. W. 792, wherein it was held error which could not be cured by an objection for the plaintiff's counsel in his L.R.A.1917B.

argument to take the child, then about one year old, in his arms and comment upon the resemblance which it bore to defendant. This decision cited with approval the cases of State ex rel. Scott v. Harvey (1900) 52 L.R.A. 500, and State v. Danforth (1878) 48 Iowa, 43, 30 Am. Rep. 387, which is set out in the note appended to the Harvey Case, in the former of which the exhibition of a child nine months old for the purpose of showing its resemblance to the defendant was held error, and in the latter of which it was held that the resemblance of a child three months old to its father was too indistinct and uncertain to warrant the exhibition thereof in an action against its putative father for seduction. It is also of interest in this connection that the court in the Harvey Case refused to extend to that case the rule of State v. Smith (1880) 54 Iowa, 104, 37 Am. Rep. 192, 6 N. W. 153 (set out in note in 52 L.R.A. 504), to the effect that a child may be exhibited to the jury in a bastardy proceeding as evidence of paternity where it has attained an age when its features have assumed some degree of maturity or permanency, and under which a child two years and one month old was allowed to be exhibited to the jury.

Where the rule is adopted which permits exhibition of the child where there is maturity and permanency of features, but not where the features are very immature and unsettled, it has been said that no arbitrary age limit for the exhibition of a child can be fixed, but that it is the province of the trial court to exercise its discretion in the matter, and that the exhibition should be allowed if same would appreciably tend to promote the purpose of the proceeding, but that if the court should be satisfied that no substantial advancement toward the truth would result from the exhibition, it should be forbidden. State ex rel. Rison v. Browning (1915) 96 Kan. 540, 152 Pac. 672. And see Stahl v. State (1903) 67 Kan. 864, 74 Pac. 238, wherein it was held that the error, if any, of the trial court in refusing to require the relatrix to produce the child in court was cured where subsequently the child was exhibited to the jury and their attention called to it.

Of course where a child is rightfully exhibited to the jury as proof of paternity, counsel are at liberty to discuss the subject to the jury. Ibid.

Closely allied to the foregoing cases are those which have involved the question of the right of the prosecuting witness to bring the alleged bastard into court, and to take it on the stand with her while testifying, the rule being that such conduct is permissible. Thus even in Iowa, where the courts refuse to allow a child so immature as to have unsettled features to be tendered in evidence or exhibited to the jury in argument, it has been broadly maintained that there is no rule which requires the separation of mother and child while in the court room or even on the stand. See State v. Stark (1911) 149 Iowa, 749, 129 N. W. 331, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 362 (in this case, however, the child was nearly two years old, no objection was made to its presence, and the jury was cautioned against considering or discussing any supposed or fancied resemblance or non-resemblance between it and the defendant). And in Rose v. People (1899) 81 Ill. App. 128, it was held not to be prejudicial error for the court as against an objection to permit the child to remain in the court room in the presence of the jury; it not appearing that it was either given in evidence or exhibited to the jury, or in any manner referred to by the prosecution in the presence of the jury. So, in Esch v. Graue (1904) 72 Neb. 719, 101 N. W. 978, it was held that the refusal of the trial court to order that the child, which was less than five months old, be removed from the court room, was not erroneous, the child neither having been exhibited to the jury nor its attention called to it. And in People use of Dunn v. Moore (1914)

188 Ill. App. 418, it was held neither improper to have the child present in the court room nor prejudicial in that prosecutrix sat near the jury with the child, where the court, on objection of defendant's counsel, required her to remove with the child to another part of the room, and it appearing that there was no effort made to exhibit the child to the jury for their critical examination. And in Johnson v. State (1907) 133 Wis. 453, 133 N. W. 674, it was held that the trial court did not err in merely permitting the complaining witness to hold the alleged bastard child in her arms on exhibition before the jury while giving her testimony, where there was no attempt made to offer the baby in evidence or exhibit it to the jury. And in Benes v. People (1905) 121 Ill. App. 103, it was held that it was no error for the court to permit the prosecutrix to bring the alleged bastard, which was eight months old, into the court room and take it with her to the stand while testifying, it being too young to be left alone, and no one being provided to take care of it, although the defendant's attorney objected to its presence. And see Johnson v. Walker (1905) 86 Miss. 757, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 470, 109 Am. St. Rep. 733, 39 So. 49, wherein it was held that merely bringing the child into the court room was not reversible error where it was immediately removed without the attention of the jury being called to it, or any reference being made to it in the presence of the jury. G. J. C.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

CHARLOTTE O. MCDOLE, Appt.,
v.
LUELLA THURM et al.

(— Ill. —, 114 N. E. 542.)

Will — devise to illegal wife.

1. A devise in favor of the woman with whom testator was living as his wife is not void because the marriage between them occurred within the prohibited time after she was divorced from another.

For other cases, see Wills, I. a, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Note. — For annotation of the question whether a devise or bequest to one described as husband or wife is affected by the illegality or nonexistence of marriage, see annotation following this case, post, 1152.

For annotation of the question whether L.R.A.1917B.

Same — mistake in relationship — effect.

2. That testator's marriage to a woman with whom he lived as his wife was invalid, because it occurred within the prohibited time after her divorce from another, does not render a devise to her by name as his wife void on the theory that he acted under an erroneous impression as to her relationship to him.

For other cases, see Wills, III. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(December 21, 1916.)

APPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Circuit Court for Lee County the right of a beneficiary of a life insurance policy, described as the husband or wife of the insured, is affected by the illegality or nonexistence of their marriage, see note in 47 L.R.A. (N.S.) 189, on "Insurance on life in favor of paramour."

sustaining a demurrer to and dismissing a bill filed to construe the will of complainant's deceased father. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Dixon & Dixon and Ray T. Luney, for appellant:

Neither party to a divorce shall marry again within one year, and a pretended marriage ceremony, performed in another state, for the purpose of evading the provisions of the laws of this state, will not be recognized in this state for any purpose.

Wilson v. Cook, 256 Ill. 460, 43 L.R.A. (N.S.) 365, 100 N. E. 222; Nehring v. Nehring, 164 Ill. App. 527; Szlausz v. Szlausz, 255 Ill. 314, L.R.A.1916C, 741, 99 N. E. 640, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 454; Snell v. Snell, 191 Ill. App. 239.

A gift in a will to "my wife" is a gift to her as testator's wife, and if she failed to answer that description, the gift to her would fail.

Collard v. Collard, — N. J. —, 67 Atl. 190; Kennell v. Abbott, 4 Ves. Jr. 802, 31 Eng. Reprint, 416, 4 Revised Rep. 351, 25 Eng. Rul. Cas. 480; Wilkinson v. Joughin, L. R. 2 Eq. 319, 35 L. J. Ch. N. S. 684, 12 Jur. N. S. 330, 14 L. T. N. S. 394; 4 Gray, Cases on Property, 133, 143; 2 Jarman, Wills, 5th Am. ed. 576.

A gift in a will to "my wife" means "lawful wife," the same as a gift in a will to "my children" means "legitimate children."

Vaughan v. Dalton-Lard Lumber Co. 119 La. 61, 43 So. 926; Thompson v. Lewiston Daily Sun Pub. Co. 91 Me. 528, 39 Atl. 556; United States v. Tenney, 2 Ariz. 29, 8 Pac. 295; Names v. State, 20 Ind. App. 168, 50 N. E. 401; Richard v. Lazard, 108 La. 540, 32 So. 559; Re Harris, 152 App. Div. 52, 136 N. Y. Supp. 712; Kemper v. Fort, 219 Pa. 85, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 820, 123 Am. St. Rep. 623, 67 Atl. 991, 12 Ann. Cas. 1022; Bealafeld v. Slaughenhaupt, 213 Pa. 565, 62 Atl. 1113; Brisbin v. Huntington, 128 Iowa, 166, 103 N. W. 144, 5 Ann. Cas. 931.

Mr. H. A. Brooks, for appellees:

A will devising property to a man's wife, naming her, vests title in the woman named and designated as wife, though it is shown in the bill to construe the will, and by the evidence, that the marriage is void, provided it is shown by the will or by extrinsic evidence that the woman named as wife was the person claiming to be a devisee under the will.

Brack v. Boyd, 202 Ill. 440, 66 N. E. 1073; Peet v. Peet, 229 Ill. 354, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 780, 82 N. E. 376, 11 Ann. Cas. 402; Bradley v. Rees, 113 Ill. 327, 55 Am. Rep. 422; Giger v. Busch, 122 Ill. App. 13; Marks v. Marks, 40 Can. S. C. 210, 12 L.R.A.1917B.

Ann. Cas. 751; Pastene v. Bonini, 106 Mass. 85, 44 N. E. 246; Dicke v. Wagner, 95 Wis. 260, 70 N. W. 159; Hardy v. Smith, 136 Mass. 328; Prentice v. Achorn, 2 Paige, 30; Klein v. Hayck, 5 Redf. 210; Powers v. McEachern, 7 S. C. 290; Doe ex dem. Gains v. Rouse, 5 C. B. 422, 136 Eng. Reprint, 942, 17 L. J. C. P. N. S. 108, 12 Jur. 99; Page, Wills, § 511, p. 598; 40 Cyc. 1456; Re Wagstaff [1908] 1 Ch. 162, 4 B. R. C. 50, 98 L. T. N. S. 149, 77 L. J. Ch. N. S. 190, 24 Times L. R. 136; Hitchcock v. Home Missions, 259 Ill. 288, 102 N. E. 741, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 1.

A misnomer or misdescription of a legatee or devisee, whether a natural person or a corporation, will not invalidate the provisions of a will in which it is found, if, from the will itself, or extrinsic evidence, the object of the testator's bounty can be ascertained.

Goodwin v. New Church Bd. of Publication, 160 Ill. App. 483; Missionary Soc. v. Cadwell, 69 Ill. App. 280; Woman's Union Missionary Soc. v. Mead, 13 Ill. 338, 23 N. E. 603.

Carter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a bill filed by appellant in the circuit court of Lee county to construe the will of Fred Heavens, deceased. A demurrer to the bill was sustained, and a decree was entered dismissing the bill for want of equity. From that decree this appeal was prayed.

From the allegations of the bill and the exhibits attached and made a part thereof, it appears that the deceased, Fred Heavens, executed his last will and testament on January 18, 1916. The will, after directing that his just debts and funeral expenses be paid, provided: "I give, devise and bequeath my watch to my grandson, Fred McDole, my bookcase to my daughter, Charlotte McDole. All my other goods and chattels to my wife, Luella Heavens, to be in lieu of dower and widow's award. I also give and devise unto my wife, Luella Heavens, the premises on Boyd street, Dixon, Illinois, 50x160 feet, to have and enjoy for her natural life, but upon her death, or when she remarries, the said premises I devise to my daughter, Charlotte McDole, if she shall then be living, and if not, to her children then living, in equal parts. Lastly, I direct my executor to sell my vacant lot on North Galena avenue, in Dixon, at public or private sale and out of the proceeds to pay all debts and expenses and mortgage thereon, and the balance of said proceeds I give unto my wife, Luella Heavens."

The will named Robert H. Scott, or, in case he did not act, Luella Heavens, as executor, and revoked all former wills and codicils made by the testator.

It appears from the allegations of the bill that Luella Thurm was a resident of Dixon, Illinois, in 1907, and in September of that year obtained a decree in the circuit court of Lee county granting her a divorce from her husband; that at that time Heavens was a widower, residing in said city of Dixon; that on December 23, 1907, Luella Thurm and Fred Heavens went to Clinton, Iowa, and then and there were united in marriage; that said marriage ceremony was in violation of the statute of Illinois of 1905, providing that neither party to a divorce shall be remarried within one year from the time of the decree of divorce. From the record and briefs before us it appears that Heavens and Luella Thurm returned to Dixon and lived together as man and wife until Heavens died, and that his last will and testament was admitted to probate in said county February 28, 1916; that the only child surviving him was his daughter, appellant herein, who, at the time of her father's death, had two children living, Fred McDole and Olive McDole.

Counsel for appellant contend that it is clear from this record that testator, Fred Heavens, thought that he was legally married to appellee Luella Thurm, and that the presumption must be that he made the gift to her under the erroneous impression that the marriage was valid, and that it cannot be told how he would have drawn the will had he known the marriage was invalid. It is a reasonable presumption, from the record before us that he knew of her former marriage and her recent divorce at the time when the marriage ceremony between them was performed. There can be no question, under the law, that testator could have left this property to Luella Thurm, even conceding that they were not legally married, and conceding that he knew the marriage ceremony between them was invalid. The rights of Luella Thurm are to be determined by the intention of the testator, and not as to whether public policy or good morals demand that a divorced person shall not remarry within a year from the date of the divorce. However unlawful such conduct may be, it is not the duty of courts of equity to deprive persons of their civil rights to punish them for immoral conduct. Hardy v. Smith, 136 Mass. 328; Prentice v. Achorn, 2 Paige, 30.

Council for appellant argue that the intention of the testator can be found only from reading the will. While the intention of the testator as expressed in the will must prevail, yet the court is not bound to disregard the circumstances under which the will was made, but should endeavor to place itself in the situation of the testator, in order to understand the language in the sense in which it was used. Hawhe v. Chicago & W. I. R. Co. 165 Ill. 561, 46 N. E. 240; Strickland v. Strickland, 271 Ill. 614, 111 N. E. 592; Wallace v. Foxwell, 250 Ill. 616, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 632, 95 N. E. 985; Abrahams v. Sanders, 274 Ill. 452, 113 N. E. 737.

It is clear from the admitted facts in this record that the testator lived with Luella Thurm as his wife from the time when the marriage ceremony was performed, in 1907, until his death, and that during all this time he held her out to the public as his wife. The terms "husband" and "wife" have undoubtedly for their primary meaning only those persons who are actually and lawfully living together as husband and wife; but the surrounding circumstances may extend the meaning of the terms to those who are in the ostensible relation of husband or wife, although not legally so, especially if it appears that this was the intention of the testator. Page, Wills, § 511; Pastene v. Bonini, 166 Mass. 85, 44 N. E. 246; Marks v. Marks, 12 Ann. Cas. 751, and cases cited in note, 40 Can. S. C. 210; 40 Cyc. 1456; Dicke v. Wagner, 95 Wis. 260, 70 N. W. 159. In view of the relations in which he had lived with Luella Thurm from 1907 until his death, and of the other surrounding circumstances, we think it clearly appears from the wording of the will that the testator intended to leave the interest in the property in question to the woman with whom he was living as his wife; that is, the appellee Luella Thurm. The reasoning of this court in Brack v. Boyd, 202 Ill. 440, 66 N. E. 1073, tends strongly to uphold this conclusion. In that case the will provided, among other things, that "at the death of my said wife, it is my will that my said property be vested in my adopted daughter, Mary Jane Ralls (whose name before her said adoption was Mary Jane Singleton)."

It was argued that the adoption proceedings were invalid. In passing on that question the court said: The language "identifies the beneficiary beyond question, and is sufficient to vest the estate in remainder in her. This being the case, it will be unnecessary to determine . . . whether there was any defect in the adoption proceedings, as it could not affect the result."

The authorities cited and relied upon by council for appellant are not controlling here. Under all the facts and circumstances before us it is obvious that the testator intended to leave the property in question to appellee Luella Thurm. We find nothing in the record to justify the presumption, even, that the testator would not have left this property to her if he had known that their marriage was invalid. The decrees of the Circuit Court will be affirmed.

Annotation—Devise or bequest to one described as “husband,” “wife,” or “widow,” as affected by illegality or nonexistence of marriage.

This note assumes to collate only cases of the type indicated by its title, in which the fact that the beneficiary is described as the husband, wife, or widow, either of the testator or of a third person, or the fact that the provision for the beneficiary is during widowhood, raises the question whether the gift is conditioned upon the lawfulness or existence of the relation of husband and wife.

It will be noted that the question is entirely distinct from the question as to which of two persons who have at different times answered, or might have answered, to the description of “husband,” “wife,” or “widow,” and who are not designated otherwise than by such relationship, is to be taken as the intended beneficiary of a testamentary gift, or of an insurance policy or benefit certificate; for a treatment of which, reference may be made to the note to Meeker v. Draffen, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 817. It is also distinct from the question as to whether the gift is conditioned upon the continuance of the relation. For treatment of the latter question, see note in 69 L.R.A. 940, on “Effect of divorce to revoke gift by will;” also the later cases of Rogers v. Hollister (1914) 156 Wis. 517, 146 N. W. 488, and Re Brown (1908) 139 Iowa, 219, 117 N. W. 260. As to the effect of divorce on the rights of a beneficiary under an insurance policy or benefit certificate, see notes to Wallace v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 478; Green v. Green, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 370; and Filley v. Illinois L. Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 130.

Mere wrong description of the legatee will not defeat a legacy; but, if a legacy is given on account of the character involved in the description, and that character has been imposed by fraud on the testator, the legacy will be bad. Giles v. Giles (1836) 1 Keen, 685, 48 Eng. Reprint, 471, 5 L. J. Ch. N. S. 46, s. c. sub nom. Penfold v. Giles (1836) 6 L. J. Ch. N. S. 4; and see also, as supporting this statement, the cases cited throughout this note.

The cases hereinafter reviewed appear to warrant the statement that where testator knows that his marriage to a woman is, or may prove to be, bigamous, by reason of the existence of a former wife or husband, a gift to such woman during widowhood, or so long as she shall remain unmarried, will entitle her to the property so long as she remains in the same state as at the time of his death; but that where testator was unaware of the circumstances rendering the marriage void, the gift will not take effect.

It also appears to be true that a mistake on the part of the testator with respect to the status of a legatee—as where he erroneously believed her to be unmarried, or supposed her marriage to be legal—will not prevent a gift to her “so long as she shall remain single and unmarried,” or “if she shall become a widow,” from taking effect,—at least where such supposed status is not the motive for the gift.

It has been held that a direction that a provision made for testator’s “wife” shall be in lieu and satisfaction of any dower or other rights in the estate is not a declaration of any particular purpose for which the legacy is given, but is only a direction that she shall take nothing besides the legacy, and does not really amount to an expression of purpose or intent. Re Boddington (1883) L. R. 22 Ch. Div. (Eng.) 597, affirmed in (1884) L. R. 25 Ch. Div. 685, 53 L. J. Ch. N. S. 475, 50 L. T. N. S. 761, 32 Week. Rep. 448, 20 Eng. Rul. Cas. 489; Klein v. Hayek (N. Y.) infra; but compare Collard v. Collard (1907) — N. J. —, 67 Atl. 190, hereinafter set forth.

A case of possible collateral interest is Brack v. Boyd (1903) 202 Ill. 440, 66 N. E. 1073, in which it was held that the language employed in a will by which a testator devised property to “my adopted daughter Mary Jane Ralls (whose name before her said adoption was Mary Jane Singleton)” sufficiently identified the beneficiary and vested the estate in her, irrespective of the sufficiency of the adoption proceedings.

Where no marriage ceremony has been performed between testator and his reputed wife.

In Klein v. Hayek (1881) 5 Redf. (N.

Y.) 210, where a testator who had been divorced, and who was forbidden to marry again, bequeathed certain property to a woman with whom he had cohabited without a marriage from the time of his divorce until his death, designating her as "my beloved wife, Maria Klein," and declaring, "the above provisions in favor of my wife to be in lieu of dower," it was held that the error in designating the legatee as his wife, not being occasioned by any fraud practised upon the testator, did not render the legacy void; and that the fact that the legacy was stated to be in lieu of dower did not affect the validity, the testator being presumed to know that the legatee had no legal claim upon his estate for dower.

In Re Brown (1910) 26 Times L. R. (Eng.) 257, 54 Sol. Jo. 251, it was held that the woman with whom testator had been living, and whom he called his wife, and to whom he had made plans to be legally married, which were thwarted by his illness and death, was entitled to a provision made in his will for his "wife," although she was not named.

Where testator knew, or had equal means of knowing, the illegality of his own marriage.

In Pratt v. Mathew (1856) 22 Beav. 328, 52 Eng. Reprint, 1134, 4 Week. Rep. 418, affirmed on another point in (1857) 25 L. J. Ch. N. S. 686, 2 Jur. N. S. 1055, 4 Week. Rep. 772, it was held that a woman whose marriage to testator was illegal, she being his deceased wife's sister, might take under a testamentary gift of all his real and personal estate "to my wife" for life, in a will made while testator was living with her as his wife.

In Dicke v. Wagner (1897) 95 Wis. 260, 70 N. W. 159, it was held that a provision in the will of a testator whose marriage to a woman within the prohibited degree of consanguinity was a nullity, that a bequest therein made to his "wife" should not be considered as part payment of her dower interest or thirds, but that "she shall be entitled besides the above bequeath to all under the law in such case made and provided as my widow if she shall survive me," was equivalent to a devise to the woman named as his wife, of such interest in his lands and homestead as she would have been entitled to by statute had she been his lawful wife.

In Doe ex dem. Gains v. Rouse (1848) 5 C. B. 422, 136 Eng. Reprint, 942, 17 L. J. C. P. N. S. 108, 12 Jur. 99, where L.R.A.1917B.

testator, who had a lawful wife living, went through the ceremony of marriage with a woman whose Christian name was Caroline, and devised certain property to "my dear wife Caroline," it was held that Caroline took the property, notwithstanding the misdescription.

In Giles v. Giles (1836) 1 Keen, 685, 48 Eng. Reprint, 471, s. c. sub nom. Penfold v. Giles (1836) 6 L. J. Ch. N. S. 4, it was held that the legatee's right to a provision made for her by testator, who designated her as his wife, was not defeated by the fact that she had another husband living, where it did not appear that she had a guilty knowledge which the testator did not share, the court saying: "In the present case the testator, as well as Mrs. Penfold, had both an actual knowledge of the existence of John Penfold in the year 1815; and it was not more the duty of Mrs. Penfold than it was the duty of Thomas Giles, the testator, to ascertain that John Penfold was dead before they ventured to proceed to the ceremony of a marriage between themselves. There is no more reason why I should impute to the plaintiff a fraud upon the testator than to the testator a fraud upon the plaintiff; which of them was guilty, if either of them, must depend upon circumstances which are not before the court. If both had a guilty knowledge, no fraud was committed upon the testator; and however immoral the conduct of the parties, it is no part of the duty of courts of equity to punish parties for immoral conduct by depriving them of their civil rights."

In Re Petts (1859) 27 Beav. 576, 54 Eng. Reprint, 228, 1 L. T. N. S. 153, 29 L. J. Ch. N. S. 168, s. c. sub nom. Pitt's Will (1859) 5 Jur. N. S. 1235, 8 Week. Rep. 157, where testator made certain provisions for his "wife," not mentioning her by name, and it appeared that the woman to whom testator was married was not lawfully his wife, she having a husband living whom she had left nineteen years before, and whom she believed to be dead, it was held that the testator intended to benefit her, and that she had not done anything to forfeit the provision by going through the ceremony of marriage with the testator after so great a lapse of time, although the inquiries made by her as to whether her former husband was still living were not very carefully prosecuted.

In Lepine v. Bean (1870) L. R. 10 Eq. (Eng.) 160, testator gave property upon trust for his wife Margaret "for and during the term of her natural life (provided she shall so long continue my widow and unmarried) . . . and from and immediately after the decease or second marriage of my said wife" upon trust to divide among testator's children, who had been born to him by the said Margaret. As a matter of fact Margaret was not legally his wife, he having a wife living. It was contended that Margaret could not take, as the gift was to be so long as she was the testator's widow, and not having been legally married to the testator, she could not be his widow; but it was held that testator meant her to take the property so long as she was unmarried.

For a like decision upon a similar state of facts, see Dilley v. Matthews (1863) 2 New Reports (Eng.) 60, 8 L. T. N. S. 762, 11 Week. Rep. 614.

In Re Burlinson (1899), the only account of which seems to be a note of unreported decisions in 107 L. T. Jo. (Eng.) 82, a testator gave his estate in trust to pay the net income to one who had lived with him as his wife, but who had another husband living, during such time as she should remain unmarried, and upon her death or marriage upon trust for his son and daughter, and further directed his trustees to permit her to have the use and enjoyment of his furniture and other household effects during her lifetime, or so long as she should remain unmarried. The question being raised whether, under the circumstances, the gift to such woman during such time as she should remain unmarried was valid, or had failed, it was held that, on the true construction of the will, those words meant during such time as she should remain in the same state as she was in while living with testator, and that the gift was valid.

In Re Wagstaff [1908] 1 Ch. (Eng.) 162, 4 B. R. C. 50, 77 L. J. Ch. N. S. 190, 98 L. T. N. S. 149, 24 Times L. R. 134, it was held that a woman espoused by a testator with the knowledge that she had a husband living was entitled during her life, or until she should marry again, to a gift to her, under the name of "wife," of the net income of testator's residuary estate "during her life if she shall so long continue my widow for her own use and benefit."

In Re Hammond [1911] 2 Ch. (Eng.) 342, 80 L. J. Ch. N. S. 690, 105 L. T. N. S. 302, 27 Times L. R. 522, 55 Sol. Jo. 649, where a woman whose husband had disappeared and was supposed to be dead, six years thereafter went through a ceremony of marriage with testator, who was fully aware of the circumstances, and who made certain bequests to her "during her widowhood, and after her decease or second marriage," to his daughters, she was held entitled to enjoy the property until her death or remarriage, notwithstanding her legal husband proved to be still alive; the words, "during her widowhood," being held, under all the circumstances, and having regard to the terms of the will, not to import a condition, but to define the period during which she was to enjoy the gift.

In Prentice v. Achorn (1830) 2 Paige (N. Y.) 30, where a testator who, whether he was imposed on at the time of his marriage to a woman who had a husband still living, knew previously to the execution of the will that her former husband had been heard of since her marriage to the testator, it was held that the expressions in the will in which he designated her by the title of "my wife Jemima," and gave her the use of one fourth of the property while she remained his widow, must be taken with reference to the fact that he knew that they were not legally married.

In McGuire's Will (1867) 1 Tucker (N. Y.) 196, where the testator, who, representing himself as a widower, had gone through a marriage ceremony, devised property to his putative wife, designating her as "my beloved wife, Isabella Phillips McGuire," it was held that, whether or not the testator was under a misapprehension as to the death of his lawful wife, such misapprehension would not invalidate the will and disentitle it to probate, where it appeared probable, in view of the circumstances, that, had testator known that his legal wife was alive, he would have made no different disposition.

Where testator was unaware of circumstances rendering his marriage void.

In Kennell v. Abbott (1799) 4 Ves. Jr. 802, 31 Eng. Reprint, 416, 4 Revised Rep. 351, 25 Eng. Rul. Cas. 480, it was held that if a legacy is given to a person under a particular character which he has falsely assumed, in which alone one can suppose the motive of the bounty, the law will not permit him to avail himself of it; and therefore that where a legacy was given by a woman to a man in the character of her husband, whom she supposed to be and described as such, but who, at the time of the marriage ceremony with her, had a wife living, he could not demand the legacy.

In Wilkinson v. Joughin (1866) L. R. 2 Eq. (Eng.) 319, 35 L. J. Ch. N. S. 684, 12 Jur. N. S. 330, 14 L. T. N. S. 394, where testator, who had married a woman representing herself as a widow, but having, to her knowledge, a husband living, made a provision for her under the designation of "my wife Adelaide," it was held that, as she had imposed upon the testator, the bequest was wholly void.

In Collard v. Collard (1907) — N. J. —, 67 Atl. 190, where testator devised property to a woman whom he designated as "my wife Emily M. Collard," "for the term of her natural life, so long as she remains my widow," not knowing at the time that she had a husband living, and also providing that the legacy given to her should be in lieu of her dower in his estate, thereby indicating that she was to take in the character and capacity of wife and widow, it was said that at the death of the testator the devisee was not, and could not be, his widow, because she had never been his lawful wife; and that the estate given was also void because the conditions upon which it rested did not, and could not, exist.

Where contemplated marriage did not take place.

In Schloss v. Stiebel (1833) 6 Sim. 1, 58 Eng. Reprint, 495, where testator, having become engaged to marry a lady, made a codicil in which, after mentioning her by name and alluding to his intended marriage with her, he provided, "in case of my death I leave to my wife" a sum of money and other personal property, it was held that the legacy was not given to the testator's betrothed on the condition of his marrying her, and that she might claim it notwithstanding that, at the testator's death, the marriage had not yet taken place.

But in Steen v. Steen (1905) 68 N. J. Eq. 472, 58 Atl. 675, where a testatrix, knowing of her son's engagement to marry one Margueritte J. Irwin, devised and bequeathed "to my daughter, Margueritte J. Irwin Steen, wife of my son, John A. Steen, all of my estate, real personal and mixed, during the lifetime of my said daughter, and, after her decease, to her heirs, as would by law inherit the same, being the issue of said marriage of my said son, John A. Steen," and the marriage had not taken place at the time of testatrix's death, it was held that the devise was void for want of a person in being answering the description of the devisee. The vice chancellor said: "There was not, at the time of the making of the will, nor at the death of the testatrix, any person in esse answering to that name and description. It was most strenuously insisted on the argument that it was simply a misdescription of a person in being, and that all of the language used, following the words 'Margueritte J. Irwin,' were surplusage, and should be rejected. To this argument I cannot give my assent. I am fully persuaded that it was not the intention of this testatrix to devise this property to Margueritte J. Irwin as distinct from her status as the wife of John A. Steen, and the legatee, not answering that description at the time the will took effect, the gift failed. I am strengthened in my conviction regarding the intention of the testatrix by the fact that the gift over is to the issue of the marriage of John and Margueritte, and am satisfied that she never intended to give this property to a person who was not her daughter,—who was not the wife of her son, John A. Steen,—and who could by no possibility leave issue of her marriage with John A. Steen. . . . My construction of the devise under consideration is that the words used by the testatrix were intended to describe the character or capacity in which the legatee should take, and that for want of such capacity or status the defendant Margueritte J. Irwin took no estate under the will, and I will advise accordingly."

Where marriage has been annulled since making of will.

In Re Boddington (1884) L. R. 25 Ch. Div. 685, 20 Eng. Rul. Cas. 489, affirming (1883) L. R. 22 Ch. Div. 597, it was held that a woman who, after the date of the will, had procured the annulment of her marriage to the testator, could not claim the benefit of an annuity to her "so long as she shall continue my widow and unmarried," on the ground that the reference to widowhood constituted a condition which did not exist at the time the will took effect, and that likewise she could not take under a provision giving her "in lieu and in substitution of the said annuity, at the option of my said wife if she shall prefer it, a legacy of £2,000;" though she was held entitled to take a gift to her under the description of "wife," since, looking to the facts, it did not appear that the word "wife" was such a part of the description as to amount to a condition that she should not take unless she filled the character of wife, Lord Selborne saying: "De facto she was his wife when the will was made, so there is no ground for imagining that he intended to do more than describe her as at that time she would be naturally and commonly described.”

Mistake as to status of legatee.

In Turner v. Brittain (1863) 3 New Reports (Eng.) 21, where a testator bequeathed the income of a certain sum to his son for life, and after his decease “unto Harriet, the present wife of” said son, should she survive him, during her life, it was held that Harriet, with whom the son had lived as his wife, might claim the benefit of such provision, there being no evidence that the false representation made by the son and herself to the testator that they were married had been made for the purpose of obtaining the legacy.

In Re Lowe (1892) 61 L. J. Ch. N. S. (Eng.) 415, 40 Week. Rep. 475, testator, believing his brother to be legally married to the woman with whom he was living as his wife, left property in trust to pay the income to the brother for life, and after his death to “the present wife of my said brother Joseph, if she shall become his widow,” during her life. It was held that the wife was entitled to the provision, the phrase, “if she shall become his widow,” being held equivalent to, “if she shall survive him.”

In Anderson v. Berkley [1902] 1 Ch. (Eng.) 936, where a son had written to his father that he had married a lady named Letitia, who was then his reputed wife, it was held that the lady was entitled to a provision made in the father's will for the son's “wife Letitia,” although she was never lawfully married to testator's son, there being no question of any fraud by the legatee in obtaining the bequest. The court said: “If entitled to conjecture upon the subject, it is possible and probable that what induced the testator to confer any benefit by his will upon this lady was the belief that she was the wife of his son. It is not, however, a legacy to anyone under the simple description of ‘the wife of my son Francis,’ without any reference to a particular individual. If it had been, any person claiming must, I suppose, have shewn that she really sustained that character. The bequest is ‘to my son's wife Letitia if she shall survive him,’—that is, to a legatee named, with an additional description which is not satisfied, inasmuch as there was not any lawful wife of the testator's son Francis in the strict legal sense of the term, though, perhaps, in a secondary sense, Letitia Berkley or Cumberland might be called his wife. . . . The legacy is intended for some person of whom the name, with a description, is given for the purpose of ascertaining and identifying the individual. We have a compound designation, consisting of the name ‘Letitia’—there is no doubt to whom that refers—and the description ‘wife of my son Francis.’ It is a rule, however, that, where the description is made up of more than one part, and one part is true, but the other false, then, if the part which is true describes the subject or object of the gift with sufficient certainty, the untrue part will be rejected, and will not vitiate the gift.

. . . It is impossible to say positively what the testator in the present case would have done if he had known the precise facts in reference to the relation between his son and this lady.”

In Rishton v. Cobb (1839) 5 Myl. & C. 145, 41 Eng. Reprint, 326, 9 Sim. 615, 59 Eng. Reprint, 495, 9 L. J. Ch. N. S. 110, 4 Jur. 261, a woman was held entitled to a gift of dividends to her “so long as she shall remain single and unmarried,” though she had been married and deserted by her husband, of which fact testator was unaware.

The foregoing case was adversely criticized in Re Boddington (1884) L. R. 25 Ch. Div. 685, 53 L. J. Ch. N. S. 475, 50 L. T. N. S. 761, 32 Week. Rep. 448, 25 Eng. Rul. Cas. 489, by Lord Selborne, who said that the respect he felt for the great judge who decided it prevented his saying more of the judgment than that he did not understand it, and that if it were applicable to the case then before him, he should hesitate for some time before following it.

—where status is presumably the motive for the gift.

In Re Davenport (1852) 1 Smale & G. 126, 65 Eng. Reprint, 56, where testator gave a sum of money in trust for his nephew for life, and from and immediately after his decease, in case the nephew's wife should survive him, to her for life, and afterward in trust to pay the capital among his nephew's children, it was held that a woman with whom the nephew had cohabited for many years, and who was supposed by the testator to be his nephew's wife, although she was not such in fact, was not entitled to the income of the trust fund, there being nothing to indicate that she was personally known to the testator, or known to him in such a way as to lead to the inference that she was intended by the reference to the nephew's wife, or to justify the court in arriving at the conclusion that no other person but her was in the testator's mind when he framed the gift. The vice chancellor said: "Suppose, for example, the nephew had survived the testator, and married, and afterwards died; there would, in that case, be in existence a person exactly answering in every respect the legatee described in the will, namely, the nephew's wife. Could there be a doubt that, under these circumstances, that wife would be entitled to the legacy? Yet, according to the construction I am invited to put upon this will, I should be bound to declare that the wife of G. C. Davenport did not answer the description contained in the will, but that this poor lady, who, it is conceded, was not the wife of the testator's nephew, is, nevertheless, accurately described as his wife. Much as I regret the result, I am bound to declare that she is not entitled under these words to the testator's bounty."

In Miller v. Miller (1894) 79 Hun, 197, 30 N. Y. Supp. 116, it was held that a woman claiming to be the wife of testator's son, who, during the period of such alleged matrimonial relation, had a wife living, could not claim the benefit of a provision made for the "wife and children" of such son, where the evidence failed to establish that the testator recognized her as his son's wife, or knew of his son's relations with her.

E. S. O.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

G. B. McADOW, Appt.,

v.

KANSAS CITY WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

(96 Kan. 423, 151 Pac. 1113.)

Evidence — contract to pay wages.

1. The evidence examined, and held sufficient to take to the jury the question whether a railroad company had contracted with an employee to pay him half wages during any disability resulting from an injury received in the course of his service.

For other cases, see Trial, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Judgment — for injury — action for wages.

2. An action by an employee to recover upon a contract that he should receive half wages during disability resulting from an injury occurring in the course of his service is not barred by a judgment in his favor for damages on account of the same injury, based on the theory that it was the result of his employer's negligence.

For other cases, see Judgment, II. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Corporation — powers — contract to pay wages.

3. A railroad corporation has incidental powers to contract with its own employees to pay them half wages during disability resulting from service accidents.

For other cases, see Corporations, IV. d, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(October 9, 1915.)

Headnotes by MASON, J.

Note. — On employer's agreement to pay employee during disability, or his contribution to insurance, as affecting, or affected by, recovery against him for personal injury, see annotation following this case, post, 1159.
L.R.A.1917B.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Wyandotte County in defendant's favor in a suit upon a contract for the recovery of half wages during disability resulting from an accident while in defendant's employ. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. O. Emerson, David J. Smith, and Atwood & Hill, for appellant: Damages sought in the Missouri action were not a bar to the damages sought in the present action.

Gatzweiler v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. 136 Wis. 34, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 211, 128 Am. St. Rep. 1057, 116 N. W. 633, 16 Ann. Cas. 633; Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Parker, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 521, 72 S. W. 621, 96 Tex. 287, 72 S. W. 168, 580.

The causes of action in the present case and in the Missouri case are not the same.

Clifton v. Meuser, 88 Kan. 408, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 124, 129 Pac. 159; Stroup v. Pepper, 69 Kan. 241, 76 Pac. 825; Hudson v. Remington Paper Co. 71 Kan. 300, 80 Pac. 568, 6 Ann. Cas. 103; Tracy v. Kerr, 47 Kan. 658, 28 Pac. 707.

The defendant company has no right to raise the question of ultra vires, because it never pleaded that defense; and it is estopped from pleading such a defense, since the plaintiff has fully performed the contract and the defendant has had all its benefits.

Sherman Center Town Co. v. Morris, 43 Kan. 282, 19 Am. St. Rep. 134, 23 Pac. 569; Hanna v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 89 Kan. 503, 132 Pac. 154; Emporia v. Emporia Teleph. Co. 88 Kan. 452, 129 Pac. 187; Arkansas Valley Town & Land Co. v. Lincoln, 56 Kan. 145, 42 Pac. 706; Alexandria, A. & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Johnson, 58 Kan. 175, 48 Pac. 847; Harris v. Independence Gas. Co. 76 Kan. 750, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1171, 92 Pac. 1123; Union Trust Co. v.

Kendall, 20 Kan. 615; Solomon R. Co. v. Jones, 30 Kan. 601, 2 Pac. 637.

Messrs. C. F. Hutchings and McCabe Moore for appellee.

Mason, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

G. B. McAdow brought an action against the Kansas City Western Railway Company upon an oral contract of insurance which he alleged had been made at the time of his employment as a motorman, by which the company agreed, in consideration of 50 cents a month being deducted from his pay, that if he should be injured in its service, he should receive half wages during the time (not exceeding a year) of his resulting disability. At the conclusion of the evidence the court directed a verdict for the defendant, and a judgment was rendered accordingly, from which the plaintiff appeals.

That the plaintiff was disabled for a time by an injury received in December, 1911, in the course of his employment, was not contested. The defendant maintains that the decision was justified upon the ground that the evidence conclusively showed that its contract with the plaintiff was that the 50 cents a month referred to should be used to pay for accident insurance to be procured to the amount stated from a company in that business, the plaintiff's claim in the event of an injury to be against the corporation issuing the policy; that a similar amount was deducted from the wages of all employees and used for that purpose, the insurance company, in case of an injury, making payment to the railway company, which turned the money over to the person injured. The suggestion is also made that the action was barred by a judgment for $7,500 which the plaintiff had already obtained against the defendant on account of the same injury, on the theory that it was due to his employer's negligence.

The oral evidence as to the character of the contract was conflicting. The plaintiff's version was supported by his testimony, and the defendant's by that of its superintendent. No written contract of insurance of any character was produced. Two circumstances are relied upon by the defendant as establishing its contention in this regard by the evidence of the plaintiff himself. In 1908 he received a minor injury, as a result of which he was paid $8.40 in virtue of the arrangement regarding the insurance. The payment was made to him by the defendant by means of a voucher in the form of a bill or statement of account, audited and approved by the officers of the company, the statement of the item reading: "For amount of insurance collected from Travelers' Insurance Company, account of injuries received September 3, 1908, $8.40."

The plaintiff testified that he signed the receipt attached to the voucher, acknowledging payment of the amount; that he might have read the part referring to the Travelers' Insurance Company, but that he knew nothing about it; that he had not applied for accident insurance, nor authorized it to be taken for him in that or any other insurance company; that he did not know whether the defendant insured itself, nor what it did with the 50 cents deducted from his pay checks. We do not regard the language of the voucher as affording conclusive evidence of the terms of any contract between the defendant and the insurance company, or of any contractual relations between the company and the plaintiff. The superintendent of the railway company, who attended to the employment of the plaintiff and other motormen, testified that he never explained to them orally about the deduction of 50 cents a month, but that he wrote orders concerning it. The plaintiff was asked on cross-examination if he always read all the notices that were posted by the superintendent. He answered: "Yes; that was our orders." The defendant introduced in evidence a notice signed by the superintendent, dated December 19, 1910. The plaintiff testified that he supposed it had been posted, but did not remember it. It was addressed to all employees of the railway company, and began thus: "The company has renewed the workmen's collective insurance policy for 1910 and 1911. This is the policy where the employee pays the insurance company 50 cents per month and receives half pay if injured from the insurance company."

Whether the plaintiff ever saw and read this notice would seem to be a question of fact to be determined by the jury. But, assuming that he did, we cannot say, as a matter of law, that the notice changed the character of whatever contract already existed between the plaintiff and the defendant, or that it affords conclusive evidence of what the contract was.

The defendant relies largely upon the doctrine applied in Carpenter v. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. 21 Ind. App. 88, 51 N. E. 493, 494, where it was held that no action would lie against a railway company upon a contract relating to deducting amounts from the wages of its employees to pay for accident insurance. The contract there involved was in the form of a certificate given to the employee, signed by his employer and by the insurance company, the part which is material for present purposes reading:

"This is to certify that Emanuel Carpenter, sec. 25, Coal Bluff, is insured by the American Casualty Insurance & Security Company of Baltimore, Maryland, against accident resulting in bodily injury or death. By the terms of the policy the above-named person, so long as he remains an employee of the Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad Company, will receive through the paymaster of that railroad company in case of accident, however and whenever happening between the date hereof and the 1st day of May, 1893, the following benefits: . . . This certificate is issued in accordance with the policy of insurance issued by the American Casualty Insurance & Security Company to the Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad Company for the benefit of its employees." (p. 89.)

The language quoted makes it entirely clear that the employee was a party to a contract under which the insurance company had written an accident policy for his benefit, any payments under it to be made to him through the railroad paymaster. Here the plaintiff did not testify to such an arrangement, nor did the defendant introduce any incontestable proof of its existence. That the evidence as a whole may have tended strongly in that direction does not affect the question now under consideration. A Canadian court, however, has reached a conclusion contrary to that arrived at in the Indiana case cited, upon a contract quite similar to the one there interpreted. McKenzie v. Garth, Rap. Jud. Quebec, 9 B. R. 224, cited in note in 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 194.

We do not regard the recovery of a judgment against the defendant for the plaintiff's loss of time, on the theory that his injury was due to its negligence, as barring an action upon the contract of insurance, if it actually existed. A contract for insurance against the loss of time as the result of accidental injury is not regarded as one of mere indemnity; and therefore the insurer is not entitled to a reduction of liability on account of any circumstance which diminishes the actual loss of the insured, such as aid or compensation he may have received from another source. 1

C. J. 517. Nor is the insurer subrogated to the insured's rights to recover damages from the person whose negligence caused the injury. 1 C. J. 518. The question is fully treated in Gatzweiler v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. 136 Wis. 34, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 211, 128 Am. St. Rep. 1057, 116 N. W. 633, 16 Ann. Cas. 633, which is reprinted in the three series of selected cases. The latest decision on the subject is Suttles v. Railway Mail Asso. 156 App. Div. 435, 141 N. Y. Supp. 1024, where the earlier ones are reviewed. The cause of action on the contract and that on the tort are entirely different and are independent of each other. The one is founded upon an agreement to pay a fixed amount (or an amount to be arrived at by a fixed standard) if disability is occasioned by an injury; the other is founded upon the obligation of a wrongdoer to make amends for the result of his misconduct. The circumstance that the same corporation happens to be charged both upon the contract and upon the tort does not affect the essential character of its liability in either aspect, or take the case out of the operation of the general rule. Many courts have considered the validity and effect of a contract that, upon the happening of an accident, the employee shall elect between accepting the benefits of a relief fund provided by his employer, and the prosecution of an action for damages. Note in 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 182. Such a question could hardly arise if there were an inconsistency between the two remedies.

It is urged that the defendant had no power to bind itself by a contract for accident insurance. Doubtless it could not enter into a general business of writing policies of that character. But a railway corporation has the incidental power to make various arrangements for the protection of its own employees (10 Cyc. 1143), and no reason is apparent why it might not embody in its contracts of employment a provision that it would pay partial wages in case of disability, in consideration of a deduction to be made from each pay check.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

Annotation—Employer's agreement to pay employee during disability, or his contribution to insurance, as affecting, or affected by, recovery against him for personal injury.

This note is intended to include only cases where, as in McAdow v. Kansas City Western R. Co. ante, 1157, there was no agreement by the employee that, in case of injury, he would elect whether he would accept the benefits of an insurance policy or of a relief association, or whether he would bring an action against the employer for the injury.

As to contract requiring servant to elect between acceptance of benefit out of the relief fund and a prosecution of his claim in an action for damages, see notes to Frank v. Newport Min. Co. 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 182, and Koeller v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 440.

MCADOW v. KANSAS CITY WESTERN R. Co. finds support in Dover v. Mississippi River & B. T. R. Co. (1903) 100 Mo. App. 330, 73 S. W. 298, which holds that an employee who is injured, by accepting the benefit of an accident policy, the premiums of which were paid partly by the employee and partly by the employer, is not precluded from bringing an action against the employer for personal injuries, in the absence of an express agreement between the employer and employee that the acceptance of such insurance shall constitute a release of any claim for damages against the employer on account of the injuries.

In Coots v. Detroit (1889) 75 Mich. 628, 5 L.R.A. 315, 42 N. W. 1124, it was held that the provision of the Detroit charter that a fireman totally disabled by the discharge of his duties may be placed on the retired list with a pension, by a vote of the fire commission, is not mandatory, but gives the commission only an option to do so; and such provision is no bar to recovery by a fireman for injuries received by him in the discharge of duty, for the damages for which the city is otherwise liable.

So, also, it was held in Kansas City v. McDonald (1899) 60 Kan. 481, 45 L.R.A. 429, 57 Pac. 123, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 67, that the purchase of an accident policy by a city for a fireman, under Kansas Laws 1895, chap. 363, out of a fund created by a tax on foreign fire insurance companies, and the payment of the policy to the widow of the fireman, after his death, was no defense to her action against the city, under Kansas Code, § 422, for negligence in causing his death. J. H. B.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

JOHN W. LAWSON, JR., by Next Friend.

(161 Ky. 39, 170 S. W. 198.)

Railroad — licensee drawn under train — liability.

A railroad company is not bound to modify the speed of its train in passing a licensee walking along its track with knowledge of the approach of the train, to prevent his being drawn under the train. For other cases, see Railroads, 11. d, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(November 13, 1914.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Warren County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. B. D. Warfield, Charles H. Moorman, and Sims & Rodes, for appellant:

There was no evidence tending to show negligence on the part of the defendant

Note. — As to liability for injury to person near track in consequence of suction from passing train, see annotation following this case, post, 1162. L.R.A.1917B.

proximately causing the injury to the plaintiff.

Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Molloy, 122 Ky. 219, 91 S. W. 685; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Redmon, 122 Ky. 385, 91 S. W. 722; Hoback v. Louisville, H. & St. L. R. Co. 30 Ky. L. Rep. 476, 99 S. W. 241; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Bays, 142 Ky. 400, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 678, 134 S. W. 450; Graney v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 157 Mo. 686, 50 L.R.A. 153, 57 S. W. 276, 140 Mo. 89, 38 L.R.A. 633, 41 S. W. 246; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Anderson, 93 Va. 650, 25 S. E. 947, 8 Am. Neg. Cas. 651; Hunter v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. 116 N. Y. 615, 6 L.R.A. 246, 23 N. E. 9; Elliott, Railroads, 2d ed. § 1703; Hudson v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 145 N. Y. 408, 40 N. E. 8; Johns v. Northwestern Mut. Relief Asso. 90 Wis. 332, 41 L.R.A. 587, 63 N. W. 276; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Stick, 143 Ind. 449, 41 N. E. 365; Re Harriot, 145 N. Y. 540, 40 N. E. 246; Butero v. Travelers' Acci. Ina. Co. 96 Wis. 536, 65 Am. St. Rep. 61, 71 N. W. 811; Louisville, H. & St. L. R. Co. v. Jolly, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 989, 90 S. W. 977; American Brewing Asso. v. Talbot, 141 Mo. 674, 64 Am. St. Rep. 538, 42 S. W. 679; Adkins v. Big Sandy & C. R. Co. 147 Ky. 30, 143 S. W. 764.

Plaintiff's witness was the proximate cause of the injury to him.

Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Fox, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 81, 42 S. W. 922; Rupard v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 88 Ky. 280, 7 L.R.A. 316, 11 S. W. 70.

Messrs. Bradburn & Basham for appellee.

Clay, C., filed the following opinion:

On November 19, 1912, John W. Lawson, Jr., a boy fifteen years of age, and weighing about 100 pounds, was run over and injured by a train operated by the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company. The large toe of his left foot and his right foot and ankle were crushed. Suing by his father as his next friend, he brought this action against the railroad company to recover damages. From a verdict and judgment in his favor for $5,500, the railroad company appeals.

The accident occurred just inside the limits of Smith's Grove, an incorporated town of about 800 inhabitants. Defendant's tracks run northeast and southwest through the town. Plaintiff resided with his father near what is known as "Lawson's Crossing," some distance north of the depot. There was testimony to the effect that a pathway along defendant's tracks north of its depot and up to the second crossing above was used by the residents of the town of Smith's Grove living in that section and by others who lived three miles north of Smith's Grove. There were about a half dozen houses in that section of the town near the railroad right of way, and these houses were on macadamized streets. There were sidewalks on these streets leading to the town. Briefly stated, plaintiff's account of the accident is as follows:

Late in the afternoon on the day of the injury his mother sent him out to look for his father, who was expected to return home with a wagon and team. He went upon defendant's right of way at the second crossing north of its depot. He then started south along the pathway on defendant's right of way. After walking south for some distance, he retraced his steps toward the crossing, where he entered the right of way. He was walking for the purpose of keeping warm. He then turned and started south for the second time. After he walked some distance, he saw a train approaching about 100 feet from him. About 6 feet from the track was a small ditch. As the train approached he moved to the edge of the ditch. While walking along the edge of the ditch, he was drawn under the train and engine. The train was going very fast. After receiving the injuries he called for help. A neighbor responded and took him to his home.

Mr. Witherspoon, a resident of Smith's Grove, stated that he saw a freight train leave the station about the time the boy claims to have been injured, and this train was going very fast; in his opinion its speed was 25 or 30 miles an hour. Some railroad postal clerks and others testified that they had seen mail bags and packages of papers L.R.A.1917B.

which had been thrown from the train drawn under it. With the exception of one witness, none of them had ever seen a live object drawn under the train. That witness stated that upon one occasion he saw a man on a railroad platform sucked under a train. He refused to say who it was. Other witnesses testified that there was no suction toward a train until the train itself had passed and the air rushed in to fill the vacuum made by the passing train. Defendant's witnesses testified that the speed of the train it is claimed struck plaintiff was not greater than 8 or 10 miles an hour. The train consisted of an engine and about 33 freight cars, and it was impossible, within the short space lying between the depot where it was stopped and the place of the injury, to have gotten up its speed of 25 or 30 miles an hour. These witnesses all testified that they had never heard of any live object being sucked under a train. The engine of the train was examined at Rowletts, a station north of Smith's Grove, and there were no marks on it indicating that anyone had been struck by it.

Briefly stated, plaintiff contends that the recovery in the lower court is proper for the following reasons: The evidence shows that defendant's right of way was used as a footpath by a large number of persons with the knowledge and acquiescence of the railroad company. The accident occurred in an incorporated town. Plaintiff, therefore, was not a trespasser, but a licensee. In approaching the place where plaintiff was injured, it was the duty of the defendant to keep a lookout and give timely warning of the approach of its trains, and to use ordinary care in the operation of its trains not to injure anyone walking along its right of way. Plaintiff's case, however, is not based on a failure to keep a lookout or to give proper signals of the approach of the train. Though plaintiff says he did not hear the signals, he admits that he saw the train approaching. No signals were therefore necessary to apprise him of that which he already knew. The sole ground of negligence relied on is that defendant failed to moderate the speed of the train so as to prevent plaintiff's being drawn thereunder.

In discussing defendant's liability we shall assume that plaintiff was a licensee, and that there was evidence tending to show that the freight train in question was moving about 25 or 30 miles an hour. The question sharply presented, then, is: Does a railroad company owe to a licensee walking near its tracks, and who knows of the approach of the train, the duty of slackening the speed of its trains in order to prevent him from being sucked under the train?

While it may be true that evidence of witnesses that they had never heard of a particular accident does not show that such an accident had never happened, or that it should not have been anticipated (Trinity & B. V. R. Co. v. McDonald, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 160 S. W. 984), yet this rule, we take it, is not without qualification. Every day hundreds of trains are run at the rate of 25 or 30 miles an hour. These trains pass hundreds and perhaps thousands of persons standing within 5 or 6 feet of the track. If the suction from trains were great enough to draw persons under the trains, there would have been innumerable accidents of the kind under consideration. Notwithstanding this fact, several railroad men, who certainly had an opportunity to speak from long experience, say that they never heard of a live object, capable of resisting, being sucked under a train. Not only so, but the only two cases that have ever come before the courts, so far as we know, are the case under consideration and the case of Graney v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 157 Mo. 666, 50 L.R.A. 153, 57 S. W. 276, where a recovery was denied on the ground that the accident, even if it took place as claimed by plaintiff, was not one that might have been reasonably anticipated. Where in a case like this it is contended that the accident was the result of the negligence of the railroad company, combined with the operation of a natural law, and where not only the character of the accident, but the conditions attending the everyday operation of trains, are such that the accident would have frequently happened if the natural law were such as to make it possible, we conclude that evidence to the effect that no such accident had ever happened has a strong and important bearing on the question whether or not it should have been reasonably anticipated.

We deem it unnecessary, for the purposes of this case, to pass on the question of the possibility of such an accident. We content ourselves with saying that, even if possible, the probability of its occurrence is so remote that it cannot be said to be an accident which should, in the exercise of ordinary care, be reasonably anticipated by those operating railroad trains. That being true, a railroad company does not owe the licensees walking along the side of its tracks, and who know of the approach of its trains, the duty of moderating the speed of the trains so as to prevent their being sucked under the trains. This court has adopted a very liberal rule with respect to licensees on tracks of a railroad company. Where in populous or thickly settled communities the tracks are used by such large numbers of persons that the presence of persons on the tracks may be reasonably anticipated, we are committed to the doctrine that it is the duty of the company under such circumstances to keep a lookout, to give warning of the approach of the train, and to have the train under reasonable control. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Murphy, 123 Ky. 787, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 352, 97 S. W. 729. The reason for requiring trains to be under reasonable control is to make the lookout effective; that is, to enable those in charge of the trains to stop them when persons are seen on the tracks or so near them as to be in danger of being struck by the trains. Here we are asked to go a step further, and to say that the speed of the train must be reduced, not only to avoid striking persons on or near the tracks, but to prevent persons otherwise in a place of safety from being sucked under the train. Even in the Murphy Case the court said: "To compel the railroad trains to creep along under full control, in anticipation of what probably would not occur, viz., the meeting or overtaking a stray trespasser, would not be reasonable, because most likely wholly unnecessary."

The danger of striking a trespasser is infinitely greater than the danger of injuring a licensee by suction. Trespassers are frequently killed. The number of persons actually sucked under trains, even if such cases ever occur, is so infinitesimally small it would certainly be unreasonable to require railroad companies to reduce the speed of their trains for the purpose of avoiding such accidents. If there be any danger from suction, certainly a licensee, who knows of the approach of a train and has a reasonable opportunity to do so, must get away from the track a sufficient distance to avoid being injured in that way. In our opinion, the trial court erred in not directing a verdict in favor of defendant.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Annotation—Liability for injury to person near track in consequence of suction from passing train.

The decision in LOUISVILLE & N. R. Co. v. LAWSON, ante, 1161, that a railroad company is not bound to modify the speed of its train in passing a licensee L.R.A.1917B.

walking along its track, with knowledge of the approach of the train, to prevent his being drawn under it, appears sound. It should be observed, however, that while the decision is apparently placed, in part at least, on the ground that such an occurrence, if possible, is nevertheless so improbable as not to be reasonably anticipated by the exercise of ordinary care; yet, apart from this, the decision is sustainable on the ground that those in charge of the train have a right to assume that a licensee walking along the track, who sees the train approaching, will get far enough away from the track to avoid being drawn under the train, if there is danger from suction, as they have a right to assume that a trespasser who sees the train approaching will leave the track; and in the latter part of the opinion the court intimates that its conclusions rest partly, at least, on the latter ground.

Whether or not the danger of a person beside the track being sucked under a rapidly moving train is such an occurrence as should reasonably be anticipated by the railroad company, so as to render it liable for the injury, is an interesting question, as to which there seems to be a difference of opinion among the authorities. In the majority of the cases, it has been apparently assumed that an injury of this kind is one which should be reasonably anticipated. Attention is called in this connection to the note appended to Kreigh v. Westinghouse, C. K. & Co. 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 684, on the question of anticipation as an element of proximate cause, and to the general statement therein that by the great weight of authority it is as necessary for the plaintiff to establish the fact that the injury was one which might have been reasonably anticipated by the doer of the negligent act, as it is to show that there was no other efficient intervening cause; and that the rule that an injury which could not have been foreseen or reasonably anticipated as the natural and probable result of a negligent act is not actionable because it is not the proximate cause is followed by the great majority of cases involving the question.

In accord with the view expressed in LOUISVILLE & N. R. Co. v. LAWSON, ante, 1161, that the danger of one beside the track being drawn by suction under a passing train is not one which should be reasonably anticipated by those operating the train, is the Missouri decision cited therein, Graney v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. (1900) 157 Mo. 666, 50 L.R.A. 153, 57 S. W. 276. However, on an earlier appeal in this case (1897) 140 Mo. 89, 38 L.R.A. 633, 41 S. W. 246, the majority of the court were apparently of the contrary opinion on this point. The action was for the death of a boy nearly twelve years old, who, while attempting to cross a railroad track, waited on a street crossing for a train to pass, standing about 2 or 3 feet from the rail, and was apparently thrown down by the force of the current of air from the train and rolled under it. On the first appeal, the majority of the court apparently considered that there was sufficient evidence of negligence on the part of the railway company in operating the train at a rate of speed exceeding 6 miles an hour, in violation of an ordinance, that the injury was one which might reasonably have been anticipated, and that the question of contributory negligence was for the jury. On the later appeal, however, as indicated above, a majority of the court were of the opinion, it appears, that if the injury occurred by the boy's being sucked under the train, it was not an occurrence which should have been reasonably anticipated, and hence there was no liability therefor.

In cases of injury to persons lawfully on station platforms as a result of suction or wind from a rapidly passing train, the courts have generally held that the questions of negligence and contributory negligence were for the jury, and have assumed apparently that recovery for such an injury is not precluded on the ground that it should not reasonably be anticipated.

Thus, where a man was waiting at night on a station platform for a train, and a belated express train, without notice of any kind, dashed by at the rate of a mile a minute, creating a suction which drew him along the platform and toward the train, so that he fell and received injuries from which he died, it was held that the question whether the deceased by standing within 3 feet of the edge of the platform at the time the train approached was guilty of contributory negligence was a question of fact for the jury, and that a nonsuit directed on that ground was erroneous. Munroe v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (1914) 85 N. J. L. 688, 90 Atl. 264, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 140. The decision assumes that there was sufficient evidence of negligence on the part of the railway company to require the submission of that question to the jury. And it should be observed that, although the deceased was not drawn under the train as the result of the suction, the court apparently assumed that the proximate cause of the death, in the absence of contributory negligence, was the suction produced by the train, and that the railway company would be liable for injuries so caused by the negligent running of a train past a station at a high rate of speed, without warning.

And in Crotshin v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (1915) 87 N. J. L. 11, 93 Atl. 110, the plaintiff recovered for injuries received by being drawn against an express train passing a station, or by having been thrown to the platform of the station, by the suction of the passing train. The court in sustaining the judgment dismissed the point, with the observation that under the authority of Munroe v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (N. J.) supra, it was not error to submit to the jury the question of fact upon which the liability of the defendant was rested, and that the verdict was not against the clear weight of the evidence.

Also, in Schulz v. New York, S. & W. R. Co. (1915) 87 N. J. L. 659, 94 Atl. 579, where there was evidence that the death of the plaintiff's husband was due to his being drawn by suction under a train which, without warning or notice, at a rate of from 55 to 60 miles an hour, passed a station platform on which he was standing 3 feet from the track, it was held that the questions of negligence of the railway company and of contributory negligence of the deceased were for the jury, and that it was error to direct a verdict for the defendant. In this case, one of the witnesses testified that she felt the effect of the passing train and held on to the platform to prevent being drawn under it. The court cited Munroe v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (N. J.) supra, as holding that it is the duty of the railroad company to give reasonable warning to persons lawfully on the platform, of the approach of a belated train traveling at a high rate of speed.

It was held also in Schulz v. New York, S. & W. R. Co. (N. J.) supra, that the complaint was sufficient to warrant recovery on the suction theory, where, after stating that the train passed at a high rate of speed, without notice or warning to the passengers on the platform, and that the train was of such width as to strike any person standing near the edge of the platform, it alleged that the train did, with great force and violence, "strike, draw to it, and drag along," the deceased.

And in Paulding v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1909) 132 App. Div. 68, 116 N. Y. Supp. 518, it was held that evidence tending to show that a twelve year old girl who had gone to a postoffice in a railway station stepped from the station onto the platform, which was less than 5 feet wide, and was caught in the suction of a train which, without warning of its approach, passed at a rate of 35 miles an hour, and was drawn under the train and killed, was sufficient to warrant a finding of negligence on the part of the railway company and of freedom from contributory negligence on the part of the deceased. It was said: "No one saw the accident. . . . However, the evidence indicates that the train must have been very near when the child stepped out upon the platform, and the jury might infer, from the facts and circumstances disclosed, that she did not walk heedlessly into the pathway of this train. . . . It is plain that the decedent had not left the platform, that she had not stepped upon the track; for it is not claimed by anyone that she was struck by the engine. The platform was less than 5 feet in width in front of the door. She had only just stepped out a moment before the accident, and it is unthinkable that a girl of twelve years of age would have deliberately walked into collision with a passing train running at the rate of speed testified to by the witnesses. The inference might, therefore, be properly drawn that this child was drawn into contact with the train by the force of the suction of the passing train, and that the accident occurred without any act of negligence on her part; for it was not negligent of her to step out upon this platform in the performance of her errand to the station, and she was not bound to look and listen for an approaching train."

So, there being no eyewitnesses of the accident, but it being conceded that the deceased was killed by a train, it was held in Richardson v. Detroit & M. R. Co. (1913) 176 Mich. 413, 142 N. W. 832, that the question of contributory negligence was properly submitted to the jury, especially in view of the presumption that the deceased was in the exercise of due care, where there was evidence from which it might be inferred that she was at the depot and might have mistaken the train by which she was killed for the train which she was expecting, that the train was running at a rate of from 30 to 40 miles an hour, and that the suction from it might have drawn her clothing into the wheels of the engine and caused her death.

However, in Kozlowski v. Rochester, S. & E. R. Co. (1911) 142 App. Div. 245, 126 N. Y. Supp. 609, it was held that a person standing on a platform at a country station of an interurban electric railway about 20 inches from a passing car could not recover damages due to the effect of wind from the car, the court considering that negligence on the part of the railway company was not shown, and that the injury was due to the negligence of the injured party in standing so near the track, while the car approached at nearly 50 miles an hour without slackening its speed or other indication that it would comply with his signal to stop. It was said: "While the story of the plaintiff as to the manner of the accident seems to be incredible, yet, assuming it to be truthful, it establishes no actionable negligence on the part of the defendant. The place was in a country district and on the defendant's right of way. The car was intended to run rapidly, and not to stop at stations in the country. . . . A fast railroad train passing a local station is not required to slow down unless there is something to indicate to the engineer that it is prudent to do so. If two or three people are standing on the platform, he is not to assume that they will step in front of the train or approach dangerously near it. The same rule should obtain in the operation of rapidly running cars on a street surface railway. Even if the motorman saw the plaintiff and his companion, and if vigilant he should have seen them, their presence on the platform would not suggest that they were in any danger from the car. The plaintiff was on the second plank from the track, and more than 20 inches from the extreme overhang of the car. He was looking at the car, and the motorman would be warranted in believing he would step back as it approached. It was not negligence in the circumstances to run the car rapidly. . . . The plaintiff's story proves that his own lack of caution contributed to his injuries. . . . The car was in the plain view of the plaintiff for at least 1,200 feet. He knew that it was coming very rapidly and without any slackening of its speed. There was no indication that it was to stop. His signals received no response or recognition. He kept his position unchanged, when a step back would have placed him beyond the possibility of danger." R. E. H.

NEVADA SUPREME COURT.

H. LOOSE, Respt.,

v.

LILLIAN LARSEN, Appt.

(— Nev. —, 161 Pac. 514.)

Sales — encouraging immoral business — recovery of purchase price.

One is not prevented from recovering the purchase price of liquors sold for resale to one having a license to deal in them by the fact that the resale will incidentally encourage the business of a house of ill-fame conducted by the buyer on the premises where the liquors are to be sold.

For other cases, see Contracts, III. g, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(December 15, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendant from an order of the District Court for Humboldt County denying a motion for new trial of an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a promissory note. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Salter & Robins, for appellant:

Note. — As to sale of goods to keeper or inmate of house of ill-fame, see annotation following this case post, 1168. L.R.A.1917B.

If the contract is illegal, it will not be enforced.

Drexler v. Tyrrell, 15 Nev. 115.

Where goods are sold for the express purpose of enabling the buyer or beneficiary to accomplish an unlawful purpose, the agreement is void, and there can be no recovery.

9 Cyc. 573, note 66; Ball v. Putnam, 123 Cal. 134, 55 Pac. 773; Standard Furniture Co. v. Van Alstine, 22 Wash. 670, 51 L.R.A. 889, 79 Am. St. Rep. 960, 62 Pac. 146; Ballerino v. Ballerino, 147 Cal. 544, 82 Pac. 199; Otis v. Freeman, 199 Mass. 160, 127 Am. St. Rep. 476, 85 N. E. 168.

Where a contract grows immediately out of, and is connected with, an illegal or immoral act, a court of justice will not lend its aid to enforce it.

Armstrong v. Toler, 11 Wheat. 258, 6 L. ed. 468.

Mr. R. M. Hardy for respondent.

Coleman, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial.

The judgment in this case is in favor of respondent, who was the plaintiff in the trial court, and is based upon an action to recover judgment upon a certain promissory note executed by appellant. For defense to the cause of action mentioned, the answer alleged that the note described in the complaint was given to cover a balance of an indebtedness due plaintiff for liquors sold and delivered by him to defendant, who was engaged in conducting a house of ill-fame within the restricted distance from a church edifice which was used for religious worship, knowing that said liquors would be resold by the defendant upon said premises to the inmates of said house of ill-fame and the visitors thereto, in order to encourage patronage of said house, that the same might be made more profitable.

Appellant contends that, since a contract which is founded upon an immoral or illegal consideration is void, and since it is against the law of Nevada to conduct a house of ill-fame within a certain distance of a church edifice which is used for religious worship, as did appellant, and since the sale of the liquors mentioned encouraged such violation of the law by appellant, there is no valid consideration for the note sued upon, and hence the order refusing to grant defendant a new trial was error.

It is the general rule of law that where goods are sold for the express purpose of enabling the buyer to accomplish an unlawful or immoral purpose, there can be no recovery for the price of the goods sold; but where the vendor merely has knowledge that the purchaser intends to use the goods for an immoral or illegal purpose, and does nothing to aid in carrying out the immoral or illegal purpose, the vendor is entitled to recover. We quote from Cyc. as follows: "It is held in England that, where the agreement is innocent in itself, but the intention of one of the parties is unlawful, as where goods are bought or money borrowed to be used for an unlawful purpose, the mere fact that the other party knows of such purpose renders the agreement illegal and void. . . . In the United States, while some courts have followed the English rule, most of the courts have taken a different view, and have held that the mere knowledge of the seller of goods or services . . . that the buyer intends an illegal use of them is no defense to an action for the price or for rent." 9 Cyc. 571, 572.

Ruling Case Law says: "A question which is apparently involved in some obscurity is whether a contract is rendered illegal by the fact that one party knows of the other's intention to further an illegal purpose by means of the contract; as, for instance, to use the subject-matter thereof for an unlawful purpose. That there is some difference of opinion on the subject there would seem to be no doubt. From some decisions the rule is deducible that knowledge of the other party's illegal object may, at least under some circumstances, indicate an intention to aid the unlawful object, or constitute participation in an unlawful act. However, in a majority of the decisions dealing with particular contracts, mere knowledge by one of the parties of the other's intention to use the subject-matter for an unlawful purpose has been held not to render the contract illegal." 6 R. C. L. pp. 696, 697.

The supreme court of South Carolina, in Wallace v. Lark, 12 S. C. 576, 32 Am. Rep. 516, uses the following language: "We are not disposed, however, to rest the case here, but are rather inclined to adopt the rule laid down by Lord Mansfield in Hodgson v. Temple, 5 Taunt. 181, 1 Marsh. 5, 14 Revised Rep. 738, that mere knowledge of the vendor that the purchaser intends to make an illegal or immoral use of the article purchased is not sufficient to defeat an action for the purchase money. There must be something more; something to show that the vendor was to participate in the illegal transaction, or that his intention in making the sale was not the ordinary purpose to dispose of his goods to the best advantage, but to aid or promote the illegal or immoral purpose for which the article was bought."

Again we quote: "One who has received the benefits of the complete performance by the plaintiff of a contract which was neither malum in se nor malum prohibitum cannot successfully defend an action for the payment of his indebtedness which has accrued therefrom on the ground that either he or another intended to do some unlawful act which was no part of the consideration nor of the performance of the agreement." Hanover Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 48 C. C. A. 483, 109 Fed. 422.

The supreme court of New Hampshire, in Hill v. Spear, 50 N. H. 253, 9 Am. Rep. 205, after reviewing all of the decisions which had been rendered at the time that case was before the court, reached the conclusion that mere knowledge that goods sold are intended by the purchaser to be used unlawfully was not sufficient to prevent recovery for the purchase price of the goods.

It would serve no useful purpose to here review the cases at length which sustain this view, and we content ourselves by calling attention to the authorities which appear in the notes to the citations to Cyc. and Ruling Case Law, supra.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in Hanauer v. Doane, 12 Wall. 342, 20 L. ed. 439, said: "Where to draw the precise line between the cases in which the vendor's knowledge of the purchaser's intent to make an unlawful use of the goods will vitiate the contract and those in which it will not may be difficult. Perhaps it cannot be done by exact definition."

While no doubt it is difficult in many cases to know just where to draw the line where the purchaser intends to make an unlawful use of the goods bought, we do not think this is such a case, because appellant intended to make a lawful use of the goods. There was certainly nothing unlawful or immoral in the sale by respondent to appellant of the liquors, nor is there anything in the laws of this state which prohibited the sale of liquors at the house which was occupied by appellant. In fact, she had a license from the duly constituted authorities to sell liquor upon the premises in question. The use to which appellant intended to put the liquors, and to which in fact they were put, being perfectly legal, we are unable to see that the doing by respondent's grantee, with the goods purchased, that which she had a legal right to do, though done with a bad motive, as was known by respondent, could in any way affect respondent's right of recovery. No authority has been called to our attention, nor have we been able to find one, which holds that a person who sells goods to another who intends to resell them in a legitimate manner, though such legitimate resales may incidentally encourage an illegal or immoral business, and all with the knowledge of the vendor, cannot recover. Yet that is what we are asked to hold in this case. While we are anxious to maintain every rule of law which tends to promote civic decency, we are of the opinion that to sustain appellant's contention would be to take a step which neither the law nor sound business principles will justify.

It is ordered that the order denying appellant's motion for a new trial be affirmed.

Norcross, Ch. J., and McCarran, J., concur.

Annotation—Sale of goods to keeper or inmate of house of ill-fame.

As to insurance on bawdyhouse or furniture therein, see notes to Conithan v. Royal Ins. Co. 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 214, and Aetna Ins. Co. v. Heidelberg, L.R.A. 1917B, 253.

As to effect of landlord's knowledge that tenant intended to use premises in violation of law, see notes to Harbison v. Shirley, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 663, and Ashford v. Mace, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1104.

In harmony with the decision in LOOSE v. LARSEN, ante, 1166, that a vendor of goods who does not participate in the running of a house of ill-fame, or do anything in furtherance thereof, may recover the purchase price of the goods, though he knew that the vendee intended them to be kept and used in such a house, are: Hollenberg Music Co. v. Berry (1907) 85 Ark. 9, 122 Am. St. Rep. 17, 106 S. W. 1172 (sale of piano); Belmont v. Jones House Furnishing Co. (1910) 94 Ark. 96, 140 Am. St. Rep. 112, 125 S. W. 651 (sale of furniture); Schankel v. Moffatt (1893) 53 Ill. App. 382 (sale of furniture); Hubbard v. Moore (1872) 24 La. Ann. 591, 13 Am. Rep. 128 (sale of furniture); Sampson Bros. v. Townsend (1873) 25 La. Ann. 78 (sale of furniture); Anheuser-Busch Brewing Asso. v. Mason (1890) 44 Minn. 318, 9 L.R.A. 508, 20 Am. St. Rep. 580, 46 N. W. 558 (sale of liquor); Washington Liquor Co. v. Shaw (1905) 38 Wash. 398, 80 Pac. 536, 3 Ann. Cas. 153 (sale of liquor).

And the mere knowledge of the seller of clothing that the purchaser is a prostitute will not defeat his recovery for the price, unless he expects to be paid L.R.A.1917B.

out of the profits of her prostitution, or does something in aid of it. Bowry v. Bennet (1808) 1 Campb. (Eng.) 348, 10 Revised Rep. 697.

So, also, in Lloyd v. Johnson (1798) 1 Bos. & P. 340, 126 Eng. Reprint, 939, 4 Revised Rep. 822, one employed to wash clothes for a prostitute, knowing her to be such, was not precluded from recovering for the work and labor by the use to which the clothes might be applied, the court stating that the unfortunate woman must have clean linen, and it is impossible for the court to take into consideration which of these articles were used by the defendant to an improper purpose and which were not.

And in Mahood v. Tealza (1874) 26 La. Ann. 108, 21 Am. Rep. 546, it was held that the rule followed in the Louisiana cases of Hubbard v. Moore, (1872) 24 La. Ann. 591, 13 Am. Rep. 128, and Sampson Bros. v. Townsend (1873) 25 La. Ann. 78, applied even to a sale by one keeper of such a house to another, of the furniture of such house.

In a well reasoned opinion, however, Morgan, J., in dissenting, pointed out that the Sampson and Hubbard Cases (La.) supra, were cases of sales by dealers in furniture, while the Mahood Case was the case of a woman who rented a house and sold the contents thereof to another, with the knowledge that it had been, and that it was the avowed intention that it should continue to be, used as a public house of prostitution, the business of which was encouraged by her presence and assisted with her means, and so was a case where the law leaves such people where it finds them, and takes no interest in their dispute.

In Hubbard v. Moore (La.) supra, in denying the contention of defendant that plaintiff promoted the interest of defendant by supplying her with furniture on terms of credit to facilitate her success in a career of vice and infamy, in order thereby that he himself might be benefited, the court said: "We cannot attribute such a motive to him. Clearly a distinction ought to be drawn between acts done manifestly in derogation of public morals, and purposely to promote vice and immorality, and acts not having such manifest purpose or tendency, but which might remotely and indirectly be auxiliary to that object. In acts of the latter class there would be no absolute violation of public morals. A turpis causa would not arise in such a case to vitiate a contract in which the offense against morals would be merely conjectural. To the vicious and depraved as well as to the good and virtuous belong the right to acquire the needs and comforts of a common humanity. A different doctrine would adopt the visionary notion that 'there is to be no more cakes and ale.' The fair dealer who, by lawful contract, furnishes the dissolute with the necessities and conveniences of life, should not be debarred the right of enforcing payment for his goods by the effrontery of his vendee asserting in a court of justice that the things furnished were obtained for the express purpose of putting them to disreputable uses. The seller who furnishes an article adapted to a legitimate and proper purpose is not responsible in a court of morals, and much less in a court of law, for a subsequent perversion of its use by the buyer. In the case at bar it is shown that the furniture was sold at cash prices, with time given for payment. The seller, there is no doubt, knew that it was to be used in a house of ill-fame, but how his knowledge of that fact involves him in the guilt of the inmates of that house, as an aider and abettor of lewdness and depravity, we think is not apparent. Although it is not shown that when he delivered the furniture he told the defendant to go her way and sin no more, it is not thence to be inferred that he encouraged her in continuing in her immoral course of life. That he contributed to enable her to continue it by selling her the furniture is too vague, hypothetical, and remote to form an impediment to his recovery on the contract."

L.R.A.1917B.

And in Sampson Bros. v. Townsend (La.) supra, the court said: "The defendant seeks to avoid the payment of a debt by pleading her own infamy. The furniture was bought and several instalments paid on the debt. She wishes now to pay the balance by lending her aid to the elevation of the morals of the community, and invokes the maxim, 'contra bonos mores.' To permit her to succeed by using a good maxim in so bad a cause would not, in our opinion, work good to the morals of the community, certainly not to defendants. Much refinement was indulged in in argument on the broad question. The interests of society are better subserved by adhering to plain, well-defined rules of bargain and sale. To desert these upon the plea of elevating morals, when the means used open wide the door for other evils, is at least an experiment which courts should be slow to make. We prefer to leave the correction of evil to the legislative branch of the government."

So, also, in Anheuser-Busch Brewing Asso. v. Mason (1890) 44 Minn. 318, 9 L.R.A. 508, 20 Am. St. Rep. 580, 46 N. W. 558, the court said: "The agent who made the sales, upon whose testimony the defendant saw fit to rest her case, knew that she was engaged in the unlawful business of keeping a house of ill-fame, and admits also that he supposed the beer would be used or sold in her place of business. Nothing further was shown which connected the plaintiff or its agent with any violation of the law. The burden was upon the defendant to show that an enforcement of the contract would be in violation of the settled policy of the state, or injurious to the morals of its people, and no court should declare a contract illegal on doubtful or uncertain grounds, and it may be difficult to distinguish between the cases in which the vendor, with knowledge of the vendee's unlawful purpose, does not become a confederate, and those wherein he aids and assists to an extent sufficient to vitiate the sale; but this difficulty is not apparent in the case at bar."

And in Washington Liquor Co. v. Shaw (1905) 38 Wash. 398, 80 Pac. 536, 3 Ann. Cas. 153, the court said: "Where property is sold absolutely and unconditionally, mere knowledge on the part of the vendor that the property will thereafter be sold illegally, or applied to some illegal or immoral use, will not bar an action to recover the purchase price unless it is a part of the contract of sale that the property shall be so sold or used, or unless the vendor aids or participates in the illegal objects otherwise than by the mere act of making the sale."

There have been a few cases that have denied the recovery for goods sold to a prostitute. In some of the cases, however, it will be seen that the vendor was considered to have participated in the running of the house of ill-fame, or to have done something in furtherance thereof. Such was the case in Burns v. Seep (1879) 6 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 847, which denied recovery upon notes given by defendant for furniture purchased of plaintiff, the evidence showing that defendant and her sister were earning a livelihood in a certain place by sewing, and that, on the suggestion of plaintiff that, by receiving company, they would make a better living,—in other words, by keeping a house of prostitution,—they moved to another place and rented a house, and that, to enable the defendant to carry on the business of prostitution, the plaintiff sold furniture to her which was the consideration of the note sued on.

And in Pearce v. Brooks (1866) L. R. 1 Exch. 213, 35 L. J. Exch. N. S. 134, 12 Jur. N. S. 342, 14 L. T. N. S. 288, 14 Week. Rep. 614, 6 Eng. Rul. Cas. 326, action to recover for brougham sold to a prostitute, it was held that there could be no recovery, as the evidence showed that the vendor knew that such brougham was for the purpose of display,—that is, for the purpose of enabling such prostitute to pursue her calling.

Also in Hamilton v. Grainger (1859) 5 Hurlst. & N. 40, 157 Eng. Reprint, 1092, 5 Jur. N. S. 1108, action for goods sold and delivered, it was held that defendant was entitled to a plea, inter alia, that the goods were wines and supper supplied to defendant in a brothel kept by the plaintiff, for the purpose of being consumed there by the defendant and divers prostitutes in a debauch, to incite them to riotous, disorderly, and immoral conduct.

So, too, in Abbott Furniture Co. v. Mobley (1914) 141 Ga. 456, 81 S. E. 196, a bail-trover action to recover furniture sold on a retention-of-title contract, the denial of the right to recover seems to have been based upon the fact that plaintiff knew that the goods were to be used in a house of ill-fame, and intended the use to be in aid of the maintenance of such a house.

However, it is doubtful whether recovery in the Abbott Case could have been had in any event, as the court cited with approval and as authority Harris L.R.A. 1917B.

v. Barfield Music Co. (1916) — Ga. App. —, 89 S. E. 592, action of bail trover to recover for an electric piano sold upon a retention-of-title contract, for use in a house of prostitution, which denied the right to recover on the ground that, as the keeping and maintaining of a lewd house is penalized by statute, one who sells goods for use in such house will not be assisted in a recovery therefor. Further to support its decision the court quoted from Ralston v. Boady (1856) 20 Ga. 449, an action by a landlord against the keeper of a lewd house to recover rent for the place, where, referring to the inmates of such house, the court said: "As women they are entitled to eat and drink, to dress and be sheltered as others, but no one, at the risk of loss to themselves, must furnish any of these comforts or supplies for the purpose of exciting, encouraging, or aiding these harlots to commit a crime; for if they do, and the jury so find, they will and ought to lose their money. For the maxim ex turpi causa non oritur actio is as old as the law."

In Reed v. Brewer (1896) 90 Tax. 144, 37 S. W. 418, recovery on a series of promissory notes given for furniture used by defendant to refurnish her house of prostitution was denied on the ground that the plaintiff aided and abetted defendant in the furtherance of her venture. To support this contention the court said: "We are of the opinion that from the facts: (1) that so large an amount of furniture was sold by Erastus Reed to defendant on open account, apparently without security, with the knowledge on his part of the very purpose for which it was to be used, and that the money to pay for same 'had to come out of prostitution'; (2) that the payments were to be made weekly or monthly in such small sums as defendant might be able to realize from such business, conducted with the aid of the furniture, extending over a number of years; (3) that thereafter defendant 'at the request of Erastus Reed, and in order to enable him to raise money at the bank,' executed the notes and the instrument securing same; (4) that said instrument provided that, until all the money was paid, the title to the furniture was to remain solely in Reed, defendant to retain possession, but not to remove same from the house of prostitution where it was being illegally used, nor sell same; the trial court might properly have found not only that Erastus Reed sold the furniture to defendant knowing that she was to use it for the purpose of putting up and carrying on a house of prostitution, and that his pay must come from the revenues derived therefrom, but also that Erastus Reed, at the time of the sale, contemplated and subsequently was actually aiding and abetting her in the venture. We are not informed, however, whether or not it did so find, as there are no conclusions of fact by the trial court in the record. Under these circumstances we must, in support of the judgment, presume that the court found every fact fairly deducible from the evidence, as we have seen this was necessary to its rendition." The court further said that it expressed no opinion as to the legality of the transaction had the evidence, as contended by plaintiff, only justified the conclusion that Reed sold the furniture with knowledge of the purpose to which it was to be applied, and that defendant had no other means of paying for same than the proceeds of her immoral vocation.

Also in Anderson v. Freeman (1907) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 100 S. W. 350, enforcement of note given for furniture to be used in a house of prostitution was denied on the ground that "the conclusion and inference to be drawn from the undisputed evidence in the record is to the effect that the transactions that culminated in taking up the Sadie Beard note and mortgage was to enable the appellant to continue the unlawful and immoral business, and this fact must have been known to the appellee, and also that he knew that from the continuation of the business appellant expected to obtain money by which she would be enabled to pay off and discharge the note and mortgage sued upon."

In Hayes v. G. A. Stowers Furniture Co. (1915) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 180 S. W. 149, in denying recovery for furniture sold for use in a house of prostitution, the decision being based upon the fact that there was more than a mere knowledge that the goods were to be used in such a place, the court said: "We are of the opinion that a contract for the sale of the household goods, made with a knowledge of the unlawful use to which the goods were to be put, contemplated by the parties at the time of their sale and delivery, and an agreement made and entered into between the parties to the contract of sale that the goods should be so used, and that, during the time of such use, the goods to be kept at such place and in such unlawful use, as found by the jury, whose finding we approve, coupled with the contract pleaded by the appellee, which shows that, in the meantime, the title to the goods to remain in the seller and the unpaid balance of the contract price to be paid in monthly instalments, is affected by such vice as to render the contract unenforceable in the courts. We are aware of the decisions that hold that a mere knowledge that the goods may be put to an unlawful use is not sufficient to prevent the collection of the claim. But the facts of this case go far beyond a mere knowledge of an unlawful use. Here is an agreement that the goods to which appellee retains title should be put to the unlawful use, thereby necessarily participating in the wrong. The appellant was furnishing a house to be used as a bawdyhouse. The house to be so used must necessarily be furnished. It could not have been used without the aid rendered her by the appellee. The furniture was necessary to the use of the house. With the house furnished, she could and did make unlawful use of both house and furniture, and that with full knowledge of and agreement with appellee as to the character of its use. The rule is well established that any contract, promise, or agreement 'calculated to encourage immorality is void.'"

The court in the Hayes Case, it will be seen, takes the view that one who sells goods on a retention-of-title contract of necessity aids and abets the venture, and in this view the court finds support in the decision in Standard Furniture Co. v. Van Alstine (1900) 22 Wash. 670, 51 L.R.A. 889, 79 Am. St. Rep. 960, 62 Pac. 145, which held that a vendor of goods with knowledge that they are to be used in a house of ill-fame must be deemed to aid and participate in the immoral and illegal use, so as to defeat its right of action to recover the goods from a purchaser thereof on sale under execution against the vendee, where the sale reserves title, ownership, and possession of the property, with the right to take possession even before the maturity of the deferred payments whenever the vendor deemed himself insecure. The court in this case said: "It is true that it is held in many well-considered cases, and it is, perhaps, the weight of authority, that mere knowledge on the part of the vendor of goods, that the vendee designs to and will put them to an immoral or illegal use, is not, of itself, sufficient to bar an action brought to recover the purchase price of the goods sold. But in all of the cases announcing this rule, which have been brought to our attention, the transaction was one in which the owner of the goods at the time of their delivery to the vendee parted with his title and right of possession, so that thereafter the relation between the vendor and vendee was that of debtor and creditor merely, or that of debtor and creditor, with a mortgage over to secure the deferred payments of the purchase price. The sale and delivery of the property was complete, and no element of participation or aid in the immoral or illegal design of the vendee could be imputed to the vendor. On the other hand, it is held by all the cases, even those which announce the rule contended for by the appellant, that if the vendor has knowledge of the immoral or illegal design of the vendee, and in any way aids or participates in that design, or if the contract of sale is so connected with the illegal or immoral purpose or transaction of the vendee as to be inseparable from it, the vendor cannot recover.

Where the sale is absolute, though on credit, the vendee becomes the owner of the property purchased, and has all the rights therein that any owner has over his own property, and he may make such use of it as to him seems fit, without let or hindrance from his vendor. Under an ordinary contract of conditional sale the law is different. The vendee thereunder, the title being reserved in the vendor, is a mere bailee of the property. If the use of the property be not prescribed in the contract of sale, the purchaser must nevertheless use it for a lawful and proper purpose, and in the way its nature contemplates it should be used, or else suffer a forfeiture of his contract. It is clear that the relation between the parties to the contract in the present case was something more than that of debtor and creditor merely, and it would seem it was something more than an ordinary contract of conditional sale. The appellant not only reserved 'title, ownership, and possession of the property,' but reserved the right to 'take possession of the aforesaid personal property whenever it may deem itself insecure, even before the maturity' of the deferred payments. This practically left the control of the use of the property with the appellant; and as the evidence shows that it had knowledge of the immoral and illegal use to which the vendees intended to and did put the property, it is hard to conceive why it did not aid and participate in that immoral and illegal use. The distinction between knowing that a buyer is intending to put the property to some unlawful use and participating in that unlawful intent is, to say the least, somewhat refined; and where a vendor, for the mere sake of gain, makes a contract the effect of which is to put his own property in the hands of persons who will use it to conduct a house of prostitution, knowing it will be so used, the courts ought not to be astute to find nice distinctions which will enable him to avoid the consequences of his acts."

In making a distinction between sales on a conditional contract and sales where the vendor does not retain title, the Van Alstine Case is in conflict with Hollenberg Music Co. v. Berry (1907) 85 Ark. 9, 122 Am. St. Rep. 17, 106 S. W. 1172, and Belmont v. Jones House Furnishing Co. (1910) 94 Ark. 96, 140 Am. St. Rep. 112, 125 S. W. 651, cited supra, in both of which cases there were retention-of-title contracts. J. H. B.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

W. H. MURRAY, by Next Friend,
v.

JOHN THOMPSON et al.

(— Tenn. —, 188 S. W. 578.)

Bills and notes — indorsement by infant — disaffirmance.

1. An infant is not precluded from disaffirming his indorsement of a promissory note by the provision of the Negotiable Instruments Act that his indorsement passes title to the instrument.

For other cases, see Infants, I. d., 2, b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Note. — Upon the right of an infant to disaffirm transfer of note by indorsement, see annotation following this case, post, 1174. L.R.A.1917B.

Same — indorsee as bona fide holder.

2. An indorsee of a note is not a bona fide holder as against an infant indorser, but the latter may disaffirm and recover possession of the note.

For other cases, see Bills and Notes, V. b, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(October 7, 1916.)

PETITION for a writ of certiorari to review a decree of the Court of Civil Appeals reversing a decree of the Chancery Court for Hamilton County in complainant's favor in a suit to disaffirm a contract of indorsement of a note of which he was payee, and to recover the note from defendant Thompson, indorsee. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Tatum, Thach, & Lynch, for petitioner:

Section 22 of the Negotiable Instruments Law does not affect the right of a minor to disaffirm and recover back a note indorsed and transferred by him during minority.

Norton, Bills & Notes, 4th ed. p. 90, note, p. 286; Brannan, Neg. Inst. 2d ed. pp. 28-214, 244; Huffcut, Neg. Inst. p. 17.

A deed of an infant to his real estate transfers the title and right of possession to the purchaser.

Bingham, Infancy, pp. 2-8; 22 Cyc. 531; Matherson v. Davis, 2 Coldw. 443; Scott v. Buchanan, 11 Humph. 468; White v. Flora, 2 Overt. 426.

Even if complainant, during minority, acquiesced in the act of his father, he would not be bound thereby, because an infant cannot appoint an agent, and can at any time disaffirm the act of any such agent.

22 Cyc. 514; Mechem, Agency, § 51; 31 Cyc. 1208; Semple v. Morrison, 7 T. B. Mon. 298.

Messrs. Cantrell & Moon, for defendants:

Since the enactment of the Negotiable Instruments Act, defendant is clearly entitled to the entire proceeds of the note in question, interest upon the same, and the cost of this cause.

Huffcut, Neg. Inst. 17; Mason v. Westmoreland, 1 Head, 555; Union Trust Co. v. McGinty, 212 Mass. 205, 98 N. E. 679, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 525; Unaka Nat. Bank v. Butler, 113 Tenn. 574, 83 S. W. 655; Edwards v. Hambly Fruit Products Co. 133 Tenn. 142, 186 S. W. 163; Roach v. Woodall, 91 Tenn. 206, 30 Am. St. Rep. 883, 18 S. W. 407; Crawford, Anno. Neg. Inst. Revised ed. p. 55; Jefferson Bank v. Chapman-White Lyons Co. 122 Tenn. 416, 123 S. W. 641.

Williams, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit by complainant, a minor, to disaffirm a contract of indorsement of a note of which he was payee, and to recover the note from Thompson, indorsee.

Complainant while in the employ of a brick company received personal injuries, and the company executed to him a note of $1,750 in satisfaction of his claim to damages. The note was made payable June 1, 1915, which was the date on which complainant would arrive of age. On October 16, 1914, W. A. Murray, the father of complainant, with the knowledge and authority of the latter, sold the note to Thompson, indorsing the name of the son without apprising Thompson of the fact that he himself was not the payee. The proceeds of the note L.R.A.1917B.

were deposited to complainant's account in bank, and later were invested in a saloon business in the name of the father and son, and in a short time lost. There was no actual fraud on the part of complainant in the transaction with Thompson.

The chancellor decreed that complainant was entitled to disaffirm and recover; but the court of civil appeals reversed the ruling.

The last-named court was of opinion that complainant would have been entitled to the relief awarded by the chancellor under the rules of law in force before the passage of the Negotiable Instruments Law (Acts 1899, chap. 94); but that said act, by its § 22, so changed the law as to deny complainant the remedy sought. The section thus relied on is as follows: "The indorsement or assignment of the instrument by a corporation, or by an infant, passes the property therein, notwithstanding that from want of capacity the corporation or infant may incur no liability thereon."

The question to be ruled seems never to have been passed on by any court of last resort. In its solution light may be afforded by a reference to the history and object of the Negotiable Instruments Law. It was drafted for the purpose of codifying the principal rules of the law merchant as announced in numerous decisions which were deemed to embody the best doctrine. It was not the purpose to change such of those rules as had been uniformly accepted, but rather to make the law certain and uniform by the adoption of that one of two or more rules, arising out of discordant decisions in different jurisdictions, which was thought to be the best pronouncement of commercial law.

One of the questions on which judicial decisions were in conflict was whether an infant's indorsement of a negotiable instrument was void, or only voidable. This is demonstrated by what was said in Roach v. Woodall, 91 Tenn. 206, 212, 30 Am. St. Rep. 883, 18 S. W. 408.

"Mr. Story, in his work on Promissory Notes, §§ 77-80, puts upon the same ground the minor's incapacity to indorse and make a promissory note, and shows that there is a conflict of opinion as to whether such act is void or voidable. . . .

"Mr. Story thought the weight of authority preponderated in favor of holding promissory notes given or indorsed by an infant voidable only. § 78."

The lack of uniformity in the authorities on that point is also commented on and demonstrated in 3 R. C. L. p. 1086, § 292.

It was to make certain and uniform the law on this point that § 22 was embodied in the Negotiable Instruments Act. In stipu-lating that the indorsement of the instrument by an infant "passes property therein," it was meant to provide that the contract of indorsement is not void, and that his indorsee has the right to enforce payment from all parties prior to the infant indorser. The incapacity of the minor cannot be availed of by prior parties.

It was not intended to provide that the indorsee should become the owner of the instrument by title indefeasible as against the infant, or to make the act of indorsement an irrevocable one.

The act does not concern the right of such an indorser to disaffirm under the rules of the law of infancy. The words, "passes the property therein," if given a meaning that would deny that right in respect of a contract of indorsement, would deprive the infant of the right to reinvest in himself the title to the instrument against a holder who had knowledge of the indorser's infancy. The quoted words are not qualified so as to save his rights in such assumed case. It must be admitted that the legislature did not intend any such radical and grossly inequitable departure from a settled and salutary rule of law.

The Negotiable Instruments Law, in this section, is not to be treated as going further than did the corresponding section of the English Bills of Exchange Act, § 22, which provides: "Where a bill is drawn or indorsed by an infant, minor, or corporation having no capacity or power to incur liability on a bill, the drawing or indorsement entitles the holder to receive payment of the bill, and to enforce it against any other party thereto." 45 & 46 Vict. chap. 61.

The English act was before the National Conference of State Boards of Commissioners when the American act was drafted, and that there is such correspondence in meaning is the view expressed by Judge Brewster, president of the conference. The American act went no further. 10 Yale L. J. 84; Brannan, Neg. Inst. 2d ed. 185, 224; Norton, Bills & Notes, 4th ed. 90, 285.

The act having no effect on the right of an infant to disaffirm, the precedents in relation to that right govern. This court in Roach v. Woodall, supra, held that the minor might disaffirm and avoid the act of indorsement, and an opinion was intimated (the facts did not call for a decision), that one who became holder of the note was chargeable with knowledge of the indorser's incapacity. The court used language that has pertinency to the facts of the pending case: "A transferee who receives by delivery merely from bearer a note with the name of another indorsed upon it, ought to be charged with notice who that indorser was, and whether a person who could in law bind himself by an indorsement. If he does not in fact know the indorser, he would hardly predicate anything of an indorsement, or rely on it without inquiry. Such inquiry would disclose the minority of the indorser, and, consequently, it might well be holden that the transferee was chargeable with notice of the invalidity of the indorsement."

The common-law rule is that the purchaser and indorsee of such a note is not a bona fide holder as against an infant indorser, and that the latter may disaffirm and recover the note from the possession of the former, who takes with constructive notice of the incapacity. Hosler v. Beard, 54 Ohio St. 398, 35 L.R.A. 161, 56 Am. St. Rep. 720, 43 N. E. 1040; McClain v. Davis, 77 Ind. 419; Case v. Espenschied, 169 Mo. 215, 92 Am. St. Rep. 633, 69 S. W. 276, 3 R. C. L. p. 1028, § 285; id. p. 1086, § 292; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. 6th ed. 806a; 1 Parsons, Notes & Bills, 276.

The chancellor made a proper disposition of the case in his decree. The decree of the Court of Civil Appeals is therefore reversed, and that of the chancellor affirmed.

Annotation—Right of an infant to disaffirm transfer of note by indorsement.

It has frequently been stated in the books dealing with indorsements by an infant prior to the Negotiable Instruments Act, that there is some doubt whether such an indorsement is void or only voidable.<sup>1</sup> The authorities, however, are speaking of an indorsement generally and this includes not only the transfer of the paper, but the implied contract to pay the bill at maturity if it be not duly paid by the acceptor or maker. It seems evident that when the authorities speak of the doubt as to whether the indorsement is void or merely voidable, they are considering the indorsement in the latter aspect.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See MURRAY v. THOMPSON, ante, 1172, and authorities cited. The statement as to the doubt about the indorsement is sometimes contained in a statement in which the writer is considering not alone the

indorsement, but the making of an instrument.

<sup>2</sup> Story in his work on Promissory Notes, § 80, makes it clear that he is thus considering the indorsement.

None of the authorities have cited any cases in which the indorsement of an infant has been held void as to the passing of title, nor does a search disclose any. The cases uniformly hold that an indorsee of the infant may recover on the note against prior parties, where there has been no disaffirmance.<sup>3</sup> Recovery may be had by the indorsee even though the maker has paid the amount of the note to the father of the infant with knowledge of the indorsement.<sup>4</sup> It is stated: "That an infant may indorse a negotiable promissory note, or a bill of exchange, made payable to him, so as to transfer the property to an indorsee for a valuable consideration, seems to be well settled in the law merchant and is no ways repugnant to the principles of the common law."<sup>4</sup>

The right of an indorsee to recover is put in some cases on the theory that the defense of infancy is a privilege personal to the infant.<sup>5</sup> Other cases do not consider it necessary to decide whether the infant might avail himself of his infancy to avoid the indorsement.<sup>6</sup> Again, it is stated that by making the note the makers asserted the competency of the payee to negotiate and assign it, and cannot be permitted to gainsay the assertion so made.<sup>7</sup>

But the infant is entitled to disaffirm, and thereafter there can be no recovery by his assignee, indorsee, or a purchaser from such assignee or indorsee;<sup>8</sup> pay-

<sup>3</sup> Frazier v. Massey (1860) 14 Ind. 382, sustaining a demurrer to an answer of the maker setting up the infancy of the payee, the indorser of the complainant in the action.

Blake v. Livingston County (1871) 61 Barb (N. Y.) 149, holding that the assignee of the obligee in a bond issued by a county to pay bounty to volunteers enlisted in the Civil War could recover thereon, although the obligee was an infant. The bond in this case is determined by the court to belong to that class of obligations in the nature of commercial paper negotiable by delivery under an assignment in blank.

In Dulty v. Brownfield (1845) 1 Pa. St. 497, the indorsee of a promissory note payable to the order of a firm was held entitled to maintain an action against the maker although the name of the firm had been indorsed by an infant partner.

In Grey v. Cooper (1782) 3 Dougl. K. B. 65, 99 Eng. Reprint, 541, 1 Selw. N. P. 306, the drawer of a bill of exchange was held liable to an indorsee of the same although the payee of the bill was an infant.

An indorsee of a bill of exchange drawn payable to an infant who was the first indorser thereon was held entitled to recover against the acceptors thereof, where they accepted it knowing that the payee was an infant and that he had in fact indorsed the bill before they accepted it, and it further appeared that the acceptors had been in the practice of raising money by means of such bills. Jones v. Darch (1817) 4 Price, 300, 146 Eng. Reprint, 471.

The indorsee of a bill of exchange was held entitled to recover thereon against the acceptor in Taylor v. Croker (1803) 4 Esp. (Eng.) 187, although it was drawn by infants in their own favor and indorsed by them. Apparently the infants were of age at the time the suit was brought, and the court states that infants may make themselves liable by a promise after full age, and that the infant parties may have made a new promise in the case at bar. It is stated, however, that though the plaintiff derived title through infants, the bill L.R.A.1917B.

was not void in his hands and he may recover.

In Garner v. Cook (1868) 30 Ind. 331, an action upon a note payable to an infant was sustained in favor of one who had possession of the note without indorsement, the court stating that the maker could not avail himself of the minority of the payee.

In Hardy v. Waters (1853) 38 Me. 450, the indorsement was made by one authorized by the infant to make it for him, and the claim was that no such power could be conferred by the infant upon another. It was admitted that the infant might transfer a promissory note payable to himself by indorsement.

<sup>4</sup> Nightingale v. Withington (1818) 15 Mass. 272, 8 Am. Dec. 101, the indorsee of the note knew the payee and indorser to be under age.

<sup>5</sup> Frazier v. Massey (1860) 14 Ind. 302; Grey v. Cooper (1782) 3 Dougl. K. B. 65, 99 Eng. Reprint, 541, 1 Selw. N. P. 306.

<sup>6</sup> Nightingale v. Withington (Mass.) supra.

<sup>7</sup> Frazier v. Massey (Ind.) and Grey v. Cooper (Eng.) supra.

<sup>8</sup> Willis v. Twambly (1816) 13 Mass. 204; the note involved in this case was a non-negotiable note. After the sale by the infant, he disaffirmed the sale and notified the purchaser, demanding the note, which was refused; thereupon he forbade the purchaser to dispose of the note, and the maker was informed of all the circumstances. Subsequently the purchaser from the infant for a valuable consideration passed the note over to the plaintiff in the action, assuring him that it was due and would be paid by the maker. The plaintiff was ignorant of the attempt of the infant to annul the bargain, and instituted the action in the name of the infant against the maker. In holding that there could be no recovery, the court states that the note ceased to be the property of the purchaser from the infant, from the time he was notified by the infant that he considered the bargain void and was tendered the property received, which was the consideration of the bargain. The settlement made by the maker when he ment by the maker to the indorsee or assignee thereafter does not protect him.<sup>9</sup> Recovery may be had by the minor after such disaffirmance.<sup>9</sup>

It thus appears that, prior to the Negotiable Instruments Law, the rule was settled that the indorsement of an infant passed title to the instrument, but that the infant might disaffirm. The construction put upon the provision of the Negotiable Instruments Law that the indorsement by an infant passes title to the instrument, in MURRAY v. THOMPSON, ante, 1172, results in making that provision a codification of the law as it theretofore existed. The authorities relied upon in MURRAY v. THOMPSON as showing that there was some doubt as to whether the indorsement by an infant was void or merely voidable were, as stated above, speaking not alone of the indorsement of the instrument as effecting a transfer of title, but of the contract implied from the indorsement to pay the bill at maturity if not duly paid by the acceptor or maker. And some of the writers were speaking also of the liability of an infant as maker of an instrument. But MURRAY v. THOMPSON had nothing to do with these matters. That case was confined to the indorsement as effecting a transfer of the title. Notwithstanding these considerations, the conclusion reached in MURRAY v. THOMPSON as to the effect of the provision of the Negotiable Instruments Law now under consideration seems a correct one, for if the framers of that law had intended to change the law as it theretofore existed by depriving an infant indorser of the right to disaffirm his transfer, it seems probable that this purpose would have been plainly expressed.

This provision of the Negotiable Instruments Law, so far as it relates to the right of an infant indorser to disaffirm, seems not to have been construed in any other adjudicated case. It has been the subject of decision as to other matters, and these are set out in the note.<sup>10</sup> gave a new note discharged him from liability on the contract, for, although he then knew that the note had passed to the purchaser from the infant, yet he had the right to consider the property of it as still remaining with the infant, it not being negotiable in its nature and the transfer having been vacated. It was then held that the purchaser from the assignee ignorant of the rescission stood in no better light, and accordingly relief was denied. The court states, however, that "whether the indorsement by an infant of a negotiable promissory note, or other mercantile instrument, can be avoided so as to prejudice a bona fide indorsee who is ignorant of the minority of the indorser, is a different question from the one now presented and may require further consideration."

<sup>9</sup> Briggs v. McCabe (1866) 27 Ind. 327, 89 Am. Dec. 503, assignee of non-negotiable note.

<sup>10</sup> In Williard v. Crook (1903) 21 App. D. C. 237, the last indorser of a note was sued by an indorsee defending on the ground that the prior indorser, a corporation, had not the power to make an accommodation indorsement. In answer to this defense, the court says that if it was conceded that the corporation's indorsement of the paper was beyond its powers and it incurred no liability thereby, nevertheless, the effect of such indorsement was to pass the property therein under this provision of the Code.

In Oppenheim v. Simon Reigel Cigar Co. (1904) 90 N. Y. Supp. 355, an action against a corporation, which was payee and indorser of the notes on which the action was brought, the notes being shown to have been executed for accommodation, and not within the powers of the corporation, it is held that the provision of the Negotiable Instruments Law in question does not affect this power, since the section in question provides for the passing of the title by indorsement, not the incurring of liability.

W. A. E.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

POLK COUNTY, IOWA,

v.

JAMES PARKER, Appt.

(— Iowa, —, 160 N. W. 320.)

Officer — ownership of maps prepared by him.

A city assessor owns maps and plats prepared by him from public records when working out of office hours, although they are upon paper taken from discarded books belonging to the public and are used to facilitate the work of his office.

Note. — As to right of public to benefit of discoveries, inventions, devices, data, etc., of officer or employee, see annotation following Robison v. Fishback, post, 1183. L.R.A.1917B.

For other cases, see Officers, II. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Preston, J., dissents.)

(December 16, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Polk County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover possession of certain maps and plats of real estate prepared by defendant and used by him to facilitate the work of his office as city assessor. Reversed.

Statement by Deemer, J.:

Action of replevin to recover something like 601 maps and plats of real estate in the city of Des Moines, showing the location of buildings and other improvements thereon, which said maps and plats it is claimed were used in the office of and by the city assessor of the city of Des Moines. The defendant denied plaintiff's ownership of the maps and plats, claimed that they were his individual property, planned, executed, and drafted by him while he held the office of city assessor, during a time when he was not engaged in official duties for his own use and purposes; that he used the same to facilitate the work of his office, but that they were no part of the records thereof; and that he is entitled to the possession thereof. On these issues the case was tried to the court, without a jury, resulting in a judgment finding the county entitled to the property in controversy, and defendant appeals.

Mr. J. L. Witmer, for appellant:

When one obtains property of little or no value with the consent of the owner, upon which he performs labor in good faith which converts such property into something substantially different, and the value of the original article is insignificant as compared to the value of the new product, the title to the property in its converted form passes to the person by whose labor in good faith the change has been wrought.

1 Cooley, Torts, 3d ed. p. 74; Wetherbee v. Green, 22 Mich. 311, 7 Am. Rep. 653; 2 Bl. Com. (Hammond) p. 623, ¶ 6.

A public official, or servant, does not breach his duty to his employer where he does extra or outside work not injurious to the interests of his employer and not impairing the value of his services; nor does the official or servant, by using his individual property thus created or produced, in his employer's behalf and benefit, forfeit his ownership or title thereto.

Hillsboro Nat. Bank v. Hyde, 7 N. D. 400, 75 N. W. 781; 1 Mechem, Agency, 2d ed. § 1230; Geiger v. Harris, 19 Mich. 209; Wallace v. De Young, 98 Ill. 638, 38 Am. Rep. 108; Jaffray v. King, 34 Md. 217; Stone v. Bancroft, 139 Cal. 82, 70 Pac. 1017, 72 Pac. 717; Brownell v. Enrich, 43 App. Div. 369, 60 N. Y. Supp. 112; 26 Cyc. 1020, 1021.

Messrs. George A. Wilson and Ward C. Henry, for appellee.
L.R.A.1917B.

Deemer, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

From some time in the year 1889 and down until April of the year 1908, defendant was employed in the tax department of the county auditor's office of Polk county, Iowa. On the last named date he was appointed city assessor for the city of Des Moines, and served in that capacity until the fall of the year 1911. During his employment with the county, he became convinced that a new city map was needed, and concluded that as soon as he had leisure he would prepare the necessary data, plats, and maps to that end. He accepted the city assessorship on the theory that he would have the time while in that office to make the preparation necessary to the getting out of a new city map. Soon after entering upon the work as assessor he began the preparation of this material, and obtained from the county auditor some leaves from the pages of an old discarded county plat book, upon which to make his maps and plats. From his own funds he purchased the ink and other materials necessary to the making of the maps and plats, and did all the work upon them himself. He claims that he did this work before and after office hours, and at times when it did not in any way interfere with his official duties. He did not make the maps or plats primarily to facilitate the work of his office, and the blue prints required by law were furnished his office, and by him returned to the county auditor's office. It was discovered that the maps and plats made by defendant in the manner stated were of material assistance to defendant and his deputies in making assessments, and with defendant's permission they were used by the entire force, the blue prints being practically disregarded. The maps and plats were not made pursuant to any requirement of law, and they do not belong to the county, unless it be found that they were so made as to make them county property. In other words, there is no statute which requires the assessor to either make or file any such maps and plats. Defendant resigned his office, and took the maps and plats with him. Thereafter the county sued out a writ of replevin, and secured the possession of the maps and plats, and since that time they have been used by the city assessors in the performance of their work. The county claims that it is entitled to the possession of this property because it is upon paper belonging to it, was made by an official in the performance of his duty, or at a time when it was entitled to the services of Parker, and from the records in the county offices, and that defendant has no title or right to the possession thereof.

On the other hand, defendant insists that the property does not belong to the county, but to him individually; that he made the maps and plats outside of office hours, used time which belonged to him alone in their preparation; that he was not required to do this work as a part of his official duties, and that the county has no right thereto; that they are his private property, which should not be taken from him. It will be remembered that defendant was a county or city official, and not a mere servant who was required to give his entire time to his master. As an official he had certain specific duties to perform, and none other could be required of him, save as the legislature might direct or authorize. Like other officials, he had certain office hours, and these he observed. According to the testimony, he did all the work upon these maps and plats outside of office hours, and what he did in no manner interfered with his official duties. In fact, the testimony shows that by the use of these maps and plats the work was expedited. Under the facts, which are practically undisputed, the only question is, Who owns and is entitled to the possession of these maps and plats?

The rules applicable here differ a little from those obtaining where the relation is purely that of master and servant. An official is entitled to his salary as a matter of law, and the relation does not grow out of contract. His duties are fixed by statute, and when these are performed, he is not required to do more. If he does do more, he is entitled to the profit thereof on his own account. Fitzsimmons v. Brooklyn, 102 N. Y. 536, 55 Am. Rep. 835, 7 N. E. 787; Davis v. Munson, 43 Vt. 676, 5 Am. Rep. 315; Mechem, Pub. Off. §§ 855, 872.

As already pointed out, the law did not require the making of these maps and plats, and consequently there was no provision for their return to any office or officer. They were not made primarily to assist in the performance of the work of the office, and they were not made pursuant to any duty owing either city or county. The mere fact that they were made on paper taken from an old book belonging to the county will not authorize the county to take them from the defendant after he has expended his time and labor thereon. In this connection it is to be noted that several witnesses testified that these maps and plats are worth something like $1,500. Surely the county cannot be permitted to avail itself of this work of the defendant simply because it owned an old discarded plat book from which the paper was taken to make the maps and plats. See, as sustaining this view, 1 Cooley, Torts, 3d ed. p. 74; Wetherbee v. Green, 22 Mich. 311, 7 Am. Rep. 653. L.R.A.1917B.

We are constrained to hold that as defendant did not make the maps and plats in controversy because of any statutory duty, and was not required to do so as a part of his official duties, and as he made them at such times and during such periods as not to interfere with his official duties, the maps and plats are his, and he is entitled to recover the same.

II. Aside from the question of defendant's right as a public officer to retain the maps and plats, we are constrained to hold that, even were he nothing more than a servant or ordinary employee, he would, under the facts, be entitled to the property. The rule with reference to ordinary servants and employees in this connection is announced by Mechem in his work on Agency, 2d ed. vol. 1, §§ 1230, 1232, as follows:

"Even if the rule were that the principal is entitled to the outside earnings of an agent who has undertaken to give him his entire time and efforts, it would not, of course, apply to earnings made in time not fairly belonging to the principal and in no way affecting his interests. As has been pointed out in one case (Geiger v. Harris, 19 Mich. 209), there must, in practically every business, be seasons of leisure and circumstances under which the principal's business cannot be done. What the agent earns at such times in no way competing with the principal or injuring the service, the principal will not be entitled to recover. . . .

"The amount of time which an agent is required to devote to his principal's interests in order to satisfy the requirement of loyalty must, of course, depend upon the circumstances of the case. . . . Where there is no such agreement [i. e., to give 'entire time'], a general rule is difficult to state, other than that it shall be a fair and reasonable devotion to the business of the principal."

In Hillsboro Nat. Bank v. Hyde, 7 N. D. 400, 75 N. W. 781, the supreme court of North Dakota said: "The utmost scope of the contract, as they swear to it, is that defendant was to give all of his time to the bank. Such an agreement is widely different from that which plaintiff has set forth in its complaint. A contract to give all of one's time to the employer does not mean that outside earnings of the employee are to belong to the employer. The servant cannot devote himself to his own business at the expense of his master without violating his contract. But his personal earnings are his own. There is no evidence in the case that the defendant neglected his duties as cashier, in the performance of the work in which such outside earnings were made. . . . What his testimony means is that defendant was to give the bank the benefit of his whole time in and about the legitimate business of the bank. We do not think that he intended to say that it was understood that if defendant, in spare moments, wrote a book, or taught a night school, or sang in the church choir, the fruits of his extra toil on his own behalf should be swept into the tills of the bank."

In Geiger v. Harris, supra, the supreme court of that state said: "The claim of the plaintiffs in error is placed upon the assumption that an agent, employed as Harris was, is during the agency so bound to his employers that all of his time belonged to them, and all of the profits and fruits of his labors or occupations, of whatever kind, belonged to them, and not to him, so that any use of his time for any but them is a violation of duty. This is a doctrine that cannot be admitted in regard to free persons. The charge of the court below was correct, and the rule laid down is sensible and fair. An agent violates his duty if he neglects to use all reasonable and thorough diligence to further the interests of his employers. He also violates it still more plainly by doing or furthering any business which can in any way hinder or compete with theirs. But there must be seasons of leisure, and there may be circumstances under which their work cannot be done. And in doing their work, he may find it profitable for them to secure bargains or advantages by civilities and services which can in no way prejudice them. They have no claim against him except for faithful service. In everything else, subject to this, he is his own master, and may do what he pleases, so long as they are not prejudiced."

See also Wallace v. De Young, 98 Ill. 638, 38 Am. Rep. 108; Jaffray v. King, 34 Md. 217.

The trial court thought the case was ruled by Dempsey v. Dobson, 174 Pa. 122, 32 L.R.A. 761, 52 Am. St. Rep. 816, 34 Atl. 459. In that case a servant employed as a color mixer in a carpet factory kept a record in a color book of the mixtures used in the manufacture of carpets, the recipes belonging to the master. It was held that the servant could not, on the termination of his employment, carry away the recipe books. Manifestly this case was correctly decided, for the master had the right to protect its own formulas, and the work done by the servant who made the book was a part of his duty as a servant.

Other cases relied upon by appellee are not in point, because the servant acquired his claim of right while in the performance of his duties to his employer. In our opinion, the trial court erred in entering judgment for plaintiff, and the judgment must be, and it is, reversed.

Evans, Ch. J., and Weaver and Ladd, JJ., concur. Preston, J., dissents.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

EDWARD J. ROBISON et al., Appts.,
v.
FRANK S. FISHBACK.

(175 Ind. 132, 93 N. E. 666.)

Courts — jurisdiction — patented device — action to control.

1. A state court is not deprived of jurisdiction to compel a public officer to leave behind a device which he has installed to facilitate the discharge of the duties of the office upon the expiration of his term, by the fact that he has secured a patent upon it from the Federal government.

For other cases, see Courts, IV. d, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Officer — patented device — dedication to public use.

2. A public officer who, to facilitate the discharge of his duties, prepares at his own expense an index to the public records,

Note. — As to right of public to benefit of discoveries, inventions, devices, data, etc., made or prepared by officer or employee, see annotation following this case, post, 1183. L.R.A.1917B.

which he is not required by law to keep but which becomes indispensable to the discharge of the duties of the office and for which he applies for a patent, may, upon the expiration of his term of office, be enjoined from removing it without unconstitutionally depriving him of his property without due process of law, or of his privileges and immunities, since he has clothed it with a public use.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, II. b, 2, a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 27, 1911.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Marion County in plaintiff's favor, and from an order denying a motion for new trial in an action brought to enjoin defendants from removing, destroying, or taking away a card-index system alleged to be in use in the treasurer's office. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Merrill Moores and Walter Myers, for appellants:

A patent right is property, so exclusive that not only citizens and residents, but also the government itself, may not use it without the license of the patentee.

Walker, Patents, § 157; James v. Campbell, 104 U. S. 356, 26 L. ed. 786.

A card-index system, if it possesses the required novelty, may be patented.

Gunn v. Bridgeport Brass Co. 148 Fed. 230, 81 C. C. A. 576, 152 Fed. 434.

In the absence of a statute or ordinance requiring indexing of Barrett law assessments, a card-index system paid for by an officer is not a public record.

Painter v. Hall, 75 Ind. 208; Gaines v. Relf, 12 How. 472, 13 L. ed. 1071; Chaffee v. United States, 18 Wall. 516, 540, 21 L. ed. 908, 912; Carrington v. Potter, 37 Fed. 767; Cruse v. McCauley, 96 Fed. 369; Hegler v. Faulkner, 153 U. S. 109, 116, 38 L. ed. 653, 655, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 779; Taylor v. Jackson, 151 Mich. 639, 115 N. W. 977.

Where indispensable public necessity renders work necessary to be done in an office, and where the officer is employed to do that work under a contract by which he gets extra compensation, such a contract is legal, and the officer can collect the money due him under the contract even though he draws a salary as the incumbent of the office in which the work was done.

Tippecanoe County v. Mitchell, 131 Ind. 370, 15 L.R.A. 520, 30 N. E. 409; State ex rel. Tippecanoe County v. Flynn, 161 Ind. 554, 69 N. E. 159; State ex rel. Dearborn County v. Shutts, 161 Ind. 590, 69 N. E. 397.

A record not authorized by law does not even constitute notice.

Brown v. Budd, 2 Ind. 442; Sanders v. Muegge, 91 Ind. 214.

Mr. Henry Warrum, for appellee:

The card indexes, together with their predecessor, being purchased by the city for the use in its treasure's office for collecting municipal assessments, and containing information received in the transactions of that office, and inscribed by the officer and his clerks, constitute property of the city and part of its public records.

The condition and accumulation of the duplicates specified by the statutes render such indexes indispensable to the discharge of the duties of the office.

Coleman v. Com. 25 Gratt. 865, 18 Am. Rep. 711; Miller v. Indianapolis, 123 Ind. 196, 24 N. E. 228.

While the statute specifically designates only the "book" in which shall be entered these assessment rolls as they are received, by fair intentment it must be held that the law contemplates some sort of indexing as would make the use of these books practical.

24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 170; Greenl. Ev. p. 610, §§ 483, 496.
L.R.A.1917B.

The cards in the case are stock cards admittedly without new features, and the only novelty possible to claim for them is the new manner of arranging information on the card.

Gunn v. Bridgeport Brass Co. 81 C. C. A. 576, 152 Fed. 434.

The copyright law was enacted for the protection of those who devised new methods of tabulating or arranging information, but under the copyright law the deposit of copies with the Librarian of Congress would have been required on the day of publication.

7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 530.

If the defendants can claim compensation from the city for rendering this work because it was of indispensable public necessity, their claim must be regularly presented to the city, and cannot be realized or guaranteed by a claim upon these public records.

Kerr v. Register, 42 Ind. App. 375, 85 N. E. 790.

Myers, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant Robison was treasurer of Marion county, Indiana, and ex officio treasurer of the city of Indianapolis, from January 1, 1908, to January 1, 1910. Appellant Share was in the employ of said treasurer. When the latter went into office, there was a card-index system in the office which furnished a partial index to the assessment rolls for public improvements in the city of Indianapolis. There are some forty-three volumes of public improvement assessments, involving more than 10,000 names of different persons and assessments. The card index in use prior to January 1, 1908, so far as the mechanical features of it were concerned, was the ordinary form of cards adjusted to a case, with rods to hold the cards in position, and each card had the name of a person at the top thereof, and under the name vertical, ruled spaces for indicating the property assessed, and the folio and page in which the assessment was to be found, and a like space for designating the improvement. These were arranged in alphabetical order in the cases. There was an index to the improvement in each folio, and a general index to all folios, of the improvements, but the names of property owners were not indexed. There is no express statute requiring the keeping of any index of any kind. The only other reference to assessments against any property for public improvements was upon the general tax duplicates, where, opposite any parcel of land against which there was such assessment, a letter "B" was placed to indicate that there was a so-called Barrett law assessment against the property, and in case a property owner should not know upon what improvement an assessment had been made, there was no way of discovering it, without running through the general index or the indexes in the various folios. Appellant Share had had long experience in the conduct of the treasurer's office, and especially with the collection of municipal assessments, and, at the suggestion and under the pay of appellant Robison, set about devising a card-index system to public improvement records. Appellant Robison personally visited a number of the larger cities of the country, examined the methods employed in keeping trace of public improvement assessments, and directed Share to work out a system of card indexes, and procured at his personal expense the cases and cards. Share thereupon devised a card system in which, under the name of one owner, all improvements assessed in that name appear. The only practical difference between the two systems of cards was that in the one employed when Robison came into office but one improvement appeared upon a single card, though the cards were arranged for separate improvements, while in the system devised by Share all improvements assessed under the name of any one person or owner were designed to be shown by such card. Robison directed Share to obtain the necessary cards and cases to install the system in the treasurer's office, and, in the absence of the treasurer and without his knowledge, payment for the supplies was made out of the public funds. As soon as Robison discovered this fact, he covered the money into the treasury. The card system which was in vogue when Robison took office was not thereafter kept up, but the system devised by Share was completed at an expense of about $3,000 to Robison, and proved to be a great success in expediting the work of referring to assessments, and highly essential, if not indispensable, to the conduct of the office. Share applied for letters patent upon the device, and claims to be the owner of the system, while Robison claims to own the particular cards and the cases in which they are contained. Upon going out of office January 1, 1910, Robison claimed the cases and cards as his individual property and the right to remove them, and appellee, as treasurer-elect and resident taxpayer, successfully maintained an application for an injunction against their removal, on the ground that they were parts of the public records, from which judgment both defendants appeal and assign joint and separate errors upon the action of the court below in overruling their motion for a new trial.

Jurisdiction is lodged in this court by the contention of appellants that the judgment is in violation of the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, in abridging the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, and depriving them of their property without due process of law, and in violation of § 21 of art. 1 of the state Constitution, in taking their services and property without just compensation first assessed and tendered. As to the first proposition, it is to be said that the privileges and immunities clause of the Federal Constitution refers to the privileges and immunities arising out of the nature and character of the Federal government, granted or secured by that Constitution. It operates upon state action solely, and not upon individual action, and simply requires that all persons similarly situated be treated alike, in privileges conferred or liabilities imposed. Hodges v. United States, 203 U. S. 1, 51 L. ed. 65, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 6; Field v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 194 U. S. 618, 48 L. ed. 1142, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 784; Duncan v. Missouri, 152 U. S. 377, 38 L. ed. 485, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 570.

Appellants contend that the device is patentable, and that a patent right is property, and that the judgment constitutes a taking without due process or just compensation. Whether it is patentable or not is immaterial, for there is some value in the cases and cards. While the state courts have no jurisdiction to determine rights under an alleged patent, they are not ousted of jurisdiction by the fact that rights claimed or denied as growing out of the patent are incidentally involved. Exclusive Federal jurisdiction applies only to cases arising under the patent laws upon a bill, complaint, or declaration of a plaintiff setting up a right under the patent laws, as a ground of recovery. Pratt v. Paris Gaslight & Coke Co. (1897) 42 L. ed. 458, and notes (188 U. S. 255, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 62); Riverside Mills v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. (1909; C. C.) 168 Fed. 987; Osborn v. Bank of United States, 9 Wheat. 738, 6 L. ed. 204; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Mitchell, 175 Ind. 196, 91 N. E. 735, 93 N. E. 996.

The real point in this case turns on the question whether the particular cards and cases have become so essential to the conduct of the office that appellants in installing them must be considered as having intended that they should become so much a part of the indispensable accessories of the operation of the office that the public interest requires that they be not removed. It appears from the record that the former system of card indexing was abandoned; had that been kept up by appellants at their own expense, and for their own convenience, though less efficient than the plan installed, though less efficient than the plan installed, though possibly involving quite as much labor as the new scheme, it could hardly be claimed that appellants could remove it, or even those cards added by their labors, or at their own expense. This index is not required by any specific law, and it is wholly optional with treasurers whether they keep indexes to these records, but they are so far authorized that the public authorities might contract and pay for their making as conveniences for the use of the officers and the public, and, if so procured, while they may not, in the strict sense, be public records, they are undoubtedly authorized to be made and kept. They are not less public by reason of being made by an officer in the course of his administration of the office. The public have a direct interest in them not only during the term of office of the incumbent, but indefinitely. State ex rel. Dearborn County v. Shutts, 161 Ind. 590, 69 N. E. 397; State ex rel. Tippecanoe County v. Flynn, 161 Ind. 554, 69 N. E. 159; Tippecanoe County v. Mitchell, 131 Ind. 370, 15 L.R.A. 520, 30 N. E. 409; Hoffman v. Lake County, 96 Ind. 84; Garrett v. Boone County, 92 Ind. 518; Hubler v. Cass County, 19 Ind. App. 464, 49 N. E. 832.

It has been held that an index is simply a facility for learning the contents of a record, but not a part of the record itself, unless required by the law to be kept. Bishop v. Schneider, 46 Mo. 472, 2 Am. Rep. 533; Chatham v. Bradford, 50 Ga. 327, 15 Am. Rep. 692; Curtis v. Lyman, 24 Vt. 338, 58 Am. Dec. 174. These cases arose upon a conflict of interest between third parties, because of the failure of an officer to keep an index, owing to which fact some of them were misled, in cases where no index was required as a part of the record.

We are not called upon to determine whether they are so far public records as to constitute primary evidence without regard to any other fact than their existence in a public office, though it is manifest that conditions might arise where they might become secondary evidence, as in case of the loss or destruction of the assessment rolls, though there is authority for their being regarded as public records. Coleman v. Com. 25 Gratt. 865, 18 Am. Rep. 711; Herron v. McEnery, McGloin (La.) 108; Bell v. Kendrick, 25 Fla. 778, 6 So. 868; Kyburg v. Perkins, 6 Cal. 674.

The following statement in Coleman v. Com. supra, though obiter, so aptly phrases the matter as to commend itself to our approval and judgment, at least as applied to the facts in this case: "Whenever a written record of the transactions of a public officer in his office is a convenient and appropriate mode of discharging the duties of his office, it is not only his right, but his duty, to keep that memorial, whether expressly required so to do or not; and when kept it becomes a public document—a public record belonging to the office and not the officer—it is the property of the state, and not of the citizen, and is in no sense a private memorandum."

It is said that a public record is one required by law to be kept, or necessary to be kept, in the discharge of a duty imposed by law, or directed by law to serve as a memorial and evidence of something written, said, or done. Miller v. Indianapolis, 123 Ind. 106, 24 N. E. 228; Com. v. Rodes, 1 Dana, 595; Cyclopedic L. Dict. The evidence in this case is all to the point that the indexes are indispensable to the discharge of the duties of the office.

It is said in People v. Peck (1893) 138 N. Y. 386, 20 L.R.A. 381, 34 N. E. 347, involving the question of the collection of statistical matter from which compilations are made and reports required to be made: "He is not to collect the facts merely to enable him to discharge his duty, but in the discharge of a duty." Here the treasurer did not prepare the indexes in the discharge of a duty imposed upon him to make them, but to aid him, and those succeeding him, to discharge the duties of the office; but in the discharge of his duties he did invest the office with facilities for the discharge thereof which are highly essential in the efficient discharge thereof, and in which the public, whose servant he was, are deeply interested. The injury to the public from their removal would be greater than the benefit accruing to appellants, and we think it would be inequitable, when appellants have themselves created the situation, to allow them to disturb it. Because appellants were prevented from removing the cases and cards, it does not follow that their property is taken without just compensation, nor are they deprived of their property without due process of law. They cannot complain of a condition of their own creating.

The city has assumed to retain the property under circumstances rendered reasonable by the course of appellants respecting it, and in which the public interest is deeply affected and concerned, and it would be inequitable to allow them to take it.

The judgment is affirmed.

Writ of error dismissed by the Supreme Court of the United States, December 4, 1914, 235 U. S. 714, 59 L. ed. 437, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207.

Annotation—Right of public to benefit of discoveries, inventions, devices, data, etc., made or prepared by officer or employee.

Cases on the question as to an implied promise to pay compensation for the use of inventions patented by the employees of the government will be found in the note to May v. Western Lime Co. 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 333, 337.

Cases relating to literary work done in connection with official duties are cited at page 1193 of the note to Barber v. National Carbon Co. 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1154, on the subject of the rights of employer and employee with respect to things produced by the labor of the employee.

Cases involving the right of an official reporter to the benefit of the copyright of headnotes, digest propositions, etc., present distinctive questions which are not within the scope of this note.

The decision in ROBISON v. FISHBACK, ante, 1179, that a card-index system installed by the county treasurer could not be removed by him, is based upon the fact that such system had become indispensable in the conduct of the office, and was in a sense a public record. And that would seem to be the only ground upon which the decision could be based, as an index was not required by any law. As the only question involved was the right to remove the card-index system, this case would not be authority on either the question as to implied right to compensation or of the right to obtain a patent on the device.

In Polk County v. Parker, ante, 1176, a case analogous in many respects to the ROBISON CASE, it was held that maps and plats made by a city assessor outside of office hours and at his own expense, and which were of material assistance in the conduct of the office, were the individual property of such assessor, and could be taken with him when his term of office expired, although they were made upon paper belonging to the county, which for that reason claimed to be entitled to the possession of them.

It is to be observed, and this will probably serve to distinguish it from the ROBISON CASE, that in Polk County v. Parker, the maps and plats, while of material assistance in the conduct of the assessor's office, were not indispensable, as assessments could, as was previously done, be made from blueprints which were furnished to the city assessors.

ROBISON v. FISHBACK finds support, however, in Herron v. McEnery (1881) L.R.A.1917B.

McGloin (La.) 108, which held that researches, consisting of memoranda showing the mortgages recorded against certain persons, were not the private property of the recorder of mortgages although such researches had been made by clerks paid by the different incumbents of the office, each recorder paying his predecessor the value thereof. In answer to the contention that because of the manner of their acquisition, and that though useful to facilitate the discharge of the duties of the office yet they were not indispensable, therefore such researches were private property, the court said: "The fallacy of this position lies in the assumption that the mortgage office exists for anything else than the benefit of the public. The law gives to the recorder certain fees, and provides that he shall pay his clerks, buy his own stationery, etc.; the presumption is that out of the fees he collects he pays the expenses of properly conducting his office, leaving a reasonable compensation for himself. If the making and filing away of these researches materially hastens the work of the office, thus accommodating the public, it is the duty of the recorders to make them, for it is their duty to do everything necessary to a prompt, faithful, and intelligent discharge of the duties imposed upon them by law; and, having made them, they become a portion of the records and archives of the office. The labor of the clerks in the mortgage office does not belong to the recorder personally; the money that he pays them with comes from the public in the shape of fees paid to him, and the public is entitled to any facility of public business which their labor may create. The fact that plaintiff paid his predecessor for the researches is irrelevant, as such payment could not have been legally demanded of him, and the force of the plaintiff's argument that it is customary to pay for the researches is broken by the fact that such payment is only proved for about ten years back, whereon the researches have been in existence nearly thirty years."

However, in Leffingwell v. Miller (1905) 20 Colo. App. 429, 79 Pac. 327, under a city ordinance requiring that "the city engineer shall inspect and pass upon the construction of all public works ordered by the city, shall make out plans, specifications, and estimates thereof; he shall do the surveying and engineering ordered by the city, and shall perform such other duties not inconsistent with his employment as the city council may require. He shall preserve all plans, maps, notes, surveys, books, papers, and documents pertaining to his office, which shall be open to inspection at all reasonable hours, and shall be delivered to his successor in office," it was held that field notes made by a city engineer in surveying lots of individual owners upon their application, under their employment and at their expense, were the private property of such engineer, and not required to be turned over to his successor. The court stated that "the duty of preserving and delivering to his successor in office all plans, maps, notes, surveys, books, papers, and documents pertaining to his office must have been intended to apply only to such plans, maps, etc., of 'public works' and surveying and engineering ordered by the city for which the city would be bound to compensate him, and thereby acquire ownership thereof. By the ordinance, no duty was imposed upon the city engineer to survey lots for individual owners. Such work might have been performed, was and is performed, by other competent engineers, and when performed by the city engineer is performed by him in his individual, and not official, capacity. Therefore, the field notes made and kept by him in such work are his individual property, and do not pertain to the office of city engineer."

So, also, in Butte v. Nevin (1912) 46 Mont. 380, 128 Pac. 600, a copy of the report of an auditing company employed to audit the financial condition of the city, which copy such company made for the mayor at his request, the original being filed with the city clerk, was held to be the private property of the mayor. The auditing company, the court said, "discharged their contract with the city when they delivered to it one document embodying the result of their investigations, in the form in which they agreed to make it. If they chose to make carbon copies for themselves or for the accommodation of other persons, as was the case here, the title to such copies did not vest in the city, but in the persons for whom they were made, there being nothing in their contract prohibiting" them "from furnishing as many of such copies as they chose. The mayor of a city in this state is not required to keep a record of his official acts. The duty to keep the files and records of the city appertains to the clerk, who is bound to deliver them to his successor. . . . If the mayor chooses to keep a record including copies of documents which must be preserved in the files of the clerk's office, they are his private property, and title to them does not vest in the city by virtue of the fact that he is acting as its chief executive at the time. Having delivered the copy to the city council, and having seen that it found its way into the records of the city, his duty was fully discharged."

J. H. B.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

L. B. BROWN et al., Pliffs. in Err.,
v.

M. S. WILSON et al.

(— Okla. —, 160 Pac. 94.)

Mines — oil and gas lease — forfeiture.

1. Where an oil and gas lease was made, executed, and delivered for the consideration of $1 in hand paid the lessor, and the covenants and agreements hereinafter contained on the part of the lessee, and leased and let to him a certain tract of land for a term of ten years and as long thereafter as oil and gas or either were produced therefrom by the lessee, he to yield to the lessor certain royalties from the oil and gas produced, and where the lessee agreed to complete a well on the premises within four months from the date thereof, or pay at the rate of $80 in advance for each three months such completion was delayed, held, that the $1 supported the four months' period in which the lessee had to complete a well, and supported no other stipulation in the lease; that the prospective royalties were the sole consideration for the execution of the lease on the part of the lessor; that the agreements on the part of the lessee to complete a well on the demised premises within four months, or pay for delay, conferred an option on the lessee to drill or pay; and that a failure to do either forfeited the lease at the option of the lessor, who thereafter was entitled to have the same judicially declared forfeited and canceled as a cloud upon his title.

For other cases, see Mines, II. 3, 4, 5, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Headnotes by TURNER, J.

Note. — For surrender clause in oil or gas lease as rendering it unilateral, see annotation following this case, post, 1206. L.R.A.1917B.

Same — want of mutuality — validity.

2. Where such lease reserves to the lessee and his assigns the right at any time after four months, on the payment of $1 and all payable obligations then due the lessor or his assigns, to surrender the lease, if not tested, for cancellation, held that, as said lease, construed as a whole, confers on the lessee an option to complete a well within four months or pay for delay, and a further option to surrender at any time after four months, and thereby avoid doing both, it was voidable at the option of the lessor at any time after four months for lack of mutuality, in that it imposed no legal obligation on the lessee; that, as prospective royalties were the sole consideration for the execution of the lease on the part of the lessor, payment of which could be defeated by a surrender thereof by the lessee, the lease was nudum pactum; and that, as the same reserves to the lessee the right to surrender the lease at any time after four months before development, a corresponding right exists in the lessor to compel a surrender.

For other cases, see Contracts, I. d, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Evidence — forfeiture of lease.

3. Where said lease as to 80 acres of the demised premises was assigned to the S. S. Co., and where, on July 17, 1914, $20 delay money fell due and payable thereon from the lessee to the lessor, assuming that the lessor and all parties in interest under the lease agreed to the substitution of said company as lessee of said 80 acres so assigned, evidence examined, and held, that said company defaulted in said payment, and that time was the essence of the contract, that the court erred in refusing to so hold, and that said lease was forfeit as to the holding of said company under the lease, and to cancel the lease accordingly.

For other cases, see Mines, II. b, 4, b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — forfeiture.

4. Where said lease as to 240 acres of the demised premises was assigned to W. and C., and where, on April 17, 1914, $60 delay money fell due and payable thereon from them to the lessor, evidence examined, and held, that they defaulted in said payment, that time was the essence of the contract, that the court erred in refusing to so hold, and that said lease was forfeit as to their holdings thereunder and to cancel the same accordingly.

For other cases, see Mines, II. b, 4, b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Forfeiture — suit to enforce.

5. Where the lessor, after forfeiture incurred, brought suit, to have the same judicially declared and to clear his title, and thereafter executed a second lease on the same premises and thereafter parted with his interest as lessor in the demised premises, evidence examined, and held, that the court erred in refusing to grant such relief to him, and to all parties in interest under the second lease.

For other cases, see Mines, II. b, 4, b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Kane, Ch. J., and Thacker, J., dissent.)

(January 11, 1916.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Muskogee County to review a judgment in defendants' favor in an action brought to enjoin them from interfering with plaintiffs' possession of an oil well. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Gubser & Means, Thomas H. Owen, and Joseph C. Stone, for plaintiffs in error:

The nonpayment of rentals (the lessees not having developed the property) operated as an abandonment of the lease and authorized forfeiture by the lessor.

Frank Oil Co. v. Belleview Gas & Oil Co. 29 Okla. 719, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 487, 119 Pac. 260; Kolachny v. Galbreath, 26 Okla. 772, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 451, 110 Pac. 905; Mitchell v. Probst, — Okla. —, 152 Pac. 597; McKee v. Grimm, — Okla. —, 167 Pac. 308; Conkling v. Krandsusky, 127 App. Div. 761, 112 N. Y. Supp. 13; Witherspoon v. Staley, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 156 S. W. 557; Jennings-Heywood Oil Syndicate v. Houssiere-Latreille Oil Co. 119 La. 793, 44 So. 504; Dill v. Frazee, 169 Ind. 53, 79 N. E. 973; Cowan v. Radford Iron Co. 83 Va. 547, 3 S. E. 120, 15 Mor. Min. Rep. 453; Archer, Oil & Gas, p. 239, § 4.

Time is of the essence of the contract.

Mitchell v. Probst, — Okla. —, 152 Pac. 597; Frank Oil Co. v. Belleview Gas & Oil Co. 29 Okla. 719, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 487, 119 Pac. 260; Kolachny v. Galbreath, 26 Okla. 772, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 451, 110 Pac. 905; Conkling v. Krandsusky, 127 App. Div. 761, 112 N. Y. Supp. 13; Huggins v. Daley, 48 L.R.A. 320, 40 C. C. A. 12, 99 Fed. 606, 20 Mor. Min. Rep. 377; Alleghany Oil Co. v. Bradford Oil Co. 21 Hun, 31; Witherspoon v. Staley, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 156 S. W. 557; Beabe v. Worth, 146 N. Y. Supp. 146; Jennings-Heywood Oil Syndicate v. Houssiere-Latreille Oil Co. 119 La. 793, 44 So. 504; Wiswall v. McGowan, 2 Barb. 270; Dill v. Frazee, 169 Ind. 53, 79 N. E. 973; Bullock v. Adams, 20 N. J. Eq. 367; King v. Ruckman, 20 N. J. Eq. 352; Richardson v. Hardwick, 106 U. S. 252, 27 L. ed. 145, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 213.

The lessee will be held to a strict performance, equity favoring a forfeiture in such a matter.

Frank Oil Co. v. Belleview Gas & Oil Co. 29 Okla. 719, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 487, 119 Pac. 260; Kolachny v. Galbreath, 26 Okla. 772, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 451, 110 Pac. 905; Superior Oil & Gas Co. v. Mehlh, 25 Okla. 809, 138 Am. St. Rep. 942, 108 Pac. 547; Mitchell v. Probst, — Okla. —, 152 Pac. 597; Deming Invest. Co. v. Lanham, 36 Okla. 773, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 50, 130 Pac. 260; Federal Oil Co. v. Western Oil Co. 57 C. C. A. 428, 121 Fed. 674, 22 Mor. Min. Rep. 429; Conkling v. Krandsky, 127 App. Div. 680, 112 N. Y. Supp. 13; Huggins v. Daley, 99 Fed. 606, 48 L.R.A. 320, 40 C. C. A. 12, 20 Mor. Min. Rep. 377; Bryan, Petroleum & Natural Gas, p. 146; Alleghany Oil Co. v. Bradford Oil Co. 21 Hun, 31; Gadbury v. Ohio & I. Consol. Natural & Illuminating Gas Co. 162 Ind. 9, 62 L.R.A. 895, 67 N. E. 259, 22 Mor. Min. Rep. 680; Dill v. Frazee, 169 Ind. 53, 79 N. E. 973; Soaper v. King, 167 Ky. 121, 180 S. W. 46; Flanagan v. Marsh, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 184, 105 S. W. 424; Jennings-Heywood Oil Syndicate v. Houssiere-Latreille Oil Co. 119 La. 793, 44 So. 504.

Forfeiture of a lease of this character (just here disregarding the surrender clause) is favored and permitted on slight default, though there is no express provision in the lease for forfeiture, time being the essence of such a contract, unless the contract itself expressly provides otherwise.

Mitchell v. Probst, — Okla. —, 152 Pac. 597; McKee v. Grimm, — Okla. —, 157 Pac. 308; Thornton, Oil & Gas, § 797, p. 895; Conkling v. Krandsky, 127 App. Div. 761, 112 N. Y. Supp. 13; Jennings-Heywood Oil Syndicate v. Houssiere-Latreille Oil Co. 119 La. 793, 44 So. 504; Parish Fork Oil Co. v. Bridgewater Gas Co. 51 W. Va. 583, 59 L.R.A. 566, 42 S. E. 655, 22 Mor. Min. Rep. 145.

The April, 1914, transaction was a valid contract for the surrender and forfeiture of the lease if the lessees failed either to drill the well or to pay the notes promptly, and is controlling evidence that time was material,—the essence of the contract, and that the parties construing the lease so regarded it.

Thornton, Oil & Gas, 2d ed. ¶ 142, p. 213; McKee v. Grimm, — Okla. —, 157 Pac. 308; 27 Cyc. 740; Hooks v. Forst, 165 Pa. 238, 30 Atl. 846, 18 Mor. Min. Rep. 139; Bartley v. Phillips, 165 Pa. 325, 30 Atl. 842, 18 Mor. Min. Rep. 145, s. c. 179 Pa. 175, 36 Atl. 217, 18 Mor. Min. Rep. 542; Frankfort & C. R. Co. v. Jackson, 153 Ky. 534, 166 S. W. 103; Clark v. Dales, 20 Barb. 64; Homer v. Guardian Mut. L. Ins. Co. 67 N. Y. 479; Wiswall v. McGowan, 2 Barb. 270; King v. Ruckman, 20 N. J. Eq. 316; Jennings-Heywood Oil Syndicate v. Houssiere-Latreille Oil Co. 119 La. 793, 44 So. 481; Bullock v. Adams, 20 N. J. Eq. 367.

L.R.A.1917B.

The lease was voidable at the option of the lessor.

Owens v. Corsicana Petroleum Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 169 S. W. 193; J. M. Guffey Petroleum Co. v. Oliver, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 79 S. W. 884; Witherspoon v. Staley, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 156 S. W. 557; National Oil & Pipe Line Co. v. Teel, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 67 S. W. 545; Long v. Sun Co. 132 La. 601, 61 So. 684; Caddo Oil & Min. Co. v. Producers' Oil Co. 134 La. 701, 64 So. 684; Jennings-Heywood Oil Syndicate v. Houssiere-Latreille Oil Co. 119 La. 793, 44 So. 502; Murray v. Barnhart, 117 La. 1023, 42 So. 492; Tennessee Oil, Gas & Mineral Co. v. Brown, 65 C. C. A. 524, 131 Fed. 703; Berry v. Friable, 120 Ky. 337, 86 S. W. 558; Bay State Petroleum Co. v. Penn Lubricating Co. 121 Ky. 637, 87 S. W. 1104; Killebrew v. Murray, 151 Ky. 345, 151 S. W. 665; Young v. McIlhenny, — Ky. —, 116 S. W. 728; Federal Oil Co. v. Western Oil Co. 112 Fed. 373, 22 Mor. Min. Rep. 25, 57 C. C. A. 428, 121 Fed. 674, 22 Mor. Min. Rep. 429; Knight v. Indiana Coal & I. Co. 47 Ind. 105, 17 Am. Rep. 692; Gadbury v. Ohio & I. Consol. Natural & Illuminating Gas Co. 162 Ind. 9, 62 L.R.A. 895, 67 N. E. 259, 22 Mor. Min. Rep. 680; Cowan v. Radford Iron Co. 83 Va. 547, 3 S. E. 121, 16 Mor. Min. Rep. 453; Conkling v. Krandsky, 127 App. Div. 761, 112 N. Y. Supp. 13; Reese v. Zinn, 103 Fed. 97; Huggins v. Daley, 48 L.R.A. 320, 40 C. C. A. 12, 99 Fed. 606, 20 Mor. Min. Rep. 377; Eclipse Oil Co. v. South Penn Oil Co. 47 W. Va. 84, 34 S. E. 923, 20 Mor. Min. Rep. 234; Trees v. Eclipse Oil Co. 47 W. Va. 107, 34 S. E. 933, 20 Mor. Min. Rep. 260; Foster v. Elk Fork Oil & Gas Co. 32 C. C. A. 560, 61 U. S. App. 576, 96 Fed. 179; O'Neill v. Risinger, 77 Kan. 63, 93 Pac. 340; Cortelyou v. Barnsdall, 236 Ill. 138, 86 N. E. 201; Smith v. Guffey, 120 C. C. A. 436, 202 Fed. 106; Glasgow v. Chartiers Oil Co. 152 Pa. 48, 25 Atl. 232, 17 Mor. Min. Rep. 523; Frank Oil Co. v. Bellevue Gas & Oil Co. 29 Okla. 719, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 487, 119 Pac. 260; Superior Oil & Gas Co. v. Mehlh, 25 Okla. 809, 138 Am. St. Rep. 942, 108 Pac. 545; Kolachny v. Galbreath, 26 Okla. 772, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 451, 110 Pac. 902; Hill Oil & Gas Co. v. White, — Okla. —, 151 Pac. 1051; McKee v. Grimm, — Okla. —, 157 Pac. 309.

The $1 paid at the time of the execution of the lease supported only the four months' development period named in the lease, within which the lessee had the right to enter and commence development, and it was so intended by the parties.

Frank Oil Co. v. Bellevue Gas & Oil Co. 29 Okla. 719, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 487, 119

Pac. 260; Owens v. Corsicana Petroleum Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 169 S. W. 193; Federal Oil Co. v. Western Oil Co. 57 C. C. A. 428, 121 Fed. 677, 22 Mor. Min. Rep. 429; National Oil & Pipe Line Co. v. Teel, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 67 S. W. 545, affirmed in 95 Tex. 586, 68 S. W. 979, 22 Mor. Min. Rep. 263; Dill v. Frazee, 169 Ind. 53, 79 N. E. 971.

The payment of quarterly rentals provided for in the lease prior to the landowner's declarations of forfeiture was no part performance of the contract.

Federal Oil Co. v. Western Oil Co. 57 C. C. A. 428, 121 Fed. 677, 22 Mor. Min. Rep. 429; Steelsmith v. Gartlan, 45 W. Va. 27, 44 L.R.A. 107, 29 S. E. 981, 19 Mor. Min. Rep. 315; Murray v. Barnhart, 117 La. 1023, 42 So. 489.

Messrs. Noffsinger & Broome and Sumner J. Lipscomb also for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. Samuel W. Hayes, George S. Ramsey, Edgar A. de Meules, Malcolm E. Rosser, J. R. Cottingham, Robertson, Bailey, Nelson, & Bailey, and James L. Powell, for defendants in error:

Under the terms of this lease Ruhl's lessees could not, by formally surrendering the lease after April 17th, defeat or nullify their obligation to pay him the $60 note given by Wilson and Cameron for the rentals covering the period from April 17th to July 17th, nor could any of the owners of the lease formally surrender the lease or any part thereof and defeat or nullify their fixed obligation and liability to pay the rentals due and accruing July 17th.

Bettman v. Shadle, 22 Ind. App. 542, 53 N. E. 662; Roberts v. Bettman, 45 W. Va. 143, 30 S. E. 95, 19 Mor. Min. Rep. 326; Hays v. Forest Oil Co. 213 Pa. 556, 62 Atl. 1072; Dexter v. Phillips, 121 Mass. 178, 23 Am. Rep. 261; Perry v. Aldrich, 13 N. H. 343, 38 Am. Dec. 493.

There was no forfeiture or abandonment of the lease, either as to the Seven Sand's 80, or to the Cameron and Wilson 240 acres.

Garrett v. South Penn Oil Co. 66 W. Va. 587, 66 S. E. 745; Smith v. Root, 64 W. Va. 633, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 176, 66 S. E. 1007; Phillips v. Hamilton, 17 Wyo. 41, 95 Pac. 846; Archer, Oil & Gas, p. 501; Fisher v. Crescent Oil Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 178 S. W. 908; McMillin v. Titus, 222 Pa. 500, 72 Atl. 244; Laing v. Price, 75 W. Va. 192, 83 S. E. 497; Sayers v. Kent, 201 Pa. 38, 50 Atl. 296; La Fayette Gas Co. v. Kealey, 164 Ind. 563, 74 N. E. 7; Lovett v. Eastern Oil Co. 68 W. Va. 667, 70 S. E. 707, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 360; Friend v. Mallory, 52 W. Va. 53; 43 S. E. 117; Monford v. Lanyon Zinc Co. 67 Kan. 310, 72 Pac. 784.

Assuming, however, that this lease is equivalent to the "unless" lease, the execution of the note for $60 by Wilson and Cameron, and Ruhl's acceptance of the same on April 17th, 1914, constituted a purchase by Wilson and Cameron of an extension of the lease for three months.

Frank Oil Co. v. Bellevue Gas. & Oil Co. 29 Okla. 719, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 487, 119 Pac. 260; Deming Invest. Co. v. Lanham, 36 Okla. 773, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 50, 130 Pac. 260; Mitchell v. Probat, — Okla. —, 152 Pac. 597; Clark v. O'Toole, 20 Okla. 332, 34 Pac. 547; Hartford Wheel Club v. Travelers Ins. Co. 78 Conn. 355, 62 Atl. 207; Morrison v. Smith, 90 Md. 76, 44 Atl. 1032.

Failure to plead waiver does not defeat the rights of defendants to insist that forfeiture of the lease, if any occurred, was waived by the lessor.

St. Paul Fire & M. Ins. Co. v. Griffin, 33 Okla. 178, 124 Pac. 300; Carson v. Vance, 35 Okla. 584, 130 Pac. 946; Homeland Realty Co. v. Robison, 39 Okla. 591, 136 Pac. 585; First Bank v. Terrell, 44 Okla. 719, 145 Pac. 1140.

Assuming that this lease contains an express forfeiture clause, the failure to pay the rental did not operate ipso facto to terminate the lease,—the lease did not end automatically upon failure to pay the rental.

Cohn v. Clark, — Okla. —, L.R.A.1916B, 686, 150 Pac. 467; Roberts v. Bettman, 45 W. Va. 143, 30 S. E. 95, 19 Mor. Min. Rep. 326; Hancock v. Diamond Plate Glass Co. 162 Ind. 146, 70 N. E. 140; Thornton, Oil & Gas, 2d ed. § 151; McMillan v. Philadelphia Co. 159 Pa. 142, 28 Atl. 220; Archer, Oil & Gas, p. 283; Reserve Gas Co. v. Carbon Black Mfg. Co. 72 W. Va. 757, 79 S. E. 1002; Marshall v. Forest Oil Co. 198 Pa. 83, 47 Atl. 927, 21 Mor. Min. Rep. 179; Rose v. Lanyon Zinc Co. 68 Kan. 126, 74 Pac. 625.

The lessor elected to waive the supposed forfeiture.

1 Underhill, Land. & T. p. 654; Ward v. Day, 5 Best & S. 360, 122 Eng. Reprint, 865, 33 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 254, 10 L. T. N. S. 578, 12 Week. Rep. 829; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 516; Max Meadows Land & Improv. Co. v. Brady, 92 Va. 71, 22 S. E. 845; Campbell v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. 98 Va. 729, 37 S. E. 350; 3 Elliot, Contr. § 2050; Conrow v. Little, 115 N. Y. 387, 5 L.R.A. 693, 22 N. E. 346; Cole v. Smith, 26 Colo. 506, 58 Pac. 1086; Mettner v. Northwestern Nat. L. Ins. Co. 127 Iowa, 205, 103 N. W. 112; Stewart v. Leonard, 103 Me. 128, 68 Atl. 638; Charlotte Harbor & N. R. Co. v. Burwell, 56 Fla. 217, 48 So. 213; Francis v. Supreme Lodge, A. O. U. W. 150 Mo. App. 347, 130 S. W. 500; Cole v. Hines, 81 Md. 476, 39 L.R.A. 455, 32 Atl. 196.

Demanding the rentals after April 17th for the quarter ending July 17th constituted an election upon the part of the lessor to affirm the lease.

Archer, Oil & Gas, p. 284; Camp v. Scott, 47 Conn. 366; Jones, Land. & T. § 496; Lewis v. Ocean Nav. & Pier Co. 125 N. Y. 341, 26 N. E. 301; Gradle v. Warner, 140 Ill. 123, 29 N. E. 1118; 1 Underhill, Land. & T. p. 648; Stewart v. Leonard, 103 Me. 128, 68 Atl. 638; Farlow v. Ellis, 15 Gray, 229; Nagel v. League, 70 Mo. App. 487; Allen v. Dent, 4 Lea, 680; Barrasso v. Tennessee Brewing Co. 1 Tenn. C. C. A. 662.

In the absence of an express forfeiture clause in an "or" lease, there can be no forfeiture for nonpayment of rental.

Reserve Gas Co. v. Carbon Black Mfg. Co. 72 W. Va. 757, 79 S. E. 1002; Thompson v. Christie, 138 Pa. 230, 11 L.R.A. 236, 20 Atl. 934; Marshall v. Forest Oil Co. 198 Pa. 83, 47 Atl. 927, 21 Mor. Min. Rep. 179; Rose v. Lanyon Zinc Co. 68 Kan. 126, 74 Pac. 625; Davis v. Chautauqua Oil & Gas. Co. 78 Kan. 97, 96 Pac. 47; Castle Brook Carbon Black Co. v. Ferrell, — W. Va. —, 85 S. E. 544; Bennett v. Glaspell, 15 N. D. 239, 107 N. W. 45; 27 Cyc. 716; Gale v. Oil Run Petroleum Co. 6 W. Va. 200, 9 Mor. Min. Rep. 1; Buckner v. Warren, 41 Ark. 532; Brown v. Bragg, 22 Ind. 122; Hodgkins v. Price, 137 Mass. 13; Beal v. Bass, 86 Me. 325, 29 Atl. 1088; Johnson v. Gurley, 52 Tex. 222; Ewing v. Miles, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 19, 33 S. W. 235; Bartlett v. Greenleaf, 11 Gray, 98; De Lancey v. Ganong, 9 N. Y. 9.

Courts of equity generally will not declare forfeitures of contracts or property rights.

Indiana Oil, Gas & Development Co. v. McCrory, 42 Okla. 136, 140 Pac. 610; Brewster v. Lanyon Zinc Co. 72 C. C. A. 213, 140 Fed. 801; Thornton, Oil & Gas, § 187; Keller v. Craig, 61 C. C. A. 306, 126 Fed. 632; Gadbury v. Ohio & I. Consol. Natural & Illuminating Gas Co. 162 Ind. 9, 62 L.R.A. 895, 67 N. E. 261, 22 Mor. Min. Rep. 680; South Penn Oil Co. v. Egdehl, 48 W. Va. 348, 86 Am. St. Rep. 43, 37 S. E. 596, 21 Mor. Min. Rep. 106; Edwards v. Iola Gas Co. 65 Kan. 302, 69 Pac. 350, 22 Mor. Min. Rep. 293; Poe v. Ulrey, 233 Ill. 56, 84 N. E. 46; Halla v. Rogers, 109 C. C. A. 626, 187 Fed. 778; La Fayette Gas Co. v. Kelsay, 164 Ind. 563, 74 N. E. 10; Consumers Gas Trust Co. v. Ink, 163 Ind. 174, 71 N. E. 477; Consumers Gas Trust Co. v. Worth, 163 Ind. 141, 71 N. E. 489.

A lease for ten years "and as long thereafter as oil or gas, or either of them, is produced," is not only a lease for ten years, but beyond ten years, providing the lessee L.R.A.1917B.

finds and produces oil during the ten-year term.

McGraw Oil & Gas Co. v. Kennedy, 65 W. Va. 595, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 959, 64 S. E. 1027; Eclipse Oil Co. v. South Penn Oil Co. 47 W. Va. 84, 36 S. E. 923, 20 Mor. Min. Rep. 234; South Penn Oil Co. v. Snodgrass, 71 W. Va. 438, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 848, 76 S. E. 961; Brown v. Fowler, 65 Ohio St. 507, 63 N. E. 76; Young v. Forest Oil Co. 194 Pa. 243, 45 Atl. 121, 20 Mor. Min. Rep. 345; Chaney v. Ohio & I. Oil Co. 32 Ind. App. 193, 69 N. E. 477; Eaton v. Allegany Gas Co. 122 N. Y. 416, 25 N. E. 981; Dickey v. Coffeyville Vitriified Brick & Tile Co. 69 Kan. 106, 76 Pac. 398; Lowther Oil Co. v. Guffey, 52 W. Va. 88, 43 S. E. 101, 22 Mor. Min. Rep. 545; Tucker v. Watts, 25 Ohio C. C. 320; Thornton, Oil & Gas, §§ 134, 135; Graves v. Key City Gas Co. 83 Iowa, 714, 50 N. W. 233; Whiteman v. Fayette Fuel-Gas Co. 139 Pa. 492, 20 Atl. 1062; Xenia Real Estate Co. v. Macy, 147 Ind. 568, 47 N. E. 147.

One dollar is a sufficient cash bonus consideration to bind the lessor in a surrender clause lease.

Guffey v. Smith, 237 U. S. 101, 116, 59 L. ed. 856, 855, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 526; Brewster v. Lanyon Zinc Co. 72 C. C. A. 213, 140 Fed. 801; Allegheny Oil Co. v. Snyder, 45 C. C. A. 604, 106 Fed. 764; Pittsburg Vitriified Paving & Bldg. Brick Co. v. Bailey, 76 Kan. 42, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 745, 90 Pac. 803; Poe v. Ulrey, 233 Ill. 56, 84 N. E. 46; Watford Oil & Gas Co. v. Shipman, 233 Ill. 9, 122 Am. St. Rep. 144, 84 N. E. 53; Central Ohio Natural Gas & Fuel Co. v. Eckert, 70 Ohio St. 127, 71 N. E. 281; Brown v. Fowler, 65 Ohio St. 507, 63 N. E. 76; Lowther Oil Co. v. Guffey, 52 W. Va. 88, 43 S. E. 101, 22 Mor. Min. Rep. 545; Lovett v. Eastern Oil Co. 68 W. Va. 667, 70 S. E. 707; Ann. Cas. 1912B, 360; South Penn Oil Co. v. Snodgrass, 71 W. Va. 438, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 848, 76 S. E. 961; Pyle v. Henderson, 65 W. Va. 39, 63 S. E. 782; Gillespie v. Fulton Oil & Gas Co. 236 Ill. 188, 86 N. E. 219; Eyre v. Potter, 15 How. 42-69, 14 L. ed. 692-600; Lawrence v. McOalmont, 2 How. 426, 429-453, 11 L. ed. 326-336; Davis v. Wells, F. & Co. 104 U. S. 159, 166, 26 L. ed. 686, 690; Olds v. Marshall, 93 Ala. 138, 8 So. 284; Grimball v. Mastin, 77 Ala. 553.

This lease contract, having been partly performed by the lessee, is taken out of the so-called rule that contracts unperformed, optional as to one party, are therefore optional as to the other.

Smith v. Root, 66 W. Va. 633, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 176, 66 S. E. 1005; Kolachny v. Gelbreath, 26 Okla. 772, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 451, 110 Pac. 902; O'Neil v. Sun Co. 58

Tex. Civ. App. 167, 128 S. W. 172; Priddy v. Thompson, 123 C. C. A. 277, 204 Fed. 955; Kansas Natural Gas Co. v. Neosho County, 75 Kan. 335, 89 Pac. 760; Dickey v. Coffeyville Vitrified Brick & Tile Co. 69 Kan. 106, 76 Pac. 398; Eastern Ohio Oil Co. v. McEvoy, 75 Kan. 515, 89 Pac. 1048; Phillips v. Springfield Crude Oil Co. 76 Kan. 783, 92 Pac. 1119.

The surrender clause oil lease for a cash bonus of $1, containing an agreement of the lessee to drill for oil or pay a specified rental, is as fair as well as a valid contract.

Dickey v. Coffeyville Vitrified Brick & Tile Co. 69 Kan. 106, 76 Pac. 398; Eastern Ohio Oil Co. v. McEvoy, 75 Kan. 515, 89 Pac. 1048; Phillips v. Springfield Crude Oil Co. 76 Kan. 783, 92 Pac. 1119; Beardsley v. Kansas Natural Gas Co. 78 Kan. 571, 96 Pac. 859; Pittsburg Vitrified Paving & Bldg. Co. v. Bailey, 76 Kan. 42, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 745, 90 Pac. 803; Allagheny Oil Co. v. Snyder, 45 C. C. A. 604, 106 Fed. 764; Stahl v. Illinois Oil Co. 45 Ind. App. 211, 90 N. E. 633; Heller v. Dailey, 28 Ind. App. 555, 63 N. E. 493; New American Oil & Min. Co. v. Troyer, 166 Ind. 402, 76 N. E. 253, 77 N. E. 739; South Penn Oil Co. v. Snodgrass, 71 W. Va. 438, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 848, 76 S. E. 961; Pyle v. Henderson, 65 W. Va. 39, 63 S. E. 762; Reserve Gas Co. v. Carbon Black Mfg. Co. 72 W. Va. 757, 79 S. E. 1002; Brown v. Fowler, 65 Ohio St. 507, 63 N. E. 76; Central Ohio Natural Gas & Fuel Co. v. Eckert, 70 Ohio St. 127, 71 N. E. 281.

Turner, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On June 17, 1912, John S. Ruhl and Lena, his wife, being the owners and in possession of the land therein described, made, executed, and delivered to M. S. Wilson an oil and gas mining lease, which was duly recorded, the pertinent part of which reads:

" . . . That the said parties of the first part, for and in consideration of the sum of \$1 in hand well and truly paid by the said party of the second part, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, and of the covenants and agreements hereinafter contained on the part of the party of the second part, to be paid, kept, and performed, have granted, demised, leased, and let, and by these presents do . . . grant, demise, lease, and let, unto the second party, his heirs, successors, or assigns, for the sole and only purpose of mining and operating for oil and gas: . . . The southeast quarter ( $\frac{1}{4}$ ) of section fifteen (15) and the southwest quarter ( $\frac{1}{4}$ ) of section fourteen (14), both in township 14 N., of range 16E., containing three hundred and twenty (320) acres, more or less.

It is agreed that this lease shall remain in full force for the term of ten years from this date, and as long thereafter as oil or gas, or either of them, is produced therefrom by the party of the second part, his heirs, successors, or assigns.

"In consideration of the premises the said party of the second part covenants and agrees:

"First. To deliver to the credit of the first parties, their heirs and assigns, free of cost, in tank or the pipe line to which he may connect his wells, the equal one-eighth ( $\frac{1}{8}$ ) part of all oil produced and saved from the leased premises.

"The party of the second part agrees to complete a well on said premises within four months from the date hereof, or pay at the rate of eighty ($80) dollars in advance, for each additional three (3) months such completion is delayed from the time above mentioned for the completion of such well until a well is completed. The above rental shall be paid to the first parties in person or to the credit of the first parties at the First National Bank of Beynton, Oklahoma, and it is agreed that the completion of such well shall be and operate as a full liquidation of all rent under this provision during the remainder of the term of this lease.

"The party of the second part shall have the right at any time to remove all machinery and fixtures placed on said premises, including the right to draw and remove casing.

"The party of the second part, his heirs and assigns, shall have the right at any time after four months on the payment of $1 and all payable obligations then due to the parties of the first part, their heirs and assigns, to surrender this lease, if not tested, for cancellation, after which all payment and liabilities thereafter to accrue under and by virtue of its terms shall cease and determine.

"All covenants and agreements herein set forth between the parties heretofore shall extend to their successors, heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns. . . ."

Thereafter C. B. Wilson and D. A. Cameron became and now are the assignees of the southeast quarter of section 15; the Seven Sands Oil & Gas Company, the assignee of the east half of the southwest quarter of section 14; John A. Sheppard, the assignee of an undivided half interest in the west half of the southwest quarter of said section; and said Wilson and Cameron, the assignee of the remaining undivided one-half interest therein, all of whom will be hereinafter called lessees.

Thereafter, to wit, on August 29, 1914, said Ruhl and wife made, executed, and delivered a second lease of the same land to one Leidecker; and later parted with their interest therein as lessors to one Humphreys, who later acquired the lease and thereafter conveyed his entire interest in the property to the plaintiffs in error, who, later, leased the entire 320 acres to John A. Sheppard, one of their number, and who is the same Sheppard who also owns, but who claims no interest in, an undivided 80 acres contained in the first lease, as stated.

Prior to the execution of the lease to Leidecker, to wit, on August 1, 1914, John S. Ruhl and wife brought suit to establish, as a matter of record, the forfeiture of the lease of June 17, 1912, and to cancel the same upon the ground that the same was unilateral, unperformed, optional as to the lessees and his assigns, and therefore optional as to the lessor, and that there was default in the payment of the rentals or delay money on the part of the lessees. Pending this suit, Cameron and Wilson, without leave, on September 3, 1914, entered and took possession of the southeast quarter of section 15, and thereupon erected a rig and commenced to drill a well, and thereafter struck oil in paying quantities, whereupon they brought suit to cancel the second lease as a cloud upon their title and to restrain plaintiffs in error from claiming thereunder and from interfering with their possession. Before being restrained, however, plaintiffs in error took possession of the well and thereafter enjoined defendants in error, or those claiming under the first lease, from interfering with their possession. After issue joined, the two cases were consolidated, and there was trial to the court and general judgment for defendants in error sustaining the validity of the first lease and clearing the title of all parties in interest thereunder as prayed, to reverse which it is assigned that the same is contrary to the law and the evidence.

No well was ever commenced nor possession yielded of the demised premises to the lessees under the first lease, but up to July 17, 1914, some $420 had been paid by them, from time to time, as delay money. It is contended that the Seven Sands Company defaulted in the payment of the $20 delay money due that day on its 80 acres and thereby incurred a forfeiture of that part of the lease. Assuming that all parties in interest agreed to the substitution of said company as lessee of the 80 acres assigned it, as contended by said company, on this point there is no conflict in the evidence. It discloses that on the next preceding rent-paying day, i. e., April 17, L.R.A.1917B.

1914, Wilson and Cameron took from Ruhl this receipt:

April to July 17, 1914.

Boynton, Okla., April 17, 1914.

Received from C. B. Wilson, by D. A. Cameron, Atty., the sum of \$20 for rental on lease on the E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of S. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$ , of Sec. 14 Twp. 14, Rg. 16 E., recorded in Muskogee county, Muskogee, Oklahoma. John S. Ruhl.

But that in fact no money was paid Ruhl at that time; that instead, it seems, Wilson and Cameron executed to him their promissory note for $20 payable in thirty days, which they afterwards met with the check of the Seven Sands Oil Company for $20 drawn on the First National Bank of Chelsea, "by H. H. Lindley, Sec.," which was paid and its proceeds placed to his credit by the bank of Boynton on April 28, 1914. At that time, some delay in payment of delay money having theretofore occurred on the part of the lessees and their assigns, in consequence of which Ruhl had made complaint, he told the bank to go ahead and accept further rentals and give them another chance. This closed that incident so far as the Seven Sands Company was concerned until the next rent-paying day. This fell on July 17, 1914. To meet this payment, said Lindley, at Chelsea, registered a letter addressed to Ruhl at Boynton, Oklahoma, containing a like check for a like amount, which arrived at Boynton on the 17th. On the next day the postmaster mailed Ruhl a rural delivery notice that there was a registered letter in the postoffice for him. Ruhl came to Boynton August 3, 1914, and there received the letter and the check, both of which he immediately returned to the sender, because, he says, he, being unlearned, did not understand its contents. At no time had the Seven Sands Oil Company funds in the bank to pay the check, and never had an account there. On August 12, 1914, or twenty-five days after it was due, said company caused $20 delay money to be deposited to the credit of Ruhl in the First National Bank of Boynton, which was the bank named in the lease as authorized to receive it. Ruhl never knew of this deposit until the fall of 1914, and, in the meantime, had, on August 1, 1914, commenced his action to cancel the lease, as stated, and on August 29, 1914, had executed the Leidecker lease.

It is sufficient to say that sending a worthless check to the lessor for the amount of the delay money is not payment thereof, and that placing the amount due to his credit in bank long after that time was not payment in advance or indeed payment at all, especially after he had declared a forfeiture and begun suit to cancel the lease on the ground, among others, of failure to pay. When the lessee and his assigns agreed in the lease, as they did, to complete a well on the premises within four months from the date thereof, or pay at the rate of $80 in advance for each additional three months such completion was delayed after the expiration of the four months, the Seven Sands Oil Company, by accepting an assignment of 80 acres thereof, was, on July 17, 1914, no well having been completed, possessed of an option to pay the lessor $20 delay money and thereby keep the lease alive until another rent-paying period, or not pay, and thereby forfeit or abandon its rights under the lease. This $20 was, by express terms of the lease, not only due on that day, but was payable in advance, or as a condition precedent to the continued life of the lease. And time was the essence of this contract. Cooper v. Ft. Smith & W. R. Co. 23 Okla. 130, 99 Pac. 785. In Frank Oil Co. v. Belleview Gas & Oil Co. 29 Okla. 719, 43 L.R.A. (N.S.) 487, 119 Pac. 260, although an "unless" lease was under construction, what we said there as to that lease is equally applicable here to an "or" lease. There, in the syllabus, we said: "A gas and oil lease giving the lessee the option to pay a certain sum, and thus extend the lease, is operative against the lessor during such extension only upon the payment of such sum; contract rights being correlative and mutual. . . . When contracts are optional in respect to one party, they are strictly construed in favor of the party that is bound, and against the party that is not bound."

See also Kolachny v. Galbreath, 26 Okla. 772, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 451, 110 Pac. 902.

In Mitchell v. Probst, — Okla. —, 152 Pac. 597, we said: "Where an oil and gas lease provided 'that, if a well is not drilled on said premises in one year from date hereof, then this lease and agreement shall be null and void, unless the party of the second part, within each and every year in advance, after the expiration of the time above mentioned for the drilling of a well, shall pay a rental of $2.50 per acre for the first year,' etc., held, that such provision amounts to an option, and gives the lessor the right to cancel unless the conditions are complied with. . . . Where, in such case, the sum agreed to be paid for the option is not paid at the time agreed upon, nothing else appearing, the lessor has the right to cancel the lease. . . . In case of an option, time is of the essence of the contract, unless the contract expressly provides that it shall not be."

It will not do to say that, as the leases in those cases contain express provision that they shall be void if no well is completed within a certain time, "unless" the lessee pay a certain sum for delay, what we said there has no application here, where the lease contains no such provision, but binds the lessee to complete a well within a certain time "or" pay for delay, without providing that the lease shall be void on failure so to do. This for the reason that the leases there and the lease here alike give to the lessee the same kind of an option. In other words, although not couched in the same terms, the option in both leases, to pay or not to pay for delay, amounts to the same thing and works the same result; that is, if exercised it prolongs the life of the lease, if not, the lease is abandoned by the lessee and is forfeitable at the option of the lessor, and, after forfeiture declared, being a cloud upon his title, the lessor has a right to come into a court of equity and have it declared forfeit, and canceled and removed.

We said the option was substantially the same in an "unless" lease as in an "or" lease. What the option is in an "unless" lease we have just shown by quotations from former opinions of this court. That it is substantially the same in an "or" lease is shown in McMillan v. Philadelphia Co. 159 Pa. 142, 28 Atl. 220. There the court said: "The lessee had covenanted to do one of two things: To begin a well within sixty days and complete it within three months thereafter, or pay $25 per month as rental for the privilege of doing so afterward, and within the three years which limited his term, unless oil or gas was found in paying quantities. . . . He may drill the well and so pay no rental, or he may pay the rental and not be compelled to drill the well. It is not for the lessor, but it is for the lessee, to elect which he will do. This option was deducible from the stipulations of the lease, but the parties chose to put it in words and make it part of the contract."

Jennings-Heywood Oil Syndicate v. Housiere-Latreille Oil Co. 119 La. 793, 44 So. 481, treats the obligation of the lessee to drill or pay delay money as an option substantially the same as in an "unless" lease, and that too in construing an "or" lease, as here. The court said: "If he merely secured an option, then, by failing to make the fourth quarterly payment within the time fixed for the exercise of the option, he, or his assigns, forfeited all rights under the contract; and there is an end of the matter. Escoubas v. Louisiana Petroleum & Coal Oil Co. 22 La. Ann. 280, 12 Mor. Min. Rep. 343. It is clear that if I agree to be bound on the condition, or provided you do a certain thing within a certain time, for example, if I agree that you shall have the exclusive right to exploit my land for minerals, provided you begin operations within six months, or pay me in advance of the expiration of the six months $50 for a prolongation of the term, and you fail to do the thing thus stipulated to be done, I am not bound."

And after quoting from Pothier (vol. 6, p. 217, § 209), said: "It would seem to be a plain proposition that if I agree to lease you my house on condition that you pay me the rent in advance, and you fail to do so, I am under no obligation to you. 'An option must be exercised within the time limit, or the right will be lost.' 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 931; Richardson v. Hardwick, 106 U. S. 252, 27 L. ed. 145, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 213; Litz v. Goosling, 93 Ky. 185, 21 L.R.A. 129, 19 S. W. 527; Waterman v. Banks, 144 U. S. 394, 36 L. ed. 479, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 646."

And it makes no difference whether the lease contains a forfeiture clause or not, or whether it is an "unless" lease or an "or" lease, as both leases afford to the lessee the same option.

In Cohn v. Clark, — Okla. —, L.R.A. 1916B, 686, 150 Pac. 470, there was an oil and gas lease under construction, as here, and, as here, it was an "or" lease, and again, as here, it contained no forfeiture clause. The "or" clause of the lease read: "Second party agrees to commence operations on said premises within, on, or before January 1st, 1910, from this date, or thereafter pay to the first party $1 per acre per annum annually until a well is drilled, or the property hereby granted is conveyed to the first party." Reversing the rule and construing it most strongly against the lessor, the court said: "We will treat this clause as meaning that, upon failure of the lessee to begin operations or to pay rent as the contract provides, that within itself works a forfeiture."

Mitchell v. Probst, supra, was an "unless" lease containing a forfeiture clause, in effect, that the lease would be void on failure of the lessee to drill or pay "unless." There the court said: "Where, in such case, the sum agreed to be paid for the option is not paid at the time agreed upon, nothing else appearing, the lessor has the right to cancel the lease."

In Conkling v. Krandsusky, 127 App. Div. 761, 112 N. Y. Supp. 13, the lease was for oil and gas. It was an "or" lease and contained no forfeiture clause. The sixth syllabus reads: "An oil lease provided that the lessee should begin operations at a specified time, or, in lieu thereof, pay a rental of $10 per month from that date, with the option at any time to surrender his lease and be released from all unfulfilled conditions. The lessee failed to commence operations at the time specified, and paid the first month's rental of $10, but thereafter for more than two months he ceased to pay and made no attempt to bore for oil. Held that; as in the lease time was the controlling factor, the failure to enter the premises or to pay the $10 per month was an abandonment of the lease."

In the body of the opinion the court said: "He must keep his own lease alive, either by the monthly payments or by drilling for oil, if the provisions for his benefit were to be operative. . . . He paid the $10, . . . expecting possibly to go on with the venture. After that, and more than two months before Galletts entered, he ceased paying and made no attempt to bore for oil. In this lease time was the controlling factor, and when he failed either to enter the premises or to pay the $10 each month, one or the other of which was essential to keep his right effective, he manifested his purpose to abandon the project."

In Thornton's Oil & Gas, § 797, it is said: "If the lessee has only a mere option to enter and explore, then he must do some act toward the development of the property or pay the rent or commutation money for delay, and in one of these ways exercise his option before the lessor gives notice of his election to revoke and cancel the lease."

It is unnecessary to cite authority in support of what appears to us to be so clear. But see Smith v. Guffey, 120 C. C. A. 436, 202 Fed. 106, where the learned circuit judge compared an "unless" lease and an "or" lease substantially the same as here, and held the difference between the two "negligible." And so we say the Seven Sands Oil Company, having failed to pay the delay money in advance, pursuant to the terms of the lease, abandoned and made subject to forfeiture at the option of the lessor all its rights thereunder so far as the 80 acres held by it were concerned. And it makes no difference in our conclusion that H. H. Lindley, who sent the check dated July 15, 1914, signed "Seven Sands Oil & Gas Co., by H. H. Lindley," testified that he, personally, had sufficient money in the bank upon which it was drawn to pay the check, and further that, although he had no arrangement with the bank to do so, yet, as the bank had paid the previous check so drawn, and charged it to his personal account, he was of the opinion that the bank would pay the check in question and also so charge it. As the check, had it been good, would not have been cash in advance as demanded by the lease (Kolachny v. Galbreath, 26 Okla. 772, 88 L.R.A. (N.S.) 451, 110 Pac. 902), it goes without saying that a worthless check was not equivalent to placing the money in the hands of Ruhl, or depositing that amount to his credit in the bank designated in the lease. We are therefore of the opinion that the court was wrong in holding, as counsel say he did, that the lease in question was not subject to forfeiture, and in failing to hold that, in so far as the Seven Sands Oil Company was concerned, it had abandoned, and made subject to forfeiture at the option of the lessor, its rights under the lease, by failing to pay the delay money in question pursuant to the terms thereof.

It is further contended that Wilson and Cameron defaulted in the payment of the $60 delay money due and payable in advance April 17, 1914, and thereby abandoned and made subject to forfeiture the lease as to the remaining 240 acres of the demised premises. Assuming said amount was all that was due from them to Ruhl on that day, which seems to be the construction placed upon the lease by all parties in interest, the facts disclose that on said day Ruhl executed to Wilson and Cameron a receipt which reads:

April to July 17, 1914.

Boynton, Okla., April 17, 1914.

Received in full \$60 for rent according to terms of lease recorded in Muskogee county, Okla., given by me to the S. E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of Sec. 15 and S. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of Sec. 14 of Twp. 14, Rg. 16 E.

John S. Ruhl.

But that in fact no money was paid him at that time. Instead, Wilson executed to Ruhl his promissory note for $60 payable sixty days thereafter with interest from date, which was not paid when due, and not until November 3, 1914, at which time said amount with interest was placed to the credit of Ruhl in the bank designated in the lease, long after he had brought suit to cancel the same and had parted with all interest in the demised premises, as stated. There is no evidence tending to prove that Ruhl agreed to take the note in absolute payment of the debt. On the contrary, the evidence discloses that Ruhl accepted it reluctantly, stating that he was tired of taking notes, as they did not pay them on time, and that he could not cash them, but was finally induced to accept the note on the strength of the promise of Wilson that he would pay it before due if Ruhl would notify him that he needed money. This Ruhl did, and later, before and after it was due, insisted on payment up to the time he brought suit to cancel the lease. But the note was not paid when due, and not until after said suit was brought, to wit, on November 3, 1914, was the amount of the note L.R.A.1917B.

and interest placed to his credit in the bank named in the lease.

Among other things, it is contended that, owing to the absence of a forfeiture clause therein, the lease was not subject thereto, and, if it was, inasmuch as Ruhl had theretofore accepted the checks of the Seven Sands Company and the notes of Wilson and Cameron for delay money, which was afterwards paid, that he thereby waived the forfeiture, if any, and is estopped to assert it. But, as we have just held that an "or" lease without a forfeiture clause and an "unless" lease with a forfeiture clause alike vests an option in the lessee to drill or pay, and as we have seen that a failure to drill or pay, as here, forfeits, or, in other words, operates as an abandonment by the lessee of, an "unless" lease, so we hold that the same result would follow a failure to drill a well or pay pursuant to the terms of this "or" lease, and that there is no merit in the contention that the lease in question is non-forfeitable. And as we have repeatedly held that in order for defendant to avail himself of an estoppel he must plead it (Sapulpa v. Sapulpa Oil & Gas Co. 22 Okla. 347, 97 Pac. 1007), and such has not been done, and it nowhere appearing that, if true, such conduct misled the lessee to his injury, we pass to the next contention, which is, in effect, that, by accepting the $60 note of April 17, 1914, for the delay money then due, and attempting to collect it, which he did, Ruhl evidenced his intent to and did waive the forfeiture (or rather his option to declare a forfeiture), if any accrued, and elected to affirm the lease. In support of this contention, counsel cite Archer on Oil & Gas, p. 284, where it is said: "If lessor declares a forfeiture, the lease is terminated, and thereafter no recovery can be had for rentals thereunder; if he claims the rentals, he affirms the continuation of the lease for the period for which he claims." And 40 Cyc. 268, note 45, where the annotator says: "The courts, not favoring forfeitures, are usually inclined to take hold of any circumstances which indicate an election to waive it."

He cites many cases, some of which undoubtedly support his contention. But such is not the rule in this jurisdiction, where, in Kolachny v. Galbreath, supra, quoting approvingly from the Mehlin Case, 25 Okla. 800, 138 Am. St. Rep. 942, 108 Pac. 545, we said: "Oil and gas leases are construed most strongly against the lessee and in favor of the lessor."

And in Deming Invest. Co. v. Lanham, 36 Okla. 773, 44 L.R.A. (N.S.) 50, 130 Pac. 260: "By failing to drill a well or to pay the rent, the lease became forfeited, and no rent was due thereunder. Ordinarily forfeitures are not favored, but gas and oil leases furnish exceptions to this general rule. Thus, in paragraph 148, Thornton's 2d ed., the law relating to oil and gas provides: "Forfeitures, however, on the part of the lessee in a gas or oil lease, which arise by reason of his neglect to develop or operate the leased premises, are rather favored by the law, because of the peculiar character of the product to be provided,"—which means that we will not be astute to seize on circumstances indicating a waiver of forfeiture on the part of the lessor. Whether the lease is an "unless" lease or an "or" lease, or whether the "or" lease contains a provision that the same "shall be null and void" on failure to drill or pay, as is contained in the "unless" lease, or not, the option available to the lessor to forfeit the lease (on failure of the lessee to do either), being for his benefit only, may be waived by him. But there is no evidence reasonably tending to prove that the lessor waived the forfeiture here.

On this point, aside from any question of pleading, the evidence discloses that, at the time the $60 note of April 17, 1914, was taken for the delay money due that day from Wilson and Cameron, Ruhl took the note under protest for the reason that their notes theretofore given by them for the same purpose had not been paid promptly; that Ruhl then and there told them in effect that if he took the note they must start a well within three days, which they declined to do, but promised to start a well within ten days, after which, it appears, he took the note, saying that he would not allow the lease to run longer if they did not, and that it was the last chance he was going to give them; that thereupon they agreed upon those terms, and, in addition, Cameron told Ruhl that if he needed the money "bad" he would send it to him at any time; that thereafter, before the note fell due, he pressed them for payment, which was refused, and when due remained unpaid, whereupon he placed the matter in the hands of his attorneys, who, on July 20, 1914, caused written notices to be served on defendants that he had declared a forfeiture of the lease. Of course, Ruhl could have waived the forfeiture by acts from which an intention so to do might fairly be inferred (St. Paul, F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Cooper, 25 Okla. 38, 105 Pac. 198); but there was nothing in his acts from which to infer such intention, but, on the contrary, everything to lead us to believe that he intended to insist on a forfeiture.

It will not do to say that a forfeiture of the lease should not be enforced for the reason that both the $60 note of Wilson and the $20 check of the Seven Sands Company, given Ruhl for the delay money due from them to him on April 17, 1914, and July 17, 1914, respectively, were on November 3, 1914, and August 12, 1914, respectively, paid by depositing the money in the bank named in the lease, and hence the lessee should be relieved of the forfeiture by reason of Rev. Laws 1910, § 2844, which reads: "Whenever, by the terms of an obligation, a party thereto incurs a forfeiture, or a loss in the nature of a forfeiture, by reason of his failure to comply with its provisions, he may be relieved therefrom upon making full compensation to the other party, except in case of a grossly negligent, wilful or fraudulent breach of duty."

This for the reason that, as said lessees stood on their lease in the trial court and denied a forfeiture, and there prevailed upon the theory that the lease was not forfeited, if indeed it was forfeitable at all, they will not be permitted to change front in this court and for the first time urge that, under the facts, they should be relieved of the forfeiture, if any occurred. Having failed there to plead in confession and avoidance in virtue of the statute invoked, and there put in issue the question of whether or not they had made "full compensation to the other party," as required by statute, and whether their breach of duty was or was not "grossly negligent, wilful or fraudulent," we can give them no relief here, especially in view of the fact that the rights of the second lessees have intervened and had intervened at the time of the rendition of the judgment complained of. Besides, as stated in Dill v. Frazee, 169 Ind. 53, 79 N. E. 971: "There is little or no reason for the interference of a court of equity to prevent a forfeiture before operations have begun, where the operator has sinned away his opportunity under the contract."

We are therefore of opinion that by non-payment in advance of the delay money, as stated, this entire lease was subject to forfeiture, that is, as to the 240 acres thereof held by the Camerons and also as to the 80 acres held by the Seven Sands Company, that, being so subject, the same was not waived by Ruhl and, not being waived, was by him duly declared; that the jurisdiction of the court was properly invoked to have the same declared forfeit and canceled as a cloud upon his title; and that the court erred in refusing to grant relief to him and those claiming under the second lease as prayed, and in granting relief in effect, sustaining the validity of the first lease.

But let all we have said be as it may. Was Ruhl, together with the owners and holders of the second lease and those claiming under them, entitled to cancel the first lease on other grounds? They contend, in virtue of the general surrender clause contained therein, they were, because, they say, the lease is a "contract," the performance of which is optional on the part of the lessee, and hence is optional on the part of the lessor, and, being unperformed, the lessor had the right to terminate the same at any time and sue to set aside, as he did. This contention must be sustained. Although the lease recited a consideration to Ruhl of \$1 paid, "and the covenants and agreements hereinafter contained on the part of the second party, to be paid," the real and only consideration for the lease, as a whole, was development by the lessee or his assigns. Jennings-Heywood Oil Syndicate v. Housiere-Latreille Oil Co. 119 La. 793, 44 So. 481; Foster v. Elk Fork Oil & Gas Co. 32 C. C. A. 560, 90 Fed. 178; Dill v. Frazee, supra; National Oil & Pipe Line Co. v. Teel, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 67 S. W. 545. After which they were "to deliver to the credit of the first parties, their heirs and assigns, free of cost in the tank or the pipe line to which he may connect his wells, the equal one-eighth ( $\frac{1}{8}$ ) part of all oil produced and saved from the leased premises." Now, while there is authority to the contrary (Brewster v. Lanyon Zinc Co. 72 C. C. A. 213, 140 Fed. 801, and others), we hold that the dollar paid Ruhl at the time of the execution and delivery of the lease was the sole and only consideration paid to hold the lease for the four-month term within which the lessee had to enter and complete a well, and that such consideration did not extend to uphold any other stipulation in the lease; and, further, that the agreement on the part of the lessee to pay delay money after that time was a provision made for the sole purpose of prolonging the lease.

In Lowther Oil Co. v. Guffey, 52 W. Va. 88, 43 S. E. 101, 22 Mor. Min. Rep. 545, speaking to the $1 consideration, the court said: "It was only intended to hold the grant for two years, and after that time a further consideration to prevent forfeiture was provided."

Or, as stated in the headnote to Allegheny Oil Co. v. Snyder, 45 C. C. A. 604, 106 Fed. 764: "The consideration recited ($1) supported not only the grant for the two-years term, but as well the privilege of extending the time for drilling by paying the stipulated price therefor."

In National Oil & Pipe Line Co. v. Teel, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 67 S. W. 545, the court said: "The real consideration of these instruments was not the recited $1, nor the $100 that after the two years might be paid, in order that they might keep it going from year to year, but the beginning and prosecuting with due diligence of wells for oil or minerals upon the land; in other words, the development of the property for oils and minerals in the near future. This was the clear purpose of the grant." See also Owens v. Corsicana Petroleum Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 160 S. W. 192.

Now, if the $1 paid the lessor was earned at the expiration of the four months in which the well was agreed to be, but was not, completed, and thereafter, under the terms of the lease, there remained to the lessee the option to pay for delay, and thus keep the lease alive, or not pay and thereby let it die, with the further option to surrender it for cancelation at any time and thereby terminate the contract and defeat both payment and development, the lease not only lacked in mutuality, in that it imposed no legal obligation on the lessee to do anything, but, in addition thereto, for the reason that it imposed no such legal obligation and left the lessor powerless to compel the lessee to develop and thereby perform the contract, and thus yield the lessor the prospective royalties which constituted the sole consideration for which the lease was given, the lease was also nudum pactum and nothing more than a mere option on the part of the lessee, or rather two options: To drill or pay, or surrender (and thereby avoid doing either); or, in other words, an option to develop or not to develop, or rather to perform or not to perform the lease contract, as he saw fit.

That such lease is an option is contrary to the holding in Illinois and other jurisdictions where it is held to vest a freehold estate in the land. Or, as stated in Guffey v. Smith, 237 U. S. 101, 50 L. ed. 856, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 526: "It is settled by the decisions of the supreme court of Illinois that an oil and gas lease like that of the complainants passes to the lessee, his heirs and assigns, a present vested right—a freehold interest—in the premises; that this interest is taxable as real property, and that the clause giving the lessee an option to surrender the lease at any time is valid, does not create a tenancy at will, or give the lessor an option to compel a surrender, and does not make the lease void as wanting in mutuality. Bruner v. Hicks, 230 Ill. 536, 540, 542, 120 Am. St. Rep. 332, 82 N. E. 888; Watford Oil & Gas Co. v. Shipman, 233 Ill. 9, 13, 122 Am. St. Rep. 144, 84 N. E. 53; Poe v. Ulrey, 233 Ill. 56, 62, 64, 84 N. E. 46; Ulrey v. Keith, 237 Ill. 284, 298, 86 N. E. 696; People ex rel. Carroll v. Bell, 237 Ill. 332, 339, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 746, 86 N. E. 593, 15 Ann. Cas. 511; Daughette v. Ohio Oil Co. 263 Ill. 518, 524, 105 N. E. 308. These decisions constitute rules of property and must be accepted and applied in passing upon the complainants' rights."

But where the lease vests no such interest, but only an option, as here, the great weight of authority supports the rule announced by us in the Mehlin Case, 25 Okla. 809, 138 Am. St. Rep. 942, 108 Pac. 545. There we said: "An executory contract which, under its terms, leaves it optional with one party whether or not he will proceed with the contemplated enterprise, makes the same likewise optional with the other,"—the application of which leads to a rule precisely contrary to the Illinois rule, and that is the rule that, where the lessee has the option to surrender the lease at any time, the lessor has the corresponding option to compel a surrender, and that the lease is void for want of mutuality, or rather voidable, before performance, at the option of the lessor.

In the Jennings Case, supra, the lease involved was an "or" lease, as here, in which the lessee agreed to commence development within six months or pay $50 quarterly in advance for each three months' delay, and to deliver to the owner a royalty of one eighth of the production. The lease contained a clause that the lessee might at any time cancel and surrender the lease on the payment of a sum certain. After certain payments were made for delay, the lessor refused to accept the next payment, which was tendered after the date on which it was due, on the ground that the lease had thereby become forfeit. In a suit to enforce the forfeiture, it was held that such it had become for the reason that the option of the lessee had not been exercised within the time limit, and "that, since the sole object and purpose of the contract was to exploit the land for oil and gas, and the contract left the lessee at liberty to do so or not at his option, there was in reality no contract binding on the lessee."

Owens v. Corsicana Petroleum Co. supra, was a suit to cancel an oil and gas mining lease, the provisions of which were substantially as here. It was an "or" lease and contained a general surrender clause. Therein the lessee agreed to complete a well on the demised premises one year from the date thereof, or pay to the lessor $28.20 each three months in advance for delay. In construing that clause as operated on by the general surrender clause, the court said: "If appellants could neither recover damages, require the completion of a well, nor recover $28.20 rent without the consent of appellee, the contract is clearly unilateral and void. Any attempt to do either of these things could be instantly defeated by appellee by interposing that term of the contract whereby it is permitted to surrender the L.R.A.1917B.

grant upon the payment of $5." And in the syllabus: "A contract between an owner of oil lands and an oil company, giving the company the right to bore for oil, or to pay quarterly rentals, which, upon acceptance by the owner, extended the contract for another quarter, or to surrender the lease at any time upon the payment of $5 to the owner, was a unilateral contract, void for want of mutuality; the $5 being merely a nominal consideration and no consideration for the grant." See also Long v. Sun Co. 132 La. 601, 61 So. 684.

Witherspoon v. Staley, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 156 S. W. 557, was also a suit to cancel an oil and gas lease in effect as here. It was executed in consideration of $25 and certain royalties, and provided if operations were not commenced with diligence within sixty days from a certain date the grant should immediately become void, except that lessee might prevent such forfeiture by paying $25 every sixty days until an oil well was commenced; construing which, it was held that, since the instrument did not bind the lessee to do anything, it was a unilateral contract and nothing more than an option, which terminated on the failure of the lessee to perform the conditions. It seems that such was the conclusion of the court independent of the general surrender clause in the lease. In the opinion the court said: "This contract was likewise a unilateral one, in that it did not bind or obligate the lessee to perform any of the conditions thereof, and was therefore lacking in mutuality. See National Oil & Pipe Line Co. v. Teel, 95 Tex. 591, 68 S. W. 979, 22 Mor. Min. Rep. 263, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 67 S. W. 545; Forney v. Ward, 25 Tex. Civ. App. 448, 62 S. W. 109; Roberts v. McFadden, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 47, 74 S. W. 111; Hodges v. Brice, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 358, 74 S. W. 590; Rutland Marble Co. v. Ripley, 10 Wall. 339, 19 L. ed. 955, 3 Mor. Min. Rep. 291; Huggins v. Daley, 48 L.R.A. 320, 40 C. C. A. 12, 99 Fed. 606, 20 Mor. Min. Rep. 377; Steelsmith v. Gartlan, 45 W. Va. 27, 44 L.R.A. 107, 29 S. E. 978, 19 Mor. Min. Rep. 315. See also Eclipse Oil Co. v. South Penn Oil Co. 47 W. Va. 84, 34 S. E. 923, 20 Mor. Min. Rep. 234; Harness v. Eastern Oil Co. 49 W. Va. 232, 38 S. E. 670; Cowan v. Radford Iron Co. 83 Va. 547, 3 S. E. 120, 15 Mor. Min. Rep. 453."

Young v. McIlhenny, — Ky. —, 116 S. W. 728, was a suit for delay money due on two certain oil and gas leases, alike in all essential particulars. They were "unless" leases, and each provided: "If no well is commenced on the premises hereby leased, within one year from this date, then this grant shall become null and void, unless the party of the second part shall pay to the first party ($75 in one lease and $50 in the other) for each year thereafter such commencement is delayed,"—and contained a general surrender clause as here.

Without any particular note of the effect of the surrender clause, in construing the lease, the court said: "These leases are simply options given by the lessor to the lessee for one year with the right to renew the options at the end of the year upon the payment of $125, if the lessee has not commenced operation thereunder within the twelve months. There is nothing in either the leases or the contract binding the lessee to do anything. He has the exclusive right to bore for oil or gas upon the premises described in the leases for twelve months, and if he fails to exercise his right, such failure, of itself, operates to cancel the leases. The right to bore for either oil or gas is purely optional with the lessee; the lessor is bound, but the lessee is not. There is nothing in the leases or the contract upon which the lessor could base an action for specific performance; under neither the leases nor the contract could he compel the lessee to commence operations, or to continue them after he had commenced. In the case of Steinwender-Stoffrogen Coffee Co. v. F. T. Guenther Grocery Co. 26 Ky. L. Rep. 270; 89 S. W. 1170, this court, in speaking of a contract similar to the one under consideration, said: 'Contracts which are valid must be mutual and binding upon both parties. As we have said, it is a fundamental principle of law that there must be mutuality in every contract.'

Reese v. Zinn (C. C.) 103 Fed. 97, was a suit for the cancellation of a lease. It does not appear whether the same was an "unless" or an "or" lease, or whether it contained a general surrender clause or not. But therein the court was of opinion that the plaintiff was entitled to the relief sought, first, for the reason that the parties claiming thereunder had by the terms and provisions of the lease forfeited their right, and not only that, but had abandoned the lease; and, "second, because the contract is void for want of mutuality, for the reason that it puts it in the power of the lessee to terminate the lease at will, and thereby confers the same power upon the lessor. This principle is well settled by numerous decisions, both in our own courts, as well as courts of other states. 12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 767; Kelly v. Waite, 12 Met. 300; 2 Bl. Com. 148; Guffy L.R.A.1917B.

v. Hukill, 34 W. Va. 49, 8 L.R.A. 759, 26 Am. St. Rep. 901, 11 S. E. 754; Roberts v. Bettman, 45 W. Va. 143, 30 S. E. 95, 19 Mor. Min. Rep. 326; Eclipse Oil Co. v. South Penn. Oil Co. 47 W. Va. 84, 34 S. E. 923, 20 Mor. Min. Rep. 234." See also National Oil & Pipe Line Co. v. Teel, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 87 S. W. 545.

In Steelsmith v. Gardlan, 45 W. Va. 27, 44 L.R.A. 107, 29 S. E. 978, 19 Mor. Min. Rep. 325, the question was, as here, whether the first lease was at an end at the time the second lease was executed. The lease was an "unless" lease and was for and in consideration of $1. It contained a general surrender clause, substantially as here. Referring to the first lease, the court said: "Mrs. McGregor entered into the lease for the sole consideration of the prospective rents and royalties she would enjoy if the lessee, in diligent search therefor, should find oil and gas in paying quantities. If such lease failed to bind the lessee to diligent search for oil and gas, it was without consideration, binding on neither party, and voidable, if not void, at the pleasure of either. Cowan v. Radford Iron Co. 83 Va. 547, 3 S. E. 120, 15 Mor. Min. Rep. 453; Petroleum Co. v. Coal, Coke & Mfg. Co. 89 Tenn. 381, 18 S. W. 65." See also Foster v. Elk Fork Oil & Gas Co. 82 C. C. A. 560, 61 U. S. App. 576, 90 Fed. 178.

Eclipse Oil Co. v. South Penn. Oil Co. 47 W. Va. 84, 34 S. E. 923, 20 Mor. Min. Rep. 234, was a suit in equity by the owner of the first lease against the owner of the second lease on the same property, who had entered and commenced development, to test the validity of the first lease, although nothing had been done thereunder except the payment of the annual rental therein provided for. The lease was for and in consideration of "the covenants and agreements hereinafter mentioned," which was a royalty on production. It provided for the drilling of a well upon the demised premises "within six months from the date of the execution of the lease," or "in lieu thereof" the lessee agreed to pay $1 an acre per annum until the well was completed. The lease also contained a general surrender clause, which, if exercised, would defeat development as here, construing which the court said: "Under the provisions of the lease in controversy, there was no obligation upon the lessee to explore or pay rent; but he reserved the voluntary option to surrender it at any time, without legal obligation to do anything or pay anything. Hence the lessor had the right to vacate it at any time while in an executory state. . . . The only considerations mentioned in the lease are the royalties and rentals on oil and gas to be produced, and the commutation for failure to complete a well. The plaintiff was not bound to complete a well in any given time, or during the life of the lease, so as to produce oil royalties or gas rentals, but in lieu thereof might pay a commutation, which he reserved the right to defeat at any time before payment enforced by surrender of the lease. It was entirely optional with him to bore or not, or pay or not. He was not bound to do either, but could decline to do both. This lease is not capable of any other construction. A consideration mentioned which is not legally enforceable is equivalent to no consideration, and a contract dependent thereon is as much a nudum pactum as if no consideration were mentioned."

In Petroleum Co. v. Coal, Coke & Mfg. Co. supra, Lurton, J., said: "If the compensation to be paid the lessor depends upon the profit to result from the development and working of a mine, and the lessee is not bound, either expressly or impliedly, to explore and discover, or, when discovered, to work such mine, then no consideration for the lease exists. It is a mere option based upon no consideration, and may be withdrawn at any time before money is expended in doing what is optional upon the part of the lessee. Taylor, Land. & T. § 152."

We are therefore of opinion that, as the lease in question conferred on the lessee the right to surrender the lease at any time after four months before development, and thereby terminate the same, a corresponding right existed in the lessor to compel a surrender and terminate the same before development, which he did by making the second lease and yielding possession of the land to the second lessee (Eclipse Oil Co. v. South Penn Oil Co. supra), and by commencing his action to cancel the same, and that the court was wrong in refusing to grant him relief upon this ground and in granting relief to the lessees sustaining the first lease.

In so holding, we refuse to follow Brewster v. Lanyon Zinc Co. 72 C. C. A. 213, 140 Fed. 801, which counsel for the lessees in the first lease contend should be considered as establishing a rule of property in this state. That was a suit in equity to establish a forfeiture of an oil and gas lease as a matter of record, and to cancel the same as a cloud on plaintiffs' title, as here. A demurrer was sustained to the petition, from which plaintiff appealed. The lease provided, among other things, that the lessee "may at any time remove all his property and reconvey the premises hereby granted, L.R.A.1917B.

and thereupon this instrument shall be null and void," and that, "if no well shall be drilled upon said premises within five years from this date, second party agrees to reconvey, and thereupon this instrument shall be null and void." No well was drilled during the first four years of the lease, delay money being paid during the third and fourth years. During the fifth year a well was drilled from which gas was obtained in paying quantities. In refusing to cancel the lease, the court, in effect, refused to apply the doctrine we have applied here, for the reason that the court took an entirely different view of the nature of the lease. The court said that the position taken by reason of the surrender clause that the lease was wanting in mutuality, was determinable at the will of the lessee, and was therefore equally terminable at the will of the lessor, was not sound, for the reason that the lease was in the nature of a grant in presenti of all the oil and gas in the land described, with the right to enter and search for them, and to mine and remove them when found. From which premise the court concluded that the surrender clause did not make the estate a mere tenancy at will within the operation of the common-law rule that an estate at the will of one party is equally at the will of the other, and hence denied the relief. Besides, it will be seen that the contract there had been in part performed by boring, but not so here. Here we are not attempting to make application of the doctrine announced after the lease contract has been performed in whole or in part by the lessee, but are applying it where there has been no performance. Although the last case cited came from Kansas, the rule there applied was substantially the Illinois rule, which we have never followed, but refused to follow in the Mehlin Case, 25 Okla. 809, 138 Am. St. Rep. 942, 108 Pac. 545; the Frank Oil Case, 29 Okla. 719, 43 L.R.A. (N.S.) 487, 119 Pac. 260; the Kolachny Case, 26 Okla. 772, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 451, 110 Pac. 902; and the Mitchell Case, — Okla. —, 152 Pac. 597. For the same reason we refuse, on this point, to follow Central Ohio Natural Gas & Fuel Co. v. Eckert, 70 Ohio St. 127, 71 N. E. 281; Brown v. Fowler, 65 Ohio St. 507, 63 N. E. 76; Poe v. Ulrey, 233 Ill. 56, 84 N. E. 46. Also Watford Oil & Gas Co. v. Shipman, 233 Ill. 9, 122 Am. St. Rep. 144, 84 N. E. 53, where an oil and gas lease is held to convey a "freehold interest."

Neither will we follow Poe v. Ulrey, 233 Ill. 56, 84 N. E. 46. That was a suit in equity against the appellants, the object of which was to enforce a forfeiture and cancellation of an oil and gas lease providing substantially as here. The lessor urged his corresponding right to compel a surrender of the lease in virtue of the surrender clause contained therein giving such right to the lessee; but the court held that such he could not do for the reason that the consideration of $1 mentioned in the lease as paid to the lessor by the lessee was sufficient to sustain every covenant in the lease, including the surrender clause, and hence the same was not void for want of mutuality. We say we will not follow that case in holding that the dollar was sufficient to uphold the stipulation contained in the surrender clause, for the reason that such holding is not in keeping with reason or the weight of authority, and, besides, we have just held the contrary, and that it was sufficient consideration to hold the lease for the four months during the time the lessee had to enter and complete a well only, and that such consideration did not extend to uphold any other stipulation in the lease. Besides, it would be incongruous with what we have just held, which is that, after the expiration of the four months in which the lessee had the right to enter and complete a well, it is not the dollar paid as consideration to hold the lease during that time which thereafter keeps alive the lease, but the payment of delay money only in advance as a condition precedent to that end. It would also be incongruous with what we have just held, in keeping with what we believe to be the weight of authority, that development is the sole consideration moving the lessor to execute the lease, that is, the lease as a whole; while the dollar, we repeat, is consideration to sustain the four months' term for drilling.

It is perhaps unnecessary to say, but we will, in the language of the headnote in Ohio Oil Co. v. Detamore, 165 Ind. 243, 78 N. E. 906: "Where the lessee has lost his rights under a lease and the lessor has commenced an action to quiet his title, the lessee, by re-entering over the lessor's objections, cannot revive any rights to the premises." See also Zeigler v. Dailey, 37 Ind. App. 240, 78 N. E. 819.

We are therefore of opinion that, as the surrender clause in this lease rendered the performance thereof optional as to the lessee, being unperformed, it was also optional as to the lessor; that, as the clause under consideration gave the lessee the right to surrender the lease at any time after four months, a corresponding right existed in the lessor to compel a surrender; and that the court erred in holding that such right in him did not exist, and in refusing to decree a cancellation thereof pursuant to his prayer and the prayer of those claiming under the second lease.

Let the cause be reversed and remanded, L.R.A.1917B.

to be proceeded with pursuant to the views herein expressed.

Sharp and Hardy, JJ., concur.

Kame, Ch. J., dissenting (October 10, 1916):

I am unable to concur in the conclusion reached by the majority of the court, and, on account of the importance of the questions involved, I deem it necessary to set out the grounds of my dissent in a separate opinion.

This is a controversy between the lessors of a tract of undeveloped oil land and certain of their lessees and their sublessees on one side, and subsequent purchasers from the lessors and another group of lessees and their sublessees on the other, John S. Ruhl and Lena Ruhl, his wife, are the common lessors and grantors.

On the 17th day of June, 1912, they executed an oil and gas lease for the entire tract of land in dispute to the defendant in error M. S. Wilson. The lease, which did not contain a forfeiture clause, recited, in substance, that it was made for and in consideration of the sum of $1 in hand paid by the lessee, and "for the covenants and agreements hereinafter contained on the part of the party of the second part, to be paid, kept, and performed." The habendum clause provided that "this lease shall remain in force for ten years from this date, and as long thereafter as oil and gas, or either of them, is produced therefrom by the party of the second part, his heirs, successors, or assigns."

The lease also contained a clause which obligated the lessee "to complete a well on said premises within four months from the date hereof, or pay at the rate of $80 in advance, for each additional three months such completion is delayed," and another clause which conferred upon the lessee the right "at any time after four months, on the payment of $1 and all payable obligations then due to the parties of the first part, their heirs or assigns, to surrender the lease, if not tested, for cancellation." In April, 1914, the lessors attempted to declare a forfeiture of the Wilson lease, for failure on the part of the lessee or his assigns to complete a well or pay in accordance with the terms of the lease. On the 1st day of August, 1914, the lessors commenced a suit in equity to cancel the Wilson lease, upon various grounds, which later will be noticed more in detail; and on the 29th day of August, 1914, they made another lease of the same premises to other parties, who, with their sublessees, constitute the other group of lessees. Subsequently the lessors conveyed their entire interest in the land to still other parties. Although the numerous parties coming into the case from the initial sources above indicated filed voluminous pleadings, praying for such relief, legal or equitable, as their varying circumstances seemed to them to warrant, essentially the cause of action amounted to a suit in equity to declare a forfeiture of the Wilson lease (1) for failure to drill or pay; and (2) because, on account of the forfeiture clause, the lease was unilateral and void.

Upon trial to the court the validity of the Wilson lease was upheld, and a decree was entered in favor of the group of lessees and sublessees who claimed thereunder; whereupon the lessors, their grantees, and the other group of lessees and sublessees, instituted this proceeding in error for the purpose of reviewing the action of the trial court.

In this court the lessors, the subsequent purchasers of their interest in the land, and all lessees and sublessees claiming under the second lease, are plaintiffs in error, whilst all parties claiming under the first or Wilson lease are defendants in error. This brief general outline of the record sufficiently states the facts to clearly indicate the line of cleavage between the contending parties, and that the case upon its merits turns upon the validity or invalidity of the Wilson lease.

As many of the most serious objections urged against the validity of the Wilson lease by counsel for plaintiffs in error turn upon the construction of the clauses thereof hereinbefore set out, it will not be necessary to set out in full the remaining parts thereof in this opinion.

Before reviewing the important questions of law arising out of the various assignments of error presented for review, it will be helpful to notice briefly a few of the preliminary circumstances in which the Wilson lease was given, upon which the parties all agree. Whether the leased tract contained oil and gas was not known at the time the lease was executed. It was in "wild cat" territory wherein the drilling of test wells would be attended with great expense and the many hazards naturally incident to proving and developing a new oil field. The lease itself is free from ambiguity, and no fraud, deception, or overreaching was practised in procuring it. All the parties were competent to contract with each other and, presumably, entered into the lease because its terms were satisfactory to them. Ordinarily, contracts arising out of such circumstances are not prolific of either suits in equity or actions at law; but counsel for plaintiff in error and a few of the courts seem to have discovered some subtle distinction between oil and gas leases or contracts and other contracts, which, they say, requires the former to be placed in a class by themselves and construed strictly in favor of the lessor and against the lessee, the practical effect of which upon the contract involved herein is stated by counsel for plaintiff in error in their brief as follows: "The lease at bar is merely a working agreement for four months with the further provision that the parties might by mutual consent extend the same quarter by quarter upon payment of rentals upon the same terms without further formality or other written agreement. This renewal or continuation of the working agreement could have been accomplished by tender of the delay money on the one hand and acceptance on the other."

The first assignment of error presented by counsel for plaintiff in error in their brief is stated as follows: "The Ruhl-Wilson contract is unilateral, and, having been unperformed when Ruhl declared a forfeiture, the same was optional as to Ruhl because optional as to the lessee. Contracts unperformed optional as to one of the parties are optional as to both."

A great many authorities are cited as supporting this doctrine, among them the following cases decided by this court, which counsel contend are controlling: Frank Oil Co. v. Bellevue Gas & Oil Co. 29 Okla. 719, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 487, 119 Pac. 260; Superior Oil & Gas Co. v. Mehlin, 25 Okla. 809, 138 Am. St. Rep. 942, 108 Pac. 545; Kolachny v. Galbreath, 26 Okla. 772, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 451, 110 Pac. 902; Hill Oil & Gas Co. v. White, — Okla. —, 157 Pac. 710.

The theory of counsel on this point is further disclosed by the following excerpt from their brief: "The lease of June 17, 1912, by Ruhl to Wilson, covering the 320 acres involved, was executed for the nominal consideration of $1, the real consideration being the development which Ruhl expected as a result of the contract. The surrender clauses in the lease hereinafter quoted made the same entirely optional with the lessee. He was not required to do anything. The lessee might drill a well on the premises within four months, or he had the option to delay drilling for three-month periods by paying in advance for each quarter $80 for such delay, and he had the further option to surrender the lease, if not tested, at any time, upon the payment of the nominal sum of $1 and thereby relieve himself from the payment of rentals. He had the further option, even after entering upon the premises, to abandon the same any time and to remove all machinery and fixtures placed by him on the premises, including the right to draw and remove casing. These terms of the contract bring it clearly within the equitable rule so often announced by this court with particular reference to oil and gas mining leases, that contracts unperformed, optional as to one of the parties, are optional as to both. In the case of Kolachny v. Galbreath, 26 Okla. 772, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 451, 119 Pac. 902, this court said, as if writing to cover this very case, and as if to declare this very lease voidable at the option of the lessor, citing the case of Superior Oil & Gas Co. v. Mehlin, 25 Okla. 809, 138 Am. St. Rep. 942, 108 Pac. 545: 'The general rule in such cases is that contracts unperformed, optional as to one of the parties, are optional as to both. Venture Oil Co. v. Fretts, 152 Pa. 451, 25 Atl. 732, 17 Mor. Min. Rep. 543; Huggins v. Daley, 48 L.R.A. 320, 49 C. C. A. 12, 99 Fed. 606; Reese v. Zimm (C. C.) 103 Fed. 97; Federal Oil Co. v. Western Oil Co. 57 C. C. A. 428, 121 Fed. 674, 22 Mor. Min. Rep. 429.' The foregoing quotation is a conclusion drawn by the learned justice in answer to a question which he himself had put, as follows: 'Does the surrender clause, as hereinbefore set out, render the lease such a contract as a court of equity will refuse to enforce?' Referring to a surrender clause in the following words: 'It is hereby further agreed that the party of the second part shall have the right at any time to surrender and terminate this grant and demise by serving written notice upon the parties of the first part of such intention, after which all payments or liabilities to accrue shall cease and determine.' This authority is conclusive on this case, for the court says that such a surrender clause, giving the lessee the right to surrender, also gives the lessor the right to surrender, and that therefore a court of equity will not enforce such a contract."

From an examination of a great number of authorities cited by counsel for the respective parties, as supporting their view of the various questions of law arising out of the foregoing general assignment of error, it is apparent that many of the courts, in citing authorities and discussing the proper construction to be given oil and gas leases, have assumed that such instruments have become standardized, and therefore have not attempted to distinguish with clearness between the varying terms of the contracts involved in the various cases. It is true that there is a general vein of similarity running through all contracts of this nature, and that at present a large majority of them may be embraced within two general classes which, for convenience, have sometimes been designated "unless" leases and "or" leases.

I am aware, of course, that the words "or" and "unless," of themselves, have no particular potency in determining the character of an oil and gas lease; but, in the leases I have examined, the following essential differences between "or" leases and "unless" leases are uniformly found to exist: The "unless" lease by its terms confers upon the lessee the option to continue or renew the lease by payment of rental for certain fractional periods at a time. The payment of the rental is a necessary condition precedent to the renewal of the lease for the fractional times specified in the lease contract. In fact, it is a lease from year to year, or quarter to quarter.

On the other hand, under the "or" lease containing a surrender clause the payment of the rentals from time to time is not necessary to renew the lease by fractional periods from time to time; the failure to pay under the "or" lease not operating automatically to terminate the lease. It is true that under the "or" lease containing a surrender clause the lessee may accelerate the termination of the lease and his liability thereunder, by payment of the amount which the parties have stipulated in the surrender clause he shall pay for the privilege of being released from the contract; but such leases scarcely, if ever, by their terms, become null and void by failure to pay rentals in advance. In this respect, the two leases are diametrically opposed. The "unless" lease by its terms automatically terminates by failure to pay rentals; whereas, the "or" lease remains in force in the event the lessee does not elect to accelerate the ending of the lease by paying the stipulated consideration for the privilege of surrendering, and by surrendering it. Under the "or" lease (with surrender clause), even though it contains an express forfeiture clause, the lessor may waive the default and sue the lessee and recover the rentals; the lessee being bound as the lessor's debtor for the rentals until the lessee surrenders. Cohn v. Clark, — Okla. —, L.R.A.1916B, 686, 150 Pac. 467; Burrees v. Diem, 23 Okla. 776, 101 Pac. 1116.

But in addition to these general classifications, in considering cases upon rental clauses, care should be taken to distinguish between leases containing (a) an "or" clause and a forfeiture clause; (b) containing an "or" clause and a provision to the effect that a failure to complete a well or pay will render the lease null and void,—in effect, a forfeiture clause; or (c) containing an "unless" clause, from leases which provide, as in the case at bar, for a definite term of years, and the lessee agrees either to drill or pay, and which contains no forfeiture clause.

The majority of the court, it seems to me, have fallen into error by not distinguishing the "or" lease, herein involved, from the "unless" leases, construed in the former

Oklahoma cases, and failing to observe that, when the "unless" lessee fails to drill or pay, the lease, by its terms, becomes null and void; whereas, failure to either drill or pay under the "or" lease, even though it contains a surrender clause, does not terminate or end the rights and powers of both lessor and lessee, because the lessor still has the right to elect to keep the lease alive and hold the lessee for the rentals. Before the lessor's right to keep the "or" lease alive by claiming the rental ends, the lessee must do something more than fail to drill or pay; he must affirmatively surrender the lease and pay the lessor the $1 and all unpaid rentals, pursuant to the terms of the surrender clause. Mere failure on the part of the lessee under the "or" lease to drill or pay does not constitute an abandonment or surrender of his rights under the lease. If it did, this court could not have sustained an action by the lessor against the lessee for the unpaid rentals, as was done in Cohn v. Clark and Burress v. Diem, supra.

That this court in at least one opinion recognized these distinctions between the "or" lease and the "unless" lease is apparent from the following excerpt from Frank Oil Co. v. Belleview Gas & Oil Co. 29 Okla. 719, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 487, 119 Pac. 260. "We have been unable to find a single case where a court of chancery ordered the specific performance of a lease at the instance of the lessee where there had been no development and the lease provided only that it should be forfeited unless the lessee paid a certain sum of money for delay, such contract being merely optional; but, where the contract provided that there should be certain development or the lessee should pay a certain specific sum of money, then, in the event of delay or failure of development, an obligation was incurred on the part of the lessee to pay a certain sum of money."

Observing these fundamental differences in the terms of the two classes of contracts, it is not necessary to notice in detail the distinctions which might be drawn between the form of the actions and the nature of the relief prayed for in the former Oklahoma cases cited, and the form of the action and relief prayed for in the case at bar, or the distinguishing features of each case, for the reason that the contract now under consideration is so different in the essential features just pointed out, from the contracts formerly construed, as to render the former class of cases wholly inapplicable to the case at bar.

When these differences between the "unless" leases construed in Kolachny v. Galbreath, supra, and the other cases of that class, and the "or" lease herein involved, L.R.A.1917B.

are considered, it is apparent to me that this court has never held, in a suit of this nature, that the surrender clause in an "or" oil and gas lease, supported by an independent consideration, renders such lease void or unilateral, nor that it creates a tenancy at the will of either party, nor that such a lease is optional as to the lessor. On the contrary, it seems to me that to so hold would overrule in principle Frank Oil Co. v. Belleview Gas & Oil Co. supra; Deming Invest. Co. v. Lanham, 36 Okla. 773, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 50, 130 Pac. 260; Mitchell v. Probst, — Okla. —, 152 Pac. 597, and other cases of that class.

Having reached this conclusion, which I have shown is not in conflict with any former decision of this court, it does not seem necessary to distinguish the case at bar from cases from other jurisdictions cited by the majority of the court and counsel, as supporting the rhythmic doctrine that "contracts unperformed, optional as to one of the parties, are optional as to both." It is sufficient to say of such cases that in none of them do I find any support for the contention that the effect of a surrender clause in a lease expressly agreed upon between the parties, which by its terms, grants the lessee the right to surrender, and for which privilege the lessee obligates himself to pay an adequate independent consideration, is to confer a corresponding right upon the lessor to forfeit the lease at his option, without any agreement to that effect, or the payment or promise of payment of any consideration whatever. Legg v. Benion, Willes, 43, 125 Eng. Reprint, 1047; Brewster v. Lanyon Zinc Co. 72 U. C. A. 213, 140 Fed. 801; Brown v. Fowler, 65 Ohio St. 507, 63 N. E. 76; note to Pacific Warehouse Co. v. McKenzie-Hunt Paper Co. Ann. Cas. 1916B, 308.

And it also may be added that the value as authorities of the cases from Louisiana, principally relied upon by counsel for plaintiffs in error upon this point, will be greatly minimized when it is considered that in that jurisdiction, which derives its jurisprudence from the civil law, $1 is not considered an adequate consideration to support a contract; that the rule as herein stated in cases wherein the consideration is deemed to be adequate is clearly established by the recent case of McClendon v. Busch-Everett Co. 138 La. 722, 70 So. 781.

Being unhindered by the decisions of our own court, it seems to me that, in construing these contracts, it would be more consonant with right and justice and sound business principles to follow the familiar trend of authority from the other great oil producing states of the Union, and particularly the doctrine approved by the Supreme Court of the United States and the circuit court of appeals for the eight circuit, the Federal circuit in which this state is situated. Many of the operators within this state have come from states where the surrender clause has been sanctioned by law for the past half century, and, finding the same to be the rule in the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit, the court of last resort, in many instances, for this jurisdiction prior to statehood, they, and the vast number of citizens of this state who joined them in the development of the oil industry, were justified in assuming that the surrender clause would not be stricken down by the courts of the state.

The following cases hold that the presence of a surrender clause in an oil and gas mining lease does not render it void and subject to cancellation in a suit in equity: Brown v. Fowler, 65 Ohio St. 507, 63 N. E. 76; Central Ohio Natural Gas & Fuel Co. v. Eckert, 70 Ohio St. 127, 71 N. E. 281; Poe v. Ulrey, 233 Ill. 56, 84 N. E. 46; Pittsburg Vitriified Paving & Bldg. Brick Co. v. Bailey, 76 Kan. 42, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 745, 90 Pac. 803; New American Oil & Min. Co. v. Troyer, 166 Ind. 402, 76 N. E. 253, 77 N. E. 739; Pyle v. Henderson, 65 W. Va. 39, 63 S. E. 762; Lovett v. Eastern Oil Co. 68 W. Va. 667, 70 S. E. 707, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 360; Houssiere Latreille Oil Co. v. Jennings-Heywood Oil Syndicate, 115 La. 107, 38 So. 932; Brewster v. Lanyon Zinc Co. 72 C. C. A. 213, 140 Fed. 801; Allegheny Oil Co. v. Snyder, 45 C. C. A. 604, 106 Fed. 764; Prairie Oil & Gas Co. v. Morton (No. 2064) — Pac. —, equity opinion; Guffey v. Smith, 237 U. S. 101, 59 L. ed. 856, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 526; Cohn v. Clark, — Okla. —, L.R.A.1918B, 686, 150 Pac. 467.

And the following authorities hold that $1 is a sufficient cash bonus consideration to bind the lessor in a surrender clause lease: Guffey v. Smith, 237 U. S. 101, 116, 59 L. ed. 856, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 526; Brewster v. Lanyon Zinc Co. 72 C. C. A. 213, 140 Fed. 801; Allegheny Oil Co. v. Snyder, 45 C. C. A. 604, 106 Fed. 764; Pittsburg Vitriified Paving & Bldg. Brick Co. v. Bailey, 76 Kan. 42, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 745, 90 Pac. 803; Poe v. Ulrey, 233 Ill. 56, 84 N. E. 46; Watford Oil & Gas Co. v. Shipman, 233 Ill. 9, 122 Am. St. Rep. 144, 84 N. E. 53; Central Ohio Natural Gas & Fuel Co. v. Eckert, 70 Ohio St. 127, 71 N. E. 281; Brown v. Fowler, 65 Ohio St. 507, 63 N. E. 76; Lowther Oil Co. v. Guffey, 52 W. Va. 88, 43 S. E. 101, 22 Mor. Min. Rep. 545; Lovett v. Eastern Oil Co. 68 W. Va. 667, 70 S. E. 707, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 360; South Penn Oil Co. v. Snodgrass, 71 W. Va. 438, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 848, 76 S. E. 961; Pyle L.R.A.1917B.

v. Henderson, 65 W. Va. 39, 63 S. E. 762; Gillespie v. Fulton Oil & Gas Co. 236 Ill. 188, 86 N. E. 219.

The next assignment of error which would follow in logical order, as well as importance, is stated by counsel in effect as follows: There was default in payment of rentals due April 17, 1914, whereupon the lessor, as he had a right to do, declared a forfeiture because of default in payment. This assignment of error is based upon the assumption by the plaintiffs in error that, notwithstanding the absence of a forfeiture clause, a slight default in the payment of the rentals, as provided for in such a lease contract, authorizes the lessor to declare the lease forfeited. Frank Oil Co. v. Belleview Gas & Oil Co. 29 Okla. 719, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 487, 119 Pac. 260, and several other Oklahoma cases are cited in support of this doctrine. I have pointed out some of the distinctions between "unless" and "or" leases, and that it was an "unless" lease which, by its terms, became null and void if delay money was not paid in advance, that was under discussion in the Frank Oil Co. Case, whilst the contract in the case at bar is an "or" lease, which contains no forfeiture clause, nor provision which expressly or impliedly provides that time is of the essence of the contract. By express statute (Rev. Laws, 1910, § 968) in this jurisdiction, "time is never considered as of the essence of a contract, unless by its terms expressly so provided." Snyder v. Stribling, 18 Okla. 168, 89 Pac. 222; Standard Lumber Co. v. Miller & V. Lumber Co. 21 Okla. 617, 96 Pac. 761; Edwards v. Iola Gas Co. 65 Kan. 362, 69 Pac. 350, 22 Mor. Min. Rep. 293.

It is true that mining and oil leases often contain provisions for a forfeiture in case of cessation of the work in the development of the lands, and such provisions in proper cases the courts have unhesitatingly enforced. 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 372. But in the absence of a forfeiture clause, the common-law rule is well settled that a breach by the lessee of his covenants or agreements in the lease does not work a forfeiture of the term. 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 369.

The following cases support the doctrine that, in the absence of an express forfeiture clause in an "or" lease, there can be no forfeiture for nonpayment of rentals. Reserve Gas Co. v. Carbon Black Mfg. Co. 72 W. Va. 757, 79 S. E. 1002; Thompson v. Christie, 138 Pa. 230, 11 L.R.A. 236, 20 Atl. 934; Marshall v. Forest Oil Co. 108 Pa. 83, 47 Atl. 927, 21 Mor. Min. Rep. 179; Rose v. Lanyon Zinc Co. 68 Kan. 126, 74 Pac. 625; Davis v. Chautauqua Oil & Gas Co. 78 Kan. 97, 96 Pac. 47; Castle Brook Carbon Black

Co. v. Ferrell, — W. Va. —, 85 S. E. 544; Bennett v. Glaspell, 15 N. D. 239, 107 N. W. 45; 27 Cyc. 716; Gale v. Oil Run Petroleum Co. 6 W. Va. 200, 9 Mor. Min. Rep. 1.

Counsel seek to avoid the force of these decisions and the general rule governing forfeitures, by the application of a rule of construction hereinbefore adverted to, which they state as follows: "Forfeiture of such a lease is favored. The lease must be construed strictly in favor of the lessor, and against the lessee and his assigns."

The application of this doctrine to oil and gas leases is based upon the theory that, because of the peculiar character of oil and gas as property, and the violent fluctuations in the value of lands and leaseholds incident to the discovery of these substances, the courts have placed contracts of this kind in a class by themselves, and, in the light of the known character of the business of oil mining, construed them most strictly against the lessee, and favorable to the lessor.

Without questioning the soundness or justice of this doctrine, it is still but a rule of construction to be invoked only for the purpose of aiding the court in determining the intention of the parties when the contract under consideration is not free from ambiguity. Section 949, Rev. Laws 1910, provides: "When a contract is reduced to writing, the intention of the parties is to be ascertained from the writing alone, if possible, subject, however, to the other provisions of this article."

Here the contract upon its face is clear and unambiguous. The parties to it have not seen fit to incorporate a forfeiture clause, or words equivalent to a forfeiture clause, into its terms, and I find no justification for writing one into it, in any proper application of the canon of construction invoked. Moreover, the instant case has developed into a controversy between two distinct groups of claimants, each deriving its interest from a common lessor who has parted with his own interest, and therefore the reason for the rule that the lease must be construed strictly in favor of the lessor and against the lessee has wholly failed.

Having reached the conclusion that there was and could have been no forfeiture of the lease at the option of the lessor for default in the payment of rentals in strict conformity with its terms, the next question which presents itself is whether there was an abandonment of the lease by any of the first group of lessees. Generally, whether a contract is abandoned is a question of fact to be determined by the court or jury from all the facts and circumstances of the particular case. Martin v. Spaulding, 40 Okla. 191, 187 Pac. 882.

In Garrett v. South Penn Oil Co. 66 W. Va. 596, 66 S. E. 745, the supreme court of appeals of West Virginia pointed out the distinction between "abandonment" and "forfeiture" as follows: "Abandonment . . . rests upon the intention of the lessee to relinquish the premises, and is therefore a question of fact for the jury; while a forfeiture does not rest upon an intent to release the premises, but is an enforced release. . . . Whether or not a lease has been abandoned is a matter of defense, and need not be negated by the plaintiff in an action for the rent."

Again in Smith v. Root, 66 W. Va. 638, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 176, 66 S. E. 1007, the supreme court of appeals of West Virginia said: "A lessee may abandon the premises notwithstanding there is no forfeiture clause. His failure to pay the cash rentals stipulated in the contract may alone be sufficient to prove abandonment; but his failure to pay, taken in connection with other facts and circumstances evincing a clear intention to abandon the enterprise, coupled with the fact that no operations were ever begun upon the land, is sufficient to prove relinquishment of lessee's right."

In that case the lessees had drilled no well and had defaulted in the payment of five quarterly rentals; also, they had drilled on the adjoining tract, become insolvent, and gone out of business. All these facts were held to constitute abandonment.

In Phillips v. Hamilton, 17 Wyo. 41, 95 Pac. 846, the court held that "in determining whether one has abandoned his property or rights, the intention is a paramount object of inquiry, as there can be no abandonment without an intention to do so, and where plaintiff leased certain land to defendant for the purpose of boring for oil and gas, operations to be commenced within a year, and operations were begun within that time and the well drilled, and some seven months after drilling the first well the lessee returned to erect another rig and drill another well, when plaintiff revoked the lease, there was no intention by the lessee to abandon the lease."

Archer, Oil & Gas, p. 861, says: "To constitute abandonment by the lessee of a lease for oil and gas purposes, there must be both an intention to abandon and an actual relinquishment of the leased premises."

In Fisher v. Crescent Oil Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 178 S. W. 908, the court of civil appeals of Texas said: "Abandonment is the relinquishment of a right. If the owner sees proper, he may so abandon and evidence his intention by any act legally sufficient to vest or divest the ownership. Phillips v. Watkins Land Mortg. Co., 90 Tex. 195, 38 S. W. 270-274(3), 470. The existence of the intent to waive or abandon the right on the land was a question of fact for the court trying the case, and, if the facts would authorize the conclusion that there was no such intention, we would not be warranted in setting aside the judgment. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Hendricks, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 314, 108 S. W. 748, 749; Buffalo Zinc & Copper Co. v. Crump, 70 Ark. 525, 91 Am. St. Rep. 87, 69 S. W. 572, 22 Mor. Min. Rep. 276.

In McMillin v. Titus, 222 Pa. 511, 72 Atl. 244, the Pennsylvania supreme court said: "Abandonment ordinarily is a question of fact to be determined by the jury under all the circumstances of the case."

It is true that the nonpayment of the rentals under an "unless" lease may well be found to constitute an abandonment, in the absence of circumstances tending to show a contrary intention. If the failure to pay is voluntary, and not caused by some accident, mishap, or mistake, then, under the "unless" lease, the presumption is that the lessee chose that method of surrendering the lease. But, in this case, the evidence shows almost without dispute, and the trial court found, that the original lessees neither intended to abandon the lease on the 80 acres, nor the Cameron and Wilson 240 acres.

At this point it may be well to observe that every issue of fact, where an issue of fact was joined by the evidence, necessary to sustain the judgment rendered below, has been settled in favor of the defendants in error by the findings of fact of the trial court. In such circumstances, not finding the findings of fact made by the trial court to be clearly against the weight of the evidence, we are not at liberty to disturb them.

The only remaining assignment of error which we deem it necessary to notice is stated by counsel in their brief as follows: "Development which Ruhl expected to be made under the terms of his lease was the real consideration for the contract. Wilson and Cameron held the contract in a speculative venture, without development, and there was therefore no consideration for the contract."

Whether the lease was unfair and inequitable must be determined in view of the circumstances in which it was given, which will be found quite fully set out elsewhere in this opinion. In my judgment, the consideration for the lease, viz., $1 paid to the lessors and the covenants and agreements of the lessee, cannot, in view of the evidence, be said to be unreasonable. An examination of many of the cases and authorities here-inafore cited will show that similar leases, resting upon like consideration, have been uniformly sustained by courts of the highest respectability.

The lease upon its face discloses a sufficient consideration to support such a contract, and in clear and unambiguous terms declares that it "shall remain in full force for the term of ten years from this date, and as long thereafter as oil or gas, or either of them, is produced therefrom by the party of the second part, his heirs, successors, or assigns." The intention of the parties being clear, no good reason appears why their contract should not be given effect in accordance with its terms. The authorities seem to be quite uniform to the effect that a lease for a specified term, "and as long thereafter as oil or gas, or either of them, is produced," is not only a lease for the specified period, but beyond it, provided the lessee finds and produces oil during the period named. McGraw Oil & Gas Co. v. Kennedy, 65 W. Va. 595, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 959, 64 S. E. 1027; South Penn Oil Co. v. Snodgrass, 71 W. Va. 438, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 848, 76 S. E. 961; Brown v. Fowler, 65 Ohio St. 507, 63 N. E. 76; Young v. Forest Oil Co. 194 Pa. 243, 45 Atl. 121, 20 Mor. Min. Rep. 345; Chaney v. Ohio & I. Oil Co. 32 Ind. App. 193, 69 N. E. 477; Eaton v. Allegany Gas Co. 122 N. Y. 416, 25 N. E. 981; Dickey v. Coffeyville Vitriified Brick & Tile Co. 69 Kan. 106, 76 Pac. 398; Lowther Oil Co. v. Guffey, 52 W. Va. 88, 43 S. E. 101, 22 Mor. Min. Rep. 546; Tucker v. Watts, 25 Ohio C. C. 320; Thornton, Oil & Gas, §§ 134, 135; Graves v. Key City Gas Co. 83 Iowa, 714, 50 N. W. 283; Whiteman v. Fayette Fuel-Gas Co. 139 Pa. 492, 20 Atl. 1062; Xenia Real Estate Co. v. Macy, 147 Ind. 568, 47 N. E. 147.

If there is one thing more than another which would tend to add stability to the oil and gas business, and a sense of security to those entering into oil and gas leases and contracts, it would be strict adherence to the salutary rule that men of full age and competent understanding shall be allowed the utmost liberty of contracting with each other, and that their contracts, when entered into freely and voluntarily, shall be held sacred, and shall be enforced by courts of justice in strict accordance with their plain terms. The statute (Rev. Laws 1910, § 946), as well as the rules of construction, enjoin that "a contract must be so interpreted as to give effect to the mutual intention of the parties, as it existed at the time of contracting, so far as the same is ascertainable and lawful."

There are many elements of hazard and uncertainty for the operator, which naturally inhere in the business of exploring for oil and gas in undeveloped territory; but, if the foregoing fundamental rules are strictly observed by the parties to oil and gas contracts and the courts, it seems to me this element of uncertainty would not be carried into the contracts or leases necessary to carry on this important branch of the great oil industry.

From an examination of the entire record, I am convinced that the trial court correctly found the facts, where issues of fact were joined by the evidence; deduced therefrom proper conclusions of law, and on the whole decided the case in accordance with right and justice.

I am authorized to state that Mr. Justice Thacker joins me in this dissenting opinion.

Petition for rehearing denied October 10, 1916.

Annotation—Surrender clause in oil or gas lease as rendering it unilateral.

It is not intended to include herein cases involving the liability of the lessee for rental or delay money after the lease has been terminated. For such cases see note appended to Deming Invest. Co. v. Lanham, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 50.

And as to rights of parties to oil or gas leases forfeited for default in payment to be made in lieu of development, see note in 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 487.

The cases are not in harmony as to the effect of a clause in an oil or gas lease entitling the lessee to surrender the lease and terminate his obligation thereunder at any time, to render the lease unilateral. In part, the conflict among the cases may be explained by the different views entertained as to the effect of such a lease. In some jurisdictions, as in Oklahoma, an oil or gas lease, while executory, does not operate to create any interest or estate in the land to which it relates; it more nearly resembles a license than it does a lease. In other jurisdictions, however, a lease of this character is deemed to create a freehold interest in the real estate to which it relates.

The essential parts of a lease of this character are the grant by the lessor of the oil or gas to be produced from the lands by its development for a designated consideration, frequently $1, and the agreement by the lessee to develop the premises and pay a royalty for the oil or gas procured therefrom, or give the lessor a portion of the product, and the further agreement to make such development within a designated time, or pay a stated sum of money, generally referred to as "delay money," or pay a sum of money for the privilege of surrendering the lease and relieving himself from further obligation thereunder.

Of course, the money consideration of $1 is not the real consideration for the lease. This is the agreement of the lessee to develop the premises for the mutual profit of both parties. In view of L.R.A.1917B.

the real consideration for the lease, a serious question presented is whether the recited consideration of the nominal sum of $1 goes to the entire contract, or is confined merely to the original term. It is, of course, true as a principle of law that a stated sum may be the consideration for the entire contract and sustain each particular clause or covenant, although some of these covenants would otherwise be clearly unilateral. It is also true that, where a nominal money consideration is recited in a contract to be the consideration thereof, and there are different covenants on the part of each party to be performed, it does not necessarily follow that the $1 will be construed to support the contract as a whole; it may be limited in its scope, and the other clauses may be tested as to their unilateral character with reference to the specific consideration relating thereto. This is true even though it be conceded that $1 is a valuable consideration,—a matter as to which the courts are also in conflict, and which does not enter into this discussion.

The doctrine of BROWN v. WILSON, ante, 1184, limiting the $1 consideration recited in the lease to the original term, and holding that there is no consideration to support the clause entitling the lessee to surrender the premises after the expiration of the original term of four months on the payment of $1 and any rental then due, and that this provision renders the contract unilateral and unenforceable after the expiration of the term specified, or any extension thereof secured by the payment of delay money as provided in the lease, finds but little, if any, support by the holding of other cases, even those which do not construe an oil or gas lease to create an interest in the land to which it relates before it has been executed by the development of the premises and it finds no support in the principles of law above referred to; for as hereafter pointed out the surrender clause is based upon an independent valuable consideration. Thus, it has been held that where the lessee is not bound to comply with any of the covenants or stipulations of the lease with regard to the boring for oil and gas, or the payment of rent, but has reserved the right to vacate the land at any time and thus wholly escape any future obligation under the lease, the lessor is entitled to do likewise. Hence the lease is a right of entry, and is subject to be terminated at the will of either party thereto while it remains in an executory condition. Trees v. Eclipse Oil Co. (1899) 47 W. Va. 107, 34 S. E. 933, 20 Mor. Min. Rep. 260; Eclipse Oil Co. v. South Penn Oil Co. (1899) 47 W. Va. 84, 34 S. E. 923, 20 Mor. Min. Rep. 234. The lease involved in the foregoing cases, however, differed from the one involved in BROWN v. WILSON, in that the only recited consideration was the covenants by the lessee to develop the premises and give to the lessor a portion of the product obtained. The leases were similar, however, in that each reserved the right to surrender or terminate the lease at any time, but this reservation was not based upon any recited consideration in the West Virginia cases.

And it has been held that where the $1 consideration named in the lease was not in fact paid, and the only consideration for the lease was the agreement to develop and deliver a portion of the product secured thereby, and the lessee retained the right to surrender the lease at any time, and the amount paid the lessor was to be full compensation for any injury sustained, the lease was unilateral and void. Roberts v. McFadden (1903) 32 Tex. Civ. App. 47, 74 S. W. 105. It is not believed that the question as to whether or not the recited consideration of $1 had in fact been paid was material on the question under consideration. And it does not seem to have been the distinguishing point on this question in this jurisdiction. Thus, in J. M. Guffey Petroleum Co. v. Oliver (1904) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 79 S. W. 884, it is held that, in view of the great value of the leased premises as oil bearing land, the sum of $2 to be paid by the lessee as a condition to the right reserved to surrender the lease and have it canceled cannot be considered more than a nominal consideration, and hence the lease comes within the principle of law that, when it is provided in a lease that it is terminable at the will of one of the parties, it becomes terminable at the will of the other. And in Great Western Oil Co. v. Carpenter (1906) 43 L.R.A.1917B.

Tex. Civ. App. 229, 95 S. W. 57, it is asserted that where the consideration of an oil and gas lease is $1, even though it is in fact paid, it is merely nominal, and will not of itself support the contract.

It is also held in this state that, where the recited consideration was $28 28/100 and the lessee reserved the right to surrender the lease and be released from further obligation thereunder upon paying the sum of $5, this latter sum was a mere nominal consideration and did not support the surrender clause, since the original sum was the consideration for the right to develop the premises for the first period, and the other sums of the same amount were merely the consideration for delay in development, for a specified term. It is pointed out that there was no obligation on the part of the lessee to pay the delay money, and no binding obligation to pay any other sum than the $5 to be paid on surrendering the lease, and any overdue rent therefor. Hence the lessor was not bound to accept delay money when tendered at the beginning of any quarterly period, unless in the meantime the lessee had in good faith begun to explore and develop the land. Owens v. Corsicana Petroleum Co. (1914) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 169 S. W. 192. It is to be noted, however, that, according to Pierce Fordyce Oil Asso. v. Woodrum (1916) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 188 S. W. 245, the supreme court of Texas granted a writ of error in Owens v. Corsicana Petroleum Co. (Tex.) supra, with the notation that it was of the opinion that the holding in that case, that the leased contract was void because unilateral, was erroneous. The court said: "It appears to have been supported by a valuable consideration paid, though it be regarded as a contract for an option and as unilateral in character. The contract to give an option is valid if supported by an independent consideration. We think it questionable, however, whether a contract by which the opposite party agrees to do a definite thing within a limited period, or in lieu of it to pay a specified amount, can be regarded as unilateral."

This last suggestion seems to point out an apparent inconsistency in the holding in BROWN v. WILSON, ante, 1184. In that case the court conceded that the recited consideration of $1 was sufficient to support the lease for the period expressly designated therein. If the dollar consideration was sufficient in this respect, then it would seem to follow that the surrender clause, which the court held to render the contract unilateral, was also supported by a valuable consideration, since it required the payment by the lessee of the sum of $1 as a condition to the surrender of the lease.

If the consideration for the right to surrender the lease and have it canceled was a substantial sum, it would seem to be clear that the covenant would not be unilateral. And in this regard it has been held that where, as a condition to the surrender of the lease and have it canceled, the lessee was required to pay the sum of $100, the provision was not unilateral, and where it was construed in connection with the other covenants by the lessee it had the effect of sustaining the entire lease, for there was thereby imposed upon the lessee the obligation to develop the premises, or pay in lieu thereof a substantial sum as delay money, or pay a substantial sum to be relieved from the foregoing obligation. Houssiere Latreille Oil Co. v. Jennings-Haywood Oil Syndicate (1905) 115 La. 107, 38 So. 932, infra.

If it is assumed that the $1 required to be paid as a condition to surrendering the lease is not a valuable consideration, it does not follow that the lease involved in BROWN v. WILSON was unilateral at the time its validity was assailed by the lessor, for the lessee had paid upwards of $400 in consideration of delay in development. Of course, these payments would not operate to cure the defect in the lease of lack of mutuality of obligation, if they were construed to be limited to the particular term for which they operated to relieve the lessee of the obligation to develop the premises, and this was apparently the theory adopted in the majority opinion in BROWN v. WILSON. Adopting this view, however, it does not necessarily follow that the lease was unilateral, for this defect might well be held to have been cured by a part performance by the payment of delay money. And the validity of a lease of this character was sustained on this ground in Busch-Everett Co. v. Vivian Oil Co. (1911) 128 La. 886, 55 So. 564, infra. And the defect might also be held to have been cured on the ground that, after receiving this large sum of money under the lease, the lessor was precluded from denying its validity. This is the doctrine of Pittsburg Vitri-fied Paving & Bldg. Brick Co. v. Bailey (1907) 76 Kan. 42, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 745, 90 Pac. 803. In so holding the court said that the lessee "exercised its option by paying the rent for two successive years, and the lessors acquiesced in the part performance of the contract by accepting. The lessors will not therefore be heard to say, when the third year's rent is tendered, that the contract is unilateral and revocable by them because the company might have then exercised its option to surrender the lease."

It is to be noted, however, that these points were apparently not presented to or passed upon by the court in BROWN v. WILSON. Neither does it appear that the court considered the lease from the view point that by its terms it imposed upon the lessee the alternative obligations to develop the premises, to pay a substantial sum in lieu thereof, or to pay a valuable consideration to be relieved from these obligations; in other words, that the lease imposed upon the lessee an absolute obligation to pay to the lessor something of value, of which he could not be relieved. Such a contract, of course, is not unilateral.

In Erie Crawford Oil Co. v. Meeks (1907) 40 Ind. App. 156, 81 N. E. 518, it is said that construing the lease as granting for the consideration of $1 an option for one year to enter upon, explore, and develop the leased premises for oil and gas, and considering it in connection with the nature and migratory habits of oil and gas, impel the belief that a consideration more substantial than that mentioned induced its execution, and justifies the court in construing the instrument with the fact in view that a more substantial reason or reasons prompted the making of the contract, following upon this point, Gadbury v. Ohio & I. Consol. Natural & Illuminating Gas Co. (1903) 162 Ind. 9, 62 L.R.A. 895, 67 N. E. 259, 22 Mor. Min. Rep. 680. In this state, upon this point it has been held that, where, the recited consideration for such a contract is $1 duly paid, the lessor cannot deny the receipt of the money, and the contract is valid. Dill v. Frazee (1907) 169 Ind. 53, 79 N. E. 971. But it is nevertheless held that, where the lease is to become null and void unless the lessee pays an agreed sum at a certain time as delay money, and there is a clause permitting him to surrender and have canceled the lease, equity will not relieve against a forfeiture by the lessor for failure of the lessee to make the agreed payment. Ibid.

And see Soaper v. King (1915) 167 Ky. 121, 180 S. W. 46, involving a lease which did not contain a surrender clause, and asserting that, where the recited consideration is merely the sum of $1 and the contract imposed upon the lessee no duty, it is unenforceable because unilateral.

In Louisiana the rule prevails that a valuable consideration is not sufficient to support a contract unless it is also a serious consideration, and it is there held that a gas and oil lease cannot be sustained where the recited consideration was $1, and it contained a provision entitling the lessee to surrender the lease at any time upon payment of the further sum of $2. Murray v. Barnhart (1906) 117 La. 1023, 42 So. 489. To the same effect, see Long v. Sun Co. (1915) 132 La. 601, 61 So. 684. In this case there was no recited consideration for the provision entitling the lessee to surrender the lease, and the recited consideration for the lease itself, including the option to cancel, was $1. But a provision that the lessee shall have the right at any time to remove from the leased premises all machinery, fixtures, and improvements placed thereon, and thereby terminate his rights and liabilities under the contract, does not render the contract invalid after the lessee has in part, at least, developed the premises. McClendon v. Busch-Everett Co. (1916) 138 La. 722, 70 So. 781. And where the lessee agreed to pay a substantial sum for a delay in developing the premises, the fact that there is also a provision entitling him to surrender the lease by paying the sum of $1 will not render it unilateral, if the lease has been partly performed and the lessor has received substantial sums thereunder. Busch-Everett Co. v. Vivian Oil Co. (1911) 128 La. 286, 55 So. 564. So, where the stipulation authorizing the lessee to surrender the lease requires the payment of $100 to the lessor, the contract is to be construed as imposing upon the lessee the obligation to pay at least this amount, and the consideration is sufficient to sustain the contract. Houssiere Latreille Oil Co. v. Jennings-Haywood Oil Syndicate (1905) 115 La. 107, 38 So. 932.

In Illinois a lease of the character under consideration is held to vest the lessee with a freehold interest in the land, and it is held that an oil or gas lease based upon a nominal money consideration and covenants of the lessee to develop the premises, although also containing a provision entitling him to surrender the lease and be released from further liability thereunder, is not unilateral in a court of law. Bruner v. Hicks (1907) 230 Ill. 536, 120 Am. St. Rep. 332, 82 N. E. 888; Watford Oil & L.R.A. 1917 B.

Gas Co. v. Shipman (1908) 233 Ill. 9, 122 Am. St. Rep. 144, 84 N. E. 53; Poe v. Ulrey (1908) 233 Ill. 56, 84 N. E. 46; Ulrey v. Keith (1908) 237 Ill. 284, 86 N. E. 696; People ex rel. Carrell v. Bell (1909) 237 Ill. 532, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 746, 86 N. E. 593, 15 Ann. Cas. 511; Danghette v. Ohio Oil Co. (1914) 265 Ill. 518, 105 N. E. 308. But such a provision in the lease will preclude the lessee from invoking the aid of equity to secure the specific performance of the lease, either directly or indirectly. Watford Oil & Gas Co. v. Shipman (1908) 233 Ill. 9, 122 Am. St. Rep. 144, 84 N. E. 53; Ulrey v. Keith (1908) 237 Ill. 284, 86 N. E. 696. However, in a late United States Supreme Court decision applying the Illinois rule that such a lease creates an estate in the lessor's land, it was held that the lessee was entitled to invoke also the aid of equity although the contract would thereby be enforced, since the purpose was not the specific enforcement of the contract, but the protection of the lessee in his interest in the land vested by the lease. Guffey v. Smith (1914) 237 U. S. 101, 59 L. ed. 856, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 526. The court points out that the Illinois decisions as to the remedy are not binding on it; but, as suggested, the decision is based upon the holding that giving relief is not specifically enforcing the contract, but is protecting the lessee in the freehold estate he had in the land under the lease.

In Poe v. Ulrey (1908) 233 Ill. 56, 84 N. E. 46, supra, where the lease recited a consideration of $1 as the consideration for the execution of the lease, the court said that the lessee had paid the dollar for the right to explore for oil or gas, and where the lessee had agreed to develop the premises and pay a royalty for all oil or gas produced, and was to have the right to surrender the premises upon the payment of $1, the lease could not be canceled for want of consideration. And in Gillespie v. Fulton Oil & Gas Co. (1908) 236 Ill. 188, 86 N. E. 219, referring to the recited consideration of $1, it is said that it is unbelievable that the money consideration stated was the real consideration upon which the lease rested, and that undoubtedly the real consideration was the exploitation of the mineral resources of the property to which the lease related. It is, however, held in this state that a lease of land to be developed for oil and gas, requiring the lessee to pay certain royalties in the event of successful development, but containing no express agreement or obligation of any kind to be performed by the lessee, may be revoked by the lessor where the lessee has failed to act upon it. Cortelyou v. Barnsdall (1908) 236 Ill. 138, 86 N. E. 200.

In Brewster v. Lanyon Zinc Co. (1905) 72 C. C. A. 213, 140 Fed. 801, involving a bill in equity to establish as a matter of record the forfeiture of an oil and gas lease, and to cancel it as a cloud on the complainant's title, it is held that a provision entitling the lessee to reconvey the premises at any time and relieve himself from further obligation under the lease does not make the estate created a mere tenancy at will, within the operation of the common-law rule that an estate at the will of one party is equally at the will of the other, since the rule is without application to a lease for a definite term, which reserves to the lessee an option to terminate it before the expiration thereof.

And according to the holding of the foregoing case, a consideration in a lease of this character of the nominal sum of $1 and the covenants of the lessee to develop the premises is sufficient to make the lease effective and support every stipulation in it favorable to the lessee, including the option to surrender it at any time. And the recited consideration of $1 and the agreement to pay a rental or develop the premises have been held to be a good consideration to support an option given the lessee to surrender the premises and avoid further obligation under the lease. Central Ohio Natural Gas & Fuel Co. v. Eckart (1904) 70 Ohio St. 127, 71 N. E. 281; Brown v. Fowler (1901) 65 Ohio St. 507, 63 N. E. 76. In the former case it is said that such a lease does not create a mere tenancy at will. There is a good and valid consideration for the option granted by such instruments, and it is immaterial whether they are called leases, deeds, or written agreements. The intention of the parties is to control, and it is manifest that it was not the intention of either party that the right granted by the instrument should be a mere license that could be terminated by the grantor at any time. A. G. S.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

EQUITABLE LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY OF THE UNITED STATES et al., Plffs. in Err.,

v.

J. T. WEIGHTMAN, Admr., etc., of Thomas J. Gentry, Deceased, Intervener.

(— Okla. —, 160 Pac. 629.)

Insurance — murder of assured — effect.

1. A beneficiary in a policy of life insurance, who murders the assured, is thereby barred from collecting the insurance money. For other cases, see Insurance, VI. b, 2, a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — rights of assignee.

2. The insurance policy being a non-negotiable instrument, the assignee of such a beneficiary has no better claim upon the insurance money than his assignor. For other cases, see Insurance, IV. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — on two lives — construction.

3. Provisions of a life insurance policy upon the lives of two persons, providing for the payment of the insurance fund to the survivor of the first decedent, examined, and Headnotes by JOHNSON, C.

Note. — For murder of insured by beneficiary as affecting right to proceeds of policy, see annotation to Sharpless v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. ante, 670, and other notes there referred to. L.R.A.1917B.

held, that the policy in question, so far as the insurance fund payable on such contingency is involved, is a several policy upon the life of each of the assured, and that the interest of the assured persons in such expectancy is not a joint tenancy, by reason of which one takes by the right of survivorship upon the death of the other, but that the survivor takes, if at all, under the contract.

For other cases, see Insurance, VI. d, 2, a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — incompetency of beneficiary — effect.

4. Where no alternative beneficiary is designated in a contract of life insurance, and the designated beneficiary becomes barred from taking the benefits of the policy by reason of the fact that she has murdered the assured, in the absence of a statute which provides an alternative beneficiary, by operation of law a trust arises in favor of the estate of the assured, by virtue of which the representative of the assured is entitled to recover the insurance fund.

For other cases, see Insurance, VI. d, 2, c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(October 17, 1916.)

ERROR to the District Court for Cleveland County to review a judgment in favor of intervener in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a life insurance policy. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. Alexander & Green, Stephen C. Treadwell, and Locke & Locke, for plaintiff in error Equitable Life:

Alverta B. Gentry murdered her husband and by that act she forfeited her right to collect insurance on his life.

Richards, Ins. 3d ed. p. 81; Cooley, Briefs on Ins. p. 3153; Filmore v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 82 Ohio St. 208, 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 675, 187 Am. St. Rep. 778, 92 N. E. 26; Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Shane, 98 Ark. 132, 135 S. W. 836; Joyce, Ins. p. 2802, § 2851; Cleaver v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assn. [1892] 1 Q. B. 147, 61 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 128, 66 L. T. N. S. 220, 40 Week. Rep. 230, 56 J. P. 180; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Armstrong, 117 U. S. 591, 29 L. ed. 997, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 877; Schmidt v. Northern Life Assn. 112 Iowa, 41, 51 L.R.A. 141, 84 Am. St. Rep. 323, 83 N. W. 800; Schreiner v. High Court, C. O. F. 35 Ill. App. 576; Prather v. Michigan Mut. L. Ins. Co. Fed. Cas. No. 11,368; Prince of Wales Assn. v. Palmer, 25 Beav. 605, 53 Eng. Reprint, 768; Supreme Lodge, K. L. H. v. Menkhausem, 209 Ill. 277, 65 L.R.A. 508, 101 Am. St. Rep. 239, 70 N. E. 567; Anderson v. Life Ins. Co. 152 N. C. 1, 67 S. E. 53; Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Shane, 98 Ark. 132, 135 S. W. 836; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Davis, 96 Va. 737, 44 L.R.A. 305, 32 S. E. 475; Lundy v. Lundy, 24 Can. Sup. Ct. 650.

The plaintiff, Ben F. Williams, as assignee of Alverta B. Gentry, has no better claim upon the insurance money than she has. He cannot take the money because of her crime.

Amicable Soc. v. Bolland, 4 Bligh, N. R. 194, 5 Eng. Reprint, 70, 2 Dow. & C. 1; Cleaver v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assn. [1892] 1 Q. B. 147, 61 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 128, 66 L. T. N. S. 220, 40 Week. Rep. 230, 56 J. P. 180; Cooley, Briefs on Ins. p. 3811.

Under the laws of Oklahoma a man and his wife may own property as joint tenants and upon the death of either that property will be owned by the survivor, not by inheritance, but by survivorship.

Bone v. Pollard, 24 Beav. 288, 53 Eng. Reprint, 369; Re Harris, 160 Cal. 725, 147 Pac. 967; Re Heiser, 85 Misc. 271, 147 N. Y. Supp. 657; Simons v. McLain, 51 Kan. 153, 32 Pac. 919; Holmes v. Holmes, 70 Kan. 892, 79 Pac. 163.

Messrs. Lydick & Eggerman, for plaintiff in error Williams:

If Thomas J. Gentry and Alverta B. Gentry were joint tenants, then plaintiff as assignee of the rights of Alverta B. Gentry must be permitted to recover in this action.

De Graffenreid v. Iowa Land & T. Co. 20 Okla. 688; 95 Pac. 624; McAllister v. L.R.A. 1917B.

Fair, 72 Kan. 533, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 726; 116 Am. St. Rep. 233, 84 Pac. 112, 7 Ann. Cas. 973; Carpenter's Estate, 170 Pa. 203, 29 L.R.A. 145, 50 Am. St. Rep. 745, 32 Atl. 637.

Messrs. Kittle C. Sturdevant, Dorset Carter, and J. B. Dudley, for defendant in error:

J. T. Weightman as administrator of the estate of Thomas J. Gentry, deceased, is entitled to recover from the insurance company the trust fund created by the moneys paid by the deceased in his lifetime, since public policy precludes the beneficiary named in the policy from recovering.

Schmidt v. Northern Life Assn. 112 Iowa, 41, 51 L.R.A. 141, 84 Am. St. Rep. 323, 83 N. W. 800; Ryan v. Rothweiler, 50 Ohio St. 595, 35 N. E. 679; Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1031; McCoy v. McCoy, 30 Okla. 379, 121 Pac. 176, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 146; Fleener v. Cooper, 39 Okla. 133, 134 Pac. 379; Smith v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 223 Pa. 226, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 928, 128 Am. St. Rep. 799, 71 Atl. 11; Central Nat. Bank v. Hume, 128 U. S. 195, 32 L. ed. 370, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 41; National L. Ins. Co. v. Haley, 78 Me. 208, 57 Am. Rep. 807, 4 Atl. 415; John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Lawder, 22 R. I. 416, 48 Atl. 383; Cooley, Briefs on Ins. pp. 3753-3760.

Joint tenancies are not favored and no instrument will be construed as creating a joint tenancy unless by its very terms a contrary holding cannot possibly be forged from the language of the contract.

7 R. C. L. p. 813; Johnston v. Johnston, 173 Mo. 91, 61 L.R.A. 166, 96 Am. St. Rep. 486, 73 S. W. 202; Rodney v. Landau, 104 Mo. 259, 15 S. W. 964; Telfair v. Howe, 3 Rich. Eq. 235, 55 Am. Dec. 637.

Johnson, C., filed the following opinion:

This action was filed upon January 4, 1913, in the district court of Cleveland county, by Ben F. Williams as plaintiff, against the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States as defendant, for the recovery of $2,000 upon a policy of life insurance on the life of Thomas J. Gentry, deceased, the plaintiff having become the owner by assignment of the rights of the beneficiary in the policy. The defendant resisted recovery upon the ground that, as contended by it, there was no liability under the policy for the reason that the beneficiary, Alverta B. Gentry, had murdered the insured, who was her husband, and thereby forfeited her right to the insurance and terminated all liability of the insurance company. J. T. Weightman, as administrator of the estate of the insured, Thomas J. Gentry, deceased, intervened in the cause, alleging that Alverta B. Gentry, the beneficiary named in the policy, had murdered the insured, and thereby forfeited her right to the insurance, but that he, as such administrator, was entitled to the insurance. The case was tried to the court upon the pleadings and an agreed statement of facts. The lower court rendered judgment in favor of the intervener, J. T. Weightman, administrator of Thomas J. Gentry, and against the plaintiff and defendant, awarding the insurance to the administrator. Plaintiff and defendant bring the case here on appeal.

The policy in question was issued upon April 7, 1910, covering and insuring the lives of both Thomas J. Gentry and Alverta B. Gentry, husband and wife, respectively, in the sum of \$2,000. The principal insuring clause of the policy reads as follows, to wit: "In consideration of the payment in advance of sixty-nine  $7\frac{1}{100}$  dollars, and the payment annually thereafter of a like sum upon each fifteenth day of March until the death of either Thomas J. Gentry, of Oklahoma, Oklahoma, or his wife, Alverta B. Gentry of Oklahoma, Oklahoma (hereinafter jointly called the insured) the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States agrees to pay at its home office in the city of New York two thousand dollars upon receipt of due proofs of the death of either one of the insured, provided this policy is then in force and is then surrendered properly released, to the survivor of the said Thomas J. Gentry and Alverta B. Gentry, beneficiaries, with the right on the part of the insured to change the beneficiary."

The policy also contained the further clause, with reference to change of beneficiary, as follows, to wit: "Change of Beneficiary. If the right to change the beneficiary has been reserved, and there is no written assignment of this policy on file with the society, the insured may from time to time during the continuance of this policy, change the beneficiary or beneficiaries by a written request (upon the society's blank) filed at its home office, but such change shall take effect only upon the indorsement of the same hereon by the society."

And the policy contained the further clause, as follows, to wit: "Incontestability. This policy shall be incontestable after one year from its date of issue, provided premiums have been duly paid. Self-destruction, sane or insane, within one year from said date of issue is a risk not assumed under this policy."

The policy contained other provisions usual in such instruments. There was no provision specifically affecting liability in the event of the murder of either of the insured by the beneficiary of his or her insurance. The instrument provided for certain cash values after the payment of specified numbers of annual premiums.

It was agreed between the parties that, on or about the 6th of January, 1912, the said Alverta B. Gentry had wilfully, unlawfully, and feloniously caused the death of the said Thomas J. Gentry by murdering him with malice aforethought, and had been legally convicted of murder, under a charge therefor, and sentenced to the Oklahoma State Penitentiary for the term of her natural life. It was also conceded that the premiums on the policy had been duly paid, and that the plaintiff Ben F. Williams by assignment was the owner of the rights of Alverta B. Gentry in the policy, whatever such rights may be; and it was agreed that the intervener was the duly qualified administrator of the estate of Thomas J. Gentry, and had properly intervened in the cause, and that the said Thomas J. Gentry died intestate, leaving as his sole heirs at law the said Alverta B. Gentry, his wife, and Theodore R. Gentry, the minor son of both of such insured. The insurance company made no contest upon formal grounds, and relied upon the contentions herein mentioned.

Plaintiff in error the insurance company contends (1) that Alverta B. Gentry, the beneficiary in the policy, having murdered her husband, by that act forfeited her right to collect the insurance on his life; (2) that the plaintiff Ben F. Williams, as assignee of Alverta B. Gentry, has no better claim upon the insurance than she would have, and cannot take the money because of her crime. (3) That under the laws of Oklahoma a man and his wife may own property as joint tenants and upon the death of either that property will be owned by the survivor, not by inheritance, but by survivorship, and that the insurance policy prior to the death of Thomas J. Gentry was a chose in action owned by him and his wife as joint tenants, and on the death of Thomas J. Gentry the benefits accruing under the policy vested, if at all, in Alverta B. Gentry (a) by the terms of the policy itself; (b) by survivorship. That Alverta B. Gentry forfeited the right to take this benefit by her crime, and the law, at the time the murder was committed, failed to designate who should take it in her stead. (4) That Alverta B. Gentry, being the survivor of the two lives insured, was the only person entitled by the terms of the contract to collect the insurance. That her right and that of her assignee were forfeited by her crime, and, there being no trust created by statute or contract, and there being no alternative payee according to the terms of the contract, there could be no resulting trust in favor of the estate of Thomas J. Gentry, deceased, and that it necessarily follows that the administrator, J. T. Weightman, has neither statutory nor contractual right to recover. And (5) that the court erred in rendering judgment for intervener and in overruling its motion for a new trial.

Plaintiff in error Ben F. Williams in his brief states that he is inclined to believe, without so confessing, that the law is as contended for by defendant in error, but contends that, if this court finds that Thomas J. Gentry and Alverta B. Gentry were joint tenants as to the policy and liability thereunder, as contended by the insurance company, in that event the benefits of the policy went to Alverta B. Gentry, as the survivor of such joint tenancy, and that he, as the assignee of such survivor, should take such benefits.

Defendant in error, the administrator of Thomas J. Gentry, deceased, admits that, by her act of murdering insured, the beneficiary forfeited her right and the right of her assignee to take and hold the benefits of the policy, and contends that the policy was not joint, but a several policy upon the lives of each of the insured, and that for this reason no rule of joint tenancy and survivorship can be invoked; and that, when the right of the nominal beneficiary, Alverta B. Gentry, to take under the policy was forfeited by her act of murder, a resulting trust arose by operation of law, under which the rights of the beneficiary were vested in the estate of Thomas J. Gentry.

Since the accrual of the rights of these parties, the legislature of this state has enacted a statute (Sess. Laws [Okla.] 1915, p. 225) which provides that in such a case as this the benefits of the policy would go to the decedent's heirs, who are innocent of the murder. However, this statute has no application to these facts, which occurred before its enactment.

We shall take up the various propositions involved here in the order above set forth.

1. Did Alverta B. Gentry, the beneficiary, forfeit or lose the contractual right to take and keep the benefits of the policy by her act of murdering the insured? We are of an affirmative opinion:

It is an established rule in this court that, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, one does not lose his right of inheritance from a decedent by reason of his having murdered the decedent. However, a beneficiary in a policy of life insurance takes the benefits of the policy by reason of the contract of insurance constituted by the policy, and not by inheritance from the insured decedent; and this principle is conceded by all of the parties in this cause. This being true, the rights of the plaintiff as the assignee of the beneficiary must necessarily be determined from the effect of the legal and contractual relations which have been sustained by the beneficiary toward the policy, and without reference to the laws of inheritance.

The policy itself made no provision for a disposition of the liability, nor of its benefits, in the event of the murder of the insured by the beneficiary. In the absence of such a specific provision by the parties in their contract, the status of the parties must be ascertained by reference to the rules of law and equity applicable to the situation. The inherent essence and vitality of every contract are drawn from the legal and equitable atmosphere surrounding it. The law writes between the lines of every contract its own innumerable inhibitions and requirements. Where the contracting parties fall short in expression the law goes on, and where the parties go too far it calls a halt. When one person becomes the beneficiary of the contract of others, such beneficiary is an implied party to the agreement. Before he may accept the benefits of the contract, he must accept all of its implied, as well as express, obligations. In this case, Alverta B. Gentry was an express party. It is our conception of the law that, when she accepted the position of beneficiary in the life insurance of Thomas J. Gentry, the law infused into the contract; as an essential part of it, an implied obligation upon her part that she would respect the intentions of the contract. The very strongest implied inhibition of the law was that she should not mature the benefits by her own criminal act. Every moment of the life of the contract, obedience to this inhibition was her obligation. When she criminally destroyed the life of her husband, she violated every intent of the contract. She abandoned the contract, and cannot claim its benefits. In the strict sense, she does not forfeit these benefits,—she abandons them. Human law is the offspring of divine law. One of the strongest principles of that law is compensation. Every man compensates his own wrong. He cannot claim the benefits of it.

It is a matter of universal judicial interpretation that one may not insure his house against fire, mature the risk by his own criminal act of arson, and collect his insurance. It would be no less a violation of the infinite spirit of the law that the beneficiary of a life insurance policy might murder the insured, by his own criminal act mature the risk, and then collect from an innocent party the fruits and benefits of his own wrong.

The following authorities support the theory that, by her act of murdering insured, the beneficiary has forfeited or surrendered any right to take the benefits of the policy, viz.: 25 Cyc. 195 (d); Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Armstrong, 117 U. S. 599, 29 L. ed. 997, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 877; Riggs v. Palmer, 115 N. Y. 506, 5 L.R.A. 340, 12 Am. St. Rep. 819, 22 N. E. 188; Schmidt v. Northern Life Assn. 112 Iowa, 41, 51 L.R.A. 141, 84 Am. St. Rep. 323, 83 N. W. 800; Richards, Ins. p. 81; Vance, Ins. p. 392; Kerr, Ins. p. 685. In the Armstrong Case, supra, the Supreme Court of the United States used this expression: "It would be a reproach to the jurisprudence of the country if one could recover insurance money payable on the death of a party whose life he had feloniously taken. As well might he recover insurance money upon a building that he had wilfully fired."

In the Schmidt Case, 112 Iowa, 41, 51 L.R.A. 141, 84 Am. St. Rep. 323, 83 N. W. 800, the supreme court of Iowa made this language its own, and said: "Indeed, the unbroken voice of authority is to the effect that a beneficiary in an insurance policy who murders the insured forfeits his rights thereunder."

In the Schmidt Case, and in the textbooks above cited, long lists of authorities are cited in support of this principle, which it is not necessary to more than refer to here. We find no authority to the contrary, and must hold to the theory that, by her act of murder, Alverta B. Gentry is barred from claiming the benefits of the policy. Under a later assignment, we quote from additional authorities on the subject.

2. It is contended by the insurance company and administrator that the plaintiff, as the assignee of Alverta B. Gentry, has no better claim to the insurance than she had. The policy in its terms is a non-negotiable instrument; and it is unquestionably the law, that the assignee takes no greater interest than the assignor has. 25 Cyc. 765; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Burroughs, 34 Conn. 305, 91 Am. Dec. 725; Stevens v. Germania L. Ins. Co. 26 Tex. Civ. App. 156, 62 S. W. 824; Schmidt v. Northern Life Assn. 112 Iowa, 41, 51 L.R.A. 141, 84 Am. St. Rep. 323, 83 N. W. 800; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Armstrong, 117 U. S. 599, 29 L. ed. 997, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 877; Cooley, Briefs on Ins. p. 3811, and cases there cited.

3. Plaintiff in error the insurance company further contends: That the insurance policy was a chose in action, owned by Thomas J. Gentry and Alverta B. Gentry as joint tenants. That on the death of Thomas J. Gentry the benefits of the policy vested, if at all, in Alverta B. Gentry (a) L.R.A.1917B.

by the terms of the policy itself; (b) by survivorship. That Alverta B. Gentry, by her crime, forfeited the right to take by survivorship. That as the law, at the time of the murder, failed to designate who should take in her stead, the policy lapsed to the insurer.

Under the discussion of this assignment, we shall deal with the questions of the alleged joint tenancy, survivorship, and forfeiture of rights of survivorship, leaving to a discussion of the next assignment the question of what ultimate disposition the law may make of the benefits of the policy.

Upon this proposition we find no exact precedent, and none is cited in the briefs before us. The insurance company contends that the policy was a joint one; that the interest of the insured was joint; that the policy was expressed as being a joint policy; that under the terms of the policy the ownership of cash values which might have accrued during the lifetime of both insured would have been joint, and that this condition creates such a joint tenancy between husband and wife as would put in operation the law of survivorship, so that the wife could only take by survivorship; that she forfeited this right by the murder, causing a complete termination of liability of the company. With this contention we are unable to agree. In the insuring clause of the policy, the Gentrys were referred to as "hereinafter jointly called the insured," and they are thereafter jointly referred to as "the insured." The policy provides for certain benefits which might have accrued during the lifetime of both insured, providing a joint enjoyment of such lifetime benefits; for instance, cash values on the policy to accrue during the lives of both of the insured. And yet, while it insured both lives, and for the purposes of convenience adopted a joint expression by which to designate both of the insured without circumlocution, and provided for joint enjoyment of the benefit intermediate to the maturity of the principal liability, the very essence and gist of the contract was that it was a separate policy upon the life of each of the insured, for the wholly separate benefit of each of the insured.

To the existence of a joint tenancy, it is conceded by all of the parties, and is the law, that four unities must exist in the tenants, viz.: (1) Unity of interest; (2) unity of title; (3) unity of time; and (4) unity of possession. These unities do not coincide in this matter, particularly as to the principal subject matter of the contract, the insurance fund, or the right of expectancy in it. The interest of Alverta B. Gentry in the ultimate and principal benefit was wholly dependent upon the happening of one contingency, viz., the death of Thomas J. Gentry; and the interest of Thomas J. Gentry was just as dependent upon another and entirely different contingency, viz., the death of Alverta B. Gentry. The interests of both could not be the same, and could not vest at the same time, for the vesting of one interest would terminate the expectancy and interest of the other; and the unities would necessarily be broken.

It seems to us that the four unities might concur in the benefits which might have arisen under the policy during the lives of both parties, aside from the benefit of expectancy, but the expectancies, which constituted the principal subject matter, were wholly contrary, each to the other, and different in the essentials. To technically analyze the contract, as to the estates created by it, it brought into being at least two entities of ownership: (1) An ownership or estate in the benefits which might have accrued during the lives of both parties exclusive of the principal expectancy in the insurance fund, which was a present, joint estate, which would lapse on the death of either of insured; and (2) an estate severally to each of the insured in the principal expectancy in the insurance fund of $2,000, which was in the nature of a contingent remainder, depending upon a contingent determination of the preceding estate, it remaining uncertain whether the estate limited in the future would ever vest. In the orderly course of events, if the premiums had been kept paid, it was certain that one or the other estates designated as being in the nature of an estate in remainder, was certain to vest, and yet neither owner possessed any certainty that his particular interest would vest.

If the contention of the insurer that the two insured persons owned all rights under the policy as joint tenants be correct and Alverta B. Gentry succeeded to such rights as survivor, by virtue of the provisions of the statute, then such taking would have come by virtue of the statute; and then, following out our rule that, in the absence of a statute, the murderer did not forfeit his inheritance, Alverta B. Gentry would recover the insurance fund. Thus, it will be seen that the contentions of the insurance company, in this particular, are in themselves not consistent.

It is our conclusion that the estates in the expectancy were not a joint tenancy, and that she did not take as survivor.

4. It is contended by plaintiff in error the insurance company that Alverta B. Gentry, being the survivor of the two lives insured, was the only person entitled by the express terms of the contract to collect the insurance; that her right, and those of her assignee, being forfeited by her crime, no trust was created by statute or contract, and, there being no alternative payee according to the terms of the contract, there could be no resulting trust in favor of the estate of Thomas J. Gentry; that it necessarily follows that the administrator, J. T. Weightman, has not the right to recover; and that, as a consequence of this situation, liability of the insurer is at an end. The administrator of the estate of Thomas J. Gentry, deceased, contends that, as a result of the existing situation, a resulting or constructive trust has arisen by operation of law, under which the beneficial rights of the policy are vested in the said estate of Thomas J. Gentry, deceased. There is no question of fraud in the inception of the contract raised, and the policy is expressly incontestable after one year from its date, which time had expired. The policy contains no provision for an alternative beneficiary, in the event of the disqualification of either beneficiary. It has no provision that it should be forfeited, in the event of the murder of the insured, and no condition of any kind against murder. Neither the beneficiary nor her assignee can recover, because of the wrong perpetrated by her; but does her wrong absolve the insurer from liability? We are of a contrary opinion. To so hold would avoid the policy, and sweep out of existence the obligations which the contract created as between the insurer and Thomas J. Gentry, who has committed no wrong, but who has been the victim of the utmost wrong. Thomas J. Gentry paid the premiums upon this policy, and was as essentially a party to the contract of insurance upon his own life as either the insurer or the beneficiary. He is as innocent of the crime against himself and against the contractual relations of the parties as is the insurer. His murder was an event over which he had no more control than did the insurance company. His homicide was the highest degree of murder, which means that he was wholly without fault in bringing it about. So far as he is concerned, the event which matured the policy, if it be held to have so done, was as free of his fault as if he had been stricken down by the germs of some deadly disease, instead of by the hand of his wife. Can it be gainsaid that he had rights under his contract? Can we hold that those rights have been obliterated without his consent, without his fault? We do not think that the law of contracts, public policy, or equity would demand such a consummation.

If Alverta B. Gentry had inflicted the fatal injury upon her husband, and he had lingered, and she had died of natural causes prior to his death, her act, resulting in the death of her husband, would have been none the less murder because she preceded him in death; and yet could we say that her act could have deprived her husband of the insurance upon her life, she having died first of natural causes, and at the same time have deprived the husband's estate of the insurance upon his life? Again, let us assume that the policy may have been an expressly separate one upon the life of the husband, for the benefit of the wife; that after the fatal injury at the hands of the wife the husband lingered for some time, too weak to consider making a change in beneficiary; that during the lingering of the assured the annual premium on the policy had become due; and that during a moment of consciousness the assured had called to some one at his bedside to take his money and attend to his insurance premium: Would we say that the criminal act of the beneficiary had already terminated the policy, and that insurer could refuse the premiums of the stricken man? Could the wife abandon the rights of the husband for him? These illustrations serve to show us that the rights of the murdered man are wrapped up in this litigation.

We have found no decisions from other courts involving this question under a policy exactly like this one, one policy upon two lives. However, we have concluded in this opinion that this policy partakes of the nature of two separate policies upon the life of each of the insured. As to individual policies, there is abundant authority from other courts, and it seems almost unanimous, to the effect that if the insured be murdered by his beneficiary, or if for any other reason the beneficiary be disqualified, the policy and the law not specifically providing an alternative beneficiary, a resulting or constructive trust arises by operation of law, by which the benefits of the policy vest in the insured, or in his estate in event of his death. 25 Cyc. 895 (d) and authorities in footnote 6; Richards, Ins. 3d ed. p. 81; Vance, Ins. p. 393; Kerr, Ins. p. 685; Cooley, Briefs on Ins. pp. 3753-3760; Schmidt v. Northern Life Assn. 112 Iowa, 41, 51 L.R.A. 141, 84 Am. St. Rep. 323, 83 N. W. 800; Continental L. Ins. Co. v. Palmer, 42 Conn. 60, 19 Am. Rep. 531; Smith v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 222 Pa. 226, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 928, 128 Am. St. Rep. 799, 71 Atl. 11; Cleaver v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assn. [1892] 1 Q. B. 147, 61 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 128, 66 L. T. N. S. 220, 40 Week. Rep. 230, 56 J. P. 180 (Eng.); Standard Life Assur. Co. v. Trudeau, Rap. Jud. Quebec 9 B. R. 499 (Can.); Ryan v. Rothweiler, 50 Ohio St. 595, 35 N. E. 679. All of the text-writers whose works we have been able to survey have written this theory into their books, and those above referred to furnish in their notes most extensive citations of cases supporting this doctrine. Richards on Insurance, supra, lays down the rule thus:

"It need hardly be stated that the beneficiary will not be permitted to recover if he intentionally brings about the death of the insured. But in such an event, if the insured has committed no breach of contract, a resulting trust in the insurance money is inferred in favor of his estate, since it would be harsh indeed to adjudge the contract void when the contracting party himself has violated none of its terms."

Vance on Insurance, supra, states the rule thus:

"But while the felonious act of the beneficiary will defeat his rights under the policy, it seems that it will not serve as a defense to the insurer, who must pay the amount of the insurance to the representatives of the insured, to whom the property in the policy is deemed to revert."

Kerr on Insurance, supra, says:

"A beneficiary in an insurance policy, who murders the insured, forfeits all rights under the policy, but the liability of the company is not thereby terminated. The benefits revert to, and become a part of the estate of the insured, and his administrator can recover them, for the benefit of those who would have been entitled to the insurance, had no beneficiary been designated."

In Ryan v. Rothweiler, supra, the beneficiary died before the death of the insured, and the supreme court of Ohio said:

"The question is not governed so much by the principle of choses in action and vested rights as by the principles, aims, and well-known objects of life insurance. The cases which hold the insurance money to be a trust fund, which reverts to the estate of the assured in case of the death of all the named beneficiaries during the lifetime of the assured, give different reasons for the result arrived at. . . . The theory of a failure of trust comes with more force and stronger reasons than the doctrine of choses in action, so strongly urged by . . . plaintiff in error. We regard the doctrine of choses in action as not fully applicable, because it conflicts in many cases with the controlling doctrine of insurable interest. . . . On principle, therefore, and aside from any statute on the subject, we think that in this case the policy reverted to Mr. Helwig [the assured] and at his death became a part of his estate. It seems to us that this was the manifest intention and understanding of all of the parties interested, and that the result is just and equitable."

The case of Schmidt v. Northern Life Assn. 112 Iowa, 41, 51 L.R.A. 141, 84 Am. St.

Rep. 323, 83 N. W. 800; by the Supreme Court of Iowa, is one of the best-reasoned cases upon this subject, and contains an extensive citation of precedents. In that case, which was a case in which the wife as beneficiary in the policy had murdered her husband, who was the insured, the court said:

"Defendant obligated itself to pay on the death of the assured, and it ought not to be held that the act of the beneficiary forfeited all claim under the policy. The wife cannot recover, because it is contrary to public policy to allow her to enforce the claim. But this rule of public policy ought not to be extended so as to defeat all claims on the policy. We have seen that when there has been no designation, or an illegal designation, or a designation of a person as a beneficiary who dies before the death of the assured, the association holds the money in trust for the . . . estate of the assured. Following this doctrine to its logical conclusion, it seems to us that, when the beneficiary named is prohibited from taking because of her own wrong, a trust arises that will be enforced in a proper case. This trust is created in favor of the husband's estate, and takes effect by reason of the crime of the wife, which destroys the trust in her favor. In so far as she is concerned, the trust is destroyed by her crime, and in consequence a resulting trust in favor of the husband's estate is allowed. If we treat the designation of the beneficiary as akin to a bequest, the same result follows; for a lapsed legacy descends to the heirs of the testator."

Plaintiff in error has cited several cases, which held to the theory that if the assured is murdered by the beneficiary, the liability is terminated; but the great burden of authority, including the cases which we have cited and quoted from, and the cases listed in the authorities we have cited, holds to the contrary doctrine, which seems to us consistent with every principle of right and equity, as well as of law. We cannot reason ourselves away from the rights of the assured. The insurer assumed the risk of death, without any reservation, and death has occurred. The company received every consideration for its unreserved risk, received them from Thomas J. Gentry, who has done no wrong and has received no return. If such rights exist, the law does not strike down the rights of an innocent person, but finds a way, if one there be, to sustain these rights. .

Plaintiff in error contends that, to hold that the liability does not cease, but vests in the estate of the assured, would be to hold that the law reads this contingency into the original contract, and that this would be putting a premium upon murder and contrary to public policy. The Supreme Court of Illinois, in the case of Supreme Lodge, K. L. H. v. Menkhause, 209 Ill. 277, 65 L.R.A. 508, 101 Am. St. Rep. 230, 70 N. E. 567, upon a similar contention, said:

"The only reason in favor of appellant's contention that seems to us of weight is found in the fact that the beneficiary might be incited to commit murder by the fact that, if unable to collect the benefit himself, it would be payable to some other person or persons in whose welfare he was interested. Human experience teaches that those willing to commit murder and assume the risk of punishment for the benefit of others are so few in number that consideration thereof becomes well-nigh inconsequential. But, even were it otherwise, if the rule suggested by appellant were established, it is perceived that the society would then profit by the murder, and an incentive be created for the destruction of the life of the insured that the interest of the insurer might be advanced."

It is thus seen that the rule, contended for by plaintiff in error, would be just as susceptible of perversion as the rule it contends against, and, in addition, would be too harsh for application by equity, in that it would harshly eliminate from consideration the rights of an assured person, who is without wrong.

It happens that, in this case, if the insurance money is adjudged to the administrator of the assured, Alverta B. Gentry will inherit a part of it as his heir, if it is not otherwise disposed of by the administrator; for, under the laws in force at the time of the murder, her criminal act would not bar her rights of inheritance. But, this coincidence cannot interfere with the reason of the general rule. We are of the opinion that, when, by her act of murder, Alverta B. Gentry forfeited her rights as beneficiary under this contract of insurance, a resulting trust arose by operation of law in favor of the estate of the assured, and that the administrator has properly recovered judgment for the insurance.

5. The last proposition of plaintiff in error is that the lower court erred in rendering judgment for intervener and in overruling its motion for a new trial; but this proposition involves only the matters hereinabove considered.

The judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

Per Curiam:
Adopted in whole.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

JAMES CLARK DISTILLING COMPANY,
Appt.,
v.
WESTERN MARYLAND RAILWAY COM-PANY et al. (No. 75.)

SAME, Appt.,
v.

AMERICAN EXPRESS COMPANY et al.
(No. 76.)

(242 U. S. 311, 61 L. ed. —, 37 Sup. Ct.
Rep. 180.)

Constitutional law — due process of law — forbidding shipments of liquor.

1. A state may, consistently with the due process of law clause of U. S. Const. 14th Amend., forbid all shipments of intoxicating liquor, whether intended for personal use or otherwise.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Commerce — transporting intoxicating liquor — Webb-Kenyon Act.

2. Any immunity from the prohibitions of a state statute against the shipment without the state of intoxicating liquors intended for personal use, and the receipt and possession of liquors so transported, which the interstate character of such a shipment might otherwise give, was taken away by the provisions of the Webb-Kenyon Act forbidding the interstate shipment or transportation of intoxicating liquor which is intended by any person interested therein to be received, possessed, sold, or in any manner used, either in the original package or otherwise, in violation of the law of the state to which the liquor is transported, although individual use may not have been prohibited by the state law.

For other cases, see Commerce, II. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — power of Congress.

3. Congress did not exceed its power under the commerce clause in enacting the provision of the Webb-Kenyon Act, forbidding the interstate shipment or transportation of intoxicating liquors which is intended by any person interested therein to be received, possessed, sold, or in any manner used, either in the original package or otherwise, in violation of any law of the state into which the liquor is transported.

For other cases, see Commerce, II. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Constitutional law — due process — forbidding shipments of liquor.

4. There is nothing repugnant to the due process of law clause of U. S. Const. 5th Amend., in the provisions of the Webb-Kenyon Act, under which an interstate shipment of intoxicating liquor, though intended for personal use, may be subjected to the state prohibitory laws.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Mr. Justice Holmes and Mr. Justice Van Devanter dissent.)

(January 8, 1917.)

A PPEALS by plaintiff from decrees of the District Court of the United States for the District of Maryland, dismissing its bills filed to compel defendants to accept shipments of intoxicating liquor for interstate transportation, forbidden by the laws of the state into which the liquor was to be transported. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Joseph S. Graydon, Lawrence Maxwell, Walter C. Capper, and J. Philip Roman, for appellant:

West Virginia cannot constitutionally make it an offense for a liquor dealer at Cumberland, Maryland, to solicit by mail orders from citizens of West Virginia for the sale of liquors at Cumberland, and their transportation in interstate commerce.

R. M. Rose Co. v. State, 133 Ga. 353, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 443, 65 S. E. 770.

West Virginia cannot constitutionally make the place of delivery in West Virginia, of an interstate shipment for personal use, the place of sale, and prohibit the interstate carrier from delivering such shipments.

Adams Exp. Co. v. Kentucky, 206 U. S. 129, 51 L. ed. 987, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 606; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. F. W. Cook Brewing Co. 223 U. S. 70, 56 L. ed. 355, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 189.

A citizen of West Virginia has the constitutional right to order and have delivered to him, in interstate commerce, liquors for his personal use.

State v. Gilman, 33 W. Va. 146, 6 L.R.A. 847, 10 S. E. 283; State v. Williams, 146 N. C. 618, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 299, 61 S. E. 61, 14 Ann. Cas. 562; Eidge v. Bessemer, 164 Ala. 599, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 394, 51 So. 246; Com. v. Campbell, 133 Ky. 50, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 172, 117 S. W. 383, 19 Ann. Cas. 159; Martin v. Com. 153 Ky. 784, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 957, 156 S. W. 870; Calhoun v. Com. 154 Ky. 70, 156 S. W. 1077; Adams Exp. Co. v. Com. 154 Ky. 471, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 342, 157 S. W. 908; Com. v. Smith, 163 Ky. 227, L.R.A.1915D, 172, 173 S. W. 340; Vance v. W. A. Vandercook Co. 170 U. S. 439, 42 L. ed. 1101, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 674.

The Webb-Kenyon Law does not authorize the application of a state statute to an interstate shipment for lawful personal use.

Van Winkle v. State, 4 Boyce (Del.) 578, 91 Atl. 385, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 104;

Note. — For constitutionality, construction, and effect of Webb-Kenyon Act, see annotation following this case, post, 1229. L.R.A.1917B.

Adams Exp. Co. v. Com. 154 Ky. 462, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 343, 157 S. W. 908; Adams Exp. Co. v. Com. 160 Ky. 66, 169 S. W. 603; Palmer v. Southern Exp. Co. 129 Tenn. 116, 165 S. W. 236; Theo. Hamm Brewing Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 215 Fed. 672; Ex parte Peede, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 170 S. W. 749; Southern Exp. Co. v. State, 188 Ala. 454, 66 So. 115; Southern Exp. Co. v. High Point, 167 N. C. 103, 83 S. E. 254; Bristol Distributing Co. v. Southern Exp. Co. 117 Va. 7, 83 S. E. 1084.

The Webb-Kenyon Law, as construed and applied by the lower court, would be unconstitutional.

Rhodes v. Iowa, 170 U. S. 412, 42 L. ed. 1088, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 664; Re Rahrer, 140 U. S. 555, 35 L. ed. 574, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 865.

There is nothing in the amendment to the law of West Virginia, adopted at the extraordinary session of 1915, and incorporated into the statute as § 34, nor in any other section of the statute, which makes it an offense for the citizen to have in his possession for personal use, and to use, intoxicating liquors.

State v. Sixo, — W. Va. —, 87 S. E. 267.

Mr. Wayne B. Wheeler, for appellee state of West Virginia:

The Webb-Kenyon Law is authorized by the Federal Constitution.

Glenn v. Southern Exp. Co. 170 N. C. 286, L.R.A. —, —, 87 S. E. 136; Southern Exp. Co. v. State, 188 Ala. 454, 66 So. 115; Southern Exp. Co. v. Whittle, — Ala. —, L.R.A.1916C, 278, 69 So. 652; West Virginia v. Adams Exp. Co. L.R.A.1916C, 291, 135 C. C. A. 464, 219 Fed. 794; State v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 169 N. C. 303, 84 S. E. 283; State v. Doe, 92 Kan. 212, 139 Pac. 1169; State v. United States Exp. Co. 164 Iowa, 112, 145 N. W. 451; American Exp. Co. v. Beer, 107 Miss. 528, L.R.A. —, —, 65 So. 575, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 127; United States ex rel. F. Zimmerman & Co. v. Oregon-Washington R. & Nav. Co. 210 Fed. 378; Atkinson v. Southern Exp. Co. 94 S. C. 444, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 349, 78 S. E. 516; Van Winkle v. State, 4 Boyce (Del.) 578, 91 Atl. 385, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 104; Taylor v. Com. 117 Va. 909, 85 S. E. 499; Adams Exp. Co. v. Com. 160 Ky. 66, 169 S. W. 603; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 23; Gottstein v. Lister, 88 Wash. 462, 153 Pac. 595; State v. Missouri P. R. Co. 96 Kan. 609, 152 Pac. 777; Brennen v. Southern Exp. Co. — S. C. —, 90 S. E. 402.

The law in question is not a delegation of legislative power.

State v. United States Exp. Co. 164 Iowa, 112, 145 N. W. 451; People ex rel. Hill v. Hesterberg, 184 N. Y. 126, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) L.R.A.1917B.

163, 128 Am. St. Rep. 528, 76 N. E. 1032, 6 Ann. Cas. 353.

Congress has power to eliminate deleterious commodities from interstate commerce.

Lottery Case (Champion v. Ames) 188 U. S. 356, 47 L. ed. 492, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 321, 13 Am. Crim. Rep. 561; United States v. 43 Gallons of Whiskey (United States v. Lariviere) 93 U. S. 188, 23 L. ed. 846; Buttfeld v. Stranahan, 192 U. S. 470, 48 L. ed. 525, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 349; Reid v. Colorado, 187 U. S. 137, 47 L. ed. 108, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 92, 12 Am. Crim. Rep. 506; Hipolite Egg Co. v. United States, 220 U. S. 45, 55 L. ed. 364, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 364; State v. Missouri P. R. Co. 96 Kan. 609, 152 Pac. 777.

Alcohol or intoxicating liquor used as a beverage is a deleterious commodity, and may be excluded from interstate commerce.

Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U. S. 86, 34 L. ed. 620, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 13; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; Santo v. State, 2 Iowa, 190, 63 Am. Dec. 487; Goddard v. Jacksonville, 15 Ill. 589, 60 Am. Dec. 773; Our House v. State, 4 G. Greene, 172; Beebe v. State, 6 Ind. 542, 63 Am. Dec. 391; State ex rel. Vance v. Crawford, 28 Kan. 728, 42 Am. Rep. 186; Thurlow v. Massachusetts, 5 How. 504, 12 L. ed. 256.

The Federal Constitution gives no guaranty to a citizen to receive and possess intoxicating liquor for his own use.

Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; Preston v. Drew, 33 Me. 558, 54 Am. Dec. 639; Southern Exp. Co. v. High Point, 167 N. C. 103, 83 S. E. 254; Southern Exp. Co. v. Whittle, — Ala. —, L.R.A.1916C, 278, 69 So. 652; Re Crane, 27 Idaho, 671, L.R.A. —, —, 151 Pac. 1006.

The Webb-Kenyon Law is valid as a police regulation.

Freund, Pol. Power, §§ 65, 66; Re Rahrer, 140 U. S. 545, 35 L. ed. 572, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 865; Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, 44 L. ed. 136, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 96; Phalen v. Virginia, 8 How. 163, 168, 12 L. ed. 1030, 1032; Hoke v. United States, 227 U. S. 309, 57 L. ed. 523, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 906, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 905.

Legislative power may prohibit acts innocent in themselves if the lawmaking body thinks the admitted evil cannot be prevented except by the enactment of such a law.

State v. Frederickson, 101 Me. 37, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 186, 115 Am. St. Rep. 295, 63 Atl. 535, 8 Ann. Cas. 48; Elder v. State, 162 Ala. 41, 50 So. 370; State v. George, 136 La. 906, 67 So. 953; Feibelman v. State, 130 Ala. 122, 30 So. 384; Dinkins v. State, 149 Ala. 49, 43 So. 114; Lambie v. State, 151 Ala. 86, 44 So. 51; Eaves v. State, 113 Ga. 749, 39 S. E. 318; State v. O'Connell, 99 Me. 61, 58 Atl. 59; United States v. Cohn, 2 Ind. Terr. 474, 52 S. W. 38; Pennell v. State, 141 Wis. 35, 123 N. W. 115; State v. Walder, 83 Ohio St. 84, 93 N. E. 531; Com. v. Bloss, 116 Mass. 56; Com. v. Anthes, 12 Gray, 29; Com. v. Brelsford, 161 Mass. 61, 36 N. E. 677; State v. Piche, 98 Me. 348, 56 Atl. 1052; Com. v. Snow, 133 Mass. 575; State v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 76 Iowa, 243, 2 L.R.A. 408, 41 N. W. 6; State v. Guinness, 16 R. I. 401, 16 Atl. 910; Purity Extract & Tonic Co. v. Lynch, 226 U. S. 192, 202, 57 L. ed. 184, 187, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 44.

Unless there is such conflict between the law and the Constitution as cannot be reconciled, it should be sustained.

United States v. Harris, 106 U. S. 635, 27 L. ed. 292, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 601; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 174 U. S. 96, 43 L. ed. 909, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609; Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S. 591, 40 L. ed. 819, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 369, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644; United States v. Gettysburg Electric R. Co. 160 U. S. 668, 40 L. ed. 576, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427.

The liquor business is of a character so menacing to the public welfare that no person can claim an inalienable right to engage in it. No one can complain if, having chosen this vocation, his business is regulated or prohibited by law, whatever the property loss to him may be, or whatever means are devised by the state to accomplish such regulation or prohibition, so long as such means are reasonable and necessary to effect the purpose designed.

License Cases, 5 How. 504, 12 L. ed. 256; Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 33, 24 L. ed. 902; State, Paul, Prosecutor, v. Circuit Judge, 50 N. J. L. 595, 1 L.R.A. 86, 15 Atl. 272; Giozza v. Tiernan, 148 U. S. 657, 37 L. ed. 599, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 721.

The character of the liquor traffic is such that it cannot invoke those constitutional guaranties which protect other personal and property rights.

Foster v. Kansas, 112 U. S. 201, 28 L. ed. 629, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 8, 97; Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 25, 24 L. ed. 989; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S. 1, 32 L. ed. 346, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 232, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 6; Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U. S. 91, 34 L. ed. 623, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 13; Goddard v. Jacksonville, 15 Ill. 589, 60 Am. Dec. 773; Our House v. State, 4 G. Greene, 172; Beebe v. State, 6 Ind. 542, 63 Am. Dec. 391; State ex rel. Vance v. Crawford, 28 Kan. 726, 42 L.R.A.1917B.

Am. Rep. 182; Thurlow v. Massachusetts, 5 How. 504, 12 L. ed. 256; State v. Durein, 70 Kan. 13, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 908, 78 Pac. 162, 80 Pac. 987; Santo v. State, 2 Iowa, 190, 63 Am. Dec. 487.

The state is now free to exercise its police power to the extent of prohibiting either the possession or receipt of intoxicating liquors. These are the incidents leading to its use which will produce the evil sought to be remedied.

Re Crane, 27 Idaho, 671, L.R.A. —, —, 151 Pac. 1006; Southern Exp. Co. v. Whittle, — Ala. —, L.R.A.1916C, 278, 69 So. 652.

Transactions accessory or incidental to bringing liquors into the state, and to disposing of them, may be prohibited.

Delamater v. South Dakota, 205 U. S. 93, 51 L. ed. 724, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 447, 10 Ann. Cas. 733; Glenn v. Southern Exp. Co. 170 N. C. 286, L.R.A. —, —, 87 S. E. 136.

The legislative policy of West Virginia is sustained by its supreme court.

State v. Davis, — W. Va. —, L.R.A. —, —, 87 S. E. 262; State v. Sixo, — W. Va. —, 87 S. E. 267.

Mr. Fred O. Blue, also for appellee state of West Virginia:

The court of last resort of appellee state, having considered the statute interpreted by it as applicable to interstate shipments and to intoxicating liquors when intended for personal use, although an interstate transaction, the meaning of the statute is no longer open to question.

State v. Davis, — W. Va. —, L.R.A. —, —, 87 S. E. 262. See also West Virginia v. Adams Exp. Co. L.R.A.1916C, 291, 135 C. C. A. 464, 219 Fed. 794; State v. Cardwell, 166 N. C. 309, 81 S. E. 630; State v. Patterson, 134 N. C. 612, 47 S. E. 808; Southern Exp. Co. v. Whittle, — Ala. —, L.R.A.1916C, 278, 69 So. 652; Glenn v. Southern Exp. Co. 170 N. C. 286, L.R.A. —, —, 87 S. E. 136.

The statute, so interpreted, violates no rights of the citizen under the state Constitution.

West Virginia v. Adams Exp. Co. L.R.A. 1916C, 201, 135 C. C. A. 464, 219 Fed. 794; Southern Exp. Co. v. Whittle, — Ala. —, L.R.A.1916C, 278, 69 So. 652; Re Crane, 27 Idaho, 671, L.R.A. —, —, 151 Pac. 1006; State v. Phillips, 109 Miss. 22, L.R.A. 1916D, 530, 67 So. 651; State v. Davis, — W. Va. —, L.R.A. —, —, 87 S. E. 262; State v. Sixo, — W. Va. —, 87 S. E. 269; Glenn v. Southern Exp. Co. 170 N. C. 286, L.R.A. —, —, 87 S. E. 136.

The statute, so interpreted, violates no rights of the citizen under the Federal Constitution nor any of the amendments thereof.

West Virginia v. Adams Exp. Co. L.R.A.

1916C, 291, 135 C. C. A. 464, 219 Fed. 794; Southern Exp. Co. v. Whittle, — Ala. —, L.R.A.1916C, 278, 69 So. 652; Re Crane, 27 Idaho, 671, L.R.A. —, —, 151 Pac. 1006; State v. Phillips, 109 Miss. 22, L.R.A. 1915D, 530, 67 So. 651; Atkinson v. Southern Exp. Co. 94 S. C. 444, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 349, 78 S. E. 516; State v. Davis, — W. Va. —, L.R.A. —, —, 87 S. E. 262; Glenn v. Southern Exp. Co. 170 N. C. 286, L.R.A. —, —, 87 S. E. 136.

The Webb-Kenyon Law is constitutional.

Re Rahrer, 140 U. S. 545, 35 L. ed. 572, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 865; West Virginia v. Adams Exp. Co. L.R.A.1916C, 291, 135 C. C. A. 464, 219 Fed. 794; State v. Cardwell, 166 N. C. 309, 81 S. E. 630; State v. United States Exp. Co. 164 Iowa, 112, 145 N. W. 451; Southern Exp. Co. v. Whittle, — Ala. —, L.R.A.1916C, 278, 69 So. 652; Glenn v. Southern Exp. Co. 170 N. C. 286, L.R.A. —, —, 87 S. E. 136; State v. Davis, — W. Va. —, L.R.A. —, —, 87 S. E. 262.

Messrs. William L. Martin, Attorney General of Alabama, Wiley E. Jones, Attorney General of Arizona, Clifford Walker, Attorney General of Georgia, J. H. Peterson, Attorney General of Idaho, George Cosson, Attorney of Iowa, S. M. Brewster, Attorney General of Kansas, Ross Collins, Attorney General of Mississippi, T. W. Bickett, Attorney General of North Carolina, Henry J. Linde, Attorney General of North Dakota, S. P. Freehling, Attorney General of Oklahoma, George M. Brown, Attorney General of Oregon, Thomas H. Peebles, Attorney General of South Carolina, Frank M. Thompson, Attorney General of Tennessee, John Garland Pollard, Attorney General of Virginia, and W. V. Tanner, Attorney General of Washington, amici curiæ:

The Webb-Kenyon Act is valid.

Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 34 L. ed. 128, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 36, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681; Re Rahrer, 140 U. S. 546, 35 L. ed. 572, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 865; Adams Exp. Co. v. Kentucky, 238 U. S. 190, 59 L. ed. 1267, L.R.A.1916C, 273, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 824, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 1167; Rhodes v. Iowa, 170 U. S. 412, 42 L. ed. 1088, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 664; Southern Exp. Co. v. State, 188 Ala. 454, 66 So. 115; Southern Exp. Co. v. Whittle, — Ala. —, L.R.A.1916C, 278, 69 So. 652; State v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 169 N. C. 303, 84 S. E. 283; Glenn v. Southern Exp. Co. 170 N. C. 286, L.R.A. —, —, 87 S. E. 136; Vance v. W. A. Vandercook Co. 170 U. S. 438, 42 L. ed. 1100, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 674; State v. Doe, 92 Kan. 212, 139 Pac. 1169; State v. United States Exp. Co. 164 Iowa, 112, 145 N. W. 451; American Exp. Co. v. Beer, 107 Miss. 528, L.R.A. —, —, 65 So. 575, Ann. Cas. L.R.A.1917B.

1916D, 127; Atkinson v. Southern Exp. Co. 94 S. C. 444, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 349, 78 S. E. 516; Taylor v. Com. 117 Va. 909, 85 S. E. 499; Adams Exp. Co. v. Com. 160 Ky. 66, 169 S. W. 603; State v. Grier, 4 Boyce (Del.) 322, 88 Atl. 579; Van Winkle v. State, 4 Boyce (Del.) 578, 91 Atl. 385, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 104; United States ex rel. F. Zimmerman & Co. v. Oregon-Washington R. & Nav. Co. 210 Fed. 378; West Virginia v. Adams Exp. Co. L.R.A.1916C, 291, 135 C. C. A. 464, 219 Fed. 794.

The Webb-Kenyon Act is in the form of a prohibition against shipments of liquor in interstate commerce in defined cases; Congress may regulate commerce by adopting prohibitions excluding certain articles from the right to be transported from one state into another.

Lottery Case (Champion v. Ames) 188 U. S. 321, 47 L. ed. 492, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 321, 13 Am. Crim. Rep. 561; United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Asso. 166 U. S. 290, 41 L. ed. 1007, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 540; United States v. Joint Traffic Asso. 171 U. S. 505, 43 L. ed. 259, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 25; Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, 44 L. ed. 136, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 96; Hoke v. United States, 227 U. S. 308, 57 L. ed. 523, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 906, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 905; Hipolite Egg Co. v. United States, 220 U. S. 45, 55 L. ed. 364, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 364; Reid v. Colorado, 187 U. S. 137, 47 L. ed. 108, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 92, 12 Am. Crim. Rep. 506; State v. United States Exp. Co. 164 Iowa, 112, 145 N. W. 451; United States v. 43 Gallons of Whiskey (United States v. Lariviere) 93 U. S. 188, 23 L. ed. 846; Perrin v. United States, 232 U. S. 478, 58 L. ed. 691, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 387; Buttfield v. Stranahan, 192 U. S. 470, 48 L. ed. 523, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 349; United States v. Popper, 98 Fed. 423; State v. Cardwell, 166 N. C. 309, 81 S. E. 628; West Virginia v. Adams Exp. Co. L.R.A.1916C, 291, 135 C. C. A. 464, 219 Fed. 794.

The Webb-Kenyon Act extended the prohibition against the introduction of liquors into a state by means of interstate commerce.

Adams Exp. Co. v. Kentucky, 238 U. S. 190, 59 L. ed. 1267, L.R.A.1916C, 273, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 824, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 1167.

The states, under the police power, have the right to regulate, restrain, or forbid the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors.

Re Rahrer, 140 U. S. 545, 35 L. ed. 556, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 865; Foster v. Kansas, 112 U. S. 201, 28 L. ed. 629, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 8, 97; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S.

25, 24 L. ed. 989; Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S. 1, 32 L. ed. 346, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 232, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 6; Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U. S. 91, 34 L. ed. 623, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 13; Purity Extract & Tonic Co. v. Lynch, 226 U. S. 192, 57 L. ed. 184, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 44.

A state may constitutionally prohibit or regulate the receipt and possession of intoxicating liquors by a citizen even when for his own use; and, since the Webb-Kenyon Law, this principle will apply to such liquors moving into the state from another state.

Southern Exp. Co. v. Whittle, — Ala. —, L.R.A.1916C, 278, 69 So. 652; Re Crane, 27 Idaho, 671, L.R.A. —, —, 151 Pac. 1006; Glenn v. Southern Exp. Co. 170 N. C. 286, L.R.A. —, —, 87 S. E. 136; United States ex rel. F. Zimmerman & Co. v. Oregon-Washington R. & Nav. Co. 210 Fed. 378; Preston v. Drew, 33 Me. 558, 54 Am. Dec. 630; Henderson v. Heyward, 109 Ga. 373, 47 L.R.A. 366, 77 Am. St. Rep. 384, 34 S. E. 590.

The state may prohibit the solicitation of orders for intoxicating liquors, and also the advertising of such liquors, although the liquors, if purchased, are in another state, and would have to be brought into the state making the prohibition, in interstate commerce.

Delamater v. South Dakota, 205 U. S. 93, 51 L. ed. 724, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 447, 10 Ann. Cas. 733; State ex rel. Black v. Delaye, 193 Ala. 500, L.R.A.1915E, 640, 68 So. 995; State v. Davis, — W. Va. —, L.R.A. —, —, 87 S. E. 262.

The real purpose of prohibition legislation is to prevent personal use of liquor.

Lincoln v. Smith, 27 Vt. 328; Marks v. State, 159 Ala. 71, 133 Am. St. Rep. 20, 48 So. 864; Southern Exp. Co. v. Whittle, — Ala. —, L.R.A.1916C, 278, 69 So. 652; State v. Phillips, 109 Miss. 22, L.R.A.1915D, 530, 67 So. 651; West Virginia v. Adams Exp. Co. L.R.A.1916C, 291, 135 C. C. A. 464, 219 Fed. 794; State v. J. P. Bass Pub. Co. 104 Me. 288, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 495, 71 Atl. 894; Golden & Co. v. Justice's Ct. 23 Cal. App. 802, 140 Pac. 49; Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U. S. 87, 34 L. ed. 620, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 13; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273.

Many decisions sustain recent state laws which are contrary to appellant's contention as to the right of a citizen to receive and possess liquors for personal use.

Southern Exp. Co. v. Whittle, — Ala. —, L.R.A.1916C, 278, 69 So. 652; Williams v. State, 179 Ala. 51, 60 So. 903; Glenn v. Southern Exp. Co. 170 N. C. 286, L.R.A. —, —, 87 S. E. 136; Van Winkle v. State, L.R.A.1917B.

4 Boyce (Del.) 578, 91 Atl. 381, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 104; Atkinson v. Southern Exp. Co. 94 S. C. 44, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 340, 78 S. E. 516; Re Crane, 27 Idaho, 671, L.R.A. —, —, 151 Pac. 1006; State v. Sixo, — W. Va. —, 87 S. E. 267; State v. Davis, — W. Va. —, L.R.A. —, —, 87 S. E. 262; New York ex rel. Silz v. Hesterberg, 211 U. S. 31, 53 L. ed. 75, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 10; Patson v. Pennsylvania, 232 U. S. 138, 58 L. ed. 539, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281; Purity Extract & Tonic Co. v. Lynch, 226 U. S. 192, 57 L. ed. 184, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 44; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273.

Mr. Chief Justice White delivered the opinion of the court:

To refer to the principal state law relating to these suits, to the pleadings and the decision of the court below, will make the issues in these cases clear and point directly to the elements required to be considered in deciding them.

West Virginia in February, 1913, enacted a prohibition law to go into effect on July 1st of the following year. Code 1913, chap. 32A. Putting out of view the right of druggists, under stringent regulations provided by the statute, to sell for medicinal purposes, and the right otherwise to sell wine for sacramental and alcohol for scientific and manufacturing purposes, the law forbade "the manufacture, sale, keeping or storing for sale in this state, or offering or exposing for sale," intoxicating liquors, and the intoxicants embraced were comprehensively defined. The statute contained many restrictions concerning hotels, restaurants, clubs, and so-called associations where liquor was kept and served either as a result of membership or by gift or otherwise, which were evidently intended to prevent the frustration of the prohibitions against the keeping of intoxicants for sale and purchase by subterfuge in the guise of the exercise of an individual right. There was no express prohibition against the individual right to use intoxicants and none implied unless that result arose (a) from the prohibition in universal terms of all sales and purchases of liquor within the state, (b) from the clause providing that every delivery made in the state by a common or other carrier of the prohibited intoxicants should be considered as a consummation of a sale made in the state at the point of delivery, and (c) from the prohibitions which the statute contained against solicitations made to induce purchases of liquor, and against the publication in the state of all circulars, advertisements, price lists, etc., which might tend to stimulate purchases of liquor.

Under this statute, and in reliance upon the provisions of the act of Congress known as the Webb-Kenyon Law (Act of Congress of March 1, 1913, 37 Stat. at L. 699, chap. 90, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 8739), the state of West Virginia in one of its courts sued the Western Maryland Railroad Company and the Adams Express Company to enjoin them from carrying from Maryland into West Virginia liquor in violation of law. In substance it was charged that very many shipments had been taken by the carriers contrary to the law, both as to solicitations and as to the use for which the liquor was intended. Preliminary injunctions were issued restraining the carrying of liquor into the state, subject to many conditions as to investigation, etc., etc. With these injunctions in force, these suits were commenced by the Clark Distilling Company to compel the carriers to take a shipment of liquor which it was asserted was ordered for personal use, and deliver it in West Virginia, on the ground that the Act of Congress to Regulate Commerce imposed the duty to receive and carry, and that, besides, the West Virginia prohibition law, when rightly construed, did not forbid it. The carriers, not challenging the asserted meaning of the West Virginia law, set up the injunctions and averred that to receive and carry the liquor would violate their provisions, and therefore there was no duty under the United States law to do so. West Virginia intervened in the suits, relying upon the state law and the injunctions which had been issued. At the trial it was shown that the plaintiff Distilling Company had systematically solicited purchases and constantly shipped liquor from Maryland into West Virginia in violation of the prohibition law. The court held that the West Virginia law did not prohibit personal use, and did not forbid shipments for such use, and that, as there was no state prohibition, the Webb-Kenyon Law had no application, and that, as the solicitations forbidden by the state statute were solicitations to do that which was forbidden, that consideration was irrelevant. The construction of the statute made by the state court was held not authoritatively binding, as that court was not one of last resort, and the right to practically modify the injunctions was declared to exist because West Virginia, by making herself a party to the suits, had submitted herself to the jurisdiction of the court. All questions concerning the power of the state of West Virginia to pass the prohibition law if it meant otherwise, and of the right of Congress to adopt the Webb-Kenyon Act under a like hypothesis, were reserved. 219 Fed. 333. Before the decrees entered became final, the circuit court of appeals for the fourth circuit, in a case pending before it (West Virginia v. Adams Exp. Co. L.R.A.1916C, 291, 135 C. C. A. 464, 219 Fed. 794), decided directly to the contrary. It held that the law of West Virginia did prohibit shipments for personal use; that it did forbid solicitations therefore for such purchases; that, by operation of the Webb-Kenyon Act, there was no longer a right to ship liquor into the state in violation of its laws; and that both the state law and the Webb-Kenyon Act were constitutional. Controlled by such decision, the trial court recalled its opinion, heard a reargument, and although not changing its view, accepted and gave effect to the conclusions reached by the circuit court of appeals because they were deemed to be authoritative, and the cases were brought directly here, because of the constitutional questions, to review such action.

The issues to be decided may be embraced in four propositions which we proceed separately to consider.

1. The correct meaning of the West Virginia law as to the subjects in dispute.

The difference as to the meaning of the statute in the court below was whether or not the West Virginia law prohibited the receipt of liquor for personal use; and, if it did, whether or not the prohibitions of the law equally applied to shipments from outside and to those originating in the state. But the possibility of dispute over these subjects no longer exists because, after the decision below, and since the cases were first argued (for they have been here argued twice), the state of West Virginia amended the statute so as to leave no room for doubt that it does forbid all shipments, whether for personal use or otherwise, and whether from within or without the state. The pertinent provisions of the amendments are placed in the margin.<sup>1</sup> As the relief sought is the permanent right to ship in the future, the meaning of the statute now, that is, as amended, is the test by which we must consider the questions requiring solution. Indeed, this is frankly admitted by the parties, since it is unequivocally declared that the question is the operation and effect of the statute as amended and its constitutionality. We therefore come to the second question, which is:

2. The power of the state to enact the prohibition law consistently with the due

<sup>1</sup> "Sec. 7. It shall be unlawful for any person to keep or have, for personal use or otherwise, or to use, or permit another to have, keep or use, intoxicating liquors at any restaurant, store, office building, club, place where soft drinks are sold (except a drug store may have and sell alcohol and process clause of the 14th Amendment and the exclusive power of Congress to regulate commerce among the several states.

That government can, consistently with the due process clause, forbid the manufacture and sale of liquor and regulate its traffic, is not open to controversy; and that there goes along with this power full police authority to make it effective, is also not open. Whether the general authority includes the right to forbid individual use, we need not consider, since clearly there would be power, as an incident to the right to forbid manufacture and sale, to restrict the means by which intoxicants for personal use could be obtained, even if such use was permitted. This being true, there can be no doubt that the West Virginia prohibition law did not offend against the due process clause of the 14th Amendment.

But that it was a direct burden upon interstate commerce and conflicted with the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the several states, and therefore could not be used to prevent interstate shipments from Maryland into West Virginia, has been not open to question since the decision in Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 34 L. ed. 128, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 36, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681. And this brings us to consider whether the Webb-Kenyon Law has so regulated interstate commerce as to give the state the power to do what it did in enacting the prohibition law, and cause its provisions to be applicable to shipments of intoxicants in interstate com-wine as provided by §§ 4 and 24), fruit stand, news stand, room, or place where bowling alleys, billiard or pool tables are maintained, livery stable, boathouse, public building, park, road, street or alley. It shall also be unlawful for any person to give or furnish to another intoxicating liquors, except as otherwise hereinafter provided in this section. Any one violating this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $100, nor more than $500, and be imprisoned in the county jail not less than two nor more than six months; provided, however, that nothing contained in this section shall prevent one, in his home, from having and there giving to another intoxicating liquors when such having or giving is in no way a shift, scheme or device to evade the provisions of this act; but the word 'home' as used herein, shall not be construed to be one's club, place of common resort, or room of a transient guest in a hotel or boarding house. And, provided, further, that no common carrier, for hire, nor other person, for hire or without hire, shall bring or carry into this state, or carry from one place to another within the state, intoxicating liquors for another, even when intended for personal use; except a common carrier may, for hire, carry pure merce, thus saving that law from repugnancy to the Constitution of the United States, which is the third proposition for consideration.

3. Assuming the constitutionality of the Webb-Kenyon Act, what is its true meaning and its operation upon the prohibitions contained in the West Virginia law?

Omitting words irrelevant to the subject now under consideration, the title and text of the Webb-Kenyon Act are as follows:

"An Act Divesting Intoxicating Liquors of Their Interstate Character in Certain Cases.

" . . . That the shipment or transportation, in any manner or by any means whatsoever, of any spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquor of any kind, from one state, territory, or district of the United States, . . . into any other state, territory, or district of the United States, . . . which said spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquor is intended, by any person interested therein, to be received, possessed, sold, or in any manner used, either in the original package or otherwise, in violation of any law of such state, territory, or district of the United States . . . is hereby prohibited."

As the state law forbade the shipment into or transportation of liquor in the state, whether from inside or out, and all receipt and possession of liquor so transported, without regard to the use to which grain alcohol and wine, and such preparations as may be sold by druggists for the special purposes and in the manner as set forth in §§ 4 and 24; and, provided, further, however that in case of search and seizure, the finding of any liquors shall be prima facie evidence that the same are being kept and stored for unlawful purposes." [Acts 1915, chap. 7, p. 34.]

"Sec. 34. It shall be unlawful for any person in this state to receive, directly or indirectly, intoxicating liquors from a common, or other carrier. It shall also be unlawful for any person in this state to possess intoxicating liquors, received directly or indirectly from a common, or other carrier in this state. This section shall apply to such liquors intended for personal use, as well as otherwise, and to interstate, as well as intrastate, shipments or carriage. Any person violating this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $200 and in addition thereto may be imprisoned not more than three months; provided, however, that druggists may receive and possess pure grain alcohol, wine and such preparations as may be sold by druggists for the special purpose and in the manner as set forth in §§ 4 and 24." [Acts 1915, 2d Ex. Sess. chap. 7, p. 660.]

the liquor was to be put, and as the Webb-Kenyon Act prohibited the transportation in interstate commerce of all liquor "intended to be received, possessed, sold or in any manner used, either in the original package or otherwise, in violation of any law of such state," there would seem to be no room for doubt that the prohibitions of the state law were made applicable by the Webb-Kenyon Law. If that law was valid, therefore, the state law was not repugnant to the commerce clause. It is insisted that this view gives too wide an effect to the Webb-Kenyon Law, since that act was only intended to include state prohibitions in so far as they forbade the shipment, receipt, and possession of liquor for a forbidden use, and hence, as individual use was not forbidden by the state law, the shipment, receipt, and possession for such use was not embraced by the Webb-Kenyon Act, and the state law, so far as it was outside of that Act, was repugnant to the commerce clause. This is sought to be supported by the historical environment of the Webb-Kenyon Act as evidence by the debates on its passage and by a decision of this court, as well as decisions of state courts (which are in the margin<sup>3</sup>), which, it is insisted, have so construed that act.

Assuming, for the sake of argument only, that the debates may be resorted to for the purpose of showing environment, we are of opinion they clearly establish a result directly contrary to that which they are cited to maintain. Undoubtedly they show that it was insisted the act was not intended to interfere with personal use, as of course it was not, since its only purpose was to give effect to state prohibitions, not to compel the states to prohibit personal use. Indeed, the meaning which it is sought to affix to the Webb-Kenyon Act, if accepted, would cause that act to have the effect of compelling the states to prohibit personal use, since, if all the prohibitions of state laws against manufacture, sale, receipt, and possession of intoxicants remained subject to the danger of indirect violation by permitting shipment, receipt, and possession for personal use, it would follow that a necessary and immediate incentive was imposed upon the states by the Webb-Kenyon Act to enact a provision against personal use.

The antecedents of the Webb-Kenyon

Act, that is, its legislative and judicial progenitors, leave no room for the contention made. To correct the great evil which was asserted to arise from the right to ship liquor into a state through the channels of interstate commerce, and there receive and sell the same in the original package, in violation of state prohibitions, was indisputably the purpose which led to the enactment of the Wilson Law (Act of Congress of August 8, 1890, 26 Stat. at L. 313, chap. 728, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 8738), forbidding the sale of liquor in a state in the original package even although brought in through interstate commerce, when the existing or future state laws forbade sales of intoxicants. And this was recognized by the long line of decisions (a few of the leading cases are in the margin<sup>3</sup>) which upheld that law, and pointed out that it permitted the state prohibitions to take away from interstate commerce shipments a right which they otherwise would have embraced; that is, the right to sell after receipt in the original package, any state law to the contrary notwithstanding. At the same time it was recognized, however, that as the right to receive liquor was not affected by the Wilson Act, such receipt and the possession following from it and the resulting right to use remained protected by the commerce clause even in a state where what is known as the dispensary system prevailed. Vance v. W. A. Vandercook Co. 170 U. S. 438, 42 L. ed. 1100, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 674. Reading the Webb-Kenyon Law in the light thus thrown upon it by the Wilson Act and the decision of this court which sustained and applied it, there is no room for doubt that it was enacted simply to extend that which was done by the Wilson Act; that is to say, its purpose was to prevent the immunity characteristic of interstate commerce from being used to permit the receipt of liquor through such commerce in states contrary to their laws, and thus in effect afford a means by subterfuge and indirection to set such laws at naught. In this light it is clear that the Webb-Kenyon Act, if effect is to be given to its text, but operated so as to cause the prohibitions of the West Virginia law against shipment, receipt, and possession to be applicable and controlling irrespective of whether the state law did or did not prohibit the individual use of liquor. That such also was the embodied spirit of the Webb-Kenyon Act plainly appears, since, if that be not true, the coming into being of the act is wholly inexplicable.

<sup>3</sup> Van Winkle v. State, 4 Boyce (Del.) 578, 91 Atl. 385, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 104; Adams Exp. Co. v. Com. 154 Ky. 462, 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 342, 157 S. W. 908; Adams Exp. Co. v. Com. 160 Ky. 66, 169 S. W. 603; Palmer v. Southern Exp. Co. 129 Tenn. 116, 165 S. W. 236; Ex parte Peede, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 170 S. W. 749. L.R.A. 1917B.

<sup>3</sup> Re Rahrer, 140 U. S. 545, 35 L. ed. 572, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 865; Rhodes v. Iowa, 170 U. S. 412, 42 L. ed. 1088, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 664; American Exp. Co. v. Iowa, 196 U. S. 133, 49 L. ed. 417, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 182; Pabst Brewing Co. v. Crenshaw, 198 U. S. 17, 49 L. ed. 925, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 552; Rosenberger v. Pacific Exp. Co. 241 U. S. 48, 60 L. ed. 880, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 510.

The case in this court relied upon to establish the contrary (Adams Exp. Co. v. Kentucky, 238 U. S. 190, 59 L. ed. 1267, L.R.A.1916C, 273, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 824, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 1187) clearly does not do so. All that was decided in that case was that, as the court of last resort of Kentucky, into which liquor had been shipped, had held that the state statute did not forbid shipment and receipt of liquor for personal use, therefore the Webb-Kenyon Act did not apply, since it only applied to things which the state law prohibited. The leading state case cited is Van Winkle v. State, 4 Boyce (Del.) 578, 91 Atl. 385, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 104. It is true in that case the state law prohibited shipment to and receipt of intoxicants in local-option territory, and if the Webb-Kenyon Law had been applied, there would have been no possible ground for claiming that the state prohibitions could be escaped because the liquor was shipped in interstate commerce. But the shipment was held to be protected as interstate commerce despite the state prohibition because the Webb-Kenyon Law was not correctly applied, for the following reason: Coming to consider the text of that law, the court said that as the Webb-Kenyon Act prohibited the shipment of intoxicants "only when liquor is intended to be used in violation of the law of the state," and as the liquor shipped was intended for personal use, which was not forbidden, therefore the shipment, although prohibited by the state law, was beyond the reach of the Webb-Kenyon Act. But we see no ground for following the ruling thus made, since, as we have already pointed out, it necessarily rested upon an entire misconception of the text of the Webb-Kenyon Act, because that act did not simply forbid the introduction of liquor into a state for a prohibited use, but took the protection of interstate commerce away from all receipt and possession of liquor prohibited by state law.

The movement of liquor in interstate commerce and the receipt and possession and right to sell prohibited by the state law having been in express terms divested by the Webb-Kenyon Act of their interstate commerce character, it follows that if that act was within the power of Congress to adopt, there is no possible reason for holding that to enforce the prohibitions of the state law would conflict with the commerce clause of the Constitution; and this brings us to the last question, which is:

4. Did Congress have power to enact the Webb-Kenyon Law?

We are not unmindful that opinions adverse to the power of Congress to enact the law were formed and expressed in other departments of the government. Opinion of the Attorney General, 30 Ops. Atty. Gen. 88; Veto Message of the President, 49 Cong. Rec. 4291. We are additionally conscious, therefore, of the responsibility of determining these issues and of their serious character.

It is not in the slightest degree disputed that if Congress had prohibited the shipment of all intoxicants in the channels of interstate commerce, and therefore had prevented all movement between the several states, such action would have been lawful, because within the power to regulate which the Constitution conferred. Lottery Case (Champion v. Ames) 188 U. S. 321, 47 L. ed. 492, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 321, 13 Am. Crim. Rep. 561; Hoke v. United States, 227 U. S. 308, 57 L. ed. 523, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 906, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 905. The issue, therefore, is not one of an absence of authority to accomplish in substance a more extended result than that brought about by the Webb-Kenyon Law, but of a want of power to reach the result accomplished because of the method resorted to for that purpose. This is certain since the sole claim is that the act was not within the power given to Congress to regulate because it submitted liquors to the control of the states by subjecting interstate commerce in such liquors to present and future state prohibitions, and hence, in the nature of things, was wanting in uniformity. Let us test the contentions by reason and authority.

The power conferred is to regulate, and the very terms of the grant would seem to repel the contention that only prohibition of movement in interstate commerce was embraced. And the cogency of this is manifest since, if the doctrine were applied to those manifold and important subjects of interstate commerce as to which Congress from the beginning has regulated, not prohibited, the existence of government under the Constitution would be no longer possible.

The argument as to delegation to the states rests upon a mere misconception. It is true the regulation which the Webb-Kenyon Act contains permits state prohibitions to apply to movements of liquor from one state into another, but the will which causes the prohibitions to be applicable is that Congress, since the application of state prohibitions would cease the instant the act of Congress ceased to apply. In fact, the contention previously made, that the prohibitions of the state law were not applicable to the extent that they were broader than the Webb-Kenyon Act, is in direct conflict with the proposition as to delegation now made.

So far as uniformity is concerned, there is no question that the act uniformly applies to the conditions which call its provisions into play,—that its provisions apply to all the states,—so that the question really is a complaint as to the want of uniform existence of things to which the act applies, and not to an absence of uniformity in the act itself. But, aside from this, it is obvious that the argument seeks to engraft upon the Constitution a restriction not found in it; that is, that the power to regulate conferred upon Congress obtains subject to the requirement that regulations enacted shall be uniform throughout the United States. In view of the conceded power on the part of Congress to prohibit the movement of intoxicants in interstate commerce, we cannot admit that because it did not exert its authority to the full limit, but simply regulated to the extent of permitting the prohibitions in one state to prevent the use of interstate commerce to ship liquor from another state, Congress exceeded its authority to regulate. We can see, therefore, no force in the argument relied upon tested from the point of view of reason, and we come to the question of authority.

It is settled, says the argument, that interstate commerce is divided into two great classes, one embracing subjects which do not exact uniformity, and which, although subject to the regulation of Congress, are, in the absence of such regulation, subject to the control of the several states (Coolley v. Port Wardens, 12 How. 299, 13 L. ed. 996), and the other embracing subjects which do require uniformity, and which, in the absence of regulation by Congress, remain free from all state control (Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 34 L. ed. 128, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 36, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681). As to the first, it is said, Congress may, when regulating, to the extent it deems wise to do so, permit state legislation enacted or to be enacted to govern, because to do so would only be to do that which would exist if nothing had been done by Congress. As to the second class, the argument is, that in adopting regulations Congress is wholly without power to provide for the application of state power to any degree whatever, because, in the absence of the exertion by Congress of power to regulate, the subject matter would have been free from state control; and because, besides, the recognition of state power under such circumstances would be to bring about a want of uniformity. But granting the accuracy of the two classifications which the proposition states, the limitation upon the power of Congress to regulate which is deduced from the classifications finds no support in the authority relied upon to sustain it. Let us see if this is not the case by examining the authority relied upon. What is that authority? The ruling in Leisy v. Hardin, supra. But that case, instead of supporting the contention, plainly refutes it for the following reason: Although Leisy v. Hardin declared in express terms that the movement of intoxicants in interstate commerce belonged to that class which was free from all interference by state control in the absence of regulation by Congress, it was at the same time in the most explicit terms declared that the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce in intoxicants embraced the right to subject such movement to state prohibitions, and that the freedom of intoxicants to move in interstate commerce and the protection over it from state control arose only from the absence of congressional regulation, and would endure only until Congress had otherwise provided. Thus in that case, in pointing out that the movement of intoxicants in interstate commerce was under the control of Congress despite the wide scope of the police authority of the state over the subject, it was said (p. 108): "Yet a subject matter which has been confided exclusively to Congress by the Constitution is not within the jurisdiction of the police power of the state, unless placed there by congressional action." Again, referring to the uniform operation of interstate commerce regulations, it was said (p. 109): "Hence, inasmuch as interstate commerce, consisting in the transportation, purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities, is national in its character, and must be governed by a uniform system, so long as Congress does not pass any law to regulate it, or allowing the states so to do, it thereby indicates its will that such commerce shall be free and untrammelled." Further the court said (p. 119): "The conclusion follows that, as the grant of the power to regulate commerce among the states, so far as one system is required, is exclusive, the states cannot exercise that power without the assent of Congress." Again, after pointing out that the question of the prohibition of manufacture and sale of particular articles was a matter of state concern, it was said (p. 123): "But, notwithstanding it is not vested with supervisory power over matters of local administration, the responsibility is upon Congress, so far as the regulation of interstate commerce is concerned, to remove the restriction upon the state in dealing with imported articles of trade within its limits, which have not been mingled with the common mass of property therein, if, in its judgment, the end to be secured justifies and requires such action." And finally, after pointing out that the states had no power to interfere with the movement of goods in interstate commerce before they had been commingled with the property of the state, it was said that this limitation obtained "in the absence of congressional permission" to the state (p. 124).

Thus it follows that although we accept the classification of interstate commerce in intoxicants made in Leisy v. Hardin, we could not accept the contention which is now based upon that classification without in effect overruling that case, or, what is equivalent thereto, refusing to give effect to the doctrine of that case announced in terms so certain that there is no room for controversy or contention concerning them. But we would be required to go further than this, since it would result that we would have to shut our eyes to the construction put upon the ruling in Leisy v. Hardin by Congress in legislating when it adopted the Wilson Act, and also to practically overrule the line of decisions which we have already referred to sustaining and enforcing that act. Let us see if this is not certain. As we have already pointed out, the very regulation made by Congress in enacting the Wilson Law to minimize the evil resulting from violating prohibitions of state law by sending liquor through interstate commerce into a state, and selling it in violation of such law, was to divest such shipments of their interstate commerce character and to strip them of the right to be sold in the original package free from state authority which otherwise would have obtained. And that Congress had the right to enact this legislation making existing and future state prohibitions applicable was the express result of the decided cases to which we have referred, beginning with Re Rahrer, 140 U. S. 545, 35 L. ed. 572, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 865. As the power to regulate which was manifested in the Wilson Act, and that which was exerted in enacting the Webb-Kenyon Law, are essentially identical, the one being but a larger degree of exertion of the identical power which was brought into play in the other, we are unable to understand upon what principle we could hold that the one was not a regulation without holding that the other had the same infirmity,—a result which, as we have previously said, would reverse Leisy v. Hardin and overthrow the many adjudications of this court sustaining the Wilson Act.

L.R.A.1917B.

These considerations dispose of the contention, but we do not stop with stating them, but recur again to the reason of things for the purpose of pointing out the fundamental error upon which the contention rests. It is this: the mistaken assumption that the accidental considerations which cause a subject, on the one hand, to come under state control in the absence of congressional regulation, and other subjects, on the contrary, to be free from state control until Congress has acted, are the essential criteria by which to test the question of the power of Congress to regulate and the mode in which the exertion of that power may be manifested. The two things are widely different, since the right to regulate and its scope and the mode of exertion must depend upon the power possessed by Congress over the subject regulated. Following the unerring path pointed out by that great principle we can see no reason for saying that although Congress, in view of the nature and character of intoxicants, had a power to forbid their movement in interstate commerce, it had not the authority to so deal with the subject as to establish a regulation (which is what was done by the Webb-Kenyon) making it impossible for one state to violate the prohibitions of the laws of another through the channels of interstate commerce. Indeed, we can see no escape from the conclusion that if we accepted the proposition urged, we would be obliged to announce the contradiction in terms that because Congress had exerted a regulation lesser in power than it was authorized to exert, therefore its action was void for excess of power. Or, in other words, stating the necessary result of the argument from a concrete consideration of the particular subject here involved, that because Congress, in adopting a regulation, had considered the nature and character of our dual system of government, state and nation, and instead of absolutely prohibiting, had so conformed its regulation as to produce co-operation between the local and national forces of government to the end of preserving the rights of all, it had thereby transcended the complete and perfect power of regulation conferred by the Constitution. And it is well again to point out that this abnormal result to which the argument leads concerns a subject as to which both state and nation, in their respective spheres of authority, possessed the supremest authority before the action of Congress which is complained of; and hence the argument virtually comes to the assertion that, in some undisclosed way, by the exertion of congressional authority, power possessed has evaporated.

It is only necessary to point out that the considerations which we have stated dispose of all contentions that the Webb-Kenyon Act is repugnant to the due process clause of the 5th Amendment, since what we have said concerning that clause in the 14th Amendment as applied to state power is decisive.

Before concluding, we come to consider what we deem to be arguments of inconvenience which are relied upon; that is, the dread expressed that the power by regulation to allow state prohibitions to attach to the movement of intoxicants lays the basis for subjecting interstate commerce in all articles to state control, and therefore destroys the Constitution. The want of force in the suggested inconvenience becomes patent by considering the principle which, after all, dominates and controls the question here presented; that is, the subject regulated and the extreme power to which that subject may be subjected. The fact that regulations of liquor have been upheld in numberless instances which would have been repugnant to the great guaranties of the Constitution but for the enlarged right possessed by government to regulate liquor has never, that we are aware of, been taken as affording the basis for the thought that government might exert an enlarged power as to subjects to which, under the constitutional guaranties, such enlarged power could not be applied. In other words, the exceptional nature of the subject here regulated is that basis upon which the exceptional power exerted must rest, and affords no ground for any fear that such power may be constitutionally extended to things which it may not, consistently with the guaranties of the Constitution, embrace.

Affirmed.

Mr. Justice McReynolds concurs in the result.

Mr. Justice Holmes and Mr. Justice Van Devanter dissent.

Annotation—Constitutionality, construction, and effect of Webb-Kenyon Act.

The Webb-Kenyon Act is discussed in the note in L.R.A.1916C, 299 et seq. Since the date of that note it has been held, in accord with the rule of the earlier cases, that the act removes the protection of the interstate commerce clause only from shipments intended to be received, possessed, sold, or in any manner used, in violation of the local law. Accordingly, it being alleged in an action of replevin brought to recover the possession of intoxicating liquor which had been seized by a state officer, while still in the possession of the carrier, that the consignees did not intend to receive, possess, sell, or in any manner use the liquor in violation of a state law, but each would have used the same in compliance therewith, and there being no sufficient evidence to the contrary, it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the liquor. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Giles (1916) 235 Fed. 804. The only fact relied upon for the purpose of showing that the consignee intended to receive the liquor in violation of the state act was that there was a failure to place on each package an inscription that the package contained intoxicating liquor. The court further holds that the state had no power to enact a statute requiring the marking of interstate shipments, first, because Congress had enacted a law in regard thereto, and second independently of this, the subject was not a proper one for state action.

It is stated in Brennen v. Southern Exp. Co. (1916) — S. C. —, 90 S. E. 402, that while the Webb-Kenyon Act does divest of their interstate character intoxicating liquors shipped into a state in violation of its laws, and withdraw from them the protection of interstate commerce, it evidently contemplates the violation of valid state laws only. The court was accordingly of the opinion that in the case of a prosecution for importing liquor into the state in violation of a state law that was invalid, because it made injurious discriminations against the products of other states, the Webb-Kenyon Act had no application.

The court in Brennen v. Southern Exp. Co. (S. C.) supra, holds that a statute which, by implication, at least, prohibited the receipt for personal use of more than a certain quantity within a stated time, was invalid for unlawful discrimination, while the state was engaged in the dispensary business, selling intoxicating liquors in unlimited quantities to any person who desired to purchase, but that, after the repeal of the dispensary statute and the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors, the statute thus preventing the importation became valid. (See, in this connection, the note to Atkinson v. Southern Exp. Co. 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 349, as to the effect of the removal of constitutional objections to a statute.)

It was held in the Brennen Case, in reviewing a prosecution under a state statute which prohibited the importation of liquor, but provided that a person might receive for personal use a quantity not exceeding 1 gallon within any calendar month, that the Webb-Kenyon Law is applicable to shipments intended only for personal use, provided such shipments and the receipt, possession, or use of the liquor be in violation of state law. In other words, the Webb-Kenyon Act removed any objection to the prohibition of importation for personal use, arising from the interstate commerce clause of the Federal Constitution. The court then considers the question of whether the state has the power to regulate and control the personal use of intoxicating liquor by its citizens, and concludes that it has such power. This latter question, of course, is not considered exhaustively in these notes.

In State v. Selsor (1916) — La. —, 73 So. 270, the Webb-Kenyon Act was held to authorize the application of a statute making it unlawful for any person to use the name of another in ordering or receiving shipments of intoxicating liquor in prohibited territory to shipments from without the state.

It not being shown that the defendant did not intend to use the liquor in violation of the laws of the state, the court in State v. Selsor (La.) supra, seems to have assumed that it was to be so used, in order to bring it within the operation of the Webb-Kenyon Act. Such an assumption seems unnecessary in this case, in view of the fact that the "receipt" of the liquor was made an offense by the statute involved.

It was urged in State v. Selsor (La.) supra, that a citizen cannot constitutionally be prohibited from keeping intoxicating liquor for his own use, and that if the Webb-Kenyon Act is to be given a construction that will justify such a law, it is unconstitutional. It not being proved that the defendant ordered or received the liquor for his own use, the court states that the admission that he stands charged with six other similar offenses suggests the contrary. After stating this, the court overrules the argument that the Webb-Kenyon Act is unconstitutional, stating that the act is presumed to be constitutional, and no case is cited by defendant to sustain his contention to the contrary.

The holding in Glenn v. Southern Exp. Co. (1915) 170 N. C. 286, L.R.A. —, —, 87 S. E. 136, with reference to the validity of the Webb-Kenyon Act, is followed in State v. Little (1916) 171 N. C. 805, 88 S. E. 723.

The Webb-Kenyon Act is held not invalid as an attempt to confer upon the state the power to regulate interstate commerce, in Brennen v. Southern Exp. Co. (1916) — S. C. —, 90 S. E. 402.

The constitutionality of the act is now finally settled by the decision of the United States Supreme Court in JAMES CLARK DISTILLING CO. v. WESTERN MARYLAND R. CO. ante, 1218.

W. A. E.

ARIZONA SUPREME COURT.

W. J. STURGEON, Appt.,
v.

STATE OF ARIZONA.

(17 Ariz. 513, 154 Pac. 1050.)

Intoxicating liquors — prohibiting introduction into state for personal use — validity.

1. A constitutional prohibition of the introduction of intoxicating liquor into the state, under penalty, cannot prevent its introduction for mere possession or personal use, where such possession or use is not otherwise made unlawful, under the Webb-Kenyon Act, prohibiting the transporting from one state to another of intoxicating liquor intended to be received, possessed, sold, or in any manner used in violation of the state law.

For other cases, see Commerce, IV. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Indictment — duplicity — words not in Constitution.

2. An information charging bringing and introducing intoxicating liquor into the state in violation of the Constitution is not bad for duplicity, although the Constitution merely prohibits the introduction of such liquor, since the words are synonymous.

For other cases, see Indictment, etc., II. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — failure to negative exceptions.

3. An information for introducing intoxicating liquor into the state is not bad for failure to negative a lawful use, if no exception is made by the statute under which the prosecution is instituted.

For other cases, see Indictment, etc., II. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Note. — For constitutionality, construction, and effect of Webb-Kenyon Act, see James Clark Distilling Co. v. Western Maryland R. Co. ante, 1218, and annotation appended thereto.
L.R.A.1917B.

Intoxicating liquor — forbidding introduction into state — claim of proper use — liability.

4. A mere claim that one bringing intoxicating liquor into the state in violation of a constitutional prohibition intended it for personal use will not defeat a prosecution, but the question of his liability vel non depends upon the use to which the liquor is actually intended to be put.

For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, III. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 12, 1916.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Yuma County, convicting him of bringing and introducing into the state intoxicating liquors. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Wupperman & Wupperman for appellant.

Messrs. Wiley E. Jones, Attorney General, Leslie C. Hardy, George W. Harben, Assistant Attorneys General, John H. Campbell and S. L. Kingan, for appellee:

The amendment intended to prohibit the use of intoxicating liquors.

Southern Exp. Co. v. Whittle, 104 Ala. 406, L.R.A.1916C, 278, 69 So. 652; Re Crane, 27 Idaho, 671, L.R.A.—, —, 151 Pac. 1006; Atkinson v. Southern Exp. Co. 94 S. C. 444, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 349, 78 S. E. 516; Glenn v. Southern Exp. Co. 170 N. C. 286, L.R.A.—, —, 87 S. E. 136.

Prohibiting the use of intoxicating liquors is a valid police regulation.

Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; Purity Extract & Tonic Co. v. Lynch, 226 U. S. 192, 57 L. ed. 184, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 44; Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U. S. 104, 55 L. ed. 112, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1062, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 186, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 487; Foster v. Kansas, 112 U. S. 201, 28 L. ed. 629, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 897; Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 25, 24 L. ed. 989; Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S. 1, 32 L. ed. 346, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 232, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 6; Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U. S. 91, 34 L. ed. 620, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 13; Marks v. State, 159 Ala. 71, 133 Am. St. Rep. 20, 48 So. 864; State v. Phillips, 109 Miss. 22, L.R.A.1915D, 530, 67 So. 651; Lincoln v. Smith, 27 Vt. 328; Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 38 L. ed. 385, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499; New York ex rel. Silz v. Hesterberg, 211 U. S. 31, 53 L. ed. 75, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 10; Patsone v. Pennsylvania, 232 U. S. 138, 58 L. ed. 539, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281; Booth v. Illinois, 184 U. S. 426, 46 L. ed. 625, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 425; Otis v. Parker, 187 U. S. 607, 47 L. ed. 326, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 168; Murphy v. L.R.A.1917B.

California, 225 U. S. 623, 56 L. ed. 1229, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 153, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 697; Re Rahrer, 140 U. S. 545, 35 L. ed. 572, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 865.

The bare introduction or attempted introduction of intoxicating liquors into the state of Arizona constitutes an offense, and, within the meaning of the Webb-Kenyon Act, is unlawful.

Adams Exp. Co. v. Com. 154 Ky. 462, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 342, 157 S. W. 908; West Virginia v. Adams Exp. Co. L.R.A.1916C, 291, 135 C. C. A. 464, 219 Fed. 794.

The real purpose of prohibiting legislation is to prevent personal use of liquor.

Lincoln v. Smith, 27 Vt. 328; Marx v. State, 159 Ala. 71, 133 Am. St. Rep. 20, 48 So. 864; Southern Exp. Co. v. Whittle, 194 Ala. 406, L.R.A.1916C, 278, 69 So. 652; State v. Phillips, 109 Miss. 22, L.R.A.1915D, 530, 67 So. 651; West Virginia v. Adams Exp. Co. L.R.A.1916C, 291, 135 C. C. A. 464, 219 Fed. 794; Golden & Co. v. Justice's Ct. 23 Cal. App. 778, 140 Pac. 49.

A citizen has no right to receive and possess liquors for personal use.

Southern Exp. Co. v. Whittle, 194 Ala. 406, L.R.A.1916C, 278, 69 So. 652; Glenn v. Southern Exp. Co. 170 N. C. 286, L.R.A.—, —, 87 S. E. 136; Van Winkle v. State, 4 Boyce (Del.) 578, 91 Atl. 385, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 104; Atkinson v. Southern Exp. Co. 94 S. C. 444, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 349, 78 S. E. 516; State v. Davis, — W. Va. —, 87 S. E. 262.

The taking in one's personal possession of liquors, onto an Indian Reservation, or into Indian country, is an "introduction," regardless of its use.

Dick v. United States, 208 U. S. 340, 52 L. ed. 520, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 399; United States v. Sutton, 215 U. S. 291, 54 L. ed. 200, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 116; Hallowell v. United States, 221 U. S. 317, 55 L. ed. 750, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 587; McSpadden v. United States, 140 C. C. A. 413, 224 Fed. 935.

Per Curiam:

The appellant was tried and convicted under an information that charged him with bringing and introducing into the state of Arizona from outside the limits of said state intoxicating liquor, to wit, one quart of wine. He demurred to the information on the ground that it did not negative that it was introduced for his personal use. The demurrer was overruled. On the trial he offered to prove that he brought the intoxicating liquor into the state for his personal use. This offer of proof was denied by the court. From the judgment of conviction this appeal is prosecuted, the appellant assigning as errors the order overruling his demurrer and the refusal of his offer of evidence of intended personal use. The question, then, as to whether one may introduce into the state of Arizona intoxicating liquors for his personal use, is squarely presented for decision.

The prohibition amendment to the Constitution (article 23, § 1) reads as follows: "Ardent spirits, ale, beer, wine, or intoxicating liquor or liquors of whatever kind shall not be manufactured in or introduced into the state of Arizona under any pretense. Every person who sells, exchanges, gives, barter, or disposes of any ardent spirits, ale, beer, wine, or intoxicating liquor of any kind to any person in the state of Arizona, or who manufactures, or introduces into, or attempts to introduce into the state of Arizona any ardent spirits, ale, beer, wine, or intoxicating liquor of any kind, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be imprisoned for not less than ten days nor more than two years and fined not less than $25 and costs nor more than $300 and costs for each offense; provided, that nothing in this amendment contained shall apply to the manufacture or sale of denatured alcohol."

Three crimes are defined and denounced by this section: (1) The traffic in intoxicating liquors; (2) the manufacture of intoxicating liquors; and (3) the introducing or attempt to introduce into the state of intoxicating liquors.

The offense with which the appellant is charged falls within the third class. It is his contention that the provision of the constitutional amendment making it a crime to introduce into the state intoxicating liquors is unconstitutional as an attempt to regulate interstate commerce. There can be no mistaking the meaning of the language used in the amendment with regard to the introduction of intoxicating liquors: it plainly and clearly attempts to forbid and punish every person "who . . . introduces into, or attempts to introduce into the state of Arizona" intoxicating liquors.

In Brown v. State, 17 Ariz. 314, 152 Pac. 578, we had occasion to refer to the source from which our prohibition amendment to the Constitution was taken. It was found to be a rescript, with such modifications as to make it applicable to the state, from the act of Congress regulating trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes.

In United States v. Holliday, 3 Wall. 407-410, 18 L. ed. 182-185, Justice Miller, in searching for the meaning of the congressional act which we adopt said:

"The act in question, although it may partake of some of the qualities of those acts passed by state legislatures, which have been referred to the police powers of the states, is, we think, still more clearly entitled to be called a regulation of commerce. 'Commerce,' says Chief Justice Marshall, in the opinion in Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 23, to which we so often turn with profit when this clause of the Constitution is under consideration, 'commerce undoubtedly is traffic but it is something more; it is intercourse.' The law before us professes to regulate traffic and intercourse with the Indian tribes. It manifestly does both. It relates to buying and selling and exchanging commodities, which is the essence of all commerce, and it regulates the intercourse between the citizens of the United States and those tribes, which is another branch of commerce, and a very important one.

"If the act under consideration is a regulation of commerce, as it undoubtedly is, does it regulate that kind of commerce which is placed within the control of Congress by the Constitution? The words of that instrument are: 'Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states, and with the Indian tribes.' Commerce with foreign nations, without doubt, means commerce between citizens of the United States and citizens or subjects of foreign governments, as individuals. And so commerce with the Indians tribes means commerce with the individuals composing those tribes. The act before us describes this precise kind of traffic or commerce, and therefore comes within the terms of the constitutional provisions."

That feature of our constitutional amendment, therefore, that undertakes to make it a crime to introduce or attempt to introduce intoxicating liquors into the state, under the Federal decisions, pertains to commerce, the regulation of which with foreign countries and between the states and with the Indian tribes is exclusively lodged in the Congress.

It has been many times decided by the courts that intoxicating liquors are subjects of interstate commerce, to be regulated by congressional legislation, and exempt from state interference. 7 Cyc. 437, and authorities under note 19; Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 34 L. ed. 128, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 36, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. F. W. Cook Brewing Co. 223 U. S. 70, 56 L. ed. 355, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 189.

Until 1890, when the Wilson Act was passed (Act Cong. Aug. 8, 1890, chap. 728, 26 Stat. at L. 313, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 8738), the interstate character of intoxicating liquors had been considered and treated as that of other commodities of interstate traffic. Thus, it has been held that a state prohibition law did not reach or affect intoxicating liquors as long as they remained in the original package. Leisy v. Hardin; 135 U. S. 100, 34 L. ed. 128, 3

Inters. Com. Rep. 36, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681. The Wilson Act worked a radical change in the law, and therefore those decisions rendered by the United States courts prior to its enactment are no longer applicable and need not be considered in determining the power of the state to suppress the liquor traffic. Under the Wilson Act, intoxicating liquors when imported into one state from another, immediately upon delivery to the consignee, whether in the original package or not, become subject to the law of the state. As was said in Delameter v. South Dakota, 205 U. S. 93, 51 L. ed. 724, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 447, 10 Ann. Cas. 733: "In other words, that Congress, sedulous to prevent its exclusive right to regulate commerce from interfering with the power of the states over intoxicating liquor, by the Wilson Act adopted a special rule enabling the states to extend their authority as to such liquor shipped from other states before it became commingled with the mass of other property in the state by a sale in the original package."

The Wilson Act did not devert, or attempt to devert, intoxicating liquors of their interstate commerce character further than to make them subject to the local laws, at an earlier date. Prohibition in one state was no impediment, under the Wilson Act, to the shipping or transporting of intoxicating liquors therein, and the interstate traffic in intoxicating liquors, it is well known, continued to thrive and prosper with little abatement in "dry" territory, notwithstanding the Wilson Act.

If it be held that the introduction clause of the amendment is effective, it can only be on account of decided changes wrought in the Federal laws in regard to interstate shipments of intoxicating liquors. Before the passage of the Webb-Kenyon Act, under all the decisions it would be ineffectual, and the question is: How far and to what extent does the Webb-Kenyon Act alter the law as it formerly existed? That act, including its title, passed on March 1, 1913, omitting extraneous words, reads as follows:

An Act Devesting Intoxicating Liquors of Their Interstate Character in Certain Cases.
 . . . The shipment or transportation . . . of . . . intoxicating liquor,
 . . . from one state . . . into any other state, . . . which . . . intoxicating liquor is intended, by any person interested therein, to be received, possessed, sold, or in any manner used, either in the original package or otherwise, in violation of any law of such state, . . . is hereby prohibited. 37 Stat. at L. 699, chap. 90, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 8730.

As to the purpose and meaning of the L.R.A.1917B.

Webb-Kenyon Act, we fall back upon the opinion of the United States Supreme Court, as expressed by Justice Day, in Adams Exp. Co. v. Kentucky, 238 U. S. 190-198, 59 L. ed. 1267-1270, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 826, L.R.A. 1916C, 273, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 1167:

"That the act did not assume to deal with all interstate commerce shipments of intoxicating liquors into prohibitory territory in the states is shown in its title, which expresses the purpose to devert intoxicating liquors of their interstate character in certain cases. What such cases should be was left to the text of the act to develop. . . .

"It would be difficult to frame language more plainly indicating the purpose of Congress not to prohibit all interstate shipment or transportation of liquor into so-called dry territory, and to render the prohibition of the statute operative only where the liquor is to be dealt with in violation of the local law of the state into which it is thus shipped or transported. Such shipments are prohibited only when such person interested intends that they shall be possessed, sold, or used in violation of any law of the state wherein they are received. Thus far and no farther has Congress seen fit to extend the prohibitions of the act in relation to interstate shipments. Except as affected by the Wilson Act, which permits the state laws to operate upon liquors after termination of the transportation to the consignee, and the Webb-Kenyon Act, which prohibits the transportation of liquors into the state, to be dealt with therein in violation of local law, the subject matter of such interstate shipment is left untouched and remains within the sole jurisdiction of Congress under the Federal Constitution." (Italics ours.)

In Ghera v. State, 16 Ariz. 344, 146 Pac. 494, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 94, we said, concerning the prohibition amendment: "Evidently the main purpose and controlling principle pervading the amendment is to prohibit the manufacture in Arizona, and to prohibit the disposal thereof to any person in Arizona in any way, of ardent spirits, ale, beer, wine, or intoxicating liquor of any kind. It is not questioned in this case that the state may, in the proper exercise of its police powers, enact such legislation. The power to regulate, restrain, or prohibit whatever is injurious to the public health and morals is universally recognized."

It being settled that traffic in intoxicating liquor in this state is a crime, it follows that the shipment, transportation, or introduction of intoxicating liquor into the state with the intention to sell, barter, exchange, give away, or dispose of, devert, under the Webb-Kenyon Act, such intoxicating liquor of its interstate commerce character, and leaves the state free in the exercise of its police powers to denounce such introduction as a crime and to prescribe penalties for its commission. In other words, one who introduces intoxicating liquor into the state with the purpose and intention of violating the laws of the state by disposing of the same may not now interpose the defense that he is engaged in interstate commerce, for the reason that the article that he is handling has been divested of its interstate character by the Webb-Kenyon Act. Intoxicating liquor in the aspect of being "received, possessed, or sold, or in some way used in a manner prohibited by the laws of the state into which [it] is to be, or is in fact, imported," is an outlaw and divested of its interstate character and withdrawn from interstate protection at the hands of the Federal government. Southern Exp. Co. v. State, 188 Ala. 454, 66 So. 115. We quote further from the same case: "For the reasons above stated, we are of the opinion that interstate commerce cannot, since the passage by Congress of the Webb Law, be used as a subterfuge by common carriers or other corporations, firms, or persons for having in their possession or for delivering to any other person liquors intended to be used, not for lawful, but for unlawful purposes in the state. That which does not belong to commerce is within the jurisdiction of the police power of the state, and that which does belong to commerce is within the jurisdiction of the United States. Pierce v. New Hampshire, 5 How. 504, 12 L. ed. 256; Re Rahrer, 140 U. S. 545, 35 L. ed. 572, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 865. Intoxicating liquors and beverages intended for unlawful use in Alabama are, in so far as the state of Alabama is concerned, since the passage of the Webb bill, not articles of commerce, and cannot claim protection as such."

What is said by the Alabama court concerning the status of intoxicating liquor in that state fittingly applies and well defines its status in Arizona. We are of the opinion that, when any person introduces or attempts to introduce intoxicating liquor into this state with the purpose and intention of violating any law of the state, such liquor no longer "belongs to commerce" and "is within the jurisdiction of the police power of the state," and that such person may be punished for his act as for a crime.

The appellant sought to show by evidence that the liquor which he was charged with introducing into the state was for his personal use, upon the theory that the prohibition amendment to the Constitution does not denounce or define personal use of intoxicating liquors as a crime. He contends that it is not unlawful in this state L.R.A.1917B.

to have in possession or to drink intoxicating liquors; that the Webb-Kenyon Act does not divest or attempt to divest intoxicating liquors of their interstate character when shipped, transported, or introduced into the state from without the state, to be possessed or used for a lawful purpose.

Search the prohibition amendment as you will, there is no suggestion or intimation in any form contained therein prohibiting the possession or individual consumption of intoxicating liquors in Arizona. Indeed, it was freely admitted, upon the argument by counsel who appeared as amici curiæ, that it is not a crime to possess or drink intoxicating liquors in Arizona, and while the attorney general, at least in his brief, insists that the use or possession is a crime, he fails to cite us to a single instance where a prosecution has been begun in any county of the state against any person for drinking intoxicating liquor or having it in his possession. The records of the courts throughout the state evidence many prosecutions for the sale of intoxicating liquors since the prohibition amendment went into effect. It is common knowledge that personal use has been more or less prevalent throughout the state, and the effort has been, not to punish the user, but the seller thereof. The bootlegger, and not his patrons, have had the attention of the prosecuting officers of the state.

We think it is the consensus of opinion, not only of the legal profession, but of the general public, that it is not a crime to possess or drink intoxicating liquors in this state. This universal and, no doubt, correct construction of the prohibition amendment, may easily account for the lack of effort upon the part of the prosecuting officers of the state to punish for the mere drinking or possession of intoxicating liquors. So far as the enforcement of the prohibitory law is concerned, that this has been the general usage and practical construction of the law by the officers of this state may not be gainsaid and is so admitted by the attorney general. If it had been made a crime to use and possess intoxicating liquor in this state, its introduction for that purpose would relieve it of its interstate commerce character, so that its denouncement as a crime would fall within the police power of the state. Like sale and barter, then use and possession would be in violation of the laws of the state. The amici curiæ say in their brief: "Nor is there any doubt but that the people of the state by their Constitution may prohibit the use of intoxicants within the state."

Although there are some courts holding the contrary view, we are inclined to agree with counsel in this proposition. In Re

Crane, 27 Idaho, 671, L.R.A.—, —, 151 Pac. 1006, decided September 11, 1915, the court upheld a statute of Idaho making "possession" of intoxicating liquors a crime, and gave reasons in support of that judgment that appear to us to be pregnant with common sense and logic. However, it is not a question of what the law might be, but what it is. Counsel further say: "Its (the Webb-Kenyon Law) purpose was to enable the states to meet intoxicating liquors at their borders and to prevent such liquors from becoming a part of the general property of the state."

This proposition may be granted also, but the purpose of the state has so much to do with the effectiveness of the Webb-Kenyon Act as applied to its laws that the Webb-Kenyon Act may have no effect whatever, except as it may co-ordinate and dovetail with the state legislature concerning the liquor traffic. In other words, if the state takes no action towards suppressing the liquor traffic, the Webb-Kenyon Law can have no application; if it does take action, the Webb-Kenyon Law comes to its aid to the extent that the state's laws invoke its provisions and no further.

One of the cases most relied upon by the respondent is West Virginia v. Adams Exp. Co. 135 C. C. A. 464, 219 Fed. 794. However, the question we have to decide was not before that court, as will be seen from the following quotation: "We are not concerned in this case with the question whether the state legislature or the state legislature and the Congress in conjunction can forbid a citizen to drink intoxicating liquors or purchase them in another state and bring them into the state of West Virginia for his own consumption; but with the very different question whether the state may forbid the sale of liquor in its borders and make the delivery by a carrier a sale at the place of delivery, and whether the Congress can prohibit the transportation in the state by the common carrier of liquor so to be delivered contrary to the law of the state."

The real question involved in the West Virginia Case was whether the legislature of that state could change the common-law rule so as to make the place of delivery in the state the place of sale. That question was decided by the court in the affirmative.

State v. United States Exp. Co. 164 Iowa, 112, 145 N. W. 452, was an "action in equity to enjoin an alleged liquor nuisance; to enjoin defendant from distributing or delivering intoxicating liquors, or aiding in the distribution . . . thereof, contrary to law, from transporting, conveying, and carrying or distributing liquors, either in cars, wagons, or otherwise, contrary to law, L.R.A.1917B.

in Wapello county, Iowa. . . . The defendant answered, pleading in substance that it is a common carrier, engaged in interstate commerce." The injunction prayed for was granted, but, in the course of the opinion, the court said: "Eliminating, as we must for the purposes of this case, the question as to an interstate shipment for the personal use of the buyer and the consignee, there is no room for doubt as to the proper interpretation of the act."

Palmer v. Southern Exp. Co. 129 Tenn. 116, 165 S. W. 236, was a case involving the construction of the prohibition laws of Tennessee in conjunction with the Webb-Kenyon Act. The court said: "It is perceived that the thing which the act prohibits is the interstate shipment or transportation of the liquors mentioned therein, when 'intended by any person interested therein, to be received, possessed, sold, or in any manner used, either in the original package or otherwise, in violation of any law of' the state, etc., into which the shipment is made.

"It is enough to say, for the disposition of the case before us, that it does not appear that the liquors shipped were intended to be sold or used in violation of any law of the state; and therefore the act does not apply to the present controversy. It appears from the facts stated in the bill, confessed by the demurrer, and agreed to on the record at the hearing in the court below, that the liquors were purchased for the personal use of complainant and his family. This was a lawful use, and indeed permitted by the statute in question."

Adams Exp. Co. v. Kentucky, 238 U. S. 194, 59 L. ed. 1268, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 824, L.R.A.1916C, 273, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 1167, was heard in the court of appeals of Kentucky upon a stipulation: "That the liquors were intended by said consignees for their personal use and were so used by them, and were not intended by them to be sold contrary to law, and were not so sold by them."

That court speaking of this stipulation, said: "This being the purpose for which the liquor was intended to be received, possessed, and used, it is clear that the consignees who received from the carrier the liquor did not, in so doing, violate or intend to violate any law of this state, because there is not and never has been any law of this state that prohibited the citizen from purchasing, where it was lawful to sell it, intoxicating liquor for his personal use, or from having in his possession for such use liquor so purchased. . . . 'It therefore appears that the issue in this case really comes down to this: Was the liquor involved in this transaction intended by any person interested therein to be received, possessed, sold, or in any manner used in violation of any law of this state? It is shown by the agreed state of facts, when considered in the light of the Constitution and laws of the state, and the opinions of this court, that it was not."

The Supreme Court of the United States, taking the above-recited facts found in the opinion of the court of appeals of Kentucky as true, made the following deduction: "It therefore follows that, inasmuch as the facts of this case show that the liquor was not to be used in violation of the laws of the state of Kentucky, as such laws are construed by the highest court of that state, the Webb-Kenyon Law has no application and no effect to change the general rule that the states may not regulate commerce wholly interstate."

The Kentucky prohibitory statute made it unlawful to bring into, deliver, or distribute into local option districts intoxicating liquors. It can readily be seen that its features pertaining to interstate commerce are very similar to our constitutional amendment in that regard. The facts stipulated are identical with those that the appellant offered to prove as a defense in this case. The bearing of the Webb-Kenyon Act upon the two cases, it may be said, is identical. Counsel have not attempted to distinguish this case from the Adams Exp. Co. Case, but offer to suggest that, if this court determines that personal use or possession of intoxicating liquors in this state is unlawful, its decision will not be disturbed by the Supreme Court of the United States. If we had any predilection in the case, it would have to yield to the law. We must announce the law as we find it and may not judicially legislate. Legislation is the function of a separate department of the government.

In so far as the decision in Adams Exp. Co. v. Kentucky has influenced our determination, we wish it to be understood that it was not the announcement of the law of the highest court of Kentucky, but of the Supreme Court of the United States, to which we have given most credence. Upon the stipulation in that case that the liquor was shipped into Kentucky for the personal use of the consignees, and such use not being a crime under the laws of Kentucky, neither that court nor the Supreme Court of the United States could have reached a different conclusion. It was upon the ascertained fact that the liquor imported into Kentucky was to be put to a use recognized as lawful in that state that the highest court of the land held that the prohibition of the Webb-Kenyon Act did not apply, and the decision by the Kentucky court is in accord with and influenced by repeated adjudications on the subject by the Federal court.

It is true the court of appeals of Kentucky went further than was necessary in that case, and quoted a dictum taken from a prior opinion of that court in which it is observed that, under the Constitution of that state, the legislature was not competent to "prohibit the citizen the right of owning or drinking liquor, when in so doing he did not offend the laws of decency by being intoxicated in public." We do not go so far in this case. It was not so decided in the Kentucky Case, and is not so decided here. We will say, however, that the Idaho court, in a well-considered case based on facts calling for a decision of the question, has held contrary to the dictum in the Kentucky Case; its decision being based, as we conceive it, upon sound, healthy, and convincing reasons and supported by a line of decisions.

We have not discussed the constitutionality of the Webb-Kenyon Act, as it was not raised by the appellant. We assume that it is constitutional; it has been so decided to be by many of the state courts and the Federal circuit and district courts.

The evil that all liquor laws are directed toward is the drink habit. But two states, so far as we have been able to discover, have taken decisive and drastic steps to that end by forbidding to their citizens the right to possess or drink intoxicating liquors. These two states are Idaho and South Carolina. The highest court of the former state has held the law a proper exercise of its police power. Re Crane, 27 Idaho, 671, L.R.A. —, —, 151 Pac. 1006. The South Carolina law was passed in 1915 and has not been before the courts to our knowledge. While legislation has been directed to suppress the traffic in liquor, it is apparent that a sale of liquor is in itself harmless; neither can possession hurt anyone,—it is the use of it that is deleterious to the individual and society, and thus sanctions prohibiting liquor laws as an exercise of police regulations established by the lawmaking power for the prevention of intemperance, pauperism, and crime.

It not being unlawful in the state of Arizona to have or personally use intoxicating liquor, its introduction into the state for personal use is not prohibited by the Webb-Kenyon Act, and the prohibition amendment, in so far as it attempts to interdict its shipment, transportation, or introduction into the state for a lawful purpose, is ineffectual as an attempt to regulate interstate commerce. It follows that the lower court committed error in refusing appellant's offer of evidence to show that he had brought the liquor into the state for his personal use.

The charging part of the information filed by the county attorney is as follows, to wit: "The said W. J. Sturgeon, on or about the 14th day of August, 1915, and before the filing of this information, at and in the county of Yuma, state of Arizona, did then and there wilfully and unlawfully bring and introduce into the state of Arizona, from outside the limits of said state, intoxicating liquor, to wit, one quart of wine, in violation of the provisions of the Constitution of the state of Arizona, contrary to the form, force, and effect of the statute in such cases made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the state of Arizona."

The defendant says that the information is bad for duplicity, because it charges the alleged offense of "bringing" with the offense of "introducing" intoxicating liquor into the state, the word "bring" not appearing in the prohibitory law. In answer to this, it is sufficient to say that the word "introduce," as used in the law, is not a technical word. It is one of ordinary meaning and common acceptance, and is used as such in the constitutional amendment. "Introduce" is a verb transitive, derived from the Latin words "intro," within, plus "ducere," to lead, meaning to lead or bring in. Webster's Dictionary. Introduce' (L. introduce, lead in, bring into practice, bring forward). To lead or bring in, conduct or usher in; as, to introduce foreign produce into a country. Century Dict. Introduce: To bring, lead, or put in. Standard Dict. The words "bring" and "introduce," as used in the information, are synonyms. It is a Code provision that "the words used in an indictment or information are construed in their usual acceptance in common language, except such words and phrases as are defined by law, which are construed according to their legal meaning." Penal Code 1913, § 941.

It is urged against the sufficiency of the indictment that it does not negative any exemption of a lawful use to which intoxicating liquor may be put; that under the laws of Arizona it is not unlawful for one to drink intoxicating liquor, or have such liquor in his possession for his individual consumption; therefore the information is obnoxious to a demurrer because it does not negative such possession or lawful use. The constitutional amendment does not in terms relieve any specified acts or persons from the general operation of the prohibitory words of the law, and such not entering into a description of the offense, or as a qualification of the language defining or creating the offense, a negative averment of matter of exemption is not necessary. If an exemption exists, it is a matter of de-L.R.A.1917B.

fense which the prosecution need not anticipate. Ferrell v. State, 45 Fla. 26, 34 So. 220; Com. v. Davis, 121 Mass. 352; Com. v. Shannihan, 145 Mass. 99, 13 N. E. 347; Territory v. Burns, 6 Mont. 72, 9 Pac. 432; State v. Gallagher, 20 R. I. 266, 38 Atl. 655; Re Lieritz, 166 Cal. 298, 135 Pac. 1129; People v. Dial, 28 Cal. App. 704, 153 Pac. 970; Bishop's New Crim. Law, 2d ed. ¶¶ 513-631.

The information is not objectionable on this ground. If the point is available at all, it is a matter of defense, to be taken advantage of by evidence on the trial of the case. The information is entitled in a court having authority to receive it. It was returned and presented to the court by the county attorney of the county in which the court was held. The defendant is named, and the offense charged was committed at a place within the jurisdiction of the court, and before the filing of the information. The offense charged is clearly and distinctly set forth in ordinary and concise language, and in such manner as to enable a person to common understanding to know what is intended, and the offense charged is stated with such degree of certainty as to enable the court to pronounce judgment of conviction according to the right of the case. Under the provisions of the Code, these tests determine the sufficiency of the information. Section 943, Penal Code 1913. The Code further says: "No indictment or information is insufficient, nor can the trial, judgment of other proceedings thereon be affected, by reason of any defect or imperfection in matter of form which does not tend to the prejudice of a substantial right of the defendant upon its merits." Penal Code 1913, § 944.

From these provisions of the Code, and the views which we have expressed, it follows that the information is sufficient to state a public offense under the constitutional amendment, and the demurrer was properly overruled.

From what has been said it must not be understood that the mere claim that intoxicating liquor has been brought in by one for his personal use renders such a person immune from prosecution. Anyone bringing intoxicating liquor into Arizona from outside the limits of the state does so at his peril. Whether he subjects himself to punishment or not depends on the use to which the intoxicating liquor is intended to be put. If the jury, under appropriate instructions as to what use would be a violation of the law of this state, are convinced beyond a reasonable doubt, from all the evidence and circumstances in the case, that such intoxicating liquor is intended by any person interested therein to be "received, possessed, sold, or in any manner used" in violation of any law of Arizona, it would be their duty to convict. If the use intended violates no law of this state, then no offense has been committed.

The guilt or innocence of a person so charged would become a question of fact in each case, to be determined as other disputed questions of fact are determined under the law.

The trial court erred to the prejudice of the defendant in rejecting the testimony offered as to the use to which he intended to put the liquor he is charged with unlawfully bringing into the state. The judgment of conviction must therefore be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to grant the defendant a new trial.

Before concluding, it may be properly observed that, so long as the law accords to the citizen the privilege of possessing and using intoxicating liquors for his individual consumption, this privilege may not to be used as a license to violate the law by invoking that privilege as a subterfuge for an illicit introduction or use, nor should he consider it an invitation to pass the danger line, lest he find himself wrecked, for the way of the transgressor is hard.

Reversed and remanded.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

BOB MOHA, Appt.,

v.

HUDSON BOXING CLUB.

(— Wis. —, 160 N. W. 266.)

Contract — preventing performance — forfeiture of compensation.

One contracting to box another ten rounds to a draw forfeits his right to compensation by disabling his opponent by a foul blow early in the contest, so that it cannot proceed, whether the blow was intentional or accidental.

For other cases, see Contracts, IV. c, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(December 5, 1916.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for St. Croix County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover the contract price of professional services as a boxer.

Affirmed.

Statement by Winslow, Ch. J.:

Plaintiff is a professional boxer, and sues the defendant to recover 22½ per cent of the gross receipts of a boxing contest held under the management of the club December 4, 1914, at Hudson, Wisconsin. The contract was in writing, and provided in substance that the plaintiff should box Mike Gibbons of St. Paul ten rounds "to a no decision" at the defendant's boxing arena, receiving as consideration therefor 22½ per cent of the gross receipts, together with certain transportation and hotel expenses, he to deposit with a named stakeholder $100 to guarantee that he would make the weight specified in the contract, which sum, in case of his failure to appear or enter the contest, was to belong to the defendant; that the revised Queensbury rules, as interpreted by the referee and in compliance with the laws of this state and the rules of the State Athletic Commission, should govern the contest; that the referee should be George Duffy, of Milwaukee; that if the referee should decide at any time that the plaintiff did not enter the contest in good faith, or if he discover bad faith on the part of either of the contestants, he may stop the contest, and the defendant should not pay to either contestant any part of their compensation, unless the referee believes that the other contestant was not a party to the fraud, in which case he may award to such innocent party such sum as he deems just; that the referee's decision shall be final as to fouls and as to frauds, and as to the amount he may award in case of frauds.

It appeared on the trial that the contest began, and that during the second round the referee decided that the plaintiff had struck a foul blow, i. e., a blow below the belt, and stopped the contest. Neither side introduced in evidence the revised Queensbury rules, nor the rules of the State Athletic Commission, but the referee testified that the rules prohibit the striking of a foul blow, and that he stopped the contest because the other man was disabled by the foul blow. There was some testimony by spectators to the effect that the referee decided that the plaintiff was disqualified for deliberate fouling, but the referee denied this, and the jury found in answer to the single question submitted to them that the referee did not decide and announce that the plaintiff was disqualified for a deliberate foul. The plaintiff attempted to prove by the referee that, in case a contest of this kind is stopped at any time, even as early as the second round, by one of the boxers being knocked out or being disabled by an accidental foul, it was customary among the boxing profession to com-

Note.—The general subject of intervening impossibility of performance of contract as a defense is treated in the annotation following Runyan v. Culver, L.R.A.1916F, 10. L.R.A.1917B.

sider it a contest notwithstanding that fact, but the testimony was not admitted. The trial court held that the plaintiff had failed to perform his contract, and hence could not recover. From this judgment, plaintiff appealed.

Messrs. Hannan, Johnson, & Goldschmidt for appellant.

Mr. Spencer Haven for respondent.

Winslow, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff sues to recover the contract price of his professional services. In order to succeed he must show at least substantial performance of his contract. It is certain that there has been none here. He contracted to box ten rounds under certain rules. At the outset of the contest, in the middle of the second round, he violated one of the rules, and as a result thereof disabled his opponent, and thus by his own act made substantial performance impossible. Whether this act was deliberate or not cuts no figure. It was an act which he had contracted not to do, and it prevented performance. Jennings v. Lyons, 39 Wis. 553, 20 Am. Rep. 57. It does not seem necessary to consider other questions; the considerations suggested are decisive.

Judgment affirmed.

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

ARTHUR T. POPE, Admr., etc., of Ruth Lea Pope, Deceased, Appt.,
v.

CITY OF NEW HAVEN et al.

(— Conn. —, 99 Atl. 51.)

Municipal corporation — injury by fireworks — liability.

1. The celebration under statutory authority by a municipal corporation of Independence Day is a public governmental duty so that it is not answerable for injuries caused by the negligent handling by its employees of fireworks forming part of the entertainment, but which, if properly used, were not intrinsically dangerous. For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, II. g, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — public function.

2. Such advantage as a municipal corporation may receive from the pleasure and patriotic enthusiasm excited in its citizens by the celebration of Independence Day by a display of fireworks does not deprive the act of the municipality in giving the display, of the character of a public function. For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, II. g, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Wheeler and Roraback, JJ., dissent.)

(November 8, 1916.)

Note. — The liability of a municipal corporation for injuries by an exhibition conducted by its officers or employees is discussed in a note to Kerr v. Brookline, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 464. A search has disclosed no cases in point since the time of that note.

The liability of a municipality for personal injury on account of an exhibition permitted in a public street is treated in the notes to Wheeler v. Ft. Dodge, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 146; Van Cleef v. Chicago, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 636; and Malchow v. Leoti, L.R.A. 1915F, 568. Specifically as to liability for L.R.A. 1917B.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for New Haven County sustaining a demurrer of the defendant city to a complaint filed to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate alleged to have been caused by defendants' negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Frederick C. Russell and George E. Beers, for appellant:

The city was not performing a governmental duty.

Jones v. New Haven, 34 Conn. 1; Hewison v. New Haven, 37 Conn. 475, 9 Am. Rep. 342; Weed v. Greenwich, 45 Conn. 170; Judd v. Hartford, 72 Conn. 350, 77 Am. St. Rep. 312, 44 Atl. 510, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 434; Platt Bros. & Co. v. Waterbury, 72 Conn. 546, 48 L.R.A. 691, 77 Am. St. Rep. 335, 45 Atl. 154; Hourigan v. Norwich, 77 Conn. 364, 59 Atl. 487, 17 Am. Neg. Rep. 445; Judson v. Winsted, 80 Conn. 384, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 91, 68 Atl. 999; Water Comrs. v. Manchester, 87 Conn. 193, 87 Atl. 870, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 1105.

The form of authorization is immaterial. Greenwood v. Westport, 63 Conn. 587, 60 Fed. 560; Anderson v. Cloud County, 77 Kan. 721, 95 Pac. 583; Jones v. New Haven, 34 Conn. 1; Wallace v. Board of Revenue, 140 Ala. 491, 37 So. 321; Leeds v. Atlantic City, 81 N. J. L. 230, 80 Atl. 23; Farrell permitting the use of fireworks and explosives in public streets, see notes in 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 759; 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 643; and 42 L.R.A. (N.S.) 863.

Many specific phases of municipal liability as affected by the question whether the municipality acts in the exercise of a public or a private function are treated in annotation that may be found by consulting the Indexes to L.R.A. Notes, under the title "Municipal Corporations," subd. "Liability for damages."

v. Columbia, 50 Or. 169, 91 Pac. 546, 93 Pac. 254; Mix v. Nez Perce County, 18 Idaho, 695, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 534, 112 Pac. 215; Sample v. Pittsburg, 212 Pa. 533, 62 Atl. 201; New London v. Brainard, 22 Conn. 556; Tindley v. Salem, 137 Mass. 171, 50 Am. Rep. 289; Forget v. Montreal, Montreal L. Rep. 4 S. C. 77; Speir v. Brooklyn, 139 N. Y. 6, 21 L.R.A. 641, 36 Am. St. Rep. 664, 34 N. E. 727; Landau v. New York, 180 N. Y. 48, 105 Am. St. Rep. 709, 72 N. E. 631, 17 Am. Neg. Rep. 331; Melker v. New York, 190 N. Y. 481, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 621, 83 N. E. 565, 13 Ann. Cas. 544.

The city is liable on the facts alleged.

Bradley v. Andrews, 51 Vt. 530; Fisk v. Wait, 104 Mass. 71; Stowe v. Miles, 39 Conn. 426; Haberlin v. Boston, 190 Mass. 358, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 571, 76 N. E. 907; Walker v. New York, 107 App. Div. 351, 95 N. Y. Supp. 121, 18 Am. Neg. Rep. 578; Hoadley v. M. Seward & Son Co. 71 Conn. 646, 42 Atl. 997; Burnham v. Hotchkiss, 14 Conn. 311.

Messrs. Charles Kleiner and Henry H. Townsend, for appellee city:

The city was engaged in the performance of a public governmental function, under the authority of a public act, without any pecuniary benefit or advantage to itself; and no law or statute imposes any liability upon the city for any negligence in the performance of such governmental act.

New London v. Brainard, 22 Conn. 553; Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 344, 23 Am. Rep. 332; Judge v. Meriden, 38 Conn. 90; Mead v. New Haven, 40 Conn. 75, 16 Am. Rep. 14; Perkins v. New Haven, 53 Conn. 214, 1 Atl. 825; Daly v. New Haven, 69 Conn. 644, 38 Atl. 397, 4 Am. Neg. Rep. 15; Dyer v. Danbury, 85 Conn. 131, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 405, 81 Atl. 958, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 784; Udkin v. New Haven, 80 Conn. 296, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 868, 68 Atl. 253; Salzman v. New Haven, 81 Conn. 389, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 333, 71 Atl. 500; Greenwood v. Westport, 63 Conn. 587, 60 Fed. 560; Hewison v. New Haven, 37 Conn. 475, 9 Am. Rep. 342; Jewett v. New Haven, 38 Conn. 378, 9 Am. Rep. 382; Judd v. Hartford, 72 Conn. 353, 77 Am. St. Rep. 312, 44 Atl. 510, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 434; Platt Bros. & Co. v. Waterbury, 72 Conn. 549, 48 L.R.A. 691, 77 Am. St. Rep. 335, 45 Atl. 154; Colwell v. Waterbury, 74 Conn. 572, 57 L.R.A. 218, 51 Atl. 530; Judson v. Winsted, 80 Conn. 384, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 91, 68 Atl. 999; Kerr v. Brookline, 208 Mass. 192, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 464, 94 N. E. 257; Melker v. New York, 190 N. Y. 490, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 621, 83 N. E. 565, 13 Ann. Cas. 544; Crowley v. Rochester Fireworks Co. 183 N. Y. 353, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 330, 76 N. E. 470, 5 Ann. Cas. 538, 19 Am. L.R.A.1917B.

Neg. Rep. 441; Lincoln v. Boston, 148 Mass. 578, 3 L.R.A. 257, 12 Am. St. Rep. 601, 20 N. E. 329; Larrabee v. Peabody, 128 Mass. 561; Steele v. Boston, 128 Mass. 583; Tindley v. Salem, 137 Mass. 171, 50 Am. Rep. 289.

The principle of the nonliability of the city is the same whether the duty is imposed upon it by a general law or is granted by charter,—liability is determined by the nature of the act performed, not by the manner in which the power is conferred.

Tindley v. Salem, 137 Mass. 171, 50 Am. Rep. 289; Mead v. New Haven, 40 Conn. 75, 16 Am. Rep. 14.

The city is not liable on the ground of respondeat superior when it is engaged in the performance of a public duty.

Colwell v. Waterbury, 74 Conn. 572, 57 L.R.A. 218, 51 Atl. 530; Jewett v. New Haven, 38 Conn. 380, 9 Am. Rep. 382; Judge v. Meriden, 38 Conn. 97; Daly v. New Haven, 69 Conn. 644, 38 Atl. 397, 4 Am. Neg. Rep. 15; Houigan v. Norwich, 77 Conn. 364, 59 Atl. 487, 17 Am. Neg. Rep. 445; Hewison v. New Haven, 37 Conn. 483, 9 Am. Rep. 342; Howard v. Worcester, 153 Mass. 420, 12 L.R.A. 160, 25 Am. St. Rep. 651, 27 N. E. 11; Kerr v. Brookline, 208 Mass. 191, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 464, 94 N. E. 257.

The city violated no duty that it owed the plaintiff's intestate.

Scanlon v. Wedger, 156 Mass. 464, 16 L.R.A. 395, 31 N. E. 642; Frost v. Josselyn, 180 Mass. 392, 62 N. E. 469.

Thayer, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The complaint alleges that under authority conferred by its charter the city of New Haven made an appropriation for the purpose of the celebration of the day to be observed as Independence Day, July 5, 1915, and thereafter by way of such celebration sent up from the New Haven green in said city of New Haven certain bombs which were intended to explode in the air in such a way as to diffuse different colored lights. One of these, it is alleged, contained a fuse which was defective or damp, which fact was or ought to have been known to the city and its agents who were sending up the bombs, and was negligently sent up by them, and failed to explode in the air, but exploded after it reached the ground, and inflicted the injury complained of. The substantial ground of the city's demurrer is that the city in sending up the bomb was engaged in the performance of a public governmental duty from which it received no pecuniary benefit or advantage, and for negligence in the performance of which no statutory liability is imposed.

It is well settled in this state that municipal corporations are exempt from liability for the negligent performance of a purely public governmental duty, unless made liable by statute. Hewison v. New Haven, 37 Conn. 475, 483, 9 Am. Rep. 342; Udkin v. New Haven, 80 Conn. 291, 296, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 868, 68 Atl. 253. The question is: Was the city, in celebrating Independence Day, as alleged in the complaint, engaged in the performance of such a duty?

July 4th, or, when that date falls upon Sunday, July 5th, is made a public holiday, called Independence Day, by our statutes. All or nearly all of the other states have similar statutes. While there is no United States statute making a similar provision, the different departments of the government recognize, and have recognized since the government was established, July 4th as a national holiday. Throughout the country it has been recognized and celebrated as such. These celebrations, calculated to entertain and instruct the people generally and to arouse and stimulate patriotic sentiments and love of country, frequently take the form of literary exercises consisting of patriotic speeches and the reading of the Constitution, accompanied by a musical program including patriotic airs, sometimes preceded by the firing of cannon and followed by fireworks. That such celebrations are of advantage to the general public and their promotion a proper subject of legislation can hardly be questioned. From the nature of the case it is apparent that in the case in hand the city could derive no pecuniary or other special advantage from such a celebration. It might more nearly affect its own inhabitants and those of the immediate vicinity than the more remote public. So, would the erection of a public schoolhouse for the education of the children of the city, but no one would for that reason now claim the erection of the schoolhouse under authority of a charter or statute was merely for the profit or special benefit of the city. Still less can it be claimed that a celebration conducted under authority of charter or statute like the one in question was for the pecuniary or special benefit of the city, and not in performance of a public duty. When governmental functions are intrusted to the agency of municipalities they perform those functions within their territorial limits, but this does not deprive them of their public governmental character. The celebrations authorized by the defendant's charter are public ones only. A governmental duty may be imposed or authorized as well by charter as by general law. The latter may more clearly indicate the public policy, but where it appears that the duty referred to is a governmental one a private as well as a public act may confer it. In Jewett v. New Haven, 38 Conn. 368, 9 Am. Rep. 382, where the city charter empowered the city to provide for the preservation of the city from fires, it was held that it imposed a public duty for the public welfare upon the city. In Mead v. New Haven, 40 Conn. 72, 16 Am. Rep. 14, power was given the city by its charter to appoint a steam boiler inspector, and it was held that the city in making the appointment was discharging a public governmental duty. The present city charter is a public act, but we do not consider that as affecting the situation. The cases cited show that a public governmental duty may be imposed upon a municipality by its charter as well as by a public act. Nor does the fact that the charter does not impose an imperative duty upon the city to appropriate money to the purposes of the celebration, but merely permits it to be done, change the character of the act done. In each of the cases referred to the duty was not imposed, but was permissive only; and it was held that its exercise, when the city had acted under the authority, was the performance of a public duty. The same was held in Tindley v. Salem, 137 Mass. 171, 50 Am. Rep. 289, upon the authority of which this case was decided in the trial court. As there said, the motive and object are the same in such cases, though in the one the legislature determines the necessity and expediency of the act to be performed, and in the other the necessity and expediency are left to be determined by the municipality. That case in all respects parallels the one before us, except that the law under which the appropriation for the celebration was made was a public law applying to all towns. All the questions raised in this case are therein fully discussed.

That the city was engaged in the performance of a governmental duty in sending up the bombs as a part of the celebration would not excuse it from liability for injuries resulting therefrom if the act of discharging them was in itself, intrinsically dangerous. Colwell v. Waterbury, 74 Conn. 568, 573, 57 L.R.A. 218, 51 Atl. 530. But it is not alleged that the discharging of the bombs was in itself intrinsically dangerous. The allegation is that "a bomb of the character of that hereinbefore referred to, even with a perfect fuse, is intrinsically dangerous, and the act of discharging said bomb" (that is, the bomb with a damp and defective fuse) "was a negligent act." The injury is claimed to have been caused by the negligent act of sending up a bomb which was, and which the city and its servants knew or ought to have known was, defective. It appears from the complaint that the injury was due to the fact that the defective bomb did not explode in the air as it was expected to do, but, because of the damp or defective fuse, failed to explode until it reached the ground near the place where the intestate was located viewing the celebration. Many things are intrinsically dangerous the use of which with proper care under proper circumstances is not intrinsically dangerous. Gunpowder, dynamite, firearms, the firecrackers, and other squibs used in celebrations may be said to be intrinsically dangerous, but the proper use of them, ordinarily, is not so. Where the master or principal orders the use of such agencies under such circumstances that their use is intrinsically dangerous to others, the master is responsible for injuries resulting from such use. If the act ordered as commonly performed with the dangerous instrumentalities is not in itself dangerous to others, injuries resulting from the servant's negligent use of such instrumentalities are not imputable to the master. It is alleged that the display of fireworks took place on the public green in the defendant city and in dangerous proximity to certain of the city streets, and it has been argued that this allegation shows that the act of discharging the bombs was intrinsically dangerous, and constituted a nuisance for which the city is responsible. As pointed out already, there is no allegation that the injury resulted from such a cause, and it appears that the intestate was not a traveler upon the streets, and that she was not upon the street when injured, but was a spectator at the celebration upon a vacant lot across the street from the place where the defective bomb was discharged. It is useless to discuss the question whether, if the plaintiff had alleged negligence in discharging bombs from the locality mentioned because the act was intrinsically dangerous, the facts alleged, if proved, would establish such negligence. The only negligence alleged is the sending up of the defective bomb and failure to notify the intestate of her danger.

After the demurrer had been decided in favor of the city the plaintiff moved to amend his complaint so that it should appear that the celebration, discharge of fireworks, and explosion of bombs, were for the corporate advantage of the city, and the motion was denied. The original complaint shows that the celebration was public; that, as before stated, the display was from the public green adjacent to two public streets. It thus appeared that the spectacle was open to the entire public, with no opportunity for the city to receive any pecuniary benefit in the way of admission fees or otherwise from the celebration. Any corporate advantage to the city from the celebration L.R.A.1917B.

could only consist in the pleasure and patriotic enthusiasm excited in the persons who attended it. This only can have been in the mind of the pleader when he moved for the amendment. Needless to say that such a benefit is not a pecuniary benefit, and would not deprive the city's act in carrying out the celebration of its character as the performance of a governmental function. The proposed amendment added nothing not covered by the original allegations, and was properly denied.

The court properly held that the alleged acts of negligence were committed while the city was engaged in the performance of a governmental duty, and that it was not liable for the negligence of its servants or agents while engaged therein.

There is no error.

Prentice, Ch. J., and Beach, J., concur.

Wheeler, J., dissenting:

The complaint alleges: That New Haven, under authority of its charter, made an appropriation for the celebration of Independence Day, on July 5, 1915, and by way of such celebration had a display of fireworks upon the New Haven green, which consisted or included the sending up by its agents of certain bombs which were intended to explode in the air. Among them was an 8-inch bomb, which, whether with a perfect fuse or not, was "intrinsically dangerous."

The display was in a central and populous part of New Haven, in close and dangerous proximity to certain of the principal streets of New Haven, upon which were large crowds of people, in ignorance of danger, witnessing the display upon invitation of the city. It is alleged: "Said display rendered the said public streets and thoroughfares unsafe and dangerous for the public thereon, and especially dangerous for the explosion of 8-inch bombs in such close proximity thereto."

Said 8-inch bomb contained a fuse which was defective or damp, which fact was or ought to have been known to the city, and the city was negligent in using such a bomb. Through the negligence of the city said bomb struck the ground in an open space adjoining the highway, and there exploded and did great havoc, and killed the plaintiff's intestate, who, in the exercise of due care, was viewing the celebration. The complaint sets up a case of negligence, and in my opinion one of wantonness and nuisance.

Under our system of pleading the story of the occurrence is told, and whatever cause of action arises out of the story is part of the case. We think that the complaint fairly states that the display of fireworks in such a locality was intrinsically dangerous to the spectators who had been invited to the display, and that the discharge of a bomb intrinsically dangerous in itself in such a locality in the midst of such a concourse of people constituted as matter of law such discharge a wanton act and a nuisance. We think it a too narrow reading of the complaint to hold that it does not allege that the discharge of an intrinsically dangerous bomb in that locality and in the midst of such a concourse of people was itself intrinsically dangerous.

The city demurred because: (1) It appears that the fireworks were discharged in the course of a public celebration of Independence Day, and it is not alleged that the celebration was for the corporate or pecuniary benefit of the city. (2) It appears that the injuries alleged occurred while New Haven was engaged in a public governmental function under authority conferred by a public act. (3) It does not appear that any liability is imposed by law for any act alleged.

When a city is engaged in the performance of a governmental duty, no liability attaches to it for injury resulting from the discharge of such duty through failure to use due care. The rule of municipal exemption does not apply to injury caused by the municipality in the discharge of a public duty for its corporate benefit. Such a duty is not a governmental duty, for it is not performed for the benefit solely of the public. Whether the municipality is discharging a governmental duty or not is to be determined upon consideration of the nature of the duty imposed or the privilege conferred, and of the character of the act done. We assume, for the present purposes, that New Haven, in conducting a celebration of Independence Day, might be engaged in the performance of a governmental duty. It might conduct such a celebration for its own corporate benefit, and this might be established by proof of an admission charge or by the terms of the vote of appropriation or by other corporate act. If this were established it would not be exempt from liability for its negligence in conducting the celebration.

The complaint did not allege that the city was engaged in an enterprise for its own corporate or pecuniary benefit. This was one of the grounds of demurrer. The plaintiff seasonably moved to amend by adding: "Such celebration, discharge of fireworks, and explosion of bombs, were for the corporate advantage of the defendant, and for the benefit of its residents and citizens."

The motion was denied. This we think was error, for the court could not say as matter of law that such a celebration might not have been undertaken for the corporate benefit of New Haven. Moreover, the rule of municipal exemption for an act done by the municipality or its servants or agents when acting in the discharge of a public duty does not relieve the municipality from liability for the consequences of the particular acts which the municipality has directed to be performed, and which, from their character or the manner in which they are so ordered to be executed, will naturally work a direct injury to the property of others, or create a nuisance, or occasion a wanton injury to the property or rights of other persons. Colwell v. Waterbury, 74 Conn. 568, 573, 57 L.R.A. 218, 51 Atl. 530.

A wanton injury to the person of another, or a nuisance committed against his person, creates a liability in the municipality no less than when the wanton injury or nuisance is committed against his property. Governmental immunity does not exempt from liability for a personal injury resulting from a wanton act or a nuisance. Ibid; Mootry v. Danbury, 45 Conn. 550, 556, 29 Am. Rep. 703; Feudl v. New Britain, 88 Conn. 125, 128, 90 Atl. 35; Morgan v. Danbury, 67 Conn. 484, 491, 493, 35 Atl. 499; Judd v. Hartford, 72 Conn. 350, 354, 77 Am. St. Rep. 312, 44 Atl. 510, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 434; Salzman v. New Haven, 81 Conn. 389, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 333, 71 Atl. 500; Dill. Mun. Corp. 5th ed. § 1703; Willet v. St. Albans, 69 Vt. 333, 38 Atl. 72. Whether a situation, a thing, or an act constitutes a nuisance is ordinarily a question of fact. Burnham v. Hotchkiss, 14 Conn. 318; Stowe v. Miles, 39 Conn. 428. But when the facts are clear the act in question, as a matter of law, may be held to be a nuisance. Jenne v. Sutton, 43 N. J. L. 257, 39 Am. Rep. 578.

In Speir v. Brooklyn, 139 N. Y. 6, 11, 21 L.R.A. 641, 36 Am. St. Rep. 664, 34 N. E. 728, the court said: "The discharge of fireworks in a city under any circumstances is attended with danger. . . . Under the circumstances, in view of the place, the danger involved, and the occasion, the transaction was an unreasonable, unwarranted, and unlawful use of the streets, exposing persons and property to injury, and was properly found to constitute a public nuisance."

In Landau v. New York, 180 N. Y. 48, 54, 105 Am. St. Rep. 709, 72 N. E. 633, 17 Am. Neg. Rep. 331, the court said: "There is a distinction, well recognized by law, between the discharge of fireworks upon private property and in a public highway. There is also a distinction in this regard between highways, depending on their location, the extent of the traffic upon them, and the danger involved in case of accident. Fireworks in certain streets may or may not be a nuisance, according to the circumstances, which usually present a question of fact. . . . Fireworks exhibited on an extensive scale in a great thoroughfare, in the midst of a large city, where a vast multitude of people is assembled, if not a nuisance as matter of law, may properly be found such as matter of fact."

In Willett v. St. Albans, 69 Vt. 333, 38 Atl. 72, the question at issue was whether the defendant in the erecting of a municipal building had created or participated in the creation of a nuisance. To constitute the structure a nuisance the court say: "The structure must have been inherently and imminently dangerous and a menace to the safety of the intestate. . . . The appellant must have created or participated in the creation of the dangerous and menacing condition. . . . The creation or participation in the creation of the dangerous condition must have been with the consciousness and understanding on the part of the appellant that it was creating it; or it must have been obvious and almost certain to a reasonably prudent man, while the acts were being performed on the part of the appellant, that these acts would create or help to create it. The condition must have been a purpose or object of the appellant; it must have intended to affect it; or its acts have been so reckless and unwarranted that that intention must be conclusively implied. . . . The wrongfulness must have been in the acts themselves rather than in the failure to use the requisite degree of care in doing them, and therein lies the distinction, under the facts of this case, between nuisance and negligence." Joyce, Nuisances, §§ 19, 384, 448; Wood, Nuisances, §§ 743, 744; Cardwell v. Austin, — Tex. Civ. App., 168 S. W. 387; Smith v. Jefferson, 161 Iowa, 245, 45 L.R.A. (N.S.) 792, 142 N. W. 220, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 97; New Castle v. Harvey, 54 Ind. App. 243, 102 N. E. 880; Moser v. Burlington, 162 N. C. 141, 78 S. E. 74; Radford v. Clark, 113 Va. 199, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 281, 73 S. E. 571; Hines v. Rocky Mount, 162 N. C. 409, 412, L.R.A. 1915C, 751, 78 S. E. 510, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 132.

A satisfactory test for determining whether an act or acts constitute a nuisance is that stated by the court in Melker v. New York, 190 N. Y. 481, 488, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 621, 83 N. E. 567, 13 Ann. Cas. 544: "Without attempting a general definition we are of the opinion that as applied to the facts of the case before us, if the natural tendency of the act complained of is to create danger and inflict injury upon person or property, it may properly be found a nuisance as L.R.A. 1917B.

matter of fact; but if the action in its inherent nature is so hazardous as to make the danger extreme and serious injury so probable as to be almost a certainty, it should be held a nuisance as matter of law. . . . Locality, surroundings, methods, the degree of danger, and the custom of the country, are the important factors."

The display of fireworks in such a locality, intrinsically dangerous to the spectators whom New Haven had invited to witness the display, and the discharge of a bomb itself intrinsically dangerous, constituted as matter of law the display a nuisance. New Haven caused and created the nuisance, and her act caused this injury. Her liability must follow. But if these facts are not held to constitute a nuisance they must be held to present an issue of fact as to whether they constitute a nuisance, and, if so, the demurrer should have been overruled and the trier been permitted to pass on this issue of fact and determine whether the acts done under the circumstances present created a nuisance.

After the demurrer was sustained the plaintiff sought to amend by adding to his complaint: "The action of the city herein before set out . . . made said streets, thoroughfares, and other portions of said city near said public square unsafe and dangerous to the people lawfully thereon, and wrongfully exposed these persons to injury, and the same at all of said times was a nuisance."

The opinion of the majority finds the allegations of the complaint insufficient to sustain a cause of action for wantonness or nuisance. It would seem to follow such a holding that the denial of the amendment was error.

The record shows that the trial court decided the demurrer upon the authority of Tindley v. Salem, 137 Mass. 171, 50 Am. Rep. 289, and apparently did not then consider the question of wantonness or nuisance. This question of nuisance arose later in Kerr v. Brookline, 208 Mass. 190, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 464, 94 N. E. 257, and the conclusion of the court upon this question seems at variance with Colwell v. Waterbury and other authorities upon this subject in our state.

In my opinion the demurrer should have been overruled, and the amendment allowed.

Roraback, J., concurs.

Petition for rehearing denied, January 10, 1917.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

GEORGE EISENTRAGER, Appt.,
v.
GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY COM-PANY.

(— Iowa, —, 160 N. W. 311.)

Evidence — custom to show fact.

1. Upon the question of the responsibility of a railroad company for ice on a walk which caused injury to a pedestrian, evidence is not admissible that its engine, both before and after the injury, cast water in some manner and some amount near the walk, possibly upon it.

For other cases, see Evidence, XI. k, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Appeal — ignoring evidence.

2. In reviewing a ruling directing a verdict for defendant, evidence erroneously admitted may be ignored.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Nuisance — creation — ignorance — effect.

3. A railroad company responsible for casting water on a walk, which forms ice upon which a pedestrian falls to his injury, cannot escape liability for the injury on the ground that it had no notice of the nuisance.

For other cases, see Nuisances, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Appeal — directed verdict — erroneous grounds.

4. If a verdict was rightly directed on any ground, the erroneous sustaining of other grounds is harmless error.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII. m, 7, d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Evidence — res ipsa loquitur — responsibility for ice.

5. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur cannot be invoked to show that the negligence of a railroad company is responsible for ice upon a walk next its rails because of the shape and extent of the ice and the fact that it presents a straight edge next the rail.

For other cases, see Evidence, II. h, 1, c, in 1-52 N. S.

Evidence — burden of proof — conflicting possibilities.

6. One seeking to hold a railroad company liable for injury due to a fall on ice on a walk, because of its negligently casting water on the walk, is not entitled to go to the jury by merely showing a possibility that it is responsible for the condition, if there is nothing to exclude the equal possibility that the ice was due to an entirely different cause.

For other cases, see Trial, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(December 13, 1916.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Lyon County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

Statement by Sallinger, J.:

Suit for personal injuries sustained. Through the town of Alvord the track of defendant runs north and south. Along its west rail lie two planks about 6 feet long and some 22 inches wide. Adjoining these planks and running west is a cement walk about 6 feet wide. During the evening of February 28, 1913, in freezing weather, some ice had formed upon this walk, and some 2 feet west of the west rail. The ice was some 2 feet wide, and at about that width lay across this walk. Plaintiff fell upon this ice at a point a little to the west of the planks, and sustained serious injuries. He contends that servants of the defendant created the ice by negligently causing water to be discharged by a locomotive and to flow upon the walk. From verdict directed against him, plaintiff appeals.

Mr. S. D. Riniker, for appellant:

The modern rule is that any inadvertent act or omission of a sane person in performing a lawful act, which immediately produces injury to another, not in fault, creates legal liability.

Doyle v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co. 77 Iowa, 607, 4 L.R.A. 420, 42 N. W. 555; Simson v. London General Omnibus Co. L. R. 8 C. P. 390, 42 L. J. C. P. N. S. 112, 28 L. T. N. S. 560, 21 Week. Rep. 595.

Note.—Generally as to admissibility of evidence of condition before and after accident, of property whose defects are alleged to have caused injury, see note to Alcott v. Public Service Corp. 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1084. And for other notes on somewhat analogous questions, see the Indexes to L.R.A. Notes under the title "Evidence," subtitle "Similar acts and facts."

Many different phases of the rule or maxim, Res ipsa loquitur are discussed in notes indexed under the title "Evidence," subtitle "Care; negligence; res ipsa loquitur."

The liability of an abutting owner for an L.R.A.1917B.

injury caused by ice formed from water artificially turned across sidewalk is treated in the notes to Brown v. White, 58 L.R.A. 328; Hynes v. Brewer, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 598; Maloney v. Hayes, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 200; and Striger v. Deickman, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 309. Other phases of the question of liability for damage caused by ice or snow on streets or sidewalks are treated in notes that may be found by consulting the Indexes to L.R.A. Notes under the title "Highways," section heading, "Ice and snow on streets and sidewalks," and other sections there referred to.

Either the railway company or city is liable for obstructing the sidewalk to the damage of a person who, without knowledge of the danger, falls thereon or is injured thereby.

Gates v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 150 Pa. 50, 16 L.R.A. 554, 24 Atl. 638; Calder v. Smalley, 66 Iowa, 219, 55 Am. Rep. 270, 23 N. W. 638; McDonald v. Toledo Consol. Street R. Co. 20 C. C. A. 322, 43 U. S. App. 79, 74 Fed. 104; Tobin v. Portland, S. & P. R. Co. 59 Me. 183, 8 Am. Rep. 415, 9 Am. Neg. Cas. 411; Landru v. Lund, 38 Minn. 538, 38 N. W. 699; Lowell v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 23 Pick. 24, 34 Am. Dec. 33; Elliott v. Concord, 27 N. H. 204; Willard v. Newbury, 22 Vt. 458; Batty v. Duxbury, 24 Vt. 155.

The law is not more lenient to an individual who causes the streets or sidewalks of a city or town to become dangerous or defective than it is to the city or town itself which permits or allows dangerous agencies thereon or thereunder to remain unremoved or unabated.

O'Hanlin v. Carter Oil Co. 54 W. Va. 510, 66 L.R.A. 896, 46 S. E. 565; Gates v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 150 Pa. 50, 16 L.R.A. 554, 24 Atl. 638; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. McTighe, 46 Pa. 316; Lowell v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 23 Pick. 24, 34 Am. Dec. 33.

No person has the right to do any act which renders the use of the street or sidewalk hazardous or less secure than it was left by the municipal authorities; and whoever does so is at once liable to any person who, without fault on his part, sustains any special injury therefrom.

Dill. Mun. Corp. 1890 ed. §§ 1032, 1034; Gates v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 150 Pa. 50, 16 L.R.A. 554, 24 Atl. 638.

Whosoever places or is responsible for permitting an obstruction in the highway or on a sidewalk is liable to one injured.

Tiborsky v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 124 Wis. 243, 102 N. W. 549, 17 Am. Neg. Rep. 755; Thuringer v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 71 Hun, 526, 24 N. Y. Supp. 1087, 82 Hun, 33, 31 N. Y. Supp. 419.

Anyone responsible for the artificial accumulation of ice on a sidewalk, whereby a traveler thereon sustains a special or peculiar injury, is liable therefor.

Dahlin v. Walsh, 192 Mass. 163, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 615, 77 N. E. 830, 20 Am. Neg. Rep. 367; Hynes v. Brewer, 194 Mass. 435, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 598, 80 N. E. 503; Maloney v. Hayes, 206 Mass. 1, 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 200, 91 N. E. 911, 3 N. C. C. A. 137; Benard v. Woonsocket Bobbin Co. 23 R. I. 581, 51 Atl. 209; Louis v. Eureka Club, 37 App. Div. 628, 56 N. Y. Supp. 66, 5 Am. Neg. Rep. 702; Thuringer v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 82 Hun, 33, 31 N. Y. Supp. 419; Ill. L.R.A. 1917B.

nois C. R. Co. v. Com. 29 Ky. L. Rep. 754, 96 S. W. 467; Brown v. White, 202 Pa. 297, 58 L.R.A. 321, 51 Atl. 962; Waltemeyer v. Kansas City, 71 Mo. App. 354; 28 Cyc. 1437, 1438; Davis v. Niagara Falls Tower Co. 171 N. Y. 336, 57 L.R.A. 545, 89 Am. St. Rep. 817, 64 N. E. 4.

Defendant was bound to keep water from its locomotives off the sidewalk when by permitting it to run on the walk it would freeze and endanger the safety of pedestrians; and if it failed so to do negligence will be inferred.

Weaver Mercantile Co. v. Thurmond, 68 W. Va. 530, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1061, 70 S. E. 126, 3 N. C. C. A. 1; Kearney v. London, B. & S. C. R. Co. L. R. 5 Q. B. 411.

If a railway company permits ice to form on the sidewalk from drippings or overflow from its tanks; or allows the walk to become less safe, by reason of being obstructed through its negligence,—it is liable to the traveler injured thereby.

McGoldrick v. New York C. & H. R. Co. 49 N. Y. S. R. 566, 20 N. Y. Supp. 914; Thuringer v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 71 Hun, 526, 24 N. Y. Supp. 1087, 82 Hun, 33, 31 N. Y. Supp. 419; Tiborsky v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 124 Wis. 243, 102 N. W. 549, 17 Am. Neg. Rep. 755; Canfield v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 78 Mich. 356, 44 N. W. 385; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Nelson, 153 Ill. 89, 38 N. E. 560; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Hoag, 90 Ill. 339.

Testimony to the effect that defendant had discharged water upon the sidewalk at the same, or substantially the same, place before and after the accident, is admissible, and makes it a jury question whether or not defendant was responsible for the ice that caused the injury.

1 Elliott, Ev. p. 109; McKean v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 55 Iowa, 192, 7 N. W. 505; 3 Elliott, Ev. § 2505; Carter v. Sioux City Service Co. 160 Iowa, 78, 141 N. W. 26; Shepard v. Creamer, 160 Mass. 496, 36 N. E. 475; Auld v. Southern R. Co. 136 Ga. 266, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 518, 71 S. E. 426; Davis v. Corry City, 154 Pa. 598, 26 Atl. 621.

The question as to whether a given act of negligence was the proximate cause of the injury complained of, where the character of the facts is such that different conclusions may be drawn from them, is a question for the jury.

Weick v. Lander, 75 Ill. 93; Hill v. Winsor, 118 Mass. 251; Savage v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 31 Minn. 419, 18 N. W. 272; Sheridan v. Brooklyn City & N. R. Co. 36 N. Y. 39, 93 Am. Dec. 490, 9 Am. Neg. Cas. 619; Harriman v. Pittsburg, C. & St. L. R. Co. 45 Ohio St. 11, 4 Am. St. Rep. 507, 12 N. E. 451; Smethurst v. Independ- ent Cong. Church, 148 Mass. 261, 2 L.R.A. 695, 12 Am. St. Rep. 550, 19 N. E. 387.

Messrs. J. L. Kennedy and E. C. Roach for appellee.

Salinger, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

I. Certain testimony was taken against the objection of the appellee. We have the question whether, though erroneously admitted, it still must be considered on the question of whether there was sufficient evidence to send the case to the jury.

A fair summing up of it is that both before and after the injury complained of locomotive engines of defendant cast water in some manner, and in some amount, near this walk; possibly, upon it. There is no testimony, at any rate none in terms, that this was done during freezing weather. Appellant contends this testimony establishes a custom, and that such custom is competent to go to the jury on whether the negligence charged was proved. The following citations are made in support: Kolsti's Case, 32 Minn. 133, 19 N. W. 655; Nadau's Case, 76 Wis. 120, 20 Am. St. Rep. 29, 43 N. W. 1135; Cass v. Boston & L. R. Co. 14 Allen, 448; Holly's Case, 8 Gray, 133, 69 Am. Dec. 233; Jochem's Case, 72 Wis. 202, 203, 1 L.R.A. 178, 39 N. W. 383; Earl's Case, 61 Hun, 624, 40 N. Y. S. R. 847, 16 N. Y. Supp. 770; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Cowser, 57 Tex. 293; Carter's Case, 160 Iowa, 78, 141 N. W. 26; Cleveland, C. C. & I. R. Co. v. Newell, 75 Ind. 545; Harri-man's Case, 45 Ohio St. 11, 4 Am. St. Rep. 507, 12 N. E. 451; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Carpenter, 5 C. C. A. 551, 12 U. S. App. 392, 56 Fed. 451, 7 Am. Neg. Cas. 486; McGee's Case, 92 Mo. 208, 1 Am. St. Rep. 706, 4 S. W. 740, 4 Am. Neg. Cas. 578, citing Wood, Mast. & S. § 401; Lawson, Custom, 41, 42; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Gray, 65 Tex. 32; Tibby's Case, 82 Mo. 292, 299; Maynard's Case, 100 Mass. 40, 1 Am. Neg. Cas. 901; McKean's Case, 55 Iowa, 192, 7 N. W. 505; Auld v. Southern R. Co. 136 Ga. 266, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 518, 71 S. E. 426; Brassell's Case, 84 N. Y. 242, 5 Am. Neg. Cas. 231; Wood's Case, 49 Mich. 370, 13 N. W. 779, 4 Am. Neg. Cas. 35; Fuller's Case, 21 Conn. 576, 2 Am. Neg. Cas. 266; Schultz's Case, 44 Wis. 638; Sutherland v. Troy & B. R. Co. 74 Hun, 162, 26 N. Y. Supp. 237; Pennsylvania Co. v. Stoelke, 104 Ill. 201; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Clark, 108 Ill. 113; Davis v. Corry City, 154 Pa. 598, 26 Atl. 621; Eureka Ins. Co. v. Robinson, 56 Pa. 264, 94 Am. Dec. 65; 1 Elliott, Ev. ¶ 109, resting on Shove's Case, 18 Pick. 558, 561; Vaughan's Case, 63 N. C. 11; Lynch v. Ashe, 8 N. C. (1 Hawks) 338. A large part of these hold, L.R.A. 1917B.

in effect, it may bear on negligence of contributory negligence that what is complained of was usual. Others, that one who establishes a usage must anticipate that others will act in reliance upon such usage. All have been carefully read, and it will serve no useful purpose to analyze them here. Suffice it to say none of them hold that negligent throwing of water by one engine at a stated time and upon a stated place may be proved by showing that other engines in some manner cast water at different times near and, by possibility, upon that place.

Then there is a dictum by way of argument in Wheelan v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 85 Iowa, 172, 52 N. W. 119, that if the evidence had not disclosed a car door in question had been loose and swinging several times prior to the accident, and once after it on the same trip, there would have been no claim that its haap was the cause of the accident. Lastly, there is Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Richardson, 91 U. S. 454, 471, 23 L. ed. 356, 362, in which language is used tending to sustain the contention of appellant. In effect the case is a holding that where an engine crosses a bridge shortly before that bridge is fired, then, evidence that, in passing, other engines had scattered fire, has some probative weight on the ultimate issue to be determined. The case seems to stand alone. It concedes some cases opposed its rule, that such evidence is "of course indirect evidence, if it be evidence at all;" and finally it is pointed out that the testimony was probably rebuttal, and that a special rule prevails as to rebuttal. As will presently appear, it makes some pronouncements which oppose the effect of its language. It holds that where a fire occurs which causes the destruction of a building in a dry time, when there is a high wind, and when more than ordinary vigilance is demanded, it is incompetent to show that the usual practice of railroad companies in that section of the country was not to employ a switchman for bridges like the one destroyed by fire and causing the burning of the building, and that the usual practice of others in that section of the country sheds no light on the duty of defendant when running locomotives over long wooden bridges in near proximity to a frame building, when danger was more than commonly imminent. It is said in Brown's Case, 202 Pa. 297, 58 L.R.A. 321, 51 Atl. 962, that, unless it be shown to have been necessary, it will not avoid liability for injury caused by draining water from the house of defendant over the sidewalk through an uncovered drain, and thus forming a ridge of ice; that in that borough it was customary thus to drain water. 3 Elliott, Ev. § 2506, p. 1001, citing Aiken's, Case, 184 Mass. 269, 68 N. E. 238, and Kingston's Case, 112 Mich. 40, 40 L.R.A. 131, 140, 70 N. W. 315, 74 N. W. 230, 1 Am. Neg. Rep. 467, states that evidence that either the plaintiff or defendant was negligent at other times, or as to his habits concerning carefulness, is generally incompetent, and in § 2506, that the better rule is that evidence of previous accidents at the same place is, ordinarily at least, not admissible to prove negligence at the time in question; that while evidence of prior accidents may sometimes be admissible in some cases on the question of notice, it raises too many distinct and collateral issues; that evidence there were or were not prior accidents is of very little, if any, probative value, unless there be put in all the facts and conditions existing at such other times, and that this is usually unnecessary because the facts in regard to the conditions and circumstances at the time in question are susceptible of direct proof. In Peoria & P. U. R. Co. v. Clayberg, 107 Ill. 644, evidence was excluded to the effect that deceased charged with contributory negligence was in the habit of jumping on trains. In Hudson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 59 Iowa, 581, 44 Am. Rep. 692, 13 N. W. 735, we said of evidence to the effect that a day or two after the accident the employees of defendant charged the crossing in such manner as to avoid the defect complained of, that it could have no other purpose than to establish an admission on the part of defendant of its own negligence at the time of the accident, and that this evidence was not admissible for any purpose, because it was one made by employees after the transaction which constituted the principal one. In Matthews v. Cedar Rapids, 80 Iowa, 466, 20 Am. St. Rep. 436, 45 N. W. 894, we felt constrained, by reason of the Hudson Case, to exclude evidence to the effect that other parties had fallen into the same opening into which plaintiff had, and that defendant had been informed of this. In Croddy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 91 Iowa, 605, 60 N. W. 214, on the authority of the Hudson Case, we sustain the exclusion of testimony that stock had frequently been killed at a certain crossing where the injury in that suit was claimed to have happened. In Langhammer's Case, 99 Iowa, 297, 298, 68 N. W. 680, plaintiff was injured by slipping on a step, and we held it was not permissible to show that others had slipped on the same step prior to the accident in suit, and said: "Whatever may be the rule in other jurisdictions, it is well settled in this state that in such a case evidence of similar disconnected acts is not admissible."

In Kirchoff's Case, 148 Iowa, 513, 123 N. W. 210, we ruled it was inadmissible to L.R.A.1917B.

show that during eighteen years no one had before been hurt by the planer involved in that suit. And see Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Evansich, 61 Tex. 6, and Black, Law & Pr. Acci. Cases, § 193.

(a) All said would be relevant if appellant had a stronger showing. But he does not have as much as evidence that the thing charged here was customarily done before, and at the same place. The effect of evidence of a general custom to have defendant's locomotive discharge water so that it would flow upon this walk is not here for decision. The most this jury had was a chance to guess at what point and in what manner other engines cast water. It follows that the objections made—incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial—should have been sustained. This conclusion turns into academic inquiries certain contentions—even if these were well made.

It may be conceded that the directing of the verdict for defendant operated to change the ruling as to excluding this testimony. The trial court had power to change its trial rulings. Standish's Case, 21 Iowa, 369; Jenkins's Case, 36 Iowa, 526; McClain's Case, 98 Iowa, 145, 67 N. W. 102; Van Werden's Case, 99 Iowa, 623, 68 N. W. 892. In Littleton's Case, 95 Iowa, 320, 63 N. W. 666, a change of opinion was effected by directing a verdict. That all said decisions involve a change of front on rulings on demurrer is purely adventitious. They attach no weight to the fact that a particular ruling was changed, and the principle they established is that no matter what the first ruling is, the court is not concluded thereby "from holding otherwise at some subsequent time during the trial when the same question legitimately arises,"—is not required to follow the first ruling against his conviction. Norton's Case, 64 Iowa, 112, 19 N. W. 867; Richman's Case, 77 Iowa, 525, 526, 4 L.R.A. 445, 14 Am. St. Rep. 308, 42 N. W. 422. In Brown's Case, 82 Iowa, 514, 12 L.R.A. 583, 48 N. W. 1042, it is said: "Decisions are not to be regarded as unalterable without regard to their correctness. However desirable it may be to have consistency in the decisions of a court in the same case, it is better that the court correct its errors, if in its judgment any have occurred."

In Campbell v. Park, 128 Iowa, 181, 101 N. W. 861, 104 N. W. 799, we hold that if verdict should not have been directed had testimony not been erroneously rejected, we may consider the excluded testimony on reviewing the direction. It would seem to follow that if we find testimony was improperly received we may proceed as though it had never been put in. And we have settled in Ford v. Dilley, — Iowa, —, 156 N. W. 516, division II., that appellee may have us determine now whether any error was committed against him, if now correcting such error will make the judgment below a right judgment. But, as said, all this is moot. Immaterial matter has no probative value. Present or out, immaterial matter cannot affect our investigation on the sufficiency of the testimony against a motion to direct verdict, and we shall resolve that question without considering said testimony.

II. Defendant's motion for a directed verdict was sustained generally, and this sustains the following grounds, among others: (a) Defendant is not shown to be charged with any duty with reference to the ice on the sidewalk. (b) There is no evidence that the ice had been there so long that defendant should and could have known of and removed it. (c) The town was not liable, and no greater degree of care is required of defendant than of the town. (d) The ice was not of such nature "that its presence on the sidewalk constituted negligence on part of defendant." (e) The evidence fails to show plaintiff was free from contributory negligence. These should have been overruled. It seems to us defendant was charged with a duty concerning ice on this walk. That is to say, it had no right negligently to put water there in freezing weather. If it did, the assertion that it lacked notice of a nuisance created by itself is no defense. Concede defendant was under no greater liability than the town would be for an accumulation of ice upon this walk. But the town would be liable without direct notice or notice through long continuance, if it put the ice upon the walk. We are unable to understand the claim that "Under the undisputed evidence the ice was not of such nature that its presence on the walk constituted negligence on the part of the defendant."

If defendant was responsible for the presence of the ice, there was nothing in the nature of the ice that absolved from such responsibility. We think, too, if defendant was negligent, the question of contributory negligence was for the jury. But if the motion was rightly sustained on any ground presented, the erroneous sustaining of other grounds is harmless error. Appelles has abandoned all these points in the motion. But they lead appellant into meeting them. This justifies many citations which accomplish nothing beyond meeting said points. However, they only demonstrate that an abandoned position is untenable, and are no longer of use.

III. The appellant cites Scott's Case, 13 L. T. N. S. 148, 3 Hurlst. & C. 596, 34 L. J. Exch. N. S. 220, 11 Jur. N. S. 204, 13 Week. Rep. 410; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Simrall, 127 Ky. 55, 104 S. W. 1011, 1199; L.R.A.1917B.

Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Clark, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 736, 106 S. W. 1184; Dahlin v. Walsh, 192 Mass. 163, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 615, 77 N. E. 880, 20 Am. Neg. Rep. 367; Gulf C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Wood, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 63 S. W. 164; Kearney's Case, L. R. 5 Q. B. 411; Union P. R. Co. v. Erickson, 41 Neb. 1, 29 L.R.A. 137, 59 N. W. 348; Gee's Case, 42 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 105, L. R. 8 Q. B. 161, 28 L. T. N. S. 282, 21 Week. Rep. 584; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. McTigue, 46 Pa. 319; Hynes's Case, 194 Mass. 435, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 598, 80 N. E. 503; Hill's Case, 118 Mass. 251; Carter's Case, 160 Iowa, 78, 141 N. W. 26; Savage's Case, 31 Minn. 419, 18 N. W. 272; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Nelson, 153 Ill. 89, 38 N. E. 560; Tiborsky's Case, 124 Wis. 243, 102 N. W. 549, 17 Am. Neg. Rep. 755.

He claims for them that res ipsa loquitur may be invoked here because the extent and shape of the ice and the fact that it presented a straight edge next to the rail, in and of themselves make it a jury question whether the ice was not due to the negligence charged. It is a fair general analysis of the cases cited to say that if injury is suffered because a machine or other thing has done something unusual, it may therefrom be presumed that the machine or appliance was defective through negligence. For illustration, engines kept in proper repair do not usually explode, and if rails are kept in proper condition trains are not usually derailed. Therefore, an explosion or derailment raises a presumption that those charged with the care of engine or rails have failed in that duty. To apply these here is to beg the question. It would not be indulging a presumption that machinery which did a certain thing was negligently kept, but that the engine did that thing. If we must hold appellant has no evidence of what the locomotive of defendant did, he may not obtain that evidence by saying that if the locomotive did do a certain thing negligence will be presumed, and therefore we should presume it did that thing. The cases cited make plain this distinction or limitation. And see Tiborsky's Case, 124 Wis. 243, 102 N. W. 549, 17 Am. Neg. Rep. 755.

IV. Plaintiff was injured by falling upon ice which lay as a grassy sheet upon a cement walk which connected with the west rail of defendant's road at a point close to that rail. The petition alleges he was injured about 9:30 at night. His theory is the ice was formed from water discharged by one of defendant's locomotives. If that is so, it must have been done by the one attached to a train due to go south about 7:30, and which left about that time on the day of the injury. For the only other train on the night of that day went north about 10; those who passed over the walk both shortly before and after that train left found no ice; plaintiff seems to have been injured before that train arrived; and if the engine going south could cast water to form the ice on which plaintiff fell, one going north could not thus cast it. There is much testimony from which it may be found that the engine going south is not to blame, because those passing over the walk both shortly before and after that engine came and went found no ice. The court below attached much importance to it that no one saw that engine cast any water that night. We think that though this is so, still the engine south bound might have been responsible for the formation of this ice. But defendant contends, and there is evidence to sustain the theory, that the ice may have been formed through the careless handling of water that people were in the habit of carrying from a near-by hydrant, and over this walk. In essence, the vital claim of appellant is the ice formation was of such shape, size, and so cleanly terminated where the walk joined the rail, as that, at the least, it was for a jury to say whether the ice was due to a negligently kept locomotive, carelessness of those who handled it, or both. The most we can find is that the theory of neither party presents an impossibility—that it is possible the ice was formed as appellant contends, and equally so that it was due to water spilled by those who brought it from the hydrant. Appellant has the burden; the burden of what? The petition charges negligence in that water was thrown or deposited "some time during the day or evening" of February 28, 1913. Also, that this was done by servants operating one of defendant's trains, and that these servants threw or deposited the water there "carelessly and negligently" or "carelessly or negligently." The essential ruling below was that the evidence wholly fails to show defendant was negligent as charged, and that, on the whole case, a verdict must be directed under the rule of Meyer v. Houck, 85 Iowa, 319, 52 N. W. 235. The utmost appellant has done is to show it is possible that defendant was guilty as charged. He has nothing that excludes the equal possibility that at least one other cause for which defendant is not responsible may have been the cause of the injury.

We agree, of course, that when facts and circumstances are such that reasonable men, unaffected by bias or prejudice, may disagree as to the inference or conclusion to be drawn from them, there is a case for a jury. But it is one thing to have a state of facts from which differing conclusions may reasonably be drawn. Quite another, to hold that one who has the burden of proving a given conclusion has discharged the burden by showing that a theory which sustains him is a possible one, if it also appear that a theory upon which his adversary would not be liable is just as possible.

Any death may by possibility be due to murder, but no jury should find murder to be the cause of death merely because death is proved. Most deaths are not caused by murder, and something would be required upon which reasonable minds might base the conclusion that a murder had been done. We concede that, ordinarily, it is for the jury whether a claim is supported by a preponderance. But this is not so when all must agree that the case for him who has the burden is not as strong as, or at any rate is not stronger than, that of his opponent. We have in many cases where the proof for the one having the burden was stronger than here, or at least as strong, held there was no question for a jury, that the burden of proof was not discharged, because, at best, the testimony was in equipoise, and, therefore, as matter of law, the one having the burden should not prevail because his evidence did not preponderate. See Asbach's Case, 74 Iowa, 249, 37 N. W. 182; Neal's Case, 129 Iowa, 5, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 905, 105 N. W. 197, 19 Am. Neg. Rep. 213; O'Connor's Case, 129 Iowa, 636, 106 N. W. 161; Gibson's Case, 136 Iowa, 418, 113 N. W. 927; Siglin's Case, 161 Iowa, 290, 292, 130 N. W. 1057. The same view is taken in many well-considered cases decided in other jurisdictions. Reynolds v. Burgess Sulphite Fibre Co. 73 N. H. 126, 59 Atl. 615; Smith's Case, 118 N. Y. 645, 23 N. E. 990; Bernhardt's Case, 159 Pa. 360, 28 Atl. 140, 6 Am. Neg. Cas. 373; Serviss v. Ann Arbor R. Co. 169 Mich. 564, 135 N. W. 345; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Clark, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 736, 106 S. W. 1184; Larson's Case, 43 Minn. 488, 45 N. W. 1096; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Binion, 98 Ala. 570, 14 So. 619. Though the Serviss Case, 169 Mich. 564, 135 N. W. 345, approves the Sholtz Case, 48 Misc. 619, 95 N. Y. Supp. 557, the approval does not affect the question now before us. The Sholtz Case merely determines a correct rule concerning what is reasonable notice,—that it may be a jury question whether there was constructive notice, although a gate lying on a station platform is not shown to have been there for any considerable length of time. The general proposition declared by all these cases is fairly and typically stated in some of our own above mentioned. In Gibson's Case, 136 Iowa, 418, 113 N. W. 928, we say: "The burden was upon plaintiff to show not only that his mare was killed by a passing train, but that this killing was due to the negligence of defendant's employees. It is not enough for him to show that this might perhaps have been the cause of the injury."

The Neal Case, 129 Iowa, 5, 9, 10, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 905, 105 N. W. 199, 19 Am. Neg. Rep. 213, declares on the authority of the Rhines Case, 75 Iowa, 597, 39 N. W. 912, the test is whether the conclusion sought to be drawn is or is not equally consistent with some theory other than the one advanced by him who has the burden of proof; that if one surmise that may be made is as tenable as the one insisted on, the theory relied on is not sustained by a preponderance. And it is further said: "A theory cannot be said to be established by circumstantial evidence, . . . unless the facts relied upon are of such nature and so related to each other that it is the only conclusion that can fairly or reasonably be drawn from them. It is not sufficient that they be consistent merely with that theory, for that may be true and yet they may have no tendency to prove the theory."

Further, that this "is the well-settled law." Following the Asbach Case and the Rhines Case, supra, we say in the O'Connor Case, 129 Iowa, 638, 106 N. W. 162: "The law on this point is well settled. Proof of the defective condition of the car, and of the death of the intestate, due to his being run over by the car, is not sufficient to take the case to a jury. In other words, the burden of proof was upon plaintiff to show causal connection between the alleged negligence and the injury complained of. And where the proof is equally balanced, or the facts are as consistent with one theory as another, plaintiff has not met the burden which the law casts upon him. Of course, plaintiff is not required to produce more than a preponderance of the testimony; but if his evidence does no more than create a surmise or conjecture, he cannot recover. Proof of causal connection may be direct or circumstantial, but the evidence must be something more than consistent with plaintiff's theory as to how the accident occurred. These rules are well supported by our cases."

To like effect are Tibbitts' Case, 138 Iowa, 178, 186, 186, 115 N. W. 1021, and Helgeson's Case, 148 Iowa, 591, 592, 126 N. W. 769.

We think the ruling below is supported because, as matter of law, the plaintiff's case never got beyond, if it got as far as, proof in equipoise.

Related to this situation is the further fact that so far as the testimony speaks to the point, at all, the water projected from any of the defendant's locomotives came from a little pipe somewhere close to the rails. As said, an engine southbound is to blame if any engine is. If facing south this pipe would be on what is then the east side of the engine, therefore, as there is evidence that the planks between the rails and the cement walk had a slope west and that there was no ice upon them, all of the evidence would not merely fail to prove that this particular engine cast the water complained of, but would furnish affirmative proof to the contrary. For, water starting on the east side of the track in freezing weather could not cross the track and the planks and freeze upon the cement walk to the west without leaving at least traces of ice upon the plank. As there is as much evidence the water came from a pipe on the east side of the engine southbound as there is that the pipe was on the west side of the engine, it is not only possible to find a theory which fails to sustain the plaintiff, but with like right to surmise one under which it would affirmatively appear defendant was not liable. All of which brings the case within the rule of Wheelan v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 85 Iowa, 167, 52 N. W. 119, which, while often cited for the proposition that equipoise will not discharge burden of proof, and so cited in the O'Connor Case, supra, is none the less no more than a decision that the evidence in the Wheelan Case shows, affirmatively, it was a physical impossibility for the defendant to have been negligent as is therein charged.

(a) Many of the cases cited by appellant fairly sustain the following of his propositions: (1) One may so do a lawful act as to be liable to another for injury thereby caused, because all must use their property in such manner as not to injure others. (2) Whoever makes a walk hazardous is liable to one thereby injured. (3) If a railroad negligently discharges water from its locomotive and so causes ice to form on a public walk it is liable to any who are injured by falling on ice so created. His fault lies in assuming for these cases not only a holding that whoever does these things is liable, but that they hold the evidence which appellant has proved that to have been done which under these cases imposes a liability, if done. McGoldrick v. New York, C. & H. R. R. Co. 66 Hun, 629, 49 N. Y. S. R. 566, 20 N. Y. Supp. 914, is typical. In that case it was said emphatically that there was a jury question where defendant permitted water to flow from its tank to a walk where it froze and caused plaintiff's injury. This determines that if there were evidence here that the engine of defendant had sent water upon this walk in freezing weather plaintiff was entitled to go to the jury. But, of course, the New York decision had no occasion to determine, and does not attempt to determine, what evidence that water was so cast is required to make a jury question. It settles merely that where it is shown or conceded that the machinery of a party thus casts water it cannot be said as matter of law there is no liability. Other citations are of like ultimate effect. They hold in various ways that one may so handle surface or other water in freezing weather, and other weather too, and so obstruct by ice and other things as to become liable to those who are injured thereby. All of them declare what liability there is if the thing charged be done. They do not pass upon what sends it to the jury whether the thing charged was done. This disposes of Illinois C. R. Co. v. Com. 29 Ky. L. Rep. 754, 96 S. W. 467; Maloney's Case, 206 Mass. 1, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 200, 91 N. E. 911, 3 N. C. C. A. 137; Benard's Case, 23 R. I. 581, 51 Atl. 209; Hynes's Case, 194 Mass. 435, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 598, 80 N. E. 503; Leahan's Case, 178 Mass. 566, 53 L.R.A. 891, 86 Am. St. Rep. 506, 60 N. E. 382; Isham's Case, 89 Minn. 397, 93 N. W. 224, 14 Am. Neg. Rep. 112; 28 Cyc. pp. 1438, 1439; Davis's Case, 171 N. Y. 336, 57 L.R.A. 545, 89 Am. St. Rep. 817, 64 N. E. 4; McDonald v. Toledo Consol. Street R. Co. 20 C. C. A. 332, 43 U. S. App. 79, 74 Fed. 104 (Ohio); Fletcher's Case, L. R. 3 H. L. 330, 1 Eng. Rul. Cas. 235, 6 Mor. Min. Rep. 129; Brown's Case, 202 Pa. 297, 58 L.R.A. 321, 51 Atl. 962; Shipley's Case, 106 Mass. 199, 8 Am. Rep. 318. 28 Cyc. pp. 1438, 1439, supra, adds that a statute which limits the liability of municipalities to persons injured by snow or ice does not apply to abutting owners (Leahan's Case, Isham's Case, and Hynes's Case); that there can be no prescriptive right to maintain a nuisance created by dealing with surface water and accumulation of snow and ice. The Hynes Case holds, further, it is no defense that some of the ice formed from water coming from a source beyond the control of the defendant. Brown's Case and Shipley's Case, supra, add, in effect, it is no defense that what was done is customary.

Further light is thrown upon the position of appellant by a consideration of what he claims for some other cases cited, to wit, that they are decisive here. Of the cases for which this sweeping claim is made, that of Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Hoag, 90 Ill. 339, holds that where a railway company turns its water from a tank upon the premises of another, where it spreads and freezes and so does damage to the property owner, it cannot escape on the ground that the freezing is an act of nature. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Nelson, 153 Ill. 89, 38 N. E. 560, rules that where a boy ten years old, while standing in a street near a railroad track L.R.A.1917B.

waiting for a train to pass by, stepped from the track to avoid the train, and thereby fell against a pile of ashes left in the street by a railroad company and slipped under the cars and was killed, there was sufficient evidence of the company's negligence and the boy's exercise of due care to justify submitting these issues to the jury. Appellant declares Canfield's Case, 78 Mich. 356, 44 N. W. 385, "is precisely in point,"—is a flat holding that a state of the evidence similar to the one at bar makes a case for the jury. The case holds, no more no less, that where the testimony shows defendant had a stand-pipe with an arm swinging around to supply locomotives, and this arm was swung so far as to make water fall upon the sidewalk where it froze and made very slippery ice, and plaintiff without fault was injured by falling on that walk, there was a proper case for the jury. Another "case in point" is that of Thuringer v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 71 Hun, 526, 55 N. Y. S. R. 87, 24 N. Y. Supp. 1087; Id. 82 Hun, 33, 63 N. Y. S. R. 860, 31 N. Y. Supp. 419. It decides this: Water from a water column used to supply engines dripped while the column was shut off, and the wind carried it to the sidewalk. The drain which usually carried off the water was allowed to become blocked by ice and snow, "and the water allowed to continue to flow upon the sidewalk, which became icy and dangerous." Plaintiff fell on the ice upon that walk, "which had been allowed to accumulate thereon." There was "a customary formation of ice there to a certain extent." The question submitted was "whether plaintiff was negligent in permitting water to flow upon the sidewalk and freeze so as to render it dangerous for persons to pass over it." It was left to the jury to say whether defendant was negligent, whether plaintiff's negligence caused or contributed to plaintiff's injury, and held it was no defense to claim that the city only was liable.

We are further told that in Tiborsky's Case, 124 Wis. 243, 102 N. W. 549, 17 Am. Neg. Rep. 755, the facts and principles of law involved here are as nearly like the facts and law in the instant case as they could well be. In a strong opinion by Judge Cassoday it is held that the district court erred in directing a verdict against the plaintiff, and that the supreme court of Wisconsin had gone much further than this one is asked to go, "and not further than good law and good sense require." The case was this: A truck owned by defendant railroad was found where the answer of defendant admitted it had been constantly used, and the only question was whether, after using it there, the defendant had left it there. As to a pedestrian who collided with the truck on the sidewalk in front of the depot it is decided that res ipsa loquitur does not apply.

It seems that these "cases in point" do not warrant what is so urgently claimed for them. Surely the question in this case is, Has plaintiff any evidence defendant did what it is charged with? Cases which merely decide it is liable if or where it did these things have no relevance to that question, since there is no way to exchange citations for testimony. Other citations require even less exhaustive discussion. Waltemeyer's Case, 71 Mo. App. 354, and Dahlin v. Walsh, 192 Mass. 163, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 615, 77 N. E. 830, 20 Am. Neg. Rep. 367, involve whether and when the fact that the ice is due to natural causes operates as an excuse or defense. Willard's Case, 22 Vt. 458, Dill. Mun. Corp. 1890 ed. § 1034; Elliott's Case, 27 N. H. 204; Gates v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 150 Pa. 50, 16 L.R.A. 554, 24 Atl. 638; Batty's Case, 24 Vt. 155; Schwartz v. Gilmore, 45 Ill. 455, 92 Am. Dec. 227; Calder's Case, 66 Iowa, 219, 55 Am. Rep. 270, 23 N. W. 638; Brown's Case, 202 Pa. 297, 58 L.R.A. 321, 51 Atl. 962; Congreve's Case, 18 N. Y. 84, 72 Am. Dec. 495; Landru v. Lund, 38 Minn. 538, 38 N. W. 699; Lillstrom's Case, 53 Minn. 464, 20 L.R.A. 587, 55 N. W. 624, 12 Am. Neg. Cas. 131, and McDonald's Case, 20 C. C. A. 322, 43 U. S. App. 79, 74 Fed. 108, 109, hold in various ways and from various angles that liability for creating a nuisance due to accumulation of snow and ice, or otherwise, cannot be shifted about between landlord and tenant, the municipality that authorizes the use of streets and the licensee, and between contractor and subcontractor. 28 Cyc. p. 1439, Dill. Mun. Corp. 1890 ed. § 1032, Cahill's Case, 18 Minn. 324, Gil. 292, 10 Am. Rep. 184, Hay's Case, 2 N. Y. 160, 51 Am. Dec. 279, and Shepherd's Case, 160 Mass. 496, 36 N. E. 475, established between them the general proposition that one who creates a nuisance is liable for injury caused thereby, without inquiry as to whether he was negligent. One application, the one in the Shepherd Case, being to a case where a building is put up in such manner and so close to the street that snow and ice will fall from it to the injury of passersby. Savage v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 31 Minn. 419, 18 N. W. 272, Hill v. Winsor, 118 Mass. 251, Weick v. Lander, 75 Ill. 93, and Carter v. Sioux City Service Co. 160 Iowa, 78, 141 N. W. 26, deal with cases where it is manifest the question of negligence was for a jury, and so hold. The last-named case, for instance, is that in a case of injury by collision of a street car and a train it was a question for a jury whether the street car conductor was negligent in signaling his car to proceed before he had gone a sufficient distance ahead of it to reach the track on which the train collided with was running. Hynes v. Brewer, 194 Mass. 435, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 598, 80 N. E. 503, merely finds there was evidence that one injured by falling upon an icy crosswalk was in the exercise of due care, notwithstanding that he was able to see the ice at the place where he was injured as well as it could be seen on other walks in that vicinity; and Tibby's Case, 82 Mo. 299, decides that whether the defendant had actual knowledge of its own usages is not worthy of consideration. The cases upon which appellant relies do not aid him.

The case is a most serious one for the plaintiff, and we have given it commensurate consideration. We are clearly satisfied the trial court had no alternative but to direct a verdict against the plaintiff.

Wherefore the judgment below must be and is affirmed.

Evans, Ch. J., and Ladd and Gaynor, JJ., concur.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

LE ROY E. WAUGH, Plff. in Err.,
v.

GUTHRIE GAS, LIGHT, FUEL, & IMPROVEMENT COMPANY.

(37 Okla. 239, 131 Pac. 174.)

Limitation of actions — personal injuries.

1. An action for damages for personal injuries, being an action for injury to the Headnotes by SHARP, C.

Note. — For concealment or ignorance of cause of action as suspending Statute of Limitations against action for personal injuries or death, see annotation following this case, post, 1259.
L.R.A.1917B.

rights of a person, not arising on contract, is governed by the 3d subdivision of § 5550, Comp. Laws 1909, and must be brought within two years after the cause of action shall have accrued.

For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, III. f, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — effect of fraudulent concealment.

2. Fraudulent concealment constitutes an implied exception to the Statute of Limitations, and a party who wrongfully conceals material facts, and thereby prevents a discovery of the wrong, or the fact that a cause of action has accrued against him, is not allowed to take advantage of his own wrong by pleading the statute, the purpose of which is to prevent wrong and fraud.

For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, II. e, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — failure to disclose — effect.

3. The mere failure to disclose that a cause of action exists is not sufficient to prevent the running of the statute. There must be something more,—some actual artifice to prevent knowledge of the fact, some affirmative act of concealment, or some misrepresentation to exclude suspicion and prevent inquiry.

For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, II. e, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 7, 1913.)

ERROR to the District Court for Logan County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries due to an explosion of gas for which defendant was alleged to be responsible. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. Joseph Wisby, John A. Remy, and C. G. Hornor, for plaintiff in error:

The plaintiff's ignorance of his cause of action, and the concealment thereof by the defendant, suspended the operation of the statute.

Carrier v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 79 Iowa, 80, 6 L.R.A. 799, 44 N. W. 203; 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 244, 245; 25 Cyc. 1214, 1215; Reynolds v. Hennessy, 17 R. I. 169, 23 Atl. 639; Tillison v. Ewing, 87 Ala. 350, 6 So. 276; Porter v. Smith, 65 Ala. 169; Kane v. Cook, 8 Cal. 449; Lewis v. Denison, 2 App. D. C. 387; Moses v. Taylor, 6 Mackey, 255; Campbell v. Vining, 23 Ill. 525; Grant v. Odiorne, 43 Ill. App. 402; Athey v. Hunter, 65 Ill. App. 453; First Massachusetts Turnp. Corp. v. Field, 3 Mass. 201, 3 Am. Dec. 124; Shelby County v. Bragg, 135 Mo. 291, 36 S. W. 600; State ex rel. Barringer v. Hawkins, 103 Mo. App. 251, 77 S. W. 98; Hickman v. Hickman, 46 Mo. App. 496; Quimby v. Blackey, 63 N. H. 77; Way v. Cutting, 20 N. H. 187; Bowman v. Sanborn, 18 N. H. 205; Cook v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 81 Iowa, 551, 9 L.R.A. 764, 25 Am. St. Rep. 512, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 383, 46 N. W. 1080; Bradford v. McCormick, 71 Iowa, 129, 32 N. W. 93; Boomer v. French, 40 Iowa, 601; Hughes v. First Nat. Bank, 110 Pa. 428, 1 Atl. 417; Morgan v. Tener, 83 Pa. 305; Campbell v. Boggs, 48 Pa. 524; McDowell v. Potter, 8 Pa. 189, 49 Am. Dec. 503; Harrisburg Bank v. Forster, 8 Watts, 12; Harrell v. Kelly, 2 M'Cord L. 426; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Gay, 86 Tex. 571, 25 L.R.A. 52, 26 S. W. 599, 88 Tex. 111, 30 S. W. 543; Anding v. Perkins, 29 Tex. 348; Ripley v. Withee, 27 Tex. 14; Munson v. Hallowell, 26 Tex. 475, 84 Am. Dec. 582; Larsen v. Utah Loan & T. Co. 23 Utah, 449, 65 Pac. 208; Sherwood v. Sutton, 5 Mason, 143, Fed. Cas. No. 12,782; Granger v. L.R.A. 1917B.

George, 5 Barn. & C. 149, 108 Eng. Reprint, 56, 7 Dowl. & R. 729, 29 Revised Rep. 196, 16 Eng. Rul. Cas. 205; Clark v. Hougham, 2 Barn. & C. 149, 107 Eng. Reprint, 339, 3 Dowl. & R. 322, 1 L. J. K. B. 249; Bree v. Holbech, 2 Dougl. K. B. 655, 99 Eng. Reprint, 415; Andrews v. Smithwick, 34 Tex. 544; Homer v. Fish, 1 Pick. 436, 11 Am. Dec. 218; Farnam v. Brooks, 9 Pick. 212; Cole v. McGlathry, 9 Me. 131; Bishop v. Little, 3 Me. 405; Morton v. Chandler, 8 Me. 9; Douglas v. Elkins, 28 N. H. 26; Jones v. Conoway, 4 Yeates, 109; M'Dowell v. Young, 12 Serg. & R. 128; Rush v. Barr, 1 Watts, 110; Pennock v. Freeman, 1 Watts, 401; Raymond v. Simonson, 4 Blackf. 85; Mitchell v. Thompson, 1 McLean, 96, Fed. Cas. No. 9,669; Tillison v. Ewing, 91 Atl. 468, 8 So. 1404; Holt v. Wilson, 75 Ala. 58; Church of the Holy Trinity v. United States, 143 U. S. 457, 36 L. ed. 226, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 511.

Messrs. Dale, Blerer, & Hegler for defendant in error.

Sharp, C., filed the following opinion:

Plaintiff's petition, filed in the district court of Logan county, June 7, 1910, charged that defendant company was, on April 7, 1907, engaged in the business of supplying artificial gas to the residents of the city of Guthrie, for use in their residences and places of business, and as such had constructed its gas pipe lines and other equipment throughout said city; that plaintiff was a merchant and occupied the ground floor room of a certain store building at No. 114 West Harrison avenue in said city; that said store building was piped for and supplied with water received through the water supply line of the waterworks of said city; that the defendant company's gas line was constructed in the alleyway at the rear of said building, in close proximity with and near the water supply line; and that, by permitting its said gas line to become out of repair to an extent that gas escaped therefrom at a point near the water supply line in the rear of plaintiff's building, said gas was transmitted along, to, and under the building occupied by plaintiff, and there caused to be ignited and exploded, whereby, and on account of which wrongful and negligent acts, plaintiff sustained permanent and serious physical injuries, as described in said petition. Anticipating the plea of limitations, plaintiff sought to avoid that defense by charging that defendant was a public service corporation, and that there devolved upon it, under and by virtue of its franchise and by-laws, the high responsibility of keeping its pipe line and appliances in good repair, etc.; that this duty was one owing not only to its patrons, but to the public in general; that, notwithstanding the duties and obligations due and owing by defendant, it wholly failed to perform them in the above particulars, and, further, wilfully, and after the date of said accident, concealed the facts connected therewith from plaintiff and all persons acting for and in his behalf. The petition alleged "that the defendant, in order to conceal, and in the act of concealing, the said facts of the cause of said explosion from the plaintiff, at and for some time thereafter, was guilty of wrongful, immoral, and unlawful conduct as follows: viz., By that of one of its officers, agents, or employees, one whose name is unknown to the plaintiff, immediately after said explosion presenting himself at said building and preventing divers persons who were friends and representatives of the plaintiff, from entering said building and making any investigations whatever as to the cause thereof, and then and there, by words, signs, and gestures, unknown to the plaintiff, leading the plaintiff's said friends and representatives to believe that his action was in order to protect, and for the purpose of protecting, the interest of property; by the defendant, subsequent to said explosion; and further by preventing its said officers, agents, and employees from disclosing any facts of the cause thereof to persons other than the officers, agents, and employees of the defendant; and by the defendant making, and causing to be made, false, fictitious, and fraudulent reports as to the cause of said explosion,—all of which was done by the defendant for the purpose of leading this plaintiff to believe that said explosion was not caused by the escape of artificial gas from the defendant's gas lines." It was further charged that plaintiff had made diligent efforts to discover the cause of the explosion by making inquiries from the officers and employees of the defendant, and from other persons, and by examination of the premises and lines of the defendant company, but was wholly unable to discover the cause thereof until within one month of the date of filing his petition.

The sufficiency of the petition was attacked by demurrer, the defendant specifically pleading the Two-year Statute of Limitations. The demurrer was sustained. Plaintiff electing to stand on the sufficiency of his petition, judgment was rendered for the defendant, and from this judgment an appeal has been prosecuted. The Statute of Limitations applicable is, we think, the 3d subdivision of § 5550, Comp. Laws 1909, which provides that an action for the injury to the rights of another, not arising on contract, and not therein enumerated, shall be brought within two years after the cause of action shall have accrued. Atchison, T. L.R.A.1917B.

& S. F. R. Co. v. King, 31 Kan. 708, 3 Pac. 565; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Wilcox, 32 Okla. 51, 121 Pac. 658.

Plaintiff's injury was sustained more than two years before the bringing of the action, so that, unless the alleged fraudulent concealment by defendant of the facts serves to postpone the operation of the statute, plaintiff's cause of action was barred by limitations. This is the sole remaining question presented for our determination. The statute contains no exception of the kind; and, the action not being predicated upon fraud, that provision of the statute authorizing suit to be commenced, in an action for relief on the ground of fraud, within two years after the discovery of the fraud, does not apply. The first three subdivisions of § 5550, Comp. Laws 1909, are identical with the same numbered provisions of § 5610, General Statutes of Kansas 1909. It does not appear from an examination of the authorities that we have made, that the exact question here presented was ever before the supreme court of Kansas prior to the adoption by the territorial legislature of the above part of the statute, though in the early case of Voss v. Bachop, 5 Kan. 59, we find that the supreme court of that state refused to permit the plea of the Statute of Limitations in bar of an action brought by a client against an attorney for money collected and not accounted for. The court, speaking through Kingman, Ch. J., held that, the allegations of the petition charging that defendant, by his own misrepresentations, had prevented a demand being made on him, said defendant was estopped by his own acts from setting up the statute, and cited in support of its position the case of Way v. Cutting, 20 N. H. 180, a case not involving any professional or fiduciary relationship. In quoting from the latter case the court said: "The principle of natural justice and of positive law that precludes a party from deriving a benefit from his own wrong has from an early period been applied by courts, both of law and equity, to the construction of the Statutes of Limitations. It has accordingly been repeatedly held that a party shall not be protected by the lapse of time during which he has, by his own fraud, prevented the party whom he has injured from asserting his rights at law, and that he, against whom the statute bar is interposed, may avoid it by showing that he has been kept in ignorance of his claim till within the period limited by law for bringing his suit by the fraudulent practices of the party setting up the defense."

The question, in a somewhat changed form, was again before the supreme court of Kansas in McMullen v. Winfield Bldg. & L. Asso. 64 Kan. 298, 56 L.R.A. 924, 91

Am. St. Rep. 236, 67 Pac. 892. There the default was made more than six years prior to the commencement of the action; but it was charged that the secretary of the company artfully and fraudulently concealed his misappropriations by making false entries, etc., in the books, and that the association had no knowledge of his wrongful and fraudulent acts until shortly before bringing its action. It was observed by the court: "Did the fraudulent concealment interfere with the operation of the Statute of Limitations? Did the cause of action accrue when the fraud was committed, or not until the fraudulent conduct and defaults were discovered? Courts of equity have been holding that, independent of a statutory provision, the defendant's fraud and concealment of a cause of action will postpone the running of the Statute of Limitations until such time as the plaintiff discovers the fraud, and this upon the theory that the defendant, having by his own wrong and fraud prevented the plaintiff from bringing his action, cannot take advantage of his own wrong by setting up the statute as a defense. Some authorities confine this rule to proceedings in courts of equity, but hold that at law neither fraud, concealment, nor other circumstance will affect the operation of the statute, unless it is expressly provided for by statute. The weight of authority in this country and in England applies the rule to actions at law as well as to suits in equity. In Bailey v. Glover, 21 Wall. 342, 22 L. ed. 636, Mr. Justice Miller, in holding that concealed fraud was an implied exception to the Statute of Limitations, equally applicable to suits at law as well as in equity, said: 'Statutes of Limitations are intended to prevent frauds, to prevent parties from asserting rights after a lapse of time had destroyed or impaired the evidence which would show that such rights never existed, or had been satisfied, transferred, or extinguished, if they ever did exist. To hold that, by concealing a fraud, or by committing fraud in a manner that it concealed itself, until such time as the party committing the fraud could plead the Statute of Limitations to protect it, is to make the law, which was designed to prevent fraud, the means by which it is made successful and secure.' See also Munson v. Hallowell, 26 Tex. 475, 84 Am. Dec. 582; Rosenthal v. Walker, 111 U. S. 185, 28 L. ed. 395, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 382; Traer v. Clews, 116 U. S. 528, 29 L. ed. 467, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 155; Lieberman v. First Nat. Bank, 8 Del. Ch. 229, 40 Atl. 382; Lieberman v. First Nat. Bank, 2 Penn. (Del.) 416, 48 L.R.A. 514, 82 Am. St. Rep. 414, 45 Atl. 901; Sparks v. Farmers' Bank, 3 Del. Ch. 274; Moore v. Waco Bldg. Assn. 19 Tex. Civ. L.R.A.1917B.

App. 68, 45 S. W. 974; 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 245."

Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Atchison Grain Co. — Kan. —, 70 Pac. 933, was an action to recover damages for wrongful discrimination in freight rates. It was held that concealment and fraud constituted an implied exception to the Statute of Limitations, and that a party who wrongfully concealed material facts, and thereby prevented a discovery of the wrong, or the fact that a cause of action had accrued against him, would not be allowed to take advantage of his own wrong by setting up the statute, the design of which was to prevent wrong and fraud. A rehearing being granted, it was held (68 Kan. 585, 75 Pac. 1051, 1 Ann. Cas. 639) that, although the defendant succeeded in concealing the fact of its discrimination from plaintiff until less than eighteen months prior to the filing of the petition, no ground for postponing the operation of the statute was shown. A vigorous dissenting opinion, however, was filed by Johnston, Ch. J., in which a great number of authorities are cited as sustaining the former position of the court. The rule announced in the majority opinion has since been followed in Stewart v. Bank of Indian Territory, 68 Kan. 756, 75 Pac. 1055; Beckham v. Burrton State Bank, 68 Kan. 833, 75 Pac. 1133; McAllister v. Fair, 72 Kan. 533, 535, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 726, 115 Am. St. Rep. 233, 84 Pac. 112, 7 Ann. Cas. 973; Baxter v. Krause, 79 Kan. 851, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 547, 101 Pac. 467; Caspar v. Lewin, 82 Kan. 604, 627, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 526, 109 Pac. 657. We are not concluded, however, by these opinions, all of them, save Voss v. Bachop, supra, being rendered subsequent to the adoption of the statute. Barnes v. Lynch, 9 Okla. 156, 59 Pac. 995.

The first authoritative application to this principle to courts of law found encouragement, if not origin, in the language of Lord Mansfield in Bree v. Holbech, 2 Dougl. K. B. 654, 99 Eng. Reprint, 415, where it was observed: "There may be cases which fraud will take out of the Statute of Limitation." In answer to the charge frequently made by different courts, that the expression was mere dictum, it was said by Story, J., in Sherwood v. Sutton, 5 Mason, 143. Fed. Cas. No. 12,782: "It is by no means a just representation of this case to consider this language as a mere dictum of Lord Mansfield. He must be understood to have spoken in the name of the court; and the leave granted to the plaintiff to amend and reply fraud in the defendant is proof that the court entertained no doubt upon the principal point." It is said by this learned judge in the opinion that the rule announced by Lord Mansfield has often been cited, both at law and in equity, since its decision, and has never been denied in England. Judge Story's opinion contains a complete review of the authorities, both in England and America, up to the time of its rendition. It contains a strong and able presentation of the law, to which little, if anything, except in the way of subsequent authorities, could be added. After reviewing the English authorities, it is said that, with one exception (Troup v. Smith, 20 Johns. 33), the American cases are in conformity with the rule announced in Bree v. Holbech. Among the leading cases, and one cited by Justice Story, is First Massachusetts Turnp. Corp. v. Field, 3 Mass. 201, 3 Am. Dec. 124, decided at a time when Parker, J., Sedgwick, J., and Parsons, Ch. J., were all members of that court, and to which the two latter gave expression of their views in the opinion; both referring to the early English case of Bree v. Holbech, supra. The former in the opinion said: "Is this an answer [plea of limitations] which ought to be deemed satisfactory in a court of justice? I think not. If it should, every man would be screened from making satisfaction for injuries resulting from the fraudulent execution of his contracts, if his fraud was attended with such circumstances of artful concealment as to elude detection until after a lapse of more than six years." While it is said by Parsons, Ch. J.: "The delay of bringing the suit is owing to the fraud of the defendant, and the cause of action against him ought not be considered as having accrued until the plaintiff could obtain the knowledge that he had a cause of action. If this knowledge is fraudulently concealed from him by the defendant, we should violate a sound rule of law, if we permitted the defendant to avail himself of his own fraud."

In Traer v. Clews, 115 U. S. 528, 29 L. ed. 467, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 155, the plea set up the bar prescribed by the 2d section of the Bankruptcy Act, being § 5057 of the Revised Statutes, which declared: "No suit, either at law or in equity, shall be maintainable in any court between an assignee in bankruptcy and a person claiming an adverse interest, touching any property or rights of property transferable to or vested in such assignee, unless brought within two years from the time when the cause of action accrued for or against such assignee." In answer to the plea of the statute, various acts of fraudulent concealment were charged. The court observed that the case was substantially the same, so far as the question then before it was concerned, as Bailey v. Glover, 21 Wall. 342, 22 L. ed. 636, cited in McMullen v. Winfield Bldg. & L. Asso. 64 Kan. 298, 56 L.R.A. 924, 91 Am. L.R.A. 1917B.

St. Rep. 236, 67 Pac. 892, and attention was there called that the case of Bailey v. Glover had never been overruled, doubted, or modified by that court; but on the contrary, in Rosenthal v. Walker, 111 U. S. 185, 28 L. ed. 395, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 382, it was reaffirmed, and was distinguished from the case of Wood v. Carpenter, 101 U. S. 135, 25 L. ed. 807, relied on by the appellants, and concluded by holding that, upon the pleadings and evidence, the suit was not barred by the limitation prescribed in § 5057 of the Revised Statutes. It will be noted that the foregoing statute contains no exception or provision for tolling the statute. An able and scholarly presentation of the case is presented in Munson v. Hallowell, 26 Tex. 475, 84 Am. Dec. 582, here all of the early authorities, both English and American, are reviewed.

In Texas, as with us (Comp. Laws 1909, § 5542), the distinctions between actions at law and suits in equity are abolished. The court arrived at the conclusion that, there being no distinction in that state between legal and equitable remedies, it followed, as a question of legislative intention in the adoption of the Statutes of Limitation, that the fraudulent concealment by a defendant of the litigation would prevent the statute from running against the plaintiff. It was said: "The fact that we have no distinction in our courts between legal and equitable remedies, instead of repelling this uniform construction that has been given to the statute, would seem to afford a still stronger reason for leading with us to its adoption. For if, as it is justly said, there is no distinction of this character in our judicial system, and the statute must therefore be regarded as binding upon the courts, whether in the exercise of their functions as legal or equitable tribunals, is it not a legitimate conclusion that the legislature, having adopted the statute as the rule of decision for a tribunal administering both legal and equitable remedies, must have intended to have adopted it as well with reference to the construction previously placed upon it in equity as at law, if the case before the court appropriately required it? If not, the mere fact that legal and equitable powers have been blended, with us, in a single tribunal, cuts a party off from a remedy to which we would be entitled under the same statute, if legal and equitable remedies were administered in different forums. Such is not believed to be the intention in the adoption of our judicial system."

The question is ably considered in Reynolds v. Hennessy, 17 R. I. 169, 23 Atl. 639; the court saying: "The statute does not take away the debt, but simply affects the remedy; and these exceptions show how liberally the statute has always been created as a remedial measure. But there is a wide distinction between ingrafting an exception into a statute by construction and construing it according to its obvious intent. The rule laid down by Blackstone of considering the old law, the mischief, and the remedy, when applied to this statute, shows that its purpose was to cut off those cases whose prosecution would, or might, result in fraud. It was clearly not intended to thwart the fundamental maxim that no one may take advantage of his own wrong. Hence, if one by fraud conceals the fact of a right of action for six years, it is not ingrafting an exception on the statute to say he is not protected thereby; but it is simply saying he never was within it, since the protection was never designed for such as he. But whether this be taken as an exception, or only a limitation of the statute, it rests upon sound reason and just policy. Such a construction also has been so frequently applied that it is now said to have the weight of authority in its favor, although it must be admitted there are strongly expressed opinions the other way. Buswell, Limitations, § 390; Angell, Limitations, 6th ed. chap. 18, § 186; 3 Parsons, Contr. 99."

Among other cases supporting the authorities mentioned are the following: Snodgrass v. Branch Bank, 25 Ala. 161, 60 Am. Dec. 505; Porter v. Smith, 65 Ala. 169; Conditt v. Holden, 92 Ark. 618, 135 Am. St. Rep. 206, 123 S. W. 765; Kane v. Cook, 8 Cal. 449; Curran v. Hubbard, 14 Cal. App. 733, 114 Pac. 81, 83; Lewis v. Denison, 2 App. D. C. 387; Hoyle v. Jones, 35 Ga. 40, 89 Am. Dec. 273; Campbell v. Vining, 23 Ill. 525; Grant v. Odiorne, 43 Ill. App. 402; Athey v. Hunter, 65 Ill. App. 453; Jones v. Lloyd, 117 Ill. 597, 7 N. E. 119; Cook v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 81 Iowa, 551, 9 L.R.A. 764, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 383, 25 Am. St. Rep. 512, 46 N. W. 1080; Carrier v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 79 Iowa, 80, 6 L.R.A. 799, 44 N. W. 203; Eising v. Andrews, 66 Conn. 58, 50 Am. St. Rep. 75, 33 Atl. 585; Bradford v. McCormick, 71 Iowa, 129, 32 N. W. 93; Boomer v. French, 40 Iowa, 601; Lancaster v. Springer, 239 Ill. 472, 88 N. E. 272; Wood v. Williams, 142 Ill. 269, 34 Am. St. Rep. 79, 31 N. E. 681; Fortune v. English, 226 Ill. 262, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1005, 117 Am. St. Rep. 253, 80 N. E. 781, 9 Ann. Cas. 77; Wear v. Skinner, 46 Md. 257, 24 Am. Rep. 617; First Massachusetts Turnp. Corp. v. Field, 3 Mass. 201, 3 Am. Dec. 124; Manufacturers' Nat. Bank v. Perry, 144 Mass. 313, 11 N. E. 81; Dean v. Ross, 178 Mass. 397, 60 N. E. 119; Tompkins v. Hollister, 60 Mich. 470, 27 N. W. 651; Mast v. Easton, 33 Minn. 161, 22 N. W. 253; *Bescher v. L.R.A.*1917B.

Paulus, 58 Ind. 271; Fisher v. Tuller, 122 Ind. 31, 23 N. E. 523; Campbell v. Smith, 49 Ind. App. 639, 97 N. E. 954; Cress v. Ivens, 155 Iowa, 119, 134 N. W. 869; Deake's Appeal, 80 Me. 50, 12 Atl. 790; Clark v. Goodrum, 61 Miss. 731; State ex rel. Bell v. Yates, 231 Mo. 276, 132 S. W. 672; Shelby County v. Bragg, 135 Mo. 291, 36 S. W. 600; State ex rel. Barringer v. Hawkins, 103 Mo. App. 251, 77 S. W. 98; Hickam v. Hickam, 46 Mo. App. 496; Douglas v. Elkins, 28 N. H. 26; Quimby v. Blackey, 63 N. H. 77; Way v. Cutting, 20 N. H. 187; Bowman v. Sanborn, 18 N. H. 205; Hughes v. First Nat. Bank, 110 Pa. 428, 1 Atl. 417; Morgan v. Tener, 83 Pa. 305; Campbell v. Boggs, 48 Pa. 524; McDowell v. Potter, 8 Pa. 189, 49 Am. Dec. 503; Harrisburg Bank v. Forster, 8 Watts, 12, 20 Atl. 307; Reynolds v. Hennessy, 17 R. I. 169, 23 Atl. 639; Harrell v. Kelly, 2 McCord, L. 426; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Gay, 86 Tex. 571, 25 L.R.A. 52, 26 S. W. 599; id., 88 Tex. 111, 30 S. W. 543; Anding v. Perkins, 29 Tex. 348; Ripley v. Withee, 27 Tex. 14; Munson v. Hallowell, 26 Tex. 475, 84 Am. Dec. 582; Larsen v. Loan & T. Co. 23 Utah, 449, 65 Pac. 208; Cloyd v. Reynolds, 44 Pa. Super. Ct. 81; Boro v. Hidell, 122 Tenn. 80, 135 Am. St. Rep. 857, 120 S. W. 961; Ragland v. Owen, 84 Va. 227, 5 S. E. 91; Reynolds v. Gauthrop, 37 W. Va. 3, 16 S. E. 364; Sherwood v. Sutton, 5 Mason, 143, Fed. Cas. No. 12,782; Granger v. George, 5 Barn. & C. 149, 108 Eng. Reprint, 56, 7 Dowl. & R. 729, 29 Revised Rep. 196, 16 Eng. Rul. Cas. 205; Clark v. Hougham, 2 Barn. & C. 149, 107 Eng. Reprint, 339, 3 Dowl. & R. 322, 1 L. J. K. B. 240; Bree v. Holbeck, 2 Dougl. K. B. 655, 99 Eng. Reprint, 415.

Authorities announcing a contrary rule, in addition to the Kansas cases already cited, are Fee v. Fee, 10 Ohio, 469, 36 Am. Dec. 103; Howk v. Minnick, 19 Ohio St. 462, 2 Am. Rep. 413; Troup v. Smith, 20 Johns. 48; Leonard v. Pitney, 5 Wend. 30; Allen v. Mille, 17 Wend. 202; Callis v. Waddy, 2 Munf. 511; Smith v. Bishop, 9 Vt. 116, 31 Am. Dec. 607; Hamilton v. Shepherd, 7 N. C. (3 Murph.) 115; Pyle v. Beckwith, 1 J. J. Marsh. 445; Jacobs v. Frederick, 81 Wis. 254, 51 N. W. 320; Peak v. Buck, 3 Baxt. 71; Somerset County v. Veghte, 44 N. J. L. 509; Blount v. Parker, 78 N. C. 128; Murray v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 35 C. C. A. 62, 92 Fed. 868; Wood, Limitations, 3d ed. § 274.

From what we have said, it should not be construed to mean that mere failure to disclose is sufficient to prevent the running of the statute. There must be something more,—some actual artifice to prevent knowledge of the fact, some affirmative act of concealment, or some misrepresentation to exclude suspicion and prevent inquiry. Perry v. Wade, 31 Kan. 428, 2 Pac. 787; Lancaster v. Springer, 239 Ill. 472, 88 N. E. 272; McBride v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 97 Iowa, 91, 59 Am. St. Rep. 395, 66 N. W. 73; Wood v. Williams, 142 Ill. 260, 34 Am. St. Rep. 79, 31 N. E. 681; Smith v. Blachley, 198 Pa. 173, 53 L.R.A. 840, 47 Atl. 985; State ex rel. Graham v. Walters, 31 Ind. App. 77, 99 Am. St. Rep. 244, 66 N. E. 182; Wood v. Carpenter, 101 U. S. 135, 25 L. ed. 807; Bates v. Preble, 151 U. S. 149, 38 L. ed. 106, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277; State ex rel. Bates v. Yates, 231 Mo. 276, 132 S. W. 672. But we think the petition sufficiently met this necessary allegation. It charged that defendant, in various ways, actively made, and caused to be made, false, fictitious, and fraudulent reports as to the cause of the explosion, for the purpose of leading plaintiff to believe that said explosion was not the result of the escape and ignition of artificial gas from defendant's mains; that defendant was at all times well aware of the cause of the explosion, and caused secret repairs to be made of its mains and appliances for the purpose of preventing plaintiff from acquiring the knowledge of the cause of the explosion; and in other ways charged defendant with a fraudulent concealment of the facts which would have disclosed to plaintiff his cause of action against defendant, notwithstanding that plaintiff was at all times active and diligent in his efforts and endeavors to discover the cause thereof. It is no sufficient answer to say, as have counsel in their brief, that plaintiff must have known that he was blown up, and realized that he was injured. This he undoubtedly knew; but it was the fact that defendant by its negligence was the cause of the injury that gave rise to the cause of action against it, not the mere fact of the injury. Upon trial the party relying on the fraudulent concealment of the cause of action to avoid the statute would have the burden of proving such concealment. Following what we believe to be the great weight of authority, and keeping in mind that the very purpose of the Statute of Limitations was to prevent fraud, and not to make it secure and successful, we conclude that the petition stated a good cause of action, and that the trial court erred in sustaining the demurrer.

The judgment of the trial court should therefore be reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to overrule the demurrer, and for further proceeding consistent with this opinion.

Per Curiam:

Adopted in whole.

Petition for rehearing overruled April 5, 1913.

Annotation—Concealment or ignorance of cause of action as suspending Statute of Limitations against the action for personal injuries or death.

The question here presented is whether or not concealment of the existence of a cause of action for personal physical injuries by the responsible party, or ignorance of its existence upon the part of the claimant, suspends the running of the Statute of Limitations against such cause of action during the period of concealment or ignorance. This, of course, includes cases where the concealment was fraudulent, but does not cover cases based upon the fraud itself rather than upon the original cause of action.

Some of the courts seemingly proceed upon the theory that a person must know when he is injured, and therefore that any concealment or ignorance is merely of some element connected with the cause of action, rather than of the cause of action itself, and consequently that such facts do not suspend the Statute of Limitations.

Thus, in Chamberlain v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (1886) 27 Fed. 181, where plaintiff was injured in a railroad accident and it was alleged that the defendant's physician falsely and fraudulently represented that the injuries did not result from such accident, but from another cause, by reason of which plaintiff did not know until after the expiration of the statutory period, and shortly before the commencement of the action, that the injuries from which he was suffering resulted from the accident, it was held that such representations did not prevent the statute from running within the meaning of the statutory exception that the specified statutory period does not apply "if any person, by absconding or concealing himself, or by any other improper act, prevents the commencement of an action," the court saying: "Now, on the face of it, it appears that he [the plaintiff] was hurt, and knew it; that he was injured, and was conscious of it; and all that can be said is that these representations, falsely and fraudulently made by the doctor, were as to the extent of the injury which he had sustained. That does not bring the case within the statute. There was nothing in that to prevent the commencement of the action. All that can be said is that the representations of the doctor misled him as to the extent of the injury he suffered, not as to the fact that he had a cause of action, or had suffered injuries."

So, in Johnson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1915) 224 Fed. 196, where a railroad employee injured by reason of defendant's negligence executed a release and allowed the statutory period to elapse without bringing an action for damages, but alleged that failure to bring action was caused by lack of knowledge on his part of the danger of the conditions described in the action, and that defendant's physicians, who had cared for him, were either themselves ignorant of the facts or purposefully and fraudulently concealed them in order to induce the signing of the release, it was held that plaintiff could neither maintain a suit in equity to cancel the release nor recover in an action at law for damages, as the statutory period of limitations had expired, and the case did not fall within the rule that the plaintiff's ignorance of the wrong committed or of his rights with respect thereto cannot be considered in determining when the statute begins to run, unless there has been concealment of the cause of action or fraud on the part of defendant, or, in special cases, unless the ignorance of plaintiff is due to no fault or negligence of his own, but to the peculiar circumstances of the case. The court also said: "There is no statement in the bill that would indicate any conduct on the part of the defendant which prevented the plaintiff from bringing his action prior to the time or within the period limited by law. Plaintiff must act diligently, and not delay the action beyond the time when he is cognizant of the injuries upon which he bases his right of recovery. In the case at bar plaintiff signed a release a year prior to the expiration of the period of limitation. The bill shows on its face that immediately after signing the release plaintiff grew worse and began to suffer from the complication of diseases which he refers to in his bill. Plaintiff must be held to this knowledge, and likewise to the exercise of ordinary diligence in the prosecution of his action, and in seeking relief from the conduct complained of; and if he fails to exercise this diligence, equity will not suspend the operation of the statute." L.R.A.1917B.

And, again, in McBride v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. (1896) 97 Iowa, 91, 59 Am. St. Rep. 395, 66 N. E. 73, where a railroad employee received injuries which resulted in death, and his administratrix, after the expiration of the statutory period, sought to recover damages therefor and to excuse the delay in commencing the action on the theory that the running of the statute had been interrupted by reason of the fact that the defendant had represented to the plaintiff that the death resulted from an accident and that it was in no manner negligent or to blame, and that it concealed all the facts concerning the accident, it was held that the running of the statute against the claim for damages was not interrupted by such misrepresentations and concealment, the court arguing as follows: "Now, we are asked by counsel to . . . hold that, although some of the facts which go to make up or give a right to a cause of action are known, still, because some of them are not made known or are concealed, therefore that is such a fraudulent concealment as will prevent the running of the statute. There was no concealment in this case of the fact that McBride was killed by the hand car; that he was so killed while in the defendant's service. While it is true that one necessary ingredient of the cause of action—defendant's negligence—was concealed, still, every other fact which went to constitute a cause of action was known to plaintiff. The body of the cause of action, if we may call it such,—the killing of McBride while in defendant's service,—was never concealed. Now, if the defendant did not disclose to the plaintiff the particular facts as to how such accident occurred, or if it asserted that his death was accidental and its hand car in good order, it is, at most, a concealment of evidence which might establish one element in a cause of action."

But it has been held that an actual fraudulent concealment of material facts, which prevents discovery of a wrong, or of the fact that a cause of action has accrued, constitutes an implied exception to the Statute of Limitations, so as to prevent the pleading of the statute as a defense and the defendant taking advantage of his own wrong in violation of the purpose of such statutes. WAUGH v. GUTHRIE GAS, LIGHT, FUEL & IMPROV. Co. ante, 1253, wherein it was held that the defendant's actual fraudulent concealment of the cause of an explosion which injured plaintiff, and of facts which would render it liable to plaintiff in damages, worked a suspension of the Statute of Limitations during the period in which plaintiff, although diligent, was prevented by such representations and concealment from discovering defendant's liability. In this case the court maintained that it was no sufficient answer to say that plaintiff must have known that he was blown up and realized that he was injured, and that while this was undoubtedly the case, it was the fact that defendant by its negligence was the cause of the injury that gave rise to the cause of action, and not the mere fact of the injury. It should be noted that the court also expressly pointed out that the decision should not be construed to mean that the mere failure to disclose that a cause of action exists is sufficient to prevent the running of the statute, but that to have such effect there must be something more, such as some actual artifice to prevent knowledge of the fact, some affirmative act of concealment, or some misrepresentation to exclude suspicion and prevent inquiry.

And some support is afforded the decision in the WAUGH CASE by Whaley v. Catlett (1899) 103 Tenn. 347, 53 S. W. 131, which was an action for damages for wrongful death, in which it was ruled that the fraudulent concealment of such a cause of action would prevent the running of the Statute of Limitations, but that the concealment must be definite, and not merely the concealment of evidence of defendant's connection with the wrongful death. This decision, however, does not seem to go to the full extent of that in the WAUGH CASE.

So, in Texas & P. R. Co. v. Gay (1895) 88 Tex. 111, 30 S. W. 543, it was held that fraudulent representations by a railroad company to the effect that it was in a receiver's hands at the time an action against it for wrongful death accrued, whereby action was not brought against it within the statutory period, tolled the statute so as to permit the maintenance of the action within the statutory period after discovery of the fraudulent concealment of the cause of action. And again in Texas & P. R. Co. v. Gay (1894) 86 Tex. 571, 25 L.R.A. 52, 26 S. W. 599, which was another branch of the same action, it was held that fraudulent concealment of a cause of action for personal injuries resulting in death takes a case out of the bar of the Statute of Limitations, unless plaintiff's failure to discover the facts is due to his neglect. In this case the defendant railroad company's fraudulent concealment operated to conceal the fact that a cause of action existed against the company.

In some states statutes have been enacted which either expressly suspend the running of the Statute of Limitations or extend the period where a person liable to an action fraudulently conceals the cause of action from the knowledge of the person entitled to sue. As illustrative of a statute of the first kind, see Groendal v. Westrate (1912) 171 Mich. 92, 137 N. W. 87, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 906, in which Mich. Comp. Laws 1897, § 9739, was under consideration, and in which it was held that the question whether a physician under the circumstances presented had fraudulently concealed a cause of action for malpractice was for the jury. And as illustrative of statutes which extend the period, see Dryer v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (1913) 170 Mo. App. 550, 157 S. W. 129, which had under consideration provisions of the statutes of Illinois which provide that if a person liable to an action for death fraudulently conceals such cause of action from the knowledge of the person entitled thereto, the case may be brought within a specified period after the discovery of such concealment, and in which it was held that mere denial of liability on the ground of defendant's alleged freedom from negligence and of the deceased servant's contributory negligence was not a fraudulent concealment of the cause of action within the meaning of the statute, the court saying that the concealment was neither of deceased's death, nor of the fact that he was killed through its agency, and that a quite different case would have been presented if defendant had concealed that the deceased had been killed, or that he was in defendant's employ, or that he was killed while in such employ.

G. J. C.

OKLAHOMA CRIMINAL COURT OF APPEALS.

HARRIE BLAKE, Plff. in Err.,
v.

STATE OF OKLAHOMA.

(— Okla. Crim. Rep. —, 160 Pac. 30.)

Embezzlement — failure to pay over money.

1. (a) A fraudulent conversion is an es-

Headnotes by ARMSTRONG, J.

Note. — For mere failure to pay over money as proof of embezzlement, see annotation following this case, post, 1266.

sential element of the crime of embezzlement, and such conversion must be shown by proof that the embezzler appropriated the money to his own personal use or that he placed it to some other use than the purpose for which it was received by him, or that he failed to account for and pay over the same on proper and lawful demand.

(b) Proof of a mere failure to pay over money, standing alone, will not support a judgment of conviction for embezzlement. For other cases, see Embezzlement, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Appeal — failure of proof.

2. When the proof introduced at the trial fails to establish the commission of the offense charged, the verdict of guilty and judgment rendered thereon, as a matter of law, are contrary to the evidence. For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII. 1, 2, a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(September 23, 1916.)

ERROR to the District Court of Wagoner County to review a judgment convicting defendant of embezzlement. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Sponsler & Graves, Owen & Stone, and Sumner J. Lipscomb for plaintiff in error.

Mr. R. McMillan, Assistant Attorney General, for the State.

Armstrong, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff in error, Harrie Blake, was convicted in the district court of Wagoner county, on a charge of embezzlement, and his punishment fixed at imprisonment in the state penitentiary for a term of two years and a fine of $1,000.

The indictment is a lengthy document, and no good purpose can be served by setting the same out in full. It contains, however, allegations to the effect that certain funds "were paid to and received by the said Harrie Blake for the purpose of satisfying a certain judgment in favor of the plaintiff in said action, L. W. Clapp, by virtue of his office as clerk of the district court of Wagoner county, state of Oklahoma. And being then and there by virtue of his office the clerk of the district court, the proper person to receive said sum of money for the use and benefit of the judgment creditor, L. W. Clapp, and having so received said sum of $2,142.63, the property of and belonging to said L. W. Clapp, he, the said Harrie Blake, did in Wagoner county, state of Oklahoma, then and there unlawfully, wilfully, feloniously, and fraudulently, and not in the due and lawful execution of the trust of him, the said Harrie Blake, as clerk of the district court of Wagoner county, state of Oklahoma, L.R.A.1917B.

aforesaid, embezzle, convert, and appropriate said sum of $2,142.63 . . . to the use of him, the said Harrie Blake, contrary to the form of the statutes," etc.

It appears that L. W. Clapp brought a suit in the district court of Wagoner county against C. S. Roach and others and recovered a judgment of $2,142.63. The allegation against the plaintiff in error is to the effect that this money was paid to him, received by him, and embezzled by him.

The testimony introduced by the state was from five witnesses: C. M. Bryant, clerk of the district court at the time of the trial; L. E. Cahill, deputy state examiner and inspector; T. C. Harrill, president of a bank in Wagoner; T. H. Hammett, deputy clerk of the district court under Harrie Blake; and County Attorney C. E. Castle.

In addition, certain admissions were made and certain facts agreed upon by counsel. Witness Bryant testified that after he became clerk of the district court of Wagoner county he received about $2,100 through County Attorney Castle, and paid the same to the attorneys of record for L. W. Clapp in satisfaction of the judgment. He knew nothing further about the facts in the case. He also said that the county never lost anything by reason of the transaction. In fact, that no one lost any money on account of the same. Witness L. E. Cahill did not testify to any incriminating fact. Witness T. C. Harrill testified to no incriminating fact. He was asked about the bank account of Harrie Blake subsequent to December 30, 1911, and said that from and after this date the account of Harrie Blake did not include any item of $2,100 or more. Witness Hammett testified to no incriminating fact.

Witness Castle testified to no incriminating fact.

Counsel for the state and for the accused agreed upon a statement of certain facts, to wit, that Harrie Blake received $2,142.63 in the manner as alleged in the indictment; that he was clerk of the district court of Wagoner county at the time.

Section 5327, Rev. Laws 1910, provides: "Where there is no execution outstanding, the clerk of the court in which the judgment was rendered may receive the amount of the judgment and costs, and receipt therefor, with the same effect as if the same had been paid to the sheriff on an execution; and the clerk shall be liable to be amerced in the same manner and amount as a sheriff for refusing to pay the same to the party entitled thereto, when requested, and shall also be liable on his official bond."

This is the section of the statute which authorizes the clerk, under certain conditions, to receive money in satisfaction of judgments. There is no allegation in the information to the effect that plaintiff in error, as clerk, received this money and failed to pay the same over upon proper demand therefor.

The proof fails to show that any demand was ever made at any time upon the plaintiff in error for the payment of the money in question.

Section 2243, Rev. Laws 1910, among other things, provides that "any sheriff, coroner, clerk of a court, constable or other ministerial officer, and any deputy or subordinate of any ministerial officer who . . . fraudulently appropriates to his own use or to the use of another person, or secretes with intent to appropriate to such use, any money, evidence of debt or other property intrusted to him in virtue of his office—is guilty of felony."

This is the statute under which the conviction in this case was had. It is contended by counsel for plaintiff in error that the judgment in this case should be reversed upon the ground that the verdict is contrary to the evidence. The crime charged in this case was embezzlement. The only proof in the record bearing upon the question of guilt is that the plaintiff in error received the sum of money as charged, and that his successor in office paid the judgment with funds received from the county attorney. Whether or not the same identical funds finally paid this judgment is a question upon which there is no light thrown by proof. It is fundamental that the crime of embezzlement cannot exist without there be a fraudulent conversion. The burden is on the state to show this conversion beyond a reasonable doubt. A felonious conversion under the embezzlement statute should be proved either by proof of an appropriation of the money to the personal use of the accused, that is, that he disposed of the same for his own personal benefit and his own private business, or by putting it to some other use than a proper discharge of the trust imposed, or by proving that the accused, after obtaining lawful possession of the funds, failed to account for or to pay the same over on proper or lawful demand. There was no proof offered of either in this case. If a proper demand had been made upon the accused to pay over or account for the money in question, and he had failed to do so, the law would presume a conversion. This the state not only failed to prove, but did not even attempt to prove. The county attorney, in his opening statement to the jury, stated that he expected to prove these facts, but wholly failed to do so. A fraudulent act of conversion is essential to the validity of a conviction under the statute. A mere failure to pay over the money will not justify the same. See Fitzgerald v. L.R.A. 1917B.

State, 50 N. J. L. 475, 14 Atl. 746; Henderson v. State, 105 Ala. 82, 16 So. 931, id. 129 Ala. 104, 29 So. 799.

This question is discussed at some length in the case of People v. Wyman, 102 Cal. 552, 36 Pac. 932. Among other things, the court, in the discussion in that case, said: "The only other facts relied upon to sustain the verdict are: (1) That defendant neglected up to the time of his arrest, a period of thirteen days, to cash the orders sent him and to pay for the land which his client desired to purchase from the government; and (2) That, when arrested, he did not have on his person all of the money which had been intrusted to him for the purpose of making such payment, and did not offer to account for the same. These facts are clearly insufficient to prove that defendant had fraudulently appropriated the money of the client to his own use prior to the filing of the complaint upon which he was arrested. The fact that he did not have upon his person all of the money sent to him by his client was not of itself sufficient to justify the jury in finding or believing that he had fraudulently appropriated such money to his own use before his arrest, because such fact is not necessarily inconsistent with the fact that he may still have retained such money under his control, or subject to his order. The circumstance, to say the least, is inconclusive, affording only slight, if any, ground for suspicion, and is not strengthened by the other evidence in the case. Nor can the failure of the defendant to pay for the land prior to his arrest be regarded as a conversion by him of his client's money, much less as evidence of the fraudulent appropriation of such money to his own use."

In the case of Fitzgerald v. State, cited supra, the court, among other things, said: "When the owner of goods which have been intrusted to another seeks redress for their conversion in a civil action, he is compelled to establish the fact of conversion by proof of the exercise of some dominion over the goods inconsistent with the right of the true owner. Proof that the owner had demanded the goods, and that the person in possession had refused to return them, is accepted as evidence of conversion. But mere neglect to return, in the absence of a demand, has never been admitted as proof of conversion. Still less will the mere neglect to pay over proceeds lawfully received prove a fraudulent conversion thereof."

In Almand v. State, 110 Ga. 883, 78 Am. St. Rep. 140, 36 S. E. 215, the Supreme Court of Georgia discussed the principle here involved, and, among other things, said: "There can be no question that, under the evidence, the check was delivered to the accused for the purpose of purchasing cotton seed for the oil company, and it cannot be denied that this specific check was delivered by the accused to one of his creditors and went to pay a personal debt. It must be noted, however, that it takes more than this to constitute the offense with which the accused was charged. Undoubtedly the check was technically converted from the use to which it was intended by the owner to have been put; but it is only when a fraudulent conversion has been made that a criminal offense is committed."

See also State v. Hunnicutt, 34 Ark. 562; State v. O'Kean, 35 La. Ann. 901; State v. Flournoy, 46 La. Ann. 1519, 16 So. 454; State v. Smith, 47 La. Ann. 432, 16 So. 938; State v. Pellerin, 118 La. 547, 43 So. 161; People v. Page, 116 Cal. 386, 48 Pac. 326.

In this latter case the court, among other things, said:

"On May 28th defendant did not appear, and an order was then made removing him as guardian of the said estate. 'No other order was made, and no person was appointed guardian in his place and stead, and no demand was made upon him for the moneys and goods in his possession and belonging to the said estate of Louis Lichtneger.' The minute order of removal containing the recital, 'and it appearing to the satisfaction of the court that said Page has appropriated to his own use the funds of the said insane person, and that he has rendered no account thereof,' was next introduced in evidence, against the objection of defendant that it was immaterial, irrelevant, incompetent, and hearsay. In January, 1896, defendant was arrested in the city of New York, and he stated at the time to the officer arresting him 'that he was anxious to return to stand his trial for the offense of which he was accused.' The above is in substance all the evidence introduced by the prosecution, and at the conclusion of it the defendant by his counsel moved the court to instruct the jury to acquit 'upon the ground that the facts proved by the prosecution were not sufficient to establish the guilt of the defendant of embezzlement; that there was nothing in the proof to show that Mr. Page had fraudulently misappropriated any of his ward's money or property; that no demand had ever been made upon him for the money or property of his ward; and that no person had ever been designated by any court or by any person in authority to whom the defendant, Mr. Page, could have delivered the money or property of his ward.' The court overruled the motion, and thereupon the case was submitted without further testimony. It is very evident that the recital above quoted from the order removing defendant from the position of guardian did not constitute any evidence tending to support the charge of embezzlement. At most it was mere hearsay, and Judge Slack, who made the order and was on the stand as a witness, was not asked and did not attempt to state upon what ground the recital was based. It must therefore be entirely disregarded. Leaving out this recital, it will be observed that there was no evidence showing that defendant ever spent, wasted, or appropriated to his own use any of the money of his ward. It is true he drew out from the savings and loan society most of the money which was on deposit there to the credit of Lichtneger, but this was not a criminal act and did not show a criminal intent to misappropriate the money. He may have intended to deposit the money in some other bank, or to invest it in safe securities. The cashier of the savings and loan society, who testified to the withdrawal, stated: 'I do not know what Mr. Page did with the money which he withdrew. He may have deposited it in some other bank or some safe-deposit box.' So far as appears the defendant at the time of the trial may have still had all the money ready to be paid over on demand to anyone authorized to receive it. The fact that he did not pay to the insane asylum the $475 ordered to be paid by Judge Levy does not tend to show a misappropriation of that money. He may have believed that Lichtneger was in the 'pauper ward,' and that the asylum was not entitled to demand pay for keeping and caring for him.

"It is urged for respondent that while 'the fact that a defendant does not take the witness stand on his own behalf cannot be taken against him by the jury, yet it is, in our judgment, a fact that should be taken into consideration by this court on the point of the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict.' We do not think so. A person accused of crime is presumed to be innocent until he is proved to be guilty; and facts and circumstances which cannot be considered by the trial court or the jury in determining as to the guilt or innocence of the accused cannot be resorted to in this court to support a verdict not otherwise authorized."

In the case of People v. Royce, 106 Cal. 173, 39 Pac. 524, the supreme court of California, in another case involving the principle herein discussed, said:

"The fact that the treasurer of an association deposits a check drawn in its favor in a bank, and has the amount credited to his personal account, does not justify a conviction, in the absence of evidence of a demand by the association, or of inability to respond to a demand."

"In the opinion delivered in department [106 Cal. 178, 37 Pac. 630], it is said that

'the errors complained of are based upon rulings upon questions of evidence, and upon instructions to the jury;' and, as to such errors and questions, we are satisfied with that opinion. But a hearing in banc was ordered on account of a grave doubt whether, under any proper view of the law, there was evidence sufficient to warrant a conviction of the crime charged; and, from further consideration of the case, we are satisfied that there was not such evidence.

"The facts shown by the evidence are these: On February 21, 1893, the appellant was treasurer of the Veterans' Home Association, a corporation, and on that day received a certain draft for the benefit of said association for $10,350. On the same day he deposited said draft with the Crocker-Woolworth National Bank of San Francisco, and the amount of the draft was credited to appellant's personal account. The president of the bank testified that he 'did not hear him [appellant] give any direction as to whose credit it should be placed,' and that 'we did not place it to the credit of the association because we have not had any such account on our books.' Appellant informed the bookkeeper of the association that he had received this draft, and the amount of it was entered by the bookkeeper on his ledger of the date of February 21st. On February 24th . . . the association received from appellant $8,310.35 of this money; and the charge against appellant is the embezzlement of the balance of said draft, amounting to about $2,050. What became of this balance does not appear. Appellant may have had it ready to be produced whenever called for. The by-laws of the association required the treasurer to deposit all funds over a certain amount 'in such bank as the board [of directors] may direct;' but it does not appear that the board ever made such direction, or named any bank in which the deposits should be made. The by-laws also provide that all moneys in the hands of the treasurer should be 'turned over to his successor in office;' but it does not appear that appellant ever had a successor in office. It is also provided in the by-laws that the treasurer shall make reports of moneys received and expended 'to the association at its annual meeting,' and also 'at each quarterly meeting of the board of directors;' but there is no evidence of any such yearly or quarterly meeting between February, 1893, and the date of the indictment, which was June 2, 1893, or that appellant failed to report said money, or made any report in which it was not mentioned. There is no evidence that any demand was ever made upon appellant for said money by the association, or by any officer or agent thereof, or by any other person. The conviction rests, therefore, solely upon the fact that the money was deposited with the bank on February 21st to the personal account of appellant, under the circumstances as above stated. This was evidently the theory upon which the indictment was based, for it is alleged that the embezzlement was committed on the 24th of February, just three days after said deposit. It is true, as the court instructed the jury, that the crime charged might have been . . . committed at any time before the date of the indictment; but the deposit of the money in the bank on February 21st was the only fact proved upon which the conviction could have been based. And that fact is not sufficient to support the verdict. It does not appear that he was ever called upon to apply the money to any need of the association, or to make any particular use of it, or to put it in any special place. It is true that he drew one or two checks on the Crocker-Woolworth Bank, but it does not appear that he had not private funds there, and the testimony of the president of the bank leaves the impression that he had been keeping an account with that bank. He may have had the money all that time ready to respond to any demand of the association. In fact there is no evidence that he did not pay it over to the association. It is clear that he did not clandestinely keep it, for he reported it to the bookkeeper. No doubt embezzlement may be established, under certain circumstances, without proof of a demand, as where other evidence clearly shows an appropriation by an employee of his employer's funds, with intent to do so fraudulently and feloniously. But there is no such evidence in the case at bar. It is sometimes held in civil cases that the deposit by a trustee of trust funds to his personal account is sufficient cause for charging him with interest; but such fact alone is not sufficient evidence to convict a man of a felony.

L.R.A.1917B.

"For the reasons above given we are of opinion that a new trial should have been given. The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial."

In the case of State v. Weber, 31 Nev. 385, 103 Pac. 411, the supreme court of Nevada, discussing the question here being considered, among other things, said:

"The mere depositing of the check to defendant's personal account, especially in the face of a showing that the corporation had not then, and never did have, a regular depository for its money, and that the treasurer of the company was not present at the time, certainly, we think, could not be held to constitute a conversion by the defendants of the money due upon the check. Before the defendant could be legally convicted of embezzlement, it must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt, that the money credited to his personal account upon the check of Captain Hooper belonged to the Doctor Mining Company, and that the defendant either applied the money so credited to him to his own use, or to some use or purpose other than that for which the same was intrusted to him, or that he refused to deliver it to the rightful owner upon demand. There is no showing in the evidence that the defendant applied the money, or any part of it, to his own use or to any other use whatever, or ever refused to account for the same upon demand of the Doctor Mining Company, its treasurer, or anyone else, or that any demand whatever was ever made upon him.

"The record contains a number of other assignments of error, but the view we have taken upon the insufficiency of the evidence makes it unnecessary to consider them."

The proof disclosed by this record, subjected to the test provided by law, wholly fails to warrant the conviction, and, as a matter of law, the verdict was contrary to the evidence. We know nothing of what the real facts in connection with this transaction may be, but in order to warrant a conviction, a case must be established under the proof beyond a reasonable doubt.

For the errors indicated, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

Doyle, P. J., and Brett, J., concur.

Annotation—Embezzlement: proof of mere failure to pay over money.

On failure to account for fund to one jointly interested therein as theft, larceny, or embezzlement, see note to Northcutt v. State, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 822.

On effect of fact that one is entitled to commissions out of fund upon his prosecution for embezzlement in case he retains the whole fund, see note to Com. v. Jacobs, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 511.

The cases, with but a few exceptions, are in harmony with the holding of BLAKE v. STATE, ante, 1261, that proof of a mere failure to pay over money, standing alone, will not support a judgment of conviction for embezzlement.

This is the rule, unless the particular statute under which the indictment is found, embezzlement being the creature of statute, specifies that a mere failure to pay over money shall constitute embezzlement.

A mere failure of an agent to turn over money received by him, without evidence of a fraudulent conversion or appropriation thereof, is not sufficient to constitute the crime of embezzlement. Henderson v. State (1900) 129 Ala. 104, 29 So. 799; Fleener v. State (1893) 58 Ark. 98, 23 S. W. 1.

The failure of a county treasurer to pay over money or funds in his hands, where there has been no conversion or misapplication thereof, is not of itself sufficient to constitute the offense of embezzlement. State v. Hunnicutt (1879) 34 Ark. 562. The statute under which the charge was preferred in this case reads as follows: "Every officer of the state, city, county, or township employed in the collection of the public revenue, or who may have any public funds in his hands, who shall convert the same to his own use, or otherwise misapply any part of the money or funds so collected by him, or which may have come to his possession by virtue of his employment, and every such officer who shall fail or omit to pay the amount found due from him upon settlement, shall, on conviction, be fined. . . ."

But under a later statute similar to the foregoing except that it uses the word "or" instead of "and" before the statement that an officer who shall fail to pay over funds shall be punished, it was held in Davis v. State (1906) 80 Ark. 310, 97 S. W. 54, that a county treasurer who wilfully (the statute contained the word "wilfully" before the word "fail") failed to pay over funds to his successors was guilty of embezzlement, although he had not misappropriated the funds. But even under this later statute proof of a mere failure to pay over money, without showing that such failure was wilful, would apparently not support a conviction of embezzlement.

In People v. Westlake (1899) 124 Cal. 452, 57 Pac. 465, it was held that proof of the wilful omission of a tax collector to pay over money to the county treasurer would not sustain a conviction of embezzlement under a statute providing that every officer who fraudulently appropriates to any use or purpose, not in the due and lawful execution of his trust, any property which he has in his possession or under his control by virtue of his trust, or secretes it with a fraudulent intent to appropriate it to such use or purpose, is guilty of embezzlement.

It was also held in such case that such proof would likewise be insufficient under a statute making punishable the wilful omission of any officer to pay over to any person authorized by law to receive the same, any money received by him, under any duty imposed by law so to pay over the same.

And upon a prosecution under the same statute, it was held in People v. Carrillo (1879) 54 Cal. 63, that it was error to instruct the jury that the failure of the defendant, a tax collector, to pay over money received by him, if unexplained, raised a presumption of felonious appropriation, which would authorize a verdict of guilty.

The mere retention by an agent of his principal's money under a bona fide claim of right is not embezzlement. State v. Collins (1894) 1 Marv. (Del.) 536, 41 Atl. 144; State v. Foster (1898) 1 Penn. (Del.) 289, 40 Atl. 939, affirmed without mention of this point in (1899) 2 Penn. (Del.) 111, 43 Atl. 265.

A mere failure of a public officer to pay over the amount with which he is chargeable is not of itself alone sufficient to establish a fraudulent appropriation to his own use which is essential to a conviction of embezzlement, under a penal statute declaring that any officer who shall embezzle, steal, secrete, or fraudulently take and carry away any money, or other property, shall be punished. Robinson v. State (1900) 109 Ga. 564, 77 Am. St. Rep. 392, 35 S. E. 57.

The failure of one, in whose hands money is placed in reliance upon his honesty or responsibility for its return with stipulated interest, to properly account therefor, does not constitute embezzlement. Kribs v. People (1876) 82 Ill. 425, 2 Am. Crim. Rep. 109; Rauguth v. People (1900) 186 Ill. 93, 57 N. E. 832.

A mere failure of a guardian to account for trust funds neither proves nor implies embezzlement, under a code provision making punishable as embezzlement the fraudulent conversion by employees, agents, or bailees, of money or property intrusted to their keeping. State v. Disbrow (1906) 130 Iowa, 19, 106 N. W. 263, 8 Ann. Cas. 190.

The failure of an agent to pay over to his principal money received on accounts intrusted to him for collection is not punishable as embezzlement, under a statute providing that if any person who may be intrusted with money or other property, which may be the subject of larceny, to be delivered to another person, shall embezzle or fraudulently convert to his own use such property, or secrete it with intent to do so, before delivery thereof to the person to whom it was to be delivered, he shall be punished. Com. v. Bull (1884) 5 Ky. L. Rep. 605.

The failure of a salesman to pay over money which he is charged with having embezzled, if unexplained, does not of itself raise a presumption of a felonious appropriation sufficient to convict under a statutory provision to the effect that any clerk who shall wrongfully use, dispose of, conceal, or otherwise embezzle any money which he shall have received for his employer, shall suffer imprisonment. State v. O'Kean (1883) 35 La. Ann. 901.

An instruction that the mere retention by a salesman of money collected, or its expenditure for the purposes of his employer in excess of the amount agreed upon for expenses, if accompanied by a bare failure to report or account for it accurately, is sufficient to authorize a conviction, is erroneous because it leaves out the important question of criminal intent, which is a necessary element of embezzlement. People v. Bauman (1895) 105 Mich. 543, 63 N. W. 516.

Proof of a mere failure of an agent to pay over money placed in his hands to invest is not sufficient to make out a case of embezzlement, but it must distinctly appear that he acted with a felonious intent, and made an intentionally wrong disposal of the money, indicating a design to cheat and deceive the owner. People v. Hurst (1886) 62 Mich. 276, 28 N. W. 838.

An indictment alleging the embezzlement of state funds by a state treasurer by wholly neglecting to account therefor, and to pay over the same, or any part thereof, to his successor in office, was held defective, because no demand was alleged. State v. Munch (1875) 22 Minn. 67. The state Constitution made a failure to pay over on demand, not embezzlement of itself, but prima facie evidence of it. A general statute made an improper neglect or refusal to pay over embezzlement per se, but the following section of such statute, the court stated, showed what was intended by "improper neglect or refusal to pay over," by providing that any neglect or refusal by an officer to pay any sum lawfully demanded shall be an embezzlement.

But proof of a balance due the state on the settlement of the accounts of a state treasurer, and of his failure to pay it over to his successor, unexplained, will alone warrant a conviction of embezzlement. Hemingway v. State (1890) 68 Miss. 371, 8 So. 317.

And in Busby v. State (1907) 51 Tex. Crim. Rep. 289, 103 S. W. 638, in discussing the sufficiency of the trial judge's charge as to fraudulent intent upon the prosecution for embezzlement of the assistant financial agent of a state penitentiary shown to be short in his accounts, the court cited with approval the preceding case, and said: "Of course, in cases of this character, there must be a fraudulent intent on the part of appellant; but, in addition to the mere fact of a failure to account for funds received and belonging to the state, but slight additional evidence is required."

In State v. Mispagel (1907) 207 Mo. 557, 106 S. W. 513, in discussing the proper venue for a prosecution for embezzlement, the court said: "It must, however, be observed that our statute does not make a failure to account for a trust fund, or a fund received by an agent or officer, an offense, but the essence of the offense is the wrongful conversion of the fund; and while failure to account for such fund may constitute very material evidence tending to establish the act of conversion, yet the failure to account by no means constitutes the offense of embezzlement of the fund." The statute referred to provides that if any officer, agent, clerk, apprentice, servant, or collector shall embezzle or convert to his own use, without the assent of his employer, any money or effects whatsoever, belonging to any other person, which shall have come into his possession or under his care by virtue of such employment or office, he shall, upon conviction, be punished in the manner prescribed by law for stealing property of the kind or the value of the articles so embezzled, taken, or secreted.

The preceding case was cited, with the foregoing quotation, in Hanna v. Minnesota L. Ins. Co. (1912) 241 Mo. 383, 145 S. W. 412, an action for malicious prosecution resulting from a charge of embezzlement.

The mere failure of an agent to pay over money to his principal, after he has received it for, and on account of, his principal, does not of itself constitute the crime of embezzlement, nor does the mere conversion of it by the agent to his own use after its reception, and failure to pay it over to his principal, constitute such crime, but there must be a felonious intent on the part of the agent L.R.A.1917B.

at the time of the conversion to appropriate it to his own use, and deprive the owner of the ownership therein. Home Lumber Co. v. Hartman (1891) 45 Mo. App. 647.

Under an act making an agent, intrusted with the sale of personal property, who shall fraudulently take and convert the proceeds of the sale of the same to his own use, guilty of a misdemeanor, proof of mere neglect to pay over such proceeds is not sufficient to justify a conviction. Fitzgerald v. State (1888) 50 N. J. L. 475, 14 Atl. 746.

The failure of an insurance agent to pay over a balance of his account with the company does not constitute embezzlement. People v. Howe (1873) 2 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 383.

The mere fact of not paying over money is not sufficient evidence in itself to convict the secretary of a lodge of a breach of trust with fraudulent intent. State v. Butler (1884) 21 S. C. 353, 5 Am. Crim. Rep. 206.

The simple failure of a guardian to pay over an ascertained indebtedness as shown by a settlement does not constitute the offense created by a statute providing that any guardian who shall wilfully and maliciously convert to his own use any trust moneys, and on final settlement shall fail to pay them to those entitled thereto, shall be adjudged guilty of a felony. State v. Henry (1878) 1 Lea. (Tenn.) 720.

But in State v. Leonard (1869) 6 Coldw. (Tenn.) 307, it was held that the failure and refusal of a county trustee to pay over money in his hands to his successor in office was, unexplained, evidence of a conversion of the money to his own use, and, if proved, would establish the allegation that he embezzled and converted the money to his own use, in an indictment under a code section which provided that, if any person charged with the safekeeping, collection, and disbursement of money or property belonging to the state or any county, used any part of said money or property, by loan, investment, or otherwise, without authority of law, or converted any part thereof to his own use, in any way whatever, he was guilty of embezzlement.

And in State v. Cameron (1871) 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 78, holding that an acquittal of a tax collector on an indictment under the foregoing section, for embezzlement of revenue by converting the same by falsely pretending that it was taken from him by robbery, was a bar to a subsequent indictment for failing to pay over the same moneys, under a statute providing that if any tax collector should wilfully fail and refuse to pay into the treasury of the state the revenue which he had collected, he should be guilty of a felony, the court said, citing the preceding case and setting out its holding, that it followed therefrom that the offense of failing or refusing to pay the revenue collected into the treasury of the state was included in the offense of embezzlement; and although it required more evidence to convict of the latter than the former offense, when the money collected had been loaned or invested contrary to law, yet the conversion of the fund by the collector to his own use, was, when not paid over to the treasury, under either statute, a felony, and although evidence of the collection and failure to pay into the state treasury would support an indictment under the latter statute, and might not be sufficient to embrace a case of loaning and investing without authority of law, the offense was, in law, precisely the same under either statute, when there was a conversion and the money not paid over; and that the failure to pay into the treasury, as has been seen, was evidence of conversion, and the acquittal of the defendant upon the charge of conversion was a bar to the prosecution for failing to pay into the treasury.

An indictment for embezzlement is not sustained by proof of the failure to pay over moneys collected by one employed as the driver of a laundry wagon, under a contract charging him, instead of the patrons of the laundry, with the work brought in, and permitting him to retain a certain percentage of his collections. State v. Covert (1896) 14 Wash. 652, 45 Pac. 304.

A mere detention of money belonging to another, without a fraudulent intent to convert it to the use of the one by whom it is detained, and to deprive that other person of such property, does not constitute embezzlement under an act providing that if any officer, agent, clerk, or servant embezzle or fraudulently convert to his own use money or any property of any other person, which shall have come into his possession or been placed under his care or management, by virtue of his office, place, or employment, he shall be guilty of larceny thereof. State v. Moyer (1905) 58 W. Va. 146, 52 S. E. 30, 6 Ann. Cas. 344.

In Dix v. State (1895) 89 Wis. 250, 61 N. W. 760, proof that a salesman came to the county where, under his contract of employment, he was to pay over the money collected by him in other counties, and that he failed to do so, was held insufficient to support a conviction of embezzlement in such county, in the absence of proof of a demand of payment there by the person entitled to receive the money, or of a conversion thereof by the salesman in that county.

In Rex v. Hodgson (1828) 3 Car. & P. (Eng.) 422, it was held no embezzlement where a clerk whose duty it was to receive moneys daily at a certain place, to enter all such moneys so received in a book, and to remit the amount weekly to a certain person, correctly entered the moneys received, and admitted their receipt, but failed to remit them in accordance with his duty.

And in Reg. v. Creed (1843) 1 Car. & K. (Eng.) 63, the collector of a water company who rendered a true account of the money he had received, but absconded and failed to pay over the money, was held not guilty of embezzlement; the court stating that if he had rendered an account in which the sums received were omitted, it would be evidence to show that he had embezzled the same.

G. V. I.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

CHARLES CLARK et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

BOARD OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, OSAGE COUNTY.

(— Okla. —, 161 Pac. 791.)

Garnishment — of county.

1. Where the object to be accomplished is in violation of public policy, the aid of equity may not be invoked. Upon grounds of public policy a county is exempt from garnishment, and this exemption extends to equitable garnishment.

For other cases, see Garnishment, I. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Contract — construction.

2. The terms of a contract examined, and held that, under its provisions that there should be no liability until full performance of the work contracted for, there was no liability, in a suit for the contract price of the work, the evidence showing that the performance of the work had not been completed at the time of the trial.

For other cases, see Contracts, IV. c, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(December 5, 1918.)

ERROR to the District Court of Osage County to review a judgment in defendant's favor in a garnishment proceeding to reach an amount alleged to be owing under a construction contract; by defendant to plaintiffs' judgment debtors. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. Grinstead & Scott, for plaintiffs in error:

This form of proceeding by way of equitable garnishment is well known, recognized, and followed by the courts.

Riggin v. Hillard, 56 Ark. 476, 35 Am. St. Rep. 113, 20 S. W. 402; Plummer v. School Dist. 17 Ann. Cas. 508, and note, 90 Ark. 236, 134 Am. St. Rep. 28, 118 S. W. 1011.

Defendant is not entitled to damages for failure to complete the courthouse and jail within the time stipulated in the construction contracts.

American Bonding & T. Co. v. Gibson County, 62 C. C. A. 397, 127 Fed. 671; Kasch v. Nelson, 20 Wash. 315, 55 Pac. 118; International Cement Co. v. Beifeld, 173 Ill. 179, 50 N. E. 716.

Notice from the owner to the contractor that he will complete the work and deduct the costs from the contract price is an election to accept the building subject to the necessary costs of completion.

Wilkinson v. Becker, 13 Montg. Co. L. Rep. 106; 6 Cyc. 69, note, 71; Crawford v. Becker, 13 Hun, 375.

Messrs. John W. Tillman and C. K. Templeton, for defendant in error:

One who sells material to a public contractor is charged with the knowledge of the statutory duty of the contractor to give bond as required by the statute, and if he sells his material before such a bond has been given, he does so at his peril, and, if he sustains a loss, cannot recover damages from the officer who failed to require such a bond.

Bushnell v. Haynes, — Okla. —, 156 Pac. 343.

A county is not subject to liability which is neither expressly nor impliedly imposed by statute.

Welker v. Ennett, 44 Okla. 520, 145 Pac. 411.

Neither the county nor its officers are liable on failure to take bond as required by statute.

Blanchard v. Burns, 110 Ark. 515, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1199, 162 S. W. 63. L.R.A.1917B.

Johnson, C., filed the following opinion:

The board of county commissioners of Osage county entered into contracts with Donothan & Moore, a copartnership, for the construction of a courthouse and jail for the county. Contemplating a possible default by the contractors in the performance of their agreements, the contract contained the following clause, to wit: "And if the architects shall certify that such refusal, neglect, or failure is sufficient grounds for such action, the owner shall also be at liberty to terminate the employment of the contractor for the said work and to enter upon the premises and take possession for the purpose of completing the work comprehended under this contract, of all materials, tools, and appliances thereon, and to employ any other person or persons to finish the work, and to provide the materials therefor; and in case of such discontinuance of the employment of the contractor, he shall not be entitled to receive any further payment under this contract until the said work shall be wholly finished, at which time, if the unpaid balance of the amount to be paid under this contract shall exceed the expense incurred by the owner in finishing the work, such excess shall be paid by the owner to the contractor, but if such expense shall exceed such unpaid balance, the contractor shall pay the difference to the owner. The expense incurred by the owner as herein provided, either for furnishing materials or for finishing the work, and any damage incurred through such default, shall be audited and certified by the architects, whose certificate shall be conclusive upon the parties."

After partial construction and partial payment of the contract price of the construction, Donothan & Moore notified the board of county commissioners in writing that, on account of financial reverses, they would be unable to complete their contracts, and requested the board to take charge of, and complete, the work out of the unpaid part of the contract price, which the board proceeded to do. Plaintiffs in error furnished materials to Donothan & Moore prior to the abandonment of the work by the latter, for which they were not paid, and obtained judgments against Donothan & Moore upon the indebtedness represented thereby. In this action, plaintiffs in error sued the board of county commissioners and Donothan & Moore, alleging the completion of the work by the county, the fact that the county had not taken from Donothan & Moore a bond for the protection of materialmen, the indebtedness by the county to Donothan & Moore for a balance of the contract price not expended by the county in the completion of the buildings, the unsatisfied judgments above mentioned, the insolvency of Donothan & Moore, and the absence of an adequate remedy at law; and sought a decree of equitable garnishment against the county to the extent of such amount alleged to be owing by the county to Donothan & Moore. The county contended that it was not liable to garnishment, either legal or equitable; that the work under the contract was not wholly finished at the time of the suit, and under the specific terms of the contract there was no liability until full completion of the work; and that the county had certain claims of offsets and damages against Donothan & Moore which more than consumed the unexpended balance in the courthouse and jail fund. The lower court rendered judgment in favor of defendant, and plaintiffs have appealed.

The decisive issues are: (1) The liability of the county to the proceeding in equitable garnishment; and (2) the liability of the county to Donothan & Moore as based upon the state of completion of the work. We think that the lower court was correct in holding against the liability of the county upon both of such issues, and this without regard to the validity of the county's claim for offsets and damages.

Practically every appellate court of the country which has passed upon the question has held that, in the absence of a statute specifically conferring the right of garnishment against a county, garnishment does not run against a county. Edmondson v. De Kalb County, 51 Ala. 103; Boone County v. Keck, 31 Ark. 387; Stermer v. La Plata County, 5 Colo. App. 379, 38 Pac. 839; Ward v. Hartford County, 12 Conn. 404; Duval County v. Charleston Lumber & Mfg. Co. 45 Fla. 256, 60 L.R.A. 549, 33 So. 531, 3 Ann. Cas. 174; Morgan v. Rust, 100 Ga. 346, 28 S. E. 410; Fast v. Wolf, 38 Ill. App. 27; Wallace v. Lawyer, 54 Ind. 501, 23 Am. Rep. 661; Des Moines County v. Hinkley, 62 Iowa, 637, 17 N. W. 915; Webb v. McCauley, 4 Bush, 8; Clark v. Clark, 62 Me. 255; Williams v. Boardman, 9 Allen, 570; McDougal v. Hennepin County, 4 Minn. 184, Gil. 130; State ex rel. Crawford v. Eberly, 12 Neb. 616, 12 N. W. 96; Boalt v. Williams County, 18 Ohio, 13; Pettebone v. Beardslee, 1 Kulp, 180; Herring-Hall-Marvin Co. v. Kroeger, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 672, 57 S. W. 980; Eureka Sandstone Co. v. Pierce County, 8 Wash. 236, 35 Pac. 1081; Merrell v. Campbell, 49 Wis. 535, 35 Am. Rep. 785, 5 N. W. 912; Switzer v. Wellington, 40 Kan. 250, 10 Am. St. Rep. 196, 19 Pac. 620.

There is no statute of this state specifically authorizing garnishment as against a county. The supreme court of Montana L.R.A.1917B.

sustained garnishment as against a county in the case of Waterbury v. Deer Lodge County, 10 Mont. 515, 24 Am. St. Rep. 67, 26 Pac. 1002, but based the decision upon a statute of that state expressly authorizing the writ as against a county. In a case cited by plaintiff in error, viz., Roggin v. Hillard, 56 Ark. 476, 35 Am. St. Rep. 113, 20 S. W. 402, the supreme court of Arkansas sustained an equitable garnishment against a county where the liability was complete and admitted. However, that case, in addition to being contrary to the doctrine of almost the universal holding of other courts, referred to the Arkansas case of Boone County v. Keck, 31 Ark. 387, holding that legal garnishment could not run against a county, and itself recognized that garnishment of a county was against public policy; and the conclusion reached in that case, that equitable garnishment would lie when its correlative remedy, legal garnishment, was contrary to public policy, was virtually a holding that equity may disregard public policy. In the Georgia, Indiana, Nebraska, Ohio, and Texas cases above cited, relief was sought in equity, and equitable garnishment against a county was held not to lie.

This court has held that, on grounds of public policy, the government of the United States and the several states, and officers and agents thereof, are exempt from garnishment. Manwell v. Grimes, — Okla. —, 149 Pac. 1182. This court has held that neither a county nor its officers are liable for material furnished to a contractor in the construction of public buildings for the county, regardless of the fact that no bond had been taken for the protection of materialmen. Bushnell v. Haynes, — Okla. —, 156 Pac. 343; Wilson v. Nelson, — Okla. —, 153 Pac. 1179. This court has also held that public buildings are not subject to materialmen's liens. Western Terra Cotta Co. v. Board of Education, 39 Okla. 716, 136 Pac. 595; Gloyd v. Morris, 42 Okla. 75, 140 Pac. 1149. The reason of these cases is that all men are presumed to know the law, that, if material is advanced in the absence of the bond for the protection of materialmen, it is done in the face of this knowledge and the absence of the bond, which the materialman may have required, and at the sole risk of the creditor, this conjoined with the public policy of not allowing the public interests to be embarrassed by private dispute, to obviate which the bond for the protection of materialmen is provided by statute. The same reasoning is applicable to the instant situation.

In addition to the above, our statute (Revised Laws 1910, § 4836) provides:

"4836. Garnishee not liable for what.— No judgment shall be rendered upon a liability of the garnishee arising: . . .

Third. By reason of any money in his hands as a public officer, or for which he is accountable to the defendant merely as such officer."

This is an express recognition of the public policy of this state, as laid down by implication in other states.

It is clear that a county is not liable to garnishment, and for reasons of public policy. It seems to us that it would be a subversion of equity to say that it would violate public policy. Garnishment is purely a statutory proceeding, and is usually invoked to reach assets of a debtor who has no property accessible to the ordinary legal writs, and who, without regard to the garnished property, is in the insolvent condition which plaintiff in error contends gives rise to ground for the interposition of equity in this case. If the exemption of public policy, as applicable to counties in cases of legal garnishment, could be avoided by application to equity, as is attempted in this case, this would amount to a substitution of the equitable for the legal proceeding in practically all cases where a county is indebted to a defendant, for salaries or on public contract or otherwise, for there would be no difference in the equitable principles applicable to the various classes of indebtedness. The equitable proceeding, as contended for here, would be much easier than the legal garnishment, for no bond of affidavit would be necessary. This would amount to a practical abolition of the exemption, and complete violation and subversion of the public policy involved. The bond is for the protection of materialmen, furnishing materials to public contractors, and to allow the county to make settlement with such contractors without becoming embarrassed by, or involved in, the multitude of small disputes which might arise between the contractor and his own creditors. If a materialman makes advances of materials in the absence of such a bond, under the holding of this court in the cases of this court upon the question hereinabove cited, he is guilty of laches, makes the advance upon the credit of the contractor and solely at his own risk, for the requirement of the bond and reliance upon its liability is his legal remedy. Such laches would be an additional reason why he might not invoke the aid of equity. We must therefore hold that the exemption of the county from garnishment extends to the equitable remedy.

In addition to the above in this case, if the liability be predicated upon the contract, hereinabove quoted from, independently of the exemption of the county from garnishment, there was no liability on the part of the county to the contractor until full completion of the work; and all of the evidence showed that the work was not fully completed. If the liability be predicated upon quantum meruit, there was an entire absence of proof of the quantum meruit value of the work done by the contractor.

It follows that the suit was not maintainable under either of the issues, denominated by us as decisive; and that the judgment of the lower court should be affirmed.

Per Curiam:

Adopted in whole.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

AGNES CATANI, Appt.,

v.

SWIFT & COMPANY.

(251 Pa. 52, 95 Atl. 931.)

Food — warranty of quality — middleman.

1. One preparing meat for food impliedly warrants to the consumer that it is sound and fit for that purpose, although it passes through the hands of a middleman under a statute providing that in every such sale, unless the parties otherwise agree, there shall lie an implied undertaking that the goods are sound and fit for household consumption.

For other cases, see Food, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Commerce — interstate — food — prosecution under local laws.

2. The Federal statute making the sale of unfit meat in interstate commerce a misdemeanor, and providing inspectors at the packing houses, does not prevent prosecution under a state statute for sale in the original packages of diseased meat shipped from another state, which the packer himself had not inspected.

Note.—The liability of a manufacturer, packer, or vendor to persons not in privity of contract, for injuries from defects in articles sold, is discussed in the notes to Tomlinson v. Armour & Co. 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 923; Mazetti v. Armour & Co. 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 213; and Crigger v. Coca-Cola Bottling Co. L.R.A.1916B, 879; and see also later cases, Gearing v. Berkson, L.R.A. L.R.A.1917B.

1916D, 1006, and Kerwin v. Chippewa Shoe Mfg. Co. L.R.A.1916E, 1188.

The subject of state regulations as affected by the Federal Pure Food Law is discussed in the note to McDermott v. State, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 985; and see later cases, State v. Armour & Co. L.R.A.1916E, 380, and Arrigo v. Hyers, L.R.A.1917A, 1116.

For other cases, see Commerce, IV. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Evidence — sufficiency — unfit food.

3. A prima facie case of liability for selling unfit meat for food is made out by proof that it was diseased and caused the death of a purchaser.

For other cases, see Evidence, II. h, 1, f, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Brown, Ch. J., dissents.)

(October 4, 1915.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for Luzerne County in defendant's favor, notwithstanding a verdict for plaintiff, in an action brought to recover damages for the death of her husband, resulting from eating unfit meat sold to plaintiff by a dealer in the original package. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Bush Trescott and Joseph P. Lord for appellant.

Messrs. Frank L. Horton, R. C. McManus, Richard B. Sheridan, and Charles B. Lenahan for appellee.

Frazer, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action of trespass by plaintiff to recover damages for the death of her husband, which resulted from eating unwholesome and diseased pork slaughtered by defendant in the state of Missouri and shipped to its distributing house at the borough of Nanticoke, in this state, and there sold to a dealer and delivered to plaintiff in its original package, which bore the government stamp showing an inspection by United States inspectors. Plaintiff produced evidence that her husband and other members of the family had eaten the pork and all subsequently became ill, her husband dying a short time later from what the evidence tended to show was trichinosis, a disease resulting from eating meat containing trichinae, a small parasite or germ which multiplies rapidly and bores through the walls of the intestines, stomach, and muscles of the human body and poisons the system. The trial judge submitted to the jury the questions whether plaintiff's husband died of trichinosis, and, if so, if he contracted the disease from pork sold by defendant and eaten by him. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff, thus deciding both questions in the affirmative. Judgment non obstante veredicto was, however, subsequently entered for defendant.

defendant on the ground that, the Federal laws having been complied with and the meat inspected by the United States inspectors and certified to be sound, defendant was not liable, in the absence of negligence in the transportation or handling of the meat subsequent to the inspection, even though it made no further inspection. From the judgment entered plaintiff appeals, assigning as error this action of the court.

The sale in this case was not made by defendant to plaintiff directly, but indirectly through Louis Otocavani, a dealer, though the testimony as to this is not clear. But assuming Otocavani, who ordered the meat, was a dealer, the first question to be considered is whether there was an implied warranty by defendant that the meat sold to the dealer was free from disease, wholesome, and fit to eat, and whether this warranty extended to the consumer after the meat had passed through the dealer's hands.

The general rule is that, where the sale of articles of food is for immediate consumption, there is an implied warranty that the food is wholesome and fit for the purpose intended, irrespective of the seller's knowledge of disease or defects therein. 35 Cyc. 407, and cases cited. The supreme court of Illinois, after an exhaustive review of the subject in Wiedeman v. Keller, 171 Ill. 93, said, at page 98, 49 N. E. 211: "As a general rule, we think the decided weight of authority in the United States is that in all sales of meats or provisions for immediate domestic use by a retail dealer there is an implied warranty of fitness and wholesomeness for consumption. There is, however, no implied warranty of soundness or wholesomeness arising from the sale of meats or provisions to a dealer or middleman who buys on the market, not for consumption, but for sale to others. Nor would there be any liability, in a sale for immediate domestic use, where the vendor was not a regular dealer. 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 157. In this case, however, the appellee was a regular retail dealer, and as such he sold the meat to appellant for domestic use, and, under the law as it seems to be settled in this country, as the meat turned out to be unwholesome, he was liable, although he was not aware that it was diseased when he sold it to appellant."

This rule has been put in statutory form in Pennsylvania as far as it applies to articles of food by the Act of May 4, 1889, P. L. 87, 3 Pepper & Lewis Dig. 2d ed. page 6723, which provides that "in every sale of green, salted, pickled, or smoked meats, lard and other articles of merchandise, used wholly or in part for food, said goods or merchandise shall correspond in kind and quality with the description given, either orally or in writing, by the vendor; and in every sale of such goods or merchandise, unless the parties shall agree otherwise, there shall be an implied contract or undertaking that the goods or merchandise are sound and fit for household consumption."

The contention that the warranty did not extend to subsequent purchasers after the meat passed through the hands of middlemen cannot be sustained. The case of Ketterer v. Armour & Co. (D. C.) 200 Fed. 322, is directly in point; that being a case of sale of pork infected with trichinæ. It was there said by Circuit Judge Noyes, at page 322:

"The contention of the defendant is that a manufacturer who deals with the middleman, and not directly with the consumer, owes the latter no duty whatever except the duty owing to all men to refrain from knowingly and wilfully inflicting injury. And as wilful injury is hardly conceivable, the claim comes down to this: That a producer of meats can take no steps to detect poisonous parasites in his products, although the danger of their presence is well known and can be guarded against, and yet may sell such products with impunity so far as the demands of poisoned consumers are concerned. This contention is based upon the theory that so long as the manufacturer sells only to the dealer or middleman he is a stranger to the consumer; there is no contractual relationship to base a duty upon. It is said that the dealer may sue the manufacturer, and that the consumer may sue the dealer, but that the consumer cannot sue the manufacturer. In other words, if the claim be well founded the middleman has an effective remedy, but he is not injured. The consumer is injured, but he cannot look to the wrongdoer and must sue the local dealer, who is likely to be irresponsible and is certainly free from fault.

"And this contention has support in authority. It is unquestionably the rule in the case of many manufactured articles where the consequences of negligent manufacture cannot be followed down to their final results. Thus, as is pointed out in one of the cases, a careless manufacturer of iron could not be held responsible for the destruction of a steamer from the bursting of a boiler into the construction of which his imperfect material, after passing through many hands, had gone. In such cases, and in others less clear, it is said that public policy requires that the remedy for negligence should not be pressed to an impracticable extreme. But I am wholly unable to apply this rule in the present case; much more to apply it in the name of public policy. Public policy regards the public good, and I am yet to be convinced that the public welfare will be promoted by holding that producers and manufacturers owe no duty to consumers to guard against diseased and poisonous meats and provisions, except in those isolated cases where they happen to sell directly to them.

"The remedies of injured consumers ought not to be made to depend upon the intricacies of the law of sales. The obligation of the manufacturer should not be based alone upon privity of contract. It should rest, as was once said, upon 'the demands of social justice.' The producer should be held responsible for the results of negligent acts which he can readily foresee. There is no analogy between the case where defective material, after passing through many hands, produces not to be looked for ill effects. The iron manufacturer who fails to inspect a piece of iron cannot foresee that it will be used in a boiler and cause a ship to sink. But the meat packer who fails to inspect his products for poisonous parasites or ingredients knows that poison will poison, and that the persons to be poisoned through his neglect will be those who eat his products, and no one else. The natural, probable, and almost inevitable result of his negligence will be injury to the consumer, and, in my opinion, every consideration of law and public policy requires that the consumer should have a remedy."

To the same effect is Meshbesher v. Channellene Oil Co. 107 Minn. 104, 131 Am. St. Rep. 441, 119 N. W. 428, where the manufacturer was held liable to the consumer for impure oil purchased by the latter from a retail grocer.

The same rule was applied by this court in Elkins, B. & Co. v. McKean, 79 Pa. 493, to the sale of oil. In that case it was said by Mr. Chief Justice Agnew (p. 502): "The substance of that point is that after the oil had passed from the defendants in large quantities to Arbuckle & Company, and from them in smaller quantities to Caskey, and from Caskey to Steele & Hart, who sold the lampful to McKean, there can be no recovery. The argument in support of this point is founded upon the alleged successive intervening liabilities of the persons through whose hands the oil had passed. But this proposition is unsound as a legal defense. The number of hands through which the oil had passed might furnish a strong argument on the question of identity, and the guilty knowledge of Elkins, Bly, & Company as to this particular oil, but could not constitute a legal bar to recovery, if the identity of the oil and the guilty knowledge were made clear. Certainly one who knowingly makes and puts on the market for domestic and other use such a death-dealing fluid cannot claim exemption from liability for his terrible wrong, because he has sent it through many hands. The length of its passage may create a doubt of its identity, or that it was sent on its mission of destruction with a full purpose and knowledge of its dangerous qualities; but, the facts being established, he cannot escape the consequences of his crime against society. The maxim, Qui facit per alium facit per se, applies as clearly as other maxim, Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas. When the article is thrown into the current of trade on the faith of the affirmation of its manufacturers that it is a fit oil for light, and can be safely used in the family, or where it may be required for illumination, they cannot follow it, or avert its injuries, or determine how much of the responsibility is due to others."

These authorities effectually dispose of this question. It is contended by defendant, however, that since the sale was made in the original package, used in interstate shipment, the transaction was exclusively within the Federal statutes relating to the inspection and sale and transportation of meat, and neither the common-law doctrine of implied warranty, nor the Pennsylvania statute above referred to, nor other Pennsylvania statute law forbidding the sale of adulterated food applies, and as defendant had fully complied with the Federal inspection laws, the lower court was right in entering judgment for defendant non obstante veredicto.

Section 2 of the Federal Act of June 30, 1906, 34 Stat. at L. 768, chap. 3915, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 8718, prohibits interstate shipment of adulterated food or drugs, and makes a violation of the act a misdemeanor and provides penalties therefor. Section 7 of this act (§ 8723) defines adulteration in the case of meats as consisting "in whole or in part of a filthy, decomposed, or putrid animal or vegetable substance, or any portion of an animal unfit for food, whether manufactured or not, or if it is the product of a diseased animal, or one that has died otherwise than by slaughter."

The Federal Act of March 4, 1907, 34 Stat. at L. 1256, chap. 2907, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 8681, ¶ 21, provides that any person who shall "sell or offer for sale or transportation for interstate or foreign commerce any meat or meat food products which are diseased, unsound, unhealthful, unwholesome, or otherwise unfit for human food, knowing that such meat food products are intended for human consumption, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor." The same act (Comp. Stat. 1913, § 8681, ¶ 19), authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to appoint inspectors at all slaughterhouses, packing houses, etc., to examine animals in accordance with the rules and regulations to be prescribed by him. Under these rules the packer is forbidden to make an inspection prior to the government's inspection, in the manner in which such inspection is made; but there is nothing to indicate that a subsequent independent inspection is forbidden or could not be made by the packer. Defendant made no pretense of showing such independent inspection or examination, but relies upon the argument that no such inspection was necessary, and that its duty to the consumer was fulfilled by the government inspection, in analogy to the decisions under the Pennsylvania coal mining laws requiring the placing of underground mining works under supervision and control of a certified mine foreman, for whose negligence the mine owner is held not responsible. Durkin v. Kingston Coal Co. 171 Pa. 193, 29 L.R.A. 808, 50 Am. St. Rep. 801, 33 Atl. 237. It should be noted, however, that the Federal statutes do not require the packer to surrender control of his establishment, as is the case with the Pennsylvania mine owner. All that the former is required to do is to afford an opportunity for the government officials to make an inspection. The question was decided contrary to defendant's contention in O'Connor v. Armour Packing Co. 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 812, 85 C. C. A. 459, 158 Fed. 241, 14 Ann. Cas. 66. While that was a case involving the duty of a master to a servant, the duty of defendant to the public would seem to be as high as his duty to his servant. In that case it was said, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) at page 818: "The contention of the defendant is that the inspection by the government was all that could be required, and that, under the circumstances, the master was not chargeable with the duty of making any inspection. It was not denied that the doctrine requiring inspection was applicable to the case, but the contention is that the inspection provided was sufficient, as matter of law, to relieve the defendant of the charge of negligence. The object of the Federal statutes requiring inspection was to provide additional safeguards against the traffic in spoiled or diseased cattle and meats. They should not be so construed or applied as to deprive anyone injured or damaged by the negligence or wrongdoing of a dealer in or a vendor of cattle or meats any remedy which he had under laws existing when the statutes were enacted. We are not of opinion that the inspection by government officials of a place, machinery, instrumentality, or material necessarily and as matter of law releases the master from his duty to make such examinations and inspections as are required of him by the rule which demands that he exercise ordinary and reasonable care for the safety of his servant."

The question was also discussed in Clintman v. Northrop, 8 Cow. 45, where it was said as to the effect of an official inspection and stamp of goods, at page 46: "The act does not declare that the certificate or mark of the inspector shall be conclusive. It is not the object or policy of our system of inspection laws to render the decisions of the different inspectors of flour, beef, pork, staves, leather, etc., final and conclusive. The object of those laws is to protect the community, so far as they apply to domestic sales, from frauds and impositions; and, in relation to articles designed for exportation, to preserve the character and reputation of the state in foreign markets. I am not aware that the law, in any case, gives a conclusive effect to the ex parte certificate of a public officer in relation to matters which depend upon the exercise of integrity, judgment, and discretion; and by which private rights and contracts may be seriously affected."

We agree with the reasoning of above cases, and hold that the Federal statutes providing for meat inspection by government officers do not relieve the packer from liability for damages where he has made no inspection nor taken any steps to ascertain for himself whether the meat sold by him is fit for food. The common-law duty to sell only wholesome food still remains, and the burden of discharging this duty has not been shifted to government inspectors. The jury having found that the death of plaintiff's husband was the result of eating meat packed by defendant which was affected by a disease which the evidence showed was discoverable by proper inspection, the burden was on defendant to show fulfillment of its duty, which burden was not met by merely proving inspection by the United States government inspectors.

Under the foregoing principles governing the sale of articles of food, a prima facie case is made out by proof that the meat sold by defendant was diseased and caused the death of plaintiff's husband. It was not necessary to go farther and prove defendant knew the food was unwholesome. Defendant's duty was absolute. 35 Cyc. 407; Wiedeman v. Keller, 171 Ill. 93, 98, 49 N. E. 211; Meshbesh v. Channellene Oil Co. 107 Minn. 104, 131 Am. St. Rep. 441, 119 N. W. 428. It was bound to know that the meat was unwholesome and unfit for food, and this duty was not performed by merely showing an inspection and approval by United States government inspectors. This view of the case makes it unnecessary to discuss the question raised as to the admissibility of the depositions.

The judgment is reversed, and judgment is directed to be entered in favor of plaintiff on the verdict.

Brown, Ch. J., dissents.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT. (Department No. 1.)

STATE OF WASHINGTON, Resp't.,
v.

GEORGE P. ROSSMAN, Appt.

(— Wash. —, 161 Pac. 349.)

Employment agency — fee — who is worker.

1. A stenographer and bookkeeper is a worker within the meaning of a statute forbidding the taking of a fee for securing employment for workers.

For other cases, see Employment Agency, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Statute — indefiniteness — commission from worker.

2. A statute forbidding the taking of commissions for securing employment for workers is not void for indefiniteness because of the use of the word "workers."

For other cases, see Statutes, I. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Constitutional law — employment agency — forbidding taking of fee.

3. No constitutional rights are infringed by forbidding the taking of a fee or commission for securing employment for workers.

For other cases, see Employment Agency, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(December 5, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for King County convicting him of the crime of charging a fee for furnishing employment or information leading thereto. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Edgar S. Hadley, for appellant:

A stenographer or a bookkeeper is not a worker within the meaning of initiative measure No. 8.

Note.—As to constitutionality of statute forbidding taking of fee for securing employment for another, see annotation following this case, post, 1280.
L.R.A.1917B.

Huntworth v. Tanner, 87 Wash. 670, 152 Pac. 523; 36 Cyc. 1274, 1275; 5 Cyc. 859; Re Appropriations for Deputies, 25 Neb. 662, 41 N. W. 643.

The word "worker" is so indefinite as to render the act void through its indefiniteness.

State v. Powles & Co. 90 Wash. 112, 155 Pac. 774.

The liberty and the pursuit of happiness in which the individual is protected by our Constitutions apply as fully to his right to contract as to the right to follow any legitimate vocation, untrammelled by unnecessary regulations, or freedom from arrest or restraint of his person.

Spokane v. Macho, 51 Wash. 324, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 263, 130 Am. St. Rep. 1100, 98 Pac. 756; Ex parte Dickey, 144 Cal. 234, 66 L.R.A. 928, 103 Am. St. Rep. 82, 77 Pac. 924, 1 Ann. Cas. 428; State v. Moore, 113 N. C. 697, 22 L.R.A. 475, 18 S. E. 342; Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133-137, 38 L. ed. 385-388, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499; Re O'Neill, 41 Wash. 184, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 558, 83 Pac. 104, 6 Ann. Cas. 869; Re Aubrey, 36 Wash. 308, 104 Am. St. Rep. 952, 78 Pac. 900, 1 Ann. Cas. 927; State ex rel. Richey v. Smith, 42 Wash. 237, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 674, 114 Am. St. Rep. 114, 84 Pac. 861, 7 Ann. Cas. 577; Butchers' Union S. H. & L. S. L. Co. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 111 U. S. 746, 28 L. ed. 585, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 652; Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 121, 32 L. ed. 625, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 231; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 42 L. ed. 780, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383; Williams v. Fears, 179 U. S. 274, 45 L. ed. 188, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 128.

Messrs. Alfred H. Lundin and Lane Summers, for respondent:

A stenographer and bookkeeper is a worker within the meaning of the statute.

Com v. Griffith, 204 Mass. 18, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 957, 134 Am. St. Rep. 645, 90 N. E. 395; State v. Rose, 125 La. 462, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 821, 51 So. 496; Pendergast v. Yandes, 124 Ind. 159, 8 L.R.A. 849, 24 N. E. 724; Flagstaff Silver Min. Co. v. Cullins, 104 U. S. 176, 26 L. ed. 704; Heckman v. Tammen, 184 Ill. 144, 56 N. E. 361; Hightower v. Slaton, 54 Ga. 108, 21 Am. Rep. 273; Com. v. John T. Connor Co. 222 Mass. 299, L.R.A.1916B, 1236, 110 N. E. 301; Phoenix Furniture Co. v. Put-In-Bay Hotel Co. 66 Fed. 683; Hughes v. Torgerson, 96 Ala. 346, 16 L.R.A. 600, 38 Am. St. Rep. 105, 11 So. 209; Fischer v. Hanna, 8 Colo. App. 471, 47 Pac. 303; Abrahams v. Anderson, 80 Ga. 570, 12 Am. St. Rep. 274, 5 S. E. 778; Cohen v. Aldrich, 5 Ga. App. 256, 62 S. E. 1016; Thompson v. Passmore, 9 Ga. App. 771, 72 S. E. 185; Capron v. Strout, 11 Nev. 304, 9 Mor. Min. Rep. 391; State ex rel. L.R.A.1917B.

Pleasant v. Ottawa, 84 Kan. 100, 113 Pac. 391.

The statute is sufficiently definite to be valid and enforceable.

Foster v. Territory, 1 Wash. 411, 25 Pac. 459; State v. Stuth, 11 Wash. 423, 39 Pac. 665; State v. Fox, 71 Wash. 185, 127 Pac. 1111; Com. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 140 Ky. 21, 130 S. W. 798; Katzman v. Com. 140 Ky. 124, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 519, 140 Am. St. Rep. 359, 130 S. W. 990; Meffert v. Packer, 195 U. S. 625, 49 L. ed. 350, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 790; Aiton v. Board of Medical Examiners, 13 Ariz. 354, L.R.A.1915A, 691, 114 Pac. 962.

The act is not unconstitutional.

Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 253, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992, 1257; Raast v. Van Deman & L. Co. 240 U. S. 342, 60 L. ed. 370, L.R.A.1917A, 421, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 370; Tanner v. Little, 240 U. S. 369, 60 L. ed. 379, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 379; Pitney v. State, 240 U. S. 387, 60 L. ed. 385, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 385; Wiseman v. Tanner, 221 Fed. 694.

Mount, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant was convicted of the crime of charging a fee for furnishing employment or information leading thereto. He has appealed from the sentence imposed upon that conviction.

The facts are stipulated in substance as follows: The defendant was operating an agency for the employment of stenographers and bookkeepers, and was charging a fee of $2 as an enrolment fee, and 20 per cent of the first month's salary after the applicant secured employment. On the 14th day of February, 1916, the appellant demanded and received from one Elnora Hughes the sum of $2. She was then seeking employment as a stenographer and bookkeeper.

The appellant makes three contentions in this court, to the effect: First, that a stenographer and bookkeeper is not a worker within the meaning of initiative measure No. 8; second, that the word "worker" is so indefinite as to render the act void; and, third, that the act is unconstitutional under the 5th and 14th Amendments to the Constitution of the United States, and like provisions of the Constitution of this state. We shall notice these contentions briefly.

On the first point the appellant relies upon the case of Huntworth v. Tanner, 87 Wash. 670, at 680, 152 Pac. 527, where we held that a school-teacher was not a worker within the meaning of that act. In that case we said: "The act has no reasonable relation to any subject other than the protection of those who may be classed as workers or laborers. It has never been contended that business and professional men, teachers, and those following scientific pursuits, are not amply equipped to protect themselves. A teacher renders the very highest class of professional service, whereas, those for whose benefit this law was passed are frequently unskilled in business affairs, and in many instances are men of foreign birth, having no competent understanding of our business methods or our language."

It is contended by the appellant that a stenographer and bookkeeper, for the reasons stated in Huntworth v. Tanner, supra, is not included within the meaning of the term "worker." Some things there said might lead to that conclusion. But we are satisfied that a stenographer and bookkeeper is a worker, and therefore comes within the meaning of the act. In Georgia, in a case where a man was employed as a private secretary and stenographer to the president of a railroad and banking company at $125 per month, his duties being to receive dictation and transcribe letters, and to take care of the papers in the office, including the keeping of books and statements, it was held that he was a worker, and was entitled to have his wages exempt from garnishment. Abrahams v. Anderson, 80 Ga. 570, 12 Am. Rep. 274, 5 S. E. 778. And in Cohen v. Aldrich, 5 Ga. App. 256, 62 S. E. 1015, also a Georgia case, a stenographer was also held to be a worker. In that case it was said: "That a stenographer is skilled and trained cannot affect the nature of the work he does, although it does affect its character. After acquiring the trade, the test is the method of carrying it on. It is difficult to conceive of anything more thoroughly manual than the work of a stenographer. Receiving the sounds from the lips of another, he registers what he hears and reproduces what he receives. He exercises no independence of thought, no initiative, no discretion. The test of his efficiency is his absolute acceptance of what is given him and its return unchanged. If his employer indulges in the pastime of murdering the King's English, he must become a 'particeps criminis,' and join in the assassination. So pronouncedly are the physical faculties involved in stenography that there comes a time when the hand refuses to work, although the mental faculties may be entirely clear. It is pre-eminently manual labor, work of the hand."

Under the rule in these cases, and others of a similar character which might be cited, we are satisfied that a stenographer and bookkeeper is a worker within the common acceptance of that term, and is within the meaning of initiative measure No. 8.

It is next contended that the term "worker" is so indefinite as to render the act void. This contention is based upon the decision in State v. Powles & Co. 90 Wash. 112, 155 Pac. 774. In that case we held that the term "commission merchant," which was defined to be "any person, firm, or corporation whose principal business is the sale of farm, dairy, orchard, or garden produce on account of the shipper or consignor," was too indefinite to base a criminal charge upon by reason of the use of the words "principal business." But it was not held there that the words, "commission business," if they had been used alone, were not capable of accurate definition. But because the word "principal" was used, it was held that it could not be determined with accuracy what the principal business of a commission merchant might be. The word "worker" is capable of definite definition, and is readily understood. We think there is no merit in the contention that the act is void for indefiniteness because of the use of the word "worker."

It is next contended that the act is unconstitutional because it is not within the police power of the state to regulate or interfere with the right of a private citizen to pursue a lawful business. In the case of Huntworth v. Tanner, we reserved the constitutional question, because in that case it was not necessary to determine that question; for we held that a school-teacher was not a worker within the meaning of the act. The question now presented is whether this act is within the police power of the state.

A number of cases are cited by the appellant to the effect that a citizen is guaranteed the protection of his property and the pursuit of his happiness under the Constitution of the United States, and that any person is at liberty to pursue any lawful calling and to do so in his own way when not encroaching upon the rights of others; and it is contended that the police power of the state does not extend to the right to take away or regulate a lawful business. There can be no doubt of the right of a citizen to pursue a lawful calling in a lawful way; but it is equally true that there can be no doubt of the right of the state, through its legislature, to regulate a business which may become unlawful by improper and unlawful means.

In Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, at page 124, 24 L. ed. 77, it was said: "When one becomes a member of society, he necessarily parts with some rights or privileges which, as an individual not affected by his relations to others, he might retain. . . . From this source come the police powers, which as was said by Mr. Chief Justice Taney in the License Cases, 5 How. 583, 12 L. ed. 291, 'are nothing more or less than the powers of government inherent in every sovereignty; . . . that is to say, . . . the power to govern men and things.' Under these powers the government regulates the conduct of its citizens one towards another, and the manner in which each shall use his own property, when such regulation becomes necessary for the public good."

In State v. Mountain Timber Co. 75 Wash. 581, L.R.A. —, —, 135 Pac. 645, 4 N. C. C. A. 811, this court said: "Having in mind the sovereignty of the state, it would be folly to define the term. To define is to limit that which from the nature of things cannot be limited, but which is rather to be adjusted to conditions touching the common welfare, when covered by legislative enactments. The police power is to the public what the law of necessity is to the individual. It is comprehended in the maxim, 'Salus populi suprema lex.' It is not a rule; it is an evolution."

In State v. Pitney, 79 Wash. 608, 140 Pac. 918, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 209, in discussing the police power of the state, this court said: "If a state of facts can reasonably be presumed to exist which would justify the legislation, the court must presume that it did exist and that the law was passed for that reason. If no state of circumstances could exist to justify the statute, then it may be declared void because in excess of the legislative power."

And in Munn v. Illinois, supra, at page 132 of 94 U. S. the Supreme Court of the United States said: "For our purposes we must assume that, if a state of facts could exist that would justify such legislation, it actually did exist when the statute now under consideration was passed. For us the question is one of power, not of expediency. If no state of circumstances could exist to justify such a statute, then we may declare this one void, because in excess of the legislative power of the state. But if it could, we must presume it did. Of the propriety of legislative interference within the scope of legislative power, the legislature is the exclusive judge."

And in McLean v. Arkansas, 211 U. S. 539, at page 548, 53 L. ed. 315, 320, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 208, it was said: "If there existed a condition of affairs concerning which the legislature of the state, exercising its conceded right to enact laws for the protection of the health, safety, or welfare of the people, might pass the law, it must be sustained; if such action was arbitrary interference with the right to contract or carry on business, and having no just relation to the protection of the public within the scope of legislative power, the act must fail."

In State ex rel. Davis-Smith Co. v. Clausen, 65 Wash. 156, 177, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 466, L.R.A.1917B.

117 Pac. 1106, we said: "The test of the validity of such a law is not found in the inquiry, Does it do the objectionable things? but is found rather in the inquiry, Is there no reasonable ground to believe that the public safety, health, or general welfare is promoted thereby? The legislature cannot, of course, without violating this clause of the Constitution, declare a particular industry, commonly engaged in by the people, to be unlawful which, under all circumstances, must necessarily be harmless and innocent; but it can regulate and control and prohibit any industry, however innocent it may have been in its inception, whenever it becomes a menace to the employees engaged in it, the people surrounding it, or to any considerable number of the people at large, no matter from whatsoever cause the menace may arise."

We think there can be no doubt of the principles enunciated in the foregoing quotations. In the Huntworth Case, supra, the reason for this act was pointed out. We there said, at page 679 of 87 Wash.: "The mischief inducing the present act is not hard to find. It was to correct what society had come to regard as a wrong practised upon those who for many reasons were unable to protect themselves against impositions and extortions. It was to protect a class that was powerless under existing conditions to protect itself. As said by the Supreme Court of the United States in Patterson v. The Eudora, 190 U. S. 169, 47 L. ed. 1002, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 821, when speaking of the Federal statute prohibiting any person from demanding or receiving remuneration for providing employment for sailors: 'The story of the wrongs done to sailors in the larger ports, not merely of the nation but of the world, is an oft-told tale.' Or, as the court of appeals of New York said when considering the constitutionality of a statute regulating employment agencies: 'The legislature had the right to take notice of the fact that such agencies are places where emigrants and ignorant people frequently resort to obtain employment and to procure information. The relations of a person so consulting an agency of this character with the managers or persons conducting it are such as to afford great opportunities for fraud and oppression, and the statute in question was for the purpose of preventing such frauds and, probably, for the suppression of immorality.' People ex rel. Armstrong v. Warden, 183 N. Y. 223, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 859, 76 N. E. 11, 5 Ann. Cas. 325."

And quoting from Moore v. Minneapolis, 43 Minn. 418, 45 N. W. 719, we said: "The nature of the business, and the character of those with whom the business is likely to be conducted, in point of intelligence, experience, and capacity for self-protection from fraudulent practices, are such that it might well be deemed necessary by the legislature, as a matter of proper police regulation. . . . The propriety of police regulation seems apparent when it is considered that, by means of such agencies, ignorant and credulous persons might easily be defrauded of their money under a mere pretense of employment to be afforded them in a distant part of the state, so that the fraud would not be discovered until the victim should have gone so far away as to be unlikely to trouble the fraudulent agent by prosecution.'"

We then said: "Furthermore, the act must be determined by a consideration of its natural effect when put in operation. In operation it may tend to protect the day laborer who, as said by the examiner in the office of the labor commissioner of the city of Seattle, 'is generally poor and without means' (Wiseman v. Tanner [D. C.] 221 Fed. 694), and who, in consideration of a fee, is directed to a job which may not exist, or which may not endure because of collusion between the employment agent and a corrupt foreman."

It is apparent from these quotations from Huntworth v. Tanner, 87 Wash. 670, 152 Pac. 527, that the act, and the purposes for which it was enacted, were to prevent frauds which had become common in the class of business to which the act relates, and was therefore, under the authorities above cited, within the police power of the state to regulate, and even suppress, to the extent, at least, of the frauds. The constitutionality of this act was upheld in Wiseman v. Tanner, supra, where all the authorities cited in the appellant's brief, and many not therein cited, were considered.

It is further argued by the appellant that the act is prohibitive of the business, and therefore is unconstitutional. This contention, we think, is without merit, because the act does not prohibit the business. Section 2 of the act (Laws 1915, p. 1) makes it unlawful for any employment agent to demand or receive fees from persons seeking employment. It does not prohibit the business. Fees, of course, may be charged against persons desiring to employ laborers. We are of the opinion that the act is a valid exercise of the police power, and is not unconstitutional upon either ground.

The judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

Morris, Ch. J., and Chadwick and Fullerton, JJ., concur. Ellis, J., concurs in the result.

Petition for rehearing denied.

Annotation—Constitutionality of statute forbidding taking of fee for securing employment for another.

The question of the right to license employment agencies under the police power has been treated in notes to People v. Warden, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 859; Spokane v. Macho, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 263; and People v. Brazee, L.R.A.1916E, 1150.

As stated in the opinion in STATE v. ROSSMAN, ante, 1276, the Washington statute was upheld by the majority opinion of the Federal district court in Wiseman v. Tanner (1915) 221 Fed. 694. There are extended majority and dissenting opinions in this case. The question arose upon a motion for a temporary injunction to restrain the enforcement of the act. Affidavits were presented in behalf of the plaintiffs to the effect that they had always been frank and honest with all persons dealing with them in seeking employment; and the defendant filed affidavits of various persons, including the president of the state federation of labor, the secretary of the municipal civil service commission and ex officio labor commissioner, the corporation counsel of the city of Seattle, L.R.A.1917B.

and others to the general effect that, according to their experience and observation, the employment agencies as conducted in the state led to a shortening of the length of employment, owing to the desire of the agencies to secure as many fees as possible, and collusion with foreman, superintendents, and other agents of employers.

The majority opinion cites in support of its conclusion decisions of the United States Supreme Court upholding various restrictions made in the exercise of the police power upon freedom of contract. The opinion expressly refers to the fact that the statute was initiated by a vote of the people, and said that, the electors having expressly stated therein that the welfare of the state demands the adoption of the provisions of the act, the court could not examine into local conditions. Continuing, the opinion says: "It is clearly apparent that what the regulation shall be and how to be administered are matters for the state, and a strong preponderant opinion being prevalent among the electors of the state, they having expressed at a general election that the public welfare required regulation as set forth in the act, and having declared that the evil existed and shall be met by prohibiting the collection of fees from a class of persons, the court cannot interfere, unless it appears that the act has no real or substantial relation to the evil sought to be remedied, which does not appear in this case. The court cannot say that the electors of the state, in adopting the act which declared that the welfare of the state required the prohibition of the collection of fees from the sources designated, did not exercise a reasonable discretion in declaring a public policy as in the act set forth."

And, in concluding, the majority opinion observed that the fact that complainants may have conducted their business honestly, and in such a way that no complaint could be rightfully lodged against them, would not prevent the state from adopting the measure, if necessary, to reach persons who have not so conducted their business, but, as stated before the bar, in such a way as to have three men for one job,—one upon the job, one going to the job, and one coming from the job,—and receiving compensation from all; that the honest must suffer with the others in regulating the business of the general class.

There is an able and elaborate dissenting opinion by Cushman, D. J., who said: "I dissent from the conclusion that the act in question is an act to regulate, reasonably or otherwise, this business, as it clearly appears to be one destroying and prohibiting the business of such agencies, where neither public health, safety, nor morals are concerned. If such business includes in it no harmful element, but when properly conducted is alone beneficial, then, under the Constitution, neither legislature nor electors can strike it down or prohibit it. To do so violates the 14th Amendment to the Constitution, and deprives those in that business of their liberty and property without due process of law." The opinion then points out the essential fallacies of the argument that the act did not prohibit business, since the employers might still pay the employment agencies a fee for seeking employees, and thereby the business might continue.

Many of the cases referred to in the majority opinion are distinguished in the dissenting opinion either as cases in which the court has upheld laws regulating the conduct of a lawful business, or laws regulating or prohibiting a business found to inherently have in itself essential elements of harm. After citing and commenting upon numerous cases upholding the constitutionality of certain regulatory statutes, the dissenting opinion observes: "There is nothing in the present case that can be said to be similar in any way to these conditions. There is nothing in the business of an employment agency inherently wrong, or tending towards wrong. It will probably always be that some of the unemployed will be poor, friendless, and among strangers, and therefore to be imposed upon with less danger than those more fortunately situated; but this fact does not show that the tendency of the business is in any way harmful. It simply affords the dishonest man in the business an opportunity to practise oppression. A business is not to be prohibited because persons affected by it are likely to be unfortunate." Again, the dissenting opinion says: "It is said in the majority opinion that the state is qualified to legislate concerning local conditions, but the right of the laborer to work, to sell his labor for bread, and to hire someone to find him a place to work and to sell it, smacks more of fundamental and primary principles than of local or temporary conditions. Misfortune and dishonesty are of neither time nor place. Primarily the legislature is the judge of such conditions, but its act will not stand where it is palpably in excess of the legislative power. . . . This law goes beyond what is reasonable in a remedy when it goes beyond the disease and deprives the patient of life. If the individual grocer defrauds his customers, by his weights or otherwise, no one would contend that the business of grocer should be prohibited. If this law may be upheld, it is not perceived why some other equally well-meaning legislature or electorate might not, with better reason, upon recital that the negro was in certain respects inferior to the white race, and was liable to be imposed upon by the dishonest white man, forbid all contracts between negroes and white men." The dissenting opinion concludes: "It may be easier and simpler to prohibit a business than regulate or prohibit wrong conduct in it; but where neither public health, safety, nor morals are concerned, for doubtful convenience sake in such case to say, 'Thou shalt not,' alike to right and wrong, to the wicked and the just, is to fail in the assertion of that for which laws and government were borne."

It will be observed that, as pointed out in the opinion in STATE v. ROSSMAN, ante, 1276, the statute in question does not make it unlawful for an employment agent to demand or receive fees from persons seeking employees.

The California supreme court in Ex parte Dickey (1904) 144 Cal. 234, 66 L.R.A. 928, 103 Am. St. Rep. 82, 77 Pac. 924, 1 Ann. Cas. 428, held unconstitutional an act which merely limited the charges which the owner of an employment agency might make for his services in securing employment. In arriving at its decision the court said: "The petitioner is engaged in a harmless and beneficial business. As part of his property in that business are the services that he renders in obtaining employment for those seeking it. It is not compulsory upon anyone to employ him, and whoso seeks to avail himself of his services is at liberty to reject them if the terms of the contract for compensation are not satisfactory to him. This right of contract common to the followers of all legitimate vocations is an asset of the petitioner in his chosen occupation, and, as has been said, is a part of the property in the enjoyment of which he is guaranteed protection by the Constitution. By the act in question he is arbitrarily stripped of this right of contract, and deprived of his property, and left, in following his vocation and in pursuit of his livelihood, circumscribed and hampered by a law not applicable to his fellow men in other occupations. Such legislation is of the class discussed by Judge Cooley in the paragraph above quoted,—'entirely arbitrary in its character, and restricting the rights, privileges, or legal capacities' of one class of citizens 'in a manner before unknown to the law.' For such legislation, as he very justly adds, those who claim its validity should be able to show a specific authority therefor, 'instead of calling upon others to show how and where the authority is negatived.' And where, it may be asked, could the line be drawn, if the legislature, under the guise of the exercise of its police power, should thus be permitted to encroach upon the rights of one class of citizens? Why should not the butcher and the baker, dealing in the necessities of life, be restricted in their right of contract, and, consequently, in their profits, to 10, 5, or 1 per cent? Why should not the contractor, the merchant, the professional man, be likewise subjected to such paternal laws, and why might not the legislature fix the price and value of the services of labor? The law is clearly one of those, the danger of whose enactment was foreshadowed by this court in Ex parte Jentzsch (1896) 112 Cal. 468, 32 L.R.A. 664, 44 Pac. 803, when it said: 'So, while the police power is one whose proper use makes most potently for good, in its undefined scope and inordinate exercise lurk no small danger to the Republic. For the difficulty which is experienced in defining its just limits and bounds affords a temptation to the legislature to encroach upon the rights of citizens with experimental laws, none the less dangerous because well meant.'"

W. W. A.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

W. W. KIMBALL COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

BOARD OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS
OF SHAWNEE COUNTY et al

(— Kan. —, 161 Pac. 644.)

Tax — notes — foreign corporation.

A piano company incorporated under the laws of Illinois with its home office at Chicago maintained a branch office at Topeka, where pianos were sold and sale notes taken therefor, retaining title in the company until paid. These notes were transmitted to the home office, copies being returned to the register of deeds for filing, and the originals were retained at Chicago, only being sent here for payment and remittance, practically all the payments being made here and credited and remitted to the home office; no part thereof being retained for the use of the local office. Returns for assessment were made on the local bank account and average stock on hand. Held, that such notes were not taxable here to the company, the situs for taxation being the domicile of the owner.

For other cases, see Taxes, II. in Dig. 1-52 N. 8.

Headnote by WEST, J.

(December 9, 1916.)

Note. — The situs of intangible personal property, including notes or other evidences of debt, as between different states or countries, for purposes of property taxation, is considered in the note to Liverpool L.R.A.1917B.

& L. & G. Ins. Co. v. Board of Assessors, L.R.A.1915C, 903. This question in relation to inheritance or succession taxes is considered in the note to Re Helena, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1167.

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Shawnee County in defendants' favor in an action brought to enjoin him from levying a tax warrant. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Charles Curtis and Otis E. Hungate for appellant.

Messrs. S. M. Brewster, Attorney General, J. L. Hunt, Assistant Attorney General, and W. E. Atchison, for appellees.

The notes in question are property within the state of Kansas subject to its jurisdiction, and the tax in question is authorized by its statutes.

Wilcox v. Ellis, 14 Kan. 588, 19 Am. Rep. 107; Fisher v. Rush County, 19 Kan. 414; New Orleans v. Stempel, 175 U. S. 302, 318, 44 L. ed. 174, 179, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110; Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. v. Board of Assessors, 221 U. S. 346, 55 L. ed. 762, L.R.A.1915C, 903, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 550; Higgins v. Com. 126 Ky. 211, 103 S. W. 306; Re Jefferson, 35 Minn. 215, 28 N. W. 256; Johnson County v. Hewitt, 76 Kan. 816, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 493, 93 Pac. 181; Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. New Orleans, 205 U. S. 395, 51 L. ed. 853, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499; Buck v. Beach, 206 U. S. 392, 51 L. ed. 1106, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 712, 11 Ann. Cas. 732; State Assessors v. Comp. toir Nat. d'Escompte, 191 U. S. 388, 402, 48 L. ed. 232, 238, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 109; Com. v. Dun, 126 Ky. 108, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 920, 102 S. W. 859.

West, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff procured a temporary injunction against the defendants, restraining them from levying a certain tax warrant, and from a judgment vacating such injunction and for costs this appeal is taken. The plaintiff is a piano company, an Illinois corporation, with its office and headquarters at Chicago, and had a branch of its selling business at Topeka in charge of a manager, a portion of its instruments being sold on credit by instalments, the purchaser executing a conditional sale contract, in which he promises to make payment at the Chicago office, the seller to retain title until the payments are made. The usual course of business was to forward the originals to the home office, where they were retained, copies being returned to the register of deeds for filing. Some of the customers sent their payments to Chicago, but it was admitted that practically all made them at the local office, where credit was given on the books; the cash being sent to Chicago. It was testified that neither the sale contracts nor the payments made on them were permitted to be used in the business at Topeka, and that the proceeds of local cash sales were kept distinct and separate from those received on these contracts. The taxation of $1,600 worth of these contracts gave rise to this controversy, the plaintiff claiming that they had no taxable situs in Shawnee county. The court made no findings of fact, but there was testimony in support of the plaintiff's claims, as already indicated. It was also brought out that as each payment matures a notice is mailed to the customer from the Chicago office, with a notation that the payments may be made, if desired, at the Topeka store, to which the note is sent, thus giving the customer the option to pay here, although the contracts are, by their terms, payable at Chicago; that all the proceeds are sent to Chicago, and no part thereof retained for use here; that whenever money is needed, it is remitted from the Chicago office, although usually the local offices are supposed to be self-supporting. In a large number of cases the instruments were bought on monthly payments, which were made at the local office, and by those in charge remitted to the home office.

The defendants contend that the plaintiff maintained a store and stock of goods in Topeka; that notes for deferred payments on pianos sold, while on their faces payable in Chicago, were almost invariably paid here, and that the important question is whether or not a foreign corporation may establish a store here, carry a stock, and avoid taxation upon its credits arising out of its business, thus gaining a preference over local enterprises. Admitting that only property in its jurisdiction may be taxed by the state, they argue that the business situs of the notes was in Topeka, where they had, for the purposes of collection, the protection of Kansas laws. The general provision of the Corporation Act (Gen. Stat. 1909, § 1724) that foreign corporations doing business here, are under like restrictions and obligations as domestic corporations is invoked, and also § 9223 of the General Statutes of 1909, which requires property of merchants to be listed where their business is usually done, which counsel concede means only property employed in such business, and not all the property owned by such merchants. Returns for taxation were voluntarily made on the local bank account and average stock on hand, so that, as suggested by plaintiff, the pianos for which the contracts in question were given were taxed in this jurisdiction.

It cannot be said, and it is not claimed, that these notes were in Kansas on the 1st of March, or that they ever remained here for any length of time. There is no showing that they were used in business here or otherwise than for collection and remittance to the home office. Counsel for the defendant put the matter thus: "Do the statutes authorize their taxation; and are they subject to the taxing jurisdiction of the state? This last question means: Is it equitable that the credits should be taxed here and not elsewhere?"

Section 9214 of the General Statutes of 1909 provides: "That all property in this state, real and personal, not expressly exempt therefrom, shall be subject to taxation in the manner prescribed by this act."

Section 9215 reads: "The term 'personal property' shall include . . . all other assets of every company, incorporated or unincorporated, and every share or interest in such . . . assets, by whatever name the same may be designated."

Section 9221: "Money collected by any agent for any . . . corporation which is to be transmitted immediately to such . . . corporation shall not be listed by such agent; but such agent shall if required by the assessor state under oath the amount of money in his hands and to whom the same is to be transmitted."

In Wilcox v. Ellis, 14 Kan. 588, 19 Am. Rep. 107, a resident of Butler county who had contracted to sell certain land in Illinois had taken notes therefor which were deposited with certain bankers in that state, and it was held that he was not taxable here upon these notes. In the opinion it was said: "Then what is there in Kansas to be taxed? Certainly no tangible property; and not even any intangible property that needs any protection from our laws. Everything is and has been in Illinois. . . . Nothing pertaining to the notes, or to the debt which they evidence, has ever been in Kansas except that the owner of the notes resides in Kansas."

Prominence was given to the fact that the owner of the notes still owned the land and was liable for the taxes thereon, and the injustice of requiring him to pay the additional tax on the notes whenever within the jurisdiction of this state was considered. In Fisher v. Rush County, 19 Kan. 414, a citizen of Rush county who had sold certain real estate in Iowa and received promissory notes in part consideration secured by mortgage thereon, both made payable in Iowa and left there for collection, and had never been in Kansas, was held not liable here for taxes thereon. The correlative terms of taxation and protection were given force in the decision, and it was pointed out that personalty does not always follow the owner if the business transacted or the situs of the notes be not in the state where the owner resides. In L.R.A.1917B.

Gibbins v. Adamson, 5 Kan. App. 90, 48 Pac. 871, it was found that the plaintiff was the owner of a mortgage on lands in Jackson county, securing a note for $6,000, but, having given his own note for $2,300 to a resident of Missouri, had indorsed the $6,000 note and assigned the mortgage to him as collateral security, and they were thereafter continuously held in Missouri until after March 1, 1887; that, March 24, 1887, the mortgage note having been paid to the plaintiff, the mortgage was released by the Missouri holder, and it was held that the plaintiff was properly chargeable with taxes thereon, his domicile being deemed the taxable situs. This was affirmed by this court. Gibbins v. Adamson, 58 Kan. 818, 51 Pac. 1101. It was held in Kingman County v. Leonard, 67 Kan. 531, 535, 34 L.R.A. 810, 57 Am. St. Rep. 347, 46 Pac. 961, that judgments rendered by the courts of this state in favor of and owned by citizens of other states are not taxable here. It was said to be quite well settled that choses in action belonging to a non-resident in the hands of a managing agent within the state are taxable; also that "some weight at least should be given to the rule that credits are generally regarded as residing with the creditor. The case of Fisher v. Rush County, supra, is an extreme one, and has been criticized."

In Mccartney v. Caskey, 66 Kan. 412, 414, 71 Pac. 833, tax sales certificates issued by a county treasurer of this state on sales of real estate for delinquent taxes, owned by a nonresident, were held not subject to taxation in this state. The plaintiff, a resident of California, employed an agent to bid for real estate at tax sales, and the certificates were sometimes kept in California and sometimes at the agent's office in Kansas. It was there said: "If the owner be a nonresident the certificate has no situs in this state."

Kingman County v. Leonard was followed as controlling authority, and attention was called to the criticism therein of Fisher v. Rush County. In Johnson County v. Hewitt, 76 Kan. 816, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 493, 93 Pac. 181, promissory notes, belonging to a nonresident of Kansas, given by a resident of Missouri and secured by trust deeds of real estate in Missouri, which had never been brought into this state, but which were left, for safe-keeping only, in a bank vault in Missouri, were held to constitute personal property with its location at the residence of owner. It was pointed out (76 Kan. 821) that the statute places tax sale certificates, judgments, notes, bonds, and mortgages, and all evidences of debt secured by a lien on real estate in the same category, and distinguishes them from tangible personal property. Kingman County v. Leonard and Mecartney v. Caskey were cited. It was said that the doctrine that the note is only the evidence of the debt constituting the owner's tangible property is thoroughly established. As to the intimation that such property might acquire a situs here for the purpose of taxation, it was declared: "Notes, mortgages, tax sale certificates, and the like might be brought into the state for something more than a temporary purpose, be devoted to some business use here, and thus become incorporated with the property of this state for revenue purposes. Such a situs has aptly been termed a 'business situs'" (citing authorities). 76 Kan. 822. That to establish an independent business situs generally, the element of the separation from the domicile of the owner and fairly permanent attachment to some foreign locality should appear, together with some business use of them or some power of managing, controlling, or dealing with them in a business way. "A merely transitory presence in a foreign state or a naked custody for safe-keeping is not enough." 76 Kan. 823.

Also that probably the weight of authority would not now sustain the holding in Fisher v. Rush County that the property had a business situs in Iowa because it was left there for collection. "Although much confusion still exists, legal thought upon the subject of the taxation of intangible property has been considerably clarified since the opinions in the Wilcox and the Fisher Cases were written, and many of the arguments there advanced would now be regarded as unsatisfactory." 76 Kan. 825.

In the recent case of Freedom Twp. v. Douglas, — Kan. —, 60 Pac. 1147, holding valid chapter 276 of the Laws of 1905 prescribing where the property of certain insurance companies shall be listed for taxation, it was stated that "it is entirely competent for the legislature, except as limited by the Constitution, to fix the situs of property, tangible and intangible, for the purposes of taxation. 37 Cyc. 947. In the absence of specific legislation, debts evidenced by notes and mortgages are ordinarily taxed at the domicile of the owner."

If the equities of the correlative doctrine of taxation and protection are to be considered, then so long as the notes in controversy remained in Illinois, the residence of the owner, they were under the protection of the Illinois laws. Their transmission here for payment and remittance cannot reasonably be said, as a matter of law, to localize them for taxation, the legislature never having evinced such a purpose.

Attention is called to the case of Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. v. Board of Assessors, 221 U. S. 346, 55 L. ed. 762, L.R.A. 1915C, 903, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 550, holding certain choses in action owned by an insurance company doing business in Louisiana taxable there. But in that case the legislature had enacted, among other things, that "no nonresident, either by himself or through any agent, shall transact business here without paying to the state a corresponding tax with that exacted of its own citizens; and all bills receivable, obligations, or credits arising from the business done in this state are hereby declared assessable within this state, and at the business domicile of said nonresident, his agent or representative."

The effect of the decision was that the legislature had power thus to localize for the purpose of taxation the situs of the credits there involved. But here we find no expression of legislative intention to fix a local situs, and, whether important or not, no equitable pressure requiring such localization.

The situation presented is one which, under the general rule, permits and calls for the operation of the maxim that personal property follows the domicile of the owner.

The judgment is reversed.

All the Justices concur.

Petition for rehearing denied.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

MARY A. BOLSTER, Admr., etc., Appt.,
v.

CITY OF LAWRENCE.

(— Mass. —, 114 N. E. 722.)

Municipal corporations — collapse of bathhouse — liability.

A municipal corporation is not liable for injury caused by the collapse of a structure L.R.A.1917B.

erected and maintained under statutory authority as a bathhouse for the free use of the public, although it is authorized to make a small charge for accommodations furnished.

For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, II. g, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 4, 1917.)

Note. — The liability of municipal corporations for injuries through unsafe conditions in parks or other public grounds

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Essex County sustaining a demurrer to a declaration in an action brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. Scott Peters, Harry J. Cole, Frederick H. Magison, and Willbert F. Barrett, for appellant:

When a municipal corporation is acting for the benefit of its citizens alone, and is not acting under a duty imposed by the state, it is liable for the negligent management of its corporate property as a private corporation would be.

Hildreth v. Lowell, 11 Gray, 345; Haskell v. New Bedford, 108 Mass. 208; Perry v. Worcester, 6 Gray, 544, 66 Am. Dec. 431; Oliver v. Worcester, 102 Mass. 489, 3 Am. Rep. 485; Emery v. Lowell, 104 Mass. 13; Little v. Holyoke, 177 Mass. 114, 52 L.R.A. 417, 58 N. E. 170; Anthony v. Adams, 1 Met. 284; Sullivan v. Holyoke, 135 Mass. 273; Hawks v. Charlemont, 107 Mass. 414; Deane v. Randolph, 132 Mass. 475; Boston Belting Co. v. Boston, 149 Mass. 44, 20 N. E. 320; Dickinson v. Boston, 188 Mass. 595, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 664, 75 N. E. 68; Waldron v. Haverhill, 143 Mass. 582, 10 N. E. 481; Bates v. Westborough, 151 Mass. 174, 7 L.R.A. 156, 23 N. E. 1070; Butman v. Newton, 179 Mass. 1, 88 Am. St. Rep. 349, 60 N. E. 491; Rhobidas v. Concord, 70 N. H. 90, 51 L.R.A. 381, 85 Am. St. Rep. 604, 47 Atl. 82; McGraw v. District of Columbia, 3 App. D. C. 405, 25 L.R.A. 691; Doherty v. Braintree, 148 Mass. 495, 20 N. E. 106.

Mr. Daniel J. Murphy, for appellee:

There can, of course, be no recovery for death unless given by statute, and there is no statute that enlarges the common-law liability as to municipal corporations in a case like the present.

Donohue v. Newburyport, 211 Mass. 561, 98 N. E. 1081, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 742; O'Donnell v. North Attleborough, 212 Mass. 243, 98 N. E. 1084.

Where there has been no pecuniary private or corporate advantage in the performance of a public service, defendant is not liable for mere neglect in the performance of the public duty.

Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 344, 23 Am. Rep. 332; Moynihan v. Todd, 188 Mass. 301, 108 Am. St. Rep. 473, 74 N. E. 367; Donohue v. Newburyport, supra; Eastman v. Meredith, 36 N. H. 284, 72 Am. Dec. 302; Haley v. Boston, 191 Mass. 291, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1005, 77 N. E. 888; Johnson v. Somerville, 195 Mass. 370, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 715, 81 N. E. 268; Hafford v. New Bedford, 16 Gray, 297; Fisher v. Boston, 104 Mass. 87, 6 Am. Rep. 196; Pettingell v. Chelsea, 161 Mass. 368, 24 L.R.A. 426, 37 N. E. 390; Howard v. Worcester, 153 Mass. 426, 12 L.R.A. 160, 25 Am. St. Rep. 651, 27 N. E. 11; Morrison v. Lawrence, 98 Mass. 219; Buttrick v. Lowell, 1 Allen, 172, 79 Am. Dec. 721; Sampson v. Boston, 161 Mass. 288, 37 N. E. 177; Tindley v. Salem, 137 Mass. 171, 50 Am. Rep. 289; Harrington v. Worcester, 186 Mass. 594, 72 N. E. 326; Rome v. Worcester, 188 Mass. 307, 74 N. E. 370; Barry v. Smith, 191 Mass. 78, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1028, 77 N. E. 1099, 6 Ann. Cas. 817; Smith v. Gloucester, 201 Mass. 329, 87 N. E. 626; Postal Teleg.-Cable Co. v. Worcester, 202 Mass. 320, 88 N. E. 777; Hathaway v. Everett, 205 Mass. 246, 137 Am. St. Rep. 436, 91 N. E. 296; Kerr v. Brookline, 208 Mass. 190, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 464, 94 N. E. 257; McGraw v. District of Columbia, 3 App. D. C. 405, 25 L.R.A. 691.

Rugg, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The allegations in the several counts of the plaintiff's declaration, so far as now material, are in substance that the defendant city maintained and operated a bathhouse established by it on the shore of the Merrimac river, whereby the plaintiff's intestate, who had resorted to the bathhouse for the enjoyment of the facilities there afforded, while in the exercise of due care, was mortally injured by the giving way of the structure and its approaches, resulting from the negligence of the defendant and its servants. The bathhouse was maintained under Rev. Laws, chap. 25, §§ 20, 21. Thereby the defendant was authorized to purchase or lease land and erect or repair a building "for public baths" and to "make open bathing places" and to "provide instruction in swimming," and also to "establish rates for the use of such baths." There is no averment that the defendant made any charge for the use of the bathhouse. The argument before us proceeded upon the assumption that no charge was made, and that the bathhouse was established and other than streets is discussed in the note to Bernstein v. Milwaukee, L.R.A.1915C, 435, and see later cases, Nashville v. Burns, L.R.A.1915D, 1108; Ackeret v. Minneapolis, L.R.A.1915D, 1111; and Hibbard v. Wichita, L.R.A.1917A, 399.

Many other specific aspects of the general L.R.A.1917B.

subject of municipal liability as affected by the distinction between public or governmental and private or proprietary functions are treated in annotation cited in the Indexes to L.R.A. Notes under the title, "Municipal Corporations," subtitle "Liability for damages."

maintained for the free use of the public. The case must be considered on that footing.

The general principles of law by which claims for liability in tort against cities and towns must be determined are well established. The municipality, in the absence of special statute imposing liability, is not liable for the tortious acts of its officers and servants in connection with the gratuitous performance of strictly public functions, imposed by mandate of the legislature or undertaken voluntarily by its permission, from which is derived no special corporate advantage, no pecuniary profit, and no enforced contribution from individuals particularly benefited by way of compensation for use or assessment for betterments. A city or town is not liable therefore for negligent or tortious acts in the conduct of schools (Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 344, 23 Am. Rep. 332), the construction of schoolhouses (Howard v. Worcester, 153 Mass. 426, 12 L.R.A. 160, 25 Am. St. Rep. 651, 27 N. E. 11), the maintenance of a city hall solely for public uses (Kelley v. Boston, 186 Mass. 165, 66 L.R.A. 429, 71 N. E. 299), of shade trees (Donohue v. Newburyport, 211 Mass. 561, 98 N. E. 1081, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 742), of a house of industry (Curran v. Boston, 151 Mass. 505, 8 L.R.A. 243, 21 Am. St. Rep. 465, 24 N. E. 781), of a public park (Holleran v. Boston, 176 Mass. 75, 57 N. E. 220), in the printing of committee reports (Howland v. Maynard, 159 Mass. 434, 21 L.R.A. 500, 38 Am. St. Rep. 445, 34 N. E. 515). Nor is it answerable for the acts of police officers (Buttrick v. Lowell, 1 Allen, 172, 79 Am. Dec. 721), highway surveyors (Dupuis v. Fall River, 223 Mass. 73, 111 N. E. 706; Smith v. Gloucester, 201 Mass. 329, 87 N. E. 626), road commissioners (McManus v. Weston, 164 Mass. 263, 31 L.R.A. 174, 41 N. E. 301), members of the fire department (Hafford v. New Bedford, 16 Gray, 297; Pettingell v. Chelsea, 161 Mass. 368, 24 L.R.A. 426, 37 N. E. 380; Workman v. New York, 179 U. S. 552, 580, 45 L. ed. 314, 327, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 212), assessors (Rossire v. Boston, 4 Allen, 57; Hathaway v. Everett, 205 Mass. 246, 137 Am. St. Rep. 436, 91 N. E. 296), selectmen (Cushing v. Bedford, 125 Mass. 526; Pinkerton v. Randolph, 200 Mass. 24, 85 N. E. 892), boards of aldermen (Child v. Boston, 4 Allen, 41, 51, 81 Am. Dec. 680), the city government (Griggs v. Foote, 4 Allen, 195), licensing boards (McGinnis v. Medway, 176 Mass. 67, 57 N. E. 210), tax collectors (Alger v. Easton, 119 Mass. 77), constable and deputy collector of taxes (Dunbar v. Boston, 112 Mass. 75), overseers of the poor (New Bedford v. Taunton, 9 Allen, 207), servants in the discharge of fireworks (Tindley v. Salem, 137 Mass. L.R.A.1917B.

171, 50 Am. Rep. 289), those in charge of celebrations, playgrounds, and public amusements (Kerr v. Brookline, 208 Mass. 190, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 464, 94 N. E. 257; Higginson v. The Treasurer (Higginson v. Slattery) 212 Mass. 583, 588, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, 99 N. E. 523), boards of health (Barry v. Smith, 191 Mass. 78, 88, 91, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1028, 77 N. E. 1099, 6 Ann. Cas. 817), other health officers (Harrington v. Worcester, 186 Mass. 591, 598, 72 N. E. 326), collectors of refuse (Johnson v. Somerville, 195 Mass. 370, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 715, 81 N. E. 268), gatemen or draw tenders (Butterfield v. Boston, 148 Mass. 544, 2 L.R.A. 447, 20 N. E. 113; Hawes v. Milton, 213 Mass. 446, 100 N. E. 665), transit and subway commissioners (Mahoney v. Boston, 171 Mass. 427, 50 N. E. 939, 4 Am. Neg. Rep. 395), and officers charged with enforcement of statutes as to the removal of wires and electric appliances from streets (Postal Teleg.-Cable Co. v. Worcester, 202 Mass. 320, 88 N. E. 777).

On the other hand a municipality is answerable for the acts of its servants or agents in the conduct of functions voluntarily undertaken for its own profit and commercial in character, or to protect its corporate interests in its own way. Thus it is liable for the acts of agents specially selected and deputed to repair highways to the exclusion of those public officers provided by the law, on the ground that it is protecting by quasi private instrumentalities its pecuniary interest growing out of statutory liability for defects in highways. Butman v. Newton, 179 Mass. 1, 88 Am. St. Rep. 349, 60 N. E. 401; Waldron v. Haverhill, 143 Mass. 582, 10 N. E. 481. It is liable on the same ground, for agencies used in lighting streets. Dickinson v. Boston, 188 Mass. 595, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 664, 75 N. E. 68; Sullivan v. Holyoke, 135 Mass. 273. So also it is liable for negligence in the management of its water department (Hand v. Brookline, 126 Mass. 324; Lynch v. Springfield, 174 Mass. 430, 54 N. E. 871; Johnson v. Worcester, 172 Mass. 122, 51 N. E. 519), in the operation of its sewer system (O'Brien v. Worcester 172 Mass. 348, 52 N. E. 385, 5 Am. Neg. Rep. 171; Allen v. Boston, 159 Mass. 324, 38 Am. St. Rep. 423, 34 N. E. 519), in running a ferryboat (Davies v. Boston, 190 Mass. 194, 76 N. E. 663, 20 Am. Neg. Rep. 108), in the letting of a public hall for profit (Little v. Holyoke, 177 Mass. 114, 52 L.R.A. 417, 58 N. E. 170; Oliver v. Worcester, 102 Mass. 489, 499, 3 Am. Rep. 485), in managing a farm, partly for the support of its poor, partly for the maintenance of its highway department, and partly for the production of income (Neff v. Wellesley, 148 Mass. 487, 2

L.R.A. 500, 20 N. E. 111), in the operation of a stone crusher for profit (Duggan v. Peabody, 187 Mass. 349, 73 N. E. 206, 17 Am. Neg. Rep. 559; Collins v. Greenfield, 172 Mass. 78, 51 N. E. 454), and in the maintenance of electric and gas lighting plants, for the use of which rates are charged (O'Donnell v. North Attleborough, 212 Mass. 243, 98 N. E. 1084).

The difficulty lies not in the statement of the governing principles of law, but in their application to particular facts. The underlying test is whether the act is for the common good of all without the element of special corporate benefit or pecuniary profit. If it is, there is no liability, if it is not, there may be liability. That it may be undertaken voluntarily and not under compulsion of statutes is not of consequence. Tindley v. Salem, 137 Mass. 171, 50 Am. Rep. 289.

The maintenance of free public baths upon the bank of a river is in its essence a public benefit. It is manifestly in the interests of the public health that the people have abundant facilities for cleanliness. Opportunity for swimming under sanitary conditions and under the protection and with the instruction of public officers tends toward the amusement of the people, as well as their healthful and athletic exercise. It belongs to the same class of public service as municipal playgrounds and swimming pools for small children. It is a kind of social advantage which the commonwealth long has provided at Nantasket and Revere beaches on a considerable scale. It is in its intrinsic characteristics a project for the general good of all the public.

The only doubtful aspect of the case arises from the circumstances that the statute empowers the cities and towns which vote to adopt its provisions, "to establish rates for the use of such baths," and thus possibly to derive a revenue or profit from the undertaking. But, as has been pointed out, there is no allegation that there has been any rate charged in the case at bar. The simple possibility that a charge might have been made is not enough to transform that which in its main features as actually conducted is a purely public duty rendered for the common good into a quasi commercial adventure.

In this respect the case is indistinguishable in principle from city hospitals maintained, not infrequently under special statute, for the performance of a duty assumed for the benefit of the public. Although such institutions may receive pay patients, their public character is not lost thereby, and no liability attaches to the municipality arising from negligence of those in charge. Benton v. City Hospital, 140 Mass. 13, 54 Am. Rep. 436, 1 N. E. 836. The case at bar is L.R.A.1917B.

somewhat similar to that where a city has been exonerated from responsibility for negligence in the care of its city hall, although housed in it rent free were the commercial revenue yielding departments of water, sewer, and ferries. Kelley v. Boston, 186 Mass. 165, 66 L.R.A. 429, 71 N. E. 299. It is not unlike the cases where a slight revenue is obtained from the labor performed at a public workhouse (Curran v. Boston, 151 Mass. 505, 8 L.R.A. 243, 21 Am. St. Rep. 465, 24 N. E. 781), a charge sufficient to cover the bare cost of removal of steam engine ashes is collected in connection with the gratuitous removal of all ashes from dwelling houses (Haley v. Boston, 191 Mass. 291, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1005, 77 N. E. 888), or a rental is received for the use of the tunnel and subways in Boston (Mahoney v. Boston, 171 Mass. 427, 50 N. E. 939, 4 Am. Neg. Rep. 395), in each of which it has been held that the comparatively insignificant element of income received did not affect the dominating public character of the enterprise, and did not render the city liable for the torts of public officers and servants in performing such public duty.

A similar conclusion was reached, as to liability for negligence in the operation of a bathhouse maintained by public authority, in McGraw v. District of Columbia, 3 App. D. C. 405, 25 L.R.A. 691, although it does not appear directly in that case that there was authority to make any charge.

It follows that for the acts set forth in the plaintiff's declaration the defendant is not liable on the broad ground recognized in most jurisdictions that in the establishment and maintenance of purely public instrumentalities devoted to the common good, as is a bathhouse under the circumstances here disclosed, it acted as an agency of government in the performance of duties assumed solely for the benefit of the public. See Donohue v. Newburyport, 211 Mass. 561, 565, 98 N. E. 1081, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 742.

The demurrer to the plaintiff's declaration was sustained rightly and judgment in favor of the defendant is affirmed.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

JULIUS FRANK et al., Respts.,

v.

THEODORE CARTER, Appt.

(219 N. Y. 35, 113 N. E. 549.)

Husband and wife — illegal marriage — necessities — liability.

One who has gone through a form of mar-

Note. — As to liability for necessities furnished reputed wife, see annotation following this case, post, 1290.

riage with a woman already married to another, and who lives with her and holds her out as his wife, cannot defeat a claim for necessities furnished her, by setting up the illegality of the marriage.

For other cases, see Husband and Wife, I. a, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(July 11, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Third Department, affirming a judgment of the St. Lawrence County Court which affirmed a judgment of a justice of the peace in plaintiffs' favor, in an action brought to recover the purchase price of certain goods claimed to have been purchased of plaintiffs on defendant's credit by his alleged wife. Modified and affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Hermon J. Donavin, for appellant:

The articles sold do not come within the scope of necessities, but even if they did, Carter would not be liable, as what evidence there is on this point tends to show that she was amply provided for, with no evidence to the contrary.

Wanamaker v. Weaver, 176 N. Y. 75, 65 L.R.A. 529, 98 Am. St. Rep. 621, 68 N. E. 135.

Defendant's marriage was void ab initio, and he never became the husband of Mary Howard Moore, and she never became his wife.

Hopper v. Hopper, 92 Hun, 415, 36 N. Y. Supp. 610; Blinks v. Blinks, 5 Misc. 193, 25 N. Y. Supp. 768; Park v. Park, 24 Misc. 372, 53 N. Y. Supp. 677.

Mr. John C. Tulloch, for respondents:

Defendant must either pay for the goods purchased or the plaintiffs must lose the amount of their claim, and defendant having accredited Mary Howard Carter as his agent, the loss, if any, should fall on him.

Bickford v. Menier, 107 N. Y. 400, 14 N. E. 438; Walsh v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 73 N. Y. 10; Bank of Monongahela Valley v. Weston, 172 N. Y. 265, 64 N. E. 946; Merkel v. Lazard, 114 App. Div. 28, 99 N. Y. Supp. 686; Barnes v. Long Island Real Estate Exch. & Invest. Co. 88 App. Div. 91, 84 N. Y. Supp. 951; Clark v. Metropolitan Bank, 3 Duer, 248; Story, Agency, § 127; Stalner v. Tysen, 3 Hill, 279; Cromwell v. Benjamin, 41 Barb. 558; Hatch v. Leonard, 165 N. Y. 439, 69 N. E. 270; Wanamaker v. Weaver, 176 N. Y. 77, 65 L.R.A. 529, 98 Am. St. Rep. 621, 68 N. E. 135; Keller v. Phillips, 39 N. Y. 351; Zimmer v. Settle, 124 N. Y. 37, 21 Am. St. Rep. 638, 26 N. E. 341; De Brauwere v. De Brauwere, 203 N. Y. 460, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 508, 96 N. E. 722; Wilder v. L.R.A.1917B.

Brokaw, 141 App. Div. 911, 126 N. Y. Supp. 932.

The articles purchased, being clothing of the wife, were as much necessities for which defendant was liable, as if such purchases had been groceries, food, or fuel, and for such purchases Mary Howard Carter was his accredited agent.

Lindholm v. Kane, 92 Hun, 369, 36 N. Y. Supp. 665; Kegney v. Ovens, 18 N. Y. S. R. 482, 2 N. Y. Supp. 319; Winkler v. Schlager, 64 Hun, 83, 19 N. Y. Supp. 110; Wenz v. McCann, 107 App. Div. 567, 95 N. Y. Supp. 462; Hazard v. Potts, 40 Misc. 365, 82 N. Y. Supp. 246; De Brauwere v. De Brauwere, 144 App. Div. 521, 129 N. Y. Supp. 587; Thrall Hospital v. Caren, 140 App. Div. 171, 124 N. Y. Supp. 1038; Keller v. Phillips, 39 N. Y. 351; Zimmer v. Settle, 124 N. Y. 45, 21 Am. St. Rep. 638, 26 N. E. 341.

It was for the defendant to have proved as a defense that the goods sold were not necessities, he having the burden of proof to satisfy the court or jury that they were not necessities.

Wickstrom v. Peck, 163 App. Div. 608, 148 N. Y. Supp. 596; Mandel Bros. v. Simpson, 67 Misc. 386, 122 N. Y. Supp. 397; Bradt v. Shull, 46 App. Div. 347, 61 N. Y. Supp. 484; Rosenfeld v. Peck, 149 App. Div. 663, 134 N. Y. Supp. 392.

Hiscock, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought to recover the purchase price of two lots of goods claimed to have been purchased respectively of different merchants on the credit of the defendant by his alleged wife.

In form defendant had been married to the woman who purchased the goods, and for several years had lived with her and held her out as his wife. Finally, he learned that at the time of the purported marriage she had another husband living, and he was proceeding to institute a prosecution against her for bigamy when she fled from the country. On the eve of her departure she purchased the goods in question. One lot, consisting of a suit and skirt aggregating in value $33.50, was purchased of the plaintiffs, and the other lot, aggregating in value $21, was purchased from another storekeeper, who assigned his account to the plaintiffs. There was some slight evidence that during the time the man and woman were living together he permitted her to make small purchases of necessities on his credit, but I cannot find the slightest evidence to sustain the judgment so far as it covers the assigned account. There is not a word of testimony to indicate what the articles were which are claimed to have been so purchased or that they were sold on the credit of the defendant. While, of course, we must make proper allowance for the informalities of a trial in justice court, obviously there is no rule or principle which permits us wholly to substitute speculation and conjecture for evidence, and I agree with the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Woodward that we should have to do this if we affirmed the judgment as to this cause of action.

While the evidence is not at all satisfactory in respect of the other cause of action, I think that it probably did permit the court to find facts sufficient to sustain the judgment. While some of the testimony indicates that the sale was made to the wife personally rather than on the credit of the husband, I think that this testimony refers to the physical transaction whereby the contract was made with her and the goods delivered to her, and that it might be found that it was the intention to sell them on the credit of the husband and charge them to him. The evidence also permitted the finding that the goods were necessities, and, this being so, it was lawful, under ordinary circumstances, for the storekeeper to charge them to the husband unless it appeared by way of defense that the wife was amply supplied with articles of the same character as those purchased, or that she had been furnished with ready money with which to pay therefor, and which facts were not established. Wanamaker v. Weaver, 176 N. Y. 75, 65 L.R.A. 529, 98 Am. St. Rep. 621, 68 N. E. 135.

The only remaining question for our consideration is whether the liability of the defendant was affected by the fact that his purported marriage with the woman was void. I think that it was not. Inasmuch as he had gone through the form of a marriage with her and lived with her and held her out as his wife, his status was no different for the purposes here involved than it would have been had the marriage been a legal one. Johnstone v. Allen, 6 Abb. Pr. N. S. 306; Munro v. De Chemant, 4 Campb. 215; Blades v. Free, 9 Barn. & C. 167, 109 Eng. Reprint, 63, 4 Moody & R. 282, 7 L. J. K. B. 211; Ryan v. Sams, L. R. 12 Q. B. 460, 17 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 271, 12 Jur. 745.

I recommend that the judgment be reduced by deducting the sum of $21, with interest thereon from January 13, 1913, and that as so modified it be affirmed, without costs of this appeal to either party.

Willard Bartlett, Ch. J., and Collin, Cuddeback, Hogan, Seabury, and Pound, JJ., concur.

Annotation—Liability for necessities furnished reputed wife.

"Marriage imposes on the husband the general duty of supporting his wife, and if he is derelict in this duty, he is liable to third persons who furnish necessities to his wife. His liability in this respect is not abrogated by statutes enabling the wife to hold to her own use property acquired by her and otherwise enlarging her rights and liabilities." 13 R. C. L. § 230, p. 1198.

The notes to Wanamaker v. Weaver, 65 L.R.A. 529, and James McCreery & Co. v. Martin, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 279, as to the liability of husband for necessities furnished wife while living with him, include cases considering the liability of the husband not only by reason of his obligation as such to support and maintain his wife, but also on account of the presumptive agency arising from cohabitation, as well as on account of any acts or omissions constituting an assent, actual or constructive, on his part, and exclude cases considering the liability of the husband when the wife is such by repute only. The present note is intended to include all cases considering the liability of a man for necessities furnished a woman reputed to be his wife, whether there has been any form of marriage between them or not other than cohabitation as man and wife.

Reason and justice seem to demand that a man should not be permitted to live with a woman, allowing her the use of his name and representing her to be his wife, and then escape liability for necessities furnished her on credit by third persons, by showing that she is not in fact his wife. Accordingly the cases are substantially agreed that a man living with a woman as his wife, holding her out and representing her to the world as such, is liable for necessities furnished her on credit by third persons. He is estopped from denying that the relationship of husband and wife exists between them in order to escape liability. Watson v. Threlkeld (1798) 2 Esp. (Eng.) 637; Blades v. Free (1829) 9 Barn. & C. 167, 109 Eng. Reprint, 63, 4 Moody & R. 282, 7 L. J. K. B. 211; Ryan v. Sams (1848) 12 Q. B. (Eng.) 460, 17 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 271, 12 Jur. 745; Hudson v. Brent, Esp. N. P. Dig. (Eng.) 124, cited in 1 Salk. 118, note, 91 Eng. Reprint, 110, note; Munro v. De Chemant (1815) 4 Campb. (Eng.)

215; Redferns Limited v. Inwood (1912) 27 Ont. L. Rep. 213, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 1061; Hoyle v. Warfield (1887) 28 Ill. App. 628; Warrington v. Anable (1899) 84 Ill. App. 593; Ponder v. Graham (1851) 4 Fla. 23 (dictum). And see Paule v. Goding (1861) 2 Fost. & F. (Eng.) 585, and Paquin v. Beauclerk [1906] A. C. (Eng.) 148, 75 L. J. K. B. N. S. 395, 54 Week. Rep. 521, 94 L. T. N. S. 350, 22 Times L. R. 395.

In Watson v. Threlkeld (1798) 2 Esp. (Eng.) 637, the court said: "It is certain that if a man has permitted a woman to whom he was not married, to use his name and pass for his wife, and in that character to contract debts, he is liable for her debts; and I am of opinion that he is liable, whether the tradesman who furnished the goods knew the circumstances to be so, or not. He gives her a credit from his name and cohabitation; and it is not to be supposed that the tradesman could look to the credit of a woman of that description and not to that of the man by whom she was supported." The court added, however, that this "must not be taken to be the case of a common strumpet who may assume the name of a person, without his authority, from having casually known him; it must be where the man permits the woman to assume his name, where she lives in his house, and is part of his family."

And in Hoyle v. Warfield (1877) 28 Ill. App. 628, the court said: "The parties were living together as husband and wife and were recognized and treated as such in the community where they lived; and as to all who furnish them the necessities of life which come under the head of family expenses, under the belief that such relation existed, when such belief is justified by the conduct of the parties, as it clearly was in this case, we think the provisions of § 15 of chap. 68, Rev. Stat., apply. That section provides that 'the expenses of the family . . . shall be chargeable upon the property of both husband and wife, or of either of them, in favor of creditors therefor, and in relation thereto they may be sued jointly or separately.' Under the provisions of this section we think it makes no difference to which of the parties the credit is originally given; they are both liable."

For stronger reasons, if anything, the same rule likewise obtains where the parties have gone through a marriage ceremony which is afterwards found to be invalid and of no effect. Robinson v. Nahon (1808) 1 Campb. (Eng.) 245; L.R.A.1917B.

Hawley v. Ham (1826) Taylor, K. B. (Can.) 385; Johnstone v. Allen (1869) 6 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 306, 39 How. Pr. 506. FRANK v. CARTER, ante, 1288, is to this effect.

The separation of the parties relieves the husband, so called, from liability for goods sold after that incident, if no marriage has in fact taken place between the parties. Thus in Munro v. De Chemant (1815) 4 Campb. (Eng.) 215, Lord Ellenborough said: "Had the goods been furnished while the defendant was living with this lady, his representation that she was his wife would have been conclusive against him; but I think his liability for necessities supplied to her after they had separated depends entirely upon whether he really has been lawfully married to her or not. If the jury think upon the evidence that she is indeed his wife, they will find for the plaintiff, but the action cannot otherwise be maintained."

In Johnstone v. Allen (1869) 6 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 306, 39 How. Pr. 506, the court said that, after marriage, whether lawful or not, as long as it exists, third persons without notice who have dealt with the wife on the assumption that she was indeed such, and which assumption was based upon the representation of the husband himself, can recover for necessities furnished her, if the husband fail to provide them. Generally, as to liability of husband for necessities furnished wife while living apart from him, see note to Denver Dry Goods Co. v. Jester, L.R.A.1917A, 957.

A man not cohabiting with a woman or otherwise holding her out as his wife is not liable for her debts from the mere fact that he permits her to call herself by his name. Gomme v. Franklin (1859) 1 Fost. & F. (Eng.) 465.

W. W. A.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

YOUNG FERRELL, Admr., etc., of Freeman Ferrell, Deceased,

v.

DURHAM TRACTION COMPANY, Impleaded, etc., Appt.

(— N. C. —, 90 S. E. 803.)

Electricity — Injury to trespasser — Liability.

1. An electric company which permits its

Note. — The principles governing the duty and liability of a company maintaining an electric wire over or across private wires to sag so low over a railroad track as to endanger persons on the top of cars cannot escape liability for their throwing a person off a car by the fact that he was a trespasser on the train.

For other cases, see Electricity, III. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Carrier — person on train as helper — punishment.

2. One riding on a freight train under agreement with a brakeman that he should help handle freight for his fare cannot, as matter of law, be said to be within a statute providing punishment for anyone who, without permission of the conductor, rides on a train with intent to being transported free.

For other cases, see Trial, II. c, 5, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Brown and Walker, JJ., dissent.)

(December 19, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendant traction company from a judgment of the Superior Court for Durham County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate. Affirmed.

Statement by Hoke, J.:

On motion made in apt time, there was judgment of nonsuit as to the railroad company, and, the cause being submitted to the jury as to liability of the traction company, the following verdict was rendered:

"(1) Was plaintiff's intestate injured and killed by the negligence of the defendant Durham Traction Company, as alleged in the complaint? Answer: Yes.

"(2) Did plaintiff's intestate by his own negligence contribute to his injury and death as alleged in the answer? Answer: No.

"(3) What damages, if any, is plaintiff entitled to recover of defendant Durham Traction Company? Answer: $575."

Judgment on the verdict for plaintiff, and defendant the traction company appealed, assigning for error chiefly the refusal to nonsuit as to appellant because of the alleged fact that intestate, at the time he was killed, was a trespasser on the train of its codefendant and was also there in violation of the criminal laws of the state.

Messrs. W. L. Foushee and W. J. Brogden, for appellant:

Plaintiff's intestate was a trespasser on the freight train.

Vassor v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 142 N. C. 68, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 950, 54 S. E. 849, 9 Ann. Cas. 535; Purple v. Union P. R. Co. 57 L.R.A. 700, 51 C. C. A. 564, 114 Fed. 123, 11 Am. Neg. Rep. 509; Cooper v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. 136 Ind. 366, 36 N. E. 272; Peterson v. South & Western R. Co. 143 N. C. 260, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1240, 118 Am. St. Rep. 799, 55 S. E. 618; Bailey v. North Carolina R. Co. 149 N. C. 169, 62 S. E. 912; Willis v. Atlantic & D. R. Co. 122 N. C. 909, 29 S. E. 941; Briscoe v. Henderson Lighting & Power Co. 148 N. C. 396, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1116, 62 S. E. 600.

If the plaintiff's intestate was a trespasser, then the defendant the Seaboard Air Line Railway, owner of said premises, would owe him no duty except to refrain from inflicting wilful or wanton injury.

Willis v. Atlantic & D. R. Co. 122 N. C. 909, 29 S. E. 941; Vassor v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 142 N. C. 68, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 950, 54 S. E. 849, 9 Ann. Cas. 535; Peterson v. South & Western R. Co. 143 N. C. 260, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1240, 118 Am. St. Rep. 799, 55 S. E. 618; Bailey v. North Carolina R. Co. 149 N. C. 169, 62 S. E. 912; Quantz v. Southern R. Co. 137 N. C. 136, 49 S. E. 79; Thomp. Neg. §§ 945-947, 949; Cumberland Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. Martin, 116 Ky. 554, 63 L.R.A. 469, 105 Am. St. Rep. 229, 76 S. W. 394, 77 S. W. 718; Southern Bell Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Odom, 9 Ga. App. 246, 70 S. E. 1116; Greenville v. Pitts, 102 Tex. 2, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 979, 132 Am. St. Rep. 843, 107 S. W. 50; McCaughna v. Owosso & C. Electric Co. 129 Mich. 407, 95 Am. St. Rep. 441, 89 N. W. 73; Hector v. Boston Electric Light Co. 161 Mass. 558, 25 L.R.A. 554, 37 N. E. 773, 15 Am. Neg. Cas. 714; Augusta R. Co. v. Andrews, 89 Ga. 653, 16 S. E. 203, 14 Am. Neg. Cas. 201; Rodger v. Union Light, Heat & P. Co. — Ky. —, 123 S. W. 293; Monroe v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 151 N. C. 374, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 193, 66 S. E. 315.

Messrs. Manning, Everett, & Kitchin and S. C. Brawley, for appellee:

Violation of an ordinance or a statute, unless it is the proximate cause of the injury, would not relieve the defendant from liability.

McGhee v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. 147 N. C. 155, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 119, 60 S. E. 912; Sluder v. St. Louis Transit Co. 189 Mo. 107, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 186, 88 S. W. 648; Leathers v. Blackwell Durham Tobacco Co. 144 N. C. 330, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 349, 57 S. E. 11.

property to trespassers or licensees are considered in the notes to Guinn v. Delaware & A. Teleg. & Teleph. Co. 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 983, and Braun v. Buffalo General Electric Co. 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1089, 1094. L.R.A.1917B.

For the sake of the analogy reference is also made to the annotation to Austin v. Baker, L.R.A.1916F, 1132, on the liability of lesser for injuries to licensee or trespasser.

The defendant traction company was a trespasser itself, and it is in no better position than plaintiff's intestate.

Daltry v. Media Electric Light, Heat & P. Co. 208 Pa. 403, 57 Atl. 833; Caglione v. Mt. Morris Electric Light Co. 56 App. Div. 191, 67 N. Y. Supp. 660; Wittleder v. Citizens' Electric Illuminating Co. 47 App. Div. 410, 62 N. Y. Supp. 297.

Hoke, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The action was originally instituted against the Durham Traction Company and the Sea Board Air Line Railroad Company, and there is evidence on the part of plaintiff tending to show that on April 7, 1915, about 7 P. M., the intestate, at the invitation of an acquaintance, a brakeman on a freight train of defendant railroad, was on top of a car of said train as it moved out of East Durham, going north; that the brakeman was giving the intestate and his brother this ride with the view and under promise of having them help in unloading freight at a near-by station on the route. There was testimony also to the effect that the train hands were accustomed to get help in this way, and that at previous times it had been done with the conductor's knowledge; that, not far from East Durham, while intestate was on the car and going back towards the caboose, a power wire of the traction company which had been stretched across the railroad and negligently allowed to sag, and so low as to threaten the safety of all persons on the car or trains of that character, struck the intestate as he was stepping from one car to the other, knocked him down between the cars, and he was run over and killed. On these, the facts chiefly relevant, the court rendered judgment of nonsuit as to the railroad company, and, on issues submitted, there was verdict establishing that the intestate was killed by the wrongful negligence of the traction company, "as alleged in the complaint;" that there was no contributory negligence on the part of the intestate, and assessing the damages at $575. Judgment having been entered on the verdict, the traction company excepted and appealed, assigning for error chiefly the refusal to order a nonsuit as to appellant also.

It is undoubtedly the general rule that a trespasser cannot maintain an action against the owner for negligent injuries received by reason of conditions existent upon the premises, but this is a principle growing out of and dependent upon the right of ownership, and considered essential to their proper enjoyment. All of the decisions in this jurisdiction, cited in suppl. R.A.1917B.

port of defendant's exceptions, are cases of that character. Briscoe v. Henderson Lighting & Power Co. 148 N. C. 396, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1116, 62 S. E. 600, and others. Even as to suits of that kind, the position has been very much qualified as in case of technical trespass, etc. 29 Cyc. 443. But the principle referred to and relied upon has no necessary or proper application to the facts of this record, where the injury was caused by the wrong of a third person having no connection with the owner or his proprietary rights. In such case, the general rule is the other way, and recovery is not ordinarily denied merely because of the fact that the injured party is himself a trespasser. Such fact may or may not be a relevant circumstance on the question of proximate cause, but is not allowed to defeat the action as a matter of law.

The distinction is very well presented in a case from 72 N. J. L. 276, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 988, 111 Am. St. Rep. 668, 62 Atl. 412, 19 Am. Neg. Rep. 389 (Guinn v. Delaware & A. Teleph. Co.); the relevant facts and the decision of the court therein being as follows:

"The injury was caused by the guy wire breaking and falling on an electric light wire belonging to another company. The broken end fell in the grass in a field belonging to Gulick. Across this field people were accustomed to travel without objection, but as far as appears without other right. The boy's body was found still in contact with the guy wire shortly after the shock. It does not appear that he had any right to be on Gulick's property except such as may be inferred from the facts stated. The contention of the defendant is that it was under no duty to the decedent for the reason that he was a trespasser on Gulick's property, or at best a mere licensee. The liability of the defendant rests upon the fact that it was maintaining wires which might become charged with a deadly current of electricity. New York & N. J. Teleph. Co. v. Bennett, 62 N. J. L. 742, 42 Atl. 759, 5 Am. Neg. Rep. 657; Brooks v. Consolidated Gas Co. 70 N. J. L. 211, 57 Atl. 396.

"The duty to exercise care is established as to travelers upon the highway and employees of the defendant or of another company who in the exercise of their rights are likely to come in contact with the wires, and of persons who are lawfully in a place of proximity to the wires. The question presented in this case is whether the duty exists also as to third persons who are not at the time in the exercise of any legal right. The principle underlying the case is stated by Chief Justice Beasley, in Van Winkle v. American Steam Boiler Co. 5?

N. J. L. 240, 19 Atl. 472, to be that in all cases in which any person undertakes the performance of an act which, if not done with care and skill, will be highly dangerous to the persons, . . . known or unknown, the law, ipso facto, imposes as a public duty the obligation to exercise such care and skill.

"The test of the defendant's liability to a particular person is whether injury to him ought reasonably to have been anticipated. In the present case, the guy wire was stretched over an open field, across which people were accustomed to travel without objection by the landowner. The adjoining field was used as a ball ground. It was probable that if the guy wire broke, some one crossing the field would come in contact with it. That whoever did so was a trespasser or a bare licensee as against the landowner cannot avail the defendant. If a bare licensee, he would still be there lawfully. If a trespasser, his wrong would be to the landowner alone, not a public wrong nor a wrong to the defendant. The case differs from one where a trespasser or licensee seeks to recover of the landowner. A landowner may in fact reasonably anticipate an invasion of his property, but in law he is entitled to assume that he will not be interfered with. His right to protect his possession and to use his property is paramount."

In Watson on Damages for Personal Injuries, speaking to the question, the author says (§ 230):

"At the outset it may be stated, as a general rule, that the mere fact that the plaintiff, at the time of the injuries received, is engaged in the commission of an unlawful act, is not sufficient to relieve the author of the wrong of liability in damages therefor. 'The question how far a person can defend an otherwise indefensible act,' it has been said, 'by showing a criminal or unlawful act on the part of the party injured, has of late years been fully discussed in the courts of this country and England. The result, generally reached, is that no man can set up a public or private wrong committed by another as an excuse for a wilful or unnecessary or even negligent injury to him or his property. This principle is defended on the grounds of morality and law, and it reaches and determines a great variety of cases.'

"Thus the fact that the plaintiff was upon the platform of a street car in violation of a municipal ordinance is not of itself sufficient to defeat a recovery in an action against the driver of a vehicle by whom the plaintiff was injured, and that a motorman was running his car at a higher rate of speed than allowed by law when a tree fell L.R.A.1917B, upon the car and injured him is not a defense in an action against the municipality, merely because had he been going at the legal rate the tree would have fallen before he reached the point in question."

And the general principle is approved in many well-considered decisions of other courts. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Philadelphia & H. de G. Steam Towboat Co. 23 How. 209-218, 16 L. ed. 433-436; Sutton v. Wauwatosa, 29 Wis. 21, 9 Am. Rep. 534; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Trautwein, 52 N. J. L. 169, 7 L.R.A. 435, 19 Am. St. Rep. 442, 19 Atl. 178, 5 Am. Neg. Cas. 21; Cameron v. Vandergriff, 53 Ark. 381, 13 S. W. 1092; Commonwealth Electric Co. v. Melville, 210 Ill. 70, 70 N. E. 1052. And Curtis, Electricity, § 402, is to the same effect. There are many other authoritative cases in support of the principle, as stated, that an injured party is not barred of recovery for a wrong done him because of the mere fact that he was, at the time, a trespasser upon the premises of a third person. Such a fact in itself is ordinarily allowed no significance in determining the rights of the parties on such an issue, a position emphasized in this case by facts in evidence tending to show that the traction company was itself a trespasser in carrying its wires over the railroad company's line. Daltry v. Media Electric Light, Heat & P. Co. 208 Pa. 403, 57 Atl. 833; Caglione v. Mt. Morris Electric Light Co. 56 App. Div. 191, 67 N. Y. Supp. 660. It is suggested for defendant that the intestate was in violation of state statute in being on the car at the time. Rev. § 3748. This statute was enacted to punish persons who ride on a train without permission of the conductor or the engineer and with intent of being transported free, and would seem to have no application to this case, where the intestate had been invited to get on by an employee of the company "to help unload freight" at the next station. Assuredly a criminal intent to avoid payment of fare should not be decided against him as matter of law when there are facts in evidence tending to show that he "was to pay his fare by helping to unload;" that he had done this several times with the knowledge and approval of the conductor and, at the time he was struck, was going along the top of the car to the caboose.

In some of the authorities cited in support of appellant's position, as in Cumberland Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. Martin, 116 Ky. 554, 63 L.R.A. 469, 105 Am. St. Rep. 229, 76 S. W. 394, 77 S. W. 718, and others, the court does not seem to have been sufficiently advertent to the recognized distinction in cases where the action by a trespasser was against the owner of the premises and when against third persons; but, in any event, these decisions should not be allowed as controlling on the facts of this record. In Drum v. Miller, 135 N. C. 204, 65 L.R.A. 890, 102 Am. St. Rep. 528, 47 S. E. 421, 16 Am. Neg. Rep. 215, the court held, in effect: "In order, . . . that a party may be liable for negligence, it is not necessary that he could have contemplated, or even been able to anticipate, the particular consequences which ensued, or the precise injuries sustained by the plaintiff. It is sufficient if by the exercise of reasonable care the defendant might have foreseen that some injury would result from his act or omission, or that consequences of a generally injurious nature might have been expected"—a statement of the doctrine contained in 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 487.

A like ruling was soon thereafter made, in Hudson v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 142 N. C. 198, 55 S. E. 103, and the principle has been again and again approved in our decisions. Robinson v. Melville Mfg. Co. 165 N. C. 495, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 385, 81 S. E. 681; Ward v. North Carolina R. Co. 161 N. C. 184, 76 S. E. 717; Sawyer v. Roanoke R. & Lumber Co. 145 N. C. 24-28, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 200, 58 S. E. 598; Kimberly v. Howland, 143 N. C. 399, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 545, 55 S. E. 778; and numerous other cases could be cited.

Speaking to the question in Drum v. Miller, supra, Walker, Judge said: "When therefore a wilful wrong is committed or a negligent act which produces injury, the wrongdoer is liable, provided in the latter case he could have foreseen that harm might follow as a natural and probable result of his act; for, if he can presume that harm might naturally and probably follow, he must necessarily intend that it should follow, or he must have acted without caring whether it would or not, which, in effect, is the same thing. It may be stated as a general rule that when one does an illegal or mischievous act which is likely to prove injurious to another, or when he does a legal act in such a careless or improper manner that he should foresee, in the light of attending circumstances, that injury to a third person may naturally and probably ensue, he is answerable in some form of action for all of the consequences which may directly and naturally result from his conduct. It is not necessary that he should actually intend to do the particular injury which follows, nor indeed any injury at all, because the law in such cases will presume that he intended to do that which is the natural result of his conduct in the one case, and, in the other, he will be presumed to intend that which, in the exercise of the care of a prudent man, he should see will be followed by injurious consequences."

The verdict in this case has established that the traction company has negligently allowed its power wire to sag so low over the line of the railroad that it was likely to kill or seriously injure any and every one on the top of the railroad company's trains. The intestate was killed because of this negligent wrong. It was the result likely, in fact almost certain, to occur from its wrong, and, in our opinion, the defendant's responsibility for it has been correctly and properly established.

There is no error, and the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

Brown, J., dissenting:

I am of opinion that the motion to nonsuit should have been allowed. The evidence, taken in its most favorable view for plaintiff, tends to prove these facts: The intestate was killed on April 7, 1915. At the time he was on top of a running freight train of the railroad company, walking towards the caboose. He was caught by two wires belonging to the traction company, stretched across the railroad right of way, by its consent, and fastened to juniper poles 143 feet apart, one on the east and one on the west side of the right of way, about 2 miles from Durham. The intestate was thrown to the ground between the cars and killed. The intestate was not an employee of the railroad company, but was riding on top of the rapidly running freight train, without the knowledge or consent of the conductor or of any proper authority of said company. It is in evidence that one Howard Holeman, a brakeman, invited the intestate to ride on the train. No one else knew of it. There had been an extraordinary snow-storm and wind April 2 and 3, 1915, that had caused the wires to sag so low that they caught the intestate about the shoulder and threw him under the wheels. The wires were in proper position on April 2d, and defendant traction company had no notice that they were sagging, as result of the storm.

That the intestate was a trespasser as to the railroad company, and violating the statute (Rev. § 3748) making it a misdemeanor to ride on top of the freight train under such circumstances, cannot successfully be questioned. Vassor v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 142 N. C. 68, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 950, 54 S. E. 849, 9 Ann. Cas. 535; Bailey v. North Carolina R. Co. 149 N. C. 169, 62 S. E. 912.

The statute is explicit and forbids any person other than a railway employee in the discharge of his duty from riding or attempting to ride on top of any car, coach, engine, or tender on any railroad without authority from the conductor of the train or the engineer, and makes it a misdemeanor to do so. If the intestate was a trespasser, the railroad company, the owner of the premises, owed him no duty except to refrain from inflicting wilful or wanton injury, and the defendant the traction company owed him no greater duty than did its lessor, the railroad company. The poles of the traction company were put on the land of the railroad company, and its wires crossed its tracks by its consent. It was not required to foresee that the plaintiff would violate the statutes of the state and put himself in a position of danger where he would possibly come in contact with its wires. Willis v. Atlantic & D. R. Co. 122 N. C. 909, 29 S. E. 941; Vassor v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. supra; Peterson v. South & W. R. Co. 143 N. C. 260, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1240, 118 Am. St. Rep. 799, 55 S. E. 618; Quantz v. Southern R. Co. 137 N. C. 136, 49 S. E. 79.

If the plaintiff had been an employee of the railroad company, or rightfully on top of the car, it would be different. If the railroad company, the owner of the right of way over which the wires of the defendant were stretched, owed the plaintiff's intestate no duty except to refrain from inflicting wilful or wanton injury, then the defendant could not be held to a higher degree of care than the owner of the premises, upon which rested the primary duty of keeping its premises and right of way reasonably safe.

The railroad company owned the right of way and had the right to stretch its telegraph and telephone wires along and across its right of way with its wires. If mischief happened to a trespasser by reason of the wires being stretched across the right of way, it is his fault. He is held to assume the risk. The implied duty to prevent harm from unsafe premises does not exist in favor of a trespasser. McGhee v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. 147 N. C. 147, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 119, 60 S. E. 912.

The Benton Case, 165 N. C. 354, 81 S. E. 448, does not controvert this well-settled proposition. Benton was not a trespasser upon the service company's property, but had climbed a tree and come in contact with a sparking wire with defective insulation. The question presented by this appeal is well settled and fully discussed in many cases, and we need not dwell on it further. Briscoe v. Henderson Lighting & Power Co. 148 N. C. 396, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1116, 62 S. E. 600; Southern Bell Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Odom, 9 Ga. App. 246, 70 S. E. 1116; Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Martin, 116 Ky. 554, 63 L.R.A. 469, 105 Am. St. Rep. 229, 76 S. W. 394, 77 S. W. 718; McCaughna v. Owosso & C. Electric Co. 129 Mich. 407, 95 Am. St. Rep. 441, 89 N. W. 73.

Walker, J., concurs in this opinion.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

E. E. CHIVERS, Guardian, Plff. in Err.,
v.

BOARD OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF JOHNSTON COUNTY.

(— Okla. —, 161 Pac. 822.)

Appeal — denial of former judgment.

1. An appeal lies to this court from an order of the trial court that plaintiff take nothing by reason of a former judgment and that the payment of the same be permanently enjoined.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, I. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

New trial — absence of issues.

2. A petition for new trial is not proper or allowable, where there has been no issue of fact raised by the pleadings or determined by the verdict of a jury or its legal

Headnotes by BURFORD, C.

Note. — For collateral attack upon judgment because of insufficiency of pleadings, see annotation following Jarrell v. Laurel Coal & Land Co. L.R.A.1916E, 316. L.R.A.1917B.

equivalent upon a former trial in the same court.

For other cases, see New Trial, I. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — raising of issue.

3. An issue of fact which may be re-examined upon a new trial arises only upon a material allegation in the petition controverted by the answer, upon new matter in the answer controverted by the reply, or upon new matter in the reply considered as denied without further pleading.

For other cases, see New Trial, I. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Judgment — on deficient pleading — effect.

4. A judgment rendered in a cause in which defendant appears and pleads, and in which the petition brings before the trial court a subject matter within the jurisdiction of the court, but states the plaintiff's cause of action defectively, or not at all, all parties being within the jurisdiction of the court, is erroneous, but is not void.

For other cases, see Judgment, II. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — default — appearance.

5. Defendant appeared in the cause, filed a demurrer, and was present at the final hearing, and joined in submitting the cause to the court. Held, that the judgment rendered was not a judgment by default. For other cases, see Judgment, I. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(December 5, 1916.)

ERROR to the District Court for Johnston County to review a judgment in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover certain taxes paid by plaintiff. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Mr. Sam H. Butler, for plaintiff in error:

A judgment will not be opened or vacated if the defense set up by defendant is not meritorious, or is purely technical in its character, or is dishonest or unconscionable.

23 Cyc. 964, 965; Welch v. Mastin, 98 Mo. App. 273, 71 S. W. 1090.

Plaintiff's judgment was valid and binding, and the court erred in vacating the same.

Hill v. Williams, 6 Kan. 17; Clark v. Roman, — Okla. —, 151 Pac. 479; Hawkins v. Hawkins, — Okla. —, 153 Pac. 845.

Messrs. P. B. H. Shearer and J. J. Stobaugh for defendant in error.

Burford, C., filed the following opinion:

E. E. Chivers, as guardian of certain minors, sued the board of county commissioners of Johnston county to recover certain taxes paid by him. On October 24, 1914, after service and appearance and filing of a demurrer, by the county attorney, it seems, from the journal entry, both parties appeared and "the cause was submitted to the court," who thereupon heard evidence and rendered judgment for plaintiff and against defendants for a part of plaintiff's demand. No exception was taken to this judgment, and no appeal perfected. Some eleven months thereafter, to wit, on September 25, 1915, the defendants by the county attorney filed a petition in said cause setting out the judgment and alleging same was rendered "under chap. 152 of Laws of 1910-11, and that after the rendition of said judgment and on the 15th day of June, 1915, the supreme court of Oklahoma, in the case of Johnson v. Grady County, — Okla. —, 150 Pac. 497, held that part of said chapter unconstitutional and void, and that said judgment at the time it was rendered was unconstitutional and void, and that said judgment at the time it was rendered was contrary to law, and that this fact could not with reasonable diligence have been discovered until the decision of the supreme court, but the same was discovered after the term at which said judgment was rendered and without fault of defendant herein." Prayer was that the court "set aside and hold for naught the said judgment in this case, and that the county treasurer of said county of Johnston be temporarily restrained from paying said judgment or any part of said judgment, and that the petitioner have a new trial in this cause and for all proper relief." This petition was verified and was filed after the term at which the original judgment was rendered, but prior to the next succeeding term. It will be noticed that the county treasurer was not a party to this proceeding. The plaintiff then appeared specially and moved to "quash the service herein," alleging that "there has been no service," and that he "therefore asks that the same be quashed." Upon this motion being overruled, plaintiff filed a "demurrer to the petition for new trial" upon the ground that same was insufficient in law. This "demurrer" was by the court on October 4, 1915, overruled; said "defendant given ten days to plead." The court on the same day temporarily restrained the county treasurer from paying the judgment or any part thereof "until the further order of the court." On October 21, 1915, plaintiff filed a motion "to set aside and revoke the order made in this cause on October 4, 1915, which set aside the former judgment of this court and also granted defendant a temporary restraining order."

A careful examination of the various orders above referred to constrains us to hold that the trial court had not at this time "set aside" any former judgment. He had only ordered that the matter of payment by the treasurer be held in statu quo until his further order, and had overruled plaintiff's "demurrer" and given him leave to plead. Inasmuch as the statute (§ 5037) provides that "the facts stated in the petition shall be considered as denied without answer," it does not appear what pleading plaintiff might have filed; but, at any rate, he had the leave, and clearly his original judgment had not yet been vacated or set aside. On the same day that plaintiff filed this latter motion, the same came on for rehearing. Two journal entries reciting the court's action appear in the record. Construing them together, it appears that the trial court overruled plaintiff's motion, found that the original judgment rendered on October 24, 1914, "was void and of no effect," and ordered that plaintiff "take nothing by his judgment rendered on October 24, 1914," and, without granting any new trial, made the temporary restraining order, theretofore issued against the county treasurer, a perpetual injunction, and rendered judgment for the defendant board for costs. Exception being taken, an extension of time to perfect an appeal was allowed, and within proper time the cause brought here for review.

At the outset, we are confronted by the contention of defendant in error that no proper appeal is before us for consideration. This is based upon the contention that the judgment of October 24, 1914, was set aside on October 4, 1915; that plaintiff Chivers's motion to vacate of October 21, 1915, and the overruling thereof on that day, was insufficient to confer a right to review the judgment of October 4th, on appeal, the fifteen days for appeal therefrom allowed by statute, no extension having been granted, having expired prior to the time plaintiff's motion of October 21, 1915, was filed. The fallacy of this argument is that, as above shown, the court did not make any final order in relation to the judgment of October 24, 1914, until October 21, 1915. We may leave out entirely plaintiff's motion and demurrer. The trial court on October 21, 1915, set aside, vacated, and perpetually enjoined the enforcement of his prior judgment. From this order clearly he had a right to appeal, having properly objected and excepted thereto. Rev. Laws 1910, §§ 5236-5239.

The order in this case is clearly distinguishable from the order held not appealable in such cases as Byars v. Sprouls, 24 Okla. 299, 103 Pac. 1038; Aetna Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Williams, 26 Okla. 191, 108 Pac. 1100, and Clapper v. Putnam Co. — Okla. —, 158 Pac. 299. In those cases the court vacated the former judgment and ordered a new trial. Hence each cause was not finally determined until the new trial was had and a final judgment rendered. Here the judgment was set aside, held void, and its payment enjoined. Clearly there was nothing more to be done by the plaintiff in the trial court. His rights, if any he had, under his petition, were finally determined against him. Nothing was left but a right of appeal. Such order not only "grants an injunction," but "affects a substantial right" and determines the action "upon" summary application "after judgment," and brings the matter within the statute governing appeals.

Upon the merits, the defendant seeks to justify his pleading under § 5037, Rev. Laws 1910, authorizing in certain cases the filing after the term of a petition for new trial. This section of the statute contemplates only the granting of a new trial in proper cases. After an examination of the record in this case, we are convinced that if the defendant's application be construed only as a petition for a new trial under § 5037, supra, it could avail nothing by reason of the fact that a petition for a new trial has no proper office and could not rightfully be granted in this cause. This for the reason that there never was an issue of fact presented or determined preceding the original judgment, and therefore there could not, in any proper sense, be a new trial. Under our statute (Rev. Laws 1910, § 5033,) "a new trial is a re-examination in the same court of an issue of fact, after a verdict by a jury, the approval of the report of a referee, or a decision by the court." See Price v. Ratcliffe, — Okla. —, 148 Pac. 153.

In the original proceeding a petition and demurrer thereto were filed. The record then shows that the parties appeared and "the cause was submitted to the court." Apparently the only thing to be submitted was the petition and demurrer thereto. The journal entry of the judgment does show that the trial court heard "the evidence offered," but, so far as the record shows, there was no answer filed, and in no way were the facts alleged in the plaintiff's petition controverted. It is difficult to see, therefore, how an "issue of fact" arose upon the original trial which could be re-examined in a new trial. In Owen v. District Ct. 43 Okla. 442, 143 Pac. 17, this court quoted and approved the language of the supreme court of Kansas in McDermott v. Halleck, 65 Kan. 403, 69 Pac. 335, as follows: "We are of the opinion that the conclusions which naturally, logically, and inevitably result from an examination and comparison of the different Code provisions having reference to trials and new trials are these: First, the only pleadings possible under the Code are the petition, answer, reply, and demurrer; second, issues can arise only upon pleadings; third, a trial is had only of issues; fourth, a new trial is had only of issues of fact after such issues of fact have been . . . determined by a referee, a jury, or a court; fifth, the issues of fact so to be re-examined upon a new trial must have arisen upon a material allegation in the petition controverted by the answer, new matter in the answer controverted by the reply, or new matter in the reply denied without further pleading."

The language of this same case, upon the same propositions, is also adopted and approved by this court in Powell v. Nichols, 26 Okla. 734, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 886, 110 Pac. 762. The language used is but another statement of the statute. Rev. Laws 1910, §§ 4989-4991.

In Cowart v. Parker-Washington Co. 40 Okla. 56, 136 Pac. 153, this court said: "The purpose of a motion for a new trial is to procure a re-examination of an issue of fact in the same court. Where there has never been any examination of an issue of fact, there can be no re-examination or new trial."

In Clapper v. Putnam Co. supra, this court quoted and approved the language of the supreme court of Kansas in Wagner v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 73 Kan. 283, 85 Pac. 299 (referring to what is § 5033, Rev. Laws 1910), as follows: "From this language it is plain that a motion for new trial has no function to perform unless an issue of fact has been . . . determined and the determination has been embodied in one of three specified forms. Not only must there have been a trial, a judicial examination of the issues of fact, but those issues must have been definitely settled by the verdict of a jury, or its equivalent, final and conclusive upon the facts unless vacated. Until that stage of the proceedings in an action has been reached, the condition precedent to the filing of a motion for a new trial does not arise; the single circumstance capable of creating a field for its operation has not occurred; the only subject matter vulnerable to its attack does not exist. There is no such thing as a new trial of issues of law."

Under these decisions, which, upon examination, must be taken to be sound in principle, no issue of fact was raised by answer or other pleading prior to the rendition of the original judgment. No such issue could have been determined. There could therefore be no new trial. It is insisted, however, that the judgment rendered below was void, and that, this condition being shown to the trial court by defendant's petition, the court had power to set it aside. The trial court evidently took the view that the judgment was void, since he so declared it, vacated it, and enjoined its operation, without granting a new trial. If it be true that the judgment was wholly void, we have no doubt of the power of the court to vacate it. "A 'void' judgment is in reality no judgment at all. It is a mere nullity. It is attended by none of the consequences of a valid adjudication, nor is it entitled to the respect accorded to one. It can neither affect, impair, nor create rights." Black, Judgm. § 170; Jefferson v. Gallagher, — Okla. —, 150 Pac. 1071. Its operation may be enjoined (Rev. Laws 1910, § 4881) or set aside upon motion at any time, whether during the term when rendered or thereafter, by any party affected thereby. Rev. Laws 1910, § 5741; Choi v. Turk, — Okla. —, 154 Pac. 1000, and cases cited. It is not necessary to plead a meritorious defense in a motion to vacate such a judgment. Wheatland Grain & Lumber Co. v. Dowden, 26 Okla. 441, 110 Pac. 898. It may be attacked collaterally. Jefferson v. Gallagher, L.R.A.1917B.

supra. Some courts have even held that a void judgment may be vacated after the term by the court upon its own motion. 23 Cyc. 948, and cases cited. But a void judgment is to be clearly distinguished from one voidable only. The distinction, says Mr. Black (Judgm. § 170), is almost universally to be made upon "the single case where there was a total want of jurisdiction to render it." A judgment may have been erroneous, voidable upon appeal, and yet not be void. If the court had jurisdiction of the parties and subject matter, and rendered a judgment within the issues, though such judgment might have been erroneous and reversible for error of law committed by the trial court, the judgment is not void, and the statute relating to vacating void judgments is not applicable to it. Gray v. Gray, — Okla. —, 157 Pac. 730; Clark v. Roman, — Okla. —, 151 Pac. 479; Gill v. Executive Committee, — Okla. —, 152 Pac. 812; Kaufman v. Grow, — Okla. —, 158 Pac. 300; Smith v. Finger, 15 Okla. 120, 79 Pac. 759. Jurisdiction, said this court in Jefferson v. Gallagher, supra, is based upon three things: (1) Jurisdiction of the parties. (2) Jurisdiction of the general subject matter. (3) Jurisdiction of the particular matter which the judgment professes to decide.

Bearing these principles in mind, we come to the consideration of the record in relation to the present judgment. The original petition alleged, in substance, that plaintiff was guardian of certain minors, citizens of the Chickasaw Nation, who owned certain lands therein described as their allotted portions of the tribal lands; that the county authorities had attempted to levy taxes upon the lands for several years; that plaintiff refused to pay, alleging that the taxes so levied were illegal and void; that, finally, to effect a desired sale of the lands, being required to do so by the purchaser, he paid the taxes under protest, notifying the treasurer that he would seek to recover them back. Prayer was for the recovery of the taxes and interest. Judgment was for a portion of the amount demanded. Under the allegations of the petition and the decision in Choate v. Trapp, 224 U. S. 665, 56 L. ed. 941, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565, there can be little doubt of the invalidity of the tax. At the time the case was filed and tried, chapter 152, Laws 1910-11, allowing the recovery of taxes voluntarily paid upon erroneous assessments, was on the statute books. In Johnson v. Grady County, — Okla. —, 150 Pac. 497, this court held that the portion of that chapter above referred to was unconstitutional because not embraced in the title to the act. It may be conceded that the petition did not state sufficient elements of duress or oppression to constitute a cause of action. The court had admittedly jurisdiction of the subject matter of suits against the county to recover taxes. This sort of action, brought under proper circumstances, existed long before and entirely independent of chap. 152 of the Laws of 1910-11. This was expressly recognized in Johnson v. Grady County, supra; Louisiana Realty Co. v. McAlester, 25 Okla. 726, 108 Pac. 391; and in prior cases. That act only broadened the previously existing right of action and extended it to taxes voluntarily paid. The particular subject of litigation was brought before the court by the petition, and the court rendered a judgment within the issues. The defendant's demurrer challenged the sufficiency of the petition, and the court found such petition adequate. For aught that appears here, the very question of the constitutionality of the statute may have been raised and the statute held constitutional by the trial court. No appeal was perfected from the judgment. Does the fact that the petition stated the cause of action defectively or not at all, the subject matter referred to in it being within the jurisdiction of the court, alone render the judgment void? In considering this question we have considered as apposite cases decided upon collateral attack for the reason that it is universally conceded that a void judgment may be collaterally attacked, and the converse must be true that, if a collateral attack upon a judgment is not permissible, judgment is not void.

Mr. Black, in his work on Judgments (§ 241), says: "It would be impossible, on any rational theory, to make jurisdiction dependent upon the validity of the case stated by the plaintiff. For the court must pass upon the sufficiency of the declaration, and jurisdiction to proceed, at least so far, must be acquired by the mere filing of the pleading and service of process."

Again, he says (§ 269): "A judgment cannot be impeached collaterally on account of any illegality or insufficiency in the cause of action on which the suit is brought; these are matters which must be set up in defense to the action, and which are concluded by the judgment."

In Winningham v. Trueblood, 149 Mo. 572, 51 S. W. 399, it is said: "A judgment cannot be collaterally attacked for want of jurisdiction because the petition does not state a cause of action, since, if it states a case belonging to a general class over which the authority of the court extends, jurisdiction is conferred."

In North Pacific Cycle Co. v. Thomas, 26 Or. 381, 46 Am. St. Rep. 636, 38 Pac. 307, the court said: "If the object of the plaintiff can be ascertained from his complaint, and the court has power to grant the relief demanded and jurisdiction of the parties, the judgment rendered is not subject to collateral attack, although the complaint may in fact have been bad in substance." "There is an important difference between a want of jurisdiction and a mere defect in obtaining it. In the former case, the judgment is absolutely void. . . . In the latter case, it is simply erroneous and voidable, and can be attacked only in some direct proceeding authorized by law."

So in the instant case the judgment could have been attacked in any direct proceeding authorized by law, such as appeal, etc. But the motion under consideration is so framed that it can be considered only as a motion to vacate a void judgment, and is not a proceeding authorized by law to correct an erroneous one.

In Rowe v. Palmer, 29 Kan. 337, the supreme court of that state said: "It is not necessary for us to decide whether the petition states such a cause of action as would be good if challenged by demurrer. If it contains sufficient matter to challenge the attention of the court as to its merits, and such a case is thereby presented as to authorize the trial court to deliberate and act, a judgment rendered thereon is not void."

In Taylor v. Coots, 32 Neb. 30, 29 Am. St. Rep. 426, 48 N. W. 964, it is said that: "The sufficiency of the petition is not a test of jurisdiction."

In Head v. Daniels, 38 Kan. 1, 15 Pac. 911, it was said: "If the petition sets forth facts sufficient to challenge the attention of the court with regard to its merits or authorize the court to deliberate with respect thereto, then the judgment . . . rendered upon it is not void, but at most is only voidable."

The following cases will be found to sustain the doctrine above set forth: Edelstein v. United States, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 236, 79 C. C. A. 328, 149 Fed. 636; Hunt v. Hunt, 72 N. Y. 217, 28 Am. Rep. 129; Selby v. Pueppka, 73 Neb. 179, 102 N. W. 263; Frankfurth v. Anderson, 61 Wis. 107, 20 N. W. 662; Bitzer v. Mercke, 111 Ky. 299, 63 S. W. 771; Wood v. Blythe, 46 Wis. 650, 1 N. W. 341; Kalb v. German Sav. Inst. 25 Wash. 349, 87 Am. St. Rep. 757, 65 Pac. 559; State v. Horton, 89 N. C. 581; Pierson v. Benedict, 5 Kan. App. 790, 48 Pac. 996; Altman v. School Dist. 35 Or. 85, 76 Am. St. Rep. 468, 56 Pac. 291; Re James, 99 Cal. 374, 37 Am. St. Rep. 60, 33 Pac. 1122; Trumble v. Williams, 18 Neb. 144, 24 N. W. 716; Rich v. Chicago, 187 Ill. 396, 58 N. E. 306; Edmundson v. Independent School Dist. 98 Iowa, 639, 60 Am. St. Rep. 224, 67 N. W. 671. Such is the practical effect of the holding of this court in Kaufman v. Grow, — Okla. —, 158 Pac. 300; Edwards v. Smith, 42 Okla. 544-550, 142 Pac. 302; and Hill v. Persinger, — Okla. —, 157 Pac. 745.

Movant relies upon Farris v. Henderson, 1 Okla. 384, 33 Pac. 380; Lewis v. Clements, 21 Okla. 167, 95 Pac. 769; and Clark v. Holmes, 31 Okla. 164, 120 Pac. 642, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 385.

In Farris v. Henderson, supra, it was said: "A complaint which states no cause of action will not support a judgment by default; and such judgment will be rendered in the appellate court. If the complaint states no cause of action, the objection is fatal at every stage of the proceedings."

There is no conflict between this doctrine and that here announced. Farris v. Henderson, supra, was an appeal from the judgment rendered after demurrer overruled. The judgment was clearly erroneous. The court does not hold that it is void.

In Lewis v. Clements and Clark v. Holmes, supra, this court said: "A judgment by default, upon a complaint that does not contain allegations sufficient to constitute a cause of action, is void, and will be reversed on appeal."

These statements are likewise not in conflict with this opinion, for the reason that in those cases the judgment was by default, while in the instant case there was a de-murrer filed and an appearance made by defendant at the final hearing when the judgment was rendered. In no true sense, therefore, could the judgment in the instant case be said to be by default. See Crossan v. Cooper, 41 Okla. 281, 137 Pa. 354; Black, Judgm. § 80.

We conclude that the judgment rendered was not void. El Reno v. Cleveland-Trinidad Paving Co. 25 Okla. 648, 27 L.R.A. (N.S.) 650, 107 Pac. 163. That by failure to exercise the right of appeal, or to have the judgment vacated within the term, no statutory ground for vacation after the term appearing, the judgment became binding upon defendant, that a petition for a new trial was not applicable to the instant case, and the trial court was in error in vacating the judgment as void and in enjoining its payment.

It follows that the order of the trial court should be reversed, with directions to set aside and vacate the order of October 21, 1915, in all things, to vacate and set aside the restraining order and injunction granted against the county treasurer, to overrule and deny the defendant's petition for a new trial, and to render judgment for plaintiff in error for costs.

Per Curiam:
Adopted in whole.

INDEX TO NOTES.

(The Index to Cases follows this.)

Abuse of process. See MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.		Appropriations. Necessity and sufficiency of reference in title of statute to appropriations to put its purpose into effect	812
Accident. As ground for relief from divorce	459	Assignment. Of corporate stock, see CORPORATIONS.
Accident insurance. See INSURANCE.		Attachment. Effect of levy of, see LEVY AND SEIZURE. Effect of attachment and sale of stranger's property	400
Accounting. Partnership accounting, see PARTNERSHIP.		Possibility of appeal from dismissal of attachment as affecting right to withhold property from debtor	591
Administration. Of decedent's estate, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.		Effect of insertion of unauthorized provision in attachment bond	998
Adultery. Of plaintiff as ground for relief from a divorce decree	464	Attorneys. Exemption of, from service of process, see WRIT AND PROCESS. Consideration for note or obligation given by attorney to cover loss on transactions conducted by him for principal	696
Affections. Alienation of, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.		Misconduct of counsel for defeated spouse as ground for relief from divorce	464
Agency. See PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.		Right of attorney at law to solicit business	1128
Alienation of affections. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.		Concealment or failure to produce document as ground for disbarment or suspension	884
Alimony. Attack on provisions as to alimony in divorce decree	498	Eligibility of suspended or disbarred attorney to judicial office	803
Alluvion. Division of, see WATERS.		Auctions. Effect of insertion of unauthorized provisions in auctioneer's bond	1013
Anticipatory breach. Damages for anticipatory breach of contract as provable claim in bankruptcy	585	Bail and recognizance. Effect of insertion of unauthorized provisions in bail bond	894
Appeal and error. Effect of pardon granted pending appeal	570	Bankruptcy. Who is within protection of provision of Bankruptcy Act as to use in criminal proceeding of testimony given by bankrupt	614
Effect of insertion of unauthorized provision in appeal bond	992	Damages for anticipatory breach of contract as provable claim	585
Possibility of appeal from dismissal of garnishment or attachment as affecting right to withhold property from debtor	591
May Statute of Frauds be raised for first time on appeal where, under the pleadings, it might have been raised below	1071

Banks.

Consideration for note given to make good depletion of capital or assets of bank

688

Effect of insertion of unauthorized provisions in cashier's bond

991

Barbers.

Barbering on Sunday, see SUNDAY,

Bastardy.

Effect of insertion of unauthorized provisions in bastardy bond

994

Exhibition of child for purpose of determining paternity

1148

Bawdyhouses.

See DISORDERLY HOUSES.

Bequest.

See WILLS.

Bills and notes.

Consideration for note given to make good depletion of capital or assets of bank

688

Consideration for note given by attorney or agent to cover loss on transactions conducted by him for principal

696

Right of an infant to disaffirm transfer of note by indorsement

1174

Time of payment of obligation purporting to be payable on specified event, the happening of which is wholly or partially within the control of the promisor

1060

Bonds.

Effect of insertion of unauthorized provisions in a bond required by statute

990

Brokers.

Right of broker to recover commissions where owner has refused to make the sale for a price otherwise satisfactory, because of broker's misrepresentations as to offers obtained

922

Burden of proof.

See EVIDENCE.

Business.

Sunday business, see SUNDAY.

Carriers.

Cumulative penalties for failure of carrier to provide separate accommodations for white and colored persons

548

Constitutionality of statute imposing penalty or added liability for failure of railroad or carrier to pay claim

926

Cashier.

See BANKS.

Cemeteries.

Forbidding burial of negro in cemetery controlled by white persons

948

L.R.A.1917B.

Certiorari.

Effect of insertion of unauthorized provisions in bond

1002

Charities.

Exemption of, from taxation, see TAXES.

Civil rights.

Forbidding burial of negro in cemetery controlled by white persons

948

Claims.

Against bankrupt estate, see BANKRUPTCY.

Against carriers, see CARRIERS.

Against railroads, see RAILROADS.

Clearance card.

To discharged employee, see MASTER AND SERVANT.

Clerks.

Effect of insertion of unauthorized provisions in clerk's bond

995

Collectors.

Effect of insertion of unauthorized provisions in bond of 991

Collusion.

Attack on collusive divorce

490

Commerce.

Constitutionality, construction, and effect of Webb-Kenyon Act

1229

Gathering laundry or other articles in one state, performing services thereon in another, and returning to owners, as interstate commerce

843

Commissions.

Of brokers, see BROKERS.

Committee.

Of insane person, see INCOMPETENT PERSONS.

Common-law bond.

Effect of insertion of unauthorized provisions in 1017

Concealment.

Effect of, on running of limitations, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Condition.

In insurance policy, see INSURANCE.

Conditional sale.

See SALE.

Condonation.

Attack on divorce decree based on condonation pending the divorce suit

462

Conflict of laws.

Extraterritorial effect of decree of divorce rendered upon constructive service

1032

Consideration.

For contract generally, see CONTRACTS.

Consignment contract.

Construction of contract having some provisions peculiar to consignment and agency contracts and others to sale contracts 626

Constable.

Effect of insertion of unauthorized provisions in constable's bond 995

Constitutional law.

As to use of public funds, see PUBLIC MONIES.

Constitutionality of initiative and referendum 15

Constitutional limitation of the power to exempt property from taxation as affecting public obligations or property -308

Constitutionality of statute forbidding taking of fee for securing employment for another 1280

Validity of statutes or ordinances against bawdyhouses 1078

Constitutionality of statute imposing penalty or added liability for failure of railroad or carrier to pay claim 926

Constitutionality of statutes requiring an employer to furnish a discharged employee with a statement of the cause of his discharge 1115

Constitutionality of statutes restricting right of employer to discharge employee 1122

Constitutionality of regulations affecting ice cream 207

Constitutionality of Webb-Kenyon Act 1226

Construction.

Of contract generally, see CONTRACTS.
Of will, see WILLS.

Constructive service.

See WAIT AND PROCESS.

Contempt.

Punishment of convict for failure or refusal to testify or other contempt 588

Applicability in proceeding to punish criminal contempt of rules of evidence in criminal cases 118

Contractors.

Bonds of, see BONDS.

Contracts.

By corporations, see CORPORATIONS.

Of infant, see INFANTS.

Of sale generally, see SALE.

For purchase or sale of land, see VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

Damages for anticipatory breach of contract as provable claim in bankruptcy 585

May action for alienation of affections rest upon a breach of contract 680

Right to recover for household services rendered while parties were living in illicit relations 683

Consideration for note or other obligation given to make good depletion of capital or assets of bank 688

Consideration for note or obligation given by attorney or agent to cover loss on transactions conducted by him for principal 696

Surrender clause in oil or gas lease as rendering it unilateral 1206

May statute of frauds be raised for first time on appeal where under the pleadings it might have been raised below 1071

Effect of the Statute of Frauds upon the right to modify, by subsequent parole agreement, a written contract required by the statute to be in writing 144

Construction of contract having some provisions peculiar to consignment and agency contracts, and others to sale contracts 626

Agreement to accept less than amount of appropriation, salary, or fee 190

Promise to accept less than compensation fixed by law as affecting right to hold office 196

Insurance on bawdyhouse or furniture therein 257

Sale of goods to keeper or inmate of house of ill-fame 1168

Contribution and indemnity.

Contribution between insurers, see INSURERS.

Convicts.

Punishment of convict for failure or refusal to testify or other contempt 588

Corporations.

Bonds for fidelity of officers and agents, see BONDS.

Estoppel against raising the defense of ultra vires in actions brought by private corporation 821

Power of corporation to rescind declaration of dividend 736

Right to dividends on transfer of stock 326

Partnership liability of stockholders of a foreign corporation in a state in which it is doing business 574

Costs.

Effect of insertion of unauthorized provisions in cost bond 1008

Counsel.

See ATTORNEYS.

Courts.

Clerks of, see CLERKS.

Contempt of, see CONTEMPT.

Covenants and conditions.

Conditions in insurance policy, see INSURANCE.

Rescission of land contract for breach of covenant, see VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

Credibility.

Of witness, see WITNESSES.

Criminal law.

As to bail and recognizance, see BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE.

As to criminal contempt, see CONTEMPT.

As to sufficiency of indictment, see INDICTMENT, etc.

Violation of liquor law, see INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

See also EMBEZZLEMENT; PERJURY.

Who is within protection of provision of Bankruptcy Act as to use in criminal proceeding of testimony given by bankrupt 614

Necessity of presence of accused at rendition of verdict for misdemeanor 346

Effect of pardon granted after verdict and before sentence, or pending appeal 570

Crimination of self.

See CRIMINAL LAW.

Curative acts.

Insertion of unauthorized provisions in a bond required by statute as affected by curative statutes 997

Damages.

Damages for anticipatory breach of contract as provable claim in bankruptcy 585

Data.

Right of public to benefit of data prepared by officer or employee 1183

Death.

Effect of attack on divorce decree of death of spouse granted decree 486

Concealment or ignorance of cause of action as suspending statute of limitations against action for death 1259

Debtor and creditor.

Insolvency of debtor, see BANKRUPTCY.

Decedent's estate.

Administration of, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Demonstrative evidence.

See EVIDENCE.

Description.

Of beneficiary of will, see WILLS.

Device.

Right of public to benefit of devices made by officer or employee 1183

Devise.

See WILLS.

Disbarment.

Of attorney, see ATTORNEYS.

Discharge.Of employee, see MASTER AND SERVANT.
L.R.A.1917B.Discoveries.

Right of public to benefit of discoveries made by officer or employee 1183

Discovery and inspection.

Exhibition of person to jury, see EVIDENCE.

Dismissal.

Of attachment, see ATTACHMENT.

Of garnishment, see GARNISHMENT.

Disorderly houses.

Insurance on bawdyhouses or furniture therein 257

Sale of goods to keeper of inmate of house of ill-fame 1168

Validity of statutes or ordinances against bawdyhouses 1078

Distillers.

Effect of insertion of unauthorized provisions in distiller's bond 995

Dividends.

On corporate stock, see CORPORATIONS.

Divorce and separation.

Attack on decrees of divorce for other causes than lack of jurisdiction 409

Extraterritorial effect of decree of divorce rendered on constructive service 1032

Remedy for refusal to permit access to or visitation of children as provided by decree of divorce 290

Duress.

As ground of attack on divorce decree 457

Eligibility.

To judicial office, see JUDGES.

Embargo.

Effect of insertion of unauthorized provisions in embargo bond 996

Embezzlement.

Proof of mere failure to pay over money 1266

Employees.

Bonds for fidelity of, see BONDS.

In general, see MASTER AND SERVANT.

Employment agencies.

Constitutionality of statute forbidding taking of fee for securing employment for another 1280

Estoppel.

Of divorced spouse to attack divorce decree 499

Against raising the defense of ultra vires in actions brought by private corporations 821

To complain of insertion of unauthorized provisions in a bond required by statute 1001

Evidence.

- Applicability in proceeding to punish criminal contempt of rules of evidence in criminal cases 118
- Burden of proof where divorces are attacked 433
- Errors in reception of testimony to support attack on divorce decree 432, 511
- Insufficiency of evidence to warrant divorce as a basis of attack 432
- Newly discovered evidence as ground for opening decree of divorce 466
- Exhibition of child for purposes of determining paternity in bastardy proceedings 1148
- Competency of parol evidence to show that a writing was not intended to create legal relations, but was executed as a sham 263
- Competency of parol evidence of an agreement by the vendor of a business not to re-engage therein, where some part of the agreement has been reduced to writing 276

Execution.

- Levy under, see LEVY AND SEIZURE.

Executors and administrators.

- Effect of insertion of unauthorized provision in bond of 992

Exemption.

- From taxation, see TAXES.

Exhibition.

- Of person to jury, see EVIDENCE.

Farming utensils.

- Property covered by insurance policy on "farming utensils" 937

Fidelity insurance.

- See BONDS.

Food.

- Regulations affecting ice cream 207

Foreclosure.

- Of mortgage, see MORTGAGE.

Foreign corporations.

- See CORPORATIONS.

Forfeiture.

- Of insurance policy, see INSURANCE.

Forthcoming bond.

- Effect of insertion of unauthorized provisions in 1012

Fraud and deceit.

- Fraud as ground of attack on divorce decree 441

Frauds, statute of.

- See CONTRACTS.

Garnishment.

- Possibility of appeal from dismissal of garnishment as affecting right to withhold property from debtor 591

Gas.

- Natural gas, see MINES.

Guardian and ward.

- Power of guardian to procure necessities for family of his ward 678
- Effect of insertion of unauthorized provision in guardian's bond 992

Health.

- Of insured, see INSURANCE.

Health insurance.

- See INSURANCE.

Heirs.

- Attack by, on divorce decree 499

Highways.

- Liability for injury due to negligent driving, see NEGLIGENCE.

Holidays.

- As to Sunday, see SUNDAY.

Homicide.

- Murder of insured by beneficiary as affecting right to proceeds of policy 671

House of ill-fame.

- See DISORDERLY HOUSES.

Husband and wife.

- As to divorce or separation, see DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.
- Devise or bequest to one described as "husband," "wife" or "widow" as affected by illegality or nonexistence of marriage 1153
- Liability for necessities furnished reputed wife 1290
- May action for alienation of affections rest upon a breach of contract or negligent tort 680

Ice cream.

- See FOOD.

Ignorance.

- Effect of, on running of limitations, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Ill-fame.

- House of, see DISORDERLY HOUSES.

Illicit cohabitation.

- Right to recover for household services rendered while parties were living in illicit relations. 683

Illness.

- See SICKNESS.

Implied contract.

- See CONTRACTS.

Incompetent persons.

- Attack on divorce decree granted on ground of lunacy of divorced spouse 466
- Power of committee of insane person to procure necessities for family of his ward 678

Increase.

Levy upon property as including subsequent increase thereof 944

Indictment, information, and complaint.

Typewritten, printed or stamped signature of 287

Infants.

Custody of, after divorce, see DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.
Guardianship of, see GUARDIAN AND WARD.

Attack on divorce decree grounded on infancy of divorced spouse 467

Liability of parent for necessities furnished minor child who is living away from the parents' home 693

Right of an infant to disaffirm transfer of note by indorsement 1174

Initiative, referendum, and recall.

Initiative and referendum 15

Injunction.

Effect of insertion of unauthorized provisions in injunction bond 996

Insanity.

See INCOMPETENT PERSONS.

Insolvency.

As to bankruptcy, see BANKRUPTCY.

Insurance.

Insurance on bawdyhouse or furniture therein 257

Property covered by policy on "farming utensils" 937

Effect of failure to pay periodical premium on policy of life insurance to terminate the same in the absence of a provision for forfeiture 214

Date from which the period to which a defense is limited in life insurance policy is to be computed 105

What constitutes disability within meaning of accident or health policy 108

Hernia as breach of condition or warranty as to health or bodily condition 747

Service by publication to give jurisdiction of issues between nonresident and resident claimants to benefits under an insurance policy 398

Murder of insured by beneficiary as affecting right to proceeds of policy 671

Provision in accident policy for prorating in case of other insurance 323

Employer's contribution to insurance for benefit of employee, as affecting or affected by recovery against him for personal injury 1160

Intent.

Parol evidence as to, see EVIDENCE.

Of testator, see WILLS.

Interstate commerce.

See COMMERCE.

L.R.A.1917B.

Intervention.

See PARTIES.

Intoxicating liquors.

Effect of insertion of unauthorized provisions in liquor bond 995, 1009, 1016

Constitutionality, construction, and effect of Webb-Kenyon Act 1229

Do statutes forbidding the sale of a certain class or classes of liquor include nonintoxicating liquor 974

Manufacturing under contract as a sale 606

Inventions.

Right of public to benefit of inventions made by officer or employee 1183

Joint estate.

Under will, see WILLS.

Judges.

Eligibility of suspended or disbarred attorney to judicial office 803

Judgment.

Attacks on decrees of divorce for other causes than lack of jurisdiction 409

Extraterritorial effect of decrees of divorce rendered on constructive service 1032

Judicial sale.

Foreclosure of mortgage, see MORTGAGE.

Effect of attachment and sale of stranger's property 400

Jurisdiction.

Sufficiency of service of process to confer, see WRIT AND PROCESS.

Laches.

See LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Land contract.

See VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

Landlord and tenant.

Utilization of party wall by lessee as affecting lessor's duty to contribute to cost thereof 960

Liability of landlord to tenant for damage by water 225

Liability of landlord to tenant for damage by water, due to faulty construction 236

Liability of landlord to tenant for loss due to bursting water pipes 244

Lease.

In general, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.
Oil or gas lease, see MINES.

Legacy.

See WILLS.

Legal papers.

Typewritten, printed or stamped signature of 285

Levy and seizure.
Levy upon property as including subsequent increase thereof	944	Modification.
		Of contracts, see CONTRACTS.
Life insurance.		Money.
See INSURANCE.		As to public money, see PUBLIC MONIES.
Life tenants.		Mortgage.
As to life estates and remainders generally, see WILLS.		Amount of property to be sold under mortgage foreclosure	517
Limitation of actions.		Municipal corporations.
Effect of laches in attacking divorce decree	503	Use of public money by, see PUBLIC MONIES.
Concealment or ignorance of cause of action as suspending Statute of Limitations against the action for personal injuries or death	1259	Validity of ordinances against bawdy-houses	1078
Lunatics.		Murder.
See INCOMPETENT PERSONS.		See HOMICIDE.
Malicious prosecution.		Mutilation.
Bringing civil action in remote district or foreign jurisdiction	752	Of will, liability for	558
Manufacturing.		Mutuality.
Manufacturing of intoxicating liquor under contract as a sale	606	Of contracts, see CONTRACTS.
Marriage.		Name.
As to divorce or separation, see DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.		Misnomer as ground for attacking divorce decree	439
Devise or bequest of one described as "husband," "wife," or "widow," as affected by illegality or nonexistence of marriage	1153	Necessaries.
Master and servant.		Husband's liability for, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.
Bond for fidelity of employee, see BONDS.		Furnished to infant, see INFANTS.
Right of public to benefit of discoveries, inventions, devices, data, etc., made or prepared by employee	1183	Power of guardian or committee of insane person to procure necessities for family of his ward	678
Employer's agreement to pay employee during disability, or his contribution to insurance, as affecting, or affected by, recovery against him for personal injury	1180	Necessity.
Constitutionality of statutes restricting right of employer to discharge employee	1122	Works of, on Sunday, see SUNDAY.
Constitutionality of statutes requiring the employer to furnish a discharged employee with a statement of the cause of his discharge	1115	Negligence.
Liability of railroad company for personal injuries by objects thrown from moving train	916	Of landlord, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.
Mines.		Limitation of time for suit for, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.
Operation of mine as a nuisance	313	Master's liability for servant's negligence, see MASTER AND SERVANT.
Surrender clause in oil or gas lease as rendering it unilateral	1206	Of railroad company, see RAILROADS.
Misnomer.		May action for alienation of affections rest upon a negligent tort	680
See NAME.		Liability for striking one engaged about an automobile in a highway	319
Mistake.		Signal of traffic officer as affecting duty of travelers to exercise care	137
As ground for relief from divorce	459	Negroes.
L.R.A.1917B.		Equal rights of, see CIVIL RIGHTS.
		Cumulative penalties for failure of carrier to provide separate accommodations for white and colored persons	548
		Newly discovered evidence.
		As ground for opening decree of divorce	466
		New trial.
		Attack out of court in presence of jurors upon credibility of witness as ground for new trial	248
		Nonresidents.
		Service of process on, see WRIT AND PROCESS.

Nuisances.

Operation of mine as a nuisance 313

Officers.

Bond of, see BONDS.

Validity of contracts of, see CONTRACTS.

As to judges, see JUDGES.

Right of public to benefit of discoveries, inventions, devices, data, etc., made or prepared by officers 1183

Oil.

See MINES.

Oral agreements.

See CONTRACTS.

Pardon.

See CRIMINAL LAW.

Parent and child.

Matters as to infants generally, see INFANTS.

Attack on divorce decree by children of divorced parents 499

Attack on divorce decree by parent of divorced child 499

Parol agreements.

See CONTRACTS.

Parol evidence.

See EVIDENCE.

Parties.

Exemption of, from service of process, see WRIT AND PROCESS.

Misnomer of, as ground for attacking divorce decree 439

Right of creditor of individual partner or of his estate to appear in proceedings for the settlement of affairs of partnership 1047

Partnership.

Partnership liability of stockholders of a foreign corporation in a state in which it is doing business 574

Right of creditor of individual partner or of his estate to appear in proceedings for the settlement of affairs of partnership 1047

Party wall.

Utilization of party wall by lessee as affecting lessor's duty to contribute to cost thereof 960

Paternity.

Exhibition of child for purpose of determining 1148

Paymaster.

Effect of insertion of unauthorized provisions in bond of 991

Payment.

Time of payment of obligation purporting to be payable on specified event, the happening of which is wholly or partially within the control of the promisor 1050

L.R.A.1917B.

Penalties.Cumulative penalties for failure of carrier to provide separate accommodations for white and colored persons 548
Constitutionality of statute imposing penalty or added liability for failure of railroad or carrier to pay claim 923Perjury.

Acquittal of crime as bar to a subsequent prosecution of defendant for perjury committed on the former trial 743

Personal injuries.

Limitation of time for suit for, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

To employee, see MASTER AND SERVANT.

On highway, see NEGLIGENCE.

On or near railroad track, see RAILROADS.

Pleading.

Attack on divorce decree on ground of infirmities of pleadings in divorce suit 468

In action attacking divorce decree for causes other than lack of jurisdiction 509

Premiums.

Insurance premiums, see INSURANCE.

Presence.

Of accused, necessity of, see CRIMINAL LAW.

Principal and agent.

As to brokers, see BROKERS.

Construction of contract having some provisions peculiar to consignment and agency contracts and others to sale contracts 626

Consideration for note or obligation given by agent to cover loss on transactions conducted by him for principal 696

Principal and surety.

As to bonds generally, see BONDS.

Privilege.

From service of process, see WRIT AND PROCESS.

Process.

See WRIT AND PROCESS.

Prorating.

Of insurance loss, see INSURANCE.

Prostitution.

House of ill-fame, see DISORDERLY HOUSES.

Provable claims.

In bankruptcy, see BANKRUPTCY.

Public.

Right of public to benefit of discoveries, inventions, devices, data, etc., made or prepared by officer or employee 1183

Publication.

Service of process by, see WRIT AND PROCESS.

Public moneys.

Necessity of, and formalities in, appropriations of, generally, see APPROPRIATIONS.

Power of municipal corporation or governmental body to use public funds to promote the passage, or to secure the defeat, of a law 358

Public policy.

See CONTRACTS.

Public property.

Exemption of, from taxation, see TAXES.

Public purpose.

Purpose for which public funds may be used, see PUBLIC MONIES.

Punishment.

For contempt, see CONTEMPT.

For crime, see CRIMINAL LAW.

Qualifications.

Of judge, see JUDGES.

Railroads.

Constitutionality of statute imposing penalty or added liability for failure of railroad to pay claim 926

Liability of railroad company for personal injuries by objects thrown from moving train 916

Liability for injury to person near track in consequence of suction from passing trains 1168

Real estate agents.

See BROKERS.

Real property.

Mortgage on, see MORTGAGE.

Rights and liabilities on transfer of, see VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

Devise of, see WILLS.

Records and recording laws.

Effect of insertion of unauthorized provisions in recorder's bond 995

Referendum.

See INITIATIVE, REFERENDUM, AND RECALL.

Remainder.

Under will, see WILLS.

Replevin.

Effect of insertion of unauthorized provisions in replevin bond 997, 1016

Rescission.

Of declaration of dividend, see CORPORATIONS.

Of land contract, see VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

L.R.A.1917B.

Review.

Bill in equity to set aside a divorce as a bill of review 421

Riparian rights.

See WATERS.

Sale.

Of intoxicating liquors, see INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

As between vendor and purchaser, see VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

Construction of contract having some provisions peculiar to consignment and agency contracts and others to sale contracts 626

Sale of goods to keeper or inmate of house of ill-fame 1168

Validity of conditional-sale contracts as affected by express or implied permission to purchaser to sell in the ordinary course of business 658

Sanity.

See INCOMPETENT PERSONS.

Segregation.

Of white and colored passengers, see CARRIERS.

Seizure.

See LEVY AND SEIZURE.

Self crimination.

See CRIMINAL LAW.

Separate coach law.

Cumulative penalties for failure of carrier to provide separate accommodations for white and colored persons 548

Service.

Of process, see WRIT AND PROCESS.

Sheriff.

Effect of insertion of unauthorized provisions in sheriff's bond 995

Sickness.

Insurance against, see INSURANCE.

Signature.

To legal process, see WRIT AND PROCESS.

Solicitation.

Right of attorney at law to solicit business 1128

Spoliation.

Of will, liability for 558

Statute of frauds.

See CONTRACTS.

Statutes.

Constitutionality of, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

As to initiative and referendum, see INITIATIVE, REFERENDUM, AND RECALL.

Power of municipal corporation or governmental body to use public funds to promote the passage, or to secure the defeat, of a law 358

- Insertion of unauthorized provisions in a bond required by statute as affected by curative statutes 997
- Necessity and sufficiency of reference in title of statute to appropriations to put its purpose into effect 812
- Stockholders.
See CORPORATIONS.
- Suction.
Liability for injury to person near track in consequence of suction from passing train 1168
- Summons.
See WRIT AND PROCESS.
- Sunday.
Barbering as a work of necessity 97
- Suspension.
Of attorney, see ATTORNEYS.
- Taxes.
Constitutional limitation of the power to exempt property from taxation as affecting public obligations or property 308
Requiring payment from inmates as affecting right of charitable institution to public aid or exemption from taxation 782
- Termination.
Of insurance contract, see INSURANCE.
- Time.
Date from which the period to which a defense is limited in life insurance policy is to be computed 105
Time of payment of obligation purporting to be payable on specified event, the happening of which is wholly or partially within the control of the promisor 1050
- Title.
Of statutes, see STATUTES.
- Torts.
Liability for negligence generally, see NEGLIGENCE.
- Transfer.
Of corporate stock, see CORPORATIONS.
- Treasurer.
Effect of insertion of unauthorized provisions in bond of 991
- Trial.
As to new trial, see NEW TRIAL.
- Ultra vires.
Ultra vires acts by corporations, see Corporations.
- Unilateral contracts.
See CONTRACTS.
- Vendor and purchaser.
Right of vendee to rescind contract for sale of land because of vendor's breach of covenant to make improvements 403
- Walls.
As to party walls, see PARTY WALL.
- Ward.
See GUARDIAN AND WARD; INCOMPETENT PERSONS.
- Warranties.
In application for insurance, see INSURANCE.
- Waters.
Liability of landlord to tenant for damage by water, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.
Division, in absence of special agreements, of water front, alluvion, and flats between adjoining riparian owners 786
- Webb-Kenyon Act.
Constitutionality, construction, and effect of 1229
- Wills.
Liability for mutilation or spoliation of will 558
Devise or bequest to one described as "husband," "wife," or "widow," as affected by illegality or nonexistence of marriage 1153
Devise or bequest to one and his children as giving the children an estate jointly or in common with the parent, or a remainder upon a life estate in the parent 49
- Witnesses.
Contempt by, see CONTEMPT.
Privilege of, from service of process, see WRIT AND PROCESS.
Attack out of court in presence of jurors upon credibility of witness as ground for new trial 248
- Works of necessity.
See SUNDAY.
- Writ and process.
Typewritten, printed, or stamped signature of legal process or other legal papers 285
Attack on divorce for defects in service of process 485
Service by publication to give jurisdiction of issues between nonresident and resident claimants to benefits under an insurance policy 393
Extraterritorial effect of decree of divorce rendered on constructive service 1032
Constructive service of process in suit to set aside divorce 509
Privilege of suitor or witness from service of process as affected by route taken or time consumed 252
Exemption of attorney from service of summons while in jurisdiction on legal business 893

GENERAL INDEX

NOTES ARE INDEXED BY THE WORD "ANNOTATED" AFTER THE POINTS TO WHICH THEY APPLY.

(Separate Index to Notes Precedes this.)

ABUSE OF PROCESS.

Measure of damages for, see Damages.
Liability for, see Malicious Prosecution.

ACCESSION AND CONFUSION.

Right of public to maps and plats prepared by officer from public records out of office hours but upon paper taken from discarded public books
1917B, 1176 (Annotated)

ACCIDENT.

Insurance against, see Insurance.
Proximate cause of, see Proximate Cause.

ACCOUNTING.

By personal representative, see Executors and Administrators.
Partnership accounting, see Partnership.

ACCUSED.

Necessity of presence of
1917B, 344 (Annotated)

ACTION OR SUIT.

On note, see Bills and Notes.
Limitation of actions or suits, see Limitation of Actions.
As to parties, see Parties.
Venue of, see Venue.

Prematurity; condition precedent.

Action for wrongfully suing out attachment; necessity of waiting until termination of main action .....1917B, 350 Kind; name.

Remedy for injury from operation, under statutory authority, of garbage incinerator .....1917B, 329

ADJOINING OWNERS.

Rights in party wall, see Party Wall.

AFFECTIONS.

Alienation of ....1917B, 679 (Annotated)

AFFIDAVITS.

As evidence .....1917B, 113, 1132
Sale on mortgage foreclosure after service on sheriff of purported affidavit of illegality .....1917B, 513
L.R.A.1917B.

AFTER-BORN CHILDREN.

Liability for injury to unborn child rendering it epileptic .....1917B, 334

ALIENATION OF AFFECTIONS.

Of wife, husband's right of action
1917B, 679 (Annotated)

AMBIGUITY.

In statute .....1917B, 1276

AMENDMENTS.

Of Constitution, see Constitutional Law.
Of statute, see Statutes.
Of pleading .....1917B, 760

AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY.

For purpose of jurisdiction .....1917B, 723

ANIMALS.

Transportation of, see Carriers.
Fright of horse .....1917B, 699

ANTICIPATORY BREACH.

Of contract, damages for, as provable claim in bankruptcy ..1917B, 580 (Annotated)

ANTI-TRUST LAW.

Combinations in violation of, see Monopoly and Combinations.

APPEAL AND ERROR.

Review of decisions of Workmen's Compensation Commission, see Workmen's Compensation.

Waiver of pardon by failing to plead it upon appeal from conviction .....1917B, 567.

Possibility of appeal from dismissal of garnishment as affecting right to withhold property from debtor
1917B, 588 (Annotated)

Appellate jurisdiction generally.

Writ of error to review canvass of primary election returns .....1917B, 723

Finality of decision .....1917B, 1296

Jurisdiction of particular courts.

Of Supreme Court of the United States

1917B, 580

Of state courts: amount necessary

1917B, 723, 1043 (Annotated)

1313

BAILMENT.

Question whether contract constituted conditional sale or bailment with power of sale ..... 1917B, 615
Rights of purchaser from bailee 1917B, 615

BANKRUPTCY.

Statute forbidding use in criminal proceeding for testimony given by bankrupt; who within protection of ..... 1917B, 608 (Annotated)
Right of trustee to stock of goods sold conditionally to be resold at retail ..... 1917B, 667
What claims provable against estate ..... 1917B, 580 (Annotated)

BANKS.

Bond of depository bank, see Bonds.
State taxation of shares of stock in national bank ..... 1917B, 294
Valuation of shares of national bank for purpose of taxation ..... 1917B, 294
Officers and agents.
Liability on bond of cashier ..... 1917B, 984 (Annotated)

Deposits.

Garnishment of deposit; effect to bind interest subsequently accruing ..... 1917B, 938 (Annotated)
Liability for interest of bank withholding funds attached as those of its depositor because of claim to them by stranger ..... 1917B, 938

BAR.

Of judgment, see Judgment.
Of limitation, see Limitation of Actions.

BARBERS.

Operation of barber shop on Sunday ..... 1917B, 93 (Annotated)

BASTARDY.

Exhibition of infant for purpose of comparison with defendant ..... 1917B, 1143 (Annotated)
Right to jury to ascertain amount of incidental expenses attending birth of child ..... 1917B, 1143

BAWDYHOUSES.

See Disorderly Houses.

BEQUEST.

In general, see Wills.

BIAS.

Of juror as ground for new trial ..... 1917B, 246

BILLS AND NOTES.

Situs of notes for purpose of taxation ..... 1917B, 1282
Consideration.
Want or failure of, as defense, see infra.
Note given by attorney to cover loss on transactions conducted by him for principal ..... 1917B, 694 (Annotated)
L.R.A.1917B.

Liability of indorser.

What constitutes commercial indorsement in due course ..... 1917B, 364
Indorsement that payment is guaranteed and "protest waived" ..... 1917B, 364
Right of infant to disaffirm his indorsement of promissory note ..... 1917B, 1172 (Annotated)
Who are protected as bona fide purchasers.
As against an infant indorser... 1917B, 1172.
Purchaser of note transferred by indorsement that payment is guaranteed and "protest waived" ..... 1917B, 364 Maturity: extension: renewal.
Maturity of note payable when certain land is sold ..... 1917B, 1048 (Annotated)
Action and defenses.
Judgment on the pleadings .... 1917B, 364
Want or failure of consideration as defense ..... 1917B, 684
Defense of duress ..... 1917B, 684

BONA FIDE PURCHASER.

Of note, see Bills and Notes.
Of municipal bonds, see Bonds.

BONDS.

Contractor's bond.
What constitutes "labor and material" within protection of bond ..... 1917B, 558
For fidelity of employees or corporate officers.
Cashier's bond; effect of insertion in bond of unauthorized provisions ..... 1917B, 984 (Annotated)
By public officers.
Liability after end of term .... 1917B, 139
Parol modification of terms of bond ..... 1917B, 139 (Annotated)
By public depository.
Effect of insertion in bond of unauthorized provision ..... 1917B, 977 (Annotated) Defense that county treasurer was stockholder in depository bank contrary to provisions of statute ..... 1917B, 977.
Effect on liability of fact that deposit was in excess of bond of depository at time of latter's failure ..... 1917B, 977
Defense that designation of depository was irregular or illegal ..... 1917B, 977 Municipal.

Binding effect on Federal court, in determining validity of municipal bonds, of decision of state court ..... 1917B, 1019
Effect of addition of provisions to form fixed by ordinance ..... 1917B, 1019
Duty of purchaser of bonds signed by mayor and clerk to consult ordinances to ascertain authority of mayor and clerk ..... 1917B, 1019
Estoppel by recitals ..... 1917B, 1019
Lack of authority for delivery of bonds to persons placing them on the market ..... 1917B, 1019

State bonds.

Issuance and sale of state public buildings bonds as an exercise of sovereignty within the ordinary use of the state's credit ..... 1917B, 294

State bond as a contract which may not be impaired ..... 1917B, 294
 Exemption of, from taxation
     1917B, 294 (Annotated)

BOXING MATCH.

Right of one contracting to box ten rounds to a draw to recover agreed compensation where match is not finished because of his fault ..... 1917B, 1238

BREACH.

Of contract, see Contracts.

BRIDGES.

Defects; injuries on.

Personal liability of individuals composing board of county commissioners 1917B, 369

BROKERS.

Effect on compensation of failure to complete transaction. 1917B, 919 (Annotated)

BUILDINGS.

Landlord's negligence as to condition of, see Landlord and Tenant.

Party wall for, see Party Wall.

BURDEN OF PROOF.

In general, see Evidence.

BUSINESS.

Equal protection and privileges in regulation of, see Constitutional Law.

Due process in regulation of, see Constitutional Law.

Police power over, see Constitutional Law.

On Sunday, see Sunday.

Construction of contract not to enter competitive business ..... 1917B, 267

Consideration for agreement by seller of business not to re-engage therein, entered into subsequently to sale of business
     1917B, 267

CARRIERS.

Carriers of passengers.

Proximate cause of injury to passenger
     1917B, 706

Presumption and burden of proof as to negligence ..... 1917B, 1091

Variance between pleading and proof in action for injury ..... 1917B, 1091

Limitation of liability as to baggage
     1917B, 787

Carriers of freight.

Refusal to deliver; conversion .. 1917B, 787

Measure of damages for delay in furnishing cars for live stock ..... 1917B, 564

Governmental control; rates; discrimination.

Regulation of interstate business of, see Commerce.

Requiring separate accommodations for white and colored passengers .. 1917B, 544

Penalty for failure promptly to settle claim for injury to property
     1917B, 924 (Annotated)

Statute providing punishment for anyone who, without permission of conductor, rides on train with intent of being transported free ..... 1917B, 1291

L.R.A.1917B.

Duty of carrier to adhere to rates in schedule filed or posted ..... 1917B, 787

CARS.

Carrier's duty to furnish, see Carriers.

CASE.

Liability for mutilation of will
     1917B, 556 (Annotated)

CASE MADE.

Loss of in mails as ground for new trial
     1917B, 1073

CASHIER.

Bond of ..... 1917B, 984 (Annotated)

CATTLE.

Transportation of, see Carriers.

CAUSE.

Presumption and burden of proof as to, see Evidence.

Proximate cause, see Proximate Cause.

CEMETERIES.

Excluding colored persons from burial in
     1917B, 946 (Annotated)

CERTIORARI.

To review order of Public Utility Commission fixing rates for public service corporation ..... 1917B, 930

CHAMPERTY AND MAINTENANCE.

Solicitation of business by attorney as champerty ..... 1917B, 1140 (Annotated)

Advancement by attorney of money to client for living expenses during litigation, and advising him against settlement of case
     1917B, 1140

CHARACTER.

Evidence of ..... 1917B, 1132

CHARITIES.

Exemption of, from taxation
     1917B, 710, 779 (Annotated)

CHATTEL MORTGAGE.

Validity as against chattel mortgage of retention of title by wholesaler to goods sold for resale .. 1917B, 651 (Annotated)

CHECKS.

Payment by ..... 1917B, 1184

CHILDREN.

In general, see Infants.

CIVIL RIGHTS.

Excluding colored persons from burial in cemetery ..... 1917B, 946 (Annotated)

CLAIMS.

Against bankrupt estate, see Bankruptcy.

Against decedent's estate, see Executors and Administrators.

Against carrier, imposing penalty for failure to settle promptly
     1917B, 924 (Annotated)

CLASSIFICATION.

By statute, see Constitutional Law.

COLLATERAL ATTACK.

On judgment, see Judgment.

COLLUSION.

Collusion as ground for relief from divorce decree ..... 1917B, 405

COMBINATIONS.

See Monopoly and Combinations.

COMITY.

Recognition of decree of other state, see Judgment.

COMMERCE.

Regulating carriage and transportation.
When transportation is interstate

1917B, 544

Validity of Webb-Kenyon Act

1917B, 1218 (Annotated)

Effect of Webb-Kenyon Act on state statute forbidding shipment from without the state of liquors intended for personal use
1917B, 1218

Imposition of penalty on carrier for failure promptly to settle a claim for injury to property during transportation

1917B, 924 (Annotated)

Licenses and privilege taxes: regulating sales, manufacturing and other business.

Collection of articles in one state to be carried into another and there laundered, and their return to their owners as interstate commerce, not subject to license tax

1917B, 341 (Annotated)

Intoxicating liquors

1917B, 215, 1218 (Annotated)

1230 (Annotated)

In original packages ..... 1917B, 1272

License tax on automobiles passing through the state ..... 1917B, 553

COMMISSIONS.

Of brokers, see Brokers.

Public Service Commissions, see Public Service Commissions.

Workmen's Compensation Commission, see Workmen's Compensation.

COMMITTEE.

Of incompetent person, see Incompetent Persons.

COMMON CARRIERS.

See Carriers.

COMPARISON.

Exhibition of child to jury for purpose of comparison .... 1917B, 1143 (Annotated)

COMPENSATION.

Of attorney, see Attorneys.

Of brokers, see Brokers.

Of public officer, see Officers.

L.R.A. 1917B.

COMPLAINT.

In criminal prosecution, see Indictment, etc.

Of plaintiff, see Pleading.

COMPUTATION.

Of time, see Time.

CONCEALMENT.

Effect of, on running of limitations

1917B, 1253 (Annotated)

CONCLUSIONS.

In pleading ..... 1917B, 513

CONDEMNATION.

Of property, see Eminent Domain.

CONDITION.

Precedent to suit, see Action or Suit.

In insurance contract, see Insurance.

Condition precedent to invalidation of election ..... 1917B, 191

Condition precedent to presentation of claim against administrator ..... 1917B, 676

In oil and gas lease ..... 1917B, 1184

CONDITIONAL SALE.

See Sales.

CONDUCT.

Estoppel by, see Estoppel.

CONFLICT OF LAWS.

As to conflict of authority between courts, see Courts.

As to validity and defect of foreign judgment, see Judgment.

As to venue of action, see Venue.

CONSIDERATION.

Of bills and notes, see Bills and Notes.

Of contract generally, see Contracts.

CONSIGNMENT CONTRACT.

Question of whether contract was a sale passing title or a consignment contract

1917B, 620 (Annotated)

CONSPIRACY.

Combinations in restraint of trade, commerce or competition, see Monopoly and Combinations.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Matters as to procedure on criminal trial generally, see Criminal Law.

As to imprisonment for debt, see Imprisonment for Debt.

Right to trial by jury, see Jury.

Amendments.

Right to declare state constitutional amendment unconstitutional as repugnant to preamble to Federal Constitution

1917B, 7

Submission of proposed amendment to vote

1917B, 7

Validity of amendment restricting power of legislature to enact liquor laws . 1917B, 7

Construction.

- Effect of contemporaneous interpretation by legislature ..... 1917B, 710
 Self executing provisions ..... 1917B, 710
Equal protection and privileges; abridging immunities and privileges.
 Primary election law ..... 1917B, 718
 Exclusion of colored persons from burial in cemetery ..... 1917B, 946
 Requiring employer to give discharged employee true statement of cause of discharge ..... 1917B, 1108 (Annotated)
 Limiting right to discharge railroad employee ..... 1917B, 1119
 Limiting persons authorized to institute proceedings for suppression of bawdyhouse to citizens of the county .... 1917B, 1075
Due process of law or law of the land; guaranty of right to life, liberty and property.
 Power of state to forbid all shipments of intoxicating liquor for personal use or otherwise ..... 1917B, 1218
 Validity of Webb-Kenyon Act ..... 1917B, 1218 (Annotated)
 Statute or ordinance against bawdy houses ..... 1917B, 1075 (Annotated)
 Enjoining public officer from removing, at expiration of term, index to public records prepared by him at his own expense ..... 1917B, 1179 (Annotated)
 Forbidding employer to refuse to employ one who has participated in strike ..... 1917B, 1108
 Limiting right to discharge railroad employee ..... 1917B, 1119 (Annotated)
 Compelling employer to disclose to employee communications made by or to him as to qualifications of discharged employee or one seeking employment .... 1917B, 1108
 Regulating sale of ice cream ..... 1917B, 198 (Annotated)
Police power.
 Primary election laws ..... 1917B, 723
 Compelling employer to give reasons for discharge of employee ..... 1917B, 1108
 Fixing standard for ice cream ..... 1917B, 198 (Annotated)
Freedom of speech, press and worship.
 Compelling employer to give reasons for discharge of employee ..... 1917B, 1108
Impairing obligation of contracts.
 State bonds as a contract between the holder and the state which may not be impaired ..... 1917B, 294
 Provision against impairing contract obligations as limitation upon taxing power ..... 1917B, 294

CONSTRUCTION.

- Of constitution, see Constitutional Law.
 Of insurance contract, see Insurance.
 Of statute, see Statutes.
 Of will, see Wills.

CONTEMPT.*What constitutes.

- Distinction between civil and criminal contempt ..... 1917B, 113
 Refusal of witness to testify ..... 1917B, 586 (Annotated)

L.R.A.1917B.

Procedure.

- Right to meet witnesses ..... 1917B, 113 (Annotated)
 Ex parte affidavits ..... 1917B, 113
 Power as to.
 Power of judge of county court taking deposition to commit for contempt ..... 1917B, 360

Punishment.

- Power of court to suspend sentence after service under it has begun for purpose of punishing convict for contempt ..... 1917B, 586

CONTEST.

- Of election, see Elections.

CONTRACTORS.*Bonds of, see Bonds.

- Right of one furnishing material to contractor for construction of courthouse to recover therefor from county where contract is abandoned before completion ..... 1917B, 1269

CONTRACTS.

- Restrictions on right of, see Constitutional Law.
 Impairing obligation of, see Constitutional Law.
 Of corporation, see Corporations.
 Of infant, see Infants.
 As to mortgages, see Mortgage.
 Of sale generally, see Sale.
 Pleading as to ..... 1917B, 267, 564
 Damages for anticipatory breach of, as provable claim in bankruptcy ..... 1917B, 580 (Annotated)
Implied agreements.
 Right of woman deceived into illegal marriage to recover from estate of supposed husband value of her services ..... 1917B, 681 (Annotated)

Consideration.

- For bill or note, see Bills and Notes.
 For agreement by seller of business not to re-engage therein, entered into subsequently to sale of business ..... 1917B, 267
Meeting of mines; mutuality.
 Mutuality of oil and gas lease ..... 1917B, 1184 (Annotated)

Statute of Frauds.

- Parol evidence to vary written contract, see Evidence.
 Necessity of pleading Statute of Frauds ..... 1917B, 1061
 Raising question of Statute of Frauds for first time on appeal ..... 1917B, 1061 (Annotated)
 Effect of Statute of Frauds on right to modify written contract by subsequent parol agreement .... 1917B, 139 (Annotated)
 141 (Annotated)
 Effect of fraud or part performance ..... 1917B, 141

Construction.

- Insurance contracts, see Insurance.
 Not to enter competitive business ..... 1917B, 267
 Time as essence of contract .. 1917B, 1184

Validity and effect.

Champtious contracts, see Champty and Maintenance.

Contracts against liability .... 1917B, 787
With attorney .. 1917B, 1123 (Annotated)
1140 (Annotated)

Insurance on furniture used in house of ill-fame ..... 1917B, 253 (Annotated)

Contract of public officer as to compensation 1917B, 191 (Annotated)

Recovery of purchase price of liquors sold for resale where resale will incidentally encourage house of ill-fame
1917B, 1166 (Annotated)

Performance; breach.

Injunction against breach, see Injunction.

Choice of remedy for breach ... 1917B, 787
Right to recover on part performance
1917B, 1238, 1239

Change or extinguishment.

Modification by parol
1917B, 139 (Annotated)
141 (Annotated)

CONTRIBUTION.

Between insurance companies, see Insurance.

CONVERSION.

See Trover.

CONVICTS.

Sentence and imprisonment of, see Criminal Law.

Pardon of, see Criminal Law.

Punishing for contempt a convict who refuses to testify .. 1917B, 586 (Annotated)

CORPORATIONS.

As to banks, see Banks.

Exemption of, from taxation, see Taxes.

Rights and powers generally.

Statute empowering private citizens to contest authority of corporation; extinguishment of power of court where authority is found to exist ..... 1917B, 310

Implied powers ..... 1917B, 814

Contracts; ultra vires.

Ultra vires contracts of municipality, see Municipal Corporations.

Power of railroad corporation to contract to pay employees half wages during disability resulting from service 1917B, 1158

Power to loan money ..... 1917B, 814

Right to set up ultra vires as defense
1917B, 814 (Annotated)

Officers and agents.

Of banks, see Banks.

Insurance agents, see Insurance.

Testimony by officer in bankruptcy proceedings against corporation as within protection of provision of Bankruptcy Act as to use in criminal proceeding of testimony given by bankrupt
1917B, 608 (Annotated)

Embezzlement ..... 1917B, 608

Transfer of stock.

Right of transferee to dividend on stock
1917B, 323 (Annotated)

Rights of shareholders.

Rescission of declaration of dividend
1917B, 728 (Annotated)

L.R.A. 1917B.

Right of stockholder to recover dividend declared but not paid ..... 1917B, 323
Right to dividend on transfer of stock
1917B, 323 (Annotated)

Foreign corporations.

Liability of members of foreign corporation doing business within state without complying with state laws
1917B, 572 (Annotated)

COSTS AND FEES.

Fees of officer generally, see Officers.

Amending statute as to beneficiary of fees to be taxed as costs in criminal prosecutions ..... 1917B, 176

Effect of failure to tax fees of prosecuting attorney as costs against accused
1917B, 176

Effect of pardon to release convict from liability for costs ..... 1917B, 567

COTENANCY.

Joint tenancy in proceeds of insurance policy on lives of husband and wife 1917B, 1210

COUNSEL.

See Attorneys.

COUNSEL FEES.

See Attorneys.

COUNTERCLAIM.

See Set-off and Counterclaim.

COUNTIES.

Personal liability of members of board of county commissioners for defects in bridge
1917B, 369

Garnishment of ..... 1917B, 1269

Determining right of county to return of money paid state's attorney as salary, in interpleader by county clerk to determine right to moneys in his hands claimed by such attorney as fees ..... 1917B, 176

Right of one furnishing material to contractor for construction of courthouse to recover therefor from county where contract is abandoned before completion
1917B, 1269

COURTHOUSE.

Right of one furnishing material to contractor for construction of courthouse to recover therefor from county where contract is abandoned before completion.
1917B, 1269

COURTS.

Contempt of, see Contempt.

As to judges, see Judges.

As to venue of action, see Venue.

Power to suspend sentence. ... 1917B, 586

Jurisdiction over nonresident.

Jurisdiction to reform assignment of insurance policy as against nonresident distributees of deceased assignee
1917B, 385 (Annotated)

State and territorial courts.

Original jurisdiction of appellate court
1917B, 710

Amount in controversy for purposes of jurisdiction ..... 1917B, 924

Conflict of authority; relation of state to Federal.

When state or Federal jurisdiction exclusive
1917B, 1179

Rules of decision.

State courts following Federal decisions
1917B, 787

Federal courts following state decisions
1917B, 1019

COVENANTS AND CONDITIONS.

In oil and gas lease ..... 1917B, 1184

CREDIT.

Damages for loss of credit from wrongful attachment ..... 1917B, 350

CRIMINAL CONTEMPT.

See Contempt.

CRIMINAL LAW.

District attorneys, see District and Prosecuting Attorneys.

As to grand jury, see Grand Jury.

As to requisites and sufficiency of indictment, information or complaint, see Indictment, etc.

Quashing of indictment, see Indictment.

Violation of liquor laws, see Intoxicating Liquors.

See also Embezzlement; Perjury.

Strict construction of penal statute
1917B, 962

Protection and rights of accused generally.

Right to meet witnesses
1917B, 113 (Annotated)

Crimination of self
1917B, 608 (Annotated)

Presence of accused
1917B, 344 (Annotated)

Former jeopardy.

Different offenses .. 1917B, 544 (Annotated)

Sentence and Imprisonment.

Cruel and unusual punishment .. 1917B, 586

Solitary confinement ..... 1917B, 586

Indeterminate sentences ..... 1917B, 738

Power of court to suspend sentence after service under it has begun for purpose of punishing convict for contempt
1917B, 586

Parole; reprieve; pardon.

Waiver of pardon ..... 1917B, 567

Validity of pardon granted pending appeal
1917B, 567 (Annotated)

Effect of pardon to release convict from liability for costs ..... 1917B, 567

CRIMINATION OF SELF.

See Criminal Law.

CRUEL AND UNUSUAL PUNISHMENT.

Solitary confinement ..... 1917B, 586

CUSTODY.

Of children after divorce, see Divorce and Separation.

DAMAGES.

Prejudicial error as to amount of
1917B, 924

L.R.A. 1917B.

For breach of warranty ..... 1917B, 1106

For delay of carrier in furnishing cars
1917B, 564

Damages recoverable by one fraudulently induced to take lease at a certain rental
1917B, 760

For wrongful attachment ..... 1917B, 350

For permanent personal injuries .. 1917B, 133

For death of boy of fourteen .. 1917B, 548

For conversion ..... 1917B, 787

DANGEROUS AGENCY.

Electricity, see Electricity.

DEATH.

Measure of damages for, see Damages.

Right of action for.

Liability in damages of husband causing death of his wife ..... 1917B, 774

DEBT.

Imprisonment for, see Imprisonment for Debt.

DECEIT.

See Fraud and Deceit.

DECLARATIONS.

In pleading, see Pleading.

DEEDS.

Conveyance of remainder to woman and her children forever as creating a life estate in common .... 1917B, 74 (Annotated)

DEFAULT.

Judgment by; what constitutes 1917B, 1296

Vacation of judgment by ..... 1917B, 984

DEFENSES.

In actions on negotiable instruments, see Bills and Notes.

To action on bond, see Bonds.

Ultra vires as, see Corporations.

Infancy as, see Infants.

To liability on insurance policy, see Insurance.

In proceeding to abate nuisance, see Nuisances.

Negation of, in indictment .... 1917B, 1230

DEMURRER.

In general, see Pleading.

DENIALS.

In pleading ..... 1917B, 1061

DENTISTS.

Agreement by dentist selling business not to enter competitive business ... 1917B, 267

Duty of state's attorney to prosecute action for practising dentistry without license
1917B, 176

DEPOSITIONS.

Power of judge of county court taking deposition to commit for contempt
1917B, 360

DEPOSITORY.

Bond by, see Bonds.

DETECTIVE.

Liability of detective employed by husband to shadow wife where he negligently shadows another woman ....1917B, 679

DEWISE.

See Wills.

DIRECTION OF VERDICT.

See Trial.

DISABILITIES.

Of infant, see Infants.

DISAFFIRMANCE.

Of infant's contract
1917B, 1172 (Annotated)

DISBARMENT.

Of attorneys, see Attorneys.

DISBURSEMENT.

Reimbursing personal representative for
1917B, 1043

DISCHARGE.

Of judgment, see Judgment.

Of employee, see Master and Servant.

DISCOVERY AND INSPECTION.

Exhibition of person to jury
1917B, 1143 (Annotated)

DISCRETION.

Review of, on appeal, see Appeal and Error.

DISCRIMINATION.

By carrier, see Carriers.

Unconstitutionality of, see Constitutional Law.

By public service corporations generally, see Public Service Corporation.

By water company, see Waters.

Retrospective operation of statute forbidding
1917B, 908

DISMISSAL OR DISCONTINUANCE.

Of appeal, see Appeal and Error.

DISOBEDIENCE.

As a contempt, see Contempt.

DISORDERLY HOUSES.

Constitutionality of statute for suppression of .....1917B, 1075 (Annotated)

Limiting persons authorized to institute proceedings for suppression of bawdyhouse to citizens of the county ...1917B, 1075

Recovery of purchase price of liquors sold for resale where resale will incidentally encourage house of ill-fame
1917B, 1166 (Annotated)

Validity of insurance on furniture used in house of ill-fame 1917B, 253 (Annotated)

DISTRICT AND PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS.

Determining right of county to return of money paid state's attorney as salary, in interpleader by county clerk to determine right to moneys in his hands claimed by such attorney as fees .....1917B, 176
L.R.A.1917B.

Compensation; lien for, on fines collected
1917B, 176

Construction of statute making prosecutor incompetent to serve on grand jury
1917B, 608

Duty of state's attorney to prosecute actions under statute imposing fine upon persons practising dentistry without license, and upon employees of state employment agency who accept fees from applicant for employment .....1917B, 176

Duty of state's attorney to enforce penalties for violation of ordinances passed by park commissioners .....1917B, 176

DIVIDENDS.

Right of stockholder to recover dividend declared but not paid .....1917B, 323

Right to dividend on transfer of stock
1917B, 383 (Annotated)

Rescission of declaration of
1917B, 728 (Annotated)

DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.

Conclusiveness of decree rendered in other state .....1917B, 1028 (Annotated)

Fraud as ground for relief of divorce decree
1917B, 405 (Annotated)

The suit and jurisdiction thereof.

Domicil for divorce purposes where husband deserts innocent wife and goes into another state .....1917B, 1028

Custody and support of children.

Change of decree as to custody
1917B, 287 (Annotated)

DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE.

See Evidence.

DOMICIL.

For purposes of divorce suit, see Divorce and Separation.

Of innocent wife whose husband deserts her and removes to another state
1917B, 1028

DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

See Constitutional Law.

DUPLICITY.

In indictment .....1917B, 1230

In pleading .....1917B, 608

DURESS.

Inducing execution of note by threats of criminal prosecution of relative of maker
1917B, 684

EARNING CAPACITY.

Consideration of, in valuation of franchises for purpose of fixing rates ..1917B, 930

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.

Exemption of, from taxation, see Taxes.

ELECTION OF REMEDIES.

Bar of former judgment, see Judgment.

Election between action for breach of contract of carriage or conversion
1917B, 787

Action against principal as barring action against agent .....1917B, 222

ELECTIONS.*Nominations: primary.

Writ of error to review primary election returns ..... 1917B, 723

Intent and object of primary election law ..... 1917B, 718, 723

Validity of primary election law ..... 1917B, 718, 723

Right of political organization to participate in primary election .... 1917B, 718

Necessity of notice of primary election contest ..... 1917B, 723

Contests.

Conviction of offenses against Corrupt Practices Act as condition precedent to invalidation of election contested because of such offenses ..... 1917B, 191

Effect of invalidation of election of candidate to invest candidate who received next highest number of votes with right to the office ..... 1917B, 191

Failure to give notice of contest 1917B, 723

Petition in contest ..... 1917B, 191

Presumption and burden of proof ..... 1917B, 191

Violation of election laws.

Effect of offer by candidate to accept less than salary to which entitled to invalidate election ..... 1917B, 191

Effect of offer by candidate to accept less than salary to which entitled to invalidate election ..... 1917B, 191

Effect of offer by candidate to accept less than salary to which entitled to invalidate election ..... 1917B, 191

Effect of offer by candidate to accept less than salary to which entitled to invalidate election ..... 1917B, 191

Effect of offer by candidate to accept less than salary to which entitled to invalidate election ..... 1917B, 191

Effect of offer by candidate to accept less than salary to which entitled to invalidate election ..... 1917B, 191

Effect of offer by candidate to accept less than salary to which entitled to invalidate election ..... 1917B, 191

Effect of offer by candidate to accept less than salary to which entitled to invalidate election ..... 1917B, 191

Effect of offer by candidate to accept less than salary to which entitled to invalidate election ..... 1917B, 191

Effect of offer by candidate to accept less than salary to which entitled to invalidate election ..... 1917B, 191

Effect of offer by candidate to accept less than salary to which entitled to invalidate election ..... 1917B, 191

Effect of offer by candidate to accept less than salary to which entitled to invalidate election ..... 1917B, 191

Effect of offer by candidate to accept less than salary to which entitled to invalidate election ..... 1917B, 191

Effect of offer by candidate to accept less than salary to which entitled to invalidate election ..... 1917B, 191

Effect of offer by candidate to accept less than salary to which entitled to invalidate election ..... 1917B, 191

Effect of offer by candidate to accept less than salary to which entitled to invalidate election ..... 1917B, 191

Effect of offer by candidate to accept less than salary to which entitled to invalidate election ..... 1917B, 191

Effect of offer by candidate to accept less than salary to which entitled to invalidate election ..... 1917B, 191

Effect of offer by candidate to accept less than salary to which entitled to invalidate election ..... 1917B, 191

Effect of offer by candidate to accept less than salary to which entitled to invalidate election ..... 1917B, 191

Effect of offer by candidate to accept less than salary to which entitled to invalidate election ..... 1917B, 191

Effect of offer by candidate to accept less than salary to which entitled to invalidate election ..... 1917B, 191

Effect of offer by candidate to accept less than salary to which entitled to invalidate election ..... 1917B, 191

Effect of offer by candidate to accept less than salary to which entitled to invalidate election ..... 1917B, 191

EQUAL PROTECTION AND PRIVILEGES.

See Constitutional Law.

EQUITY.

Territorial limitation of jurisdiction, see Courts.

As to injunction, see Injunction.

Limitation of actions in, see Limitation of Actions.

Invoking aid of equity to accomplish that which is in violation of public policy ..... 1917B, 1269

ESTATE.

In real property generally, see Deeds: Wills.

ESTOPPEL.

To raise question on appeal, see Appeal and Error.

Of insurer, see Insurance.

By recitals in municipal bonds 1917B, 1019

Of owner shipping property to factor to reclaim it as against purchaser from factor ..... 1917B, 615

Of public official to claim fees by his statement prior to election that he would pay them into the treasury

1917B, 176 (Annotated)

To set up defense of ultra vires ..... 1917B, 814 (Annotated)

EVIDENCE.

On appeal. see Appeal and Error.

Compelling accused to furnish, see Criminal Law.

Quashing of indictment because of consideration by grand jury of incompetent evidence ..... 1917B, 608

Sufficiency of objections and exceptions to ..... 1917B, 1143

Prejudicial error as to ..... 1917B, 1143

Presumptions and burden of proof.

Validity of statute ..... 1917B, 710

From failure to call witness ... 1917B, 310

Cause of ice on sidewalk .... 1917B, 1245

As to responsibility for ice on sidewalk ..... 1917B, 1245

From injury to person while riding on scenic railway ..... 1917B, 1091

Of negligence in sale of unfit food ..... 1917B, 1272

In election contests ..... 1917B, 191

In criminal cases ..... 1917B, 1261

Documentary evidence.

Affidavits upon which an information to disbar attorney are founded 1917B, 1132

Ex parte affidavits ..... 1917B, 113

Letters ..... 1917B, 267

Demonstrative evidence.

Exhibition of person to jury ..... 1917B, 1143 (Annotated)

Parol and extrinsic evidence concerning writings.

Prior and collateral parol agreements ..... 1917B, 258 (Annotated), 267 (Annotated)

Subsequent changes ..... 1917B, 141

Relevancy and materiality.

Character; reputation ..... 1917B, 1132

Condition at other times in action for injury on walk .....1917B, 1145
 Weight, effect, and sufficiency.

Review of facts on appeal, see Appeal and Error.

Sufficiency of evidence to go to jury, see Trial.

Insufficiency as ground for new trial .....1917B, 316

Variance case

In negligence case .....1917B, 1091

EXECUTION.

Sale under, see Sale.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Debts and obligations of estate.

Right of woman deceived into illegal marriage to recover from estate of supposed husband value of her services

1917B, 681 (Annotated)

Presentation of claim; condition precedent .....1917B, 676

Distribution; accounting; settlement.

Right to credit for judgment rendered against administratrix and paid by her .....1917B, 1043

EXEMPTIONS.

From taxation, see Taxes.

EXHIBIT.

With pleading .....1917B, 208, 558

EXHIBITION.

Of person to jury 1917B, 1143 (Annotated)

EXPLOSIONS AND EXPLOSIVES.

Proximate cause of injury by ..1917B, 1058

Injury by discharge of fireworks, municipal liability .....1917B, 1239

FACTORS.

Right of one purchasing property from factor as against owner .....1917B, 615

Question of whether contract was a sale passing title or a consignment contract .....1917B, 620 (Annotated)

FACTS.

Review of, on appeal, see Appeal and Error.

FAITH AND CREDIT.

To be given judgment of other state, see Judgment.

FALLING OBJECTS.

Killing of child in street by fall of pole used by fire department .....1917B, 548

FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

Who liable.

Liability of attorney for defendant attempting to take deposition of plaintiff for false imprisonment in requesting punishment for contempt of plaintiff for refusing to answer question .....1917B, 360

Judicial officer .....1917B, 360
 L.R.A.1917B.

FARM UTENSILS.

What covered by insurance on "farm utensils" .....1917B, 934 (Annotated)

FAULTY CONSTRUCTION.

Landlord's liability for injury to tenant's goods by leaking roof due to .....1917B, 235 (Annotated)

FEDERAL COURTS.

See Courts.

FEE SIMPLE.

Creation of, by will, see Wills.

FIDELITY INSURANCE.

See Bonds.

FINALITY OF DECISION.

For purpose of appeal .....1917B, 1296

FINDINGS.

Review of, on appeal, see Appeal and Error.

By court, generally, see Trial.

FINES.

Sufficiency of title of statute providing for disposal of .....1917B, 176

Implied repeal of statute as to disposition of .....1917B, 176

Duty of state's attorney to prosecute action for collection of .....1917B, 176

Lien of prosecuting attorney on, for compensation .....1917B, 176

Who entitled to interest accumulating upon .....1917B, 176

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

Municipal liability for negligence of .....1917B, 548

Killing of child in street by fall of pole used by fire department .....1917B, 548

FIREWORKS.

Municipal liability for injury by .....1917B, 1239

FOOD.

Interstate commerce in .....1917B, 1272

Sufficiency of title of pure food law .....1917B, 198, 808 (Annotated)

Partial invalidity of pure food statute .....1917B, 808

Fixing standard for ice cream .....1917B, 198 (Annotated)

Liability for sale of unfit food .....1917B, 1272

FORECLOSURE.

Of mortgage, see Mortgage.

FOREIGN CORPORATION.

See Corporations.

FOREIGN JUDGMENT.

See Judgment.

FORFEITURE.

Of insurance policy, see Insurance

Of oil or gas lease, see Mines.

FORMER JEOPARDY.

See Criminal Law.

FRANCHISES.Valuation of, for purpose of fixing rates 1917B, 930FRAUD AND DECEIT.

Statute of frauds, see Contracts.

Measure of damages for, see Damages.

Effect of, on running of limitations
1917B, 1253 (Annotated)Failure to call attention of purchaser of goods to provisions in contract retaining title .....1917B, 651Right of one defrauded into taking lease to recoup his damages in an action for rent though action to recover for the fraud is barred .....1917B, 760As ground for relief against judgment 1917B, 405 (Annotated)FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.

See Contracts.

FREEDOM OF SPEECH AND OF THE PRESS.

See Constitutional Law.

FREEMASONS.Exemption of property of, from taxation 1917B, 710FREIGHT CARRIERS.

See Carriers.

FRIGHT.

Of horse .....1917B, 699

FULL FAITH AND CREDIT.

See Judgment.

GARBAGE INCINERATOR.Injury to property and health by operation of .....1917B, 329GARNISHMENT.

Against whom.

Of county .....1917B, 1269

Effect; rights, duties and liabilities of garnishee.Effect of garnishment of savings bank deposit to bind dividends subsequently declared .....1917B, 938 (Annotated)Effect of judgment of dismissal; possibility of appeal .....1917B, 588 (Annotated)Liability for interest of garnishee withholding funds in good faith .....1917B, 938GAS.

As to gas in mine generally, see Mines.

Valuation of property and franchises for purpose of fixing rates .....1917B, 930Explosion of; running of limitations against actions for .....1917B, 1253GOING VALUE.As element to be considered in fixing value of property of public service corporation
1917B, 930

L.R.A.1917B.

GOVERNMENTAL FUNCTIONS.Of municipality, see Municipal Corporations.GRAND JURY.Construction of statute making prosecutors incompetent to serve on .....1917B, 608Quashing of indictment for matters as to 1917B, 608GUARANTY.

Of fidelity of employees, see Bonds.

Indorsement of note in form of guaranty
1917B, 364GUARANTY INSURANCE.Guaranty of fidelity of employees, see Bonds.GUARDIAN AND WARD.Guardian for insane person, see Incompetent Persons.HARMLESS ERROR.

See Appeal and Error.

HAY.Insurance on hay in stacks as covering hay in barn .....1917B, 934HEALTH.

Health insurance, see Insurance.

Of insured, warranties or representations as to .....1917B, 744 (Annotated)HERNIA.As breach of condition or warranty in insurance policy as to health
1917B, 744 (Annotated)HIGHWAYS.Defects; liability for injuries to travelers.

Liability of municipality.

For acts or omissions of others 1917B, 548

Liability of others.

Presumption as to responsibility for ice on walk .....1917B, 1245Evidence in action for injury ..1917B, 1245 Railroad companies .....1917B, 1245HOLIDAY.

See Sunday.

HOMESTEAD.Lien of creditors on homestead purchased with proceeds of insurance on debtor's property which he had promised to pay to creditors .....1917B, 130HOMICIDE.Of insured; effect on right to recover 1917B, 1210HORSE.

Fright of .....1917B, 699

HOSPITALS.Exemption of, from taxation
1917B, 779 (Annotated)

Liability for negligence .....1917B, 708

HOUSE OF ILL-FAME.

See Disorderly Houses.

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

As to divorce or separation, see Divorce and Separation.

Domicil of wife, see Domicil.

Liabilities of husband.For necessities furnished reputed wife 1917B, 1288 (Annotated)Property rights.Effect of annulment of illegal marriage to destroy rights of wife in insurance previously taken on life of husband
1917B, 375Validity of devise to person designated as wife where marriage was illegal 1917B, 1150 (Annotated)Actions.

By husband for injuries to wife or loss of her services ..... 1917B, 708

For alienating wife's affections
1917B, 679 (Annotated)

Liability in damages of husband wrongfully causing the death of his wife 1917B, 774

Joinder of husband in action by wife for damage to cotton grown by him on homestead standing in name of wife 1917B, 350ICE.On sidewalk, injury resulting from 1917B, 1245ICE CREAM.Statute fixing standard for 1917B, 198 (Annotated)ILLEGITIMATES.

As to bastardy, see Bastardy.

ILL-FAME.

House of, see Disorderly Houses.

ILLICIT COHABITATION.Right of woman deceived into void marriage to recover for household services 1917B, 681 (Annotated)IMPAIRMENT OF OBLIGATIONS.

See Constitutional Law.

IMPLIED AGREEMENTS.

See Contracts.

IMPLIED POWERS.

Of corporation, see Corporations.

IMPLIED WARRANTY.

See Sale.

IMPRISONMENT.

For crime generally, see Criminal Law.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.Right of municipality to provide for imprisonment of one who refuses to pay for use of vehicle which he has hired
1917B, 551

L.R.A.1917B.

IMPROVEMENTS.Rescission of land contract for vendor's breach of agreement to make 1917B, 401 (Annotated)INADEQUACY.

Setting aside sale on foreclosure for inadequacy of price ..... 1917B, 513

INCOMPETENT PERSONS.

As to infants, see Infants.

Power of committee to employ attendant to care for invalid wife of incompetent
1917B, 676 (Annotated)INCONTESTABILITY.Of insurance policy
1917B, 103 (Annotated), 208INDEFINITENESS.

Of statute ..... 1917B, 1276

INDETERMINATE SENTENCE.

Imposing punishment under law in force when crime committed but repealed before trial ..... 1917B, 738

INDEX.Enjoining public officer from removing, at expiration of term, index to public records prepared by him at his own expense 1917B, 1179 (Annotated)INDICTMENT, INFORMATION, AND COMPLAINT.

Matters as to grand jury, see Grand Jury. Duplicity in plea to indictment 1917B, 608

Sufficiency of allegations.

Negation of defenses ..... 1917B, 1230

Duplicity ..... 1917B, 1230

For violation of liquor laws ... 1917B, 1230

Quashing.

That a talesman called to act on the grand jury was acting as stenographer in the case, and that his name is not on the jury list, as ground for quashing ... 1917B, 608

Consideration by grand jury of incompetent evidence ..... 1917B, 608

INDORSEMENT.

Of bill or note, see Bills and Notes.

INFANTS.

Custody in case of divorce, see Divorce and Separation.

Proximate cause of injury to ... 1917B, 1058

Support of, and care for.

Liability of father for services of physician to minor child earning her own living away from home 1917B, 690 (Annotated)

Contracts.

Disaffirmance of 1917B, 1172 (Annotated)

INFORMATION.

For criminal offense, see Indictment, etc.

INITIATIVE, REFERENDUM, AND RECALL.

When statutes subject of referendum may be put into effect ..... 1917B, 1

Sufficiency of legal machinery for submission of constitutional amendment initiated by the electors

1917B, 7 (Annotated)

Right of voters who fail to file referendum petition for submission of proposed statute to electors to attack validity of emergency clause in statute

1917B, 1

Power of legislature to repeal law enacted upon the people's initiative

1917B, 1 (Annotated)

INJUNCTION.

Pleading in

1917B, 267

Contract rights.

Effect of delay in seeking injunction

1917B, 267

Effect on right to injunction to protect contract rights of invalidity of supplemental contract

1917B, 267

Water rights.

Enjoining cutting off of water supply of municipality

1917B, 908

INSANITY.

See Incompetent Persons.

INSOLVENCY.

Promise by insolvent to pay creditor out of proceeds of insurance as creating lien on such proceeds

1917B, 130

INSTRUCTIONS.

In general, see Trial.

INSURABLE INTEREST.

See Insurance.

INSURANCE.

Officer and agents.

Powers of soliciting agent

1917B, 934

When injury to agent is within protection of Workmen's Compensation Act

1917B, 249

Insurable interest; who may be beneficiary.

Effect of annulment of illegal marriage to destroy insurable interest of wife

1917B, 375

Insurable interest of woman living with man as his wife pursuant to formal but illegal marriage

1917B, 375

Validity of policy.

Validity of insurance on furniture used in house of ill-fame

1917B, 253 (Annotated)

Construction of policy.

Property covered

1917B, 253, 934 (Annotated)

Construing policy as indivisible contract of insurance for life and not as contract for single year with privilege of renewal

1917B, 208

Provision for pro rata liability of insurer in case additional insurance is taken; effect of other provision making insurer liable for specified amount

1917B, 319

Warranties; representations; conditions.

Health

1917B, 744 (Annotated)

Incontestability

1917B, 103 (Annotated), 208

L.R.A.1917B.

Forfeiture.

Waiver of, see infra.

For nonpayment of premiums or assessments

1917B, 103, 208 (Annotated)

Transfer of policy or of interest therein.

Rights of assignee where original beneficiary has murdered the insured

1917B, 1210

Jurisdiction to reform assignment of policy as against nonresident distributees of deceased assignee

1917B, 385 (Annotated)

Waiver; estoppel.

By receipt, demand, or acceptance of premium or assessment

1917B, 897

Risk and causes of loss, injury or death.

Murder of insured

1917B, 1210

Extent of injury or loss; of recovery.

Furniture sold conditionally and put in use by vendee as household furniture within meaning of valued policy law, and not as part of seller's stock in trade.

1917B, 253

What constitutes being confined to house or hospital within meaning of health policy

1917B, 744

Total disability

1917B, 107 (Annotated)

Interest in proceeds.

Policy on lives of husband and wife payable to survivor as a several policy on the life of each; interest in proceeds not a joint tenancy

1917B, 1210

Who takes proceeds where designated beneficiary is barred

1917B, 670 (Annotated), 1210

Heirs

1917B, 670

Defenses; release.

Effect of murder of insured by beneficiary to absolve insurer from liability to others

1917B, 670 (Annotated)

Apportionment or contribution.

Provision for apportionment in accident policy if other insurance is carried; validity; construction

1917B, 319 (Annotated)

Actions; enforcing payment.

Pleading; exhibits

1917B, 208

Guaranty policies.

Bonds for fidelity of employees, see Bonds.

INSURRECTION.

See Riot.

INTENT.

Of testator, see Wills.

Question for jury as to

1917B, 1291

INTEREST.

Who entitled to interest accumulating upon fines in hands of county clerk

1917B, 176

Effect of garnishment of bank deposit to bind interest subsequently accruing

1917B, 938 (Annotated)

Construction of statute making one wrongfully withholding money liable for interest thereon

1917B, 938

INTERPLEADER.

Determining right of county to return of money paid state's attorney as salary in interpleader by county clerk to determine right to moneys in his hands claimed by such attorney as fees

1917B, 176

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

See Commerce.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

Interstate commerce in

1917B, 216, 1218 (Annotated),
1230 (Annotated)Recovery of purchase price of liquors sold for resale where resale will incidentally encourage house of ill-fame

1917B, 1166 (Annotated)

Prohibition and regulation.Validity of constitutional amendment restricting power of legislature to enact liquor laws .....1917B, 5

Strict construction of statute ..1917B, 962

Right to prohibit sale of nonintoxicating liquors when necessary to aid prohibition of sale of intoxicating liquors 1917B, 962

Validity and effect of Webb-Kenyon Act

1917B, 1218 (Annotated)
1230 (Annotated)Power to forbid shipment of intoxicating liquor for personal use ....1917B, 1218Unlawful sales; offenses and proceedings.

Receipt of verdict in absence of accused

1917B, 344 (Annotated)

Sufficiency of indictment ....1917B, 1230

Defense that one bringing liquor into the state in violation of law intended it for personal use .....1917B, 1230Agreement to make brandy for other party from apples furnished by him as a sale
1917B, 605 (Annotated)

Of what liquors 1917B, 962 (Annotated)

ISSUES.

Error in submission of .....1917B, 684

JEOPARDY.

See Criminal Law.

JOINT ESTATE.

Creation of, by will

1917B, 45 (Annotated)

JUDGES.*Disqualification; eligibility.

Eligibility of suspended attorney

1917B, 801 (Annotated)

Liability.Of judges of courts of inferior and limited jurisdiction .....1917B, 360

For false imprisonment .....1917B, 360

JUDGMENT.Sentence in criminal cases, see Criminal Law.Sufficiency of service of process, see Writ and Process.In general.

Finality for purpose of appeal

1917B, 1296

Judgment on pleadings .....1917B, 364

By default .....1917B, 1296

Modification.As to custody and support of children after divorce .....1917B, 287 (Annotated)Validity.Effect on, of defects in pleading
1917B, 1296

L.R.A.1917B.

Conclusiveness generally.Former conviction or acquittal as bar to criminal prosecution, see Criminal Law.

Judgment of dismissal in garnishment

1917B, 588

Collateral attack.

For lack of jurisdiction .....1917B, 395

What matters concluded.Foreign judgment, see infra.Judgment in favor of injured employee for damages against employer as bar to action to recover on contract of employer to pay half wages during disability in consideration of monthly deduction from pay 1917B, 1158 (Annotated)Foreign judgments.Conclusiveness of divorce decree rendered in other state ..1917B, 1028 (Annotated)Discharge.Right of administratrix discharging judgment rendered against her, to credit therefor .....1917B, 1043Relief against.

Review of discretion as to ....1917B, 984

Judgment by default .....1917B, 984

For fraud .....1917B, 405 (Annotated)

JUDICIAL SALE.

Foreclosure of mortgage, see Mortgage.

Sale under void process .....1917B, 395

JURISDICTION.

In general, see Courts.

On appeal, see Appeal and Error.

Of divorce suit, see Divorce and Separation.

Jurisdictional defects in foreign divorce decree .....1917B, 1028Collateral attack on judgment for lack of 1917B, 395JURISDICTIONAL AMOUNT.

On appeal .....1917B, 723

In state court generally .....1917B, 924

JURY.

As to grand jury, see Grand Jury.

New trial for matters pertaining to, see
New Trial.

Question for, see Trial.

Right to jury in bastardy proceeding to ascertain amount of incidental expenses attending birth of child ...1917B, 1143LABOR.

On Sunday, see Sunday.

LACHES.

To bar action, see Limitation of Actions.

LAKES.Division of water front and bed between riparian owners 1917B, 783 (Annotated)LAND CONTRACT.

See Vendor and Purchaser.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.*Lease.

For oil or gas, see Mines.

Parol evidence of subsequent oral agreement .....1917B, 141

Damages for fraud in inducing one to take lease at certain rental .....1917B, 760
 Part performance to take contract out of Statute of Frauds .....1917B, 141 Liability of landlord for defective or dangerous premises.
 Proceeding against landlord as bar to action against agent .....1917B, 222
 Injury to tenant's property by water
     1917B, 222 (Annotated)
     235 (Annotated), 238 (Annotated)

Rent.

Amendment of answer setting up counter-claim in action for rent ..1917B, 760
 Right of one fraudulently induced to take lease at a higher rent than he offered to recoup the resulting damages in action against him for rent .....1917B, 760

LEASE.

In general, see Landlord and Tenant.
 Oil and gas lease, see Mines.

LEGACY.

In general, see Wills.

LEGISLATURE.

Power as to exemptions from taxation, see Taxes.
 Power of legislature to repeal law enacted upon the people's initiative
     1917B, 1 (Annotated)
 Authority from, to maintain nuisance
     1917B, 329

LETTERS.

Admissibility in evidence .....1917B, 267

LEVY AND SEIZURE.

Sale under, see Judicial Sale.

LIBERAL CONSTRUCTION.

Of statute, see Statutes.

LIBERTY.

Guaranty of right to, see Constitutional Law.
 Of speech, press, or worship, see Constitutional Law.

LICENSE.

Negligence as to licensees, see Railroads.
 From public.

License law as affecting interstate commerce, see Commerce.

Equal protection and privileges as to, see Constitutional Law.

Due process of law as to, see Constitutional Law.

Duty of state's attorney to prosecute actions arising under license statute
     1917B, 176

On vehicles .....1917B, 553

Graduating license tax on automobiles according to horse power of machine
     1917B, 553

LIENS.

Of mortgage, see Mortgage.

Of attorney .....1917B, 1123

Of prosecuting attorney for compensation on fines collected by him .....1917B, 176
 L.R.A.1917B.

Of creditors on proceeds of insurance on debtor's property; where proceeds invested in homestead .....1917B, 130

LIFE ESTATE.

Creation of, by deed, see Deeds.

Creation of, by will, see Wills.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Right of one defrauded into taking lease to recoup his damages in an action for rent though action to recover for the fraud is barred .....1917B, 760
 Equitable remedy; laches.

Delay in seeking injunction to restrain breach of contract .....1917B, 267
 When statute runs.

Effect of fraud or concealment
     1917B, 1253 (Annotated)

When action is barred.

Action for personal injury ...1917B, 1253

LIMITATION OF LIABILITY.

For loss of baggage .....1917B, 787

LIVE STOCK.

Transportation of, see Carriers.

LOAN.

Power of corporation to make .1917B, 814

LUNATICS.

See Incompetent Persons.

MAINTENANCE.

See Champerty and Maintenance.

MALICE.

In action or prosecution, civil liability for, see Malicious Prosecution.

Necessity of alleging and proving in action for wrongful attachment ....1917B, 350

MALICIOUS ARREST.

Liability for, see False Imprisonment.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

As to false imprisonment, see False Imprisonment.

Allegations as to .....1917B, 350

Bringing civil action in foreign jurisdiction though both parties are residents of the same state .....1917B, 749 (Annotated)

MALT LIQUOR.

What included within prohibition of sale of .....1917B, 962

MANUFACTURERS.

Liability for injury due to defects in articles manufactured .....1917B, 1272

MAPS AND PLATS.

Right of public to, when prepared by officer from public records out of office hours but upon paper taken from discarded public books .....1917B, 1176 (Annotated)

MARRIAGE.

Divorce or separation, see Divorce and Separation.

Validity of devise to person designated as wife where marriage was illegal
1917B, 1150 (Annotated)

MASONS.

See Freemasons.

MASTER AND SERVANT.

Bonds for fidelity of employees, see Bonds.
Equal protection and privileges as to employees, see Constitutional Law.
Restricting right of contract with, see Constitutional Law.

As to employment agencies, see Employment Agency.

Compelling employer to disclose to employee communications as to qualifications of one seeking employment . . . 1917B, 1108
Forbidding employer to refuse to employ one who has participated in strike
1917B, 1108

Power of railroad corporation to contract to pay employees half wages during disability resulting from service 1917B, 1158

Right of public to maps and plats prepared by officer from public record out of office hours but upon paper taken from discarded public books
1917B, 1176 (Annotated)

When relation exists.

For purpose of holding master liable for servant's acts . . . 1917B, 699

Termination of relation; discharge.

Statute limiting right to discharge
1917B, 1119 (Annotated)

Compelling employer to disclose to employee communications made by or to him as to qualifications of discharged employee
1917B, 1108

Requiring employer to give employee true statement of cause of discharge
1917B, 1108 (Annotated)

Grounds for discharge . . . 1917B, 1108

Liability for wrongful discharge
1917B, 1108

Liability of master to servant generally.

As to workmen's compensation, see Workmen's Compensation.

Judgment in favor of injured employee for damages against employer as bar to action to recover on contract of employer to pay half wages during disability in consideration of monthly deduction from pay
1917B, 1158 (Annotated)

Directing verdict in action by employee to recover half wages during disability from accident, in accordance with alleged contract . . . 1917B, 1158

Liability of master for act of servant or independent contractor.

When relation exists, see supra.

Injury to one near railroad right of way by wood thrown from engine by fireman
1917B, 915 (Annotated)

MATURITY.

Of note, see Bills and Notes.

MEAT.

Liability for sale of unfit meat 1917B, 1272
L.R.A. 1917B.

MILITIA.

Personal liability of militia officers for destruction of property . . . 1917B, 702
Liability of subordinate officers acting in obedience to orders of superior 1917B, 702

MINES.

Operation of, as nuisance

1917B, 310 (Annotated)

When injury to workmen in, is within protection of Workmen's Compensation Act
1917B, 372

Oil and gas leases.

Time as essence of the contract

1917B, 1184

Validity: mutuality

1917B, 1184 (Annotated)

Conditions as to developing . . 1917B, 1184

Forfeiture . . . 1917B, 1184

MINORS.

See Infants.

MODIFICATION.

Of contract, see Contracts.

MONOPOLY AND COMBINATIONS.

Sufficiency of allegations to raise defense that contract violates anti-trust law

1917B, 803

Contract by wholesaler to furnish goods to retailer who is to sell only the goods furnished at agreed prices and within a specified territory . . . 1917B, 803

MORTGAGE.

Enforcement.

Sale after service on sheriff of purported affidavit of illegality . . . 1917B, 513

Quantity of land to be sold

1917B, 513 (Annotated)

Setting aside sale for inadequacy of price
1917B, 513

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

As to municipal bonds, see Bonds.

License from, see License.

Powers and duties generally.

Power of corporation created for governmental and business purposes to use public funds to secure nullification of statute . . . 1917B, 354 (Annotated)

Ordinances.

In general.

Collection within city of articles to be laundered outside the city as violation of ordinance regulating laundry business within the city . . . 1917B, 341

Validity; extent of power.

As to denying equal protection of the laws and abridging privileges and immunities, see Constitutional Law.

Right to provide for imprisonment of one who refuses to pay for use of vehicle which he has hired . . . 1917B, 551

Enforcement of.

Duty of state's attorney to enforce penalties for violation of ordinances
1917B, 176

Contracts generally.

Ultra vires contract . . . 1917B, 908

Water supply.

Injunction against cutting off water supply
1917B, 908

Validity of contract for water supply; right of other part of the contract to question
1917B, 908

Liability for damages.

Liability for defects or obstructions in street, see Highways.

Injury by collapse of bath house maintained for free use of public .....1917B, 1285

Negligence as to fireworks ...1917B, 1239

Liability for negligence of fire department
1917B, 548

As to taxes.

Power to remit taxes on public service corporation .....1917B, 908

MURDER.

See Homicide.

MUTILATION.

Of will, liability for
1917B, 556 (Annotated)

MUTUALITY.

Of contracts, see Contracts.

NAME.

Name under which partnership business may be transacted without filing certificate giving names of members of firm
1917B, 697

Of party in writ .....1917B, 395

NATIONAL BANKS.

See Banks.

NATURAL GAS.

In mine, see Mines.

NECESSARIES.

Parent's liability for, see Infants.

Husband's liability for
1917B, 1288 (Annotated)

Power of committee of incompetent to procure necessary assistance for invalid wife
1917B, 676 (Annotated)

NECESSITY.

Works of, on Sunday, see Sunday.

NEGATION.

Of defenses in indictment ....1917B, 1230

NEGLIGENCE.

As to bridges, see Bridges.

Measure of damages for negligence causing personal injury or death, see Damages.

As to electricity, see Electricity.

Liability of hospital for, see Hospitals.

Liability of landlord, see Landlord and Tenant.

Of master or servant, see Master and Servant.

Of municipal corporations, see Municipal Corporations.

Proximate cause of injury by, see Proximate Cause.

L.R.A.1917B.

Sufficiency of evidence to go to jury in action for .....1917B, 1245

Question for jury as to .....1917B, 222

Bar of Statute of Limitations ..1917B, 1253

Basing action for alienation of affections upon negligence 1917B, 679 (Annotated)

Dangerous agencies.

Liability of seller or manufacturer
1917B, 1272

On highways or waters.

In use of automobiles, see Automobiles.

Contributory negligence.

Of person injured by automobile, see Automobiles.

Duty of one repairing automobile tire in roadway to watch out for passing vehicles
1917B, 316 (Annotated)

Of tenant whose property is injured by bursting water pipes .....1917B, 238

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS.

See Bills and Notes.

NEGROES.

Equal rights of, see Civil Rights.

Requiring carrier to equip trains with separate accommodations for white and colored passengers .....1917B, 544

NEW TRIAL.*Right to.

Loss of case made in mails....1917B, 1073

Right to where no issue of fact has been raised by the pleadings or determined by the verdict .....1917B, 1296

Attack in presence of jurymen upon credibility of witness as ground for
1917B, 246 (Annotated)

Insufficiency of evidence to sustain verdict
1917B, 316

Bias of juror .....1917B, 246

NOMINATION.

To officer, see Elections.

NONINTOXICATING LIQUORS.

Right to prohibit sale of ....1917B, 962

As within statute prohibiting sale of liquor
1917B, 962 (Annotated)

NONRESIDENTS.

Jurisdiction over generally, see Courts.

Jurisdiction of divorce suit by or against,
see Divorce and Separation.

Service on, by publication
1917B, 385 (Annotated)

NOTES.

In general, see Bills and Notes.

NOTICE.

Sufficiency of, to confer jurisdiction, see
Writ and Process.

Of primary election contest ....1917B, 723

Of nuisance, as condition of liability
1917B, 1245

NUISANCES.*What are.

Operation of coal mine as
1917B, 810 (Annotated)

Remedies.

- Special injury in general
1917B, 310 (Annotated)
- Presumption from failure to call witness in action to enjoin alleged nuisance
1917B, 310
- Liability of one responsible for nuisance but who had no notice thereof . . . 1917B, 1245
- Legislative authority as defense 1917B, 329

OBJECTIONS.

- To raise question on appeal, see Appeal and Error.

OFFICERS.

- Of banks, see Banks.
- Bond of, see Bonds.
- Of corporation, see Corporations.
- Nominations for office, see Elections.
- As to election contest, see Elections.
- Of insurance company, see Insurance.
- Judges, see Judges.
- Validity of contract of
1917B, 176 (Annotated),
191 (Annotated)
- Rights and powers generally.
- Rights of, to maps and plats prepared from public record out of office hours
1917B, 1176 (Annotated)
- Enjoining public officer from removing at expiration of term, index to public records prepared by him at his own expense . . . . . 1917B, 1179 (Annotated)

Compensation.

- Validity of contract as to
1917B, 176 (Annotated),
191 (Annotated)
- Sufficiency of title of statute depriving an officer of fees and increasing his salary
1917B, 176

Liabilities.

- Liability of judges, see Judges.
- Personal liability of members of board of county commissioners for defects in bridge . . . . . 1917B, 369

OIL.

- As to mines generally, see Mines.

ORAL CONTRACTS.

- In general, see Contracts.

ORAL EVIDENCE.

- See Evidence.

ORDINANCES.

- See Municipal Corporations.

ORIGINAL JURISDICTION.

- Of appellate court . . . . . 1917B, 710

ORIGINAL PACKAGES.

- Interstate commerce in 1917B, 1218, 1272

PARDON.

- See Criminal Law.

PARENT AND CHILD.

- Matters as to infants generally, see Infants.
- L.R.A. 1917B.

PARKS AND SQUARES.

- Duty of state's attorney to enforce penalties for violation of ordinances passed by park commissioners . . . . . 1917B, 176
- Disposal of fines and penalties for violation of park ordinances; title of statute as to 1917B, 176

PAROL CONTRACT.

- See Contracts.

PAROL EVIDENCE.

- As to writing, see Evidence.

PARTIES.

- On appeal, see Appeal and Error.
- Description of parties in writ . . . 1917B, 395
- Persons who may or must sue.
- Action by husband or wife, see Husband and Wife.
- Who may have remedy against nuisance,
see Nuisances.
- Who may question validity of statute
1917B, 1, 191
- Limiting persons authorized to institute proceedings for suppression of bawdyhouse to citizens of the county
1917B, 1075
- Joinder of parties plaintiff.
- Joinder of husband in action by wife for damage to cotton grown by him on homestead standing in name of wife
1917B, 350

PARTNERSHIP.

- Partnership liability of stockholders of foreign corporation which has not complied with laws as to doing business in the state . . . . . 1917B, 572 (Annotated)
- Name under which partnership business may be transacted without filing certificate giving names of members of firm
1917B, 697
- Accounting; who entitled to resist allowance of claims and appeal from decision
1917B, 1043 (Annotated)

PART PERFORMANCE.

- Under Statute of Frauds, see Contracts.
- Of contract generally, see Contracts.

PARTY WALL.

- Utilization of wall by tenant as affecting landlord's duty to contribute to cost thereof . . . . . 1917B, 949 (Annotated)

PASSENGER CARRIERS.

- See Carriers.

PATENTS.

- Exclusiveness of Federal jurisdiction of action involving patent . . . . . 1917B, 1179

PATERNITY.

- Exhibition of child to jury for purpose of determining . . . 1917B, 1143 (Annotated)

PAYMENT.

- By check on bank in which maker has no funds . . . . . 1917B, 1184

PENAL STATUTE.

Construction of .....1917B, 962

PENALTY.

For carrier's failure to equip train with separate accommodations for white and colored passengers

1917B, 544 (Annotated)

Imposition of penalty on carrier for failure promptly to settle a claim for injury to property during transportation

1917B, 924 (Annotated)

Construction of statute as to ...1917B, 962

Implied repeal of statute as to disposition of .....1917B, 176

Duty of state's attorney to enforce

1917B, 176

Who entitled to interest accumulating upon

1917B, 176

PENSIONS.

To policemen, see Police.

PERFORMANCE.

Of contract generally, see Contracts.

Part performance of oral contract, see Contracts.

PERJURY.

Acquittal of one charged with crime as bar to prosecution for perjury during trial

1917B, 738 (Annotated)

PERSONAL INJURIES.

To unborn child, see After-born Children.

On bridge, see Bridges.

Measure of damages for, see Damages.

To servant, see Master and Servant.

Proximate cause of, see Proximate Cause.

On railroad, see Railroads.

In general, see Negligence.

Sufficiency of evidence to go to jury in action for .....1917B, 1245

When right of action for, is barred

1917B, 1253

To married woman, husband's right of action .....1917B, 708

PERSONAL PROPERTY.

Sale of, see Sale.

PETITION.

Of plaintiff, see Pleading.

PETROLEUM.

In mines, see Mines.

PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.

Parent's liability for services of physician to child .....1917B, 690 (Annotated)

PIPES.

Landlord's liability for injury to tenant's property by leaking or bursting of pipes

1917B, 222, 238

PLATS.

See Maps and Plats.

PLEADING.

Variance between pleading and proof, see Evidence.

L.R.A.1917B.

In criminal prosecution, see Indictment, etc.

In general.

Conclusions .....1917B, 513

Exhibits .....1917B, 208, 558

Judgment on pleadings .....1917B, 364

Amendments .....1917B, 760

Duplicity .....1917B, 608

Declaration or complaint.

Complaint to enforce contract on behalf of undisclosed principal .....1917B, 564

In action for wrongful attachment

1917B, 350

In equity, for breach of agreement

1917B, 267

In injunction suit .....1917B, 267

Effect of defects in, on validity of judgment

1917B, 1296

Pleas and answers.

Amendment of answer .....1917B, 760

Denials .....1917B, 1061

Necessity of pleading Statute of Frauds

1917B, 1061

Sufficiency to raise defense that contract violates anti-trust law .....1917B, 803

Demurrer.

Ground for dismissal of appeal from judgment sustaining demurrer ...1917B, 329

Construing allegations of petition challenged by general demurrer in connection with exhibits .....1917B, 208, 558

POLICE.

Liability on policeman's bond..1917B, 139

Statute setting apart fines and penalties for police pension fund as repealing former act making other disposition of such moneys .....1917B, 176

POLICE POWER.

In general, see Constitutional Law.

POSTHUMOUS CHILD.

See After-born Children.

PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE.

Equal protection and privileges as to, see Constitutional Law.

In contempt proceedings, see Contempt.

Practice in disbarment of attorney

1917B, 1132

PREJUDICIAL ERROR.

See Appeal and Error.

PREMATURITY.

Of action, see Action or Suit.

PREMIUM.

For insurance, see Insurance.

PRESENCE.

Of accused, necessity of

1917B, 344 (Annotated)

PRESUMPTIONS.

In general, see Evidence.

PRICE.

Setting aside sale on foreclosure for inadequacy of price .....1917B, 513

PRIMARY ELECTIONS.

See Elections.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

Agent of bank, see Banks.

As to brokers, see Brokers.

As to factor, see Factors.

Agent of insurance company, see Insurance.

Election to proceed against principal as bar to action against agent.....1917B, 222

Complaint to enforce contract on behalf of undisclosed principal .....1917B, 564

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

As to bonds generally, see Bonds.

PRIVATE ACTION.

For abatement of nuisance, see Nuisances.

PRIVILEGE.

Of exemption from service of process

1917B, 250 (Annotated)

888 (Annotated)

PRIVILEGE TAX.

See License.

PROBABLE CAUSE.

Necessity of alleging and proving in action for wrongful attachment....1917B, 350

PROCEDURE.

See Practice and Procedure.

PROMISSORY NOTES.

See Bills and Notes.

PROPERTY.

Guaranty of right to, see Constitutional Law.

Condemnation of, see Eminent Domain.

PRORATING.

Of insurance loss, see Insurance.

PROSECUTOR.

See District and Prosecuting Attorneys.

PROVABLE CLAIMS.

In bankruptcy, see Bankruptcy.

PROXIMATE CAUSE.

Of injury to child by explosives 1917B, 1058

Of injury to passenger carried past station 1917B, 706PUBLIC.

Free service to, by public service corporation as discrimination as against other consumers .....1917B, 908

PUBLICATION.

Service of process by

1917B, 385 (Annotated)

PUBLIC CONTRACTS.

As to municipal contracts generally, see

Municipal Corporations.

L.R.A.1917B.

PUBLIC MONEYS.Power of corporation created for governmental and business purposes to use public funds to secure nullification of statute 1917B, 354 (Annotated)PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION.

Certiorari to review order of Commission fixing rates for public service corporation

1917B, 930

PUBLIC SERVICE CORPORATIONS.

See also Carriers; Gas; Railroads; Waters.

Power of municipality to remit taxes on

1917B, 908

Certiorari to review order of Commission fixing rates for public service corporation

1917B, 930

Retrospective operation of statute forbidding rebates or discrimination 1917B, 908

Free service to public as discrimination against other consumers .....1917B, 908

Valuations of property and franchises for purpose of fixing rates .....1917B, 930

PUBLIC UTILITIES.

See Public Service Corporations.

PUNISHMENT.

For crime, see Criminal Law.

PURE FOOD LAW.

See Food.

QUASHING.

Of indictment, see Indictment, etc.

RAILROADS.

Matters in common with other corporations, see Corporations.

Relation of railroad company to employee, see Master and Servant.

Liability for injury to one near right of way by object thrown from engine by fireman .....1917B, 915 (Annotated)

Injury to person near track in consequence of suction from passing train 1917B, 1161 (Annotated)RATES.

Of carriers, see Carriers.

For gas, see Gas.

For water, see Waters.

Certiorari to review order of Commission fixing rates for public service corporation
1917B, 930

Valuation of property and franchises of public service corporation for purpose of fixing rates .....1917B, 930

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.

See Brokers.

REAL PROPERTY.

Oral contract as to, see Contracts.

Deeds of, see Deeds.

Estates or interest created by deed, see Deeds.

Mortgage on, see Mortgage.

Rights, duties and liabilities on transfer of, see Vendor and Purchaser.
Devise of, see Wills.

REBATES.

Retrospective operation of statute forbidding .....1917B, 908

RECITALS.

In bonds, estoppel by .....1917B, 1019

RECORDS AND RECORDING LAWS.

Record on appeal, see Appeal and Error.

REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS.

Jurisdiction to reform assignment of insurance policy as against nonresident distributees of the deceased assignee
1917B, 385 (Annotated)

REIMBURSEMENT.

Of personal representative ....1917B, 1043

RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

Exemption of, from taxation, see Taxes.

REMAINDER.

Creation of, by will, see Wills.

REMEDIES.

In case of illegal contract, see Contracts.
Election of, see Election of Remedies.
For nuisance, see Nuisances.

REPEAL.

Of statutes, see Statutes.

REPRESENTATIONS.

By insured, see Insured.

REPRIMAND.

Of attorneys, see Attorneys.

REPUTATION.

Evidence of .....1917B, 1132

RESCISSION.

Of land contract, see Vendor and Purchaser.

Of declared dividend, see Corporations.

RESIDENCE.

For purposes of divorce suit, see Divorce and Separation.

RES JUDICATA.

Former jeopardy as a bar, see Criminal Law.

In general, see Judgment.

RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR.

See Master and Servant.

REVERSIBLE ERROR.

See Appeal and Error.

REVIEW.

Of judgment, see Judgment.

RIOTS.

Personal liability of militia officers called to suppress, for unnecessary destruction of property .....1917B, 702
L.R.A.1917B.

RIPARIAN RIGHTS.

See Waters.

RULES OF DECISION.

See Courts.

SALARY.

Of public officer, see Officers.

SALE.

Constitutionality of regulation of, see Constitutional Law.

Damages for breach of contract of, see Damages.

Unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors, see Intoxicating Liquors.

Judicial sale, see Judicial Sale.

On foreclosure, see Mortgage.

Of land generally, see Vendor and Purchaser.

Liability for injury by defects in things sold
1917B, 1272

Passing of title; delivery.

Question of whether contract was a sale passing title or a consignment contract
1917B, 620 (Annotated)

Conditional.

Policy covering interest of conditional vendor in household furniture as including property sold for cash after execution of the policy .....1917B, 253

Right of trustee in bankruptcy of purchaser, to stock of goods sold with reservation of title to be resold at retail ...1917B, 647

Question whether contract constituted conditional sale or bailment with power of sale .....1917B, 615

Failure to call attention of purchaser to retention of title, as fraud ....1917B, 651

Validity as against chattel mortgage of retention of title by wholesaler to goods sold for resale ...1917B, 651 (Annotated)

Warranty.

Implied warranty of one preparing meat for food that it is fit for that purpose
1917B, 1272

Measure of damages for breach of warranty
1917B, 1106

SANITY.

See Incompetent Persons.

SCALES.

As within insurance policy on "farm utensils" .....1917B, 934

SCENIC RAILWAY.

Presumption of negligence from injury to passenger .....1917B, 1091

SCHOOLS.

Exemption of, from taxation, see Taxes.
Statute setting apart fines and penalties for a police pension fund as repealing former act entitling superintendent of schools to moneys arising from that source .....1917B, 176

SEARCH AND SEIZURE.

Compelling employer to disclose to employee communications as to qualifications of discharged employee or one seeking employment .....1917B, 1108

- SELF-EXECUTING PROVISIONS.
Of Constitution .....1917B, 710
- SELF-INCRIMINATION.
See Criminal Law.
- SENTENCE.
For crime, see Criminal Law.
- SEPARATE COACH LAW.
Requiring carrier to equip trains with separate accommodations for white and colored passengers .....1917B, 544
- SEPARATION.
See Divorce and Separation.
- SERVICE.
Of process, see Writ and Process.
- SERVICES.
Implied contract to pay for ....1917B, 681
- SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.
Amendment of answer setting up counterclaim .....1917B, 760
Right of one fraudulently induced to take lease at a higher rent than he offered, to recoup the resulting damages in action against him for rent .....1917B, 760
- SETTLEMENT.
Of decedent's estate, see Executors and Administrators.
- SHADOWING.
Liability of detective employed by husband to shadow wife where he negligently shadows another woman ....1917B, 679
- SHAREHOLDERS.
See Corporations.
- SIGNATURE.
Typewritten signature to summons
1917B, 281. (Annotated)
- SITUS.
Of property for purpose of taxation, see Taxes.
- SOLICITATION.
Of business by attorney as ground for suspension .....1917B, 1132 (Annotated)
- SOLITARY CONFINEMENT.
As cruel and unusual punishment
1917B, 586
- SPEECH.
Freedom of, see Constitutional Law.
- STATE.
Bonds of, see Bonds.
Power of, to tax Federal agencies and instrumentalities, see Taxes.
- STATE'S ATTORNEY.
See District and Prosecuting Attorneys.
- STATE COURTS.
Jurisdiction of, see Courts.
L.R.A.1917B.
- STATE DEPOSITORY.
Bond by, see Bonds.
- STATE EMPLOYMENT AGENCY.
Duty of state's attorney to prosecute action for violation of statute forbidding acceptance of fees from applicants for employment .....1917B, 176
- STATE MILITIA.
See Militia.
- STATUTE OF FRAUDS.
See Contracts.
- STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.
See Limitation of Actions.
- STATUTES.
Power of corporation created for governmental and business purposes to use public funds to secure nullification of statute .....1917B, 354 (Annotated)
Who may complain of violation of
1917B, 310
Time of passage and taking effect.
Statutes which are the subject of referendum; effect of emergency clause 1917B, 1
Effect of institution of suit to determine validity of statute .....1917B, 1
Validity generally.
Who may question validity...1917B, 1, 191
Presumptions and burden of proof as to
1917B, 710
Ambiguity or uncertainty ....1917B, 1276
Invalid in part .....1917B, 808
Entitling; expression of subject.
Necessity of reference in title to appropriations to carry statute into effect
1917B, 808 (Annotated)
Sufficiency of title to cover provision for disposal of fines for violation of park ordinances .....1917B, 176
Statute depriving officer of fees and increasing his salary .....1917B, 176
Statute fixing standard for ice cream
1917B, 198
Amendments .....1917B, 198
Construction.
State court following Federal decisions in construing state statute .....1917B, 787
Considering history of legislation on the subject in construing statute 1917B, 787
Strict or liberal construction...1917B, 962
Prospective or retrospective operation
1917B, 908
Repeal; amendment; revision.
Title of amending statute, see supra.
Power of legislature to repeal law enacted upon the people's initiative
1917B, 1 (Annotated)
Reference to prior act .....1917B, 176
Imposing punishment for crime under law in force when crime committed but repealed before trial .....1917B, 738
Repeal of statute giving states attorney lien on fines collected by him by statute appropriating such fines to specific purposes .....1917B, 176

STEAM ROLLER.

Fright of horse by .....1917B, 699

STOCK.

Of corporation generally, see Corporations.

STOCKHOLDERS.

See Corporations.

STRICT CONSTRUCTION.

Of statute, see Statutes.

STRIKES.

Forbidding employer to refuse to employ one who has participated in strike
1917B, 1108

SUCTION.

Injury to person near track in consequence of suction from passing train
1917B, 1161 (Annotated)

SUFFRAGE.

Right of, see Elections.

SUNDAY.

Operation of barber shop on
1917B, 93 (Annotated)

SUPPORT.

Of infants generally, see Infants.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Jurisdiction on appeal .....1917B, 580

SURRENDER CLAUSE.

In oil and gas lease as rendering it unilateral .....1917B, 1184 (Annotated)

SUSPENSION.

Of attorneys, see Attorneys.

Of sentence .....1917B, 586

TAXES.

As to license generally, see License.

Matter peculiar to municipal taxation, see Municipal Corporations.

Constitutional inhibition against impairing contract obligations as limitation upon taxing power .....1917B, 294

Power of state to tax Federal agencies, instrumentalities or property.

National bank shares .....1917B, 294
Exemption.

Power of municipality to exempt 1917B, 908

Power of legislature to exempt state bonds
1917B, 294 (Annotated)

Power of legislature to contract with corporation for immunity from taxation
1917B, 294

Exemption from taxation as a contract which may not be impaired ..1917B, 294

Property devoted to educational, charitable or religious purposes
1917B, 710, 779

Where taxable; situs.

Sale notes .....1917B, 1282

Assessment.

Valuation of national bank shares
1917B, 294

I.L.R.A.1917B.

TENANTS.

See Landlord and Tenant.

TERRITORIAL LIMITATIONS.

As to jurisdiction, see Courts.

THREATS.

As duress .....1917B, 684

TIME.

Of taking effect of statutes, see Statutes.

Fraction of day .....1917B, 103

Computation of ..1917B, 103 (Annotated)

As essence of contract in oil and gas lease
1917B, 1184

For payment of note

1917B, 1048 (Annotated)

TITLE.

Of statute, see Statutes.

TORTS.

Right of action for, generally, see Case.

Master's liability for, see Master and Servant.

Municipal liability for, see Municipal Corporations.

Matters as to negligence generally, see Negligence.

Choice between action and tort or on contract .....1917B, 787

TOTAL DISABILITY.

Of insured .....1917B, 107 (Annotated)

TRADE.

Validity of agreement in restraint of, see Monopoly and Combination.

TRAFFIC OFFICERS.

Effect of signal of traffic officer to automobile to cross street intersection on latter's duty to exercise care

1917B, 133 (Annotated)

TRANSFER.

Of corporate stock, see Corporations.

Of insurance policy, see Insurance.

TRESPASSERS.

Injury to, on or near railroad track, see Railroads.

Liability for injury to, by electric wire

1917B, 1291

Liability of landlord for injury to tenants property by water resulting from act of trespassers in tearing out washstand on vacant portion of premises ..1917B, 222

TRIAL.

As to rights and protection of accused on, see Criminal Law.

Right to trial by jury, see Jury.

Place of, see Venue.

Statements and argument of counsel.

Discretion as to time allowed for argument
1917B, 738

Prejudicial error in .....1917B, 984

Observations and exceptions.

Consideration of, on appeal, see Appeal and Error.

Sufficiency of evidence to go to jury.
Negligence; personal injuries 1917B, 1245
Questions of law and fact.
Intent ..... 1917B, 1201
Landlord's negligence as to water pipes, resulting in injury to tenant's property
 1917B, 222

Taking case from jury.
Direction of verdict ..... 1917B, 1158, 1245
Instructions; in general.
Right to complain on appeal of advantageous instruction ..... 1917B, 350
Estoppel to complain of ..... 1917B, 350
Findings of court.
     Review of, on appeal, see Appeal and Error.
     Prejudicial error as to, see Appeal and Error.
Verdict or findings of jury.
     Direction of, see supra.
     Review of, on appeal, see Appeal and Error.
     New trial for errors in, see New Trial.
Prejudicial error as to ..... 1917B, 1245

TROVER.
Election between suit for conversion and action for breach of contract .. 1917B, 787
Measure of damages for conversion
 1917B, 787

TRUST DEEDS.
 See Mortgage.

TRUSTEE PROCESS.
 See Garnishment.

TRUSTS.
     Monopolistic trust, see Monopoly and Combinations.
In proceeds of life insurance policy
 1917B, 1210

ULTRA VIRES.
     Ultra vires action by corporation, see Corporations.
     As to municipal contracts, see Municipal Corporations.

UNBORN CHILDREN.
 See After-born Children.

UNILATERAL CONTRACTS.
 See Contracts.

UNITED STATES.
     Power of state or territory to tax agencies and instrumentalities of, see Taxes.

UNITED STATES COMMISSIONER.
Competency to serve on grand jury
 1917B, 608

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.
 See Supreme Court of the United States.

VACATION.
     Of judgment, see Judgment.
L.R.A.1917B.

VALUATION.
     Of property for taxation, see Taxes.
Of property and franchises for purpose of fixing rates ..... 1917B, 930

VALUED PROPERTY.
 See Insurance.

VARIANCE.
 Between pleading and proof, see Evidence.

VEHICLES.
License of ..... 1917B, 553
Ordinance providing for imprisonment of one refusing to pay for vehicle which he has hired ..... 1917B, 551

VENDOR AND PURCHASER.
     Deeds, see Deeds.
     Sale under execution or attachment, see Judicial Sale.
Right to rescind contract because of vendor's breach of agreement to lay water mains to the property .. 1917B, 401 (Annotated)

VENUE.
     As to jurisdiction over nonresidents generally, see Courts.
Of action to recover damages from one who deprived another of a legacy by mutilation of will of third person .. 1917B, 556

VERDICT.
     Review of, on appeal, see Appeal and Error.
     New trial for errors in, see New Trial.
     Direction of, see Trial.
     In general, see Trial.

VOTERS AND ELECTIONS.
 See Elections.

WAIVER.
     By insurers, see Insurance.
Of forfeiture of oil and gas lease
 1917B, 1184
Of pardon ..... 1917B, 567

WALL.
     Party wall, see Party Wall.

WAR.
     As to militia, see Militia.

WARRANTY.
     In insurance contract, see Insurance.
     On sale of personalty, see Sale.

WATERS.
Liability of landlord for injury to tenant's property by water
 1917B, 222 (Annotated)
 235 (Annotated), 238 (Annotated)
Division of water front
 1917B, 783 (Annotated)

Water supply.
Rescission of land contract for vendor's breach of agreement to lay water mains
 1917B, 401 (Annotated)
Injunction against cutting off water supply of municipality ..... 1917B, 908

Right of water company agreeing to supply municipality with water to question authority of municipality to enter into contract .....1917B, 908
 Free service to municipality as invalid discrimination .....1917B, 908

WEBB-KENYON ACT.

Validity and effect of
     1917B, 1218 (Annotated),
     1230 (Annotated)

WILLS.

Liability of one mutilating another's will to legatee injured thereby
     1917B, 556 (Annotated)

Validity generally.

Validity of devise to person designated as wife where marriage was illegal
     1917B, 1150 (Annotated)

Devise and legacy generally.

Intent of testator generally ...1917B, 1150

Nature of estate or interest created.

Joint estate in fee 1917B, 45 (Annotated)

WINDMILL.

As within insurance policy on "farm utensils" .....1917B, 934

WITNESSES.

Privilege of accused against self-incrimination, see Criminal Law.

Exemption of, from service of process
     1917B, 250 (Annotated)

Contempt by .....1917B, 586

Right of accused to meet in contempt proceedings .....1917B, 113 (Annotated).

L.R.A.1917B.

Attack in presence of jurymen upon credibility of witness as ground for new trial
     1917B, 246 (Annotated)

Presumption from failure to call 1917B, 310

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

Review of decisions of commission
     1917B, 767

What employments are within provisions of act .....1917B, 767

What injuries are within provisions of act.

Injuries to workman employed in the state and injured while temporarily outside its limits in performance of duty
     1917B, 767

Injuries arising out of, or in course of, employment .....1917B, 249, 336, 372, 595

WRIT AND PROCESS.*In general.

Typewritten signature
     1917B, 281 (Annotated)

Name of party .....1917B, 395

Sufficiency of warrant to hold stockholders of foreign corporation liable as partners
     1917B, 572

Service.

Necessity of service to support foreign judgment .....1917B, 1028

By publication ...1917B, 385 (Annotated)

Privilege or exemption from service
     1917B, 250 (Annotated)

888 (Annotated)

WRONG REASONS.

For judgment as ground of reversal
     1917B, 676

